PREFACE

The Federal Election Commission is publishing this legislative history of the 1974 Amendments to the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide to Commissioners and Commission staff, the Congress, and to candidates and committees affected by the Federal Election Campaign Act, easy access to the Amendments, the bills from which they derive, accompanying reports, and the floor debates.

The material is presented in a chronological fashion, and is comprehensively indexed.

The legislative history was compiled, edited and indexed under the supervision of the Office of General Counsel. A companion volume containing the legislative history of the 1976 Amendments to the Federal Election Campaign Act is being issued concurrently.

The Commission hopes that this legislative history will aid all those affected by the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as amended, in better understanding and complying with the Act.

1 TITLE I—FINANCING OF FEDERAL CAMPAIGNS

2 PUBLIC FINANCING PROVISIONS

3 Sec. 101. The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

4 "TITLE V—PUBLIC FINANCING OF FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGNS

5 "DEFINITIONS

6 "Sec. 501. For purposes of this title, the term—

7 "(1) ‘candidate’, ‘Commission’, ‘contribution’, ‘expenditure’, ‘political committee’, ‘political party’, or ‘State’ has the meaning given it in section 301 of this Act;
“(2) ‘authorized committee’ means the central campaign committee of a candidate (under section 310 of this Act) or any political committee authorized in writing by that candidate to make or receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf;

“(3) ‘Federal office’ means the office of President, Senator, or Representative;

“(4) ‘Representative’ means a Member of the House of Representatives, the Resident Commissioner from the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the Delegates from the District of Columbia, Guam, and the Virgin Islands;

“(5) ‘general election’ means any regularly scheduled or special election held for the purpose of electing a candidate to Federal office or for the purpose of electing presidential and vice presidential electors;

“(6) ‘primary election’ means (A) an election, including a runoff election, held for the nomination by a political party of a candidate for election to Federal office, (B) a convention or caucus of a political party held for the nomination of such candidate, (C) a convention, caucus, or election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party, and (D) an election held for the expression of a preference for the nomination by a political party of persons for election to the office of President;

"(7) 'eligible candidate' means a candidate who is eligible, under section 502, for payments under this title;

"(8) 'major party' means, with respect to an election for any Federal office—

"(A) a political party whose candidate for election to that office in the preceding general election for that office received, as the candidate of that party, 25 percent or more of the total number of votes cast in that election for all candidates for that office, or

"(B) if only one political party qualifies as a major party under the provisions of subparagraph (A), the political party whose candidate for election to that office in that election received, as the candidate of that party, the second greatest number of votes cast in that election for all candidates for that office (if such number is equal to 15 percent or more of the total number of votes cast in that election for all candidates for that office);

"(9) 'minor party' means, with respect to an election for a Federal office, a political party whose candidate for election to that office in the preceding general election for that office received, as the candidate of that party, at least 5 percent but less than 25 percent of the total number of votes cast in that election for all candidates for that office; and

"(10) ‘fund’ means the Federal Election Campaign Fund established under section 506 (a).

"ELIGIBILITY FOR PAYMENTS

"Sec. 502. (a) To be eligible to receive payments under this title, a candidate shall agree—

"(1) to obtain and to furnish to the Commission any evidence it may request about his campaign expenditures and contributions;

"(2) to keep and to furnish to the Commission any records, books, and other information it may request;

"(3) to an audit and examination by the Commission under section 507 and to pay any amounts required under section 507; and

"(4) to furnish statements of campaign expenditures and proposed campaign expenses required under section 508.

"(b) Every such candidate shall certify to the Commission that—

"(1) the candidate and his authorized committees will not make campaign expenditures greater than the limitations in section 504; and

"(2) no contributions will be accepted by the candidate or his authorized committees in violation of section 615 (b) of title 18, United States Code.

"(e) (1) To be eligible to receive any payments under section 506 for use in connection with his primary election campaign, a candidate shall certify to the Commission that—

"(A) he is seeking nomination by a political party for election as a Representative and he and his authorized committees have received contributions for that campaign of more than $10,000;

"(B) he is seeking nomination by a political party for election to the Senate and he and his authorized committees have received contributions for that campaign equal in amount to the lesser of—

"(i) 20 percent of the maximum amount he may spend in connection with his primary election campaign under section 504 (a) (1) ; or

"(ii) $125,000; or

"(2) To be eligible to receive any payments under section 506 for use in connection with a primary runoff election campaign, a candidate shall certify to the Commission that he is seeking nomination by a political party for election as a Representative or as a Senator, and that he is a candidate for such nomination in a runoff primary election.

Such a candidate is not required to receive any minimum amount of contributions before receiving payments under this title.

“(3) he is seeking nomination by a political party for election to the office of President and he and his authorized committees have received contributions for his campaign throughout the United States in a total amount of more than $250,000.

“(d) To be eligible to receive any payments under section 506 in connection with his general election campaign, a candidate must certify to the Commission that—

“(1) he is the nominee of a major or minor party for election to Federal office; or

“(2) in the case of any other candidate, he is seeking election to Federal office and he and his authorized committees have received contributions for that campaign in a total amount of not less than the campaign fund required under subsection (c) of a candidate for nomination for election to that office, determined in accordance with the provisions of subsection (e) (disregarding the words ‘for nomination to’ in paragraph (2) of such subsection and substituting the words ‘general election’ for ‘primary election’ in paragraphs (2) and (3) of such subsection).

“(e) In determining the amount of contributions received by a candidate and his authorized committees for purposes of subsection (c) and for purposes of subsection (d) (2) —

"(1) no contribution received by the candidate or any of his authorized committees as a subscription, loan, advance, or deposit, or as a contribution of products or services, shall be taken into account;

"(2) in the case of a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President, no contribution from any person shall be taken into account to the extent that it exceeds $250 when added to the amount of all other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate in connection with his primary election campaign; and

"(3) in the case of any other candidate, no contribution from any person shall be taken into account to the extent that it exceeds $100 when added to the amount of all other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate in connection with his primary election campaign.

"(f) Agreements and certifications under this section shall be filed with the Commission at the time required by the Commission.

"ENTITLEMENT TO PAYMENTS

"Sec. 503. (a) (1) Every eligible candidate is entitled to payments in connection with his primary election campaign.

S. 3044—2
in an amount which is equal to the amount of contributions he accepts for that campaign.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1) --

"(A) in the case of a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President, no contribution from any person shall be taken into account to the extent that it exceeds $250 when added to the amount of all other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate for his primary election campaign; and

"(B) in the case of any other candidate for nomination for election to Federal office, no contribution from any person shall be taken into account to the extent that it exceeds $100 when added to the amount of all other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate for his primary election campaign.

"(b) (1) Every eligible candidate who is nominated by a major party is entitled to payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount which is equal to the amount of expenditures the candidate may make in connection with that campaign under section 504.

"(2) Every eligible candidate who is nominated by a minor party is entitled to payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of payments to which a candidate of a major party for the same office is entitled under this subsection as the total number of popular votes received by the candidate of that minor party for that office in the preceding general election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidates of major parties for that office in the preceding general election.

"(3) (A) A candidate who is eligible under section 502
(d) (2) to receive payments under section 506 is entitled to payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount equal to the amount determined under subparagraph (B).

"(B) If a candidate whose entitlement is determined under this paragraph received, in the preceding general election held for the office to which he seeks election, 5 percent or more of the total number of votes cast for all candidates for that office, he is entitled to receive payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount (not in excess of the applicable limitation under section 504) equal to an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of the payment under section 506 to which the nominee of a major party is entitled for use in his general election campaign for that office as the number of votes received by that candidate in the preceding general election for that office bears to the average number of votes cast in the preceding
The entitlement of a candidate for election to any Federal office who, in the preceding general election held for that office, was the candidate of a major or minor party shall not be determined under this paragraph.

"(4) An eligible candidate who is the nominee of a minor party or whose entitlement is determined under section 502 (d) (2) and who receives 5 percent or more of the total number of votes cast in the current election, is entitled to payments under section 506 after the election for expenditures made or incurred in connection with his general election campaign in an amount (not in excess of the applicable limitation under section 504) equal to—

"(A) an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of the payment under section 503 to which the nominee of a major party was or would have been entitled for use in his campaign for election to that office as the number of votes received by the candidate in that election bears to the average number of votes cast for all major party candidates for that office in that election, reduced by

"(B) any amount paid to the candidate under section 506 before the election.

"(5) In applying the provisions of this section to a candidate for election to the office of President—
"(A) votes cast for electors affiliated with a political party shall be considered to be cast for the Presidential candidate of that party, and

"(B) votes cast for electors publicly pledged to cast their electoral votes for a candidate shall be considered to be cast for that candidate.

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsections (a) and (b), no candidate is entitled to the payment of any amount under this section which, when added to the total amount of contributions received by him and his authorized committees and any other payments made to him under this title for his primary or general election campaign, exceeds the amount of the expenditure limitation applicable to him for that campaign under section 504.

"EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS

"SEC. 504. (a) (1) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f) (2), no candidate (other than a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President) who receives payments under this title for use in his primary election campaign may make expenditures in connection with that campaign in excess of the greater of—

"(A) 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the geographical area in which the election for such nomination is held, or

"(B) (i) $125,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Senator, or Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, or

"(ii) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Representative from a State which is entitled to more than one Representative.

"(2) (A) No candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may make expenditures in any State in which he is a candidate in a primary election in excess of two times the amount which a candidate for nomination for election to the office of Senator from that State (or for nomination for election to the office of Delegate in the case of the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, or to the office of Resident Commissioner in the case of Puerto Rico) may expend in that State in connection with his primary election campaign.

"(B) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraph (A), no such candidate may make expenditures throughout the United States in connection with his campaign for that nomination in excess of an amount equal to ten cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States. For purposes of this subparagraph, the term ‘United States’ means the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands and any area from which a delegate to the national nominating convention of a political party is selected.

"(b) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f) (2), no candidate who receives payments under this title for use in his general election campaign may make expenditures in connection with that campaign in excess of the greater of—

"(1) 15 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (g)) of the geographical area in which the election is held, or

"(2) (A) $175,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Senator, or Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, or

"(B) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Representative from a State which is entitled to more than one Representative.

"(c) No candidate who is unopposed in a primary or general election may make expenditures in connection with his primary or general election campaign in excess of 10 percent of the limitation in subsection (a) or (b).

"(d) The Commission shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"(e) (1) Expenditures made on behalf of any candidate are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by such candidate.

"(2) Expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by the candidate for the office of President of the United States with whom he is running.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

"(A) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure, or

"(B) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate to make the expenditure.

"(4) For purposes of this section an expenditure made by the national committee of a political party, or by the State committee of a political party, in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate affiliated with that party which is not in excess of the limitations contained in section 614 (b) of title 18, United States Code, is not considered to be an expenditure made on behalf of that candidate.

"(f) (1) For purposes of paragraph (2)—

"(A) 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and

"(B) 'base period' means the calendar year 1973.

"(2) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1975), as necessary data become available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register the percentage difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each amount determined under subsections (a) and (b) shall be changed by such percentage difference. Each amount so changed shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

"(g) During the first week of January, 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, eighteen years of age or older.
S. 3044——3

"(h) Upon receiving the certification of the Secretary of Commerce and of the Secretary of Labor, the Commission shall publish in the Federal Register the applicable expenditure limitations in effect for the calendar year for the United States, and for each State and congressional district under this section.

"(h) In the case of a candidate who is campaigning for election to the House of Representatives from a district which has been established, or the boundaries of which have been altered, since the preceding general election for such office, the determination of the amount and the determination of whether the candidate is a major party candidate or a minor party candidate or is otherwise entitled to payments under this title shall be made by the Commission based upon the number of votes cast in the preceding general election for such office by voters residing within the area encompassed in the new or altered district."

"CERTIFICATIONS BY COMMISSION

"Sec. 505. (a) On the basis of the evidence, books, records, and information furnished by each candidate eligible to receive payments under section 506, and prior to examination and audit under section 507, the Commission shall certify from time to time to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment to each candidate the amount to which that candidate is entitled.

“(b) Initial certifications by the Commission under subsection (a), and all determinations made by it under this title, shall be final and conclusive, except to the extent that they are subject to examination and audit by the Commission under section 507 and judicial review under section 313.

“PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES

“Sec. 506. (a) There is established within the Treasury a fund to be known as the Federal Election Campaign Fund. There are authorized to be appropriated to the fund amounts equal to the sum of the amounts designated by taxpayers under section 6096 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 not previously taken into account for purposes of this subsection, and such additional amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title without any reduction under subsection (c). The moneys in the fund shall remain available without fiscal year limitation.

“(b) Upon receipt of a certification from the Commission under section 505, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the amount certified by the Commission to the candidate to whom the certification relates.

“(c) (1) If the Secretary of the Treasury determines that the monies in the fund are not, or may not be, sufficient to pay the full amount of entitlement to all candidates eligible to receive payments, he shall reduce the amount to which each candidate is entitled under section 503 by a percentage equal to the percentage obtained by dividing (1) the amount of money remaining in the fund at the time of such determination by (2) the total amount which all candidates eligible to receive payments are entitled to receive under section 503. If additional candidates become eligible under section 502 after the Secretary determines there are insufficient monies in the fund, he shall make any further reductions in the amounts payable to all eligible candidates necessary to carry out the purposes of this subsection. The Secretary shall notify the Commission and each eligible candidate by registered mail of the reduction in the amount to which that candidate is entitled under section 503.

"(2) If, as a result of a reduction under this subsection in the amount to which an eligible candidate is entitled under section 503, payments have been made under this section in excess of the amount to which such candidate is entitled, that candidate is liable for repayment to the fund of the excess under procedures the Commission shall prescribe by regulation.

EXAMINATION AND AUDITS; REPAYMENTS

"Sec. 507. (a) After each Federal election, the Commission shall conduct a thorough examination and audit of the campaign expenditures of all candidates for Federal office who received payments under this title for use in campaigns relating to that election.

"(b) (1) If the Commission determines that any portion of the payments made to an eligible candidate under section 506 was in excess of the aggregate amount of the payments to which the candidate was entitled, it shall so notify that candidate, and he shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury an amount equal to the excess amount. If the Commission determines that any portion of the payments made to a candidate under section 506 for use in his primary election campaign or his general election campaign was not used to make expenditures in connection with that campaign, the Commission shall so notify the candidate and he shall pay an amount equal to the amount of the unexpended portion to the Secretary. In making its determination under the preceding sentence, the Commission shall consider all amounts received as contributions to have been expended before any amounts received under this title are expended.

"(2) If the Commission determines that any amount of any payment made to a candidate under section 506 was used for any purpose other than—

"(A) to defray campaign expenditures, or

"(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray campaign expenditures which were received and expended) which were used, to defray campaign expenditures, it shall notify the candidate of the amount so used, and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury an amount equal to such amount.

“(3) No payment shall be required from a candidate under this subsection in excess of the total amount of all payments received by the candidate under section 506 in connection with the campaign with respect to which the event occurred which caused the candidate to have to make a payment under this subsection.

“(c) No notification shall be made by the Commission under subsection (b) with respect to a campaign more than eighteen months after the day of the election to which the campaign related.

“(d) All payments received by the Secretary under subsection (b) shall be deposited by him in the fund.

“INFORMATION ON EXPENDITURES AND PROPOSED EXPENDITURES

“Sec. 508. (a) Every candidate shall, from time to time as the Commission requires, furnish to the Commission a detailed statement, in the form the Commission prescribes, of—

“(1) the campaign expenditures incurred by him and his authorized committees prior to the date of the statement (whether or not evidence of campaign expenditures has been furnished for purposes of section 505), and

"(2) the campaign expenditures which he and his authorized committees propose to incur on or after the date of the statement.

"(b) The Commission shall, as soon as possible after it receives a statement under subsection (a), prepare and make available for public inspection and copying a summary of the statement, together with any other data or information which it deems advisable.

"REPORTS TO CONGRESS

"Sec. 509. (a) The Commission shall, as soon as practicable after the close of each calendar year, submit a full report to the Senate and House of Representatives setting forth—

"(1) the expenditures incurred by each candidate, and his authorized committees, who received any payment under section 506 in connection with an election;

"(2) the amounts certified by it under section 505 for payment to that candidate; and

"(3) the amount of payments, if any, required from that candidate under section 507, and the reasons for each payment required.
Each report submitted pursuant to this section shall be printed as a Senate document.

"(b) The Commission is authorized to conduct examinations and audits (in addition to the examinations and audits under sections 505 and 507), to conduct investigations, and to require the keeping and submission of any books, records, or other information necessary to carry out the functions and duties imposed on it by this title.

"PARTICIPATION BY COMMISSION IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS"

"Sec. 510. The Commission may initiate civil proceedings in any district court of the United States to seek recovery of any amounts determined to be payable to the Secretary of the Treasury by a candidate under this title.

"PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS"

"Sec. 511. Violation of any provision of this title is punishable by a fine of not more than $50,000, or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

"RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER FEDERAL ELECTION LAWS"

"Sec. 512. The Commission shall consult from time to time with the Secretary of the Senate, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, the Federal Communications Commission, and with other Federal officers charged with the administration of laws relating to Federal elections, in order to develop as much consistency and coordination with the administration of those other laws as the provisions of this title permit. The Commission shall use the same or comparable data as that used in the administration of such other election laws whenever possible.”.

TITLE II—CHANGES IN CAMPAIGN COMMUNICATIONS LAW AND IN REPORTING AND DISCLOSURE PROVISIONS OF FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

CAMPAIGN COMMUNICATIONS

Sec. 201. (a) Section 315(a) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315(a)) is amended by inserting after “public office” in the first sentence thereof the following: “, other than Federal elective office (including the office of Vice President)”.

(b) Section 315(b) of such Act (47 U.S.C. 315(b)) is amended by striking out “by any person” and inserting “by or on behalf of any person”.

(e) (1) Section 315(e) of such Act (47 U.S.C. 315(e)) is amended to read as follows:

“(e) No station licensee may make any charge for the use of any such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal elective office unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not exceed the limit on expenditures applicable to that candidate under section 504 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, or under section 614 of title 18, United States Code.”.

(2) Section 315 (d) of such Act (47 U.S.C. 315 (d)) is amended to read as follows:

“(d) If a State by law imposes a limitation upon the amount which a legally qualified candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to public office (other than Federal elective office) within that State may spend in connection with his campaign for such nomination or his campaign for election, then no station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of such candidate unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized in writing by him to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate that limitation.”.

(d) Section 317 of such Act (47 U.S.C. 317), is amended by—

(1) striking out in paragraph (1) of subsection (a) “person: Provided, That” and inserting in lieu thereof the following: “person. If such matter is a political advertisement soliciting funds for a candidate or a political committee, there shall be announced at the time of such broadcast a statement that a copy of reports filed by that person with the Federal Election Commission is available from the Federal Election Commission, Washington, D.C., and the licensee shall not make any charge for any part of the costs of making the announcement. The term”; and

(2) by redesignating subsection (e) as (f), and by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

“(e) Each station licensee shall maintain a record of any political advertisement broadcast, together with the identification of the person who caused it to be broadcast, for a period of two years. The record shall be available for public inspection at reasonable hours.”.

(e) The Campaign Communications Reform Act is

CHANGES IN DEFINITIONS FOR REPORTING AND DISCLOSURE

Sec. 202. (a) Section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to definitions) is amended by—

(1) striking out “, and (5) the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States” in paragraph (a), and by inserting “and” before “(4)” in such paragraph;
(2) striking out paragraph (d) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(d) 'political committee' means—

"(1) any committee, club, association, or other group of persons which receives contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000;

"(2) any national committee, association, or organization of a political party, any State affiliate or subsidiary of a national political party, and any State central committee of a political party;

and

"(3) any committee, association, or organization engaged in the administration of a separate segregated fund described in section 610 of title 18, United States Code;

(3) inserting in paragraph (e) (1) after "subscription" the following: "(including any assessment, fee, or membership dues)";

(4) striking out in paragraph (e) (1) "or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "or for the purpose of financing any operations of a political committee
(other than a payment made or an obligation incurred by a corporation or labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, does not constitute a contribution by that corporation or labor organization), or for the purpose of paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office";

(5) striking out subparagraph (2) of paragraph (e), and amending subparagraph (3) of such paragraph to read as follows:

"(3) funds received by a political committee which are transferred to that committee from another political committee;";

(6) redesignating subparagraphs (4) and (5) of paragraph (e) as paragraphs (3) and (4), respectively;

(7) striking out paragraph (f) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(f) 'expenditure'—

"(1) means a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of—

"(A) influencing the nomination for election, or the election, of any person to Federal office, or to the office of presidential and vice-presidential elector;

"(B) influencing the result of a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President;

"(C) financing any operations of a political committee; or

"(D) paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office; and

"(2) means the transfer of funds by a political committee to another political committee; but

"(3) does not include—

"(A) the value of services rendered by individuals who volunteer to work without compensation on behalf of a candidate; or

"(B) any payment made or obligation incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18.
United States Code, would not constitute an expenditure by that corporation or labor organization;”;

(7) striking “and” at the end of paragraph (h);

(8) striking the period at the end of paragraph (i) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(9) adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

“(j) ‘identification’ means—

“(1) in the case of an individual, his full name and the full address of his principal place of residence; and

“(2) in the case of any other person, the full name and address of that person;

“(k) ‘national committee’ means the organization which, by virtue of the bylaws of a political party, is responsible for the day-to-day operation of that political party at the national level, as determined by the Commission; and

“(l) ‘political party’ means an association, committee, or organization which nominates a candidate for election to any Federal office, whose name appears on the election ballot as the candidate of that association, committee, or organization.”.

(b) (1) Section 302 (b) of such Act (relating to reports of contributions in excess of $10) is amended by striking “, the name and address (occupation and principal place of business, if any)” and inserting “of the contribution and the identification”.

(2) Section 302 (c) of such Act (relating to detailed accounts) is amended by striking “full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any)” in paragraphs (2) and (4) and inserting in each such paragraph “identification”.

(3) Section 302 (c) of such Act is further amended by striking the semicolon at the end of paragraph (2) and in-serting “and, if a person’s contributions aggregate more than $100, the account shall include occupation, and the principal place of business (if any);”.

REGISTRATION OF CANDIDATES AND POLITICAL COMMITTEES

Sec. 203. (a) Section 303 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to registration of political committees; statements) is amended by redesignating subsections (a) through (d) as (b) through (e), respectively, and by inserting after “Sec. 303,” the following new subsection (a):

“(a) Each candidate shall, within ten days after the date on which he has qualified under State law as a candidate, or on which he, or any person authorized by him to do so, has received a contribution or made an expenditure in connection with his campaign or for the purpose of preparing to undertake his campaign, file with the Commission a registration statement in such form as the Commission may prescribe. The statement shall include—

“(1) the identification of the candidate, and any individual, political committee, or other person he has authorized to receive contributions or make expenditures on his behalf in connection with his campaign;

“(2) the identification of his campaign depositories, together with the title and number of each account at each such depository which is to be used in connection with his campaign, any safety deposit box to be used in connection therewith, and the identification of each individual authorized by him to make any expenditure or withdrawal from such account or box; and

“(3) such additional relevant information as the Commission may require.”.

(b) The first sentence of subsection (b) of such section (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) is amended to read as follows: “The treasurer of each political committee shall file with the Commission a statement of organization within ten days after the date on which the committee is organized.”.

(c) The second sentence of such subsection (b) is amended by striking out "this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974".

(d) Subsection (c) of such section (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) is amended by—

(1) inserting "be in such form as the Commission shall prescribe, and shall" after "The statement of organization shall";

(2) striking out paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(3) the geographic area or political jurisdiction within which the committee will operate, and a general description of the committee's authority and activities;"; and

(3) striking out paragraph (9) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(9) the name and address of the campaign depositories used by that committee, together with the title and number of each account and safety deposit box used by that committee at each depository, and the identification of each individual authorized to make withdrawals or payments out of such account or box;".

(e) The caption of such section 303 is amended by inserting "CANDIDATES AND" after "REGISTRATION OF".

CHANGES IN REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 204. (a) Section 304 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to reports by political committees and candidates) is amended by—

(1) inserting "(1)" after "(a)" in subsection (a);

(2) striking out "for election" each place it appears in the first sentence of subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof in each such place "for nomination for election, or for election,";

(3) striking out the second sentence of subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Such reports shall be filed on the tenth day of April, July, and October of each year, on the tenth day preceding an election, and on the last day of January of each year. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the reports required by that sentence to be filed during April, July, and October by or relating to a candidate during a year in which no Federal election is held in which he is a candidate, may be filed on the twentieth day of each month."

(4) striking out everything after "filing" in the third sentence of subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof a period and the following: "If the person making any anonymous contribution is subsequently identified, the identification of the contributor shall be reported to the Commission within the reporting period within which he is identified.”; and

(5) adding at the end of subsection (a) the following new paragraph:

“(2) Upon a request made by a Presidential candidate or a political committee which operates in more than one State, or upon its own motion, the Commission may waive the reporting dates (other than January 31) set forth in paragraph (1), and require instead that such candidates or political committees file reports not less frequently than monthly. The Commission may not require a Presidential candidate or a political committee operating in more than one State to file more than eleven reports (not counting any report to be filed on January 31) during any calendar year.
If the Commission acts on its own motion under this paragraph with respect to a candidate or a political committee, that candidate or committee may obtain judicial review in accordance with the provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code.”.

(b) (1) Section 304 (b) of such Act (relating to reports by political committees and candidates) is amended by striking “full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any)” in paragraphs (9) and (10) and inserting in lieu thereof in each such paragraph “identification”.
(2) Subsection (b) (5) of such section 304 is amended by striking out "lender and endorsers" and inserting in lieu thereof "lender, endorsers, and guarantors".

(c) Subsection (b) (12) of such section is amended by inserting before the semicolon the following: "; together with a statement as to the circumstances and conditions under which any such debt or obligation is extinguished and the consideration therefor".

(d) Subsection (b) of such section is amended by—

(1) striking the "and" at the end of paragraph (12); and

(2) redesignating paragraph (13) as (14), and by inserting after paragraph (12) the following new paragraph:

"(13) such information as the Commission may require for the disclosure of the nature, amount, source, and designated recipient of any earmarked, encumbered, or restricted contribution or other special fund; and".

(e) The first sentence of subsection (c) of such section is amended to read as follows: "The reports required to be filed by subsection (a) shall be cumulative during the calendar year to which they relate, and during such additional periods of time as the Commission may require.".
(f) Such section 304 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

“(d) This section does not require a Member of Congress to report, as contributions received or as expenditures made, the value of photographic, matting, or recording services furnished to him before the first day of January of the year preceding the year in which his term of office expires if those services were furnished to him by the Senate Recording Studio, the House Recording Studio, or by any individual whose pay is disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives and who furnishes such services as his primary duty as an employee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or if such services were paid for by the Republican or Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, the Democratic National Congressional Committee, or the National Republican Congressional Committee.

“(e) Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or expenditures, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 within a calendar year shall file with the Commission a statement containing the information required by this section. Statements required by this subsection shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed but need not be cumulative.”.

(g) The caption of such section 304 is amended to read as follows:

“REPORTS”.

CAMPAIGN ADVERTISEMENTS

Sec. 205. Section 305 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to reports by others than political committees) is amended to read as follows:

“REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO CAMPAIGN
ADVERTISING

“Sec. 305. (a) No person shall cause any political advertisement to be published unless he furnishes to the publisher of the advertisement his identification in writing, together with the identification of any person authorizing him to cause such publication.

“(b) Any published political advertisement shall contain a statement, in such form as the Commission may prescribe, of the identification of the person authorizing the publication of that advertisement.

“(c) Any publisher who publishes any political advertisement shall maintain such records as the Commission may prescribe for a period of two years after the date of publication setting forth such advertisement and any material relating to identification furnished to him in connection therewith, and shall permit the public to inspect and copy those records at reasonable hours.

"(d) To the extent that any person sells space in any newspaper or magazine to a candidate or his agent for Federal office, or nomination thereto, in connection with such candidate’s campaign for nomination for, or election to, such office, the charges made for the use of such space in connection with his campaign shall not exceed the charges made for comparable use of such space for other purposes.

"(e) Any political committee shall include on the face or front page of all literature and advertisements soliciting contributions the following notice:

"‘A copy of our report filed with the Federal Election Commission is available for purchase from the Federal Election Commission, Washington, D.C.’"

"(f) As used in this section, the term—

"(1) ‘political advertisement’ means any matter advocating the election or defeat of any candidate but does not include any bona fide news story (including interviews, commentaries, or other works prepared for and published by any newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication the publication of which work is not paid for by any candidate, political committee, or agent thereof) ; and
“(2) ‘published’ means publication in a newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication, distribution of printed leaflets, pamphlets, or other documents, or display through the use of any outdoor advertising facility, and such other use of printed media as the Commission shall prescribe.”.

WAIVER OF REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

Sec. 206. Section 306 (c) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to formal requirements respecting reports and statements) is amended to read as follows:

“(c) The Commission may, by published regulation of general applicability, relieve—

“(1) any category of candidates of the obligation to comply personally with the requirements of subsections (a) through (e) of section 304, if it determines that such action will not have any adverse effect on the purposes of this title, and

“(2) any category of political committees of the obligation to comply with such section if such committees—

“(A) primarily support persons seeking State or local office, and

“(B) do not operate in more than one State or do not operate on a statewide basis.”.

S. 3044—6
ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION;

CENTRAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEES; CAMPAIGN DEPOSITIES

Sec. 207. (a) Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to disclosure of Federal campaign funds) is amended by redesignating section 308 as section 312, and by inserting after section 307 the following new sections:

"FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION"

"Sec. 308. (a) (1) There is established, as an independent establishment of the executive branch of the Government of the United States, a commission to be known as the Federal Election Commission.

"(2) The Commission shall be composed of the Comptroller General, who shall serve without the right to vote, and seven members who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the seven members—

"(A) two shall be chosen from among individuals recommended by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the Senate and the minority leader of the Senate; and

"(B) two shall be chosen from among individuals recommended by the Speaker of the House of Reprsentatives, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the House and the minority leader of the House.

The two members appointed under subparagraph (A) shall not be affiliated with the same political party; nor shall the two members appointed under subparagraph (B). Of the members not appointed under such subparagraphs, not more than two shall be affiliated with the same political party.

"(3) Members of the Commission, other than the Comptroller General, shall serve for terms of seven years, except that, of the members first appointed—

"(A) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending on the April thirtieth first occurring more than six months after the date on which he is appointed;

"(B) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2) (A) shall be appointed for a term ending one year after the April thirtieth on which the term of the member referred to in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph ends;

"(C) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2) (B) shall be appointed for a term ending two years thereafter;

"(D) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending three years thereafter;

"(E) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2) (A) shall be appointed for a term ending four years thereafter;

"(F) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2) (B) shall be appointed for a term ending five years thereafter; and

"(G) one of the members not appointed under sub-paragraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending six years thereafter.

"(4) Members shall be chosen on the basis of their maturity, experience, integrity, impartiality, and good judgment. A member may be reappointed to the Commission only once.

"(5) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy ocuring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds. Any vacancy occurring in the office of member of the Commission shall be filled in the manner in which that office was originally filled.

"(6) The Commission shall elect a Chairman and a Vice Chairman from among its members for a term of two years. The Chairman and the Vice Chairman shall not be affiliated with the same political party. The Vice Chairman shall act as Chairman in the absence or disability of the Chairman, or in the event of a vacancy in that office.

(b) A vacancy in the Commission shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the Commission. Four members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum.

(e) The Commission shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

(d) The Commission shall at the close of each fiscal year report to the Congress and to the President concerning the action it has taken; the names, salaries, and duties of all individuals in its employ and the money it has disbursed; and shall make such further reports on the matters within its jurisdiction and such recommendations for further legislation as may appear desirable.

(e) The principal office of the Commission shall be in or near the District of Columbia, but it may meet or exercise any or all its powers in any State.

(f) The Commission shall appoint a General Counsel and an Executive Director to serve at the pleasure of the Commission. The General Counsel shall be the chief legal officer of the Commission. The Executive Director shall be responsible for the administrative operations of the Commission and shall perform such other duties as may be delegated or assigned to him from time to time by regulations or orders.
of the Commission. However, the Commission shall not de-le-gate the making of regulations regarding elections to the Executive Director.

(g) The Chairman of the Commission shall appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as are necessary to fulfill the duties of the Commission in accordance with provisions of title 5, United States Code.

(h) The Commission may obtain the services of experts and consultants in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

(i) In carrying out its responsibilities under this title, the Commission shall, to the fullest extent prac-tic-able, avail itself of the assistance, including personnel and facilities, of the General Accounting Office and the Department of Justice. The Comptroller General and the Attorney General may make available to the Commission such personnel, facilities, and other assistance, with or without reimbursement, as the Commission may request.

(j) The provisions of section 7324 of title 5, United States Code, shall apply to members of the Commission notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (d)(3) of such section.

(k) (1) Whenever the Commission submits any budget estimate or request to the President or the Office of Management and Budget, it shall concurrently transmit a copy of that estimate or request to the Congress.
Whenever the Commission submits any legislative recommendations, or testimony, or comments on legislation requested by the Congress or by any Member of Congress to the President or the Office of Management and Budget, it shall concurrently transmit a copy thereof to the Congress or to the Member requesting the same. No officer or agency of the United States shall have any authority to require the Commission to submit its legislative recommendations, or testimony, or comments on legislation, to any office or agency of the United States for approval, comments, or review, prior to the submission of such recommendations, testimony, or comments to the Congress.

"POWERS OF COMMISSION"

"Sec. 309. (a) The Commission has the power—

"(1) to require, by special or general orders, any person to submit in writing such reports and answers to questions as the Commission may prescribe; and such submission shall be made within such reasonable period and under oath or otherwise as the Commission may determine;

"(2) to administer oaths;

"(3) to require by subpoena, signed by the Chairman or the Vice Chairman, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all documentary evidence relating to the execution of its duties;

"(4) in any proceeding or investigation to order testimony to be taken by deposition before any person who is designated by the Commission and has the power to administer oaths and, in such instances, to compel testimony and the production of evidence in the same manner as authorized under paragraph (3) of this subsection;

"(5) to pay witnesses the same fees and mileage as are paid in like circumstances in the courts of the United States;

"(6) to initiate (through civil proceedings for injunctive relief and through presentations to Federal grand juries), prosecute, defend, or appeal any civil or criminal action in the name of the Commission for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act and of sections 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, and 617 of title 18, United States Code, through its General Counsel;

"(7) to delegate any of its functions or powers, other than the power to issue subpoenas under paragraph (3), to any officer or employee of the Commission; and

"(8) to make, amend, and repeal such rules, pursuant to the provisions of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

“(b) Any United States district court within the jurisdiction of which any inquiry is carried on, may, upon petition by the Commission, in case of refusal to obey a subpoena or order of the Commission issued under subsection (a) of this section, issue an order requiring compliance therewith. Any failure to obey the order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

“(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commission shall be the primary civil and criminal enforcement agency for violations of the provisions of this Act, and of sections 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, and 617 of title 18, United States Code. Any violation of any such provision shall be prosecuted by the Attorney General or Department of Justice personnel only after consultation with, and with the consent of, the Commission.

“(e) (1) Any person who violates any provision of this Act or of section 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, or 617 of title 18, United States Code, may be assessed a civil penalty by the Commission under paragraph (2) of this subsection of not more than $10,000 for each such violation. Each occurrence of a violation of this Act and each day of noncompliance with a disclosure requirement of this title or an order of the Commission issued under this section shall constitute a separate offense. In determining the amount of the penalty the Commission shall consider the person's history of previous violations, the appropriateness of such penalty to the financial resources of the person charged, the gravity of the violation, and the demonstrated good faith of the person charged in attempting to achieve rapid compliance after notification of a violation.

“(2) A civil penalty shall be assessed by the Commission by order only after the person charged with a violation has been given an opportunity for a hearing and the Commission has determined, by decision incorporating its findings of fact therein, that a violation did occur, and the amount of the penalty. Any hearing under this section shall be of record and shall be held in accordance with chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code.

“(3) If the person against whom a civil penalty is assessed fails to pay the penalty, the Commission shall file a petition for enforcement of its order assessing the penalty in any appropriate district court of the United States. The petition shall designate the person against whom the order is sought to be enforced as the respondent. A copy of the petition shall forthwith be sent by registered or certified mail to the respondent and his attorney of record, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in such court the record upon which such order sought to be enforced was issued. The court shall have jurisdiction to enter a judgment enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order and decision of the Commission or it may remand the proceedings to the Commission for such further action as it may direct. The court may determine de novo all issues of law but the Commission’s findings of fact, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive.

“(f) Upon application made by any individual holding Federal office, any candidate, or any political committee, the Commission, through its General Counsel, shall provide within a reasonable period of time an advisory opinion, with respect to any specific transaction or activity inquired of,
as to whether such transaction or activity would constitute a violation of any provision of this Act or of any provision of title 18, United States Code, over which the Commission has primary jurisdiction under subsection (d).

“CENTRAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEES

“SEC. 310. (a) Each candidate shall designate one political committee as his central campaign committee. A candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of President, may also designate one political committee in each State in which he is a candidate as his State campaign committee for that State. The designation shall be made in writing, and a copy of the designation, together with such information as the Commission may require, shall be furnished to the Commission upon the designation of any such committee.

"(b) No political committee may be designated as the central campaign committee of more than one candidate. The central campaign committee, and each State campaign committee, designated by a candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of President shall be the central campaign committee and the State campaign committee of the candidate nominated by that party for election to the office of Vice President.

"(c) (1) Any political committee authorized by a candidate to accept contributions or make expenditures in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or for election, which is not a central campaign committee or a State campaign committee, shall furnish each report required of it under section 304 (other than reports required under section 311(b)) to that candidate’s central campaign committee at the time it would, but for this subsection, be required to furnish that report to the Commission. Any report properly furnished to a central campaign committee under this subsection shall be, for purposes of this title, held and considered to have been furnished to the Commission at the time at which it was furnished to such central campaign committee.

"(2) The Commission may, by regulation, require any political committee receiving contributions or making expenditures in a State on behalf of a candidate who, under subsection (a), has designated a State campaign committee for that State to furnish its reports to that State campaign committee instead of furnishing such reports to the central campaign committee of that candidate.

"(3) The Commission may require any political committee to furnish any report directly to the Commission.

"(d) Each political committee which is a central campaign committee or a State campaign committee shall receive all reports filed with or furnished to it by other political committees, and consolidate and furnish the reports to the Commission, together with its own reports and statements, in accordance with the provisions of this title and regulations prescribed by the Commission.

"CAMPAIGN DEPOSITORIES

"Sec. 311. (a) (1) Each candidate shall designate one or more National or State banks as his campaign depositories.
The central campaign committee of that candidate, and any other political committee authorized by him to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf, shall maintain a checking account at a depository so designated by the candidate and shall deposit any contributions received by that committee into that account. A candidate shall deposit any payment received by him under section 506 of this Act in the account maintained by his central campaign committee. No expenditure may be made by any such committee on behalf of a candidate or to influence his election except by check drawn on that account, other than petty cash expendutures as provided in subsection (b).

“(2) The treasurer of each political committee (other than a political committee authorized by a candidate to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf) shall designate one or more National or State banks as campaign depositories of that committee, and shall maintain a checking account for the committee at each such depository.
All contributions received by that committee shall be deposited in such an account. No expenditure may be made by that committee except by check drawn on that account, other than petty cash expenditures as provided in subsection (b).

“(b) A political committee may maintain a petty cash fund out of which it may make expenditures not in excess of $100 to any person in connection with a single purchase or transaction. A record of petty cash disbursements shall be kept in accordance with requirements established by the Commission, and such statements and reports thereof shall be furnished to the Commission as it may require.

"(c) A candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of President may establish one such depository in each such State, which shall be considered by his State campaign committee for that State and any other political committee authorized by him to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf in that State, under regulations prescribed by the Commission, as his single campaign depository. The campaign depository of the candidate of a political party for election to the office of Vice President shall be the campaign depository designated by the candidate of that party for election to the office of President."

(b) (1) Section 5314 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(60) Members (other than the Comptroller General), Federal Election Commission (7)."

(2) Section 5315 of such title is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(98) General Counsel, Federal Election Commission.

"(99) Executive Director, Federal Election Commission."

(c) Until the appointment and qualification of all the members of the Federal Election Commission and its General Counsel and until the transfer provided for in this subsection, the Comptroller General, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall continue to carry out their responsibilities under title I and title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as such titles existed on the day before the date of enactment of this Act. Upon the appointment of all the members of the Commission and its General Counsel, the Comptroller General, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall meet with the Commission and arrange for the transfer, within thirty days after the date on which all such members and the General Counsel are appointed, of all records, documents, memorandums, and other papers associated with carrying out their responsibilities under title I and title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

(d) Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by—

(1) amending section 301 (g) (relating to definitions) to read as follows:

Sec. 209. Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by inserting after section 312 (as redesignated by this Act) the following new section:

"JUDICIAL REVIEW

"Sec. 313. (a) Any agency action by the Commission made under the provisions of this Act shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed in such court by any interested person. Any petition filed pursuant to this section shall be filed within thirty days after the agency action by the Commission for which review is sought.

"(b) The Commission, the national committee of any political party, and individuals eligible to vote in an election for Federal office, are authorized to institute such actions, including actions for declaratory judgment or injunctive relief, as may be appropriate to implement any provision of this Act.

"(e) The provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, apply to judicial review of any agency action, as defined in section 551 of title 5, United States Code, by the Commission.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO STATES TO PROMOTE COMPLIANCE

Sec. 210. Section 309 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to statements filed with State officers) is redesignated as section 314 of such Act and amended by—

(1) striking out "a supervisory officer" in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "the Commission";

(2) striking out "in which an expenditure is made by him or on his behalf" in subsection (a) (1) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "in which he is a candidate or in which substantial expenditures are made by him or on his behalf"; and

(3) adding the following new subsection:

"(c) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Commission in each fiscal year the sum of $500,000, to be made available in such amounts as the Commission deems appropriate to the States for the purpose of assisting them in complying with their duties as set forth in this section.”.

CONTRIBUTIONS IN THE NAME OF ANOTHER PERSON

Sec. 211. Section 310 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to prohibition of contributions in name of another) is redesignated as section 315 of such Act and amended by inserting after “another person”, the first time it appears, the following: “or knowingly permit his name to be used to effect such a contribution”.

ROLE OF POLITICAL PARTY ORGANIZATION IN PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGNS; USE OF EXCESS CAMPAIGN FUNDS; AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS; PENALTIES

Sec. 212. Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by striking out section 311 and by adding at the end of such title the following new sections:

“APPROVAL OF PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES BY NATIONAL COMMITTEE

“Sec. 316. (a) No expenditure in excess of $1,000 shall be made by or on behalf of any candidate who has received the nomination of his political party for President or Vice President unless such expenditure has been specifically approved by the chairman or treasurer of that political party’s national committee or the designated representative of that
(b) Each national committee approving expenditures under subsection (a) shall register under section 303 as a political committee and report each expenditure it approves as if it had made that expenditure, together with the identification of the person seeking approval and making the expenditure.

(c) No political party shall have more than one national committee.

USE OF CONTRIBUTED AMOUNTS FOR CERTAIN PURPOSES

Sec. 317. Amounts received by a candidate as contributions that are in excess of any amount necessary to defray his campaign expenses (after the application of section 507(b)(1) of this Act), and any other amounts contributed to an individual for the purpose of supporting his activities as a holder of Federal office, may be used by that candidate or individual, as the case may be, to defray any ordinary and necessary expenses incurred by him in connection with his duties as a holder of Federal office, or may be contributed by him to any organization described in section 170(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. To the extent any such contribution, amount contributed, or expenditure thereof is not otherwise required to be disclosed under the provisions of this title, such contribution, amount contributed, or expenditure shall be fully disclosed in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Commission. The Commission is authorized to promulgate such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS"

"Sec. 318. "(j) ‘national committee’ means the organization which, by virtue of the bylaws of the political party, is responsible for the day-to-day operation of that political party at the national level as determined by the Federal Election Commission under section 301 (k) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.”.

EXPENDITURE OF PERSONAL AND FAMILY FUNDS FOR FEDERAL CAMPAIGNS

Sec. 302. (a) (1) Subsection (a) (1) of section 608 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:
“(a) (1) No candidate may make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaigns for nomination for election, and for election, to Federal office in excess, in the aggregate during any calendar year, of—

“(A) $50,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President;

“(B) $35,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Senator; or

“(C) $25,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress.”.

(2) Subsection (a) of such section is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

“(3) No candidate or his immediate family may make loans or advances from their personal funds in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office unless such loan or advance is evidenced by a written instrument fully disclosing the terms and conditions of such loan or advance.

“(4) For purposes of this subsection, any such loan or advance shall be included in computing the total amount of such expenditures only to the extent of the balance of such loan or advance outstanding and unpaid.”
(b) Subsection (c) of such section is amended by striking out "$1,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,500", and by striking out "one year" and inserting in lieu thereof "five years".

(c) (1) The caption of such section 608 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "out of candidates' personal and family funds".

(2) The table of sections for chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item relating to section 608 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"608. Limitations on contributions and expenditures out of candidates' personal and family funds."

(d) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 608 of title 18, United States Code, it shall not be unlawful for any individual who, as of the date of enactment of this Act, has outstanding any debt or obligation incurred on his behalf by any political committee in connection with his campaigns prior to January 1, 1973, for nomination for election, and for election, to Federal office, to satisfy or discharge any such debt or obligation out of his own personal funds or the personal funds of his immediate family (as such term is defined in such section 608).
SEPARATE SEGREGATED FUND MAINTENANCE BY GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS

Sec. 303. Section 611 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"It shall not constitute a violation of the provisions of this section for a corporation or a labor organization to establish, administer, or solicit contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by that corporation or labor organization if the establishment and administration of, and solicitation of contributions to, such fund do not constitute a violation of section 610."

LIMITATIONS ON POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES; EMBEZZLEMENT OR CONVERSION OF CAMPAIGN FUNDS

Sec. 304. (a) Chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

§ 614. Limitation on expenditures generally

"(a) (1) No candidate may make expenditures in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office in excess of the amount to which he would be limited under section 504 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 if he were receiving payments under title V of that Act.

"(2) Expenditures made on behalf of any candidate are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by such candidate.

"(3) Expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by the candidate for the office of President of the United States with whom he is running.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

"(A) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure, or

"(B) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate to make the expenditure.

"(5) The Federal Election Commission shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for Presidential nomination for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate’s expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"(b) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure during any calendar year in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for Federal office who is affiliated with that party which, when added to the sum of all other expenditures made by that national committee during that year in connection with the general election campaigns of all candidates affiliated with that party, exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States. The State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committees of the State committee, may not make any expenditure during the calendar year in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in such State who is affiliated with that party which, when added to all other expenditures made by that State committee during that year in connection with the general election campaigns of candidates affiliated with that party, exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of that State. For purposes of this subsection—

"(1) the term 'voting age population' means voting age population certified for the year under section 504
(g) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971; and

"(2) the approval by the national committee of a political party of an expenditure by or on behalf of the Presidential candidate of that party as required by section 316 of that Act is not considered an expenditure by that national committee.

"(c) (1) No person may make any expenditure (other than an expenditure made on behalf of a candidate under the provisions of subsection (a) (4)) advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate during a calendar year which, when added to all other expenditures made by that person during the year advocating the election or defeat of that candidate, exceeds $1,000.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) 'clearly identified' means—

"(i) the candidate's name appears;

"(ii) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears; or

"(iii) the identity of the candidate is apparent by unambiguous reference;

"(B) 'person' does not include the National or State committee of a political party; and

"(C) 'expenditure' does not include any payment made or incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, would not constitute an expenditure by that corporation or labor organization.

“(d) Any person who knowingly or willfully violates the provisions of this section, other than subsection (a) (5), shall be punishable by a fine of $25,000, imprisonment for a period of not more than five years, or both. If any candidate is convicted of violating the provisions of this section because of any expenditure made on his behalf (as determined under subsection (a) (4)) by a political committee, the treasurer of that committee, or any other person authorizing such expenditure, shall be punishable by a fine of not to exceed $25,000, imprisonment for not to exceed five years, or both, if such person knew, or had reason to know, that such expenditure was in excess of the limitation applicable to such candidate under this section.

“§ 615. Limitations on contributions

“(a) No person may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, a candidate for that candidate’s campaign for nomination for election, or election, which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that person for that campaign, exceeds $3,000.

“(b) (1) No candidate may knowingly accept a contribution for his campaign from any person which, when added to the sum of all other contributions received from that person for that campaign, exceeds $3,000.

(2) No officer or employee of a political committee or of a political party may knowingly accept any contribution made for the benefit or use of a candidate which that candidate could not accept under paragraph (1).

(c) (1) For purposes of the limitations contained in this section all contributions made by any person directly or indirectly to or for the benefit of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked, encumbered, or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to that candidate, shall be treated as contributions from that person to that candidate.

(2) Contributions made to, or for the benefit of, a candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President shall be considered, for purposes of this section, to be made to, or for the benefit of, a candidate nominated by that party for election to the office of President.

(3) The limitations imposed by subsections (a) and
(b) shall apply separately to each primary, primary runoff, general, and special election in which a candidate participates.

(d) (1) No individual may make a contribution during any calendar year which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that individual during that year, exceeds $25,000.
“(2) Any contribution made for a campaign in a year, other than the calendar year in which the election is held to which that campaign relates, is, for purposes of this section, considered to be made during the calendar year in which that election is held.

“(e) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not to exceed $25,000, imprisonment for not to exceed five years, or both.

“§ 616. Form of contributions

“No person may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, any candidate or political committee in excess, in the aggregate during any calendar year, of $100 unless such contribution is made by a written instrument identifying the person making the contribution. Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not to exceed $1,000, imprisonment for not to exceed one year, or both.

“§ 617. Embezzlement or conversion of political contributions

“(a) No candidate, officer, employee, or agent of a political committee, or person acting on behalf of any candidate or political committee, shall embezzle, knowingly convert to his own use or the use of another, or deposit in any place or in any manner except as authorized by law, any contributions or campaign funds entrusted to him or under his possession, custody, or control, or use any campaign funds to
1. pay or defray the costs of attorney fees for the defense of any person or persons charged with the commission of a crime; or receive, conceal, or retain the same with intent to convert it to his personal use or gain, knowing it to have been embezzled or converted.

"(b) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not more than $25,000, imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both; but if the value of such property does not exceed the sum of $100, the fine shall not exceed $1,000 and the imprisonment shall not exceed one year. Notwithstanding the provisions of this section, any surplus or unexpended campaign funds may be contributed to a national or State political party for political purposes, or to educational or charitable organizations, or may be preserved for use in future campaigns for elective office, or for any other lawful purpose."

(b) Section 591 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out "and 611" and inserting in lieu thereof "611, 614, 615, 616, and 617".

(c) The table of sections for chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new items:

"614. Limitation on expenditures generally.
"615. Limitation on contributions.
"616. Form of contributions.
"617. Embezzlement or conversion of political contributions."
TITLE IV—DISCLOSURE OF FINANCIAL INTERESTS BY CERTAIN FEDERAL OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

FEDERAL EMPLOYEE FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS

Sec. 401. (a) Any candidate of a political party in a general election for the office of a Member of Congress who, at the time he becomes a candidate, does not occupy any such office, shall file within one month after he becomes a candidate for such office, and each Member of Congress, each officer and employee of the United States (including any member of a uniformed service) who is compensated at a rate in excess of $25,000 per annum, any individual occupying the position of an officer or employee of the United States who performs duties of the type generally performed by an individual occupying grade GS-16 of the General Schedule or any higher grade or position (as determined by the Federal Election Commission regardless of the rate of compensation of such individual), the President, and the Vice President shall file annually, with the Commission a report containing a full and complete statement of—

(1) the amount and source of each item of income, each item of reimbursement for any expenditure, and each gift or aggregate of gifts from one source (other than gifts received from his spouse or any member of his immediate family) received by him or by him and his spouse jointly during the preceding calendar year which exceeds $100 in amount or value, including any fee or other honorarium received by him for or in con-connection with the preparation or delivery of any speech or address, attendance at any convention or other assembly of individuals, or the preparation of any article or other composition for publication, and the monetary value of subsistence, entertainment, travel, and other facilities received by him in kind;

(2) the identity of each asset held by him, or by him and his spouse jointly which has a value in excess of $1,000, and the amount of each liability owed by him or by him and his spouse jointly, which is in excess of $1,000 as of the close of the preceding calendar year;

(3) any transactions in securities of any business entity by him or by him and his spouse jointly, or by any person acting on his behalf or pursuant to his direction during the preceding calendar year if the aggregate amount involved in transactions in the securities of such business entity exceeds $1,000 during such year;

(4) all transactions in commodities by him, or by him and his spouse jointly, or by any person acting on his behalf or pursuant to his direction during the preceding calendar year if the aggregate amount involved in such transactions exceeds $1,000; and
(5) any purchase or sale, other than the purchase or sale of his personal residence, of real property or any interest therein by him, or by him and his spouse jointly, or by any person acting on his behalf or pursuant to his direction, during the preceding calendar year if the value of property involved in such purchase or sale exceeds $1,000.

(b) Reports required by this section (other than reports so required by candidates of political parties) shall be filed not later than May 15 of each year. In the case of any person who ceases, prior to such date in any year, to occupy the office or position the occupancy of which imposes upon him the reporting requirements contained in subsection (a) shall file such report on the last day he occupies such office or position, or on such later date, not more than three months after such last day, as the Commission may prescribe.

(c) Reports required by this section shall be in such form and detail as the Commission may prescribe. The Commission may provide for the grouping of items of income, sources of income, assets, liabilities, dealings in securities or commodities, and purchases and sales of real property, when separate itemization is not feasible or is not necessary for an accurate disclosure of the income, net worth, dealing in securities and commodities, or purchases and sales of real property of any individual.
(d) Any person who willfully fails to file a report required by this section or who knowingly and willfully files a false report under this section, shall be fined $2,000, or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both.

(e) All reports filed under this section shall be maintained by the Commission as public records, which, under such reasonable regulations as it shall prescribe, shall be available for inspection by members of the public.

(f) For the purposes of any report required by this section, an individual shall be considered to have been President, Vice President, a Member of Congress, an officer or employee of the United States, or a member of a uniformed service, during any calendar year if he served in any such position for more than six months during such calendar year.

(g) As used in this section—

(1) The term "income" means gross income as defined in section 61 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

(2) The term "security" means security as defined in section 2 of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended (15 U.S.C. 77b).

(3) The term "commodity" means commodity as defined in section 2 of the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended (7 U.S.C. 2).

(4) The term "transactions in securities or commodities" means any acquisition, holding, withholding, use, transfer, or other disposition involving any security or commodity.

(5) The term "Member of Congress" means a Senator, a Representative, a Resident Commissioner, or a Delegate.

(6) The term "officer" has the same meaning as in section 2104 of title 5, United States Code.

(7) The term "employee" has the same meaning as in section 2105 of such title.

(8) The term "uniformed service" means any of the Armed Forces, the commissioned corps of the Public Health Service, or the commissioned corps of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

(9) The term "immediate family" means the child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of an individual, and the spouses of such persons.

(h) Section 554 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) All written communications and memorandums stating the circumstances, source, and substance of all oral communications made to the agency, or any officer or employee thereof, with respect to any case which is subject to the provisions of this section by any person who is not an officer or employee of the agency shall be made a part of the public record of such case. This subsection shall not apply to communications to any officer, employee, or agent of the agency engaged in the performance of investigative or prosecuting functions for the agency with respect to such case.”

(i) The first report required under this section shall be due on the fifteenth day of May occurring at least thirty days after the date of enactment.

TITLE V—RELATED INTERNAL REVENUE CODE AMENDMENTS

INCREASE IN POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS CREDIT AND DEDUCTION

Sec. 501. (a) Section 41 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to maximum credit for contributions to candidates for public office) is amended to read as follows:

“(1) MAXIMUM CREDIT.—The credit allowed by subsection (a) for a taxable year shall not exceed $25 ($50 in the case of a joint return under section 6013).”

(b) Section 218 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to amount of deduction for contributions to candidates for public office) is amended to read as follows:

“(1) AMOUNT.—The deduction under subsection (a) shall not exceed $100 ($200 in the case of a joint return under section 6013).”

(c) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall apply with respect to any political contribution the payment of which is made after December 31, 1973.
DOUBLING OF DOLLAR CHECKOFF; REPEAL OF SUBTITLE H

Sec. 502. (a) Section 6096 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to designation of income tax payments to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) In General.—Every individual whose income tax liability for the taxable year is $2 or more is considered to have designated that $2 shall be paid over to the Federal Election Campaign Fund established under section 506 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 unless he elects not to make that designation. In the case of a joint return of a husband and wife having an income tax liability of $4 or more, each spouse shall be considered to have designated that $2 shall be paid over to such fund unless he elects not to make such designation.”.

(b) Section 6096 (c) of such Code is amended by—

(1) striking out “Designation” in the caption thereof and inserting in lieu thereof “Election”;

(2) striking out “A designation” and inserting in lieu thereof “An election”; and

(3) striking out “designation” each place it appears in the text of such section and inserting in lieu thereof “election”.

(c) (1) The caption of part VIII of subchapter A of chapter 61 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended to read as follows:

"PART VIII.—DESIGNATION OF INCOME TAX PAY-MENTS TO FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN FUND".

(2) The table of parts for subchapter A of chapter 61 of the Code is amended by striking out the item relating to part VIII and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"PART VIII. DESIGNATION OF INCOME TAX PAYMENTS TO FED-ERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN FUND."

(d) Subtitle H of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to financing of Presidential election campaigns) is repealed.

(e) Any amount designated by a taxpayer under section 6096 of such Code before its amendment by this section is considered to have been designated for payment into the Federal Election Campaign Fund.

(f) The amendments made by this section apply with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1973.

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, submitted the following

REPORT

[To accompany S. 3044]

The Committee on Rules and Administration, having considered an original bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns, reports favorably thereon, and recommends that the bill do pass.

PURPOSE OF THE BILL

This recommended legislation is a comprehensive and far-reaching measure, designed to bring together various laws already enacted or passed by the Senate, for the purpose of providing complete control over and disclosure of campaign contributions and expenditures in campaigns for Federal elective office, including all public funds which any candidate may be entitled to receive prior to or after the date of any election.

During the 92nd Congress (1971–1972) a major new law was enacted to provide sweeping and thorough control over, and public disclosure of, receipts and expenditures in both Federal primary elections and general elections. The new Act, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (P.L. 92–225), applies to all elections, all candidates seeking nomination for election or election to Federal office, and all political committees raising or spending in excess of $1,000 during a calendar year for the purpose of influencing or attempting to influence the results of those elections. Also, it requires candidates and political committees to file periodic statements and reports of receipts and expenditures with appropriate supervisory officers charged with responsibility to enforce compliance with the provisions of the Act.
The Act of 1971 was predicated upon the principle of public disclosure, that timely and complete disclosure of receipts and expenditures would result in the exercise of prudence by candidates and their committees and that excessive expenditures would incur the displeasure of the electorate who would or could demonstrate indignation at the polls. Except for the use of the media—radio, television, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertising facilities, and banks of telephones—no limitations were imposed upon expenditures by candidates or their committees, and no limitation was set upon contributions to candidates or committees.

It was unfortunate that the new Act did not become effective until April 7, 1972, because the scramble to raise political funds prior to that date, and thus to avoid the disclosure provisions of the law, resulted in broad and grave dissatisfaction with the Act and led to a demand for new and more comprehensive controls.

At the beginning of the 93rd Congress, many bills were introduced providing strict limitations upon contributions and expenditures. S. 372, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1973, was reported to the Senate after public hearings and study, and following substantial debate in the Senate, was passed by a vote of 82 to 8, as an amendment to the Act of 1971. S. 372 was referred to the House of Representatives for further consideration, but as of the date of this report, no action has been taken by that body.

Further, with the introduction of specific limitations upon contributions and expenditures, concern developed that major political parties and well-known individuals, including incumbent officeholders, would have greater access and appeal to donors than would minor parties and unknown individuals who desired to enter the political arena. Therefore, a movement for the public financing of Federal elections evolved in the Senate.

Public hearings were held by the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, chaired by Senator Claiborne Pell, on the 18th, 19th, 20th, and 21st of September, 1973. Over 40 witnesses appeared to testify in person and to submit lengthy statements in support of public financing. A few witnesses appeared in opposition, but the greater preponderance of testimony was favorable to the concept.

Senator Cranston, from the State of California, speaking for a bipartisan group of more than a third of the Senate membership, submitted a set of principles, eight in number, which they considered to be essential tenets of any legislation to provide public financing in Federal elections. The principles were built upon the existing Presidential checkoff plan, which passed the Senate in 1971 under the leadership of Senators Russell Long, from Louisiana, and John Pastore, from Rhode Island.

Those eight principles are as follows:

1. Extension of the Presidential checkoff concept adopted in 1971 to provide Treasury financing of qualified candidates that will enable a candidate to mount an effective campaign without the need to seek large private contributions; the amount must be sufficient to allow nonincumbents to campaign against better-known incumbents; and there must be adequate safeguards to insure full and easy public accountability for the use of private funds.
2. Full funding for major party candidates: funding for minor party, new party, and independent candidates—up to full funding—based upon their performance in the last election or their showing in the present election.

3. Extension of public funding for qualified primary candidates once they have demonstrated broad public support through some means, which might include raising a special number of petition signatures asking that the candidate be given Federal funding for his campaign.

4. Establishing of an overall expenditure limit for both general and primary elections.

5. Permitting candidates to raise a limited amount of private funds in very small contributions.

6. Provision of a role for political parties which would allow them to serve as a legitimate pooling mechanism for private contributions to candidates in general elections.

7. Requirement of a central financial reporting and record-keeping check point in each candidate’s campaign for effective monitoring.

8. Administration of campaign financial reporting and disclosure laws and regulations by an independent elections commission with enforcement powers.

On November 16, 1973, Senator Pell, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, introduced S. 2718, the Federal Election Finance Act, which was then referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration. At that time the Senate was considering the debt ceiling bill and a public financing proposal which had been offered as an amendment to that bill by a bipartisan group of nine Senators. The amendment was adopted by a majority of the Senate. Subsequently, when the Senate was required to recede from its action to add public financing amendments to the debt ceiling bill, a commitment was made by the Committee on Rules and Administration, through its chairman, Senator Cannon, and other Members, to report to the Senate a bill providing for the public financing of Federal elections within approximately 30 days following the reconvening of the Senate on January 21, 1974.

The Pell bill provided the fundamentals, which the Committee considered during the course of its deliberations and mark-up sessions. The original bill here reported to the Senate meets the objectives of the previously mentioned eight principles, and of last year’s amendment to the debt ceiling bill. Also, in order to present a comprehensive coverage of private and public financing, limitations of contributions and expenditures, and public disclosure of and supervision over the whole spectrum of Federal election campaigns, the bill incorporates the following:

Title I—Financing of Federal Campaigns;
Title II—Changes in Campaign Communications Law and in Reporting and Disclosure Provisions of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971;
Title III—Crimes Relating to Elections and Political Activities; Title IV—Disclosure of Financial Interests by Certain Federal Officers and Employees; and Title V—Related Internal Revenue Code Amendments.
Therefore, if enacted, this Committee bill will renew and reemphasize the disclosure provisions of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as amended in the Senate by the bill S. 372, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1973. Moreover, the limitations set by S. 372 upon contributions and expenditures and the creation in that bill of an independent Federal Election Commission with primary civil and criminal prosecutorial powers, as carried over in this bill, will help to ensure careful compliance with all provisions.

The use of a modified dollar check-off as an inducement to taxpayers to designate $2 of their tax liability for the Federal Election Campaign Fund, and carry-over of the tax credit or tax deduction incentives, will serve to encourage broader citizen participation in the elective process. The doubling of tax credit/tax deduction provisions of existing law should also increase citizen support of candidates and parties of their choice.

NEED FOR AND ARGUMENT FAVORING PUBLIC FINANCING

The bill provides an integrated comprehensive program of campaign reform, Title I dealing with public financing assistance for federal elections is the only portion of the bill which has not previously been considered and approved by the Senate.

The Committee recognizes that the issue of public financing has been a controversial one for several years, and that our colleagues may have a variety of questions regarding the impact and implications of these proposals. While the Committee has built upon the principles already adopted by Congress in the Presidential Campaign Fund of the 1971 Revenue Act, the present bill extends these principles to other parts of the electoral process for federal office.

Before proceeding with a detailed discussion of the provisions in this Title, therefore, it will be useful to indicate the Committee's thinking in regard to the major issues and contentions which were raised at the hearings.

Public financing is necessary for effective campaign reform

There is no question that the public appreciates the pervasive evils of our present system for campaign financing. The potentials for abuse are all too clear. Americans are looking to Congress for comprehensive, effective reform, not for halfway measures that only reach a small part of the problem—or which may make some present problems even worse.

The Committee is aware of the position, advanced by opponents of public financing, that reporting and disclosure rules combined with limits on contributions provide sufficient reform and make it unnecessary to extend public campaign financing beyond existing law. The Committee does not agree.

In light of the record made before this Committee during its consideration of S. 372, and the hearings on the present legislation, it is clear to us that contribution and expenditure limits which would check excessive influence of great wealth cannot be effectively and fairly implemented without a comprehensive system of public campaign financing.

Congress has already recognized the desirability of public financing for Presidential elections. This bill extends this recognition to Congressional general elections and to primary elections for both Congress and the presidency.

The only way in which Congress can eliminate reliance on large private contributions and still ensure adequate presentation to the electorate of opposing viewpoints of competing candidates is through comprehensive public financing.

Modern campaigns are increasingly expensive and the necessary fundraising is a great drain on the time and energies of the candidates. Low contribution limits alone will compound that problem. Many candidates—incumbent and challenger alike—will find it exceedingly difficult to finance an adequate campaign to carry their message to the voters. Drastically reducing the amounts which may be expended by the candidate would ease this burden, but at the cost of increasing the present disadvantage for non-incumbent challengers and endangering the whole process of political competition.

Moreover, even those candidates who could raise adequate funds under restricted contribution limits would benefit from public financing. The committee bill would enable them to rely less heavily on those relatively few individuals capable of contributing the maximum amount permitted by law.

Nor does the Committee agree with the argument that public financing would be an unwise waste of public monies at a time when control of the federal budget is essential. The Committee believes the American voter has now had ample demonstration that the modest cost per citizen of public financing for federal elections will be as wise an investment of tax dollars as a democracy can make.

The election of federal officials is not a private affair. It is the foundation of our government. As Senator Mansfield recently observed, it is now clear that “we shall not finally come to grips with the problems except as we are prepared to pay for the public business of elections with public funds. (State of the Congress Address, February 6, 1974.)

Formula grants for qualified general election candidates

The bill provides nominees of major parties with public financing equal to the full amount of expenditures permitted to be made in a campaign.

Alternative approaches to financing general election campaigns were noted by the Committee, but none provided a satisfactory substitute for the provisions of the committee bill.

Some suggestions, such as increased mail privileges for both incumbent and challenger, or free radio and television time, are complementary to this bill. These suggestions have merit and deserve careful consideration by the appropriate Congressional committees. If they are enacted, such programs would obviously reduce the remaining expenditures a candidate faces. If the cost of the campaign is cut down, then the amounts of direct public funds which the bill provides for may then be proportionately reduced. But the many complex questions raised by proposals for free services and other in-kind assistance, need not delay enactment of a comprehensive approach to campaign financing.

Other alternatives considered and rejected by the Committee for reform of general election campaign financing include a system of matching payments in response to private contributions or a minimum floor of public assistance with the bulk of campaign costs raised privately.

The Committee bill embodies the sounder principle that once someone becomes an unquestionably serious candidate, by virtue of his being a major party nominee, he should be assured of adequate financing to run a fully informative and effective campaign. The use of matching payments is appropriate in the primary phase, as noted below, when it is not yet clear who may be the serious candidates and who may be frivolous ones. But such a scheme, or partial public funding, in the general election would require candidates who have established their legitimacy to devote too much time to endless fund raising at the expense of providing competitive debate of the issues for the electorate. This would be especially true in view of the $3,000 limit which the Senate has imposed on individual contributions and which is carried forward in the bill.

Matching grants for qualified primary candidates

If public financing is made available in general elections, the question remains whether it should also be extended to primary election candidates. Devising fair criteria for eligibility is harder in primary elections since no single candidate has won his party's nomination. The difficulty lies in screening out frivolous candidates who might be encouraged to enter by the prospect of a large subsidy, while still providing some assistance to serious candidates with potential for developing significant support.

In light of this issue, some witnesses suggested that any public financing be limited to general elections. After reviewing these suggestions, your Committee concluded that meaningful reform of our campaign financing practices requires inclusion of primary elections.

Unless primary election candidates can be relieved of their excessive dependence on large amounts of private money, a system of public financing in general elections will only move the evils it seeks to remedy upstream to the primary phase of the electoral process.

It will be difficult to justify the expenditure of public money to help purify that process, if candidates must still raise the full cost of expensive campaigns from private contributors, in order to win the nomination in the first place.

If a reasonable portion of these costs are defrayed by public assistance, candidates for nomination will be able to raise the remainder on a truly "grass roots" basis without relying so heavily on those who are wealthy enough to give the maximum contributions permitted each person under this act.

The bill provides significant public financing for primary candidates, up to one-half the total expenditures they are permitted. Such assistance is limited to those who demonstrate they are serious candidates by raising a threshold eligibility fund in small amounts from many contributors. No more than $100 from the contribution of any person may be counted. The Committee believes the use of small contributions is the best practicable test for such support. This fund will establish the candidate's initial credibility and qualify him for federal assistance. But this test does not determine the total amount of federal funding he will actually receive.
The threshold fund may merely represent a small nucleus of supporters and not reflect enough widespread support to warrant sizeable federal grants. Therefore, unlike the formula grants available to party nominees in the general election, primary candidates are only entitled to federal assistance which matches, dollar for dollar, whatever private funds they are able to raise.

Moreover, as in the case of the threshold fund, only $100 of each person's contribution can be matched with federal funds. This limitation encourages a candidate to involve large numbers of voters in the fundraising process. It also ensures that larger amounts of public assistance will only go to candidates who continue to demonstrate widespread support as the campaign develops.

The Committee believes this scheme for financing primary campaigns is a sound, balanced approach which avoids constitutional difficulties. Candidates are not barred from entering any primary merely because they have not raised the threshold eligibility fund. They can still run in the primary and finance their campaign privately. But Congress is not required to fund every candidate, no matter how frivolous, who exercises his constitutional right to enter a party primary. It may set a reasonable test of minimum support before it commits public moneys to assist a campaign.

The States have a recognized "interest, if not a duty, to protect the integrity of its political processes from frivolous or fraudulent candidacies." Bullock v. Carter 405 U.S. 134, 145 (1971). Surely Congress has an equal interest, if not a duty, to ensure that large sums of public moneys are not expended on the campaigns of such frivolous candidacies.

Several other concerns have been raised in regard to the enactment of comprehensive public financing legislation for Federal elections. These are discussed briefly below.

Strengthening political parties

The Committee was cautioned by several witnesses to examine the relationship between campaign finance legislation and political parties. Your Committee agrees that a vigorous party system is vital to American politics and has given this matter careful study.

Under the Committee bill, parties will retain their essential non-financial responsibilities in electoral politics. More important, the bill retains the role of political parties in private financing for federal candidates.

Public grants will go directly to candidates in the manner Congress has already established for the Presidential Campaign Fund of the 1971 Tax Act. This also reflects the present pattern of private fundraising, since candidates receive the bulk of their contributions directly from the public, rather than from parties.

However, the Committee recognizes that pooling resources from many small contributors is a legitimate function and an integral part of party politics. Accordingly, the bill includes a special provision for private funding by political parties. In a general election, candidates may not accept direct contributions if they accept the full level of public assistance. But they may receive substantial private funding, in addition to the public grant, in the form of expenditures by state and national party committees.
The bill insures that such party assistance actually represents the involvement of many voters and not merely the influence of a wealthy few. It prevents evasion of the individual contribution limits by persons funneling large gifts through party committees; each person's donation to party funds used to assist federal candidates under this special provision must not exceed the maximum amount he could give directly to a candidate.

Thus, parties will play an increased role in building strong coalitions of voters and in keeping candidates responsible to the electorate through the party organization.

In addition, parties will continue to perform crucial functions in the election apart from fundraising, such as registration and voter turnout campaigns, providing speakers, organizing volunteer workers and publicizing issues. Indeed, the combination of substantial public financing with limits on private gifts to candidates will release large sums presently committed to individual campaigns and make them available for donation to the parties, themselves. As a result, our financially hard-pressed parties will have increased resources not only to conduct party-wide election efforts, but also to sustain important party operations in between elections.

Preventing proliferation of splinter parties

The bill also provides a balanced approach to the difficult issues posed by minor parties.

On the one hand, the Committee bill would not stimulate a proliferation of splinter parties or independent candidates. Such a proliferation would undermine the stability provided by a strong two-party system and could polarize voters on the basis of a single volatile issue.

All but fringe candidates would have an incentive to seek a major party nomination, rather than run as a minor party candidate, so as to be eligible for the full level of public assistance in the general election. The bill would thereby have a cohesive effect, encouraging different factions to compete and work out coalitions within the framework of a basic two-party system.

If a candidate's supporters clearly constitute a mere fringe group, with no prospect of appealing to a large mass of voters, then he may choose to run as a minor party candidate. But it is unlikely he would raise many matchable contributions, in the event his party has a primary. And in the general election, he will only be eligible for a grant based on his party's prior voting record.

Fair opportunity for minor parties

At the same time, minor parties with significant support are eligible to receive a fair share of public assistance commensurate with their proven political strength.

Under the bill the subsidy for minor parties would only be a fraction of the amount available to major party nominees, determined by the ration of the minor party's showing in the previous election to that of the major parties. This formula follows the Presidential election check-off of the 1971 Tax Act.

This smaller subsidy would, however, be offset by two provisions, which serve as safety valves to ensure fair opportunity for minor parties without unduly promoting their proliferation or inducing entry into contests which otherwise would not have been made.
First, minor candidates may raise proportionately more private funds than may a major party nominee receiving greater federal assistance. Therefore, the total amount which each candidate would be permitted to spend would remain equal. Second, if the minor party's tally in the election is better than past performances, the candidate would receive a post-election entitlement increasing his federal grant to reflect the actual level of support indicated at the polls. This supplement could be used to pay outstanding campaign obligations or to reimburse loans and contributions.

Both of these provisions, too, follow the principles established by Congress in the 1971 Tax Act for Presidential election financing.

In short, minor parties will retain their present opportunity—one constitutionally required—to grow into a major political force if their support is widespread and not a transient phenomenon. As the United States Supreme Court has noted, the legitimate interest in preserving the benefits of two major parties does not justify laws which would choke off competition by other parties with potential appeal to the electorate.

The bill complies with this requirement. It does not prevent minor parties from placing candidates on the ballot or from organizing resources to support them. It does not freeze the political status quo. Compare Williams v. Rhodes 393 U.S. 23 (1968), with Jenness v. Fortson 403 U.S. 431 (1971).

The Supreme Court has recognized and approved reasonable differences in the treatment of major and lesser parties based on their demonstrated relative strength, observing:

"Sometimes the grossest discrimination can lie in treating things that are different as though they were exactly alike..." (Jenness v. Fortson, supra 403 U.S. at 442.)

The Committee believes the reasonable difference in assistance available to major and minor parties, in conjunction with other provision to provide a fair opportunity for minor parties to demonstrate their strength and to increase it, provide a responsible scheme for public financing of all parties which is constitutional.

Preventing Federal interference with a candidate's campaign

When other arguments fail, opponents of any program to subsidize a private activity vital to the public interest have always raised the specter of "federal control." Predictably, some opponents of campaign reform have followed suit, arguing that public campaign financing will lead to bureaucrats in Washington telling candidates how to run their campaigns.

This objection is unfounded. The bill makes clear that candidates are permitted full flexibility and discretion in their election efforts, subject only to limitation on the dollar amounts of expenditures and contributions.

In the first place, candidates for the Senate or House of Representatives are free to use all or some or none of the public campaign funds to which they are entitled. If a candidate elects to accept less than the full grant to which he is entitled in the general election, he is free to raise privately the difference between the federal aid he does accept and his overall expenditure limit.
Equally important, the Committee has resisted any suggestion that those who accept federal campaign funds be obligated to conduct their campaign in particular ways, or to use the federal moneys for specific purposes that some may think are most useful to the electorate. Whether they qualify for public assistance and accept it, or not, all candidates are free to "do their own thing": to decide how they will conduct their campaign and employ their financial resources.

Since public assistance will be granted in accordance with automatic formulas—on either a matching or cent-per-voter basis—the statute requires uniform treatment and prevents discriminatory funding in favor of any candidate or party. The actual disbursement and audit of public campaign funds would be overseen by the Independent Elections Commission, which itself is subject to judicial review of alleged discrimination.

Public financing will not provide an unfair advantage to incumbent officials

Opponents of comprehensive campaign reform have even suggested that campaign finance legislation would aggravate any inherent advantages which incumbent elected officials now hold over their election opponents. While some schemes involving public financing may be envisaged for which this is true, this is clearly not such a bill.

Indeed, an incumbent concerned with preserving his obvious advantages over nonincumbent challengers might vote against the Committee bill since it will increase the chance of meaningful competition between the candidates.

As indicated above, lower limits on campaign contributions, by themselves, would serve to increase the advantages incumbents presently have in fundraising. However, the bill provides sufficient public funds for both nominees so that this problem is eliminated.

Public Financing Provisions

Primary elections

Title I of the bill affords an equal and fair opportunity to candidates of major, minor, or other parties, to obtain a certain amount of public financing from the Treasury of the United States if they can demonstrate a reasonable amount of support from the electorate in any geographic area in which an election is held and in which they intend to run for nomination for election or for election to Federal office. Any candidate who has a bona fide following who will make contributions to him or his authorized political committees sufficient to meet the base amounts set by the title, is entitled to receive matching payments from the government. Further, those contributions, under the bill, are eligible for matching payments only up to certain limits.

Any candidate who participates in, or who qualifies under State law to participate in, a Presidential Preference Primary and who desires to receive public financing from the Federal Government, must raise a threshold or "earnest money" fund before becoming eligible for the receipt of any public assistance.

The threshold amount is $250,000. While contributions may be received up to $8,000—which is the limit allowed by S. 372 on contributions by individuals or others—only the first $250 of any such contribution would be counted toward the base or threshold fund required.

The threshold fund would be required to be raised by a Presidential candidate only once—the first primary entered.

While the use of loans in the campaign process is accepted, in accordance with the provisions of existing law, including the disclosure of any loans made to or on behalf of any candidate, the Committee believes that no loan should be counted in determining whether a candidate has raised his threshold amount.

To demonstrate a genuine appeal to the electorate the candidate must raise his threshold from committed gifts, instead of mere loans which could be repaid from public funds after the threshold is raised. If the threshold could be raised from loans, in whole or in part, the spirit of the law would be violated.

Loans have their place and may be used for any other purpose during the entire period of election campaigning except for the raising of the “seed money” or threshold fund required to be raised by each candidate who desires to receive matching Federal funds in primary elections for Federal office.

Once having met the required threshold, the candidate would be eligible to receive an equal or matching amount from the Treasury. And, thereafter, each dollar contribution up to $250 would qualify the candidate to receive equal matching funds from the government until he reaches the limit set for the amount he may spend in any primary election. That limit, as provided by the bill S. 372, and incorporated in this bill, is 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the geographic area in which an election is to be held, except, that in the case of Presidential Primary Elections, the limit is doubled for any given State. That is, the Presidential Preference Primary candidate may spend for any primary election in a particular State twice the amount that a candidate running for nomination to the Senate in that State may spend. (See table on page 30.)

The reason for allowing Presidential Preference Primary candidates to exceed the limit set for any particular State, in contrast to the limit set for candidates for the Senate nomination or Representative at Large nomination, is to give an unknown individual the opportunity to compete with one who enjoys a national identity or who is well known in a particular area of the nation.

However, the bill S. 372 set an aggregate or overall limit on the amount which could be spent for the entire nominating process by a candidate seeking nomination to the office of President of the United States, and that overall limit is retained for that purpose in this bill, i.e. 10 cents times the voting age population of the United States for the entire nomination period.

In calculating and auditing expenditures made from contributions received from private donors, every contribution up to and including $3,000 would be counted for the purpose of determining the total spending limitation. But, for the purpose of determining eligibility to receive public financing, only those private contributions up to $250 would be counted.

Any candidate who qualifies, under the law of the State in which he seeks nomination, to seek nomination for election for the office of United States Senator, Delegate, Resident Commissioner, or Representative from a State having only one Representative must also raise a threshold or earnest-money base fund in order to be eligible to receive Federal matching funds.

Such a candidate would be required to raise an amount equal to the lesser of 20 percent of the maximum amount he may spend in his primary election, or $125,000. S. 372 set the limitation upon the amount which a candidate for nomination for election to the Senate may spend. It is the amount to be obtained by multiplying 10 cents times the voting age population for the geographic area (the State), but not less than $125,000. The $125,000 base was established as a reasonable minimum for expenditures by candidates of those States having small populations.

Therefore, the 20 percent threshold amount would begin with the $125,000 base and rise to the maximum, but for those States having very large populations, i.e., California, New York, etc., the maximum threshold figure would be $125,000. So, a candidate for nomination to the Senate would be required to raise an amount not less than 20 percent of the base ($125,000), or $25,000, but not more than the maximum for eligibility, or $125,000. (See table on page 33.)

For the Senate, as for the House of Representatives, only those individual contributions not in excess of $100 would qualify for public matching funds.

Once having met the threshold, all additional dollar contributions not in excess of $100 would qualify for matching Federal payments up to the limitation which a candidate for nomination to the Senate may spend in any State.

A candidate for nomination for election to the House of Representatives must raise a threshold amount of $10,000. The threshold is the same for all candidates seeking nomination for election to the House, except for those running in the States having only one Representative, or in the District of Columbia. The $100 limit on contributions eligible for matching payments applies as it does for the Senate.

Where separate run-off elections must be held to determine nominees for the Senate or the House of Representatives, the same provisions shall apply.

All candidates seeking nomination for election to the offices of President, Senator, or Representative, have the option of soliciting all private contributions up to the limitation on spending if they so choose, or seeking both private and public matching funds. Total public financing of primary elections is not provided.

General elections

Candidates participating in general election campaigns are treated differently depending upon whether they are the nominees of major or minor parties having previous voting records, or of minor parties having no previous voting records.

A major party is defined as one whose candidates for President and Vice President in the preceding election received at least 25 percent of the total number of popular votes cast in the United States for all candidates for such offices.

A candidate nominated by a major party would be eligible to receive full public funding in his campaign for election up to the limit set by the bill S. 372 (15 cents times the voting age population of the geographic area in which the election is to be held), as carried over into this public financing bill.

A minor party is defined to mean any political party whose candidates for President and Vice President in the preceding election received at least 5 percent but less than 25 percent of the total number of popular votes cast in the United States for all candidates for such offices.

A candidate nominated by a minor party would be eligible for public funding up to an amount which is in the same ratio as the average number of popular votes cast for all the candidates of the major party bears to the total number of popular votes cast for the candidate of the minor party.

Where only one political party qualifies as a major party, then that party whose candidate for election to a particular office at the preceding general election received the next greatest number of votes (but not less than 15 percent of the total number of votes cast) shall be treated as a major party and entitled to receive full public funding as such for the current election. There are States in which one political party or the candidate of a political party is so popular or dominant as to render, in fact, all other parties minor parties, whether Democratic or Republican. Therefore, this provision will help to ensure the equal entitlement of the Democratic and Republican parties, except in very rare instances where one of those parties would rank third.

The bill also takes into consideration the candidate who ran at the preceding election as a Democrat or Republican and received more than 25 percent of the votes cast and who then runs at the following election as an independent. When such a candidate switches from one party to another he does not carry with him the "track record", i.e. votes cast at the last general election, when he runs under another party label. He would be entitled to payments as an independent only if he receives at least 5 percent of the votes at the current election and his payments would be in reimbursements after the election, not before.

If that candidate runs again as an independent at the succeeding general election, and if he received more than 25 percent of the vote as an independent at the preceding general election, then he would be eligible for full public funding.

If a candidate of a minor party whose candidate for election to a given Federal office at the preceding general election received at least 5 percent of the votes cast for all candidates for that office, he will be entitled to receive public funds on a pro rata basis, and if at the current election that candidate receives more than 5 percent of the total votes cast, then he will be entitled to receive additional payments, as reimbursements to reflect the additional voter support.

In the general election, candidates may choose to receive all private contributions and no public funding, a blend of private and public funding within the limitations on expenditures for general elections as set forth in the bill, or, in the case of major party candidates exclusively public funding.

Post-election payments

Post-election payments are available to candidates in 2 situations.

First, if a minor party candidate or an independent candidate who is entitled to payments before the election in an amount which is less than the amount payable to the candidate of a major party before the election receives a greater percentage of the votes than the candidate of his party received in the last election (when compared to the average percentage received by a major party candidate in that election), he is entitled to receive an additional amount after the election. For example, if the average percentage of the votes received by a major party candidate in the preceding election was 30 percent and the minor party candidate received 15 percent of the votes in that election, the candidate of the minor party in the current election is entitled to a pre-election payment of half the amount to which a major party candidate is entitled. If the minor party candidate in the current election receives 40 percent of the vote and the average percentage received by the minor party candidates is still 30 percent, the minor party candidate is entitled to a post-election payment equal to the amount of the pre-election payment to which the major party candidates were each entitled, reduced by the amount of any payments he received before the election and the amount of any contributions he received for use in his campaign. If his pre-election payment and his contributions, added together, equal the spending limitation for that race the amount of his post-election payment is zero. If the sum of his pre-election payment and the contributions equals 90 percent of the spending limitation, his post-election payment is 10 percent of the spending limitation.

Second, a candidate who is not the nominee of a major or minor party and who did not receive more than 5 percent of the votes in the most recent general election for the same office, is not entitled to receive any pre-election payments. If he takes the same steps before the election to become eligible for payments that other candidates must take in order to receive pre-election payments, then, if he receives 5 percent or more of the votes in the current election he is entitled to a payment after the election which bears the same ratio to the maximum payment (equal to the spending limitation) as the number of votes he receives bears to the average number of votes a major party candidate receives. The post-election payment is reduced by the amount of contributions he receives for use in his campaign.

The rules under which the post-election payment may be used are basically these:

(1) The candidate cannot incur campaign expenditures in excess of the amount of his limitation under proposed section 504. The limitation there is the same as the limitation that would apply if he were receiving pre-election public financing of his campaign.

(2) The post-election payment may be used only to pay outstanding campaign debts.

(3) The candidate is regarded as having no outstanding campaign debts until he has spent all the amounts he received as contributions.

(4) Any part of the post-election payment which is left after paying his campaign debts must be returned to the Treasury for deposit back into the fund.

Source of Public Funding

Appropriations may be made by the Congress based on the amounts taxpayers have designated for the fund under the checkoff system.
Authority is provided for the appropriation of additional amounts if necessary.

The Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended to provide for the automatic designation of $2 of income tax liability of every individual whose income tax liability is $2 or more for the taxable year to the Federal Election Campaign Fund, unless the individual elects not to make such a designation. In the case of a joint return of a husband and wife having an income tax liability of $4 or more, each spouse is considered to have designated that $2 shall be paid over to the fund unless he elects not to make such a designation.

If the taxpayer designations of $2 per individual of tax liability result in a sufficient total fund to meet the requirements of all candidates entitled to receive public financing, then the Congress may appropriate that amount for distribution by the Secretary of the Treasury. If the amounts of designated tax payments to the fund do not result in a sufficient total amount to fulfill the entitlements of all qualified candidates, then the Congress may appropriate such additional sums as may be necessary to make up any deficit.

In the event that insufficient funds are available to meet the entitlements of candidates, and the Congress had not acted to appropriate amounts necessary to meet the entitlements of candidates, then such candidates may receive private contributions.

Any private contribution received would be limited to the ceilings established by the bill upon contributions from individuals or political committees and subject further to the amount of public financing, if any, that the candidate is entitled or elects to receive.

Additional Tax Incentives

The Internal Revenue Code would be amended so as to allow an individual who has made a political contribution to a candidate or political committee or political party during a calendar year to claim in his tax return for that year a tax credit or a tax deduction.

The tax credit is limited to one half of the amount of the contribution made and to $25 per individual, or $50 on a joint return.

The tax deduction is limited to $100 per individual.

Thus these tax incentives would double the provisions set forth in the existing law as they were enacted in the Revenue Act of 1971.

Role of Political Parties

Emphasis in this bill is placed upon candidates. But, to preserve the place of political parties in the elective process the bill provides that the National Committee of a political party may spend for political purposes an amount not in excess of the amount to be obtained by multiplying 2 cents by the voting age population of the United States.

A State Committee of a political party may spend an amount to be obtained by multiplying 2 cents by the voting age population of the State in which it functions.

Campaign Reform

Title II of the bill contains in part the text of S. 372 (the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1973) which was passed by the Senate on July 30, 1973.
The Committee amendments to S. 372 do not affect any of the substantive provisions relating to limitations upon contributions or limitations upon expenditures in primary or general elections. The amendments, instead, are intended to remove from the text only those matters which were considered nonessential or which duplicated other provisions of the bill, or which were changed by subsequent action of the Congress. For example, the section prohibiting mass mailing of newsletters, etc., within 60 days prior to the date of any election, was made unnecessary by the enactment of Public Law 93-191, December 18, 1973, regulating the use of the frank.

Title II, in general contains provisions—relating to political broadcasting, and revising title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to reporting and disclosure).

Political Broadcasting

The bill includes also the provisions of S. 372 which repeal the Campaign Communications Act, imposing limitations on amounts spent by candidates for Federal office for the use of broadcast and printed media in their campaigns. It also amends the Communications Act of 1934—

(1) to remove Federal candidates from the equal time requirements of section 315 of that Act.

(2) to require broadcasters to demand a certification by any Federal candidate, before charging him for broadcast time, indicating that the payment of charges for that time will not exceed his expenditure limit under title 18, United States Code, and to apply this provision to State and local candidates wherever similar limits are imposed on them by State law; and

(3) to require broadcasters to make certain announcements and keep certain records in connection with political broadcasts.

Reporting and Disclosure

Title II of the bill is concerned with a general revision of title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to the disclosure of Federal campaign funds).

The bill establishes an independent Federal Election Commission within the executive branch to enforce the reporting and disclosure requirements of the 1971 Act and to enforce certain provisions of chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code (relating to crimes related to political activity). The Commission is given broad powers of enforcement, including the power to make presentations to Federal grand juries and to prosecute criminal cases.

In addition to a number of changes in the details of the reporting and disclosure requirements of the 1971 Act, Title II—

(1) requires a candidate for Federal office to designate a central campaign committee to serve as his central reporting and disclosure agent, and to designate campaign depositories into which all contributions and any public financing payments must be deposited and out of which all campaign expenditures (other than petty cash) must be made;
(2) increases penalties for violations of reporting and disclosure requirements to a maximum of $100,000 and five years imprisonment for a knowing violation;

(3) requires that no expenditure in excess of $1,000 can be made in connection with a Presidential campaign unless that expenditure has been approved by the Chairman of the national committee of the political party or his delegate; and

(4) provides that excess campaign contributions may be used by a person elected to Federal office to defray expenses incurred in connection with that office or as a contribution to a charity.

Criminal Code Amendments

Chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code (relating to political activities), is amended by Title II of the bill—

(1) to make certain minor changes in the definitions of "election", "political committee", "contribution", and "expenditure";

(2) to revise the provisions of section 608 (relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures by a Federal candidate from his own funds and his family's funds) by making the dollar limitations applicable to total campaign expenditures during a calendar year, requiring loans or advances by the candidate or his family to be evidenced by a written instrument, including only the outstanding balances of such loans or advances in the computation of the limitation, and increasing the penalty for violations to a maximum of $25,000 fine and five years imprisonment;

(3) to amend section 611 (relating to contributions by Government contractors) to permit Government contractors to maintain separate segregated funds for voluntary contributions in the same manner as a non-Government corporate contractor may:

(4) to limit Federal campaign expenditures to the limits established for candidates who elect to receive public financing, i.e.—

(A) in the case of primary election campaigns, the greater of—

(i) 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State or Congressional district, or
(ii) $125,000 (in the case of a candidate for Senator, Resident Commissioner, Delegate, or sole Representative), or $90,000 (in the case of a candidate for Representative from a State entitled to 2 or more Representatives);

(B) in the case of general election campaigns, the greater of—

(i) 15 cents multiplied by the appropriate voting age population, or
(ii) $175,000 (in the case of a candidate for Senator, Resident Commissioner, Delegate, or sole Representative), or $90,000 (in the case of a candidate for Representative from a State entitled to 2 or more Representatives); and

(C) in the case of a candidate for nomination as a Presidential candidate, or for election as President, the amount allowable in each State in which he campaigns is twice the amount which would be allowable to a candidate for nomination for election to the Senate from that State subject to an overall limitation for expenditures throughout the United States of 10 cents multiplied by the voting age;

(5) to limit political contributions by individuals to Federal candidates to a yearly maximum of—

(A) $3,000 for each primary and general election campaign of any particular candidate, and

(B) $25,000, in the aggregate, for all contributions to Federal candidates and to political committees that support them;

(6) to limit independent political expenditures by anyone (other than the national committee or State committee of a political party, or one of the Congressional campaign committees) to $1,000 per year for each candidate;

(7) to limit general election expenditures by a political party to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States, in the case of a national committee of a political party, or in the State, in the case of a State committee.

(8) to prohibit contributions in excess of $100 other than by a written instrument identifying the contributor; and

(9) to prohibit the embezzlement or conversion of political contributions.

LIMITS ON "INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES"

The bill retains the limits on independent expenditures already adopted by the Senate in S. 372. The Committee finds these limits are both necessary and constitutional. "Independent expenditures" refer to sums expended on behalf of a candidate without his authorization, as distinct from contributions of money, goods or services put at the disposal of his campaign organization.

For example, a person might purchase billboard advertisements endorsing a candidate. If he does so completely on his own, and not at the request or suggestion of the candidate or his agent's that would constitute an "independent expenditure on behalf of a candidate" under section 614(c) of the bill. The person making the expenditure would have to report it as such.

However, if the advertisement was placed in cooperation with the candidate’s campaign organization, then the amount would constitute a gift by the supporter and an expenditure by the candidate—just as if there had been a direct contribution enabling the candidate to place the advertisement, himself. It would be so reported by both.

While independent expenditures pose a difficult question, it should be emphasized that the need to control them does not arise from public financing. Whether campaigns are funded privately or publicly, such controls are imperative if Congress is to enact meaningful limits on direct contributions. Otherwise, wealthy individuals limited to a $3,000 direct contribution could also purchase one hundred thousand dollars' worth of advertisements for a favored candidate. Such a loophole would render direct contribution limits virtually meaningless.

Admittedly, expenditures made directly by an individual to urge support of a candidate pose First Amendment issues more vividly than do financial contributions to a campaign fund. Nevertheless, to prohibit a $60,000 direct contribution to be used for a TV spot commercial but then to permit the would-be contributor to purchase the time himself, and place a commercial endorsing the candidate, would exalt constitutional form over substance. Your Committee does not believe the First Amendment requires such a wooden construction.

If Congress may, consistent with the First Amendment, limit contributions to preserve the integrity of the electoral process, then it also can constitutionally limit independent expenditures in order to make the contribution limits effective.

At the same time, the bill avoids some of the constitutional issues in this area encountered by previous legislation. The 1971 Federal Election Campaign Act deals with such independent efforts by requiring candidate approval before the media may accept advertisements from any source which promote his candidacy. See ACLU v. Jennings, CA. No. 1967–72 (Three-judge court, D.C. Dist. Col.) In contrast, the Committee bill does not require this candidate “sign off.” Nor does it include unauthorized expenditures in the total spending limit imposed on the candidate.

Limiting the amount of independent expenditure someone may make in support of a candidate, but not counting such amounts for purposes of the overall spending limit of the candidate, is the best compromise of competing interests in free speech and effective campaign regulation.

It controls undue influence by a group or individual. Yet it avoids the dilemma of either giving candidates a veto over such independent expression or subjecting the candidate to the independent decisions of his supporters, even if he prefers using his permitted expenditure in other ways.

Thus, the bill preserves to everyone some right of political expression, which they can undertake regardless of whether the candidate has already used up his permitted expenditures and regardless of whether the expression they wish to make on the candidate's behalf "fits in" with his campaign plan.

Finally, your Committee has been careful to preserve inviolate every citizen's ability to communicate to anyone his views on political issues. Expenditures made by a person or group to communicate such views, if the communication does not advocate specific candidates, count neither as direct contributions, nor as independent expenditures on behalf of a candidate.

Examples of the Application of the Public Financing Provisions to Federal Elections

There are elections which do not present the conventional situation of a choice between 2 major party candidates. It is also true that, from time to time, a candidate changes his political party affiliation. The following examples illustrate the application of the provisions of the bill to such elections and candidates.

Example No. 1

In a 1984 election for the Senate, Mr. Apple is the candidate of political party A, political party B, and political party C. His opponent, Mr. Orange, is the candidate of political party D. When the votes are counted, Mr. Apple has received 55 percent of the total number of votes. He received 20 percent of the vote as the candidate of party A, 20 percent of the vote as the candidate of party B, and 15 percent of the vote as the candidate of party C. Mr. Orange, as the candidate of party D, received 45 percent of the vote.

In the 1990 contest for Mr. Apple's seat, parties A, B, and D are treated as major parties. (Under section 501(8) of the proposed new title of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, a major party is a political party whose candidate received, as the candidate of that party, 25 percent or more of the votes cast in the most recent election for the same office. However, if only one party qualifies as a major party under that rule, any political party whose candidate received the second highest number of votes in that election is also treated as a major party if he received at least 15 percent of the votes.) In this example Apple received 20 percent of the vote as the candidate of party A. Since the candidate of party A did not receive 25 percent or more of the votes, party A will be treated in the 1990 election as a major party only because its candidate received the second highest number of votes in the 1984 election, and because he received more than 15 percent of the votes. Mr. Apple also received 20 percent of the votes as the candidate of party B, so that party will also be treated as a major party in the 1990 election. Party D is a major party in the 1990 election because its candidate in 1984, Mr. Orange, received more than 25 percent of the votes. Party C is a minor party in the 1990 election because its candidate, in 1984, Mr. Apple, neither received more than 25 percent of the vote as the candidate of that party nor the second highest number of votes as the candidates of that party.

The provisions of the bill apply to the 1990 contest for Mr. Apple's seat in the following ways:

VARIATION A

Mr. Apple is again the nominee of party A, party B, and party C. Since party A and party B are each treated as a major party, their candidates are entitled to payments equal in amount to the spending limitation (assume the applicable limitation is $200,000). The candidate of party C in 1990 is entitled to a payment which bears the same ratio to the amount a major party candidate may receive ($200,000) as the number of votes received by the candidate of that party in the preceding general election bears to the average number of votes received by a major party candidate in that election. Mr. Apple, as the candidate of party C in 1984, received 15 percent of the votes and the average number of votes received by the candidates of party A, party B, and Party D was 28.3 percent of the total. The party C candidate in 1984 is entitled to approximately fifteen twenty-eighths of $200,000, which equals about $107,175. Although Mr. Apple is the candidate of party A, party B, party C in 1990, he is not entitled to a combined payment of $507,175. The provisions of proposed section 503(c) limit the amount of the maximum payment any candidate can receive to the amount he can spend. Mr. Apple's sending limit is $200,000, so he would receive payments totaling $200,000. Whether he would receive the full amount as the candidate of party A (or of party B) and nothing as the candidate of the other 2 parties, or whether he would receive part of the amount as the candidate of each party would depend upon the circumstances under which he certified his candidacy and upon the arrangements he made with each party.

Since Mr. Orange, as the candidate of party D, received 45 percent of the votes in the 1984 contest, the candidate of party D in the 1990 contest is entitled to receive a payment of $200,000 as the candidate of a major party.

VARIATION B

Mr. Apple decides not to seek re-election. For the reasons set forth above, the candidates of parties A, B, and D would each be entitled to receive payments under the proposed new title of $200,000 each for use in the 1990 general election campaign. The candidate of party C would be entitled to receive $107,175.

VARIATION C

Mr. Apple decides to seek re-election only as the candidate of party A. Mr. Apple is entitled to a payment of $200,000, the candidates of parties B and D are each entitled to receive a payment of $200,000, and the candidate of party C is entitled to a payment of $107,175.

VARIATION D

Regardless of what Mr. Apple does, Mr. Orange decides to try again for the seat, but this time he chooses to run as an independent candidate rather than as the candidate of party D. Mr. Orange is not entitled to receive one penny in public funds until after the election is over. If he receives more than 5 percent of the votes cast, then he is entitled to receive payments in reimbursement of his campaign expenses based on the percentage of votes he receives as compared to the average number of votes received by major party candidates in that election.

Example No. 2

In a 1984 election for the House the candidate of political party A is an individual who has been elected to the House from that district for over 80 years, so party B doesn’t bother to nominate a candidate. The incumbent retires before his term is up and a special election is called for 1985. In the special election, the new candidate of party A is entitled to a payment equal to his expenditure limitation. Assume that the applicable limitation is $100,000. Party B nominates a candidate, but, since the party had no candidate in the preceding general election for the office, he is not entitled to any payment before the election. In the 1985 election, the candidate of party A receives 45 percent of the votes; the candidate of party B receives 55 percent of the votes. The candidate of party B is then entitled to a payment after the election which bears the same ratio to the pre-election payment made to the candidate of party A as the number of votes received by the candidate of party B bears to the number of votes received by the candidate of party A. Since the candidate of party B received more votes than the candidate of party A, his post-election payment is equal to the pre-election payment received by the candidate of party A (it does not exceed that payment because of the application of the limitation in proposed section 503 (c)).
Example No. 3

In the 1984 election mentioned in example number 2, party B decides that the incumbent is to be their nominee as well. Sixty-five percent of the votes he receives come from the members of party A and the remaining 35 percent come from the members of party B. In the special election of 1985, both party A and party B are major parties because their candidate in 1984, the now retired incumbent, received more than 25 percent of the vote in the preceding general election as the candidate of each party. The candidate of party A and the candidate of party B in the 1985 election are each entitled to a pre-election payment of $100,000.

Presidential general elections

The Committee bill makes no basic change in existing law in the application of the dollar checkoff to the entitlement of candidates to public funds in Presidential elections.

In general, a candidate qualifies for full public funding if he is the candidate of a "major" party—a party that received 25 percent or more of the popular votes cast in the preceding election. He qualifies for partial public funding if he is the candidate of a "minor" party—a party that received 5 percent or more, but less than 25 percent, of the popular votes cast in the preceding election; the amount of public funds for a minor party candidate is based on the proportion of the popular vote he received in the preceding election.

In addition, a candidate may also qualify for public funds retroactively, on the basis of his showing in the current election. In such a case, a candidate who receives public funds after the election may use the funds to reimburse private contributors.

In the 1972 Presidential election, President Nixon received 60.2 percent of the vote as the candidate of the Republican Party. Senator McGovern received 37.2 percent of the vote as the candidate of the Democratic Party. Representative Schmitz received 1.3 percent of the vote as the candidate of the American Independent Party or under other party designations.

In 1976 the Republican Party and the Democratic Party qualify as major parties on the basis of the 1972 election, and their candidates will be entitled to full public funding. Since no other party qualifies as a major or minor party on the basis of the 1972 election, no other candidates will be entitled to public funds in advance of the 1976 election. However, if a candidate of a third party runs in 1976 and receives more than 5 percent of the vote, he will qualify retroactively for public funds, based on his showing in the 1976 election.

The application of the public financing provision to Presidential elections is also illustrated by the following section, showing its application to Senate elections.

Senate elections

Some of the following examples are adapted from actual Senate elections in recent years. Most of the examples are designed to illustrate the application of the dollar checkoff to Senate elections involving relatively unusual situations. The dollar checkoff, already applicable to Presidential general elections under existing law, was enacted in 1971 with close attention to its impact on potential third party presidential candidacies. As the examples demonstrate, the formula in existing law for Presidential elections is easily applied to Senate elections, as provided by the Committee bill.

Typically, however, minor party candidates have not been a significant factor in the vast majority of recent Senate elections.

In the past three Congressional election years, there have been a total of 103 Senate elections. In 42 of these elections—14 of the 34 races in 1972, 12 of the 35 races in 1970, and 16 of the 34 races in 1968—only two candidates were entered—Democratic and Republican. In the other 61 races, additional candidates representing some 30 other parties were also on the ballot in those years in various states. But, in those 61 races, there were only seven races in which the third candidate received more than 5 percent of the vote—Louisiana in 1972; Connecticut and New York in 1970; and Alabama, Alaska, Maryland and New York in 1968. In those seven races—seven out of 103 races in all—the third candidate would have qualified for partial public funding as a “minor” party candidate in the following election. In none of those seven races did the third candidate receive more than 25 percent of the vote; therefore, no third candidate would have qualified as a “major” party candidate entitled to full public funding in the following election.

The examples follow:

1. In the 1968 Senate election, Candidate A of the Democratic Party defeated Candidate B of the Republican Party by 50 percent to 48 percent, and Candidate C of Party X received 2 percent of the vote. When the Senate seat is up again in 1974, the Democratic Party and the Republican Party are “major” parties. Their candidates are each entitled to public funds in the amount of 15 cents per vote, based on the voting age population of the State. Since Candidate C failed to reach the 5 percent cutoff in the 1968 election, Party X does not qualify for public funds in 1974.

2. Same as example (1) for 1968. In the 1974 election, Candidate A of the Democratic Party defeats Candidate B of the Republican Party by 46 percent to 44 percent, and Candidate D of Party X receives 10 percent of the vote. Candidate D qualifies as a “minor” party candidate on the basis of his showing in the current election (1974), since he received more than 5 percent of the vote. He is therefore entitled to public funds on a retroactive reimbursement basis, even though he did not qualify for public funds in advance of the election because Party X failed to receive 5 percent of the vote in 1968. Candidate D would be entitled to 10/45 or 22 percent of the amount of public funds given to each major party candidate, A and B. The amount is based on Candidate D’s proportional share of the average vote of the two major party candidates, and is calculated as follows: $10\% \div (46\% + 44\%) \div 2 = 10/45 = 22\%$. Candidate C may use these public funds to reimburse private contributors to his campaign in 1974.

3. In 1968, Candidate A of the Republican Party defeated Candidate B of the Democratic Party by 46 percent to 44 percent, and Candidate C of Party X won 10 percent of the vote.
In 1974, the candidates of the Democratic Party and the Republican Party are "major" party candidates and qualify for full public funds (15 cents per vote). The candidate of Party X is a "minor" party candidate and qualifies for partial public funds in 1974, in the amount of 22 percent of the entitlement of each major party candidate.

4. In the 1974 Senate election, Candidate A of the Democratic Party defeats Candidate B of the Republican Party by 46 percent to 44 percent. Candidate C runs as an Independent and receives 10 percent of the vote.

Candidate C qualifies retroactively for public funds on the same basis as if he were the candidate of a party. He receives 22 percent of the amount of public funds given to each major party candidate.

5. A received 4 percent of the vote as the candidate of Party X and 3 percent of the vote as the candidate of Party Y in 1968.

In 1974, A qualifies for public funds as a minor party candidate. His entitlement to public funds is based on 7 percent of the 1968 vote, since the bill permits a candidate to accumulate his votes from the preceding election, if he received 5 percent or more but less than 25 percent of the votes in that election.

6. In the 1968 election, Candidate A of the Democratic Party defeated Candidate B of the Republican Party by 54 percent to 37 percent. In the 1974 election, Senator A runs as an Independent, B runs as an Independent, C runs as the Candidate of the Republican Party, and D runs as the candidate of the Democratic Party. (Based on a recent Virginia Senate election.)

Candidate C of the Republican Party and Candidate D of the Democratic Party are each entitled to full public funding in 1974, since they are candidates of a major party on the basis of the 1968 election. Senator A is also entitled to full public funding, based on his own showing as a winning major party candidate in 1974. B does not qualify for public funds, since the Committee bill does not offer public funds to an independent candidate who was a defeated major party candidate in the preceding election.

7. Senator A ran as an Independent in 1968 and won the election with 54 percent of the vote. The candidate of the Democratic Party received 31 percent of the vote and the candidate of the Republican Party received 15 percent of the vote. (Based on a recent Virginia Senate election.)

If Senator A runs again as an Independent in 1974, he is entitled to full public funds (15 cents per vote), based on his 1968 showing as an Independent. The candidate of the Democratic Party in 1974 is also entitled to full public funds, because Party A qualifies as a "major" party on the basis of its 1968 showing. However, the candidate of the Republican Party in 1974 will qualify only for partial public funds, since it is a "minor" party based on its 1968 showing, even though it was a "major" party based on the 1962 election. In 1974, the Republican candidate is entitled to $15/(54+31)/2$, or 35% of the amount given to Senator A and to the Democratic candidate.

If the Republican candidate receives more than 25 percent of the vote in 1974 he qualifies retroactively as a "major" party candidate and is entitled to full public funds.

8. In 1968, candidate A of the Republican Party defeated Independent Candidate B by 50.7 percent to 49.3 percent, and there was no candidate of the Democratic Party (adapted from the Virginia Governor's election in 1973).

If Candidate B runs again as an Independent in 1974, he is entitled to full public funds. Senator A of the Republican Party will also be entitled to full public funds. If there is a candidate of the Democratic Party, he will not qualify for public funds unless he does so retroactively on the basis of his showing in the 1974 election. If Candidate B runs as the candidate of the Democratic Party in 1974, he qualifies for full public funds—not because he is the Democratic Candidate, but because of his personal showing as an Independent in 1968.

9. In 1968, Candidate A of the Democratic Party defeated Candidate B of the Republican Party by 78 percent to 22 percent (based on a recent West Virginia Senate election).

In 1974 since the Democratic Party is the only "major" party on the basis of the 1968 results, the Republican Party will also qualify as a "major" party under the bill. It is the party with the next highest showing in the preceding election, even though its candidate in 1968 won less than 25 percent of the vote and would not ordinarily qualify as a "major" party.

10. In 1968, Candidate A defeated Candidate B by 60 percent to 40 percent. Candidate A received 45 percent of his vote as the candidate of the Democratic Party, and 15 percent of his vote as the candidate of the Liberal Party. Candidate B received 26 percent of his vote as the candidate of the Republican Party, and 14 percent of his vote as the candidate of the Conservative Party. (Adapted from recent New York Senate elections.)

In 1974, the Democratic and Republican candidates qualify as "major" party candidates. The candidates of the Liberal and Conservative Parties each qualify as "minor" party candidates. In addition, if B runs as the Conservative Party candidate, but not as the Republican Party Candidate, in 1974, he qualifies only as a "minor" party candidate, because the bill does not allow a defeated major party candidate to run as a minor party candidate in the next election and carry over his status as a major party candidate.

9. In 1968, Candidate A of the Democratic Party won the election with 55% of the vote. Candidate B of the Republican Party won 19% of the vote and Independent Candidate C won 23% of the vote. (Based on a recent Louisiana Senate election.)

In 1974, since the Democratic Party is the only "major" party on the basis of the 1968 results, the bill, as noted in example (9), operates to allow the Republican Party to qualify as a "major" party, even though it received less than 25% of the vote in 1968, and even though Independent Candidate C made a better showing in 1968. If Candidate C runs again as an Independent in 1974, he qualifies for partial public funds as a "minor" party candidate. But the bill does not benefit an Independent by allowing him to receive full public funding as if he were a major party candidate. As example (7) makes clear, if both an Independent candidate and the Democratic Party candidate qualify for full public funds on the basis of the preceding election, the bill does not operate to allow the Republican candidate to qualify for full public funds. In other words, the bill does not operate to create full public funding for a third candidate, where two candidates already qualify for full public funds on the basis of their showing in the preceding election.
Illustrative examples of public financing under Senate Rules Committee print No. 4, as revised (Supplied by the General Accounting Office)

1. 1976 Presidential Primary Elections.—Assume four Democrats and four Republicans raise a campaign fund of at least $250,000 each from contributions of not more than $250 each. Each candidate would be entitled to matching funds of $250,000, plus one dollar for each additional dollar of qualifying contributions (under $250) raised. In each primary election or convention to select national convention delegates, each candidate could spend up to twice the amount permitted a Senate primary candidate. For example, in the 1976 Wisconsin presidential primary each candidate could spend up to 20¢ times voting age population ($600,600 based on current population) and could receive up to one-half of that amount in public funds.

2. 1976 Presidential General Election.—Both the Democratic and the Republican candidates represent a major party (over 25% of the popular vote in 1972). Both are entitled to optional full public financing up to the spending limit of 15 cents times voting age population ($21,250,000 based on current population). The spending limit applies to all candidates whether or not they choose public financing. No other candidate is qualified for public funds based on 1972 results, but if another candidate receives over 5% of the 1976 vote, he would be entitled after the election to a proportionate share to reimburse campaign expenditures. Assume the two major party candidates receive 41 percent and 39 percent of the 1976 popular vote, respectively, and assume Candidate C of the National Party receives 10 percent. Candidate C will be entitled to a post-election payment based on the ratio of his vote to the average of the major parties’ vote; i.e. 10/40 of $21,250,000. Candidate C would receive up to $5,312,500. In the 1980 general election for President, the Democrats and Republicans would be major parties and the National Party would be a minor party whose candidate is entitled to pre-election payments in the same ratio. If Candidate C runs as an independent in 1980, he would also be entitled to payments based on the votes he received in 1976.

3. Senate Primary Election.—Candidate A is opposed in the primary by Candidate B and both raise the required threshold campaign fund from contributions of $100 or less. Each candidate is entitled to matching funds on a dollar for dollar basis. If either candidate doesn’t raise the minimum amount from private sources he will not receive any public funds.

4. Senate Nominating Convention.—Same result as in preceding example because the term “primary election” in the bill includes a convention or caucus of a political party held to nominate a candidate.

5. Senate General Election.—Assume Candidates A and B are nominated by the major parties and Candidate C represents a minor party; and the voting age population of the state is 4 million. Candidates A and B are each entitled to $600,000 (15¢ times voting age population) for their general election campaign. If the minor party received 1/3 of the average vote of the major parties in the preceding election, Candidate C is entitled to $200,000.
6. House Primary Election.—In a congressional district in a multi-district state, four candidates for major party nomination qualify for matching funds by raising more than $10,000 in contributions of $100 or less. Each is entitled to spend up to $90,000 and is entitled to matching funds for each dollar raised.

7. House General Election.—The nominated candidate of a major party is entitled to full public payment of $90,000 in the general election. If the State has only one district, the primary limit is increased to $125,000 and the general election limit is increased to $175,000.

Cost Estimates Pursuant to Section 252(a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970

Section 252(a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 requires that any committee reporting a bill of a public character shall include in its accompanying report an estimate of the costs which would be incurred in effecting such legislation, or a statement of reasons compliance with this requirement is impracticable.

Accordingly, the Committee on Rules and Administration estimates the annual cost to the United States Government to an average of $89,391,693. This average estimate is based upon the supposition that all seats in the House of Representatives will be contested every two years; that one third of all Senate seats will be contested every two years; and that, of course, there will be a quadrennial election for President and Vice President. The costs are predicated upon total estimated public funds paid to eligible candidates for nomination for election, or election to Federal office.

The Committee is not aware of any estimates of costs made by any Federal agency which are different from those made by the committee.

Additional Cost Estimates

The Internal Revenue Service furnished the following information, based upon 1971 figures, demonstrating the cost to the government if all taxpayers were to designate one dollar of tax liability to the Presidential Campaign fund:

Total returns joint ............................................................ $47,770,000
Total individual returns ........................................... 31,080,000

Total returns ................................................................. 78,850,000

If all returns, individual and joint, should take full advantage of the one dollar check off the total cost would be $117,370,000.

If all returns should take full advantage of a two dollar check off the cost would be $234,740,000.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
JOINT COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL REVENUE TAXATION LONGWORTH HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING,

Mr. JAMES H. DUFFY,
CHIEF COUNSEL, SUBCOMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS, RULES AND ADMINISTRATION COMMITTEE, U.S. SENATE, WASHINGTON, D.C.

DEAR MR. DUFFY: This is in reference to your telephone request of February 20 for the estimated decrease in Federal individual income tax liability which would result from doubling from $50 ($100 for joint returns) to $100 ($200 for joint returns) the maximum deduction for political contributions and doubling from $12.50 ($25 for joint returns) to $25 ($50 for joint returns) the maximum tax credit for political contributions.
Based on estimated 1972 levels of political contributions under the proposal as derived from the levels of contributions reflected in tax returns filed for 1972, we estimate that the proposed doubling of the maximum deduction and the maximum credit would decrease Federal individual income tax liability by about $26 million of which $15 million is ascribable to the doubling of the maximum deduction and $11 million is ascribable to the doubling of the maximum credit.

Sincerely yours,

LAURENCE N. WOODWORTH.

1 Figures in this column represent 20 percent of the applicable primary spending limit except for a maximum threshold of $125,000 and a minimum threshold of $25,000.
PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY

(Based on 1972)

Assumptions: 1) Candidates qualify by raising $250,000
2) Apply 1972 qualifiers to primaries actually run Requirements: 1) To qualify candidates must raise $250,000 Formula: 1) Match $1 for $1 raised by those qualifying up to spending limit

2) Spending limit is 2 times the Senate formula which is the greater of 10¢ x state VAP or $125,000

1) New Hampshire - 4 candidates in primary raised $250,000 spending limit: $106,200 or $250,000
   government cost: $500,000

2) Florida - 8 candidates in primary raised $250,000
   spending limit: $1,085,400
   government cost: $4,341,500

3) Illinois - 1 candidate in primary raised $250,000
   spending limit: $1,513,600
   government cost: $756,800

4) Wisconsin - 8 candidates in primary raised $250,000
   spending limit: $500,000
   government cost: $2,426,400

5) Massachusetts - 7 candidates in primary raised $250,000
   spending limit: $801,200
   government cost: $2,804,200

6) Pennsylvania - 5 candidates in primary raised $250,000
   spending limit: $1,648,000
   government cost: $4,120,000

7) District of Columbia - 1 candidate in primary raised $250,000
   spending limit: $125,000
   government cost: $125,000

8) Indiana - 4 candidates in primary raised $250,000
   spending limit: $706,600
   government cost: $1,412,000

Total primary cost to government = $42,010,800
Requirements:
1) Major parties (25% or more vote) receive full Federal funding up to spending limit.
2) Minor parties (5-25% of vote) receive proportionate share.

Formula:
1) Spending limit is 15¢ x VAP ($21,248,400)

Assumption:
1) Two major parties
2) One minor party gets 10% of vote

VAP = 141,656,000
spending limit: 15¢ x 141,656,000 = $21,248,400
政府 cost: $21,248,400 x 2 candidates = $42,496,800
+ minor party= 4,721,394
$47,218,194

$42,010,800
47,218,194
$89,228,994
Assumptions: 1) Primary opposed– 2 candidates qualified and spent maximum
2) Primary unopposed– candidates did not raise qualifying amount
3) General– major candidates raised qualifying amounts Formula: 1) Qualifying amount– lesser of 20% of primary spending amount or $125,000

2) Primary spending amount– greater of 10¢ x VAP or $125,000
3) General spending amount– greater of 15¢ x VAP or $175,000
4) Matching in primary– 1 for 1
5) Full amount in general

1) Alabama: Qualify (lesser of 20% of $233,800 or $125,000) = $46,760
Primary: spending limit = 10¢ x 2,338,000 = $233,800
4 candidates qualified - matching government cost = $233,800 ÷ 2 x 4 = $467,600

COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934

(47 U.S.C. 315, 317)

§ 315. Candidates for public office; facilities; rules

(a) If any licensee shall permit any person who is a legally qualified candidate for any public office, other than Federal elective office (including the office of Vice President), to use a broadcasting station, he shall afford equal opportunities to all other such candidates for that office in the use of such broadcasting station: Provided, That such licensee shall have no power of censorship over the material broadcast under the provisions of this section. No obligation is imposed upon any licensee to allow the use of its station by any such candidate. Appearance by a legally qualified candidate on any—

1. bona fide newscast,
2. bona fide news interview,
3. bona fide documentary (if the appearance of the candidate is incidental to the presentation of the subject or subjects covered by the news documentary), or
4. on-the-spot coverage of bona fide news events (including but not limited to political conventions and activities incidental thereto), shall not be deemed to be use of a broadcasting station within the meaning of this subsection. Nothing in the foregoing sentence shall be construed as relieving broadcasters, in connection with the presentation of newscasts, news interviews, news documentaries, and on-the-spot coverage of news events, from the obligation imposed upon them under this chapter to operate in the public interest and to afford reasonable opportunity for the discussion of conflicting views on issues of public importance.

(b) The charges made for the use of any broadcasting station by or on behalf of any person who is a legally qualified candidate for any public office in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to such office shall not exceed—

1. during the forty-five days preceding the date of a primary or primary runoff election and during the sixty days preceding the date of a general or special election in which such person is a candidate, the lowest unit charge of the station for the same class and amount of time for the same period; and
2. at any other time, the charges made for comparable use of such station by other users thereof.

(c) No station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office (or for nomination to such office) unless such candidate both. The provisions of sections 501 through 503 of this Act shall not violate any limitation specified in paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of section 104(a) of the Campaign Communications Reform Act, whichever paragraph is applicable.]

c) No station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal elective office unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not exceed the limit on expenditures applicable to such candidate under section 504 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, or under section 614 of title 18, United States Code.

(d) A State by law and expressly—

(1) has provided that a primary or other election for any office of such State or of a political subdivision thereof is subject to this subsection,

(2) has specified a limitation upon total expenditures for the use of broadcasting stations on behalf of the candidacy of each legally qualified candidate in such election,

(3) has provided in any such law an unequivocal expression of intent to be bound by the provisions of this subsection, and

(4) has stipulated that the amount of such limitation shall not exceed the amount which would be determined for such election under section 104(a)(1)(B) or 104(a)(2)(B) (whichever is applicable) of the Campaign Communications Reform Act had such election been an election for a Federal elective office or nomination thereto;

then no station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate in such election unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate such State limitation.

(d) If a State by law imposes a limitation upon the amount which a legally qualified candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to public office (other than Federal elective office) within that State may spend in connection with his campaign for such nomination or his campaign for election, then no station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of such candidate unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized in writing by him to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate that limitation.

e) Whoever willfully and knowingly violates the provisions of subsection (c) or (d) of this section shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $5,000 or imprisonment for a period not to exceed five years, or both. The provisions of sections 501 through 503 of this Act shall not apply to violators of either such subsection.

(f) For the purposes of this section:

(A) The term “broadcasting station” includes a community antenna television system.

(B) The term “licensee” and “station licensee” when used with respect to a community antenna television system, means the operator of such system.
(C) The term "Federal elective office" means the office of President of the United States, or of Senator or Representative in, or Resident Commissioner or Delegate to, the Congress of the United States.

(2) For purposes of subsections (c) and (d), the term "legally qualified candidate" means any person who (A) meets the qualifications prescribed by the applicable laws to hold the office for which he is a candidate and (B) is eligible under applicable State law to be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors.

(g) The Commission shall prescribe appropriate rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this section.

§ 317. Announcement of payment for broadcast

(a) (1) All matter broadcast by any radio station for which any money, service or other valuable consideration is directly or indirectly paid, or promised to or charged or accepted by, the station so broadcasting, from any person, shall, at the time the same is so broadcast, be announced as paid for or furnished, as the case may be, by such person: Provided, That such matter is a political advertisement soliciting funds for a candidate or a political committee, there shall be announced at the time of such broadcast a statement that a copy of reports filed by that person with the Federal Election Commission is available from the Federal Election Commission, Washington, D.C., and the licensee shall not make any charge for any part of the costs of making the announcement. The term "service or other valuable consideration" shall not include any service or property furnished without charge or at a nominal charge for use on, or in connection with, a broadcast unless it is so furnished in consideration for an identification in a broadcast of any person, product, service, trademark, or brand name beyond an identification which is reasonably related to the use of such service or property on the broadcast.

(2) Nothing in this section shall preclude the Commission from requiring that an appropriate announcement shall be made at the time of the broadcast in the case of any political program or any program involving the discussion of any controversial issue for which any films, records, transcriptions, talent, scripts, or other material or service of any kind have been furnished, without charge or at a nominal charge, directly or indirectly, as inducement to the broadcast of such program.

(b) In any case where a report has been made to a radio station, as required by section 508 of this title, of circumstances which would have required an announcement under this section had the consideration been received by such radio station, an appropriate announcement shall be made by such radio station.

(c) The licensee of each radio station shall exercise reasonable diligence to obtain from its employees, and from other persons with whom it deals directly in connection with any program or program matter for broadcast, information to enable such licensee to make the announcement required by this section.

(d) The Commission may waive the requirement of an announcement as provided in this section in any case or class of cases with respect to which it determines that the public interest, convenience, or necessity does not require the broadcasting of such announcement.
(e) Each station licensee shall maintain a record of any political advertisement broadcast, together with the identification of the person who caused it to be broadcast, for a period of two years. The record shall be available for public inspection at reasonable hours.

(f) The Commission shall prescribe appropriate rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this section.

CAMPAIGN COMMUNICATIONS REFORM ACT

Title I—Campaign Communications

Short Title

Sec. 101. This title may be cited as the "Campaign Communications Reform Act".

Definitions

Sec. 102. For purposes of this title:

(1) The term "communications media" means broadcasting stations, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertising facilities, and telephones; but, with respect to telephones, spending or an expenditure shall be deemed to be spending or an expenditure for the use of communications media only if such spending or expenditure is for the costs of telephones, paid telephonists, and automatic telephone equipment, used by a candidate for Federal elective office to communicate with potential voters (excluding any costs of telephones incurred by a volunteer for use of telephones by him).

(2) The term "broadcasting station" has the same meaning as such term has under section 315(f) of the Communications Act of 1934.

(3) The term "Federal elective office" means the office of President of the United States, or of Senator or Representative in, or Resident Commissioner or Delegate to, the Congress of the United States (and for purposes of section 103(b) such term includes the office of Vice President).

(4) The term "legally qualified candidate" means any person who (A) meets the qualifications prescribed by the applicable laws to hold the Federal elective office for which he is a candidate, and (B) is eligible under applicable State law to be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors.

(5) The term "voting age population" means resident population, eighteen years of age and older.

(6) The term "State" includes the District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

Media Rate and Related Requirements

Sec. 103. Note: Subsection (a) amended the Communications Act of 1934, which is not affected by repeal of the Campaign Communications Reform Act.

(b) To the extent that any person sells space in any newspaper or magazine to a legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office, or nomination thereto, in connection with such candidate's campaign for nomination for, or election to, such office, the charges made for the use of such space in connection with his campaign shall not exceed the charges made for comparable use of such space for other purposes.

LIMITATIONS OF EXPENDITURES FOR USE OF COMMUNICATIONS MEDIA

Sec. 104. (a)(1) Subject to paragraph (4), no legally qualified candidate in an election (other than a primary or primary runoff election) for a Federal elective office may—

(A) spend for the use of communications media on behalf of his candidacy in such election a total amount in excess of the greater of—

(i) 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under paragraph (5)) of the geographical area in which the election for such office is held, or

(ii) $50,000 or

(B) spend for the use of broadcast stations on behalf of his candidacy in such election a total amount in excess of 60 per centum of the account determined under subparagraph (A) with respect to such election.

(2) No legally qualified candidate in a primary election for nomination to a Federal elective office, other than President, may spend—

(A) for the use of communications media, or

(B) for the use of broadcast stations, on behalf of his candidacy in such election a total amount in excess of the amounts determined under paragraph (1) (A) or (B), respectively, with respect to the general election for such office. For purposes of this subsection a primary runoff election shall be treated as a separate primary election.

(3) (A) No person who is a candidate for presidential nomination may spend—

(i) for the use in a State of communications media, or

(ii) for the use in a State of broadcast stations, on behalf of his candidacy for presidential nomination a total amount in excess of the amounts which would have been determined under paragraph (1) (A) or (B), respectively, had he been a candidate for election for the office of Senator from such State (or for the office of Delegate or Resident Commissioner in the case of the District of Columbia or the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico).

(B) For purposes of this paragraph (3), a person is a candidate for presidential nomination if he makes (or any other person makes on his behalf) an expenditure for the use of any communications medium on behalf of his candidacy for any political party’s nomination for election to the office of President. He shall be considered to be such a candidate during the period—

(i) beginning on the date on which he (or such other person) first makes such an expenditure (or, if later, January 1 of the year in which the election for the office of President is held), and

(ii) ending on the date on which such political party nominates a candidate for the office of President.

For purposes of this title and of section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934, a candidate for presidential nomination shall be considered a legally qualified candidate for public office.
(C) The Comptroller General shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for presidential nomination for the use in two or more States of a communications medium shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the number of persons in such State who can reasonably be expected to be reached by such communications medium.

(4) (A) For purposes of subparagraph (B):

(i) The term "price index" means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

(ii) The term "base period" means the calendar year 1970.

(B) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1972), as there becomes available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Comptroller General and publish in the Federal Register the per centum difference between the price index for the 12 months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each amount determined under paragraph (i) (A) and (ii) shall be increased by such per centum difference. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

(5) Within 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, and during the first week of January in 1973 and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Comptroller General and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of each State and congressional district for the last calendar year ending before the date of certification.

(6) Amounts spent for the use of communications media on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office (or for nomination to such office) shall, for the purposes of this subsection, be deemed to have been spent by such candidate. Amounts spent for the use of communications media by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to have been spent by the candidate for the office of President of the United States with whom he is running.

(7) For purposes of this section and section 315(c) of the Communications Act of 1934—

(A) spending and charges for the use of communications media include not only the direct charges of the media but also agents' commissions allowed the agent by the media, and

(B) any expenditure for the use of any communications medium by or on behalf of the candidacy of a candidate for Federal elective office (or nomination thereto) shall be charged against the expenditure limitation under this subsection applicable to the election in which such medium is used.

(b) No person may make any charge for the use by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office (or for nomination to such office) of any newspaper, magazine, or outdoor advertising facility, unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies in writing to the person making such charge that the payment of such charge will not violate paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of subsection (a), whichever is applicable.
NOTE: Subsection (c) amended the Communications Act of 1934, which is not affected by the repeal of this section.

[REGULATIONS]

[Sec. 105. The Comptroller General shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out sections 102, 103(b), 104(a), and 104(b) of this Act.

[ PENALTIES]

[Sec. 106. Whoever willfully and knowingly violates any provision of section 103(b), 104(a), or 104(b) or any regulation under section 105 shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment of not more than five years, or both.]

THE FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

* * * * * * *

TITLE III—DISCLOSURE OF FEDERAL CAMPAIGN FUNDS

DEFINITIONS

Sec. 301. When used in this title—

(a) "election" means (1) a general, special, primary, or runoff election, (2) a convention or caucus of a political party held to nominate a candidate, (3) a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party, and (4) a primary election held for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, and (5) the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States;

(b) "candidate" means an individual who seeks nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, whether or not such individual is elected, and, for purposes of this paragraph, an individual shall be deemed to seek nomination for election, or election, if he has (1) taken the action necessary under the law of a State to qualify himself for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, or (2) received contributions or made expenditures, or has given his consent for any other person to receive contributions or make expenditures, with a view to bringing about his nomination for election, or election, to such office;

(c) "Federal office" means the office of President or Vice President of the United States; or of Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress of the United States;

(d) "political committee" means any committee, association, or organization which accepts contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000;

(d) "political committee" means—

(1) any committee, club, association, or other group of persons which receives any contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000;

(2) any national committee, association, or organization of a political party, any State affiliate or subsidiary of a national political party, and any State central committee of a political party; and

(3) any committee, association, or organization engaged in the administration of a separate segregated fund described in section 610 of title 18, United States Code;

(e) "contribution" means—

(1) a gift, subscription (including any assessment, fee, or membership dues), loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, or as a presidential or vice-presidential elector, or for the purpose of influencing the result of a primary held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, [or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States] or for the purpose of financing any operations of a political committee (other than a payment made or obligation incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, would not constitute a contribution by that corporation or labor union), or for the purpose of paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office;

(2) a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution for any such purpose;

(3) a transfer between political committees;

(3) funds received by a political committee which are transferred to that committee from another political committee;

(4) (3) the payment, by any person other than a candidate or political committee, of compensation for the personal services of another person which are rendered to such candidate or committee without charge for any such purpose; and

(5) (4) notwithstanding the foregoing meanings of "contribution", the word shall not be construed to include services provided without compensation by individuals volunteering a portion or all of their time on behalf of a candidate or political committee;

(f) "expenditure" means—

(1) a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, or as a presidential and vice-presidential elector, or for the purpose of influencing the result of a primary held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States;

(2) a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make an expenditure, and

(3) a transfer of funds between political committees;

(f) "expenditure"—

(1) means a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of—

(A) influencing the nomination for election, or the election, of any person to Federal office, or to the office of presidential and vice-presidential elector;

(B) influencing the result of a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President;

(C) financing any operations of a political committee; or

(D) paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office;

(2) means the transfer of funds by a political committee to another political committee; but

(3) does not include—

(A) the value of services rendered by individuals who volunteer to work without compensation on behalf of a candidate; or

(B) any payment made or obligation incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, would not constitute an expenditure by that corporation or labor organization;

(g) "supervisory officer" means the Secretary of the Senate with respect to candidates for Senator; the Clerk of the House of Representatives with respect to candidates for Representatives in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress of the United States; and the Comptroller General of the United States in any other case;

(h) "Commission" means the Federal Election Commission;

(i) "person" means an individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, labor organization, and any other organization or group of persons; and

(i) "State" means each State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States;
(j) "identification" means—
   (1) in the case of an individual, his full name and the full address of his principal place of residence; and
   (2) in the case of any other person, the full name and address of that person;
   (k) "national committee" means the duly constituted organization which, by virtue of the bylaws of a political party, is responsible for the day-to-day operation of that political party at the national level, as determined by the Commission; and

ORGANIZATION OF POLITICAL COMMITTEES

Sec. 302. (a) Every political committee shall have a chairman and a treasurer. No contribution and no expenditure shall be accepted or made by or on behalf of a political committee at a time when there is a vacancy in the office of chairman or treasurer thereof. No expenditure shall be made for or on behalf of a political committee without the authorization of its chairman or treasurer, or their designated agents.

(b) Every person who receives a contribution in excess of $10 for a political committee shall, on demand of the treasurer, and in any event within five days after receipt of such contribution, render to the treasurer a detailed account thereof, including the amount, the name and address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any) of the contribution and the identification of the person making such contribution, and the date on which received. All funds of a political committee shall be segregated from, and may not be commingled with, any personal funds of officers, members, or associates of such committee.

(c) It shall be the duty of the treasurer of a political committee to keep a detailed and exact account of—
   (1) all contributions made to or for such committee;
   (2) the [full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any)] identification of every person making a contribution in excess of $10, and the date and amount thereof [; and, if a person's contributions aggregate more than $100, the account shall include occupation, and the principal place of business (if any);]
   (3) all expenditures made by or on behalf of such committee; and
   (4) the [full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any)] identification of every person to whom any expenditure is made, the date and amount thereof and the name and address of, and office sought by, each candidate on whose behalf such expenditure was made.

(d) It shall be the duty of the treasurer to obtain and keep a receipted bill, stating the particulars, for every expenditure made by or on behalf of a political committee in excess of $100 in amount, and for any such expenditure in a lesser amount, if the aggregate amount of such expenditures to the same person during a calendar year exceeds §100. The treasurer shall preserve all receipted bills and accounts required to be kept by this section for periods of time to be determined by the [supervisory officer] Commission.

(e) Any political committee which solicits or receives contributions or makes expenditures on behalf of any candidate that is not authorized in writing by such candidate to do so shall include a notice on the face or front page of all literature and advertisements published in connection with such candidate's campaign by such committee or on its behalf stating that the committee is not authorized by such candidate and that such candidate is not responsible for the activities of such committee.

(f)(1) Any political committee shall include on the face or front page of all literature and advertisements soliciting funds the following notice:

“A copy of our report filed with the appropriate supervisory officer is (or will be) available for purchase from the Superintendent of Documents, United States Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.”

(2) (A) The supervisory officer shall compile and furnish to the Public Printer, not later than the last day of March of each year, an annual report for each political committee which has filed a report with him under this title during the period from March 10 of the preceding calendar year through January 31 of the year in which such annual report is made available to the Public Printer. Each such annual report shall contain—

(i) a copy of the statement of organization of the political committee required under section 303, together with any amendments thereto; and

(ii) a copy of each report filed by such committee under section 304 from March 10 of the preceding year through January 31 of the year in which the annual report is so furnished to the Public Printer.

(B) The Public Printer shall make copies of such annual reports available for sale to the public by the Superintendent of Documents as soon as practicable after they are received from the supervisory officer.

REGISTRATION OF CANDIDATES AND POLITICAL COMMITTEES: STATEMENTS

Sec. 303. (a) Each candidate shall, within ten days after the date on which he has qualified under State law as a candidate, or on which he, or any person authorized by him to do so, has received a contribution or made an expenditure in connection with his campaign or for the purpose of preparing to undertake his campaign, file with the Commission a registration statement in such form as the Commission may prescribe. The statement shall include—

(1) the identification of the candidate, and any individual, political committee, or other person he has authorized to receive contributions or make expenditures on his behalf in connection with his campaign;

(2) the identification of his campaign depositories, together with the title and number of each account at each such depository which is to be used in connection with his campaign, and safety deposit box to be used in connection therewith, and the identification of each individual authorized by him to make any expenditure or withdrawal from such account or box; and

(3) such additional relevant information as the Commission may require.

[(a) (b) Each political committee which anticipates receiving contributions or making expenditures during the calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000 shall file with the supervisory officer a statement of organization, within ten days after its organization or, if later, ten days after the date on which it has information which causes the committee to anticipate it will receive contributions or make expenditures in excess of $1,000. The treasurer of each political committee shall file with the Commission a statement of organization within ten days after the date on which the committee is organized. Each such committee in existence at the time of enactment of this Act the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 shall file a statement of organization with the supervisory officer] Commission at such time as [he] it prescribes.

[(b) (c) The statement of organization shall be in such form as the Commission shall prescribe, and shall include—

(1) the name and address of the committee;

(2) the names, addresses, and relationships of affiliated or connected organizations;

[(3) the area, scope, or jurisdiction of the committee];

[(3) the geographic area or political jurisdiction within which the committee will operate, and a general description of the committee's authority and activities];

(4) the name, address, and position of the custodian of books and accounts;

(5) the name, address, and position of other principal officers, including officers and members of the finance committee, if any;

(6) the name, address, office sought, and party affiliate of (A) each candidate whom the committee is supporting, and (B) any other individual, if any, whom the committee is supporting for nomination for election, or election, to any public office whatever; or, if the committee is supporting the entire ticket of any party, the name of the party;

(7) a statement whether the committee is a continuing one;

(8) the disposition of residual funds which will be made in the event of dissolution;

[(9) a listing of all banks, safety deposit boxes, or other repositories used];

(9) the name and address of the campaign depositories used by that committee, together with the title and number of each account and safety deposit box used by that committee at each depository, and the identification of each individual authorized to make withdrawals or payments out of such account or box;

(10) a statement of the reports required to be filed by the committee with State or local officers, and, if so, the names, addresses, and positions of such persons; and

(11) such other information as shall be required by the [supervisory officer] Commission.}
(c) Any change in information previously submitted in a statement of organization shall be reported to the [supervisory officer] Commission within a ten-day period following the change.

(d) Any committee which, after having filed one or more statements of organization, disbands or determines it will no longer receive contributions or make expenditures during the calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000 shall so notify the [supervisory officer] Commission.

REPORTS [BY POLITICAL COMMITTEES AND CANDIDATES]

SEC. 304. (a) (1) Each treasurer of a political committee supporting a candidate or candidates [for election] for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office, and each candidate [for election] for nomination for election, or for election, to such office, shall file with the [appropriate supervisory officer] Commission reports of receipts and expenditures on forms to be prescribed or approved by [him.] 3d. [Such reports shall be filed on the tenth day of March, June, and September, in each year, and on the fifteenth and fifth days next preceding the date on which an election is held, and also by the thirty-first day of January.] Such reports shall be filed on the tenth day of April, July, and October of each year, on the tenth day preceding an election, and on the last day of January of each year. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the reports required by that sentence to be filed during April, July, and October by or relating to a candidate during a year in which no Federal election is held in which he is a candidate, may be filed on the twentieth day of each month. Such reports shall be complete as of such date as the [supervisory officer] Commission may prescribe, which shall not be less than five days before the date of filing[51], except that any contribution of $5,000 or more received after the last report is filed prior to the election shall be reported within forty-eight hours after its receipt.] If the person making any anonymous contribution is subsequently identified, the identification of the contributor shall be reported to the Commission within the reporting period in which he is identified.

(2) Upon a request made by a Presidential candidate or a political committee which operates in more than one State, or upon its own motion, the Commission may waive the reporting dates (other than January 31) set forth in paragraph (1), and require instead that such candidates or political committees file reports not less frequently than monthly. The Commission may not require a Presidential candidate or a political committee operating in more than one State to file more than eleven reports (not counting any report to be filed on January 31) during any calendar year. If the Commission acts on its own motion under this paragraph with respect to a candidate or a political committee, that candidate or committee may obtain judicial review in accordance with the provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code.

(b) Each report under this section shall disclose—

(1) the amount of cash on hand at the beginning of the reporting period;
(2) the full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any) of each person who has made one or more contributions to or for such committee or candidate (including the purchase of tickets for events such as dinners, luncheons, rallies, and similar fundraising events) within the calendar year in an aggregate amount or value in excess of $100, together with the amount and date of such contributions;

(3) the total sum of individual contributions made to or for such committee or candidate during the reporting period and not reported under paragraph (2);

(4) the name and address of each political committee or candidate from which the reporting committee or the candidate received, or to which that committee or candidate made, any transfer of funds, together with the amounts and dates of all transfers;

(5) each loan to or from any person within the calendar year in an aggregate amount or value in excess of $100, together with the full names and mailing addresses (occupations and the principal place of business, if any) of the [lender and endorsers,] lender, endorsers, and guarantors, if any, and the date and amount of such loans;

(6) the total amount of proceeds from (A) the sale of tickets to each dinner, luncheon, rally, and other fundraising event; (B) mass collections made at such events; and (C) sales of items such as political campaign pins, buttons, badges, flags, emblems, hats, banners, literature, and similar materials;

(7) each contribution, rebate, refund, or other receipt in excess of $100 not otherwise listed under paragraphs (2) through (6);

(8) the total sum of all receipts by or for such committee or candidate during the reporting period;

(9) the [full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any)] identification of each person to whom expenditures have been made by such committee or on behalf of such committee or candidate within the calendar year in an aggregate amount or value in excess of $100, the amount, date, and purpose of each such expenditure and the name and address of, and office sought by, each candidate on whose behalf such expenditure was made;

(10) the [full name and mailing address (occupation and the principal place of business, if any)] identification of each person to whom an expenditure for personal services, salaries, and reimbursed expenses in excess of $100 has been made, and which is not otherwise reported, including the amount, date, and purpose of such expenditure;

(11) the total sum of expenditures made by such committee or candidate during the calendar year;

(12) the amount and nature of debts and obligations owed by or to the committee, in such form as the [supervisory officer] Commission may prescribe and a continuous reporting of their debts and obligations after the election at such periods as the [supervisory officer] Commission may require until such debts and obligations are extinguished, together with a statement as to the circumstances and conditions under which any such debt or obligation is extinguished and the consideration therefor; [and]

(13) such information as the Commission may require for the disclosure of the nature, amount, source, and designated recipient of any ear-marked, encumbered, or restricted contribution or other special fund; and [18] (14) such other information as shall be required by the supervisory officer. Commission.

(c) The reports required to be filed by subsection (a) shall be cumulative during the calendar year to which they relate, but where there has been no change in an item reported in a previous report during such year, only the amount need be carried forward. The reports required to be filed by subsection (a) shall be cumulative during the calendar year to which they relate, and during such additional periods of time as the Commission may require. If no contributions or expenditures have been accepted or expended during a calendar year, the treasurer of the political committee or candidate shall file a statement to that effect.

(d) This section does not require a Member of Congress to report, as contributions received or as expenditures made, the value of photographic, matting, or recording services furnished to him before the first day of January of the year preceding the year in which his term of office expires if those services were furnished to him by the Senate Recording Studio, the House Recording Studio, or by any individual whose pay is disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives and who furnishes such services as his primary duty as an employee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or if such services were paid for by the Republican or Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, the Democratic National Congressional Committee, or the National Republican Congressional Committee.

(e) Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or expenditures, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 within a calendar year shall file with the Commission a statement containing the information required by this section. Statements required by this subsection shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed, but need not be cumulative.

[REPORTS BY OTHER THAN POLITICAL COMMITTEES

[Sec. 305. Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or expenditures, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 within a calendar year shall file with the supervisory officer a statement containing the information required by section 304. Statements required by this section shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed, but need not be cumulative.]

REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO CAMPAIGN ADVERTISING

Sec. 305. (a) No person shall cause any political advertisement to be published unless he furnishes to the publisher of the advertisement his identification in writing, together with the identification of any person authorizing him to cause such publication.

(b) Any published political advertisement shall contain a statement, in such form as the Commission may prescribe, of the identification of the person authorizing the publication of that advertisement.
(c) Any publisher who publishes any political advertisement shall maintain such records as the Commission may prescribe for a period of two years after the date of publication setting forth such advertisement and any material relating to identification furnished to him in connection therewith, and shall permit the public to inspect and copy those records at reasonable hours.

(d) To the extent that any person sells space in any newspaper or magazine to a candidate for Federal office, or nomination thereto, in connection with such candidate's campaign for nomination for, or election to, such office, the charges made for the use of such space in connection with his campaign shall not exceed the charges made for comparable use of such space for other purposes.

(e) Any political committee shall include on the face or front page of all literature and advertisements soliciting contributions the following notice:

(f) As used in this section, the term—

(1) “political advertisements” means any matter advocating the election or defeat of any candidate or otherwise seeking to influence the outcome of any election, but does not include any bona fide news story (including interviews, commentaries, or other works prepared for and published by any newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication the publication of which work is not paid for by any political committee, or agent thereof); and

(2) “published” means publication in a newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication, distribution of printed leaflets, pamphlets, or other documents, or display through the use of any outdoor advertising facility, and such other use of printed media as the Commission shall prescribe.

FORMAL REQUIREMENTS RESPECTING REPORTS AND STATEMENTS

Sec. 306. (a) A report or statement required by this title to be filed by a treasurer of a political committee, a candidate, or by any other person, shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the person filing such report or statement, taken before any officer authorized to administer oaths.

(b) A copy of a report or statement shall be preserved by the person filing it for a period of time to be designated by the [supervisory officer] Commission in a published regulation.

(c) The supervisory officer may, by published regulation of general applicability, relieve any category of political committees of the obligation to comply with section 304 if such committee (1) primarily supports persons seeking State or local office, and does not substantially support candidates, and (2) does not operate in more than one State or on a statewide basis.

(c) The Commission may, by published regulation of general applicability, relieve—

(1) any category of candidates of the obligation to comply personally with the requirements of section 304, if it determines that such action will not have any adverse effect on the purposes of this title, and
(2) any category of political committees of the obligation to comply with such if such committees—
(A) primarily support persons seeking State or local office, and
(B) do not operate in more than one State or do not operate on a statewide basis.
(d) The [supervisory officer] Commission shall, by published regulations of General applicability, prescribe the manner in which contributions and expenditures in the nature of debts and other contracts, agreements, and promises to make contributions or expenditures shall be reported. Such regulations shall provide that they be reported in separate schedules. In determining aggregate amounts of contributions and expenditures, amounts reported as provided in such regulations shall not be considered until actual payment is made.

REPORTS ON CONVENTION FINANCING

SEC. 307. Each committee or other organization which—
(1) represents a State, or a political subdivision thereof, or any group of persons, in dealing with officials of a national political party with respect to matters involving a convention held in such State or political subdivision to nominate a candidate for the office of President or Vice President, or
(2) represents a national political party in making arrangements for the convention of such party held to nominate a candidate for the office of President or Vice President, shall, within sixty days following the end of the convention (but not later than twenty days prior to the date on which presidential and vice-presidential electors are chosen), file with the [Comptroller General of the United States] Federal Election Commission a full and complete financial statement, in such form and detail as [the] it may prescribe, of the sources from which it derived its funds, and the purposes for which such funds were expended.

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION

SEC. 308. (a) (1) There is hereby established, as an independent establishment of the executive branch of the Government of the United States, a commission to be known as the Federal Election Commission.
(2) The Commission shall be composed of the Comptroller General, who shall serve without the right to vote, and seven members who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the seven members of the Commission—
(A) two shall be chosen from among individuals recommended by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the Senate and the minority leader of the Senate; and
(B) two shall be chosen from among individuals recommended by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the House and the minority leader of the House.
The two members appointed under subparagraph (A) shall not be affiliated with the same political party; nor shall the two members appointed under subparagraph (B). Of the members not appointed under such subparagraphs, not more than two shall be affiliated with the same political party.

(3) Members of the Commission, other than the Comptroller General, shall serve for terms of seven years, except that, of the members first appointed—

(A) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending on the April thirtieth first occurring more than six months after the date on which he is appointed;

(B) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2) (A) shall be appointed for a term ending one year after the April thirtieth on which the term of the member referred to in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph ends;

(C) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2) (B) shall be appointed for a term ending two years thereafter;

(D) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending three years thereafter;

(E) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2) (A) shall be appointed for a term ending four years thereafter;

(F) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2) (B) shall be appointed for a term ending five years thereafter; and

(G) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending six years thereafter.

(4) Members shall be chosen on the basis of their maturity, experience, integrity, impartiality, and good judgment. A member may be reappointed to the Commission only once.

(5) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds. Any vacancy occurring in the office of member of the Commission shall be filled in the manner in which that office was originally filled.

(6) The Commission shall elect a Chairman and a Vice Chairman from among its members for a term of two years. The Chairman and the Vice Chairman shall not be affiliated with the same political party. The Vice Chairman shall act as Chairman in the absence or disability of the Chairman, or in the event of a vacancy in that office.

(b) A vacancy in the Commission shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the Commission and four members thereof shall constitute a quorum.

(c) The Commission shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

(d) The Commission shall at the close of each fiscal year report to the Congress and to the President concerning the action it has taken; the names, salaries, and duties of all individuals in its employ and the money it has disbursed; and shall make such further reports on the matters within its jurisdiction and such recommendations for further legislation as may appear desirable.

(e) The principal office of the Commission shall be in or near the District of Columbia, but it may meet or exercise any or all its powers in any State.
(f) The Commission shall appoint a General Counsel and an Executive Director to serve at the pleasure of the Commission. The General Counsel shall be the chief legal officer of the Commission. The Executive Director shall be responsible for the administrative operations of the Commission and shall perform such other duties as may be delegated or assigned to him from time to time by regulations or orders of the Commission. However, the Commission shall not delegate the making of regulations regarding elections to the Executive Director.

(g) The Chairman of the Commission shall appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as may be necessary to fulfill the duties of the Commission in accordance with the provisions of title 5, United States Code.

(h) The Commission may obtain the services of experts and consultants in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

(i) In carrying out its responsibilities under this title, the Commission shall, to the fullest extent practicable, avail itself of the assistance, including personnel and facilities, of the General Accounting Office and the Department of Justice. The Comptroller General and the Attorney General are authorized to make available to the Commission such personnel, facilities, and other assistance, with or without reimbursement, as the Commission may request.

(j) The provisions of section 7324 of title 5, United States Code, shall apply to members of the Commission notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (d) (3) of such section.

(k)(1) Whenever the Commission submits any budget estimate or request to the President or the Office of Management and Budget, it shall concurrently transmit a copy of that estimate or request to the Congress.

(2) Whenever the Commission submits any legislative recommendations, or testimony, or comments on legislation requested by the Congress or by any Member of Congress to the President or the Office of Management and Budget, it shall concurrently transmit a copy thereof to the Congress or to the member requesting the same. No officer or agency of the United States shall have any authority to require the Commission to submit its legislative recommendations, or testimony, or comments on legislation, to any office or agency of the United States for approval, comments, or review, prior to the submission of such recommendations, testimony, or comments to the Congress.

POWERS OF THE COMMISSION

Sec. 309. (a) The Commission shall have the power—

(1) to require, by special or general orders, any person to submit in writing such reports and answers to questions as the Commission may prescribe; and such submissions shall be made within such reasonable period and under oath or otherwise as the Commission may determine;

(2) to administer oaths;

(3) to require by subpoena, signed by the Chairman or the Vice Chairman, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all documentary evidence relating to the execution of its duties;
(4) in any proceeding or investigation to order testimony to be taken by deposition before any person who is designated by the Commission and has the power to administer oaths and, in such instances, to compel testimony and the production of evidence in the same manner as authorized under paragraph (3) of this subsection;

(5) to pay witnesses the same fees and mileage as are paid in like circumstances in the courts of the United States;

(6) to initiate (through civil proceedings for injunctive relief and through presentations to Federal grand juries), prosecute, defend, or appeal any civil or criminal action in the name of the Commission for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this title and of sections 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, and 617 of title 18, United States Code, through its General Counsel;

(7) to delegate any of its functions or powers, other than the power to issue subpoenas under paragraph (5), to any officer or employee of the Commission; and

(8) to make, amend, and repeal such rules, pursuant to the provisions of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

(b) Any United States district court within the jurisdiction of which any inquiry is carried on, may, upon petition by the Commission, in case of refusal to obey a subpoena or order of the Commission issued under section (a) of this section, issue an order requiring compliance therewith. Any failure to obey the order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

(c) No person shall be subject to civil liability to any person (other than the Commission or the United States) for disclosing information at the request of the Commission.

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commission shall be the primary civil and criminal enforcement agency for violations of the provisions of this title, and of sections 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, and 617 of title 18, United States Code. Any violation of any such provision shall be prosecuted by the Attorney General or Department of Justice personnel only after consultation with, and with the consent of, the Commission.

(e) (1) Any person who violates any provision of this Act, or of sections 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, or 617 of title 18, United States Code, may be assessed a civil penalty by the Commission under paragraph (2) of this subsection of not more than $10,000 for each such violation. Each occurrence of a violation of this title and each day of noncompliance with a disclosure requirement of this title or an order of the Commission issued under this section shall constitute a separate offense. In determining the amount of the penalty the Commission shall consider the person's history of previous violations, the appropriateness of such penalty to the financial resources of the person charged, the gravity of the violation, and the demonstrated good faith of the person charged in attempting to achieve rapid compliance after notification of a violation.

(2) A civil penalty shall be assessed by the Commission by order only after the person charged with a violation has been given an opportunity for a hearing and the Commission has determined, by decision incorporating its findings of fact therein, that a violation did occur, and the amount of the penalty. Any hearing under this section shall be of record and shall be held in accordance with section 554 of title 5, United States Code.

(3) If the person against whom a civil penalty is assessed fails to pay the penalty, the Commission shall file a petition for enforcement of its order assessing the penalty in any appropriate district court of the United States. The petition shall designate the person against whom the order is sought to be enforced as the respondent. A copy of the petition shall forthwith be sent by registered or certified mail to the respondent and his attorney of record, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in such court the record upon which such order sought to be forced was issued. The court shall have jurisdiction to enter a judgment enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order and decision of the Commission or it may remand the proceedings to the Commission for such further action as it may direct. The court may determine de novo all issues of law but the Commission’s findings of fact, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive.

CENTRAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEES

Sec. 310. (a) Each candidate shall designate one political committee as his central campaign committee. A candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of President, may also designate one political committee in each State in which he is a candidate as his State campaign committee for that State. The designation shall be made in writing, and a copy of the designation, together with such information as the Commission may require, shall be furnished to the Commission upon the designation of any such committee.

(b) No political committee may be designated as the central campaign committee of more than one candidate. The central campaign committee, and each State campaign committee, designated by a candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of President shall be the central campaign committee and the State campaign committee of the candidate nominated by that party for election to the office of Vice President.

(c) (1) Any political committee authorized by a candidate to accept contributions or make expenditures in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or for election, which is not a central campaign committee or a State campaign committee, shall furnish each report required of it under section 304 (other than reports required under the last sentence of section 304(a) and 311(b) to that candidate’s central campaign committee at the time it would, but for this subsection, be required to furnish that report to the Commission. Any report properly furnished to a central campaign committee under this subsection shall be, for purposes of this title, held and considered to have been furnished to the Commission at the time at which it was furnished to such central campaign committee.

(2) The Commission may, by regulation, require any political committee receiving contributions or making expenditures in a State on behalf of a candidate who, under subsection (a), has designated a State campaign committee for that State to furnish its reports to that State campaign committee instead of furnishing reports to the central campaign committee of that candidate.
(3) The Commission may require any political committee to furnish any report directly to the Commission.

(d) Each political committee which is a central campaign committee or a State campaign committee shall receive all reports filed with or furnished to it by other political committees, and consolidate and furnish the reports to the Commission, together with its own reports, in accordance with the provisions of this title and regulations prescribed by the Commission.

CAMPAIGN DEPOSITORIES

Sec. 311. (a) (1) Each candidate shall designate one or more National or State banks as his campaign depositories. The central campaign committee of that candidate, and any other political committee authorized by him to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf, shall maintain a checking account at a depository so designated by the candidate and shall deposit any contributions received by that committee into that account. A candidate shall deposit any payment received by him under section 506 of this Act in the account maintained by his central campaign committee. No expenditure may be made by any such committee on behalf of a candidate or to influence his election except by check drawn on that account, other than petty cash expenditures as provided in subsection (b).

(2) The treasurer of each political committee (other than a political committee authorized by a candidate to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf) shall designate one or more National or State banks as campaign depositories of that committee, and shall maintain a checking account for the committee at each such depository. All contributions received by that committee shall be deposited in such an account. No expenditure may be made by that committee except by check drawn on that account, other than petty cash expenditures as provided in subsection (b).

(b) A political committee may maintain a petty cash fund out of which it may make expenditures not in excess of $100 to any person in connection with a single purchase or transaction. A record of petty cash disbursements shall be kept in accordance with requirements established by the Commission, and such statements and reports thereof shall be furnished to the Commission as it may require.

(c) A candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of President may establish one such depository in each State, which shall be considered by his State campaign committee for that State and any other political committee authorized by him to receive contributions or to make expenditures on his behalf in that State, under regulations prescribed by the Commission, as his single campaign depository. The campaign depository of the candidate of a political party for election to the office of Vice President shall be the campaign depository designated by the candidate of that party for election to the office of President.

DUTIES OF THE [SUPERVISORY OFFICER] COMMISSION

Sec. [308.] 312. (a) It shall be the duty of the [SUPERVISORY OFFICER] Commission—

(1) to develop and furnish to the person required by the provisions of this Act prescribed forms for the making of the reports and statements required to be filed with [him] it under this title;

156
(2) to prepare, publish, and furnish to the person required to file such reports and statements a manual setting forth recommended uniform methods of bookkeeping and reporting;
(3) to develop a filing, coding, and cross-indexing system consonant with the purposes of this title;
(4) to make the reports and statements filed with [him] it available for public inspection and copying, commencing as soon as practicable but not later than the end of the second day following the day during which it was received, and to permit copying of any such report or statement by hand or by duplicating machine, as requested by any person, at the expense of such person: Provided, That any information copied from such reports and statements shall not be sold or utilized by any person for the purpose of soliciting contributions or for any commercial purpose;
(5) to preserve such reports and statements for a period of ten years from the date of receipt, except that reports and statements relating solely to candidates for the House of Representatives shall be preserved for only five years from the date of receipt;
(6) to compile and maintain a cumulative index listing all statements and reports filed with the Commission during each calendar year by political committees and candidates, which the Commission shall cause to be published in the Federal Register no less frequently than monthly during even-numbered years and quarterly in odd-numbered years and which shall be in such form and shall include such information as may be prescribed by the Commission to permit easy identification of each statement, report, candidate, and committee listed, at least as to their names, the dates of the statements and reports, and the number of pages in each, and the Commission shall make copies of statements and reports listed in the index available for sale, direct or by mail, at a price determined by the Commission to be reasonable to the purchaser;
(7) to prepare and publish an annual report including compilations of (A) total reported contributions and expenditures for all candidates, political committees, and other persons during the year; (B) total amounts expended according to such categories as [he] it shall determine and broken down into candidate, party, and nonparty expenditures on the national, State, and local levels; (C) total amounts expended for influencing nominations and elections stated separately; (D) total amounts contributed according to such categories of amounts as [he] it shall determine and broken down into contributions on the national, State, and local level for candidates and political committees; and (E) aggregate amounts contributed by any contributor shown to have contributed in excess of $100;
(8) to prepare and publish from time to time special reports comparing the various totals and categories of contributions and expenditures made with respect to preceding elections;
(9) to prepare and publish such other reports as [he] it may deem appropriate;
(10) to assure wide dissemination of statistics, summaries, and reports prepared under this title;

(11) to make from time to time audits and field investigations with respect to reports and statements filed under the provisions of this title, and with respect to alleged failures to file any report or statement required under the provisions of this title;

(12) to report apparent violations of law to the appropriate law enforcement authorities; and

(13) to prescribe suitable rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this title.

(b) The [supervisory officer] Commission shall encourage, and cooperate with, the election officials in the several States to develop procedures which will eliminate the necessity of multiple filings by permitting the filing of copies of Federal reports to satisfy the State requirements.

(c) It shall be the duty of the [Comptroller General] Commission to serve as a national clearinghouse for information in respect to the administration of elections. In carrying out its duties under this subsection, the [Comptroller General] Commission shall enter into contracts for the purpose of conducting independent studies of the administration of elections. Such studies shall include, but shall not be limited to, studies of—

(1) the method of selection of, and the type of duties assigned to, officials and personnel working on boards of elections;

(2) practices relating to the registration of voters; and

(3) voting and counting methods.

Studies made under this subsection shall be published by the [Comptroller General] Commission and copies thereof shall be made available to the general public upon the payment of the cost thereof.

(Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to authorize the Comptroller General to require inclusion of any comment or recommendation of the Comptroller General in any such study.)

(d) (1) Any person who believes a violation of this title has occurred may file a complaint with the [supervisory officer] Commission. If the [supervisory officer] Commission determines there is substantial reason to believe such a violation has occurred it shall expeditiously make an investigation, which shall also include an investigation of reports and statements filed by the complainant if he is a candidate, of the matter complained of. Whenever in the judgment of the [supervisory officer] Commission, after affording due notice and an opportunity for a hearing, any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of this title or any regulation or order issued thereunder, the Attorney General on behalf of the United States shall institute a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person is found, resides, or transacts business. Upon a proper showing that such person has engaged or is about to engage in such acts or practices, a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond by such court.
(2) In any action brought under paragraph (1) of this subsection, subpoenas for witnesses who are required to attend a United States district court may run into any other district.

(3) Any party aggrieved by an order granted under paragraph (1) of this subsection may, at any time within sixty days after the date of entry thereof, file a petition with the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which such person is found, resides, or transacts business, for judicial review of such order.

(4) The judgment of the court of appeals affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the district court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

(5) Any action brought under this subsection shall be advanced on the docket of the court in which filed, and put ahead of all other actions (other than other actions brought under this subsection).

JUDICIAL REVIEW

Sec. 313. (a) Any agency action by the Commissioner made under the provisions of this Act shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed in such court by any interested person. Any petition filed pursuant to this section shall be filed within thirty days after the agency action by the Commission for which review is sought.

(b) The Commission, the national committee of any political party, and individuals eligible to vote in an election for Federal office, are authorized to institute such actions, including actions for declaratory judgment or injunctive relief, as may be appropriate to implement any provision of this Act.

(c) The provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, apply to judicial review of any agency action, as defined in section 551 of title 5, United States Code, by the Commission.

STATEMENTS FILED WITH STATE OFFICERS

Sec. [309.] 314. (a) A copy of each statement required to be filed with [a supervisory officer] the Commission by this title shall be filed with the Secretary of State (or, if there is no office of Secretary of State, the equivalent State officer) of the appropriate State. For purposes of this subsection, the term "appropriate State" means—

(1) for reports relating to expenditures and contributions in connection with the campaign for nomination for election, or election, of a candidate to the office of President or Vice President of the United States, each State [in which an expenditure is made by him or on his behalf] in which he is a candidate or in which substantial expenditures are made by him or on his behalf; and

(2) for reports relating to expenditures and contributions in connection with the campaign for nomination for election, or election, of a candidate to the office of Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress of the United States, the State in which he seeks election.
(b) It shall be the duty of the Secretary of State, or the equivalent State officer, under subsection (a)—

(1) to receive and maintain in an orderly manner all reports and statements required by this title to be filed with him;

(2) to preserve such reports and statements for a period of ten years from date of receipt, except that reports and statements relating solely to candidates for the House of Representatives shall be preserved for only five years from the date of receipt;

(3) to make the reports and statements filed with him available for public inspection and copying during regular office hours, commencing as soon as practicable but not later than the end of the day during which it was received, and to permit copying of any such report or statement by hand or by duplicating machine, requested by any person, at the expense of such person; and

(4) to compile and maintain a current list of all statements or parts of statements pertaining to each candidate.

(c) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Commission in each fiscal year the sum of $500,000, to be made available in such amounts as the Commission deems appropriate to the States for the purpose of assisting them in complying with their duties as set forth in this section.

PROHIBITION OF CONTRIBUTIONS IN NAME OF ANOTHER

Sec. [310.] 315. No person shall make a contribution in the name of another person or knowingly permit his name to be used to effect such a contribution, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

[ PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS ]

[Sec. 311. (a) Any person who violates any of the provisions of this title shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. ]

[b) In case of any conviction under this title, where the punishment inflicted does not include imprisonment, such conviction shall be deemed a misdemeanor conviction only.]

APPROVAL OF PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES BY NATIONAL COMMITTEE

Sec. 316. (a) No expenditure in excess of $1,000 shall be made by or on behalf of any candidate who has received the nomination of his political party for President or Vice President unless such expenditure has been specifically approved by the chairman or treasurer of that political party's national committee or the designated representative of that national committee in the State where the funds are to be expended.

(b) Each national committee approving expenditures under subsection (a) shall register under section 303 as a political committee and report each expenditure it approves as if it had made that expenditure, together with the identification of the person seeking approval and making the expenditure.

(c) No political party shall have more than one national committee.
USE OF CONTRIBUTED AMOUNTS FOR CERTAIN PURPOSES

Sec. 317. Amounts received by a candidate as contributions that are in excess of any amount necessary to defray his campaign expenses (after the application of section 307(b)(1) of this Act), and any other amounts contributed to an individual for the purpose of supporting his activities as a holder of Federal office, may be used by that candidate or individual, as the case may be, to defray any ordinary and necessary expenses incurred by him in connection with his duties as a holder of Federal office, or may be contributed by him to any organization described in section 170(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. To the extent any such contribution, amount contributed, or expenditure thereof is not otherwise required to be disclosed under the provisions of this title, such contribution, amount contributed, or expenditure shall be fully disclosed in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Commission. The Commission is authorized to promulgate such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Sec. 318. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission, for the purpose of carrying out its functions under this title, title V, and under chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, not to exceed $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1974, and not to exceed $5,000,000 for each fiscal year thereafter.

PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

Sec. 319. (a) Violation of any provision of this title is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not more than $10,000, imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

(b) Violation of any provision of this title with knowledge or reason to know that the action committed or omitted is a violation of this title is punishable by a fine of not more than $100,000, imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

TITLE IV—GENERAL PROVISIONS

* * * * * * * *

EFFECT ON STATE LAW

Sec. 403. (a) Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to invalidate or make inapplicable any provision of any State law, except where compliance with such provision of law would result in a violation of a provision of this Act.

(b) Notwithstanding subsection (a), no provision of State law shall be construed to prohibit any person from taking any action authorized by this Act or from making any expenditure (as such term is defined in section 301(f) of this Act) which he could lawfully make under this Act.

EFFECT ON STATE LAW

Sec. 403. The provisions of this Act, and of regulations promulgated under this Act, preempt any provision of State law with respect to campaigns for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office (as such term is defined in section 301(c)).

When used in sections 597, 599, 600, 602, 608, 610, 611, 614, 615, 616, and 617 of this title—

(a) “election” means (1) a general, special, primary, or runoff election, (2) a convention or caucus of a political party held to nominate a candidate, (3) a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party, or (4) a primary election held for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, and (5) the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States;

(b) “candidate” means an individual who seeks nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, whether or not such individual is elected, and, for purposes of this paragraph, and individual shall be deemed to seek nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, if he has (1) taken the action necessary under the law of a State to qualify himself for nomination for election, or election, or (2) received contributions or made expenditures, or has given his consent for any other person to receive contributions or make expenditures, with a view to bringing about his nomination for election, or election, to such office;

(c) "Federal office" means the office of President or Vice President of the United States, or Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress of the United States;

(d) "political committee" means any individual, committee, association, or organization which accepts contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000;

(e) "contribution" means—

(1) a gift, subscription (including any assessment, fee, or membership dues), loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business), made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election of any person to Federal office, for the purpose of influencing the results of a primary held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States or for the purpose of financing any operations of a political committee, or for the purpose of paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office;

(2) a contract, promise, or agreement, express or implied, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution for such purposes;

(3) a transfer of funds between political committees;

(4) funds received by a political committee which are transferred to that committee from another political committee;

(5) the payment, by any person other than a candidate or political committee, of compensation for the personal services of another person which are rendered to such candidate or political committee without charge for any such purpose; and
(5) notwithstanding the foregoing meanings of "contribution", the word shall not be construed to include services provided without compensation by individuals volunteering a portion or all of their time on behalf of a candidate or political committee;

(f) "expenditure" means—

(1) a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value (except a loan of money by a National or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business), made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, for the purpose of influencing the result of a primary held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States;

(2) a contract, promise, or agreement, express or implied, whether or not legally enforceable, to make any expenditure; and

(3) a transfer of funds between political committees.

(f) "expenditure" means—

(1) a purchase, payment, distribution, loan (except a loan of money by a National or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations, and in the ordinary course of business), advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of—

(A) influencing the nomination for election, or the election, of any person to Federal office, or to the office of presidential and vice-presidential elector;

(B) influencing the result of a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President;

(C) financing any operations of a political committee; or

(D) paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office; and

(2) the transfer of funds by a political committee to another political committee; but

(3) does not include the value of service rendered by individuals who volunteer to work without compensation on behalf of a candidate.

(g) "person" and "whoever" mean an individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, or any other organization or group of persons; and

(h) "State" means each State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States.
(i) 'political party' means any association, committee, or organization which nominates a candidate for election to any Federal office whose name appears on the election ballot as the candidate of that association, committee, or organization; and

(j) 'national committee' means the organization which, by virtue of the bylaws of the political party, is responsible for the day-to-day operation of that political party at the national level as determined by the Federal Election Commission under section 301(k) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

* * * * * * * * *

§ 608. Limitations on contributions and expenditures out of candidates’ personal and family funds

(a) (1) No candidate may make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office in excess of—

(A) $50,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President;

(B) $35,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Senator; or

(C) $25,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress.

(a) (1) No candidate may make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office in excess, in the aggregate of—

(A) $50,000 in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President;

(B) $35,000 in the case of a candidate for the office of Senator; or

(C) $25,000 in the case of a candidate for the office of Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress.

(2) For purposes of this subsection, "immediate family" means a candidate's spouse, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.

(3) No candidate or his immediate family may make loans or advances from their personal funds in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office unless such loan or advance is evidenced by a written instrument fully disclosing the terms and conditions of such loan or advance.

(4) For purposes of this subsection, any such loan or advance shall be included in computing the total amount of such expenditures only to the extent of the balance of such loan or advance outstanding and unpaid.

(b) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or authorize any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section.

(c) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine not to exceed [[$1,000] $25,000, imprisonment for not to exceed [one year] five years, or both.

§ 611. Contributions by Government contractors

Whoever—

(a) entering into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof either for the rendition of personal services or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof or for selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, at any time between the commencement of negotiations for and the later of (1) the completion of performance under, or (2) the termination of negotiations for, such contract or furnishing of material, supplies, equipment, land or buildings, directly or indirectly makes any contribution of money or other thing of value, or promises expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; or shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(b) knowingly solicits any such contribution from any such person for any such purpose during any such period;

It shall not constitute a violation of the provisions of this section for a corporation or a labor organization to establish, administer, or solicit contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by that corporation or labor organization if the establishment and administration of, and solicitation of contributions to, such fund do not constitute a violation of section 610.

* * * * * * * * *

§ 614. Limitation on expenditures generally

(a) (1) No candidate may make expenditures in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office in excess of the amount to which he would be limited under section 504 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 if he were receiving payments under title V of that Act.

(2) Expenditures made on behalf of any candidate are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by such candidate.

(3) Expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States are for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by the candidate for the office of President of the United States with whom he is running.

(4) For purposes of this subsection, an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

(A) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure, or

(B) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate to make the expenditure.

(5) The Federal Election Commission shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for Presidential nomination for use in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

(b) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure during any calendar year in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for Federal office who is affiliated with that party which, when added to the sum of all other expenditures made by that national committee during that year in connection with the general election campaigns of all candidates affiliated with that party, exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States. The State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committees of the State committee, may not make any expenditure during the calendar year in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in such State who is affiliated with that party which, when added to all other expenditures made by that State committee during that year in connection with the general election campaigns of candidates affiliated with that party, exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of that State. For purposes of this subsection—

(1) the term "voting age population" means voting age population certified for the year under section 504(g) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971; and

(2) the approval by the national committee of a political party of an expenditure by or on behalf of the presidential candidate of that party as required by section 316 of that Act is not considered an expenditure by that national committee.

(c)(1) No person may make any expenditure (other than an expenditure made on behalf of a candidate under the provisions of subsection (a)(4)) advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate during a calendar year which, when added to all other expenditures made by that person during the year advocating the election or defeat of that candidate, exceeds $1,000.

(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

(A) "clearly identified" means—

(i) the candidate's name appears;

(ii) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears; or

(iii) the identity of the candidate is apparent by unambiguous reference;

(B) "person" does not include the National or State committee of a political party; and

(C) "expenditure" does not include any payment made or incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, would not constitute an expenditure by that corporation or labor organization.

(D) Any person who knowingly or willfully violates the provisions of this section, other than subsection (a)(5), shall be punishable by a fine of $25,000, imprisonment for a period of not more than five years, or both. If any candidate is convicted of violating the provisions of this section because of any expenditure made on his behalf (as deter-minded under subsection (a) (4)) by a political committee, the treasurer of that committee, or any other person authorizing such expenditure, shall be punishable by a fine of not to exceed $25,000, imprisonment for not to exceed five years, or both, if such person knew, or had reason to know, that such expenditure was in excess of the limitation applicable to such candidate under this section.

(a) No person may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, a candidate for that candidate’s campaign for nomination for election, or election, which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that person for that campaign, exceeds $3,000.

(b) (1) No candidate may knowingly accept a contribution for his campaign from any person which, when added to the sum of all other contributions received from that person for that campaign, exceeds $3,000.

(2) No officer or employee of a political committee or of a political party may knowingly accept any contribution made for the benefit or use of a candidate which that candidate could not accept under paragraph (1).

(c) (1) For purposes of the limitations contained in this section all contributions made by any person directly or indirectly to or for the benefit of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked, encumbered, or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to that candidate, shall be treated as contributions from that person to that candidate.

(2) Contributions made to, or for the benefit of, a candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President shall be considered, for purposes of this section, to be made to, or for the benefit of, a candidate nominated by that party for election to the office of President.

(3) The limitations imposed by subsections (a) and (b) shall apply separately to each primary, primary runoff, general, and special election in which a candidate participates.

(d) (1) No individual may make a contribution during any calendar year which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that individual during that year, exceeds $25,000.

(2) Any contribution made for a campaign in a year, other than the calendar year in which the election is held to which that campaign relates, is, for purposes of this section, considered to be made during that calendar year in which that election is held.

(e) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not to exceed $25,000, imprisonment for not to exceed five years, or both.

§ 616. Form of contributions

No person may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, any candidate or political committee in excess, in the aggregate during any calendar year, of $100 unless such contributions is made by a written instrument identifying the person making the contribution. Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not to exceed $1,000, imprisonment for not to exceed one year, or both.
§ 617. Embezzlement or conversion of political contributions

(a) No candidate, officer, employee, or agent of a political committee, or person acting on behalf of any candidate or political committee, shall embezzle, knowingly convert to his own use or the use of another, or deposit in any place or in any manner except as authorized by law, any contributions or campaign funds entrusted to him or under his possession, custody, or control, or use any campaign funds to pay or defray the costs of attorney fees for the defense of any person or persons charged with the commission of a crime; or receive, conceal, or retain the same with intent to convert it to this personal use or gain, knowing it to have been embezzled or converted.

(b) Violation of the provisions of the section is punishable by a fine of not more than $25,000, imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both; but if the value of such property does not exceed the sum of $100, the fine shall not exceed $1,000 and the imprisonment shall not exceed one year. Notwithstanding the provisions of this section, any surplus or unexpended campaign funds may be contributed to a national or State political party for political purposes, or to educational or charitable organizations, or may be preserved for use in future campaigns for elective office, or for any other lawful purpose.

INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954

Part VIII.—Designation of income tax payments to Federal election campaign fund

Sec. 6096. Designation by individuals

[(a) In General.—Every individual (other than a nonresident alien) whose income tax liability for the taxable year is $1 or more may designate that $1 shall be paid over to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund in accordance with the provisions of section 9006(a). In the case of a joint return of husband and wife having an income tax liability of $2 or more, each spouse may designate that $1 shall be paid to the fund.]

(a) In General.—Every individual whose income tax liability for the taxable year is $2 or more is considered to have designated that $2 shall be paid over to the Federal Election Campaign Fund established under section 506 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 unless he elects not to make that designation. In the case of a joint return of a husband and wife having an income tax liability of $2 or more, each spouse shall be considered to have designated that $2 shall be paid over to such fund unless he elects not to make such designation.

(b) Income Tax Liability.—For purposes of subsection (a), the income tax liability of any individual for any taxable year is the amount of the tax imposed by chapter 1 on such individual for such taxable year (as shown on his return), reduced by the sum of the credits (as shown in his return) allowable under sections 33, 37, 38, 40, and 41.
(c) Manner and Time of Designation.—A designation Election.—
An election under subsection (a) may be made with respect to any taxable year—
(1) at the time of filing the return of the tax imposed by chapter 1 for such taxable year, or
(2) at any other time (after the time of filing the return of the tax imposed by chapter 1 for such taxable year) specified in regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate.
Such election shall be made in such manner as the Secretary or his delegate prescribes by regulations except that, if such election is made at the time of filing the return of the tax imposed by chapter 1 for such taxable year, such election shall be made either on the first page of the return or on the page bearing the taxpayer's signature.

Sec. 9012. Criminal penalties.
Sec. 9013. Effective date of chapter.

Sec. 9001. Short title.
This chapter may be cited as the “Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act”.

Sec. 9002. Definitions.
For purposes of this chapter—
(1) The term “authorized committee” means, with respect to the candidates of a political party for President and Vice President of the United States, any political committee which is authorized in writing by such candidates to incur expenses to further the election of such candidates. Such authorization shall be addressed to the chairman of such political committee, and a copy of such authorization shall be filed by such candidates with the Comptroller General. Any withdrawal of any authorization shall also be in writing and shall be addressed and filed in the same manner as the authorization.
(2) The term "candidate" means, with respect to any presidential election, an individual who (A) has been nominated for election to the office of President of the United States or the office of Vice President of the United States by a major party, or (B) has qualified to have his name on the election ballot (or to have the names of electors pledged to him on the election ballot) as the candidate of a political party for election to either such office in 10 or more States. For purposes of paragraphs (6) and (7) of this section and purposes of section 9004(a)(2), the term "candidate" means, with respect to any preceding presidential election, an individual who received popular votes for the office of President in such election.

(3) The term "Comptroller General" means the Comptroller General of the United States.

(4) The term "eligible candidates" means the candidates of a political party for President and Vice President of the United States who have met all applicable conditions for eligibility to receive payments under this chapter set forth in section 9003.

(5) The term "fund" means the Presidential Election Campaign Fund established by section 9006(a).

(6) The term "major party" means, with respect to any presidential election, a political party whose candidate for the office of President in the preceding presidential election received, as the candidate of such party, 25 percent or more of the total number of popular votes received by all candidates for such office.

(7) The term "minor party" means, with respect to any presidential election, a political party whose candidate for the office of President in the preceding presidential election received, as the candidate of such party, 5 percent or more but less than 25 percent of the total number of popular votes received by all candidates for such office.

(8) The term "new party" means, with respect to any presidential election, a political party which is neither a major party nor a minor party.

(9) The term "political committee" means any committee, association, or organization (whether or not incorporated) which accepts contributions or makes expenditures for the purpose of influencing, or attempting to influence, the nomination or election of one or more individuals to Federal, State, or local elective public office.

(10) The term "presidential election" means the election of presidential and vice-presidential electors.

(11) The term "qualified campaign expense" means an expense—

(A) incurred (i) by the candidate of a political party for the office of President to further his election to such office or to further the election of the candidate of such political party for the office of Vice President, or both (ii) by the candidate of a political party for the office of Vice President to further his election to such office or to further the election of the candidate of such political party for the office of President, or both, or (iii) by an authorized committee of the candidates of a political party for the offices of President and Vice President to further the election of either or both of such candidates to such offices,

(B) incurred within the expenditure report period (as defined in paragraph (12)), or incurred before the beginning of such period to the extent such expense is for property, services, or facilities used during such period, and

(C) neither the incurring nor payment of which constitutes a violation of any law of the United States or of the State in which such expense is incurred or paid.

An expense shall be considered as incurred by a candidate or an authorized committee if it is incurred by a person authorized by such candidate or such committee, as the case may be, to incur such expense on behalf of such candidate or such committee. If an authorized committee of the candidates of a political party for President and Vice President of the United States also incurs expenses to further the election of one or more other individuals to Federal, State, or local elective public office, expenses incurred by such committee which are not specifically to further the election of such other individual or individuals shall be considered as incurred to further the election of such candidates for President and Vice President in such proportion as the Comptroller General prescribes by rules or regulations.

(ii) The term "expenditure report period" with respect to any presidential election means—

(A) in the case of a major party, the period beginning with the first day of September before the election, or, if earlier, with the date on which such major party at its national convention nominated its candidate for election to the office of President of the United States, and ending 30 days after the date of the presidential election; and

(B) in the case of a party which is not a major party, the same period as the expenditure report period of the major party which has the shortest expenditure report period for such presidential election under subparagraph (A).

Sec. 9003. Condition for eligibility for payments.

(a) In General.—In order to be eligible to receive any payments under section 9006, the candidates of a political party in a presidential election shall, in writing—

(1) agree to obtain and furnish to the Comptroller General such evidence as he may request of the qualified campaign expenses with respect to which payment is sought,

(2) agree to keep and furnish to the Comptroller General such records, books, and other information as he may request,

(3) agree to an audit and examination by the Comptroller General under section 9007 and to pay any amounts required to be paid under such section, and

(4) agree to furnish statements of qualified campaign expenses and proposed qualified campaign expenses required under section 9008.

(b) Major Parties.—In order to be eligible to receive any payments under section 9006, the candidates of a major party in a presidential election shall certify to the Comptroller General, under penalty of perjury, that—

(1) such candidates and their authorized committees will not incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the aggregate payments to which they will be entitled under section 9004, and
[(2) no contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses have been or will be accepted by such candidates or any of their authorized committees except to the extent necessary to make up any deficiency in payments received out of the fund on account of the application of section 9006(d), and no contributions to defray expenses which would be qualified campaign expenses but for subparagraph (C) of section 9002(11) have been or will be accepted by such candidates or any of their authorized committees. Such certification shall be made within such time prior to the day of the presidential election as the Comptroller General shall prescribe by rules or regulations.

(c) Minor and New Parties.—In order to be eligible to receive any payments under section 9006, the candidates of a minor or new party in a presidential election shall certify to the Comptroller General, under penalty of perjury, that—

(1) such candidates and their authorized committees will not incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the aggregate payments to which the eligible candidates of a major party are entitled under section 9004, and

(2) such candidates and their authorized committees will accept and expend or retain contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses only to the extent that the qualified campaign expenses incurred by such candidates and their authorized committees certified to under paragraph (1) exceed the aggregate payments received by such candidates out of the fund pursuant to section 9006. Such certification shall be made within such time prior to the day of the presidential election as the Comptroller General shall prescribe by rules or regulations.

Sec. 9004. Entitlement of eligible candidates to payments.

(a) In General.—Subject to the provisions of this chapter—

(1) The eligible candidates of a major party in a presidential election shall be entitled to payments under section 9006 equal in the aggregate to 15 cents multiplied by the total number of residents within the United States who have attained the age of 18, as determined by the Bureau of the Census, as of the first day of June of the year preceding the year of the presidential election.

(2)(A) The eligible candidates of a minor party in a presidential election shall be entitled to payments under section 9006 equal in the aggregate to an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount computed under paragraph (1) for a major party as the number of popular votes received by the candidate for President of the minor party, as such candidate, in the preceding presidential election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidates for President of the major parties in the preceding presidential election.

(B) If the candidate of one or more political parties (not including a major party) for the office of President was a candidate for such office in the preceding presidential election and received 5 percent or more but less than 25 percent of the total number of popular votes received by all candidates for such office, such candidate and his running mate for the office of Vice President, upon compliance with the provisions of section 9003(a) and (c), shall be treated as eligible candidates entitled to payments under section 9006 in an amount computed as provided in subparagraph (A) by taking into account all the popular votes received by such candidate for the office of President in the preceding presidential election. If eligible candidates of a minor party are entitled to payments under this subparagraph, such entitlement shall be reduced by the amount of the entitlement allowed under subparagraph (A).

(3) The eligible candidates of a minor party or a new party in a presidential election whose candidate for President in such election receives, as such candidate, 5 percent or more of the total number of popular votes cast for the office of President in such election shall be entitled to payments under section 9006 equal to the aggregate to an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount computed under paragraph (1) for a major party as the number of popular votes received by such candidate in such election bears to the average number of popular votes received in such election by the candidates for President of the major parties. In the case of eligible candidates entitled to payments under paragraph (2), the amount allowable under this paragraph shall be limited to the amount, if any, by which the entitlement under the preceding sentence exceeds the amount of the entitlement under paragraph (2).

(b) Limitations.—The aggregate payments to which the eligible candidates of a political party shall be entitled under subsections (a) (2) and (3) with respect to a presidential election shall not exceed an amount equal to the lower of—

(1) the amount of qualified campaign expenses incurred by such eligible candidates and their authorized committees, reduced by the amount of contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses received and expended or retained by such eligible candidates and such committees, or

(2) the aggregate payments to which the eligible candidates of a major party are entitled under subsection (a) (1), reduced by the amount of contributions described in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(c) Restrictions.—The eligible candidates of a political party shall be entitled to payments under subsection (a) only—

(1) to defray qualified campaign expenses incurred by such eligible candidates or their authorized committees, or

(2) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used to defray such qualified campaign expenses, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses received and expended by such candidates or such committees) used to defray such qualified campaign expenses.

Sec. 9005. Certification by Comptroller General.

(a) Initial Certification.—On the basis of the evidence, books, records, and information furnished by the eligible candidates of a political party and prior to examination and audit under section 9007, the Comptroller General shall certify from time to time to the Secretary for payment to such candidates under section 9006 the payments to which such candidates are entitled under section 9004.
Finality of Certifications and Determinations.—Initial certifications by the Comptroller General under subsection (a), and all determinations made by him under this chapter, shall be final and conclusive, except to the extent that they are subject to examination and audit by the Comptroller General under section 9007 and judicial review under section 9011.

Sec. 9006. Payments to eligible candidates.

(a) Establishment of Campaign Fund.—There is hereby established on the books of the Treasury of the United States a special fund to be known as the “Presidential Election Campaign Fund”. The Secretary shall, as provided by appropriation Acts, transfer to the fund an amount not in excess of the sum of the amounts designated (subsequent to the previous Presidential election) to the fund by individuals under section 6096.

(b) Transfer to the General Fund.—If, after a Presidential election and after all eligible candidates have been paid the amount which they are entitled to receive under this chapter, there are moneys remaining in the fund, the Secretary shall transfer the moneys so remaining to the general fund of the Treasury.

(c) Payments From the Fund.—Upon receipt of a certification from the Comptroller General under section 9005 for payment to the eligible candidates of a political party, the Secretary shall pay to such candidates out of the fund the amount certified by the Comptroller General. Amounts paid to any such candidates shall be under the control of such candidates.

(d) Insufficient amounts in Funds.—If at the time of a certification by the Comptroller General under section 9005 for payment to the eligible candidates of a political party, the Secretary or his delegate determines that the moneys in the fund are not, or may not be, sufficient to satisfy the full entitlements of the eligible candidates of all political parties, he shall withhold from such payment such amount as he determines to be necessary to assure that the eligible candidates of each political party will receive their pro rata share of their full entitlement. Amounts withheld by reason of the preceding sentence shall be paid when the Secretary or his delegate determines that there are sufficient moneys in the fund to pay such amounts, or portions thereof, to all eligible candidates from whom amounts have been withheld, but, if there are not sufficient moneys in the fund to satisfy the full entitlement of the eligible candidates of all political parties, the amounts so withheld shall be paid in such manner that the eligible candidates of each political party receive their pro rata share of their full entitlement.

Sec. 9007. Examinations and audits; repayments.

(a) Examinations and Audits.—After each presidential election the Comptroller General shall conduct a thorough examination and audit of the qualified campaign expenses of the candidates of each political party for President and Vice President.

(b) Repayments.—

(1) If the Comptroller General determines that any portion of the payments made to the eligible candidates of a political party under section 9006 was in excess of the aggregate payments to which candidates were entitled under section 9004, he shall so notify such candidates, and such candidates shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to such portion.

(2) If the Comptroller General determines that the eligible candidates of a political party and their authorized committees incurred qualified campaign expenses in excess of the aggregate payments to which the eligible candidates of a major party were entitled under section 9004, he shall notify such candidates of the amount of such excess and such candidates shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to such amount.

(3) If the Comptroller General determines that the eligible candidates of a major party or any authorized committee of such candidates accepted contributions (other than contributions to make up deficiencies in payments out of the fund on account of the application of section 9006(d)) to defray qualified campaign expenses (other than qualified campaign expenses with respect to which payment is required under paragraph (2)), he shall notify such candidates of the amount of the contributions so accepted, and such candidates shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to such amount.

(4) If the Comptroller General determines that any amount of any payment made to the eligible candidates of a political party under section 9006 was used for any purpose other than—

(A) to defray the qualified campaign expenses with respect to which such payment was made, or

(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses which were received and expended) which were used, to defray such qualified campaign expenses, he shall notify such candidates of the amount so used, and such candidates shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to such amount.

(5) No payment shall be required from the eligible candidates of a political party under this subsection to the extent that such payment, when added to other payments required from such candidates under this subsection, exceeds the amount of payments received by such candidates under section 9006.

(c) Notification.—No notification shall be made by the Comptroller General under subsection (b) with respect to a presidential election more than 3 years after the day of such election.

(d) Deposit or Repayments.—All payments received by the Secretary under subsection (b) shall be deposited by him in the general fund of the Treasury.

Sec. 9008. Information on proposed expenses.

(a) Reports by Candidates.—The candidates of a political party for President and Vice President in a presidential election shall, from time to time as the Comptroller General may require, furnish to the Comptroller General a detailed statement, in such form as the Comptroller General may prescribe, of—

(1) the qualified campaign expenses incurred by them and their authorized committees prior to the date of such statement (whether or not evidence of such expenses has been furnished for purposes of section 9005), and

(2) the qualified campaign expenses which they and their authorized committees propose to incur on or after the date of such statement.

The Comptroller General shall require a statement under this subsection from such candidates of each political party at least once each week during the second, third, and fourth weeks preceding the day of the presidential election and at least twice during the week preceding such day.

(b) Publication.—The Comptroller General shall, as soon as possible after he receives each statement under subsection (a), prepare and publish a summary of such statement, together with any other data or information which he deems advisable, in the Federal Register. Such summary shall not include any information which identifies any individual who made a designation under section 6096.

Sec. 9009. Reports to Congress; regulations.

(a) Reports.—The Comptroller General shall, as soon as practicable after each presidential election, submit a full report to the Senate and House of Representatives setting forth—

(1) the qualified campaign expenses (shown in such detail as the Comptroller General determines necessary) incurred by the candidates of each political party and their authorized committees;

(2) the amounts certified by him under section 9005 for payment to the eligible candidates of each political party; and

(3) the amount of payments, if any, required from such candidates under section 9007, and the reasons for each payment required.

Each report submitted pursuant to this section shall be printed as a Senate document.

(b) Regulations, Etc.—The Comptroller General is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations, to conduct such examinations and audits (in addition to the examinations and audits required by section 9007(a)), to conduct such investigations, and to require the keeping and submission of such books, records, and information, as he deems necessary to carry out the functions and duties imposed on him by this chapter.

Sec. 9010. Participation by Comptroller General in judicial proceedings.

(a) Appearance by Counsel.—The Comptroller General is authorized to appear in and defend against any action filed under section 9011, either by attorneys employed in his office or by counsel whom he may appoint without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and whose compensation he may fix without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title.
(b) Recovery of Certain Payments.—The Comptroller General is authorized through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a) to appear in the district courts of the United States to seek recovery of any amounts determined to be payable to the Secretary as a result of examination and audit made pursuant to section 9007.

(c) Declaratory and Injunctive Relief.—The Comptroller General is authorized through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a) to petition the courts of the United States for declaratory or injunctive relief concerning any civil matter covered by the provisions of this subtitle or section 6096. Upon application of the Comptroller General, an action brought pursuant to this subsection shall be heard and determined by a court of three judges in accordance with the provisions of section 2284 of title 28, United States Code, and any appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court. It shall be the duty of the judges designated to hear the case to assign the case for hearing at the earliest practicable date, to participate in the hearing and determination thereof, and to cause the case to be in every way expedited.

(d) Appeal.—The Comptroller General is authorized on behalf of the United States to appeal from, and to petition the Supreme Court for certiorari to review, judgments or decrees entered with respect to actions in which he appears pursuant to the authority provided in this section.

[Sec. 9011. Judicial review.

(a) Review of Certification, Determination, or Other Action by the Comptroller General.—Any certification, determination, or other action by the Comptroller General made or taken pursuant to the provisions of this chapter shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia upon petition filed in such Court by any interested person. Any petition filed pursuant to this section shall be filed within thirty days after the certification, determination, or other action by the Comptroller General for which review is sought.

(b) Suits To Implement Chapter.—

(1) The Comptroller General, the national committee of any political party, and individuals eligible to vote for President are authorized to institute such actions, including actions for declaratory judgment or injunctive relief, as may be appropriate to implement or construe any provision of this chapter.

(2) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of proceedings instituted pursuant to this subsection and shall exercise the same without regard to whether a person asserting rights under provisions of this subsection shall have exhausted any administrative or other remedies that may be provided at law. Such proceedings shall be heard and determined by a court of three judges in accordance with the provisions of section 2284 of title 28, United States Code, and any appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court. It shall be the duty of the judges designated to hear the case to assign the case for hearing at the earliest practicable date, to participate in the hearing and determination thereof, and to cause the case to be in every way expedited.]
Sec. 9012. Criminal penalties.

(a) Excess Campaign Expenses.—

(1) It shall be unlawful for an eligible candidate of a political party for President and Vice President in a presidential election or any of his authorized committees knowingly and willfully to incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the aggregate payments to which the eligible candidates of a major party are entitled under section 9004 with respect to such election.

(2) Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year or both. In the case of a violation by an authorized committee, any officer or member of such committee who knowingly and willfully consents to such violation shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(b) Contributions.—

(1) It shall be unlawful for an eligible candidate of a major party in a presidential election or any of his authorized committees knowingly and willfully to accept any contribution to defray qualified campaign expenses, except to the extent necessary to make up any deficiency in payments received out of the fund on account of the application of section 9006(c), or to defray expenses which would be qualified campaign expenses but for subparagraph (C) of section 9002(11).

(2) It shall be unlawful for an eligible candidate of a political party (other than a major party) in a presidential election or any of his authorized committees knowingly and willfully to accept and expend or retain contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses in an amount which exceeds the qualified campaign expenses incurred with respect to such election by such eligible candidate and his authorized committees.

(3) Any person who violates paragraph (1) or (2) shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. In the case of a violation by an authorized committee, any officer or member of such committee who knowingly and willfully consents to such violation shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(c) Unlawful Use of Payments.—

(1) It shall be unlawful for any person who receives any payment under section 9006, or to whom any portion of any payment received under such section is transferred, knowingly and willfully to use, or authorize the use of, such payment or such portion for any purpose other than—

(A) to defray the qualified campaign expenses with respect to which such payment was made, or

(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses which were received and expended) which were used, to defray such qualified campaign expenses.
(2) Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(d) False Statements, Etc.—

(1) It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully—

(A) to furnish any false, fictitious, or fraudulent evidence, books, or information to the Comptroller General under this subtitle, or to include in any evidence, books, or information so furnished any misrepresentation of a material fact, or to falsify or conceal any evidence, books, or information relevant to a certification by the Comptroller General or an examination and audit by the Comptroller General under this chapter; or

(B) to fail to furnish to the Comptroller General any records, books, or information requested by him for purposes of this chapter.

(2) Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(e) Kickbacks and Illegal Payments.—

(1) It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully to give or accept any kickback or any illegal payment in connection with any qualified campaign expense of eligible candidates or their authorized committees.

(2) Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(3) In addition to the penalty provided by paragraph (2), any person who accepts any kickback or illegal payment in connection with any qualified campaign expense of eligible candidates or their authorized committees shall pay to the Secretary, for deposit in the general fund of the Treasury, an amount equal to 125 percent of the kickback or payment received.

(f) Unauthorized Expenditures and Contributions.—

(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), it shall be unlawful for any political committee which is not an authorized committee with respect to the eligible candidates of a political party for President and Vice President in a presidential election knowingly and willfully to incur expenditures to further the election of such candidates, which would constitute qualified campaign expenses if incurred by an authorized committee of such candidates, in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000.

(2) This subsection shall not apply to (A) expenditures by a broadcaster regulated by the Federal Communications Commission, or by a periodical publication, in reporting the news or in taking editorial positions, or (B) expenditures by any organization described in section 501 (c) which is exempt from tax under section 501 (a) in communicating to its members the views of that organization.

(3) Any political committee which violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $5,000, and any officer or member of such committee who knowingly and willfully consents to such violation and any other individual who knowingly and willfully violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.
(g) Unauthorized Disclosure of Information.—

(1) It shall be unlawful for any individual to disclose any information obtained under the provisions of this chapter except as may be required by law.

(2) Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Sec. 9013. Effective date of chapter.

The provisions of this chapter shall take effect on January 1, 1973.

CHAPTER 96. PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN FUND ADVISORY BOARD

Sec. 9021. Establishment of Advisory Board.

(a) Establishment of Board.—There is hereby established an advisory board to be known as the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Advisory Board (hereinafter in this section referred to as the “Board”). It shall be the duty and function of the Board to counsel and assist the Comptroller General of the United States in the performance of the duties and functions imposed on him under the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act.

(b) Composition of Board.—The Board shall be composed of the following members:

(1) the majority leader and minority leader of the Senate and the Speaker and minority leader of the House of Representatives, who shall serve ex officio;

(2) two members representing each political party which is a major party (as defined in section 9002(6)), which members shall be appointed by the Comptroller General from recommendations submitted by such political party; and

(3) three members representing the general public, which members shall be selected by the members described in paragraphs (1) and (2).

The terms of the first members of the Board described in paragraphs (2) and (3) shall expire on the sixtieth day after the date of the first presidential election following January 1, 1973, and the terms of subsequent members described in paragraphs (2) and (3) shall begin on the sixty-first day after the date of a presidential election and expire on the sixtieth day following the date of the subsequent presidential election. The Board shall elect a Chairman from its members.

(c) Compensation.—Members of the Board (other than members described in subsection (b)(1)) shall receive compensation at the rate of $75 a day for each day they are engaged in performing duties and functions as such members, including traveltime, and, while away from their homes or regular places of business, shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by law for persons in the Government service employed intermittently.

(d) Status.—Service by an individual as a member of the Board shall not, for purposes of any other law of the United States be considered as service as an officer or employee of the United States.
In compliance with sections 133 (b) and (d) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended, the record of rollcall votes in the Committee on Rules and Administration during its consideration of the original bill (subsequently S. 3044) is as follows:

1. Motion by Senator Griffin to delete Title I and substitute therefor a proposal to provide candidates for Federal office in general elections with certain amounts of television time to be paid for from funds in the United States Treasury, and to prohibit such candidates from purchasing additional television time. It is particularly gratifying to me as Chairman of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections that the Committee is reporting legislation in which public financing of elections is such a strong component.

The public financing features of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 stem from comprehensive hearings before the subcommittee which I conducted on September 18, 19, 20 and 21, 1973. Many constructive recommendations emerged from these hearings. They were distilled into my own bill, S. 2718, which I introduced on November 16, which was reported to the Committee for consideration, and which formed the basis for our deliberations.

I am pleased that the legislation contains principles which I had advanced. Among these are: coverage of all Federal elections, primary and general; a threshold amount to be raised in small contributions by candidates in primary elections to ensure each candidate's seriousness of intent; and the concept of matching these small contributions with federal dollars.

I am also pleased that the legislation contains provisions which I recommended in Committee. Among these are: an accelerated reporting procedure by the Federal Election Commission to permit completion of examinations and audits of campaign expenditures at the earliest practicable time; a greater limitation on the amounts which an individual candidate may contribute to his or her own campaign; and a new method of implementing the dollar check-off, whereby this check-off becomes automatic unless the taxpayer indicates an objection.

The Committee is reporting to the Senate legislation of historic significance, in accord with those Jeffersonian principles which place abiding confidence in the wisdom of the individual and in the individual's fundamental role in the development of an enlightened democracy.

We have witnessed the tragic perversion of these principles—in terms of a misuse and corruption of power and a misguided dependence on the influence of large political contributors.

This legislation is deeply concerned with the ending of such abuses. It removes the temptation of seeking or of accepting the large compromising gift. It returns to our people, to our individual voters a rightful share and a rightful responsibility in the choosing of their candidates. And it can serve to establish that climate of public trust in elected officials which this country so earnestly desires.

CLAIBORNE PELL.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. GRIFFIN

The astute political observer, David S. Broder, mixed a dash of homely wisdom with a reporter's cynicism when he wrote: "The only thing more dangerous to democracy than corrupt politicians may be politicians hell-bent on reform."

In many minds, the idea of "public financing" has somehow become synonymous with "campaign reform." I am concerned that the reality may be very different.

Even though I have serious doubts about the public financing aspects of this bill, I joined in voting to report it because I believe the Senate as a whole should have an opportunity to debate and decide the issues raised by Title I. Furthermore, except for Title I, the bill contains many campaign financing reforms which are clearly meritorious.

For example, I strongly support such provisions as those in other titles of the bill to create an independent Federal Election Commission, to place strict dollar limits on the amount an individual can contribute to a candidate or to campaigns in any year, to limit the amount a candidate can contribute to his own campaign, to restrict the size of cash contributions; to impose ceilings on overall campaign expenditures; and to require each candidate to use a central campaign committee and depository.

Such provisions truly represent campaign financing reforms, and they should be enacted on their own merit.

Unfortunately, public understanding has not fully penetrated a facade of attractive slogans that has surrounded the promise of public financing for campaigns. As more and more light is focused on the approach of Title I in this bill, the more realization there will be that it does not really represent "reform" at all. That will be particularly true as the people learn that "public financing" means "taxpayer financing;" and when they see that Title I would actually increase, not decrease, the levels of campaign spending, particularly in races for the House of Representatives.

It should be noted also that a number of needed, real reforms have not been included in this bill. For example, I believe everyone—candidates and voters alike—would welcome steps to shorten the duration of campaigns.

Robert P. Griffin.

Congressional Record—Senate

NATIONAL CANCER ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN). Time for transaction of routine morning business has now expired. Morning business is closed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALLEN. There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this Act may be cited as the "National Cancer Act Amendments of 1974".

SEC. 2. Section 101(b) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201) is amended by striking the words "during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and each of the eight succeeding fiscal years" and inserting in lieu thereof "during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and each of the five succeeding fiscal years".

SEC. 3. Section 402(b) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 245c(b)) is amended by striking out "5,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "7,500,000".

SEC. 4. (a) Section 407(b)(7) of the Public Health Service Act is amended by inserting after the words "National Cancer Program" the words "including the number and types of personnel necessary to carry out such program.

(b) Section 407(b)(8)(A) of such Act is amended by inserting after the words "National Cancer Institute" the words "the National Cancer Institute shall conduct or contract for programs to disseminate and interpret on a cur-
Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs have until midnight of March 28 of file its report on S. 1017, the Indian Self-Determination and Educational Reform Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed at this time to the consideration of Senate Resolution 328.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general elections for Federal office and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PELL, Mr. President, as chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, I wish to emphasize the importance of S. 3044 to the future of our democracy. In particular, I wish to stress the importance of Title I of this legislation, dealing with the public financing of elections.

This is historic legislation. Let me place it briefly into a framework of recent history. In mid-September last year our Subcommittee considered 27 public hearings on this most important subject area. Members of Congress deeply concerned with election reform were among the more than 40 witnesses who testified and presented their thoughtful views and recommendations. My bill, S.2718, resulting from these comprehensive hearings, was reported forward to the Committee on Rules and Administration, and its fundamentals formed the basis of our committee deliberations on public financing.

We have thus worked with careful and detailed consideration on the development of this legislation. We have weighed a variety of alternatives, as set forth in the very thorough and informative report our chairman has submitted.

Mr. President, it was just over 2 months ago, on December 3, 1976, that the able and distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration (Mr. CANNON) gave assurances to the Senate in this chamber that every effort would be made, so that this report could be submitted within 30 days of the beginning of the second session of the 93rd Congress. I wish to commend the chairman for the successful meeting of this target date.

When submitting this report we have taken full cognizance of historic precedents and historic forerunners to public financing concepts. Let me praise, especially in this connection, my senior colleague, Senator Pastore of Rhode Island, for his pioneering work in this area.

In essence, I believe we have prepared legislation which goes to the very heart of our democratic process, and which will win the heart to beat once again with confidence.

It can be argued that we cannot legislate morality, cannot mandate an end to dishonesty, an end to venality, cannot do it. But we can go far enough. It believe its goes the right distance. It provides the advantages of public financing and yet leaves them optional. It limits the contribution any individual can make to a campaign, but leaves them within a framework which minimizes the cause of abuse, and we can return to our voters their rights to choose candidates who are not beholden to the large, and so often compromising, political contribution.

As the committee report points out, the amount to be contributed by each individual taxpayer in the public financing of elections is modest—$2 per year for one individual, $4 on a joint return. That is an investment which I believe will benefit each individual, in terms of more responsible government and in terms of a government responsive to human needs rather than to special interests.

There are those who will say that this bill goes too far, and others who maintain that it goes far enough. It believe it goes the right distance. It provides the advantages of public financing and yet leaves them optional. It limits the contribution any individual can make to a campaign, but leaves them within a framework which minimizes the cause of abuse, and we can return to our voters their rights to choose candidates who are not beholden to the large, and so often compromising, political contribution.

We will debate the details of this legislation, but let me point here within a framework of the goals which I believe this bill can enable us to attain.

We may not eradicate all future Watergates, but certainly we will discourage the perpetuation of a climate in which power is abused by the clever at the expense of the unwary, where power is perverted by a calculated deception which in Richard Nixons words—we might call a school for scandal.

Mr. President, I urge passage of this legislation. As I have stated in our committee report, I believe it is in accord with historic Jeffersonian principles which place abiding confidence in the wisdom of the individual and in the individual's fundamental role in the development of an enlightened democracy. At this time, let me comment on the proposals recently offered by President Nixon under the heading of "Campaign reform." I would point out that a number of them are scarcely original. One authorized political committee per candidate, limited as it is to individual contributors, a limit of $3,000 for individual contributions to candidates, no loans as possible contributions, a bipartisan Federal elections commission—these are examples of provisions already in our current legislation today and in S. 372, passed by the Senate months ago.

The President takes strong exemption to the concept of public financing. He talks about "diverting hundreds of millions of dollars away from pressing national needs" in order to underwrite campaigns. I submit that the individual taxpayer's investment is very modest, that the return is to be measured in terms of one man in government, that this is a most pressing national need, and that American taxpayers are paying far more out of their own pockets now to finance campaigns than in the years which achieved the dubious reputation of being the most purchasable of any since Hardin's Teapot Dome one.

I would also point out that when I conducted hearings on this legislation last September, I expressly asked the administration well in advance to provide us with an appropriate witness who could educate us on the administration's position on election reform. I inquired of the witness, an assistant attorney general whom the administration selected for this purpose, as to whether he spoke for the White House, for the Justice Department or for the whole administration.

His reply was: "I am trying to speak for our best understanding of what may be the Administration's position, as of now. I frankly have no final position on that.

This was about the extent of our Senate education in this regard.

It seems a bit surprising under these circumstances that we should now receive Presidential endorsements, this long after the hearings, this long after Senate adoption of S. 372, this long after requests for elucidation, this long after committee action and deliberations.

We may not always be noted for celerity of action in this body, but this time, compared to the White House, we have been like a veritable greyhound compared to a snail.

Perhaps we should be pleased and say, "Better late than never, Mr. President." But I for one believe that if these administration proposals were to have received serious consideration—as were the recommendations of more than 40 witnesses at the comprehensive September hearings—they should have been transmitted to us at the appropriate time, and certainly long before this.

Let us, therefore, not be diverted in our deliberations. Let us give our approval to the soundness and wisdom contained in the bill we have before us, which is truly in the best interests of all our citizens.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PELL. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ALLEN. First, I commend the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island for his dedicated and diligent efforts in the direction of campaign reform legislation.

I should like to inquire of the distinguished Senator if public financing is a necessary feature or element of campaign reform. Could it not be reformed and still leave the campaign expenditures in the private sector, rather than calling for the public support?

Mr. PELL. There are two separate approaches. Two separate parts of the same cloth, like the warp and the woof. I am not sure they can be separated. If we have people of complete morality and complete honesty, it could. But being, as we are, frail people, and human beings, there is an intertwining here of the two, just as there is in the warp and the woof.

Mr. ALLEN. I noticed a provision in the Kennedy-Scott rider offered last year that does not seem to be carried forward in the Senate committee bill, S. 372, pertaining to, and that it is that the matchable contributions that have been made within a certain time limit before the general election. I wonder why that provision was not carried forward in the Senate bill.

Mr. PELL. The Senator has pointed out—I will not say a flaw, but an area not covered in our legislation intentionally. We considered many problems and did not believe we should approach the question of the time limit in this legislation.

Mr. ALLEN. As far as it appears, then, contributions may have been made 4, 5, or 6 years prior to the election, and I speak now of Presidential preference primaries leading up to the convention; contributions made many years before the convention would be subject to being matched by the Federal Treasury. Is that not correct?

Mr. PELL. That is correct in the bill as presently drafted.

Mr. ALLEN. Then, as quick as the bill becomes law, the people who send up trial balloons in the Presidential race could come in and present a statement to the public treasury, assuming they reached the $250,000 threshold amount, authorizing them to use their contributions, and they could say "I have been running now for President for 5 or 6 years and collected these amounts of money, and I want these sums matched." Is that permissible under the Senate bill?

Mr. PELL. My understanding is that it is permissible under the Senate bill.

Mr. ALLEN. So that there would be a nice little payment by the Federal Treasury to catch up with the political campaigns of various candidates for President just to bring them up to date?

Mr. PELL. In other words, a Harold Stassen could reap a windfall.

Mr. ALLEN. But anyone who collects $250,000 would be eligible, not only those who have that matched, but up to the time the convention he would have his contributions matched, dollars for dollar out of the Federal treasury provided they were $250 or less.

Mr. PELL. He could raise the sum, & the Senator has pointed out, but it woul
Mr. ALLEN. I have an amendment I expect to offer later providing that no contribution could be matched unless it was made not more than 14 months prior to the general election. Would the Senator feel inclined to go along with that amendment?

Mr. PELL. Not as floor manager of the bill, but speaking for myself as an individual I think that particular amendment of the Senate from Alabama makes good sense to me and I would accept it.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator.

Mr. PELL. But I hasten to add that I am speaking for only myself.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand the Senator’s statement but I do know his influence would go much further than that and I feel that with his support, we will get that amendment agreed to, at least.

So under the bill there is no starting point beyond which contributions would be ruled out. Then, looking prospectively, would it be possible for a candidate for the Presidential nomination to say, “Well, I do not believe I can run in 1976, but I will be able to run by 1980 or 1984.”

Under this bill would it be possible for a candidate running for President in 1980, and the Government footing one-half of the bill, and then another set of candidates running for President in 1986, and the Government footing one-half of those bills, and then another set of candidates running for the nomination in 1984 and the Government footing one-half of these bills. Would that be possible under this bill?

Mr. PELL. It would be possible under this bill, but it would be hard to find many people interested in contributing to the potential candidates of 1988 or 1992 at the present time. I cannot imagine many private citizens doing so.

Mr. ALLEN. But still it would be possible for a candidate to say, “I always have had an ambition to be President. I want to run in 1990.”

Mr. PELL. 1992?

Mr. ALLEN. 1992, then. He could say, “I have raised this $250,000 among my fellows, and now I want the Government to start matching my contributions to my campaign.” That is possible under the bill, is it not?

Mr. PELL. It is. And if he is successful in raising that amount of money from his fellows, he might be President long before 1992.

Mr. ALLEN. Another thing that disturbs me is the fact that every candidate for the Presidential nomination can receive up to $7.5 million from the public Treasury to further his candidacy. And if a serious candidate participates in a single Presidential preference primary in order to start getting this money from the Federal Government, is it?

Mr. PELL. That would be correct, but I’m just thinking back, we have had Presidents elected who have not competed in Presidential primaries under our present system.

Mr. ALLEN. That is the very point the Senator from Alabama is getting to. We are speaking of reform legislation. We want to reform the election process and make it less susceptible to improper influences. Yet under the bill it would be possible for a candidate for the Presidency, for one, two, three, or four, or more, for that matter, to collect $7.5 million from the private sector, from the public sector, $7.5 million each from the Federal Government, and then go to the convention, each one armed with a $15 million campaign fund, competing for the votes of the various delegates to the convention. Is that possible under the bill?

Mr. PELL. It is possible, if the candidates are serious enough and were successful in raising private money. The inference is, yes. If they raised the private money, they would raise public money, but they would not receive public money without first receiving private money.

Mr. ALLEN. Would it be not possible to go to the convention with a campaign fund of $15 million?

Mr. PELL. It would be possible, just as it is possible now for a candidate to do the same thing, only he would have to raise it out of the private sector.

Mr. ALLEN. The candidate would have to raise $7.5 million from private money in order to get $7.5 million from the Federal Government.

Mr. PELL. Yes. The day he has to raise $15 million from the private sector.

Mr. ALLEN. Is not $7.5 million enough to run for a Presidential nomination?

Mr. PELL. According to the witnesses who came before us it is not enough to run a serious campaign.

Mr. ALLEN. $7.5 million is not enough?

Mr. PELL. That is right.

Mr. ALLEN. So the bill, instead of cutting down campaign expenses, is going to make it possible to have more expensive campaigns in the nomination drive for the President?

Mr. PELL. It could. It could result in that. It would depend on the individual and his appeal to the public and to the press. As I have raised money in my last campaign, I regret to say I had to spend more than half a million dollars in a State that has less than 1.5 percent of the vote. In the other States where I believe the Senate from Alabama is in one of the more fortunate States—such sums go a much longer way. I would hope that would apply more generally.

Mr. ALLEN. I notice from Senate Resolution 60, setting up the Watergate Committee, this provision:

The select committee shall have authority to recommend the enactment—

This is on page 13, section 4(a), any new congressional legislation which its investigation considers is necessary to safeguard the electoral process by which the President of the United States is chosen.

The Watergate Committee is on the verge of winding up its affairs and making its report. Would it not be of interest to the Members of the Senate and the Members of the House and the public generally to find out what the Watergate Committee is going to recommend with regard to election reform?

Mr. PELL. But, as the Senator has suggested, the language there is permissive. It has the authority to do it; it is not mandatory that it must make a recommendation. I would think the first responsibility for such legislation should come from our own Rules and Administration Committee, which is the standing committee where this authority has been vested as a matter of course through the years.

Mr. ALLEN. Yet the Senate adopted this resolution setting up the Watergate Committee.

Mr. PELL. And giving it the permissive authority to recommend legislation. So far I see no signs of such permissive authority being exercised.

Mr. ALLEN. Would the Senator be interested in knowing that five out of the seven Watergate Committee members are opposed to public financing of elections?

Mr. PELL. What was that again, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. ALLEN. Five out of the seven members of the Watergate Committee are opposed to public financing of elections.

Mr. PELL. That could be. I simply do not know what the results of a poll in the Watergate Committee would be, but I do know that under the Watergate Committee on Rules and Administration is given jurisdiction and whatever legislation the Watergate Committee recommended would have to come before us for action. I believe I am correct in that.

Mr. ALLEN. I believe Senate bill 3044 goes one step further than did the Kennedy-Scott-Mansfield-Mondale-Pell-Cartwright. Did last time, in that that rider did not provide for public financing in House and Senate primary races. Did it?

Mr. PELL. It did not apply, and our amendment was called to that omission, just as the Senator from Alabama called to the mind the possible omission that we did not have a cutoff date for past contributions. As I said, it is impossible to do a campaign in such a manner that we should include primaries for all Federal elections.

Mr. ALLEN. I believe the Washington Post is for campaign reform and even for some assistance of public financing of elections. I notice that that publication this morning, in referring to the rider which failed of adoption last year, said in its editorial:

Today the Senate begins debate on a very ambitious bill to extend public financing to
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two members of my staff, Roy Greenaway and Jan Mueller, may be seated on the floor of the Senate in consideration of this measure, including rollcall.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICe PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK). Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 1:15 P.M.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 1:15 this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Thereupon, at 1:15 p.m. the Senate took a recess until 1:15 p.m., when it was called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. Hartke).

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS TO 2 P.M.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, with the approval of the distinguished majority leader, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 2 p.m.

The motion was agreed to; and at 1:31 p.m. the Senate took a recess until 2 p.m.; whereupon the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. DOMENICI).

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7310) to improve congressional control over budgetary outlay and receipt totals, to provide for a Legislative Budget Office, to establish a procedure providing congressional control over impoundment of funds by the executive branch, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference as amended by the Senate and by the House; and ordered that the two Houses thereon, that Mr. Bolio, Mr. Sisk, Mr. Young of Texas, Mr. Long of Louisiana, Mr. Martin of Nebraska, Mr. Latza, and Mr. Del. Cranston be appointed as a committee of the whole House on the part of the House at the conference.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOMENICI). The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. S. 3004.

NATIONAL CANCER ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 3004, the unfinished business, be laid aside temporarily and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 710, S. 2893.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 2893, to amend the Public Health Service Act to improve the national cancer program and to authorize appropriations for such program for the next five fiscal years.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the yeas and nays be ordered on final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, it is a special pleasure for me to present to the Senate this afternoon the National Cancer Act of 1974, on behalf of the Subcommittee on Health and the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. We come to the Senate this afternoon with the confidence that the unanimous support of the Committee, if I think has been one of the really dynamic and effective health programs that have been developed by the Senate in recent years.

To trace the legislation very briefly for the benefit of the Senate, the cancer legislation initially was developed after a special panel of consultants had been established by the chairman of the Subcommittee on Health in the Senate, former Senator Ralph Yarborough, of Texas. This cancer panel of consultants was charged with the task of developing a legislative program in the biomedical community, those who had worked in cancer research, as well as dedicated laymen. They made recommendations to the committee, and to the Senate. Their report was the basis of the 1971 cancer legislation, which we are extending and improving today.
I want to pay a special tribute to the chairman of that panel and the chairman of the President's Cancer Panel, Mr. Benno C. Schmidt. His willingness to work ceaselessly in this public interest program is an example which is unparalleled.

The legislation we are recommending today is a result of hearings we have had before the Subcommittee on Health, in which we took testimony from the administration, the President's panel, the Cancer Control Foundation, the effective consumer groups in the cancer area, the Association of American Medical Colleges, as well as the American Cancer Society.

Mr. President, today I would like to comment on the National Cancer Act of 1974, which I introduced in the Senate, January 24, 1974.

Many of you know at first hand the enormity of the cancer problem. Many of you have already experienced the fear and helplessness unleashed by this family of more than 100 distinctly different diseases.

But for those of you who have been fortunate enough to confront this second major killer of Americans I would like to present some facts in support of the new National Cancer Act. I hope that these facts will give you—as they have me—that as Members of the U.S. Senate we all have a compelling mandate to hasten the conquest of cancer, and that in S. 2893 we have the proper legislative instrument which to help forge this humanitarian accomplishment.

Cancer is a term for more than 100 clinically distinct diseases which kill someone in this country every 1½ minutes. This year it is estimated that 655,000 Americans will become new cancer cases and 355,000 will die; that is about 1,000 people suffering from cancer and their friends and families, is incalculable.

If cancer was one disease we might expect a single cure of dramatic breakthrough. But it is not. Unfortunately cancer is far more complex than all of the infectious diseases conquered in the long march of medical progress.

Cancer is a widespread biological phenomenon with different incidences, appearances, and functioning. It is induced by widely different chemical, physical, and biological agents, most of which are unknown.

To find the causes and cures of cancer may indeed require unlocking the innermost biologic secrets of life itself.

Let me give you one example of the scope of the scientific challenge to which we must address ourselves. Scientists have long had reason to believe that many of the majority of human cancers are caused by chemical or other environmental agents. About 1,000 chemicals are now known to induce cancer in animals and 23 chemical agents have been implicated as causes of human cancer.

But roughly 20,000 new chemicals are introduced into the environment each year—costly in industrial countries—and about 10,000 of these are produced in quantities capable of contaminating the environment—about one ton or more.

To counter this chemical onslaught in the United States we are now testing about 500 compounds a year. Just to test one chemical requires roughly 2 years, and annual testing costs about $70,000. Obviously, at this level we cannot catch up with testing the older chemicals or even make a dent in the yearly inundation of the new.

Therefore, the national cancer program is continuing a sustained effort to develop what might be called a "mini-screen" to bioassay compounds in a matter of months, at a fraction of the present cost and predictability as to whether the chemicals might cause cancer.

One of the most critical aspects of National Cancer Institute activities under the national cancer program is delivery of information to the public.

If we are to be accountable to the mandate of the people, we must insist that the latest advances in cancer prevention, detection, treatment, and rehabilitation are made available to all of the people.

The cancer program has moved forward in this area with the establishment of nine comprehensive cancer centers and the initiation of numerous cancer control programs. These efforts must be continued.

Simply stated, we must bring the best in cancer medicine to the people wherever they are and assure that centers of excellence are available throughout the country.

Although significant progress against cancer has been achieved under the National Cancer Act of 1971, changes have been recommended in the President's message to the Director of the National Cancer Institute, to more effectively administer and to provide National Cancer Institute programs which we believe are necessary for the accomplishment of the objectives of the national cancer program.

The major features are as follows:

First, need for additional cancer centers. The National Cancer Act of 1971 limits the number of new comprehensive cancer centers to 15. This limitation severely restrains the goals of the cancer control program as methods of prevention, detection, treatment, and rehabilitation cut out to the public. I believe that the 15 Nat on requires 30 to 35 such centers to attract a high-quality comprehensive cancer care within the reach of everyone. I can see no reason why any family should be denied the best possible diagnosis and treatment for cancer simply because of where they live.

Second, need to accelerate education of biologic and absolute essential that training programs be provided by the national cancer program at levels adequate to insure attracting the brightest young scientists and clinicians. A continuing influx of new scientific talent is necessary to insure progress both in cancer and in medical research. In general the cost of these programs is minimal compared with the value of lives that will ultimately be saved.

Third, funding levels.

Funding for the national cancer program has more than doubled since enactment of the National Cancer Act of 1971. The authorizations in the new bill provide for further increases at levels recommended by both the President's panel and the National Cancer Advisory Board.

The committee feels these authorization levels are satisfactory to assure a continued maximum progress of the national cancer program.

Fourth, cancer control programs.

The cancer control program, through its efforts to increase rapid and effective dissemination of the latest research advances and knowledge of cancer, strengthens the general practice of medicine in this country. The program should be renewed to a major demonstration once for the rapid application of new diagnostic, treatment and rehabilitation methods. For this reason, S. 2893 increases funding authorizations for the cancer control program for the next 3 years.

Fifth, need to submit personnel requirements with budget requests.

The National Cancer Institute has been severely limited in its efforts to secure the numbers and kinds of personnel necessary to administer expanded programs because of inadequate super grade positions, personnel ceilings and reductions imposed on the institute by the administration. Recognizing that adequate personnel are essential for an effective program, S. 2893 provides a foundation for the national cancer program to make its personnel requirements known to Congress. By requiring National Cancer Institute to submit personnel needs along with the yearly budget request, it is intended that Congress will be informed of any personnel able to act upon these personnel needs.

AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS

The medical facilities construction and modernization amendment of 1970—the Hill-Burton amendment—contained a provision designed to assure the availability and expenditure of appropriated funds.

This provision, unless amended, would expire June 30, 1974. S. 2893 would permanently extend it. The committee has felt it appropriate to do this in view of the recent administration record of impoundment of funds and the administration's express desire to terminate many health programs prior to congressional review of them.

The provision which requires obligation and expenditure of the appropriated funds was section 601, 52 U.S.C.A. sections 201 note and 2661 note—section 601. Section 601 reads as follows:

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, unless enacted after the enact-this area was again manifested on January 29, 1974, when he resumed his commitment to our cancer research program at the National Cancer Institute. Certainly, Congressional interest remains high and our support steadfast. Let me therefore join with the many Senators who have worked long and hard on this question in urging the immediate passage of S. 2893, to insure the continuation and intensification of our national commitment against cancer.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, unless there are other speakers on this bill, I will vote for a unanimous call, and then we can vote on the bill.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HAYFIELD) is absent on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. Aiken) is absent because of illness in the family.

I further announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Packwood) and the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. USSR) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Eagleton) and the Senator from Michigan (Mr. Hart) would vote "yea."

Mr. GRiffin. I announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HAYFIELD) would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 89, nays 0, as follows:

(b) Section 403(b) of the Public Health Service Act is amended "and" before "$40,000," and by inserting before the paragraph at the end thereof a comma and the following: "$40,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and $40,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1977."

Sec. 7. Section 410 of the Public Health Service Act is amended—
(1) by striking out "fifty" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "one hundred";
(2) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (7); (3) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (8) and inserting in lieu thereof "and";
(4) by adding after paragraph (8) the following new paragraph:

"(4) to award grants for new construction as well as alterations and renovations for basic research laboratory facilities, including those related to biohazard control, as necessary for the National Cancer Program."

Sec. 8. Section 410(a) of the Public Health Service Act is amended by striking the word "contracts," after the word "grants."

Sec. 9. Section 410(c) of the Public Health Service Act is amended by striking out "and" before "$600,000," and by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "$750,000, 1975, $720,000, 1976, $720,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, $890,000, 1976, $890,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and $950,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1977."

Sec. 10. Part B of title IV of the Public Health Service Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"AVAILABILITY OF APPROPRIATIONS"

Sec. 410D. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, unless enacted after the date of enactment of this section expressly in limitation of the provisions of this section, funds appropriated for any fiscal year to carry out any program for which appropriations are authorized by the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201) or the National Institutes of Health, and the Continuation of the Community Mental Health Centers Construction Act of 1966 (42 U.S.C. 2061) shall remain available until the end of such fiscal year.

Sec. 11. Section 454 of the Public Health Service Act is amended to read as follows:

"DEPARTMENTS OF INSTITUTES"

Sec. 454. (a) The Director of the National Institutes of Health shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Appointees shall be eligible for reappointment.

(b) The Director of the National Cancer Institute shall be appointed by the President. The Director of the National Cancer Institute shall be eligible for reappointment.

"TITLE II—MEDICAL RESEARCH"

Sec. 201. Title IV of the Public Health Service Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"MARCH 26, 1974, when he resum...
At least two of the members of the Panel shall be physicians. The two members shall be appointed for three-year terms, except that in the case of any member appointed after the date on which this section becomes operative, the second shall be appointed for a term of one year and the first shall be appointed for a term of two years, as designated by the President at the time of appointment, and (ii) any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of such term.

(b) Appointed members shall each be entitled to receive the daily rate of basic pay in effect for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule for each day during which they are engaged in the actual performance of duties and shall be entitled to travel expenses (including a per diem allowance under section 5703(b) of title 5, United States Code).

(c) The Panel shall meet at the call of the President not less than once every three years a year. A transcript of the proceedings of each meeting of the Panel, in such a transcript to the public.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, I, the Senate the unfinished business S. 3044, and which the clerk will read by title.

The legislative clerk read the bill by title.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further consideration of the public financing bill, S. 3044, James H. Duffy, of the staff of the Committee on Rules and Administration, and Effie Dornan, assistant to the Senate of the Committee on Rules and Administration (Mr. WICKER), be permitted the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WICKER).

Mr. WICKER. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate, I wish to announce, on behalf of the joint leadership, that during the course of business today, we are starting on the campaign financing bill; I anticipate that there will be a number of speeches. I am sure there will be an amendment laid before the Senate by the distinguished Senator from Alabama. It is my intention at this time to see if it would be possible to have a rollcall vote on this amendment today at the hour of 3:30 tomorrow. However, I have to touch some bases, and later today I will make an announcement.

I thank the Senator from Connecticut for yielding to me.

Mr. WICKER. Mr. President, the current debate over the Government financing of Federal elections has come to resemble a replay of "Beauty and the Beast."

On the one hand we have the supporters of S. 3044 who view Government financing as a sparkling alternative which promises to clean up electoral abuses with a speed and thoroughness previously attributed only to the most expensive solutions.

On the other hand, we have the stance of some of Government financing, who view the cocktail "beast," an intolerable ridding on the Public Treasury, and a prescription for the end of the two-party system.

Both these views are simplistic, exaggerated, and unrealistic. I do not think there is a Member in this Chamber who does not realize the necessity—indeed, the urgency—for campaign reform, not in an cosmetic sense, but reform that will get to the practical abuses within our election system. Because I disagree with advocates of public financing does not mean we are not striving for a similar goal: A political system that is clean, that can involve anybody, any man, any woman, in this country, regardless of his or her means. These are the matters of overriding importance on which we all agree.

The truth about Government financing of elections is that it would have some advantages. Nevertheless it would have many more inevitable problems. Government financing would be a most un.popular campaign reform, not in an cosmetic sense, but reform that will get to the practical abuses within our election system. Because I disagree with advocates of public financing does not mean we are not striving for a similar goal: A political system that is clean, that can involve anybody, any man, any woman, in this country, regardless of his or her means. These are the matters of overriding importance on which we all agree.

The truth about Government financing of elections is that it would have some advantages. Nevertheless it would have many more inevitable problems. Government financing would be a most unpopular campaign reform, not in an cosmetic sense, but reform that will get to the practical abuses within our election system. Because I disagree with advocates of public financing does not mean we are not striving for a similar goal: A political system that is clean, that can involve anybody, any man, any woman, in this country, regardless of his or her means. These are the matters of overriding importance on which we all agree.

So the question about the Government financing of elections is not, "Is it plague or panacea?" For we know it is neither, but rather, "Do the advantages outweigh the disadvantages?" And more important, "Are the alternatives insufficient to do the same job?"

My answer to both questions must be "No."

Federal financing only acknowledges the size of the problem; it does not reform it. There are several ways to effectively reform campaign spending without going to Government financing. One is to reduce the length of campaigns. Another is to require full disclosure before the election, rather than after. Another is to limit campaign financing to one committee per candidate, to end the juggling and rigging of contributions. And yet another is to eliminate the use of cash in campaigns.

The substitute bill I am introducing today includes not just one or two of these ideas, but all of them. My amendment would provide for:

- Election campaigns beginning no earlier than the first Tuesday in September, and for periods for expenditures before that period of time.

Let us take a closer look at this proposal. The Federal election process would commence with each of the candidates filing a statement of candidacy on the first Tuesday in September.

The next step in the campaign would be a single primary on the first Tuesday in October, and then the election itself on the first Tuesday in November. So we are talking about a period of 44 days, a period before which there can be no expenditures or contributions. In other words, the candidates are using "time" to cut down the cost of campaigns.

My own State of Connecticut is typical of what is now going on in the United States. In the last election there were about 14,000 registered Democrats, about 14,000 registered Republicans, and about 45,000 registered independents. We have seen, from the most recent Gallup polls, the decline of both parties and the growth of independents. On the one hand, we have a two-party system that has served us well. On the other hand, we have people who are not willing to commit themselves to one of the other who wants to judge the candidates, without expressing partisan labels.

We should be able to reconcile those two. One way is a selection process open to all the people. In the case of the President of the United States, it means a national primary on the first Tuesday in October, to let the people speak as to whom they want.

So the calendar, I repeat, sets a filing deadline, by the first Tuesday in September, in order for a candidate to be eligibility for election. Then there would be a single primary the first Tuesday in October. Then the regular election on the first Tuesday in November.

It is clear that this will result in a saving of money and a reduction of costs. And if the election, reporting every campaign expenditure and collection. When people went to the polls they would know what role money played for the particular candidate for whom they voted. It would provide for no collections or expenditures after the report is submitted, except expenses "budgeted for" and duly reported.

Today a good portion of the campaign funds come in after the election; in other words, not as a tribute to the individual, but to the power that resides in the office. That cannot be justified. A candidate should have begun to raise money before the regular campaign began. Campaign deficits would be a violation of law, to be paid off only under the supervision of the Comptroller General.

That may sound harsh, but, again, it will only make campaigns more honest, both for candidates and constituents.

No cash contributions of more than $50.
No more than $10,600 of an individual candidate's personal funds.
No more than one campaign committee.

The real problem in campaign reform is not that campaigns cost money, but that campaign costs big money. President Eisenhower's campaign cost $8 million, while President Nixon's campaign cost, as far as I know, was $82 million. No one complained when a campaign cost $8 million. That is not a difficult sum for a political party to raise over 4 years.

Last year alone, a difficult year for the Republican fundraisers by any yardstick, the Republican National Committee raised $5.5 million, of which 85 percent was from contributions of $100 or less.

Both parties can raise that kind of money from small contributions. The real problem is the length of long campaigns with heavy media expenditures.

Consequently, the best way to cut down on the influence of big money in a campaign is not to dump the bills in the Government's lap, but to shorten the campaign itself. And that is precisely the cornerstone of this campaign reform legislation.

My legislation could mean giving up one of our most cherished rituals, the national political conventions. These circuses have become the political dinosaurof the modern age, and it is time we threw the books out of the House of Representatives and the smoke-filled room. Instead, every candidate for Federal office will have to appeal directly to the voters in order to get their party's nomination. This is the kind of reform which will be meaningful and effective without turning to a program of Government financing.

To those who are not convinced about the dangers of a Government-run system of campaign financing, I would like to refer to a passage from S. 3044 which reads:

If the Secretary of the Treasury determines that monies in the fund are not, or may not be, the full amount due to all candidates eligible to receive payments, he shall reduce the amount to which each candidate is entitled . . .

Now if that does not scare other Senators, it certainly does me. I think that the lessons of Watergate are not only that Government can commit illegal acts to suppress dissent but that Government has enormous legal powers to suppress dissent and to play politics with the system.

So it is not the fact that money is involved. It is the amount of money. All we have done is shift the cost to the incumbent advantage. Maybe it should be that every incumbent automatically becomes a candidate as of the first of the year in which the election is held. That would mean cutting down his expenses.

There are many steps that can be taken if we really try to balance out the advantage an incumbent has over a challenger. But we will never get rid of the problem in this country. We can legislate against the subject, but the real problem will still confront us.

We can drive out the bad money without resorting to tax money. We can cut down the length of the campaign. We can replace political conventions with direct primaries. We can require full disclosure before, rather than after, the election.

The result of these reforms will be responsible and reasonable elections, conducted in full view of the people.

I honestly believe that in these proposals, we have made steps to reform the system in two important ways: First, by reducing the role of money in campaigns, and, second, by involving the American people in the process.

That is the greatest guarantee against corruption. Our system is 50 percent selection and 50 percent election. It is the selection process which is now being denied to a majority of Americans. If we receive these two issues, we will have tuned our political machinery to the times.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be printed in the Record at this point.

This being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

On page 2, line 1, strike all through page 88, line 17, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

TIME PERIOD FOR FEDERAL ELECTIONS

"Sec. 2. The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE V—TIME PERIOD FOR FEDERAL ELECTIONS"

"FILING DATE"

"Sec. 501. (a) No later than the first Tuesday of September preceding a regularly scheduled election, or 60 days preceding a special election, each candidate must file a registration statement with the State Secretary of State or the equivalent State official, in order to be eligible to appear in the primary or election ballot in such state or district. The registration statement shall include—"

1. The identification of the candidate, and any individual, political committees, or person authorized to make contributions or make expenditures on behalf of the candidate in connection with the campaign;
2. A statement identifying the campaign depositories or other uses to which the campaign contributions are to be used in connection with the campaign;
3. An affidavit stating that no contributions or expenditures have or will be undertaken in connection with the campaign prior to the filing deadline;
4. A statement identifying the party whose nomination the candidate will seek, or a statement that the candidate will seek to appear on the primary and election ballot as a candidate independent of any party affiliation.

"PRIMARY ELECTION"

"Sec. 502. (a) All candidates for Federal elective office shall be nominated by means of a primary election to be held on the first Tuesday of October preceding the election, or 90 days preceding. There shall be only one primary ballot or list of possible nominees for each party and one primary ballot or list of Libertarian, or other minor party candidates, and no candidate may appear on more than one such ballot or list. Each voter shall be entitled to vote for candidates from only one ballot or list.

"Qualification of voters, determination of eligible parties, as well as rules and procedures for conducting the primary election shall be the responsibility of the State. Presidential and alternates shall be nominated by State political parties.

"PRIMARY ELECTION RESULTS"

"Sec. 505. The person receiving the greatest number of votes at the primary as a candidate of the party for an office shall be the candidate of the party at the following election: Provided, That any candidate who is the sole candidate for that office or the only candidate running on the same ballot or list of names is nominated at the primary shall be so nominated and declared to be duly and legally elected to the office for which such person is a candidate. Any person nominated as a candidate receiving at least 10 percent of the total votes cast for the office for which he is a candidate at the primary, or a vote equal to the lowest vote received by any candidate of any nomination who was nominated in the primary shall also be a candidate at the following election."

LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES
Sec. 3. Section 608 of Title 18, United States Code, is amended to read:

"(a) No person who is or becomes a candidate, or political committee for such candidate, for nomination or election to Federal elective office may accept or expend for such campaign more than $1,000 from any single source of funds. Such contributions and expenditures shall constitute a violation of this section, and such contribution or expenditure shall be made at the discretion of the person to whom such contribution or expenditure is made."

"(3) the full name and mailing address of each person to whom a debt or obligation is owed;
"(4) the total sum of all contributions received;
"(5) the total sum of all debts and obligations."
unlikely to be affected one way or the other by their contributions. Thus, as we shall see in a moment, the spending on both sides in these districts will rise significantly above the spending levels that prevailed in hotly contested races.

I must conclude, therefore, that in such districts the $90,000 per candidate allowed under S. 3044 will not likely to the level of spending without having any real impact on the final outcome.

The races in which the Federal subsidy and the limits associated with it will likely to take place in the 60-odd districts that might be considered marginal.

According to the same Common Cause study, only 68 House races were decided by less than 5 percent of the vote in 1972. These districts could be considered marginal by most standards and the victim in each of them had to fend off an extremely tough challenger.

Winners alike spent more money in these races than was spent in the districts I have described as "safe." The cost to winners and losers alike in these districts averaged somewhat more than $30,000 each. As both the winners and losers spent about the same amount in these races, it suggests that the raising of funds needed for such campaigns is not too different. I will also admit that the average spent by candidates in 1972 did not have much of an effect in the average close race.

The real impact of the limits imposed by this legislation will occur in those races in which an incumbent finds himself in trouble and stands a chance of being defeated. Only 10 House incumbents were defeated in 1972 and in all but those two cases the challenger had to spend significantly more than his opponent to overcome the advantages of incumbency.

The average spent by candidates who unseated incumbents in 1972 was $125,000 and the average of $90,000 to which those incumbents spent. Thus, it can be argued on the basis of these figures that a challenger must be able to outspend an incumbent by a significant margin in order to beat him and that he will have to spend in excess of $100,000 to stand a realistic chance.

But what effect will the $90,000 limit imposed by S. 3044 have in these races? It is not at all unrealistic to assume that it will prevent challengers in marginal districts from overcoming the advantages inherent in incumbency. It is not at all unreasonable, in other words, to assume that those limits, had they been in effect in 1972, might have saved most, if not all, of those 10 incumbents.

If we are to enact legislation of this kind, we must either eliminate unrealistically low limits such as those incorporated in S. 3044 or eliminate the advantages of incumbency.

To help eliminate at least minimize the advantages of incumbency I have decided to cosponsor legislation being introduced by the Senator from Delaware (Mr. Rorra) that would allow candidates to spend free money to all voters during the course of their campaign and at the same time deny incumbents use of the franking privilege for additional mass mailings after Labor Day in an election year.

But I would go even further. At an appropriate time, I will offer an amendment to S. 3044 that will allow nonincumbents to operate under a spending limit of 30 percent higher than that applicable to incumbents.

I firmly believe that such an amendment is essential if we are to avoid the charge that we are "stacking the deck" in favor of our own candidacies as incumbents, as in fact we would be if we do not seek to affect our inherent advantages.

Mr. President, I send my proposed amendment to the desk and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in this point in the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and will lie on the table, and, without objection, will be printed in the Record in accordance with the Senator's request.

Mr. Buckley's amendment (No. 1081) is as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 1081

On page 5 of the bill insert the following after "(900):", and renumber the succeeding paragraphs accordingly: "(a) (1) The expenditure limitations under this section shall be applicable to incumbent candidates only (unless otherwise specified). Nonincumbent candidates shall be subject to an expenditure limitation equal to 130 percent of the limitation applicable to an incumbent for each of the offices specified under this section.

2. For purposes of this section, an incumbent is defined as follows who (A) is presently holding the office for which he is a candidate; or (B) is currently holding or has held within five years an elected office, the voting constituency of which is the same as, or includes the voting constituency of the office for which the individual is a candidate.

Mr. Baker. Mr. President, for the third time in less than 9 months, we find ourselves debating fundamental, and some say radical, reform of our electoral process. In the wake of Watergate and the events of the past year, it is not surprising that considerable support has developed within the Congress for new concepts such as public financing for Federal office. In fact, having listened to months of testimony about abuse and circumvention of existing statutes, I can sympathize with the temptation to abandon that system altogether in favor of some other approach. Public financing is definitely new, and it appears pure and absolute: but is it right?

Just over a year ago, the Senate voted unanimously to pass the Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities. That committee was charged with the responsibility of investigating any and all potential wrongdoing associated with the presidential election of the United States. It was also mandated to report its findings and recommendations to the Senate no later than February 28, 1974. That date has passed, but the Select Committee refuses to submit its report. The reason, as must know, is because of the possibility that our findings might prejudice the trials of individuals allegedly involved in the crimes collectively known as Watergate.

Last summer, I implored my colleagues to withhold final consideration of any significant campaign reform until the duly mandated select committee had had an opportunity to fulfill the obligations required of it in Senate Resolution 60. In view of the fact that which may continue for several months, I no longer feel it is reasonable to expect or request this of the Senate. Instead, I am prepared to express my personal view on what reforms in our electoral process seem necessary.

Let me begin by stating my adamant opposition to the public financing of that the Government not, I think there is something politically incestuous about the Government financing and. I believe, inevitably then regulating, the day-to-day procedures by which the Government is selected. Obviously, it is neither reasonable nor desirable to expect a laissez-faire approach to the conduct of political campaigns. The Government has been involved in one way or another in electoral matters in the election we undertook our present form of government; and I have no doubt that the Government will increase its involvement in the future. However, if we continue to delegate to the bureaucrats, as is being done now, the power to manipulate political campaigns in a manner which would make Watergate pale in comparison.

I think it is extraordinarily important that the Government not control the machinery by which the public expresses the range of its desires, demands, and dissent. And finally, I genuinely believe that statutory prohibitions against political contributions, whether to primaries, general election campaigns, or both, may abridge the individual's first amendment right of freedom of political expression. It is one thing to impose a limit on all the total individual contribution, for it can be argued that you are, in effect, equalizing everyone's opportunity for expression. However, when that opportunity is completely eliminated, then I believe that the Congress has exceeded its responsibility to protect the integrity of the electoral process. In rural jargon, we are burning down the barn to get rid of the rats; and in so doing, we are also eliminating an important form of public participation in our political process—participation which is already at an all-time low.

I realize that what I have just published last September showed that 65 percent of the people interviewed thought public financing was a "good idea." But I also realize that a recent poll showed a trend in which the executive branch's confidence in their trash collectors than they did in the ability of Congress to effectively deal with the problems confronting this country. So, at times when people are becoming increasingly skeptical about the use of their tax dollars, we are considering bankrupting political candidates to the tune of several hundred million dollars each, I admit that in a Federal budget of over $300 billion, $300 million for political candidates is not that much. However, at the first indication that an individual who is supposedly running for public office is using tax dollars for anything other than that campaign, that is, assuaging his or her ego or running a business, I submit that a great many Americans will justifiably lower their estimation of the Congress even further.

But, having expressed my views on the evils of campaign contributions, as I have then, it is fair to ask, "What do you plan to offer as an alternative, or how do you intend to reform our ailing electoral process?" The proposal which I put forward is a system of private financing of campaigns for Federal office, but that we amend that system so as to broaden the base of participation and prevent the abuse of public funds. As I said, we can do this, in my judgment, by adhering to the $3,000 limitation on individual contributions included in S. 372 and S. 3044 and applying it separately to each primary, runoff, special, or general election campaign as provided for in both bills. Although many will contend that this would make it virtually impossible to raise enough money to run an effective campaign, especially for the relatively unknown challenger, we should look briefly at the facts.

Let us assume hypothetically that an expenditure limitation of 15 cents times the number of people most capable of giving large amounts—the so-called fat-cats. But is that the proper approach? Do not believe so, for I am sure we could reap far better results by developing an effective method of broad, low-level solicitation. Our call to the top commercial advertisers, for example, amounted to one-half an hour. Therefore, I submit that there are far more than 8,000 people out who would be willing to contribute $3,000 to a candidate. And it would not be that difficult to find them. I suspect that many believe it is difficult because we have normally aimed our fund-raising efforts at the people most capable of giving large amounts—the so-called fat-cats. But is that the proper approach? Do not believe so, for I am sure we could reap far better results by developing an effective method of broad, low-level solicitation. We could call to the top commercial advertisers, for example, and ask them to contribute $3,000 each in order to meet the expenditure limitation of 15 cents times the number of people most capable of giving large amounts—the so-called fat-cats. But is that the proper approach? Do not believe so, for I am sure we could reap far better results by developing an effective method of broad, low-level solicitation.

The present tax credit of 50 percent of all political contributions made during a calendar year, up to $12,50 for an individual return and $100 for a joint return, should be increased to $50 for an individual return and $100 for a joint return, and that the figure of 50 percent be increased to 50 percent. That means that an individual who makes a large contribution can contribute to a political campaign, and it is not cost of broadcast advertising, that permits private financing. This is not meant to imply that I oppose or in any way wish to diminish the persuasive capacity of lobbyists, whether they represent the congressions, unions, or public interest groups.

The American people must be assured that any money going to a candidate is not obligated for bureaucratic manipulation or abuse. Obviously, the key to the success of this new tax credit proposal is education. The American people must be assured that they are not being charged a tax which is not automatic for political contributions exists, as well as how that incentive works when they file their individual or joint tax returns. And, if in the near future, it is necessary that such a credit is no longer necessary to prompt adequate private financing, then we should consider reducing that credit back to the 50-per-cent level. However, for now, I would propose this tax credit be given the most serious consideration as a viable, and in my judgment preferable, alternative to public financing.

I would also propose that the present dollar checkoff system be abolished entirely. Whereas an effective tax credit system would remove the U.S. Treasury from direct involvement in financing political campaigns, and would permit individual contributors to designate the recipient of their money, the dollar checkoff system does just the opposite. In fact, S. 3044, unless an individual comes directly to the campaign and pays the recipient of their money, it is administratively paid over to the Federal election campaign fund for use in campaigns in accordance with the provisions of the bill. The American taxpayer is not even allowed to specify the political party that should receive the contribution, much less the specific candidate; and it is for this reason that I shall propose that this system be abandoned altogether.

I shall also propose that only individuals be permitted to make contributions to political campaigns. Only individuals can vote, and only individuals can decide who is on the ballot in the first place; so why should not only individuals be allowed to make political contributions? I do not think a corporation or a union should be allowed to contribute. And it is important to remember that they can contribute through AMPAC, BIFAC, COPE, and a half dozen other devices. Moreover, I do not think associations, committees, caucuses, or any other organization which aggregates funds for the purpose of helping a candidate should be allowed to contribute. The credit is just too great; and it is only if these groups are not considered individuals that funds in the name of a cause or interest would be permitted to be made. After a full year of service on the Senate Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities, I am convinced that this would do more to eliminate the distortive effects of special-interest groups than any other proposal I have seen which permits private financing. This is not proposes that we do so at the prevailing rates and not at the lowest unit cost.

In this regard, I would propose that a minimum amount of broadcast time be provided to each legally qualified candidate for Federal office. Any candidate who wishes to purchase beyond the guaranteed amount would do so at the prevailing rate. In this way, the challenger would be afforded an opportunity to gain a moderate amount of public exposure without having to allocate an insurmountable share of his resources just to approach the recognition factor of the incumbent.

Moreover, while guaranteeing a moderate amount of TV and radio time to qualified candidates, one should not discourage the purchase of additional time by requiring the respective candidates to pay the prevailing advertising rates. In order for a candidate to qualify for such time, he would be done plagiarize the formula used in S. 3044 for major and minor party candidates.

That formula requires that House, Senate, and Presidential candidates reach specific thresholds of public funds are made available on a dollar-for-dollar basis. I would require that the respective threshold be met before any advertising time was made available; and even then, I would add an additional threshold be met later in order to insure the true intentions of the particular candidate. However, the thrust of such an amendment would be to help overcome many of the obstacles, primarily that of recognition, confronting the candidate who challenges an incumbent. In general, I oppose any form of public finance; and I realize that any solution many of the problems which I alluded to earlier. But, I am also aware of the inherent disadvantages facing a challenger in relation to an incumbent, and if anything, I would do in the realm of public financing to reduce those disadvantages, then I would prefer to see it done in the manner I have just described—at the prevailing rates and not at lowest unit cost.

I shall also propose that overall expenditure limitations be eliminated if a system of private financing is retained with individual contributions strictly limited and fully disclosed. The reason, very simply, is that as long as the size and source of contributions are adequately controlled, particularly at the $5,000 level, there would be no reason to limit expenditures of candidates running in races which are not too close. However, in most cases, it seems that limits favor the incumbent, are arbitrary, and do not accurately reflect the varying costs of campaigning from year to year or from State to State. Thus, if we retain significant private financing, with the aforementioned conditions, then I shall propose that we eliminate the overall expenditure limitations.

I referred earlier to my concern that public participation in our electoral process appears to be at an all-time low. I should like to elaborate on that concern.

It stems from the fact that in 1972, only 55.6 percent of the eligible voters in this country actually turned out to cast their ballots for President and Vice President of the United States. Obviously, different Presidential primary systems create varying degrees of interest and enthusiasm among the voters; and races that are not even close, seldom attract a large turnout. However, a turnout of 55.6 percent, particularly when the Federal Government is increasingly involved in our daily lives, is, in my mind, tragic. It is the clearest indication of all that a substantial number of Americans have grown disenchanted with the political process and, in one of the primary reasons why broad reform of that process seems warranted.

Such reform, in my judgment, should include only campaign finance and so-called dirty tricks, but also the selection process itself. I believe we should examine voter registration requirements, the present primary system, national party conventions, the official length of political campaigns, election-day procedures, and even, perhaps, the electoral college—not necessarily in conjunction with one another, but rather as part of the overall debate on campaign reform.

As part of that debate, I would urge that serious consideration be given automatic registration of voters in Federal elections. The history of the United States has been a history of the extension of the voting franchise. Yet, even today, a significant number of our citizens are effectively prevented from participating in the complex and often archaic registration and residency requirements. The postcard voter registration bill passed by the Senate last year was an effort to deal with this problem, but I opposed it because of my concern for the potential for mail fraud and abuse of such a system.

Several Western nations, however, have already successfully implemented a form of automatic registration. In the Scandinavian countries, for example, and in Switzerland, every eligible citizen is registered ex officio in a voting registry. Lists of voters are compiled by the election authorities in advance of the election date. Any citizen whose name has not been included in the list then has until approximately a week before the election to correct the situation.

In the United States, however, citizens still must contend with what amounts to a perpetual registration process. I fully realize that some difficulties will arise in translating automatic registration to the realities of the American experience and attempting to reconcile it with State registration procedures. Perhaps social security numbers could be utilized to standardize registration, since more than 95 percent of eligible voters are already registered with social security. In any event, the concept deserves consideration, in my view; and workable, it could provide a valuable incentive to increase citizen participation.

I would also urge major reform of our present spasmatic system of Presidential primaries. There are essentially three alternatives in this regard: a refinement of the present system requiring the 25 States who hold Presidential primaries to do so on four or five specific dates at 2- or 3-week intervals; a single national primary for each party with a subsequent runoff unless one candidate polling more than 40 percent; and a system of regional primaries also held at specific intervals, but encompassing all of the country.

Of these three proposals, I am most inclined to support the one for a system of regional primaries in which every eligible voter who desires to participate in the selection of a party nominee can be sure that he or she will have a voice in the nominating process which includes his State. This would permit the millions of Americans who support candidates who never get the party nomination to express that support in the primaries to be conducted in their State and district and hold the four primaries at 3-week intervals beginning in early June and ending in early August.

The respective primary candidates would compete for State delegates who would be won according to the proportion of votes received in each State, rather than on a winner-take-all basis. Although aware of the cost involved in running in regional primaries, the basic idea is to vastly expand the public participation in the nominating process and to significantly reduce the overall length of Presidential campaigns.

As it is now, the first Presidential primary normally takes place in early March with the general election 8 months later, in November. But as I see it, there is a definite reason why that process must take that long. It exhausts the candidates, costs exorbitant sums of money, and eventually bores a great many people. The British do it all in less than 3 months, but how do they do it in less than 8 months? In this regard, I plan to offer an amendment to require that all primaries for Federal office be held no earlier than the first of June, and no later than the 15th of August. This would significantly shorten the official length of campaigns for Federal office and permit the Congress to work at relatively full strength for the full 4 months dividing the campaign into roughly equal population and would hold the four primaries at 3-week intervals beginning in early June and ending in early August.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 12 O'CLOCK TOMORROW

MRS. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until 12 o'clock tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER (Mr. Tower). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT FROM WEDNESDAY TO 11 A.M. ON THURSDAY

MRS. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, when the Senate completes its business tomorrow, it stand in adjournment until 11 a.m. on Thursday.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two of my staff members, Andrew Loezi and Fredy Williamsen, be allowed to the privilege of the floor during the consideration of S. 3044.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent of amendments Nos. 1013 and 1014 be considered as having met the reading requirements of rule XXII under the standing rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the bill before us today—the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974—is without question one of the most significant pieces of legislation the Senate has considered in the last 2 years. From Theodore Roosevelt to Henry Cabot Lodge to John F. Kennedy, the effort to establish public financing of Federal elections has continued throughout much of this century. Under the leadership of Senators Lugar and Pastore, the Congress has enacted public financing for Presidential general elections beginning in 1976. But now, through the considerable efforts of Chairman Howard Cannon and the Rules Committee, we have the opportunity to provide public financing for congressional campaigns as well.

This legislation (S. 3044) will provide for matching payments to primary candidates, for optional full funding for candidates in the general election, for strict contribution and expenditure limitations, for fair treatment of minority party and independent candidates. The bill incorporates the many sound provisions of S. 372, the campaign reform bill passed by the Senate last summer. These include the establishment of an independent Federal Election Commission, strengthened reporting requirements, financial disclosure for Federal officials and candidates, tough penalties for violators, and repeal of the equal time provision of the Communications Act.

The legislation is so sound that it is obvious, and I certainly will support it. My only concern is that it does not go far enough, and I do plan to offer amendments to the bill.

No one contends that passage of this legislation—with or without strengthening amendments—will somehow automatically bring an end to all of the ills that have come to light in the past 2 years. But surely this bill will help change a political process that in many ways has become the private preserve of the wealthy and special interests, and it will help us return to a Government responsive to all of the people.

Mr. President, at a time when public confidence both in the Congress and the Chief Executive are at their lowest, at a time when a substantial majority of the American people favor public financing of elections, the failure to enact this legislation would be wholly irresponsible.

In one sense, President Nixon was right when he said that "1 year of Watergate is enough." We must never again subject this country to the kind of conduct that characterized election year 1972. It is time to bring a halt to the tyranny of the private dollar in the public business, and the passage of S. 3044 will be a very significant step in that direction.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two members of my staff, Ms. Francis Sheehan-Brady, and Mr. Angus King, be given the privilege of the floor during debate on S. 3044.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I call up my amendment which is at the desk and ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. The amendment will be printed.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 75, line 19, redesignate subsection (a) as subsection (a) (1).

On page 75, line 10, strike the word "person" and substitute the word "individual".

On page 76, line 22, strike the word "person" and substitute the word "individual".

On page 76, following line 23, add the following new subsection:

"(2) a person (other than an individual) may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, a candidate for nomination for election to office, which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that person for that campaign, exceeds $5,000."

On page 75, line 25, strike the word "person" and substitute the word "individual".

On page 76, line 2, strike the word "person" and substitute the word "individual".

On page 76, line 2, strike the period and add the following:

"or from any person (other than an individual) which, when added to the sum of all other contributions received from that person for that campaign, exceeds $5,000."

All the ills of democracy can be cured by more democracy.

I share that view and hope that we will apply that principle as we consider the pending legislation.

ORDER FOR TIME TO VOTE ON AMENDMENT NO. 1064

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) will call up an amendment today. With his approval and that of the manager of the bill, I would like to call up the distinguished Republican leader, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the Allen amendment (No. 1064) occur precisely at the hour of 3:30 p.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT ON TREATY AND MINIMUM WAGE CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, some time tomorrow the Senate will take up Executive U. 93d Congress, first session, a Treaty on Extradition with Denmark, which has been favorably reported unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday at the hour of 12 o'clock, there be a vote on the extradition treaty with Denmark, followed by a vote on the conference report on the minimum wage bill be taken up.
Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, the purpose of my amendment is to correct an inequity made in S. 3044 by distinguishing between individuals and organizations with regard to contribution limitations.

As reported, the bill places a $3,000 limitation on what a person--defined as an individual or an organization--may contribute to a candidate for the House or Senate in any election. Only a candidate's own campaign organization and the national and State party committees are exempt from this provision.

Obviously, the intent of the limitation is to eliminate the specter of bought elections and to lessen the role of money in politics.

In effect, though, the limitation equates one wealthy contributor with an organization of hundreds or thousands of individuals against the modest contributors who choose to give through an organization that reflects his philosophy or views.

The role of broad-based citizen interest groups, whether conservative—such as the Americans for Constitutional Action or the American Conservative Union—liberal—such as the National Committee for an Effective Congress or the Council for a Livable World—or single-issue such as the League of Conservation Voters—is to help elect people who support the group's views or ideology. Those citizens who contribute to such organizations often do not have the time or expertise themselves to find out which candidates most nearly share their views, are most qualified, have real chance to win, and so on. By giving through such committees, they participate in the most intelligent way in the election process.

It is important to point out, too, that the limitation of the Senate bill does not greatly restrict large business interests or labor union participation. Individuals within a corporation or company may each give “voluntarily” as they do now, or may establish committees in several cities or States, as many as they wish, and each may contribute the full amount to any single candidate. Since most corporations, many trade associations and business groups already have State, local, and regional affiliates, they have an existing network to support candidates, and each of these committees may contribute the maximum to each candidate.

In contrast, large citizens' groups usually raise funds by mailings to the general public. They are known by their views, are most qualified, have real chance to win, and so on. By giving to $6,000, the same amount a husband and wife together could give to a candidate, is disturbing to me.

Mr. HATHAWAY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CANNON. That means that a husband and wife, therefore, could contribute $6,000, because each, as an individual, could contribute.

Mr. HATHAWAY. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator's amendment, then, would simply be that an organization, being defined as a person, would be in the same contribution category as a husband and wife would be, insofar as the limits were concerned.

Mr. HATHAWAY. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. CANNON. So that an organization that has many members which may be contributing small amounts could, then, instead of being limited to $3,000, the proposal would be the same, the same amount a husband and wife together could give to a candidate.

Mr. HATHAWAY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CANNON. This makes no other changes in the bill, then, is that correct?

Mr. HATHAWAY. It does not make any other changes in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GRiffin. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. HATHAWAY. I yield.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, if the Senator's amendment were to be adopted, the situation would be better than what we have today where organizations such as those having milk funds can make unlimited contributions. But I suggest that even with the Senator's amendment, it is disturbing that we would be delegating to some organization the decision as to who is to be supported to the extent of $6,000.

If we really want clean elections and clean campaigns, we would strictly insist that all contributions be made by individuals to the candidate of their choice. To me, that is the way it should be.

So I am opposed to the Senator's amendment. I believe he moves in the wrong direction. I think we should be figuring away completely from elections that are supported and financed by special interest groups. This amendment would allow special interest groups to be able to pick and choose in supporting candidates rather than individual citizens.

Am I wrong in this assessment?

Mr. HATHAWAY. The Senator is partially right, and I hope to see the day when all individuals in this country take so much interest in our political process that we can have a system in which only individuals will be allowed to make contributions.

However, in the meantime we are faced with the reality that most individuals do not have that much interest or do not take the time to find out about the qualifications of all the candidates who are running for public office. With some exceptions, the organizations to which many of these groups are affiliated are not idealistic, legitimate organizations. They are not necessarily out to get somebody or have an ax to grind. They do operate conscientiously to further the interests of their members, and they provide a good vehicle for contributions which probably would not otherwise be made to political campaigns.

Certainly, the limitation of $6,000 is not a very large one to be placed upon such organizations. I mentioned in my earlier remarks organizations such as the Committee for an Effective Congress, which has 80,000 members. A $6,000 limitation on an organization does not seem to be out of line.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I might agree with the Senator in terms of a Presidential election or a Senate election in a big State. But, when we are talking about a congressional election in which the total amount of the funds is much smaller, I would suggest that two or three of these organizations would, especially in a State with one another could have a great impact on a congressional election.

With this amendment, it seems to me that we are right back again to the special interest control of elections. I thought that is what we are trying to move away from with this legislation.

While I regret to do it, I think we should have a roll call vote on this amendment. Since the majority leader has announced that we will not have any roll call votes today, I suggest for the consideration of the manager of the bill and the sponsor of the amendment that perhaps we could agree to have a roll call vote on this amendment tomorrow, either before or after the 3:30 vote that is already scheduled.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Yes; I would be happy to agree to that.

Mr. CANNON. Would the Senator desire to withhold his amendment at this time? The agreement that is in effect permits Senator ALLEN to offer an amendment, to call it up this evening, and it will be voted on at 3:30 tomorrow. Would the Senator be willing to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. HATHAWAY. I would be happy to withdraw the amendment until the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is voted on at 3:30 tomorrow.

PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Maine is withdrawn.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION TO MORROW OF FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the transaction of routine morning business on tomorrow, the Senate resume consideration of the unfinished bill, S. 3044.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARRISON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk please report amendment No. 1064, and that it be made the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The amendment was read as follows:

Amend S. 3044, as follows:

stricken before the words "1970 ELECTORAL CAMPAIGNS" in its entirety.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the title which the amendment would strike is title I of S. 3044, which is the first 24 pages and the first 4 lines on page 25 of the bill.

The amendment would strike from the bill all those portions thereof having to do with public financing of Federal elections. There is much good in the bill and if we can prune this public financing provision from the bill then there would be no objection to rapid consideration of the features of the bill and an early vote on the bill.

Mr. President, S. 3044 is an original bill coming from the Committee on Rules and Administration, coming as the result of and in compliance with an agreement reached on the floor of the Senate back in December of last year when the public finance rider to the debt limit authorization bill was under discussion. The distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. Cranston) and other members of the committee agreed that if that rider were dropped or if further insistence on its acceptance not be made that the Rules Committee would report a bill in some fashion to provide a vehicle for the Senate acting on the public financing of Federal elections idea.

The bill was reported to the floor of the Senate, considered in committee, passed by a vote of some 8 to 1, although some Members who voted for the bill stated that they were doing so only because commitments were made that a bill would proceed from the Rules Committee to the floor of the Senate.

The Senator from Alabama voted against the reporting of the bill. He made no commitment on the floor of the Senate agreeing to a bill to be reported from the Rules Committee to the Senate.

Mr. President, this bill goes one step further than does the Kennedy-Scott-Mansfield-Mondale-Cranston rider. The rider did not provide for the financing in whole or in part of House and Senate primaries. The Senate bill goes one step further than does the Kennedy bill.

Mr. President, why public financing? Why should we have public financing of Federal elections? Why no; leave it in the private sector? Well, they are the laws of Watergate indicate that the only answer to the abuses pointed out by Watergate is to turn the bill for campaign expenses over to the taxpayer, pay for Federal elections out of the public Treasury, rather than through contributions from individual citizens.

Mr. President, that magic is left to the public money. Why should I that be less susceptible to abuses than private contributions? I submit that stricter regulation of Federal elections has not yet been tried; it has not yet been given a fair trial. The 1971 Federal Elections Campaign Act is deficient in this regard:

Not only did it have a fatal flaw in it providing that contributions made up to April 7 of 1972 did not have to be reported, but also it makes no limitation on any campaign expenditures except for media advertising. That is the only thing that the limit is placed upon; no overall limit whatsoever on other types of advertising.

Newspaper advertising, radio, television, magazines, billboards—are those limited. I believe to 10 cents per person of voting age. The sky is the limit, though, on expenditures in all other fields. I submit that the other fields of campaign expenditures would be just as large or possibly much larger than in the field of media advertising. What about travel expenses: what about cars; what about brochures; what about campaign office staff, mass mailing, stationery, and postage? The types of advertising have no limit under the present law, under the 1971 law.

But, Mr. President, the Senate was mindful of that deficiency and on July 30 of last year passed a bill that would place an overall limitation on campaign expenditures of all types, and whereas the present law makes no effective limitation on the amount that can be contributed by one contributor, as we witnessed, contributions in the hundreds of thousands of dollars were made in the 1973 campaign; S. 372 significantly leaves the campaign expense field in the private sector, and would place a limit of $3,000 per person per election. S. 3044 carries that same $3,000 limitation.

So if S. 372 places a limit on all types of expenditures, not just the media, it puts an effective limit on that, if it limits campaign contributions to $3,000—and it does—and it sets up an independent election commission—and it does—and if it limits cash campaign contributions to $500—and it does—it has gone a long way toward effective campaign reform.

There are many atrocities committed in the name of campaign reform, and I submit that public financing is one such atrocity. Every change does not necessarily mean it is a reform, and paying the bill out of the public Treasury is not reform—its just shifting the burden to the taxpayer.

Mr. President, the Senate set up the Watergate Committee somewhat over a year ago, and one of its responsibilities was to make recommendations on the conclusion of its investigation, about improving the election process in Presidential races.

Well, the Watergate Committee is just about to wind up its work, I assume its report will be forthcoming shortly.

What does the Watergate resolution provide? Section 4, page 13, reads:

The select committee shall have authority to recommend the enactment of any new congressional legislation which its investigations are necessary to safeguard the electoral process by which the President of the United States is chosen.

Mr. President, based on the votes taken in November and December, and the introduction by an amendment to this bill, my understanding is that 5 out of the 7 members of the Watergate Committee oppose public financing.

And the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, just a few minutes ago, was speaking on the subject. I am confident; other members of that committee will be on the Senate floor in the coming days, if not, I will be discussing this very same issue and speaking against public financing.

What is the big hurry? We have already passed a bill, S. 372, that does not provide for any public financing—not a dime. Well, that bill passed here on July 30 by a vote of 82 to 8, Mr. President, and the Kennedy-Scott-Mansfield-Cranston-Mondale-Pell rider was de-

S 4463

I have collected so many thousands of dollars in my race for the Presidency, and I want the Government to match that?

I asked if that were possible under the bill.

The Senator from Rhode Island replied,

Oh, yes; that is possible under the bill.

Then I asked,

Looking prospectively, now—looking at future races—suppose a man says, “I do not believe I am ready to run for President in 1976. I want to wait and run in 1980, or perhaps I want to run in 1984.”

I asked if it were possible for a candidate to seek the nomination in 1980 and participate in the Federal subsidy?

The Senator from Rhode Island replied,

Oh, yes, that is all right.

I asked,

Is it possible, then, to have one class of candidates seeking the 1976 nomination, another class seeking the 1980 nomination, another group seeking the 1984 nomination, and then another group seeking the 1988 nomination?

The Senator from Rhode Island replied,

Oh, yes. That is permissible.

Mr. President, I do not believe that the Senate wants to approve a measure of that sort.

I have thought that the Washington Post would be in favor of almost any sort of public financing or that was said to be for election reform. But I have found, to my surprise, that in this morning’s Washington Post, the lead editorial said this about S. 3444. The editorial did not call the bill by name.

Thus the Senate last summer sent the House a very solid bill to curb private giving and spending and to strengthen the enforcement of the election laws. And today the Senate begins debate on a very ambitious bill to extend public financing to all federal primary and general-election campaigns.

I have always felt that the Post had a strong interest in public financing. That bill was passed by the Senate and is in the House today. We do not know that it is not going to be acted on. Either that bill or a similar bill will be acted upon.

Let me read further from the Washington Post editorial:

The problem with the latest Senate bill—

That is, S. 3444, the bill before the Senate—is that it tries to do too much, too soon, and goes beyond what is either feasible or workable.

Mr. President, this is the Washington Post making sound suggestions, such as I have just read.

For one thing, the bill provides for full public financing of congressional general-election campaigns, and that is clearly ineligible in the House this year, since the House leadership even chokes on the more moderate matching-grant approach embodied in the Anderson-Udall bill. The more serous defect in the Senate bill involves the inclusion of primaries.

That is something the Senate committee, in its wisdom, added to the Kennedy-Scott-Mansfield-Mondale-Cranston-Pell rider approach. I continue to read:

No aspect of the federal elections process is more ■ motley and capricious than the present system of presidential primaries.

That is a field which the committee bill is seeking to clarify.

Injecting even partial public funding into this process, without rationalizing it in any other way, makes little sense.

As for Congressional primaries, they are so varied in size, cost and significance among the States that any major support seems justifiable without much more careful thought.

I commend a reading of this editorial in the Washington Post to Senators, particularly Senators who advocate the public financing aspect of the bill.

What would be the Senate bill seeks to do is similar to a rider that failed of adoption last year. It is a worse bill in some respects, as I have pointed out, in that it seems to include the primary campaigns of Members of the House and the Senate. It goes even further than the Kennedy-Scott rider of last year. The pending amendment, the amendment in which agreement has been made to vote tomorrow afternoon, is to strike out title I, but to leave the remaining title, “Title II—Changes in Campaign Communications and in Election Procedures of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971,” title III, crimes relating to elections and political activities—that would be preserved—title IV, disclosure provisions for Federal officers and employees, and title V, related Internal Revenue Code amendments. Those four remaining titles would still stay in the bill.

The distinguished majority leader this morning sought to obtain unanimous consent to strike title V in order that it might be considered on legislation which had originated in the House of Representatives, that it might be attached to the legislation originating in the House and referred to the Ways and Means Committee over there.

Mr. President, what title V does in the bill is to save us—and we do not know whether it will stay in the bill or not: I rather believe when we come to a vote on the majority leader’s motion it will be striking—Is as in the bill. Title V is divided into two parts. One deals with the checkoff. And speaking of the checkoff, this checkoff system that we have really provided for the vehicle and the method and means by which the 1976 general election Presidential campaign can be financed.

It is estimated by the fiscal authorities that by 1976 there will be over $50 million in this checkoff fund. It is provided that the proceeds of each major party shall get 15 cents per person of voting age throughout the country, which will run about $21 million; so the Democrats and Republicans can be financed by the proceeds. We do not need this S. 3444 to provide for the public financing of national Presidential elections. We do not need that at all.

The only catch in was—catch 22, so to speak— that is in order to come under the provisions of the present check-off, the political party has to agree that it will make do in the campaign with this $21
For that reason, I am especially pleased to commend Senator Edward Cannon, the chairman of the Rules Committee, and Senator Claiborne Pell, the chairman of the Elections Subcommittee, for the far-reaching bill they have guided to the Senate floor, especially the $100,000 ceiling on campaign contributions. Does anyone doubt the connection between America's energy crisis and the campaign contributions of the oil industry?

Does anyone doubt the connection between America's reluctance to enforce effective price controls and the campaign contributions of the Nation's richest corporations, especially the $100,000 corporate capitation tax imposed by the managers of President Nixon's reelection campaign?

Does anyone doubt the connection between America's health crisis and the campaign contributions of the American Medical Association and the private health insurance industry?

Does anyone doubt the connection between the massive tax loopholes in the Internal Revenue Code and the campaign contributions of those who enjoy the benefits of such loopholes?

Does anyone doubt the connection between the crisis over gun control and the campaign contributions of the National Rifle Association?

Does anyone doubt the connection between the transportation crisis and the campaign contributions of the highway lobby?

Does anyone doubt the connection between the demoralization of the foreign service and the sale of ambassadorships for private campaign contributions?

These areas are only the beginning of the list. The problem is especially urgent and pervasive today, because of Watergate and the soaring cost of running for public office. But if 1972 was unique at all in ceiling campaign contributions, it was unique only in the unscrupulous intensity and efficiency with which large private contributions were so successfully solicited.

Corruption or the appearance of corruption in campaign financing is not a new phenomenon. It affects both the White House and the Congress. In fact, I would venture that for at least a generation, few major pieces of legislation have moved through the House or Senate, few major administrative agency actions have been taken, that do not bear the brand of large campaign contributors with an interest in the outcome.

Watergate did not cause the problem, but it may well offer the last clear chance to solve it. Through public financing, we can guarantee that the political influence of any citizen is measured only by his voice and vote, not by the thickness of his pocketbook.

To the man in the street, as the recent polls make clear, people in American life has now sunk to the depths of public service in the heyday of the notorious just as the spoils system finally sank of... spons system of the 19th century. And its own scandals, incompetence and corruption, and gave way to the appointed civil service based on merit we know today, so the spoils system of private campaign financing is sinking under the scandal of Watergate, giving way to a new system of public service based on public financing of elections to public office.

It is clear, however, that public financing is not a panacea for America’s current problems. Why? It is not a cure for all corruption in public life. It is not a guarantee that those who enter public service will be any wiser than perusing America’s current problems. When it is not a guarantee, and public decisions will be taken in the future by persons beholden only to the public as a whole, free of the abuses that have landed America in the dock in the eyes of democratic nations throughout the world, free of the appearance of special influence and corruption that have done so much in recent years to bring all government to its present low estate.

There are a number of issues which are being raised in connection with public financing, and which we will discuss in detail in the present debate.

PAST ACTION BY THE SENATE ON PUBLIC FINANCING

First, the bill is not being rushed through Congress prematurely. The principle of public financing has received extensive analysis by Congress over many years, especially by the Senate. In fact, the present debate marks the fifth year in the past decade in which the Senate is engaging in major floor debate on public financing legislation: 1966 saw the birth of the original dollar checkoff legislation, sponsored by Senator Long and signed into law by President Lyndon Johnson. 1967 saw that law delayed, caught in the crossfire of the then emerging passions over the 1968 Presidential election. 1971 saw the act revived, and again signed into law, this time by President Richard Nixon.

And, in the wake of Watergate, 1973 saw the first attempted extension of the checkoff to other Federal elections, in a measure initially introduced by the Senate, but later killed by a Senate filibuster mounted by those unwilling to let the major work its will.

There is a Rip Van Winkle tone to arguments of those opposed to public financing. We already have public financing for Presidential elections. It is already a Federal law. It is already printed on the income tax book. Surely, Congress is not about to roll back the clock on the dollar checkoff by repealing its provisions. The issue now is whether to extend the dollar checkoff, by applying its provisions to Presidential primaries and to Senate and House elections.

I say, if public financing is the answer to the problems of private money and political corruption in Presidential elections, then it is also the answer to the problems of private money and political corruption in our Federal governments, too. It is not financing is good enough for the Senate, it is good enough for the House and Senate, too.

PUBLIC FINANCING IS NOT TAXATION WITHOUT REPRESENTATION

Second, to those who say that public financing of elections is taxation without representation, I reply that taxation without representation is what we have today, with campaign financing that turns elected officials into vassals of their big contributors.

If we want a President and Congress who represent all the people, then all the people have to pay the cost of their campaigns for public office.

Similarly, to those who say that public financing is a raid on the Federal Treasury, I reply that the real raid on the Treasury is that raid that is going on today, the raid that is costing taxpayers billions of dollars a year in fund,dollars. And the bill passed by the Senate, a bill financed by the private campaign contributions of wealthy donors and special interest groups.

Moreover, under the dollar checkoff method of public financing, as it now being widely used on this year's tax returns, it is clear that no one's tax dollars are being taken for public financing against his will. No tax dollars go into the election fund at all, in any case, once the taxpayer checks the box on his return.

If the dollar checkoff works, it means that every dollar in funds for public financing is coming from an individual taxpayer who has given his consent. That is a complete answer to those who say that taxpayers should not be forced to pay for political campaigns, and that public officials themselves should not be spending public money on themselves.

True, the new Senate bill would enable the Congress to fix dollar limits on spending. But the allocation of tax dollars for public financing is no different in principle from the allocation of tax dollars for any other purpose.

Not every citizen approves the way every tax dollar is spent. The most obvious example is Vietnam—over a period of more than a decade, America poured more than one trillion tax dollars into the Vietnam war, over the continuing opposition of what began as a small segment of the population, but finally became a majority of Congress and the Nation.

To some, public financing of elections may not be the most desirable use of public dollars. But it is a vast improvement over private financing, and the one that is more in keeping with the times.

We do not pay wealthy private citizens to pay the salaries of the President and Senators and Congressmen. Why should we let wealthy private citizens pay the cost of the candidates' travel expenses?

As with many other Federal spending programs, some citizens may oppose the way Congress decides that particular tax dollars shall be spent. But to call such spending "taxation without representation" is a distortion of one of democracy's greatest principles and a travesty on one of America's proudest slogans.

THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF PUBLIC FINANCING

The third important issue concerns the provisions that have been raised about the constitutionality of public financing. I believe that the language of the Constitution and a long line of precedents in the Supreme Court, going back to the 19th century, establish ample authority for Congress to enact this legislation.

In each of the major areas where first amendment and other constitutional overtones are present, especially in the treatment of minor parties and the generous role carved out for independent private spending, the Senate bill proceeds with clear regard for basic legal rights.

No one—no candidate or contributor—has a constitutional right to buy an election. To suggest otherwise is equivalent to saying that the Supreme Court is right in deciding progressive social legislation at the turn of the century, the Constitution does not enact Mr. Herbert Kalisch's political ethic.

And so, I am confident the Supreme Court will uphold the pending legislation if it passes Congress and a challenge is ever brought.

THE ROLE OF POLITICAL PARTIES UNDER PUBLIC FINANCING

Fourth, contrary to the premature obituaries being offered, public financing is not a nail in the coffin of the two-party system in America. It will not diminish in any substantial way the role of political parties in the Nation.

To the extent that public funds go to candidates themselves instead of to the political parties that support them, the allocation may contribute significantly to the viability, or survival, of the candidates' campaign funds.

To the extent that public funds go to candidates themselves instead of to the political parties that support them, the allocation may contribute significantly to the viability, or survival, of the candidates' campaign funds.

In two of its provisions, moreover, the Senate bill specifically enhances the parties' role:

- By conferring independent spending rights on party committees at the national and State level, over and above the candidates' own spending limits, the bill establishes a specific role for the parties in their own right, free of the candidates' control.

- And, by prohibiting expenditures over $1,000 by a candidate for President unless the expenditure has the approval of the party's national committee, the bill establishes a balancing role for the party in the national campaigns.

On balance, therefore, far from damaging the parties, the prospect is good that public financing will in fact be a useful counterbalance to the forces driving the two-party system apart and splintering modern politics.

Realistically, public financing by itself is not a lever strong enough to realign the political parties in America. But if that is the direction in which the larger political and social forces now at work are moving, then public financing will contribute significantly to the goal.
THE INADEQUACY OF FULL DISCLOSURE

Fifth, to those who say go slow, that limits on total campaign spending and limits on loose contributions are enough for now, that all we need is full reporting and disclosure. I reply that sunlight is too weak a disinfectant, that we should not be satisfied with timid steps today in Watergate and the experience of 1972 that prove that bolder ones are needed.

The Nation had an ample full disclosure law on the statute books for most of the 1972 presidential campaign. As we all know, there was a scramble by some of the largest donors to make their contributions before April 7, 1972, the date the disclosure law became effective.

But, as the recent report of the General Accounting Office makes clear, vast amounts of private contributions were made and duly reported after April 7 as well. What the contributors with special interest money hastily missed a chance to do under the full disclosure law.

No one is inhibited by full disclosure from making a sizable contribution, if that is the strategic election dollar he needs to protect his special interest. And Watergate makes clear, if the pressure is great enough, the money will be found and the contribution will be made in secret, in flagrant violation not only of the full disclosure law but also of other criminal provisions in the election laws, such as the prohibition on corporate contributions.

When some of the most distinguished corporations in the Nation—familiar names like American Airlines, Goodyear Tire, Gulf Oil, and Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing—confess to blatant crimes involving hundreds of thousands of dollars in illegal corporate contributions, and then compound their crimes by using foreign agents and laundered foreign currencies to conduct American tissue in American elections, we begin to understand the irresistible financial pressures that are corrupting our national life and destroying our democracy.

The basic defeat of a full disclosure law is that disclosure, by its nature, will not work. Too often, the requirement of disclosure is easily evaded. And even where disclosure is made, it will never be full enough, because a donor will never disclose the things he wants in return for the contribution he is making.

A separate problem in relying on the disclosure—contribution—spending limit approach, without public financing, is that Congress would be aiming in the dark. Therefore, the danger exists that the limits may be set so high that they would be meaningless as real reform, or so low that they will break the back of private financing, without leaving any realistic alternative in its place.

The pending Senate bill steers a middle course, avoiding both extremes. It sets the contribution limit at $3,000 per individual per campaign—low enough to prohibit clearly excessive private contributions, but high enough to allow a candidate to run his campaign entirely on private funds, if that is the route he chooses to go.

In addition, the bill offers candidates the alternative of public funds for both their primary campaigns and their general election campaigns, at realistic levels that not only are high enough to avoid any reliably large private contributions, but also are high enough to enable any serious challenger to get his message to the people. No one can fairly say that in S. 3044, the Senate is writing a dream bill.

The application of S. 3044 to primary elections illustrates the cautious approach of the bill to the issue of public financing:

Any candidate may choose to finance his entire campaign through private contributions, at $3,000 per donor.

Or, he may obtain matching grants of public funds for each $100 contribution in congressional primaries, or each $250 contribution in Presidential primaries.

For example, for each $3,000 a Senate candidate needs to finance his campaign, he must decide whether to raise the full amount from a single donor, or to raise it from 15 donors of $200 each, whose contributions will be matched by $1,500 in public funds to reach the $3,000 level. In effect, the matching-fund ceiling will function as a safety valve in the event that the novel concept of matching grants fails to work in practice.

Equally important, in order to qualify for any public funds at all for his primary campaign, the candidate must meet the bill's substantial test of raising a high threshold of $100 contributions—20 percent of his spending limit in the case of a Senate primary. As the threshold provisions make clear, the bill offers no easy access to the Treasury for political candidates seeking a low cost of collecting taxpayers' expenses. No one will be entitled to public funds until he satisfies the threshold, and thereby meets the bill's stiff test of the seriousness of his candidacy.

THE ROLE OF PRIVATE FINANCING

Sixth, contrary to some reports, the public financing provisions of the bill are in no sense mandatory. The bill does not prohibit private financing, and it certainly does not prohibit small private contributions.

In fact, it provides strong incentives for small contributions in primaries, since it offers matching public funds only for the first $3,000 a donor makes to a candidate's contribution in Presidential primaries and the first $100 in primaries for the Senate and House.

Private contributions also have a role to play in general elections, since major party candidates will have the option of relying entirely on private funds, entirely on public funds, or on any combination in between.

And in both primaries and general elections, the bill provides new incentives for small private contributions by doubling the existing tax credit and tax deduction available for such contributions.

In those respects, the bill recognizes the vigorous differences of opinion on the proper role of small private contributions. Some feel such gifts of contributions are an essential method for bringing citizens into the system and encouraging popular participation in politics.

Others, like myself, feel that there are better ways to bring a person into the system than by reaching for his pocketbook, and that the best way to a voter's heart is through his opinions on the issues not through the dollars in his wallet. As it should, the bill accommodates both views, letting each candidate do his own thing, without forcing any candidate into a rigid formula for financing his campaign.

In this respect, S. 3044 is an improvement over the 1971 dollar checkoff law, which prohibits a person who accepts public funds from accepting private contributions. Under S. 3044, there is greater flexibility—a candidate can select the mix of private and public funds he wants for his campaign, such as 50-50 or 80-20, and is not obliged to accept public funds on an all-or-nothing basis.

For that reason, I am opposed to alternative proposals that would turn public financing for general elections into a compulsory mixed system of partial public funds and partial private contributions, with or without matching grants.

Last November, in the floor debate on the public financing amendment to the Debt Ceiling Act, the approach of the Senate voted 52-40 against a proposal to cut the amount of public funds in half and to require the remainder to be raised in private contributions. As Senator John Pastore succinctly put it in the floor debate, in opposing such a mandatory mixture of public and private financing:

"Eager we are going to have or not going to have public financing in amendment to the Debt Ceiling Act, the dollar checkoff is already used in 1974. At the current rate, 12 million taxpayers will have used it by the time restates are filed on April 15. That is a world record for public participation in campaign financing, a tribute to the workability of the "one voter-one dollar" approach to public financing enacted in 1971.

Further, it is by no means clear that it is feasible for a large number of general election campaigns across the country to be run on small private contributions.

The McGovern campaign in 1964, the Goldwater campaign in 1964, the McGovern campaign in 1972, and the Democratic National Committee's telethon in 1973 are good examples of successful fundraising through small private contributions, but they prove only that such fundraising may work in the unique circumstances involved in those campaigns.

They do not prove that the method will work when every Senate, House and Presidential candidate is tapping the pool of small contributors.

The net result of such a system applied to all elections may simply be to put a premium on the best-known candidate, on the candidate who starts the earliest or who hires the best direct-mail expert as his fund raiser.

Nor would it be desirable, in my view, to adopt a program of matching grants for small private contributions as the form of public financing for general elections.

In the case of primaries, a system of matching grants is appropriate and is the method adopted by S. 3044. In fact, matching is the only realistic method of public financing in primaries, since it is the candidature's realistic way to identify those who are serious candidates. The candidates who receive public funds are those who have demonstrated broad appeal by raising substantial amounts of private funds from small contributions. Thus, if we are to have any public financing of primary elections, it must be accomplished through matching grants.

In the general election, however, the nomination process has already identified the major party candidates who deserve public funds. It is, therefore, as S. 3044 provides, to give them the full amount of public funds necessary to finance their campaigns, with the option for every candidate to forgo all or part of the public funds if he prefers to run on private contributions.

Thus, full public funding in the general election gives a candidate maximum disinterested financing of his campaign. If an extra layer of private spending is allowed, all candidates would be obliged to raise the extra amount as a guarantee that they would not be outspent by their opponents.

As a result, all candidates would be forced into the mandatory straitjacket of spending time and money to raise small private contributions, even though many candidates would prefer to spend that time and money in more productive ways in their campaigns.

A system of matching grants in general elections would be especially dangerous to the existing two-party system, since it might encourage splinter candidates—for example, a candidate narrowly defeated in a primary would be encouraged to take his case to the people in the general election as an independent candidate or as a third party candidate. Under S. 3044, by contrast, a third party candidate with no track record from a primary election would still be able to obtain public funds, but only retroactively, on the basis of his showing in the current election.

Thus, in its provisions offering full public funds on an optional basis for general elections, S. 3044 avoids the waste, pitfalls, and obvious dangers to the election process of a mixed system of public-private financing or a system of matching grants, and I urge the Senate to approve it.

THE EFFECT ON BUSINESS AND LABOR

Seventh, we must lay to rest the specter that public financing will fracture some present election compact between business money and labor manpower in American public life.

That view contains a basic fallacy, because it paints a picture of political life that no one recognizes. The impact of public financing will be approximately equal on both business and labor, because both business and labor depend primarily on money, and large campaign contributions to support the candidates they favor.

Under public financing, neither business, nor labor, nor any other interest group will be able to purchase influence or control a candidate. But neither will they have a monopoly on the manpower or on the energy and ability of those who are willing and eager to participate.

THE COST OF PUBLIC FINANCING

Eighth, to those who say we cannot afford the $90 million annual price tag on the public financing provisions of S. 3044, I say we cannot afford not to pay the price. Dollars for public financing are a bargain at any standard, because they are dollars invested now that promise rich dividends in public service for America in the future.

Think what that price tag really means. For about the cost of a single week of the Vietnam war, for less than a tenth of a cent a gallon on the price of gasoline each year, for less than 50 cents a person each year, we can take the step best calculated to clean the stables of our Government and to bring integrity back to politics.

We trust candidates for Federal office, once elected, to the House and to Congress, to spend over $300 billion in public funds in the annual Federal budget. Why should we hesitate to trust candidates with $90 million a year in public funds for their election?

Through the democracy of the dollar checkoff, we can spread the cost of campaign financing broadly among all taxpayers. Thanks to the good faith efforts of the Internal Revenue Service to publicize the checkoff on this year's tax returns, the procedure is working reasonably well today—15 percent of the returns filed so far in 1974 are using the checkoff now, already a fivefold increase over 1973.

My hope is that the use of the checkoff will increase between now and April 15, as taxpayers become increasingly familiar with the plan. At the present rate, the checkoff will be ample to finance the 1976 Presidential election, but more is needed. To pay for public financing of other elections, the rate of use of the dollar checkoff will have to double once again, which means that one out of every three taxpayers must use the checkoff if supplemental appropriations are to be avoided.

Eighty million taxpayers are voting on their tax return this year. The votes they cast with the Internal Revenue Service between now and April 15 will be some of the most important votes they ever cast, because they are votes for honest, fair and clean elections.

A totally new experiment in American democracy is underway, an experiment significant in its way at least as much as school desegregation and reapportionment decisions by the Supreme Court in the 1960's, or the civil rights and 18-year-old vote legislation passed by Congress in recent years.

In sum, public financing of elections means no more Watergates. It is the wisest possible investment the American taxpayer can make in the future of his country. If it works, our elections will once again belong to all the people of the Nation. The stage is set for Congress to seize this historic opportunity to bring democracy back to health. May future generations say that we were equal to the challenge.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table showing the current results under the dollar checkoff, and an overview of S. 3044, may be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Outlines of S. 3044—Public Financing for Federal Elections

1. S. 3044 builds on existing law, which provides public financing for Presidential general elections, and expands its provisions to include public financing for Presidential primaries and for Senate and House general elections and primaries.

2. The existing law is Senator Russell Long’s “Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act,” as amended by Congress in 1971 and amended in 1973, established a program of public financing for Presidential general elections, to go into effect for the 1976 election. Under the Act, taxpayers are authorized to designate that $1 of their taxes ($2 on joint checks) be transferred to “Presidential Election Campaign Fund,” est. on the books of the Treasury. Under the law, the designated amounts must be transferred into the Fund under a specific appropriation enacted by Congress. Once transferred, the amounts will be apportioned among eligible major and minor party candidates in the Presidential general election. The 1973 amendments eliminated the Special Account. The Comptroller General administers the Fund.

General Provisions on Public Financing

3. S. 3044 establishes a Federal Election Campaign Fund in the Treasury as an expanded version of the existing Presidential Election Campaign Fund, to be funded through a checkoff on individual Federal income tax returns. The Fund will be made available to Declare Eligible Political Parties, or to the campaign of an individual candidate for President, Senator, or House of Representatives.

4. The bill increases the amount of the dollar checkoff to $2 (§2 on a joint return) or $4 on a joint return

5. The bill modifies the checkoff to provide a automatic authorization of tax dollars into the Federal Election Campaign Fund, unless or unless the taxpayer indicates on the tax return that the dollar checkoff, or the amount will not be transferred into the Fund.

6. The bill authorizes Congress to appropriate funds for the administration of the Fund, and to use in the Federal Election Commission. The Commission will certify a candidate’s eligibility for payments, and be responsible for conducting the automatic checkoff and payment procedures.

7. The program will be administered by a Federal Election Commission. The Commission will certify a candidate’s eligibility for payments, and be responsible for conducting the automatic checkoff and payment procedures.

8. There are heavy criminal penalties for exceeding the spending limits, and for unlawful use of payments, false statements to the Commission and kickbacks and illegal payments.

9. The provisions of the bill will go into effect for the 1976 Presidential and Congressional general elections and primaries.

10. The cost of the public financing provisions of the bill is estimated at $223 million in Presidential election year, and $134 million in the off-year Congressional elections. Thus, the total cost of the program over the cycle to be financed by Federal funds, or an average cost of about $90 million.

11. Except as indicated, the provisions of S. 3044 applicable to general elections for Federal offices are identical to those now available for public general elections under existing law. In effect, S. 3044 extends the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act of 1971 to Senate and House elections.

12. Under existing law, public financing is available as an alternative to private financing for Presidential elections. Candidates have the option of public or private financing, but candidates electing public financing may not also use private financing, except in cases where the available public funds are insufficient to meet the candidate’s full entitlement.

13. The bill follows the basic formula. In the existing dollar checkoff for allocating public funds among candidates of major and minor parties in the Presidential election, a “major” party is a party that received 25% or more of the number of popular votes received by all candidates for the office in the preceding election, or the party with the next highest percentage of the votes in an election where only one party is running.

14. In Presidential elections, a candidate of a major party is entitled to public funds up to $223 million in Presidential election year, and $134 million in the off-year Congressional elections. Thus, the total cost of the program over the cycle to be financed by Federal funds, or an average cost of about $90 million.

15. A candidate of a minor party is entitled to receive public funds in proportion to his share of the popular vote in the election, on a retroactive reimbursement basis, if he receives more than 5% of the vote in the election.

16. An independent candidate is entitled to public funds on the same basis as if he were the candidate of a major party.

17. To qualify for public funds, candidates must accumulate the threshold amount of private funds, raised by small private contributions:

   \begin{align*}
   \text{President} & : & $250,000, \text{in contributions of $250 or less.} \\
   \text{Senate} & : & 20\% \text{ of the spending ceiling or } $250,000 \text{ (whichever is less), in contributions of $250 or less.} \\
   \text{House} & : & $10,000, \text{in contributions of $100 or less.} \end{align*}

18. Once the threshold is reached, a candidate is eligible for public funds matching the threshold amount, and to additional public funds matching each additional private contribution.

19. In order to assure the continuity of normal elections of political parties, provide an independent role for the parties in general elections, and to offer an additional incentive for proportionate representation and participation, the national committee of a political party is entitled to spend a total of $2 per voter of its own funds, collected from private contributions, on behalf of candidates for Federal office in general elections; and a State committee of a political party is entitled to spend a total of $2 per voter of its own funds, on behalf of any candidate within the State.

20. No expenditure over $1,000 may be made by the Presidential candidate of a party in a general election unless the expenditure has been approved by the Party’s national committee.

21. Related Provisions:

   22. Tax Credit and Tax Deduction—As an incentive to small private contributions, the bill doubles the existing tax credit against income tax deduction for such contributions. The tax credit is increased to one-half of any contribution up to $500 (on a joint return) and the tax deduction is increased to $250 ($500 on a joint return). The cost of the provision is estimated at $26 million ($11 million from doubling the maximum credit, and $15 million from doubling the maximum deduction).

   23. Spending Ceilings for General Elections:

   a) Presidential: $500,000, whichever is greater.

   b) Senate: $250,000, whichever is greater.

   c) House: $100,000, whichever is greater.

   24. Spending Ceilings for Primaries:

   a) President: $200,000, whichever is greater.

   b) Senate: $125,000, whichever is greater.

   c) House: $250,000, whichever is greater.

   25. Contribution Limits on Individuals:

   a) $3,000 to any candidate or committee.

   b) $10,000 to any candidate or committee.

   c) $25,000 to any candidate or committee.

   26. Independent Spending—Individuals or committees not authorized by a candidate may spend up to $1,000 during the campaign.

on behalf of the candidate, independent of the candidate's own spending ceiling.

27. Reporting and Disclosure.—Re-enacts the provisions of 5-1-72, which passed the Senate in July 1973, and which requires full reporting and disclosure of campaign contributions and expenditures.

28. Full Disclosure of Financial Interests.—An annual statement of income over $1,000, assets over $1,000, and transactions over $1,000 must be filed with the Federal Election Commission by Members of Congress, candidates for Congress, and Federal employees earning more than $25,000 a year.

1 Department of Census estimate, 1973 voting age population.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. GRIMM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRIMM. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama was talking about the public financing aspects of the pending bill, and I know that he is very familiar with its provisions and how would it work.

Am I correct in my understanding that if this bill were passed, each candidate in the primary would have the House of Representatives would receive $90,000 out of this public treasury to spend in his campaign?

Mr. ALLEN. I believe that is correct.

Mr. GRIMM. And that would not involve any matching funds or private contributions. Each candidate nominated in the primary would be financed to the extent of $90,000.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. GRIMM. Perhaps I should be addressing my question to the sponsor of the measure.

That is my understanding—and I am sure that he will correct this if I am wrong.

Mr. ALLEN. It would provide a permissible mix of public and private funds.

Mr. GRIMM. In the general campaign?

Mr. ALLEN. Mix, not match. In other words, he did apply, say, $5,000 in private funds that could be received and would come off the other.

Mr. GRIMM. But he would not have to raise anything.

Mr. ALLEN. No, he would not.

Mr. GRIMM. He would not have to raise anything?

Mr. ALLEN. That is correct.

Mr. GRIMM. He would be entitled to $90,000.

Mr. ALLEN. The full amount, yes.

Mr. GRIMM. I wonder whether the Senator from Alabama has had an opportunity—or perhaps the sponsor of this amendment had—to check to see how much candidates running for the House of Representatives are spending now in their campaigns.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not believe it would approach that, in my judgment. Many are spending practically nothing.

Mr. GRIMM. It seems to me that it would be important to have[] Ile: Treasury. I wonder if the public will get the story through the media.

Mr. ALLEN. I think they will if we allow this matter to be discussed long enough. If the point is made again and again it might be picked up by the media. Right now, as the Senator from Alabama said very eloquently, the idea of campaign reform is somehow translated into public financing. They are treated as though they are amorous; that if one is not for public financing then he must not be for campaign reform. That is what a lot of stories I read in the newspapers indicate.

Mr. ALLEN. I think we can only point out to the distinguished Senator from Michigan that there has been filed an amendment that would provide for cutting down the amount of permissible contributions from the $3,000 allowed by the bill to $250 in Presidential races and $100 in House and Senate races on the theory that the money so raised would not be考えた Smyth Amendment. There is no way to cut down to the amount that does allow them to be matched in full.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I focused on the House races primarily because there are approximately the same number of people and the same number of constituents in each House district, so there are some reasons to make comparisons. When we talk about Senator races I think we can realize there is a great deal of difference in the House of Representatives. They do have to be looked at down to the House of Representatives. They are different in that sense.

Mr. ALLEN. I think another interest is concerned that the open day of the debate on this important legislation, the opponents are focusing on the House of Representatives. As the assistant minority leader understands full well, we are going to try to get that House set its own figure and write its own ticket for public financing. That may be well we will be glad to let the House set its own figure and write its own ticket for public financing. What is being done is going to worry about how the $90,000 in public funds is going to be spent, or that it will be used to set up brothers and cousins in the printing business, and so forth. Well, we are going to try to make it clear that they have to do is go to the major contributors and collect that money now and put their brothers and cousins in business, in that is the way they choose to run their campaigns. The Senator is simply identifying the existing problem, not a problem peculiar to public financing.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Michigan states that two-thirds of the House races were financed for $50,000 or less in 1972. This is largely because the financing in the House are uncontested. That is one of the ends of the present system, that it is very difficult in many cases for a challenger to raise money to run against an entrenched incumbent.

Mr. ALLEN. The House of Representatives wants to set a different figure, a lower figure, that would be their prerogative.

What interests me this afternoon is that on the first day of debate on this measure, we hear it said how bad this provision is for the House. The opponents are not addressing the problem of where existing campaign contributions are coming from. They are not talking about public financing for the Senate, or what can be done to stop the corrupting power of contribution money. They are not talking about the House.

I wish my good friend from Michigan would focus on that issue, and my friend the Senator from Alabama as well, because that is the essential thrust of this whole effort.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I appreciate the response from the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts. I would say that we are looking at the bill as it comes from the Committee on Rules and Administration. I do not understand quite the point the Senator from Massachusetts makes when he said the House should set its own figure. This is a figure we set and it is only illustrative of the philosophy and the concept in the bill as a whole. I focused on the House because I think we can understand that. Now, I guess we will go back and I will focus on the Senate.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would like to ask the Senator a question similar to the question he asked me the other day on the gun control measure. Would the distinguished assistant minority leader support this legislation if we altered the House provision and left it to the complete discretion of the House?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Only to the House? Absolutely not.

Mr. KENNEDY. I think the Senator was trying to make a similar point the other day. I think the point is made here today.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The situation with respect to the House is only illustrative of what is wrong with this bill throughout— with titles I throughout, because I do strongly support the other titles of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts seems to indicate we should focus on some other race besides the House of Representatives. I notice there are some of the figures submitted by the present administration. If this bill passes in California, after whoever ran for the Senate had been subsidized to the extent of $700,000 in the primary, each party would be subsidized $2.121 million.

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is each candidate? Mr. ALLEN. Each candidate in the general election.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Running for the Senate in California would be subsidized how much?

Mr. ALLEN. $2.121 million.

I think the President did not say he had difficulty finding the cost of some of these races when we talk about some of the races that have been run for the Presidential election. We have experts on these figures and how much they have spent on their campaigns for the Presidential nominating convention.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Would the Senator happen to have any figures on what candidates running for the Senate in California have spent in the past?

Mr. ALLEN. No, I do not have that, but I have a belief in the campaigns of some Senators who have run for President would compare with the $15 million this bill would allow them to spend. I wonder if the Senator has any thoughts along those lines or whether we might get any expert testimony on that point.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I think it will come as a real shock to a lot of people who are interested in campaign reform when and if they get the true story, of what title I of this bill would do and how it would subsidize candidates running for the Senate in California to the tune of $2.5 million.

Mr. ALLEN. $2.121,000.

Mr. GRIFFIN. $2.121,000.

Mr. ALLEN. But it would subsidize a candidate for the Presidential nomination, a candidate like Governor Rockefeller or Senator Reagan or Senator Connally, up to a limit of some $7.5 million. I do not think the country realizes that would be the case.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Of course, the tax funds are funds over which the people have no choice, which happens to them, whereas they are not being used to support their candidate or their cause or their party, and their money is going to go to support both candidates.

Mr. ALLEN. I think another interesting statistic might be how many thousands of taxpayer's returns on Federal taxes will be required to subsidize the Presidential campaign for every man who runs for President. It would take literally thousands of taxpayers' payments so do. Therefore, it would make a big difference.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Did the Senator from Michigan vote for S. 372, does he remember?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I believe I did, yes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Does the Senator from Michigan remember what the dollar ceilings were in terms of spending for primaries?

Mr. GRIFFIN. No.

Mr. KENNEDY. I remind the Senator that the dollar figure included in S. 372 was $90,000 spending ceiling for primaries. That is the source of the $90,000
Mr. KENNEDY. No. I was addressing myself to the source of $90,000 limitation. The Senator from Michigan was so pained at what a sizable amount was to be expended in a congressional election. But I think I was careful about how the great majority of elections were financed for $50,000 or less. The Senator could have advocated an amendment to reduce the figures in S. 372. He did not. I understand he supported S. 372, which established the basic $90,000 figure for House elections.

Once again let me point out that I think the support for public financing will be delighted to leave the exact figure to the House of Representatives. I think that is where it should be left. But the source of the $90,000 is not hard to find—It is S. 372, which was supported by both the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Alabama.

I also notice that the Senator from Michigan was a member of the committee that actually reported S. 372 to the Senate. So evidently he was willing to set a ceiling at $90,000 for elections for the House in S. 372, but is unable to support the concept as it applies to public financing at this time.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for calling that to my attention. I, frankly, fail to see particular relevance to the fact that in a prior bill there was approval of a $90,000 ceiling for House races, in comparison with the fact that in this bill the legislation, as I understand it, would provide for $90,000 to be paid for every candidate running for the House. I can understand that there may be some races where a $90,000 ceiling might not be unreasonable, provided that there is a full disclosure and tight limits on private financing of campaigns. But to follow along from that and come to the argument that every candidate running for the House of Representatives should therefore be financed to the tune of $90,000 out of the Public Treasury seems a non sequitur, as far as I am concerned.

I yield to the Senator from Idaho (Mr. Church).

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING OF REPORT BY COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS OF THE SENATE ON THE TREATY ORGANIZATION

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, Senate Resolution 174, which was passed by the Senate last November 2, directs the Committee on Foreign Relations to conduct a full and complete review of the Southeast Asia Collective Defense Treaty and the treaty organization. The resolution specifies that the committee is to report its findings and recommendations to the Senate by March 31. As the committee has not been able to complete its review, I ask unanimous consent that the deadline for the committee's report of findings and recommendations be extended to June 30, 1974.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSTON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on Tuesday, March 26, 1974, he presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 3228) to provide funeral transportation and living expense benefits to the families of deceased prisoners of war, and for other purposes.

PROGRAM

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senate will convene tomorrow at 12 noon. After the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order, the distinguished Senator from Iowa (Mr. Hruska) will be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes, after which there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business of not to exceed 30 minutes, with statements limited therein to 5 minutes each.

At the conclusion of routine morning business, the Senate will resume consideration of the adjournment of Senate Amendment No. 1064. A vote will occur on that amendment at the hour of 3:30 p.m., and that will be a rollover vote.

Mr. President, there may be other personal and business matters tomorrow, but Senators are assured of at least one rollover vote.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the previous order, that the Senate stand in adjournment until the hour of 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and at 5:37 p.m., the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, March 27, 1974, at 12 o'clock noon.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE
OFFICE-FARM-FUEL, FERTILIZER, BALING WIRE, BALING TWINE, AND TRANSPORTATION

REPORT

1. National Supply Situation for Biweekly Period Ending March 15, 1974

A. Gasoline and Diesel Fuel. Situation about the same to slightly worse than two weeks ago. Total of 31 States reported gasoline supplies very tight in varying numbers of counties compared with 20 on March 8. Eight of these States (Virginia, North Carolina, Mississippi, Tennessee, Ohio, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Kansas) reported some critical counties with an increase from four to eight weeks ago. Diesel fuel supplies reported tight to very tight in some areas in 16 States, up from 13 two weeks ago. Four of the States (Mississippi, Tennessee, Ohio, Kansas) reported some critical counties, up from two States March 8. Some States report improvement in the allocation system as distributors become better informed and State energy offices become more efficient. Following are major difficulties reported by problem States: Some distributors and suppliers are requiring all farmers to file FEO Form 17s. Long delays by distributor’s suppliers (up to three weeks) in acting upon FEO Form 17s are requests for additional fuel. Current requests for additional fuel. Current requests for fertilizers are not being filled because of lack of gasoline. First report of U.S. average farm fuel prices, supplied by States at the request of ERS, show that the farm price of gasoline increased about 29 percent, diesel fuel increased about 36 percent, and LP gas increased about 21 percent during the period November 1, 1973 to March 18, 1974.

B. FERTILIZER

Reports continue to show fertilizer in short supply, with nitrogen in tightest supply position. Overall, the number of States reporting supplies short to tight (usually short) is about the same as reported March 8. A total of 44 States report a nitrogen shortage, compared with 46 States two weeks ago. States reporting a phosphate shortage increased with 43 on March 8. A potash shortage was reported by 39 States compared with 38 States two weeks ago. Shortages of mixed fertilizer were reported by 41 States compared with 43 States two weeks ago. State ASCS reports show price paid for fertilizer increased from February 18 to March 18. Monthly-to-month percentage increases from October of 1973 (control action) to March 18 are as follows:

Railroads have been ordered by the ICC to make an effort to provide for fertilizer shipments out of Florida. Cars must be delivered by April and used for fertilizer service until ICC authorizes other use or until order is lifted.

Canadian anhydrous ammonia plants. U.S. anhydrous ammonia supplies could eventually be increased by 1.5 million tons (about 9 percent) annually as a result of tentative plans to build four 1,250-ton-per-day ammonia plants in Canada. Under proposed agreement by U.S. and Canadian companies, most of the plants’ output would be piped into U.S. and distributed into 15 Midwest States. Some production will be available in 1976, with all plants operative by the end of 1978.

Baling wire. Baling wire supplies expected to be short about 30 percent of domestic production continues to be at present rates and requirements are similar to last year. Estimated requirements for 1974 may crop range from 105,000 to 115,000 tons a baling wire. Current rate of baling wire production estimated to be about 10 percent above 1973, with baling wire imports arriving at about 1,250 tons a year. Following price relief granted by the ICC, January 25, 1974, six Florida plants were producing baling wire in 1973, resumed production, and are now churning out about 1,200,000 pounds a week. Various pickup service rates are causing congestion at or near capacity. As a result of additional relief and increased business, prices are now $6.28 per 500-pound box. Retail prices for domestically produced baling wire expected to vary from $22 to $26 per 100-pound box.

Baling twine. Baling twine delivered for 1974 is estimated to be about 15 percent higher. However, bailing twine imports for the period October 25, 1973 through January 1974 were up 15 percent from last year. If imports continue at this rate, the overall shortage will be about 16 percent. Domestic baling twine production is near capacity and probably cannot be increased because of including up-to-date petroleum feedstocks. The retail price for baling twine is currently over $22 per 500-pound bale, with synthetic type twine sold over $25. These prices are 250 percent or more above a year ago. Normally about 75 percent of the total hay crop is tied with 15-18 percent with wire, and the remaining 7-10 percent not baled.

TRANSPORTATION

1. Motor Carrier Inability to handle increased income and pay for equipment. High fuel costs, reduced speed limits are blamed. Some report of another truck strike by end of March. Demand for trucks to haul beef and pork processors causing some delays.

Slight increase in diesel fuel supply, but rail carriers have been getting increased allocation of fuel to reflect increase in freight volume, since 1972 and 1973. Grain Carriers: Fuel availability stabilized; prices up about 400 percent above year ago. Reducing number of U.S. ports of call and slower speeds to conserve fuel, plus use of normal cargo specs for extra fuel supplies, are causing congestion at ports. Problem aggravated by carriers moving cargo subject to higher freight rates in preference to low-rate cargo.

Barge Carriers: No major fuel supply problems.

THE RISING COST OF COLLEGE EDUCATION

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, the College Entrance Examination Board recently released disturbing new figures on the rising cost of college education.

According to the CEEB the cost of a college education will rise again next fall making it 9.4 percent more expensive than a year ago and 35.8 percent more expensive than it was four years ago.

This means that a student at a private college can expect to pay an average of $4,039 next year.

Few families can afford such rates. As a result I have introduced, and the Senate has passed three times, legislation to grant yearly tax credits of up to $25 per year of a higher education. Unfortunately, the House has failed to act each time and the bill has died.

This bill, S. 18, would greatly strengthen the ability of families to finance their son's or daughter's schooling. It must be passed as soon as possible.

I ask unanimous consent that the New York Times article of March 25 concerning the CEEB report be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

COLLEGE COSTS WILL RISE BY 9.4 PERCENT IN FALL

By Gene M. Earnest

The cost of college education, which has been causing growing anxiety among American families, will rise again next fall, making it 9.4 per cent more expensive than this year and 35.8 per cent more than it was four years ago.

A report released yesterday by the College Entrance Examination Board, based on a survey of 2,000 institutions of higher education, shows that in the coming academic year a student living on campus at an average four-year private college will have to pay $4,039, which is $346 more than this year.

Belaying costs in an economy squeezed by inflation, President, college and universities seem to be fitting the battle to hold down expenses. The effect of inflation is already being felt, according to a survey that next fall a family will find it almost as costly to maintain a campus student living at home as to send a student away to live at college.”

“Meeting the costs of a college education is a problem more and more American families face every year,” the college board says in its report. “Not only do the lower-income and upper-income families find it increasingly difficult to bear these costs.”

The report makes the following findings:

- Community colleges, traditionally the least expensive type of higher educational institution, will have an average increase of $100 in tuition next year for private or public four-year colleges and universities.
- Despite the increase in tuition increasing at a faster rate at public four-year institutions than at private ones, it will still be far cheaper next year for resident students at public colleges and universities—total cost: $2,100—than for those at private institutions—total cost: $4,000.

The cost of room and board for students living away at college, which requires the largest outlay after tuition, will be fairly similar next year at public (S. 4,116) and private (S. 2,077) institutions.

While averages give a general indication of what the costs will be at colleges and universities, there is a wide range of individual differences.

Among the most expensive four-year private institutions, Harvard will cost $5,700 and Princeton $5,625, according to the college board report. By comparison, the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor will cost $2,800 and Slippery Rock State College in Pennsylvania will cost $2,500.

All of the costs compiled by the board, on the basis of figures it says it received from financial aid officers at the various institutions, include tuition, room and board, transportation and miscellaneous expenses including books and toiletries.

There is a genuine hope for financial relief for middle-income and upper-income families that have been complaining this year about soaring college costs and the scarcity of grants and loans. The state of Ohio has a moratorium on tuition increases at its public institutions and the University of Michigan has reduced its tuition, but these actions do not seem to be happening everywhere.

The tuition-free City University of New York will remain one of the best bargains in higher education next year. Student fees at the various CUNY campuses will average $30 a year. The university estimates the total annual costs of its average commuter student next fall at $2,100.

The report was prepared under the auspices of the board’s college savings plan, which helps institutions of higher education analyze the financial needs of appraising for grants and loans.

Here is a sampling of the changes next fall that resident students at institutions around the country can expect to pay during the 1975 academic year:

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Johnston). The time for morning business having expired, the Senate will resume the consideration of the unfinished business (S. 3044), which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and for other purposes, was introduced in the Senate (S. 3044), the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, is a response designed to meet problems of campaign abuse that have plagued Federal campaign finance for some years. The bill would make public financing available to all candidates for the Presidency, and it is the interest of the taxpayers or in the interest of our governmental processes to spend $15 million of the taxpayers’ funds among each of the 15 or 20 candidates for the Presidency.

So the order in which the amendments would be offered would be first that one coming up this afternoon to strike all public financing of Federal elections, and the following amendment, in the event that is not adopted, would eliminate House and Senate Members from public subsidy, and following that would be the amendment striking presidential primary campaigns, though we would still have the Presidential campaign for the general election which is also funded by the checkoff provision, which will make $321 million available to each of the parties if they come under the provisions of the law.

I would send the additional two amendments to the desk, and ask that they be printed and remain on the desk to be called up at a later date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received and printed, and will lie on the table.

The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1084) of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call that roll.

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATHAWAY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, today, we have on the floor a very significant bill and a bill with far-reaching consequences. S. 3044, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1974, is a response designed to meet problems of campaign abuse that have plagued Federal campaigns throughout American political history. In the process of reform, however, the members of the Rules Committee have decided to go one step further and significantly, perhaps dramatically, alter the basis by which we elect our political leaders.

I am firmly committed to the goal of campaign reform. For too long, both political parties, have been plagued by campaigns throughout American history. In the process of reform, however, the members of the Rules Committee have decided to go one step further and significantly, perhaps dramatically, alter the basis by which we elect our political leaders.

The point is that campaign abuse has long been a blot on our political history. Breaking the law in order to win elections is wrong in every sense of the word, both legal and moral. As the primary law-making body of this Nation, the Congress...

of the United States must do everything possible to write clear and concise laws so that candidates know exactly what they can and cannot do in a campaign.

Last year the Senate passed a campaign reform bill known as S. 372. It is a bill that had my support. This provided strict limitations on campaign contributions and expenditures as well as providing for other reforms in campaign procedure. The House of Representatives has yet to act on a similar measure.

As the year progressed, public clamor increased and new cries were heard that further reform of campaign practices was needed. Because it appeared that many of the alleged wrongdoings associated with Watergate were tied to the raising of campaign funds, the idea occurred to alter the basis by which candidates receive funds to run their campaigns. Public financing became the banner for those who sought to reform the system.

The Senate was given an opportunity to debate this issue on the floor late last year when a group of Senators were successful in attaching a public financing amendment to the public debt limit bill. As we all know, my distinguished colleague, the junior Senator from Alabama, led an earnest and successful fight to have that amendment deleted. He was right in that effort, not because it would have been unwise and deceptive to attach such far-reaching legislation to a completely unrelated bill, but because the substance of the amendment was ill-advised and undesirable.

The Senate Rules Committee, therefore, agreed to return to the drawing boards and draft a new campaign reform bill. Now we will have an opportunity openly to debate the central question contained in that amendment: Is public financing the answer to our problems of campaign abuse, or is it a substantial part of such an answer?

In seeking to answer that question, we must first ask ourselves what kind of political system we want. I think my colleagues and I agree that we want a dynamic system that is flexible to the demands of changing times, people, and attitudes. We want our electoral processes to encourage the best possible people to enter public life. We want a system that leaves room for the election of only those candidates who are qualified beyond doubt, who embrace the goals and attitudes of their constituents and who in short, consider public service to be the best way to make their contribution to life on this Earth.

Then we return again to the question: Is public financing of campaign costs the only way, or indeed a wise way, in which to produce our leaders and on which to base a political system? I think not. We can achieve campaign reform and improve our electoral processes without overturning our system of privately financed campaigns. I think S. 372 went a long way in that direction. More importantly, I have never doubted the efficacy of the public’s being called upon to subsidize campaigns. My remarks at this time will, therefore, be devoted to title I of S. 3044.

First and foremost, I doubt whether public financing would do anything to solve problems of campaign abuse. There are several ways by which a candidate gains public exposure and indeed runs a campaign. Money is one. A candidate’s ability to raise public awareness of his viability. Public financing may remove money from categories of influence. In fact, it is the logical place to begin talk of reforming campaign practices. But, by removing money from the one simply focuses attention on other areas of influence, and of potential abuse and even corruption.

These other influences include manpower and publicity. A candidate needs people to help him run a campaign. In local elections, we talk of hundreds of workers. In national elections, we talk of thousands and even tens of thousands of workers.

Certainly, publicity is another factor which bears heavily on one’s ability to campaign successfully. We need exposure and lots of it. There are other factors, however, which deserve mention. Organizational skill, durability, the right issues, and that winning personality— which all other factors they have or wish they have—are all subject to influence of one kind or another.

Transferring money to the public sector, instead of having it originate from private contributions, will only serve to bring greater pressure on these other important factors, including the two principal ones I have already mentioned. The candidate is empowered and public—no position. The candidate who has immediate access to hundreds of workers will have a distinct advantage. Is the union boss who provides manpower really different from the president of the corporation who donates money? Would not a candidate who enjoys the favor of a television commentator have a distinct advantage? Public financing does not address any of these factors.

The goal of public financing is to remove the raising of campaign funds from political pressure. Under the bill, the money is collected and then doled out by the Federal Government. I need not go into a long dissertation about the dangers and problems this method could unleash.

It is common thinking that the best way to confuse a situation and smear a program is to involve Uncle Sam. I do not see how public financing is going to be any different in this respect. As I read the bill, if the $3 checkoff system on the income tax return does not provide sufficient moneys in the Federal Treasury to cover the demands of all eligible candidates, then Congress can appropriate additional sums. This is a most interesting proposition. We would have Members of Congress, political candidates themselves, and a President voting on appropriations or signing appropriation bills into law that can affect their campaigns and that of their opponents. I am sure that I do not have to remind members of Congress of the political pressures which could affect this procedure.

The issue against public financing can be made even more simple. The American taxpayer has been footing the bill for just about everything, and we’ve come to expect nothing less. A taxpayer’s revolt is no idle joke, as all of us close to the political scene at home are painfully aware. Do we as political leaders hold our candidates have the right to ask the American taxpayer to pay for our campaigns? If I were a retired man living on a fixed income in rural America, I think I might be just a little upset for being my taxes. A representative espousing the virtues of public financing. The name can be said as to any taxpayer living anywhere.

Thomas Jefferson, more than 150 years ago, put it well in these words:

To compel a man (a taxpayer) to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves and abhors, is sinful and tyrannical.

That statement is fully applicable today as it was in the time of Jefferson.

Public financing denies the individual his freedom of choice. A portion of his tax dollars would be financing the campaign of a candidate, not a candidate, not even know, or, worse yet, completely abhor and despise.

A candidate should pay for his own campaign. He will need the help of many friends and contributors, but he certainly should not have a monopoly by any of the political parties, or by all the candidates. He can have or wish they have— are all subject to influence of one kind or another.

An editorial recently appeared in one of the newspapers in my State. It referred to obvious "dirty tricks" that have occurred in past campaigns, and they are not a monopoly by any of the political parties, including the two major political parties. In referring to public financing as a cure, the editor said:

Would reformers feel any better if those tricks had been paid for by taxpayers' money instead of private funds?

Yes, we should be back to the business to reform our campaign laws and procedures. Let us not be so "hell bent on reform" to the point where we lose sight of the very strengths of our political system and to the point where we can only possibly undo and then do it. creased particularly in House of Represent-ative races—435 of them every 2 years. That increase would be paid by taxpayers.

Third, Public financing would deprive many citizens of the only opportunity they have to participate in the campaign process. Many are not in a position to take part in it in any other fashion or by any other method.

This would be because of demands of their calling, profession, vocation, or it might be because of physical disability or health reasons. The way public financing would operate would very likely to decrease citizen participation which is a valuable and vital component of a strong party system and a wholesome election process. That component would be sacrificed or heavily impaired.

The Congress would do well to reject an untried, potentially dangerous, and objectionable feature of this bill, and should rather concentrate on those features dealing directly, effectively, and with preponderance of agreement toward correction of abuses which are so obvious and so much in need of remedy. The list is long of campaign treasuries of the luxury.

Public disclosure of all names and identification of contributors.

Complete and timely accounting for all campaign funds.

Limitation of contributions by an individual to any single campaign.

Limitation of expenditures by any candidate.

In this connection, it is well to note that the bill gives all candidates an option of soliciting all private contributions up to the prescribed limit contained in the bill. Therefore, it must be concluded that such sources are acceptable and in order because they can be monitored, policed, and in a disciplined way held within proper and legitimate bounds. The taxpayer should be spared the added drain on his funds and the new and more evil results which would ensue.

In referring to a comment I made earlier, it is not the source of money which results in a great many abuses and undesirable factors in campaigns and elections, it is the fact that money is used in such a way, at any rate, private funds, according to the committee report, are not evil in themselves as long as they are_esased, modified, controlled, and supervised by public disclosure of all the names and identifications of the contributors, as long as there will be a complete and timely accounting for all campaign funds, and as long as there will be such limitations as Congress in its wisdom will seek to impose.

Other controls over contributions, such as use of checks not cash; single or central campaign treasuries; prohibition of all loans to committees; prohibition of stocks, bonds, or similar assets from contributions.

Campaign activities such as distribution of false statements to campaign workers, disruptive actions, rigging public opinion polls, misleading announcements or advertisement in the media, misrepresentation of a candidate's voting record; organized slander campaigns; illegal recourse and redress against slanderous, libelous and unscrupulous attacks on public figures.

Election practices—fraudulent registration and voting, stuffing ballot boxes, rigging voting machines, forging, altering, or removing, or miscounting ballots.

There are many more items for the list. Every intent should be to make advances in each case as effective as possible. There should be an avoidance of questionable approaches. Either possessing sufficient minus marks to detract from progress by unified, unidivided support. Public financing is a divisive factor, a major one. It would not bear upon the solution to the long lists of ills and abuses which have plagued our system, and threaten to do so in the future unless legislation of this type will be fairly considered and enacted into law and applied.

Without it and with a concentration on those other aspects, or election process could be notably strengthened and improved.

It is my hope that as we proceed in the consideration of this measure, there will be such action taken as to delete from the bill the provisions with reference to public financing. This will remove an undesirable feature from the bill and at the same time enable the thorough consideration of other features of the election process.

March 27, 1974

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE S 4545

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. President, that would be a subsidy of anywhere from $43 million to $44 million for carding on the 1976 Presidential election.

As I say, there is a catch to it in this:
That in order to come under the provisions of the checkoff plan and have the Federal subsidy appropriated for a party, the party has to certify that they want to come under the provisions of the law, and that keeps them from accepting private contributions in any amount.

The other possible mix, as is provided in the Senate bill:

With the expense of Presidential elections that we have observed, it seems that if Presidential elections are going to be conducted on the scale that they have been conducted in the past, $21 million would not be sufficient. So it is entirely likely that neither of the parties would come under the provisions of the checkoff, because it is optional whether a man comes under it or not. He can come under the public sector or the private sector, and it seems to me that 100 percent public financing would be bad for the party, and that is one of the weaknesses of public financing. It seems to me that this would be a weakening of a political party.

How much better it would be to receive $5,400,000 in contributions than to receive $21 million or $22 million from the public treasury. I do not believe we are going to see money here authorized to the major parties come under the 1970 law on the checkoff. There is $42 million—$42 million to $44 million—by which Federal elections are already subsidized, or for which money is available for subsidy.

By the way, I might add that under another title in the bill, that would not be stricken out by amendment No. 1064, is a doubling of the checkoff. So the checkoff then would be $2 for a single person and $4 for a couple. We are already taking in enough to run a political campaign. What is the use of doubling the amount? By specifying a doubling, we will have changed the whole concept of it, because it is not a voluntary checkoff. This is Senate bill 3044 that is submitted to us to vote on. It provides for a doubling of the subsidy from $2 to $4 for a couple if a person does not check off the $2 or $4, he is then presumed to have checked it off. In other words, if he does not check it off, he is ruled to have checked it off, because he must have the checkoff to apply against him.

At my request, the Committee on Rules and Administration prepared or obtained some estimations of what these checkoffs are going to cost the Government. This is what it will cost the Government, according to estimates obtained by the Rules Committee, I assume, from the Internal Revenue Service, and appears on page 28 of the report:

If all returns, individual and joint, should take full advantage of the one dollar checkoff, the total cost would be $117,370,000.

$117,373,000 is what would be brought into the public treasury for the political campaign or available for the political campaign.

But if the provisions of S. 3044 should get through the Senate and go through the House, it would take full advantage of the $2 checkoff, the cost would be $234,740,000. That is how much this little item of the checkoff would bring if everyone subscribed himself to it. Because it is not satisfied to leave the provision on a voluntary basis. According to the bill—and that is all we have before us—if the taxpayer does not specify that it is not to be checked off, then the bill would make that decision for him, and that decision, naturally, would be that the money is considered to be checked off. It does not cost the taxpayer anything at that point, other than as a member of the taxpayers public.

That amount is just a contribution to the public Treasury. It does not increase the taxpayer's income tax. It is simply taken from his tax liability. So there we see what is being done on the checkoff.

I am not a soothsayer, but I believe that it is just that it will cost the Government $234,740,000 in taxes, which amount is just a contribution to everybody takes advantage of it—suppose it could be located—$1,899,750 to each of the State of California, or either one of those two

That in order to come under the provisions of the checkoff, the party has to certify that they want to come under the provisions of the law, that keeps them from accepting private contributions in any amount.

The other possible mix, as is provided in the Senate bill:

With the expense of Presidential elections that we have observed, it seems that if Presidential elections are going to be conducted on the scale that they have been conducted in the past, $21 million would not be sufficient. How much better it would be to receive $5,400,000 in contributions than to receive $21 million or $22 million from the public treasury. I do not believe we are going to see money here authorized to the major parties come under the 1970 law on the checkoff. There is $42 million—$42 million to $44 million—by which Federal elections are already subsidized, or for which money is available for subsidy.

By the way, I might add that under another title in the bill, that would not be stricken out by amendment No. 1064, is a doubling of the checkoff. So the checkoff then would be $2 for a single person and $4 for a couple. We are already taking in enough to run a political campaign. What is the use of doubling the amount? By specifying a doubling, we will have changed the whole concept of it, because it is not a voluntary checkoff. This is Senate bill 3044 that is submitted to us to vote on. It provides for a doubling of the subsidy from $2 to $4 for a couple if a person does not check off the $2 or $4, he is then presumed to have checked it off. In other words, if he does not check it off, he is ruled to have checked it off, because he must have the checkoff to apply against him.

At my request, the Committee on Rules and Administration prepared or obtained some estimations of what these checkoffs are going to cost the Government. This is what it will cost the Government, according to estimates obtained by the Rules Committee, I assume, from the Internal Revenue Service, and appears on page 28 of the report:

If all returns, individual and joint, should take full advantage of the one dollar checkoff, the total cost would be $117,370,000.

$117,373,000 is what would be brought into the public treasury for the political campaign or available for the political campaign.

But if the provisions of S. 3044 should get through the Senate and go through the House, it would take full advantage of the $2 checkoff, the cost would be $234,740,000. That is how much this little item of the checkoff would bring if everyone subscribed himself to it. Because it is not satisfied to leave the provision on a voluntary basis. According to the bill—and that is all we have before us—if the taxpayer does not specify that it is not to be checked off, then the bill would make that decision for him, and that decision, naturally, would be that the money is considered to be checked off. It does not cost the taxpayer anything at that point, other than as a member of the taxpayers public.

That amount is just a contribution to the public Treasury. It does not increase the taxpayer's income tax. It is simply taken from his tax liability. So there we see what is being done on the checkoff.

I am not a soothsayer, but I believe that it is just that it will cost the Government $234,740,000 in taxes, which amount is just a contribution to everybody takes advantage of it—suppose it could be located—$1,899,750 to each of the State of California, or either one of those two.

That is a whole lot of public financing, right there. But that is not all. Look at the campaigns also financed by this proposed law. We are already authorized to appropriate $223 million. Already, under the law—of course, this bill tries to double it—it is already the law, if I am not mistaken, according to my recollection, that an individual under the present law is entitled to a tax credit of $12.50 for contributions he makes to a political candidate.

That can be in a Federal election, a State election, or county or city. I assume. It may be just for Federal elections—$12.50 as a credit; and, of course, a credit is a deduction from the tax. The credit comes off the taxes payable. If the tax bill was $100 before he applied this credit, it would take $12.50 off that amount. Well, that is fine. Then a couple has a $25 credit off of taxes. And that is all. I do not see any reason being that this provision allows an individual to make a contribution to a candidate of his own choice, someone with whose views, with whom he agrees, and not, as under the legislation that is before us, requiring a taxpayer to contribute to someone whose views he disagrees with.

All right. Say the taxpayer figures he could do better going the deduction route. They provide for everyone's convenience, so if he does not want to go the credit route on his contribution, he can go the deduction route, and under the deduction route, if I recall correctly, he can take a deduction from taxable income of $50, or a couple could take a deduction of $100 from taxable income.

The bill would double that, in addition to all of this other public subsidy, so that under the committee's bill the credit would be raised up to a $25 credit for an individual or a $50 credit for a couple filing a joint return, or a deduction of $100 for an individual and $200 for a couple filing a joint return.

So, Mr. President, they have several subsidies already for Presidential elections.

Now, to focus on the generosity of the Treasury as required by the bill to some of the politicians in California and New York, in effect, is to give a public subsidy as compared to the subsidy for those seeking the Presidential nominations of the various parties. What do they get there? Well, they are eligible candidates who come in with a proposal that they receive up to $250 each matched by the Federal Government, after they have collected, in contributions of that size, the sum of $250,000, which is equal to the three percent amount. So once they get the threshold amount, which is $250,000, then they go into the Treasury and pick up a check for that amount, $250,000, and then go on blithely seeking contributions, which the Government would match, up to the astounding sum of $7.5 million—$7.5 million for candidates. Then, if a candidate gets the nomination, $21 million or $22 million is available to him.

Is this campaign reform, Mr. President? It seems to me that it is just campaign spending and to strengthen the enforcement of the election laws.

Suppose candidates in the Senate—and there are several candidates for the Presidency in the Senate—about or potential—I doubt whether many candidates would collect much over $75 million to run for the nomination of their various parties.

Well, that should be fair for one as it is for the other. If they are all limited by the amount they can receive, what is wrong about that, leaving it in the private sector?

It would seem to me that this Federal subsidy just compounds the advantage that a well-known candidate or an incumbent in an office would have over his lesser, well-known opposition because, Mr. President, he could get more of the campaign contributions than could his lesser-known opponent and then the Government would match that increased amount.

Say a little-known candidate for the Presidential nomination can raise his $1 million on which to run for the Presidency, then all the Government will match him will be $1 million, but the well-known candidate, say he gets out and gets the whole $7.5 million, what is the Government going to do for him? Why, the Government will give him $7.5 million, so that he will end up with $15 million and the lesser well-known candidate will end up with only $2 million. So he is worse off than if the Government had not interceded to help him.

So if I were a lesser-known candidate—and certainly I would be that, if I became such a candidate—I would say, "Well, do not help me in that fashion by just compounding the advantage that my better-known opponent has, because with the help from the public Treasury the difference would be $7.5 million to my $1 million. But after you get through me on this public subsidy, the difference would be $15 million as against $2 million."

So, Mr. President, it has not helped the lesser-well-known candidate. As a part of my arithmetic, it would help the better-known candidate.

The better-known candidates, Mr. President, are those who are pushing for this bill, to get right down to brass tacks about who is doing and for whom they are not looking out for the lesser well-known candidates. That is obvious from the provisions in the bill.

What would qualify under this? Well, Governor Rockefeller would qualify, he would get cut and raise $75 million in eligible contributions and the Government would then make him a present of $7.5 million.

I remember when this bill was under discussion last year, the same provisions in the same bill, in a different form, of course, but it is there, nevertheless—and I remember Governor Rockefeller's visiting here on the Senate floor. The rules of the Senate permit a sitting Governor in office, the Governor of any of our 50 States, to come in on an election law. He has an automatic privilege of the floor. The Governor of my State, Governor Wallace, was on the Senate floor under that provision as was former Governor Rockefeller. He has been on the Senate floor under the automatic privilege of the floor that he has.

So Governor Rockefeller was here while that bill was under debate. Of course, it was only a coincidence that he was here. He probably did not know what bill was under consideration, but I remarked at that time that I noticed Governor Rockefeller was on the Senate floor and I supposed he had come down to pick up his $7.5 million check, thinking that this bill was about to pass. But it did not pass, and I doubt whether it will pass now. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, as I look about the Senate floor, I do not see anyone on the floor or in the Chair that is very strong for the bill, if at all.

I just wonder whether a whole lot of push and drive behind this bill has not deteriorated.

Right at that point, Mr. President, I notice here in the Washington Post, which I thought was sort of the Bible for the public finance people. I thought they were in the forefront of the drive for public financing; but not so, Mr. President. I declare, I was very much pleased at the conservative approach of the Washington Post to this problem. It makes me want to reconsider my position. But I am not going to pursue that until after we have disposed of the bill before I start reassessing my position.

support seems justifiable without much more careful thought.

So, Mr. President, I commend this editorial to the thoughtful consideration of my colleagues.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. The Senator from Alabama mentioned the legislation which the Senate passed last year. I agree, that was a very strong piece of legislation. I voted for it, and I do indeed, campaign reform as I visualize it.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes. It was so praised by many people who are now pushing this bill.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. That is a point I cannot understand. When many of the same people felt that that was such a splendid bill, such an important contribution to reforming campaign spending, why is it now that we do not even permit that legislation to go into effect before we try to branch out into an entirely different way, and begin to take money out of the pockets of the taxpayers to finance political campaigns?

Mr. ALLEN. That is a mystery to the Senator from Alabama also.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Would it not be logical to enact the legislation which the Senate has already passed, with a tight ceiling on campaign expenditures? It seems to me that it is important to put a ceiling on the amount of money a candidate can spend and a tight ceiling on the amount that any individual can contribute to a campaign and to see how that works out, before we talk about digging into the pockets of wage earners, taking money out of their pockets and turning it over to politicians to spend in a political campaign.

Mr. ALLEN. I certainly agree with the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Another thought that occurs to me, as the able Senator from Alabama wages his fight against what I agree with him is a piece of legislation that Congress should not enact at tis time, is this: The public thinks there is too much money amo n of politicians. Do the proponents contend that the public is just demanding that money be taken out of the Federal Treasury, from any tax dollars that have been paid in after working by the sweat of their brow, and be turned over to politicians to spend as they wish in a political campaign? I can hardly believe that the working people of this Nation are very much inclined toward that.

Mr. ALLEN. Little word of any such demand has reached the ears of the Senator from Alabama. He has not heard of any such demand. Far from it. As a matter of fact, the Senator from Alabama can safely say that, based on communication that has been received—and they have been in the modest thousands—the public has been at least 3 to 1 against any element of public financing.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. This measure has been opposed by a certain group and by certain potential Presidential candidates, I suppose. As to the group that is pushing it, I know many of the members of that group, and the ones I have had acquaintance with are fine, conscientious people. I know that something needs to be done to get campaign spending under control; and I agree thoroughly with that view.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I commend them for the interest they are taking in this matter. Where I differ with them is in the vehicle they would use.

The Senator from Alabama mentioned the legislation which, while not perfect, will meet most of the objections we have had in the past about the abuse of campaign spending—namely, by putting a tight ceiling on the amount a candidate can spend and a tight ceiling on the amount any individual can contribute.

I commend and congratulate the able Senator from Alabama for the work he has done in exposing what I believe to be the fallacy of the proposal before the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator from Virginia for his contributions at this time and for his many contributions throughout the discussion and the consideration of this issue. I believe he has put his finger right on the point, that the entire concept of campaign reform is to have strict overall spending limits, as he suggests, and to limit the amount of individual contributions that can be made. S. 372, as passed by the Senate, does impose such a limitation of $3,000 per person, per campaign. If we had such a rule during the last Presidential campaign, during the last general election, we would not have had some of the abuses that we did have.

So the answer is strict regulation and full disclosure of contributions and expenditures. That has not yet been tried. I feel that the proponents of this measure are trying to use the fallout from Watergate as an effort to push this type of legislation to a conclusion.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I commend the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) for the arguments yesterday. They were somewhat startling than the ones I had yesterday. These figures have come from three sources: The Clerk of the House, who has accumulated information about House races based on the 1972 reports; the Library of Congress, and their figures have come from Common Cause, as I understand it; and also from the GAO. It certainly should be the Recom and it should be of some interest, I would think, that in 1972 there were 7,000 candi dates in the United States who ran in primary and general elections to seek election for the House of Representa tives. The total amount spent by all of these candidates in all the races was $389,959,276. That is what was spent in 1972 without public financing.

Now, what does the GAO estimate will be the cost for House races, out of the public treasury for the first part, if this bill is passed? Well, that information is on page 27 of the committee report. The GAO estimates that the total cost for races in the House of Representatives, if this bill is passed and goes into effect, will be $307,984, or almost three times as much as the 1972 cost.

If the public understands this legislation I cannot believe they are going to think the $90,000 is anything—zero—with this coming out of their tax dollars.

Mr. ALLEN, I think they understand it a lot better than some Members think they understand it. I think that may be the case.

Mr. GRIFFIN, I was pointing out yesterday that every candidate for the House who is nominated is then automatically entitled to receive $90,000 out of the public treasury to run his campaign. A lot of people will say, “Well, he doesn’t need to spend it.” I guess that is true, but if one’s opponent is going to spend $90,000 out of the public Treasury, you do not have much choice other than to spend $90,000. It would greatly escalate the cost of campaigns.

To illustrate the point, I wish to put these figures in context, and they are based on information from the Clerk of the House of Representatives. In 1972, 8 percent of the candidates for the House of Representatives spent nothing—zero; 62 percent of the candidates spent less than $15,000 on their individual campaigns; and 36 percent spent less than $30,000. I am reading this slowly because I just want to make sure that this is understood. Seventy-four percent of all candidates who ran for the House in 1972 spent less than $50,000. Now, we are going to give all of them $90,000 out of the Treasury.

Mr. ALLEN, And that is to reform the election process.

Mr. GRIFFIN, That is to reform the election process. That will be great reform, will it not?

Mr. ALLEN, That is correct.

Mr. GRIFFIN, I just wish there were some of the proponents of the legislation here today to have to debate ourselves these important points as time runs out and we get close to the vote. But I certainly hope our colleagues will realize this is not doing the job.

Mr. McGOVERN, Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GRIFFIN, I am glad to yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. McGOVERN, I am curious as to whether or not the figures the Senator is citing represent the filings of the individual candidates. Does that include what the various committees spent on behalf of the candidates? When the Senator said a high percentage of candidates running last year spent less than $50,000 is he talking about all expenditures on just those the candidates personally filed?

Mr. GRIFFIN, As the Senator knows, even though in my opinion it was not nearly strong enough, in 1972 we did have in effect the full reporting—campaign spending in detail. For the first time Common Cause, the Clerk of the House, and others have been able to accumulate and put together the actual costs of what was spent in various campaigns.

It is my understanding that everything that was required to be filed under that law is reflected here, and that the GAO estimate is approximately on the same basis—encouraging us to go out and raise what he can in limited, direct contributions, from as many people as possible, up to a certain agreed upon limit, and then match that with public contributions, so that we reduce the dependence of that candidate either on his own personal fortune or on special interests.

The reason I am not fully defending the bill before us now is that I intend, at some point, as I say, if some other Senator does not do it, to offer a modification to this bill which will make it more acceptable to the Senator from Michigan and others.

Mr. GRIFFIN, I certainly respect the views of the Senator from South Dakota. Mr. CANNON, Mr. President, what will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN, I yield. Mr. CANNON, I think there is getting to be a misunderstanding here as to what I am actually doing. The bill as it exists would not permit any candidate for Congress to get $90,000 Federal funds in a primary.

Mr. GRIFFIN, Not in a primary.

Mr. CANNON, He has to go and demonstrate a public appeal, and there is a limit on the amount of those contributions. He is going to get up to 50 percent of $90,000. If you go beyond that limit, he is not going to get any Federal money out of the Federal Treasury. It seems a little absurd.

Mr. McGOVERN, Let me say I am not an advocate of full public financing of campaigns. At some point, if it is not done by another Senator, I shall offer a modification of this bill that would make impossible for anyone to get full public financing. What I would strongly prefer is a system where private citizens are allowed to make modest contributions to campaigns, and that would be matched by public contributions, up to a reasonable amount.

I am not going to debate with the Senator whether $90,000 is the right amount or not. I am not advocating the proposal for full public financing. I do not believe in it. I think in 1972 we demonstrated in the Democratic Presidential campaign that it was possible to raise a great deal of money from a large number of people, and do it in a very who doesn’t like and honest way.

Mr. GRIFFIN, That certainly is true. I think that in 1972 we demonstrated that a participant could get $90,000 when that sum really was not needed.

Mr. CANNON, The Senator was indicating a little earlier that a participant could get $90,000 when that sum really was not needed.

Last year, in 1972, in the House, 66 of the winners spent an average of $107,378. So they really spent more than $90,000. That was in the general election. In those 66 races, the losers spent an average of $109,900, so obviously $90,000 was not overly excessive.

It is true that 97 Members who were elected—but I might point out that they got from 70 to 90 percent of the vote, so it is obvious that they did not have a tough fight—spent an average of $38,729. In *c*ase like that, had this bill been in effect, they could not have spent more than $38,729.
March 27, 1974

S 1519

Mr. GRIFFIN. I disagree with the Senator.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator may disagree—

Mr. GRIFFIN. This bill would permit every candidate to get $90,000.

Mr. CANNON. Not if they spent an average of $38,729.

Mr. GRIFFIN. But if they spent it they could get it.

Mr. CANNON. If they spent it, they could get it, but I am pointing out that the average spent was $38,729. Obviously it was not a tough race in those cases, I think they got from 70 to 90 percent of the vote, which is true of them.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I certainly respect the views of the Senator from South Dakota, and two of his points have merit. But it seems to me that the Senator from Alabama, who seeks to strike tit for tat, would be more effective if he were to say something like this: the Senate from South Dakota is saying that public financing should go back to the drawing board for some more work and some more study. He is not satisfied with it himself, and I hope he will vote for the amendment.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. McGOVERN. I would like to direct a question to the Senator from Nevada, if he would like to comment on this point, and perhaps the Senator from Michigan would comment on it, too.

Would it be feasible to consider modifying the bill, so that the same principle we have operating in the primary would also operate in the general election? In other words, could we eliminate the possibility of 100 percent public financing, and put the whole thing, both the primary and the general election, on a matching basis, so that 50 percent of the funds are public and 50 percent would be private? It seems to me that that is a solid compromise, one that includes the very deserving principle of public financing and also preserves the private sector.

Mr. CANNON. To answer the question as to whether it would be feasible, it certainly would be feasible, just as in the bill we have matching for the primary. But the rationale of those of us who supported this form was that we would try to get away from private financing and go to public financing. That means that if we do not do it in this bill, then it is something like being a little bit pregnant. If the private financing is bad, we have a lot of it in the public. We get away from it now in the general election. There is no reason why we could not carry 't on a matching basis in the general election as well as having it in the primary.

I'd like to say in good humor to my friend from Michigan, frankly, that he suggests we eliminate this and go ahead with reform measures. We went 't with reform measures once before, in S. 372. It is still languishing in the House a year and a half after it had been passed and had become law, I do not think we would be back here arguing the private versus public financing features. I think S. 372 carried a lot of reform features, which made it less likely that we would have such abuses in the private sector.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, much as I admire the Chairman and his views, I do not follow his logic at all. If he is saying that if S. 372 had become law, we would not need public financing, I do not understand how the very concept of public financing, in essentially the same legislation, is going to make it easier to pass. The likelihood is that we will end with no reform at all. But if we will keep our focus on the fuller disclosure, the elimination of the special interest contributions, and those things that really need to be done, I think we can enact legislation that would really be reform in this Congress.

I, for one, am not ready or willing to close the door indefinitely on the concept of public financing. Perhaps it has some merit, but I certainly am not for the public financing title I, and I must oppose it.

If we wanted to venture into public financing or the Government might provide a set amount of broadcasting time for candidates in a general election, shortening the time of campaigns, and provide a fixed amount of time for each candidate to present his case, with the Government paying for it. Television, as we all know, costs are the biggest expense in a campaign.

Something like this has been done in Great Britain, and it has worked. If we took a modest step like this, it would be something that the people might accept. But they are not going to accept this.

Mr. CANNON. There are a number of reform features in this bill.

Mr. GRIFFIN. There are.

Mr. CANNON. The only importance I attach to public financing is that it gets the public contribution. A big contributor, under this bill, cannot have any undue influence and still come within the bill. That is where the reform issue comes up in public financing. It means that a candidate is not dependent upon big contributors.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The way to eliminate the big contributor is to put a definite ceiling, such dollars, on any amount a person can contribute.

I call attention to the remarks made a few minutes ago by the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, who pointed out that in his race for the Presidency most of his support came from small contributors. I do not think we should make it impossible for people to run for the House or the Senate, or even the Presidency, by putting a limit on the amount of small contributions.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator will recall that when this matter was under discussion before, our committee was charged with reporting a bill in this session that contained a reporting feature. But at that time we did check with the Senator from South Dakota, and it developed that while he got most of his support from small contributions, it was necessary to have seed money to operate the campaign. That is why the provision was included in the bill, and as the Senator pointed out or provided for the Recons, despite all the candidate's efforts to get a broad distribution, a reasonable opportunity to have some very large contributors to come in and provide the necessary seed money. But I do not know whether he is going to get it under this type of provision. I think the provision would be adequate in a Presidential race. At least, we put smaller limits in than we put in on S. 372, which passed the Senate. The concern is that if the public financing was enacted, we would not have the very loopholes we are taking care of in this bill. As a result, if that bill had been passed last fall, I do not think we would have the pressure now for public financing and other reform measures. That is my personal view.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Chairman for his statement and contributions to the debate. At the time of the earlier debate, in making a commitment to the Senate, it was thought that the Rules Committee would consider reporting a public financing bill, so that the Senate might have an opportunity to have this debate. I wrote the minority views against it in the report. I felt that it was an issue that should not be decided only within the Rules Committee; that it is such an issue of such importance that the Senate itself should have an opportunity to debate it. After performing that function as a committee member, I now oppose S. 372.

There is no reason of small contributions on one's tax return. When you are allowed that deduction, or I think it is even a credit under some circumstances, that is taking money out of the Treasury. That is public financing.

There is an important difference, however: you are able, under that system, to make your contributions and provide support to the candidates and the party of your choice. It seems to me that an important concept which is overlooked here when we talk about financing all of the political parties, is taxation without representation. It means that regardless of whether you favor candidates or your party, your tax funds are going to work toward their campaigns.

I do not think most people want that, or want this Congress to enact it.
Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, having made reference, as I did during my remarks, to the views that I included in the committee report, I ask unanimous consent that my statement of additional views as it appears beginning on page 89 of the committee report be printed in the Record at this point.

There being no objection, the excerpt from the committee report (No. 83-699) as ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. GRIFFIN

The astute political observer, David S. Broder, has summarized the current political atmosphere with a reporter's cynicism when he wrote: "The only thing more dangerous to democracy than corrupt politicians may be politicians hell-bent on reform."

In many minds, the idea of "public financing" has somehow become synonymous with "campaign reform." I am concerned that the reality may be very different.

Even though I have serious doubts about the public financing aspects of this bill, I joined in voting to report it because I believe the Senate as a whole should have an opportunity to debate and decide the issues raised by Title I. Furthermore, except for Title I, the bill contains many campaign financing reforms which are meritorious.

For example, I strongly support such provisions as those in other titles of the bill to create an independent Federal Election Commission, to place strict dollar limits on the amount an individual can contribute to a candidate or to campaigns in any year, to limit the amount a candidate can contribute to his own campaign, to restrict the size of cash contributions, to impose ceilings on overall campaign expenditures, and to require each candidate to use a central campaign committee and depository.

Such provisions truly represent campaign financing reforms, and they should be enacted on their own merit.

Unfortunately, public understanding has not fully recognized a facade of attractive slogans that has surrounded the promise of public financing for campaigns. As more and more light is focused on the approach of Title I in this bill, the more realisation there will be that it does not really represent "reform" at all. That will be particularly true as the people learn that "public financing" means "taxpayer financing," and when they see that Title I would actually increase, not decrease, the levels of campaign spending, particularly in races for the House of Representatives.

It should be noted also that a number of needed, real reforms have not been included in this bill. For example, I believe everyone—candidate or voter—ought to have the right to participate in the strides to shorten the duration of campaigns.

ROBERT P. GRIFFIN.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I am opposed to the pending amendment and ask the Senate to reject it. The amendment is very brief but its effect upon the bill would be to destroy it, for title I provides for the financing of Federal elections from the public funds. Without title I we would be left with the existing law as amended by the bill, S. 372, which the Senate passed last July 30 by a vote of 82 to 8.

The Committee on Rules and Administration labored long and hard to prepare this bill and it reflects days of public hearings on the subject of public financing and the reasons for proposing a system of public financing.

There is no need to repeat in detail or at great length the many arguments in support of public financing. Those arguments and the rationale are set forth at length in the committee's report beginning on page 4 and copies are on the desks of all Members of the Senate.

Excesses in contributions and expenditures evidenced in the 1972 campaigns demonstrated clearly that some candidates have no difficulty in raising vast amounts of money while others cannot raise enough to carry out an effective campaign.

The unfortunate ones either drop out or must accept the outside funds of wealthy individuals or special interest groups. When limits are set for contributions it becomes even more difficult for the little known candidate to raise necessary funds for his campaign.

This bill, and especially title I of the bill, offers a fair and reasonable opportunity to any citizen to seek nomination or election to Federal office if he possesses the necessary qualifications and meets the standards set by title I for public funding.

Public financing cannot be applied only to presidential elections because the private financing of primary elections would leave us with a situation in which the potential for a repeat of the scandals of 1972 is obvious.

A candidate could raise money from any source for use in a primary, if he had access to those sources, and, if he won he could then demand public funds to finance his general election campaign.

As the committee report states on page 6:

Unless primary election candidates can be relieved of the dependence on large amounts of private money, a system of public financing in general elections will only move the evils it seeks to remedy up stream to the primary phase of the electoral process.

The bill S. 3404 does not open the vaults of the Treasury to every candidate who enters a race. It requires him to demonstrate a genuine appeal to the electorate by raising a meaningful threshold amount in small private contributions. If he cannot raise the threshold he gets none of it.

The bill also furnishes public funding to major party nominees and only a proportionate amount to minor party candidates.

The thoroughness of the bill's provisions, the requirements which must be met prior to becoming eligible for public funds, the provision for private and public matching, and the option to go for either public or private financing, and the auditing and accounting, are all evidence of the painstaking concern of the committee for the public and the use of public money.

Public financing is the only answer to corruption in the field of political finance and to restore confidence in the electoral process.

I urge my colleagues to vote against the amendment.

Mr. President, on this subject, today's New York Times carried an editorial titled "The Time Is Now" and it emphasizes the need for public financing of all Federal elections—primary and general.

Further, it stresses fairness of the pending legislation, S. 3044, in offering public financing as an optional alternative to private financing.

I ask unanimous consent to have the editor's points printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

THE TIME IS NOW

Now is the time for a full and fundamental cleansing of the nation's outmoded, corrupt system of financing political campaigns with private money. Now is the time to break the stranglehold of wealthy individuals and of self-serving interest groups on a politician. Now is the time to bring into the open a smidge of public responsibility a system of publicly regulated and half-secret.

If Congress cannot reform the nation's politics in this sordid year of Watergate, when will there be a more opportune time?

The campaign reform bill awaiting action in the Senate is an admirable measure. It has bipartisan backing as well as support from ordinary citizens across the country. Senators Mike Mansfield, the majority leader; Robert Byrd, the majority whip, and John Pastore, the public citizen's commissioner, have given the bill stalwart Democratic support. On the Republican side Senator Hugh Scott, the minority floor leader, has been out in front urging action on reform.

The heart of the bill is a sharp reduction in the size of private contributions, and as an alternative, an optional form of public financing. Opposition to this reform concept comes from diverse quarters. President Nixon is opposed. Senator James Allen, Alabama Democrat, who serves as Governor George C. Wallace's agent in the Senate, is opposed. So are the right-wing Republicans led by Senators Barry Goldwater and Strom Thurmond. The biggest danger to the bill is a threat of a filibuster by Senators Allen with the backing of the Goldwater-Thurmond group. But this bluff can be called off if Senator Mansfield and Scott remain firm in support of the bill.

As with any innovation, the advocates of reform are vulnerable to the criticism that they are attempting too much. But primaries as well as general elections need drastic improvement; in many one-party states, the primary provides voters with an effective choice. It would make no sense to reform the financing of political campaigns at the general election level and leave House and Senate unreformed.

Rightrly or wrongly, Congress as well as the President suffers from a loss of public confidence in this Watergate season. The members of Congress will be making a serious miscalculation about their own political futures as well as the fate of the institutions in which they serve if they revert to business-as-usual. The people sense the need for reform and the people are heading toward.

The principles underlying the reform bill are simple: Presidential and Congressional primaries would be financed by matching grants. Thus, Presidential candidates would have to raise $250,000 in private contributions of $250 or less before they qualified to receive the matching sum of $250,000 from the Federal Government. Like climbing steps in a flight of stairs, the candidate would qualify for another quarter-million dollars each time he raised the same amount privately, or an over-all of approximately $16 million, half public and half private, for each Presidential candidate in the primaries.

The same principle would apply to House and Senate primaries except that the limit on contributions would be lower—$100 or less. On each step in the staircase would be lower, $25,000 in Senate races and $10,000 in the House. In general elections, the candidate would not apply. Candidates could finance their campaigns by pub- lic or private funds or any mix of the two as long as they stayed within an over-all ceiling.

The bill would not lock parties and candidates into a novel or rigid arrangement. Rather, it curbs the abuses of private financing and offers public financing as an alternate route to elected office. Since the old private route has become choked with scandal, it cannot—unreformed and unaided—serve democracy's need much longer. Now is the time to provide a public alternative.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, I wonder whether the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Cannon), will yield for a question of purposes of clarification.

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. BEALL. As I understand the provisions of this legislation with regard to public financing in the primaries, to be used in my State as an example, we are required to raise 20 percent of the primary spending limit in order to qualify for public financing, which means, as I read the charter, Maryland would be permitted primary spending of $272,000, that in the primaries we would be required to raise 20 percent of that amount of money, which is $54,000 in order to qualify for the 50-50 participation; is that not correct?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, as I understand what the Senator stated. In other words, the voting age population of Maryland is 2,720,000. So, using the 10 cents per voting age population in the primary, the amount that could be spent in the primary would be $272,000. If the candidate were required to raise 20 percent of that by private contributions in order to be eligible for the matching formula proposition.

Mr. BEALL. To pursue this matter further, in the State of Maryland we register by party. Assuming there are 1,600,000 voters registered, approximately, out of 300,000 are registered as Republicans. This means that I have to raise $54,000 from 300,000 Republicans, with a limit of $100 per contribution. Is that correct?

Mr. CANNON. The Senator could raise it throughout the country, and he need not raise it just from Republicans. So he would have the opportunity to raise it from any source, but the limit would be $100.

Mr. BEALL. I would hope that my services would be so much in demand that I could attract attention from all over the country and that I could attract attention nationwide.

As a practical matter, considering a first-time candidate, I am wondering how successful a candidate would be in raising funds from other than members of his own party if he were in a heated primary.

My next question is this: I cannot possibly see, quite frankly, if in the State of Maryland, for example, we were to have a heated primary in the Republican Party, which has only 300,000 members, how any candidate with a limit of $100 on a contribution could hope to raise $54,000 in order to qualify for the Federal participation. I don't think I could double the amount of money he received.

I am saying that the bill as now written puts an intolerable burden—as a matter of fact, a penalty—on a candidate of what is a major party in a minor party status, so far as registration figures are concerned.

Mr. CANNON. In the first place, I cannot agree with the Senator that out of a voting-age population of 2,720,000 there are only 300,000 Republicans.

Mr. BEALL. I know that there are, I live in Maryland, and I happen to be Republican, so I understand it. I am not only sorry but also a little ashamed of the paucity of the people who register in that party.

Mr. CANNON. If the Senator is correct on his figures and if he feels that in the State of Maryland he could not go out and raise $54,000, I will never have to spend money in an election campaign.

Mr. BEALL. As I understand the proposition, the Senator says, "Somebody else is going to get it not me," and that is true, if he can't spend public money in an election campaign, he is not going to support some other candidate would be entitled to another $54,000. If he raised $54,000, he would be entitled to another $54,000 from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. BEALL. But this is a nonincum- bent's bill, I would hope. This bill is not to perpetuate incumbents in office, much as we would like it to be. I thought the reason of this was to provide an opportunity to seek public office in the U.S. Senate or the House of Representatives, regardless of whether he is in office at the present time.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is not correct. This bill is not designed to give anybody the opportunity to seek public office. This is an election reform bill, to try to reform the electoral process by providing limits to reduce the influence of large contributions, and it is not directed toward either political party. So far as we can tell, it is not weighted toward either particular party.

If the Senator does not like the formula, I would suggest that he offer an amendment to change it.

Mr. BEALL. I think that is a good suggestion. I accept the suggestion. But the reason why I engaged in this coloquy is that I wanted to point out that I think there are inequities. The bill as now written, keeps people from running for public office who might otherwise do so.

Mr. CANNON. May I point out, in response, that it does not keep anybody out, because nobody has to qualify and receive Federal funds. Obviously, when the Senator ran the first time, he received no Federal funds, and he was able to raise private contributions and to com- petition with anybody. A candidate can do that at the present time, and he can do it under this bill. The bill would not change that one iota. But if one is going to compete for Federal funds under this bill, he has to demonstrate that he has some public appeal; otherwise, everybody who wanted to run would come in and say, "I want in on the pie."
by my supporters and hall by Uncle Sam, and any challenger would have to depend on fundraising. So has it been for hard to collect. So I would have a double advantage. Is that correct?

Mr. CANNON. Not a double advantage; but the situation is correct, that a man who cannot demonstrate the public support, cannot share in the public financing. That part of the Senator's statement is correct.

Mr. BEALL. Sometimes there is a difference between demonstrating public support and collecting money. Sometimes one can get the votes but not the dollars to back up their bids. What would happen in the case of the Bull Moose Party in 1912, when the Bull Moose candidate ran ahead of the Republican candidate on a splintered ticket. What opportunity do we have in that situation? This bill freezes the practice, it freezes the incumbent, and it has the possibility of reducing the vitality of our system.

Mr. BEALL. I am really more concerned about the party than the incumbent. I was not concerned about the party. But as Republicans we should be concerned about our Republican Party. After all, it is as presently written the incumbent is more the target of a party where there is an imbalanced in registration in the State has a tremendous advantage and I think it is an advantage to use the citizen's money raised for that purpose because I cannot imagine a challenger in the State of Maryland in a primary situation being able to raise the required $54,000 that would be necessary to pursue a primary campaign as an incumbent.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, today this Congress has the opportunity and responsibility to implement a lasting and comprehensive means to prevent corruption in politics. The purchasing of favors through private political contributions to campaigns has had a demoralizing effect on all public officials. Acceptance of funds is the beginning of a process that can only lead to a dilution of public service.

Last summer when the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1973 was being considered by the Senate, I indicated my support for a form of public financing. Last September I testified before the Subcommittee on Priveleges and Elections that emphasis in political campaigns should be on people, not on money. I further indicated that the public would not be ill-served to have some of its tax money reserved for the assistance of political candidates to public office. Such use of our tax money would improve the representational process by enlarging its scope, and invigorating the workings of democracy.

Only last month I joined in a colloquy with several of my distinguished colleagues to voice the potential of the traditional practice of campaign revenue raising is susceptible to much abuse and that an alternative to this abuse was the allowance for taxpayers to a checkoff on their Federal income tax for campaign purposes.

Last November, I was pleased that the Senate accepted an amendment to the debt ceiling bill to provide a means to implement this proposal, following a compromise by the House, a filibuster in the Senate, and a historic defeat session, opposition hardened and supporters of reform could not muster the third vote necessary to break the filibuster.

It must be emphasized that campaign financing is not a new issue. It is not a new issue for the Senate. My distinguished colleagues on the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, and the Rules and Administration Committee have spent many long hard hours to development of a bill that is comprehensive, but fair. S. 3044, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 is such a bill.

I commend my colleagues for their work in handling this delicate issue of public financing of campaigns expeditiously but with fairness to the exponents of all viewpoints.

Senator ALLEN is to be respected for his view on public financing of elections. Although I do not agree with his reasoning or conclusions regarding public financing, I certainly cannot dispute his sincerity.

I believe that Senator ALLEN is wrong in contending that title I of S. 3044 is a "raid on the Treasury." Rather, public financing as provided by this bill removes the specter of buying and placing undue pressure on public servants. Americans now only end up paying more for campaigns than they would by having tax dollars used for campaigns. Large contributions by representatives of large corporations come from higher prices of commodities that are purchased by the consumer. The higher the report price the higher the tax is proof of this. The only difference is that such increase in price is a subtle increase.

Certainly, I do not contend that public financing is a panacea to all the ills of campaigns. But it is a step in the right direction. Until individuals realize that favors will not be purchased by political contributions, politics in the eyes of Americans will not be restored to a place of honor and respect can be returned to public service.

I ask that my colleagues join in defeating amendment No. 1064 to S. 3044. Only through this means can we indicate our commitment to prevention of corruption evident in recent campaigns.
ate, is the new provision for the public financing of Federal elections that it always totally disagrees with those who claim public financing of elections is a diversion of public funds from important public activities. If the tragic drama called Watergate, which has unfolded for nearly 2 years in our newspapers and on our televisions, has made anything clear, it is that the public has no greater interest or priority than in assuring the integrity of those they elect as their public officials.

While I do not endorse every detail of this bill or feel it can be written on stone tablets for all posterity, I do agree completely with a basic objective that I believe its major provisions are reasonable. Obviously, any legislation of such significance will require very careful monitoring by Congress to be sure it is having the intended effects on our electoral process. This monitoring will lead naturally to the adjustments and fine tuning that always prove necessary as major new legislation is implemented. The Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974, the public financing title, affords all candidates an opportunity to obtain a certain amount of public funding from the Treasury of the United States. However, to receive such assistance, they must be able to demonstrate a reasonable amount of support from the electorate in the geographic area in which they intend to run for Federal office.

To qualify for public financing assistance in the primaries, a candidate must raise a specified amount of "earnest money" from contributions of $250 or less in the case of Presidential candidates and $100 or less for Senate and House candidates.

After the required threshold level of "earnest money" has been reached, public matching funds would be available on a dollar-for-dollar basis for each contribution of $250 or less for a Presidential primary candidate and $100 or less for a Senate or House primary candidate.

In the general elections, candidates may choose to receive all private contributions and all public funding, a blend of private and public funding, or, in the case of major party candidates, exclusively public funding.

The nominee of a major party would be able to receive full public funding of his campaign for election, up to the specified campaign spending limits. Minor party nominees would be eligible for public funding up to an amount equal to the percentage of the vote their party's candidate received compared to the votes cast for the candidates of the major parties.

The bill would also increase the value of the dollar check-off to $2 for individual and $4 for joint returns and provide that the designation be automatic, unless the taxpayer chooses to make such a designation. If the amount of designated tax payments to the fund do not result in a sufficient total amount to fulfill the entitlement of all qualified candidates, then the appropriate additional sums needed to make up the deficit.

The bill would limit individual contributions to a candidate, or committees operating on his behalf, to $3,000 for each election. It would limit the total contribution of an individual to all candidates in any calendar year to $25,000. And, it would require a contribution of a political committee to any candidate. A limit of $100 is placed on cash campaign contributions.

While the legislation before us includes a number of other significant reforms regarding campaign finance, I believe that the provisions relating to public financing of campaigns are of the utmost importance.

I have been a vocal advocate of expanded public financing of Federal elections for many years. As one who has been involved in almost all types of Federal elections, I can appreciate, perhaps more than some others, the importance of such a change in the financing of the electoral process. It was with this in mind that I sponsored the dollar for dollar amendment which was inserted into the Kennedy-Scott public financing amendment when it came before the Senate last July.

Mr. President, if the faith of the American people in their Government is to be restored, this vote to provide major party campaign finance reform legislation must be passed with its major public financing thrust intact.

There is no doubt that this reform measure is needed.

In politics, I have found that what is true is, regrettable, not always as important as what people perceive to be true. Those of us who run for office for public service to the nation will in the end be judged on the quality of our service to the nation. Only the voters will judge our service and the quality of it. As one who has been involved in almost all types of campaigns, I like them. But the most demanding, disgusting, depressing and disenchanting part of politics is its financial aspect.

Furthermore, in national elections it is literally impossible for the Presidential and Vice Presidential candidate to have control over or knowledge of campaign finances. All too easily you can become the victim of sloppy reporting or carelessness on the part of your committee or committees. Yet, in the public's mind, it is the candidate that is guilty of wrong-doing.

In my years of public service I have seen the cost of campaigns skyrocket to unbelievable levels. It is time we stopped making candidates for Federal office spend so much of their time, energy and ultimately their credibility, on the telephone calling friends or committees, meeting with people, and often times begging for money.

Scouring for funds to bring your case to the electorate is a demeaning experience. The bill before us today gives us our best chance ever of cleaning up our politics.

Frankly, Mr. President, the election of public officials is too important to our Nation, and an electoral process that is above suspicion is too precious to our people, to permit elections to be decided on the auction block of private campaign funding. Big money, large private contributions, and the amount of money a man can raise must not be permitted to continue as a key to election day success.

Mr. President, I am gratifying for one who has labored long in the vineyard of public campaign finance, and it should be very encouraging to all Americans, to see such a creative step toward cleansing our electoral process emerge with nearly unanimous bipartisan support from the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration. Chairman CANNON and his colleagues have done a laudable job and deserve our congratulations.

I hope that the Senate will support, in general, the committee's work, and provide the Nation with the leadership our people seek in restoring confidence in the integrity of their Government. It is not enough to tolerate lip-service to campaign finance reform. The time for us to act is now and the vehicle is before us.

We must act positively on the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 and authorize the extension of public financing to all Federal elections.

Some may say, "All the politicians are doing is taking care of themselves." Or they who should know better, have called it "taxation without representation" and "a diversion of public funds from important purposes."

But Mr. President, as one who has been to the "political wars" at the national level for 25 years, I say unequivocally that there is no more important use of public funds—no better insurance of effective representation that directly benefits our people—than to assure the integrity of our public officials and to tear away the veil of suspicion that shrouds every politician who must go to the marketplace to finance his candidacy.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, S. 3044 includes a number of campaign reform proposals tied together in a package that we are told will satisfy the public demand for reform and at the same time solve many of the problems that face our society. Some of the proposals that have been woven into this bill have merit and deserve consideration, but those that dominate S. 3044 are so deficient as to render the bill virtually unsalvageable.

Title I of S. 3044 is, I am afraid, chief among these. It is, of course, which incorporates public financing of Federal elections with strict expenditure limitations. The concept of publicly financed election campaigns has been the subject of serious discussion for some years now, but I am still far from convinced that it is an idea whose time has come or indeed, that it is an idea whose time should ever come.

The scheme incorporated into this portion of S. 3044 is quite intricate mechanically, but one that must be thoroughly understood both mechanically and conceptually before we go so far as to vote it into law.

Therefore, before I move into a discussion of what I see as the basic objections to the entire concept of public financing I would like to go over the provisions of the specific plan incorporated into title I of S. 3044.

Under title I tax money amounting to approximately $300 million every 4 years would be made available to finance or help finance the primary and general election campaigns of legitimate major and minor party candidates for all Federal offices.

A candidate seeking the endorsement of his or her party via the primary route must demonstrate his “seriousness” by raising a specified amount through private contributions before qualifying for Federal money. Once this threshold amount has been raised, however, the candidate becomes eligible for public matching funds up to the limit applicable to his race.

Candidates running in the general election for any Federal office are treated differently depending on whether they are running as major party or minor party candidates. Of some interest is the fact that the Presidential level a major party is defined as one that garnered 25 percent of the vote in the previous election. Minor party candidates may receive full public funding up to the limit applicable to their races.

A minor party candidate, on the other hand, may receive public funding only up to an amount which is in the same ratio as the average number of popular votes cast for all the candidates of the major party bears to the total number of popular votes cast for the candidate of the minor party. However, the minor party candidate must receive at least 5 percent of the vote to qualify for any funding.

Minor party candidates are allowed to augment their public funds with private contributions up to the limits set in the act and may receive post-election payments if they do better in the current election than they did in preceding elections.

The independent candidate or the candidate of a new minor party isn’t entitled to anything prior to the election, but can qualify for post-election payments if he draws well at the polls.

This plan, as indicated, is a few moments ago, to cost about $300 million every 4 years. The sponsors of S. 3044 would have given us believe that this money would be raised through an expanded tax checkoff provision such as the one now in our tax forms that permits us to designate that $1 of our tax money shall go to a Presidential Election Campaign Fund.

This strikes me as one of the most objectionable features of this entire scheme. The checkoff as modified by the authors of S. 3044 is a fraud on the American taxpayer. It is an attempt to give people a feeling that they can participate in deciding that the authors of this bill have no intention of letting them participate in. This provision alone would force me to vote against S. 3044.

As you may recall, the checkoff was originally established to give individual taxpayers a chance to direct $1 of their tax money to the political party of their choice, as use in the next Presidential campaign.

When it was extended by the Congress last year, however, the groundrules were changed so that candidates are not able to select the party to which their dollar is to be directed. They are simply allowed to designate that the dollar should go into the Presidential election campaign fund to be divided up at a later date. Thus, the taxpayer may still refrain from participating he may well be directing his dollar to the opposition party if he elects to participate.

A theoretical example will illustrate this. Let us assume that two candidates run in 1976 and that the money to be divided up amounts to $10 million. Half of this would go to a major candidate, but let us further assume that the 60 percent of this money or $6 million is contributed by Democrats. Under this set of circumstances a million Democrats would unwittingly be contributing to the campaign of a candidate they do not support and for whom they probably will not vote.

If S. 3044 passes things will get even worse. During the first year only 25 percent of the tax paying public elected to contribute to the fund. This disappointing participation was generally attributed to the fact that it was difficult to elect to participate. Therefore this year the form of the tax checkoff effort is being made to get people to participate.

As a result about 15 percent of those filing appear to be participating and while this increase seems to warm the hearts of those who have plans for this money it will not raise nearly enough money to finance the comprehensive plan the sponsors of S. 3044 have in mind.

Therefore they have found a way to increase participation. Under the terms of S. 3044 the checkoff would be doubled to allow $2 from each individual to go into the campaign fund. A taxpayer will no longer have to designate. Instead his $2 will be automatically designated for him unless he objects. This is a scheme designed to increase participation reminiscent of the way book clubs used to sell books by telling their members they would receive the month’s selection unless they chose not to. As I recall, Ralph Nader and his friends did not like this practice when book clubs were engaged in it and one can only hope that they will be equally outraged at the proposal that Uncle Sam join in the act.

But S. 3044 goes further still. If enough people resist in spite of the Government’s efforts to get them to participate, the Congress will be authorized to make up the difference out of general revenues.

So, after all is said and done, it appears that the checkoff is little more than a fraud on the taxpayer.

Let us move from the question of the way the money needed to finance this plan is to be raised to the question of the propriety of the spending limits that are an integral part of the plan.

Under section 504 of the bill we are debating uniform limits are imposed on incumbent and nonincumbent candidates alike. These limits will necessarily favor incumbent Presidents, Senators, and Congressmen because any incumbent has advantages that must be overcome by a challenger to be successful. How is a challenger to do this?

To overcome these advantages a challenger must spend money.

I have already indicated that I will call up an amendment designed to overcome this who has the money advantage over a challenger. I feel we must spend more than officeholders. Something of this sort strikes me as absolutely necessary at a time when Americans are becoming increasingly aware enough about Government in general and elected officials in particular.

Congressional and Senate incumbents have generally been fairly safe re-election blocs for a variety of reasons. Incumbency itself has been estimated to be worth 5 percentage points on election day, and I just do not think we should do anything that might be fairly interpreted as bringing us an even greater lock on our seats.

The $90,000.00 limit on House races imposed by this bill would have a similar effect. Indeed, my own analysis of a recent Common Cause study indicates that such figures in 1972 convinces me that this legislation is heavily in favor of incumbents and might therefore weaken the ability of our citizens to influence governmental decisions.

I have been discussing the specifics of title I and they are, of course, both interesting, and important.

I represent an attempt on the part of the Rules Committee to answer some of the specific problems that arise when one gets into the business of publicly subsidizing election campaigns.

We could discuss these specifics for days and I fear that we might find ourselves doing just that if we do not accept the Senator from Alabama’s amendment to strike the entire title. The problem is that a discussion of specific attempts to overcome problems that are merely symptomatic of a faulty approach to a much larger problem are a complete waste of time.

The scheme before us today like others that have been proposed in recent years seeks to be based on the assumption that private financing is an evil to be avoided at all costs.

I am afraid I have to reject that basic assumption. A candidate for public office is currently forced to compete for money from thousands of sources and the case of Presidential candidates—millions of potential contributors and voters.

Viable candidates rarely have trouble raising the funds needed to run a credible campaign and, in fact, their ability to raise money is one very good gauge of their potential popular support.

The problem is that a discussion of specific attempts to overcome problems that are merely symptomatic of a faulty approach to a much larger problem are a complete waste of time.

The scheme before us today like others that have been proposed in recent years seeks to be based on the assumption that private financing is an evil to be avoided at all costs.

I am afraid I have to reject that basic assumption. A candidate for public office is currently forced to compete for money from thousands of sources and the case of Presidential candidates—millions of potential contributors and voters.\n Viable candidates rarely have trouble raising the funds needed to run a credible campaign and, in fact, their ability to raise money is one very good gauge of their potential popular support.

As Congression Ralph Nader and his friends did discuss these specifics for days and I fear that we might find ourselves doing just that if we do not accept the Senator from Alabama’s amendment to strike the entire title. The problem is that a discussion of specific attempts to overcome problems that are merely symptomatic of a faulty approach to a much larger problem are a complete waste of time.
port they have to address themselves to issues of major importance to the people who will be contributing to their campaign and voting for them on election day. Public financing might allow candidates to ignore these issues, fuzz their stands, and run campaigns in which the important matters are subordinated to a "Madison Avenue" approach to the voters.

Consider a couple of examples. During the course of the 1972 campaign, it is reported by McGovern and other candidates forced by the need for campaign money to place greater emphasis on his support of a Vietnam pullout than his political advisers thought wise. They felt that he should have downplayed the issue and concentrated on others that might be better received by the electorate.

I do not doubt for a minute that the Senator for Minnesota, his position hurt him, but I wonder if we really want to move toward a system that would allow a candidate to avoid such issues or gloss over positions of concern to his constituents.

The need to court the support of other groups creates similar problems. Those who believe that we should maintain a friendly stance toward Israel, for example, who think a candidate should support union positions on a whole spectrum of issues want to know where a candidate stands before they give money and financial support. The need to compete for campaign dollars forces candidates to address many issues and I consider this vital to the maintenance of a sound democratic system.

Second, to the extent that these plans bar the participation of individual citizens in financing political campaigns they deny those citizens an important means of political expression. Millions of Americans now contribute voluntarily to Federal, State, and local political campaigns. These people see their decision to give money directly to Federal, State, and local political campaigns as their opportunity to participate and to express their political opinions.

They would still be contributing, of course, since the Senate proposal would cost them hundreds of millions of dollars in tax money. But their participation would be compulsory and might well involve the use of their money to support candidates and positions they find morally and politically reprehensible.

Third, and similar proposals combine public financing with strict limits on expenditures. As I have already indicated, these limits must, on the whole, work to the benefit of incumbents since they are lower than the amount that a challenger might have to spend presently in a hotly contested race if he wants to overcome the advantages of having a campaign agency.

Fourth, the various schemes devised to distribute Federal dollars among various candidates and between the parties has to affect power relationships that now exist. For example, money can only to the candidate you further weaken the party system. If you give money to the national party, you strengthen the national party organization relative to the State parties. If you are not extremely careful you will freeze out or lock in these are real problems with significant policy consequences that those who drew up the various public financing proposals tended to ignore. Many of these proposals were simply managed to make those less clear. They did not solve the problems.

Fifth, public financing will have two significant effects on third parties. First, with more money, it will discriminate against genuine new national third party movements—such as that of George Wallace in 1968—because such parties have not had the chance to establish a voting record of the kind required to qualify for pre-election financing. On the other hand, once a third party qualifies for future Federal financing, a vested, interest arises in keeping it alive—even if the George Wallace who gave it its sole reason for existence should move on. Thus we run the risk of financing a proliferation of parties that the parties we have historically enjoyed through our two party system.

In addition, S. 3044 and all similar plans raise important questions since they either ban, limit, or direct a citizen's right of free speech.

In this light it is interesting to note that a three-judge panel in the District of Columbia has already ruled portions of the law we passed in 1971 unconstitutional. As you will recall the 1971 act prohibited the media from charging for political advertising unless the candidate certified that the charge would not cause his spending to exceed the limits imposed by the law. This had the effect of restricting the freedom of individuals wishing to buy ads and of news papers and other media that might carry candidate advertising unless the candidate was willing to pay for the privilege.

The presumption that liberals and Democrats would benefit from the change is strengthened by the realization that money is just one of the sources of influence on a political contest. If access to large sums is eliminated as a potential advantage of one candidate or party by the provision of equal public subsidies for all, then the election outcome will likely be determined by the ability to mobilize other forces candidates illustrate the problem.

David Broder of the Washington Post noted in a very perceptive analysis of congressional campaign money last year that most members seem to sense that these reforms will, in fact, help a certain kind of candidate. His comments on this are worth quoting at length:

... The votes by which the public financing proposal was passed in the Senate had a marked partisan and ideological coloration. Most Democrats and most liberals supported both parties' public financing; most Republicans and most conservatives opposed both.

The presumption that liberals and Democrats would benefit from the change is strengthened by the realization that money is just one of the sources of influence on a political contest. If access to large sums is eliminated as a potential advantage of one candidate or party by the provision of equal public subsidies for all, then the election outcome will likely be determined by the ability to mobilize other forces candidates illustrate the problem.

That immediately conjures up, for Republicans and conservatives, the union boss, the newspaper editor and the television anchor man—three individuals to whom they are rather reluctant to entrust their fate of selecting the next President.

That legislation affects the way we select our representatives and our Presidents. It affects the relationship of our citizens to their legislators and to Government itself. It affects the party system that has developed in this country over nearly 200 years in ways that we cannot predict.

In other words, S. 3044 affects the very workings of our democratic system and could alter that system significantly.

Those in and out of Congress who advocate public financing are selling it as a cure for our political ills. For example, the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Kennedy, recently went so far as to say that—

Most, and probably all, of the serious problems among these candidates today have their roots in the way we finance political campaigns...
This statement reminds one of the hyperbole associated with the selling of New Frontier and Great Society programs in the 1960's. The American people were asked then to accept expensive and untried programs as panaceas for all our ills.

Those programs did not work. They were oversold, vastly more expensive than anyone anticipated, and left us with more problems than they solved. Public financing is a Great Society approach to another solution of public concern and, like other solutions based on the theory that Federal dollars will solve everything, should be rejected.

I intend to support the Allen amendment to strike title I and urge its adoption.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the Allen amendment which, if adopted, would strip public financing and the public from the Senate floor. As an officer of the Rules Committee which held long hearings and markup sessions before favorably reporting the bill to the Senate, I point out the entirely flexible and realistic approach it takes.

Supporters of the amendment claim that public financing, as proposed in title I, would place full Federal control over the election process. This is inaccurate.

A New York Times editorial said this morning:

The bill would not lock parties and candidates into a novel or rigid arrangement. Rather, it curbs the abuses of private financing and offers public financing as an alternate route to elected office.

I hope that the Allen amendment will be soundly defeated.

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, public campaign financing as envisioned in title I of S. 3044, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974, would not be a more serious threat to the Allen amendment. A few points of the criticism of the Senate Finance Committee and they are pertinent.

For example, the Committee for an Effective Congress, their expenses to the Senate, have made these remarks at a hearing before that Committee for an Effective Congress, their expenses to the Senate Finance Committee and they are pertinent.

That this issue has been considered for May 6, and if the Senate Finance Committee did not oppose the measure, it is not now.

But what is proposed in title I is not a more serious threat to the Allen amendment. Instead, it is a more reasonable and sensible approach to the financing of political campaigns.

Mr. President, I am aware, of course, that this issue has been considered for many years in Congress. In fact, I would point out that in June 1967, Russell D. Hemenway, national director of the National Committee for an Effective Congress, made these remarks at a hearing before the Senate Finance Committee and they are pertinent.

The NCEC wishes to be on record as opposed to reforms of existing abuses since our political system needs constant monitoring and reform. It is time that the Federal government has acted to correct some of those abuses. But what is proposed in title I is not a single adjustment or correction. Instead, we have recommended a more reasonable approach to financing Federal elections.

minor parties then it has effectively chosen to perpetuate existing political arrangements.

If Congress can manipulate funding in such a way to make it impossible for groups to participate in the political process.

If the Congress can limit expenditures it can limit them to the point where the opportunity to express a view is severely restrained.

If the Congress can do all this in the name of “campaign reform” then surely we have taken a major step in eroding our political freedoms.

It is for these reasons that I oppose title I of S. 3044 and will support the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Alabama, Senator ALLEN.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I refer to no one in acknowledging the need for election campaign reform in many areas. As a Member who has served on the Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities, the so-called Watergate committee, I can vouch for that firsthand.

I have supported legislation designed to achieve campaign reform, including limiting amounts of money that may be contributed and spent in political campaigns, reporting and disclosure of campaign contributions and expenditures, and provisions for enforcement of the law to ensure that the election process in our free society is not subverted.

It was before Watergate and campaign reform became highly charged household words, I sponsored legislation to allow tax credits or tax deductions for modest contributions to political campaigns in an effort to broaden the base of public political support.

However, I draw the line on public financing of Federal election campaigns. This is not campaign reform. It is another blatant attempt to poke the long arm of the Federal Government into an area where it has no business.

It is an effort to destroy the freedom of the American people to choose in the election process.

It is an effort to deny the American people freedom of expression in the support or non-support of candidates for public office.

It would constitute a raid on the Federal treasury, at a time when our country and hard-working taxpayers are caught in the grip of rampant inflation, when we are unable to even come anywhere near balancing the budget, and when we can not make both ends meet on programs already included in our budget.

What we have before us today is a program that is neither needed, desirable, or in the best national interest.

The right to vote is as sacred a right that the American people have in our free society. Voting is an expression of support of a particular candidate for public office and an endorsement of his views at the ballot box.

A citizen’s contribution to the election of a particular candidate is likewise an expression of support. To make such a contribution in giving such a contribution is in my estimation also a sacred right.

How a free citizen casts his vote and how he supports a candidate of his own choosing is a decision only that citizen can make. No one has a right to make that decision for him.

A citizen can support this candidate or that candidate. Or, he can choose to support no candidate. That is his right in our system of free elections.

I know of no American taxpayer who fully understands the situation who would agree to having his tax money spent on the political candidacy of a person whose views were totally repugnant to him. I certainly do not want my tax money spent that way.

Yet, that is precisely what would result from public financing of Federal election campaigns.

It is unthinkable that the Federal Government would presume to tell voters and taxpayers how they ought to contribute to political campaigns. Yet, that would be the effect of this legislation.

It would cut both ways. If I were an arch conservative, I would not want my money going to the political candidacy of an arch liberal. If I were an arch liberal, I would not want my money going to the political candidacy of an arch conservative.

Such an idea as this flies in the face of everything I understand about freedom to choose in the electoral process. Under S. 3044, there is flexibility—a candidate can select the mix of private and public funds he wants for his campaign, subject to a 40-40-20, and is not obliged to accept public funds on an all-or-nothing basis.

For that reason, I am opposed to alternative proposals such as the McGovern amendment, which would turn public financing for general elections into a compulsory “mixed” system of partial public funds and partial private contributions, with or without matching grants.

I hope the Senate will kill this legislation.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, with regret, I find it necessary to oppose the McGovern amendment. I believe would be an unfortunate backward step in our progress toward reform.

Contrary to some reports, the public financing provisions of S. 3044 are in no sense mandatory. The bill does not prohibit private financing, and it certainly does not prohibit small private contributions.

In fact, it provides strong incentives for small contributions in primaries, since it offers matching public funds only for the first $250 in private contributions for Presidential primaries and the first $100 in primaries for the Senate and House.

Private contributions also have a role to play in general elections, since major party candidates will have the option of relying entirely on private funds, entirely on public funds, or on any combination of the two.

And in both primaries and general elections, the bill provides new incentives for small private contributions by doubling the existing tax credit and tax deduction available for such contributions.

In these respects, the bill recognizes the vigorous differences of opinion on the proper role of small private contributions. Some feel that public finance contributions are an essential method for bringing citizens into the system and encouraging popular participation in politics.

Others, like myself, feel that there are better ways to bring people into the system than by reaching for his pocketbook, and that the best way to a voter’s heart is through his opinions on the issues, not through the dollars in his wallet.

As it should be, the bill accommodates both views, letting each candidate “do his own thing,” without forcing any candidate into a rigid formula for financing his campaign.

In this respect, S. 3044, is an improvement over the 1971 dollar checkoff law, which prohibits a person who accepts public funds from taking private contributions. Under S. 3044, there is greater flexibility—a candidate can select the mix of private and public funds he wants for his campaign, subject to a 40-40-20, and is not obliged to accept public funds on an all-or-nothing basis.

vate contributions, but they prove only that such fund-raising may work in the unique circumstances involved in those campaigns.

They do not prove that the method will work when every Senate, House and Presidential candidate is tapping the pool of private contributors.

The net result of such a system applied to all elections may simply be to put a premium on the best-known candidate, or the candidate who starts the earliest, and to the best direct-mail expert as his fund-raiser.

Nor would it be desirable, in my view, to adopt a program of matching grants for small private contributions as the form of public financing for general elections.

In the case of primaries, a system of matching grants is appropriate and is the method adopted by S. 3044. In an election the primary is the only realistic method of public financing in primaries, since it is the only realistic way to identify those who are serious candidates. The candidates who deserve public funds are those who have demonstrated broad appeal by raising a substantial amount of private funds from small contributions. Thus, if any public financing of primary elections, it must be accomplished through matching grants.

In the general election, however, the nomination process has already identified the major party candidates who would serve public funds. It is appropriate, therefore, as S. 3044 provides, to give them the full amount of public funds necessary to finance their campaigns, with the option for every candidate to forego all or part of the public funds if he prefers to run on private contributions.

Thus, full public funding in the general election gives a candidate maximum discretion in running his campaign, an extra layer of private spending is allowed, all candidates would be obliged to raise the extra amount as a guarantee that they would not be outspent by their opponents.

As a result, all candidates would be forced into the mandatory straight-jacket of spending time and money to raise small private contributions, even though many candidates would prefer to spend that time and money in more productive ways in their campaigns.

A system of matching grants in general elections would be especially dangerous to the existing two-party system, since it might encourage splinter candidates—for example, a candidate narrowly defeated in a primary would be encouraged to take his case to the people in the general election as an independent candidate or as a third party candidate. Under S. 3044, by contrast, a third party candidate with no track record from a past election would still be able to obtain public funds, but only retroactively, on the basis of his showing in the current election.

Thus, in its provisions offering full public funds on an optional basis for general elections, S. 3044 avoids the waste, pitfalls, and obvious dangers to the election process of a mixed system of public-private financing or a system of matching grants, and I urge the Senate to reject the McGovern amendment.

Mr. President, in closing, let me add one other point.

Mr. President, today's New York Times contains an excellent editorial supporting the public financing legislation now before the Senate.

The editorial makes particularly strong support to two of the most important aspects of the bill—the provisions extending public financing to Senate and House election, and the provisions making public financing available for primary elections as well.

In addition, the bill praises the leaders of the Senate who have done so much to make this legislation possible. Senator Mansfield, Senator Robert Byrd, Senator Pastore, and Senator Hugh Scott, mentioned in the editorial, have played a vital role in bringing this issue to the floor of national debate, and I am pleased that the editorial recognizes their important contribution.

In particular, I am pleased at the editorial's election of the central role played by Senator Hugh Scott, the distinguished minority leader of the Senate, who has done so much to lay the genuine bipartisan groundwork that will make this reform possible.

Over the years, Senator Scott has been an outstanding advocate of all aspects of election reform, and I all of us in the Senate can join in taking pride in the effective contributions he has made to the cause of integrity in Government and to fair, honest, and clean elections.

I ask unanimous consent that this editorial be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Mar. 27, 1974]

Thomas A. Nye

Now is the time for a full and fundamental cleansing of the nation's outmoded, corrupt system of financing public elections with private money. It is time to break the stranglehold of wealthy individuals and of self-seeking interest groups over the nation's policies. It is time to open the sunlight of public responsibility to the half-public, half-secret system our nation's political leaders have created in the sordid year of Watergate, when will there be a more opportune time?

The campaign reform bill awaiting action in the Senate is an admirable measure. It has bipartisan backing as well as support from ordinary citizens across the country. Senators George McGovern, Robert Byrd, John Pastore, the party's chief spokesman on this problem, have given the bill strong Democratic support. On the Republican side Senator Hugh Scott, the minority floor leader, has been out in front urging action on reform.

The heart of the bill is a sharp reduction in the size of private contributions and, as an alternative, an all-out, full-frontal assault on public financing. Opposition to this reform concept comes from diverse quarters. President Nixon is opposed. Senator Albert Gore, the Alabama Democrat, who serves as Governor, George C. Wallace's agent in the Senate, is opposed. So are many right-wing conservative Republicans led by Senator Barry Goldwater and Strom Thurmond. The biggest danger to the bill is the threat of a filibuster by Senator Allen with the backing of the Goldwater-Thurmond group. But this bluff can be called if Senators Mansfield and Scott remain firm in support of the bill.

As with any innovation, the advocates of reform are vulnerable to the criticism that they are attempting too much, as well as general elections need drastic improvement; in many one-party states, the provides an extraordinary effective choice. It would make no sense to reform the financing of political campaigns at the Presidential level and leave House and Senate unreformed.

Rightly or wrongly, Congress as well as the Presidency suffers from a loss of public confidence in this Watergate season. The leaders of the Senate will make a serious misjudgment about their own political prestige as well as the effectiveness of their recommendations, in which they serve if they revert to business-as-usual. The people sense the need for reform, and the people's sense needs heeding.

The principles underlying the reform bill are simple: Presidential and Congressional primaries would be financed by matching grants. Thus, Presidential aspirants would have the chance to raise $250,000 in private contributions of $50 or less, and then be reimbursed to receive the matching sum of $250,000 from the Federal Government. Like climbing steps in a flight of stairs, the candidate would qualify for another quarter-million dollars each time he raised the same amount privately. There would be a ceiling of approximately $15 million, half public and half private, for each Presidential candidate in the primaries.

The same principle would apply to House and Senate primaries except that the limit on contributions would be lower—$100 or less—and the ceiling would be $25,000 in Senate races and $10,000 in the House. In general elections, the matching principle would not apply. Candidates could finance their campaigns by public or private funds or any mix of the two as long as they stayed within an over-all ceiling.

The bill would not look parties and candidates into a novel or rigid arrangement. It grants, it curbs the abuses of private financing and fosters public financing of a political candidate to an elected office. Since the old private route has been choked with scandal, it is not—unrestricted that we can serve democracy's need much longer. Now is the time to provide a public alternative.

Mr. McGovern, Mr. President, I have a perfecting amendment at the desk on the section in the Senate from Alabama proposes to strike. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 10, line 19, following the word "too", insert the word "one-half".

Mr. McGovern, Mr. President, the thrust of this amendment was designed by the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Symons). It embraces a principle which I very strongly endorse, which is to combine the concept of public financing with limited private financing. I think something they are attempting too much, as well as general elections need drastic improvement.
lished as a nominee of his party, he is at that point authorized to receive one-half of the amount of expenditures that the bill permits, rather than the full amount. The remaining half he would have to take out of private contributions under the restrictions that this bill implies. It would have the advantage of giving the candidate the incentive to take his case out to the people, and it would have the advantage of permitting an average citizen to make an investment in the candidate of his choice.

It would reward candidates with broad grass root support. It would strike a favorable balance between those who say, "No public financing at all," and those who want to go the whole distance with public financing. I hope very much the Senate will adopt the amendment. I hope the Senator from Alabama will see it as an improvement over the section of the bill. He is opposing to strike and that he might abandon his idea on this portion of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator understands, I am sure, that under the checkoff provision, there is already available 100 percent financing up to the amount set in this bill in Presidential races. Would the Senator's amendment cut that figure in half? There already is a $21 million subsidy available to each party in 1976. Mr. McGOVERN. It would bear no on that. It would relate only to the language of the present bill.

If he could get one-half under this provision, how could he then get all under the other since it is all coming out of the public Treasury? Is it not?

Mr. McGOVERN. Yes, but this bill provides for a different method to finance campaigns. It applies not only to the Presidency but all Federal offices. I think the language would not have any impact other than to require the candidate to get one-half from private sources.

Mr. ALLEN. No, it does not say that. It would give one-half from the public Treasury of his overall limit. It does not require a single dime to be paid in private contributions.

Mr. McGOVERN. That is correct; but if you wanted to spend the total amount under the bill he would have to raise one-half from private sources.

Mr. ALLEN. It looks like the candidate would have the option to proceed under the checkoff, which would give him $21 million without matching, or to proceed under this provision, which would give him $10.5 million with public funds.

Mr. McGOVERN. May I ask the Senator what would be the impact of his own amendment in terms of the checkoff system?

Mr. ALLEN. It would leave the checkoff system exactly where it is now. It would have no effect on it.

Mr. McGOVERN. I cannot see where this affects it, because it does not relate to that language.

Mr. ALLEN. The reason is that there would be no wording there at all for such provision.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from South Dakota have the floor after disposal of the amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, what was the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the Senator from South Dakota have the floor following the vote.

Is there objection to the request?

Mr. MANSFIELD. On the Allen amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair assumed that the unanimous consent first was on the McGovern amendment.

Would the Senator from Montana restate his unanimous consent request?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I ask for the yeas and nays on the Allen amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan will state it.

Mr. GRIFFIN. What are we going to vote on first?

Mr. MANSFIELD. On the Allen amendment No. 1064.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the Chair assume what the vote will be on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. GRIFFIN. So the vote will be on the Allen amendment, but on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota to the Allen amendment. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan is correct. The vote on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota takes precedence.

The hour of 3:30 having arrived, the Senate will proceed to vote on the McGovern amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President—

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I move to lay the McGovern amendment on the table.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, in view of the fact that we are speeding things up a little, I would hope, in the interest of expediency, that we could agree on a 10-minute vote limitation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The vote now is on the motion to table the McGovern amendment. Is that correct?
Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is absent on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AXEN) is absent because of illness in his family.

I further announce that the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND) is necessarily absent.

On this vote, the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AXEN) is paired with the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE). If present and voting, the Senator from Vermont would vote "aye" and the Senator from Minnesota would vote "nay."

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) and the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND) would each vote "aye."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 61, as follows:

EXTENSION OF THE CHECK FORGERY INSURANCE FUND

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 717, H.R. 6274.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARZTLER). The bill will be stated by title only.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 6274) to grant relief to payees and special indorsees of fraudulently negotiated checks drawn on designated depositories of the United States by extending the availability of the check forgery insurance fund, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none and the Senate will proceed to its consideration. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The second and subsequent reading of the amendment is dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the second and subsequent readings of the amendment be dispensed with.

amount in this special fund to cover the cost of the election campaign of Presidential candidates in our biennial year. I believe that this response indicates that the American people are dedicated to ending the dominance of big money and other contributions in political campaigns.

I do not maintain, of course, that the bill before us is perfect in every way. It provides, for example, for virtually 100% public financing in general election campaigns for Congress. I believe that this degree of public support is unnecessary. The goals we seek could be reached by a moderate degree of public financing, and permitting candidate to supplement this public contribution by small private contributions. I believe our goal should be to insure that all serious candidates have an adequate amount of funds, but this does not mean that all such candidates must receive all their funds from public sources.

Despite the weaknesses and others more minor in nature, I believe that this bill would inaugurate such vast improvement over the current way in which political campaigns are financed and conducted that it is justifiable to support it. I am not to say that changes cannot be made. In fact, I hope that some amendments will be adopted on the Senate floor. I am sure that further changes will be made by the House, if it ever acts, and by the House-Senate conference. I hope that these will be wise changes.

In any case, however, I believe the time has come for the Senate and the Congress to work its will. Every one of us knows the realities of American politics. Every one of us knows the fine line—a line so fine it is almost appears imaginary—which all candidates are forced to tread. And every one of us knows that we can enact legislation to reform campaigns.

Let us not, therefore, slash away at what little confidence and trust the public still has for public officials and the political system by playing games with Mr. Griffin. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the title V of the pending bill be stricken. The Chairman of the Finance Committee, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana (Mr. Long), whose committee has jurisdiction of the subject matter of title V, intends to give the highest priority to this proposal on the first available vehicle that originates in the House Ways and Means Committee.

Senator Long is the originator of the proposal on the floor of the Senate committee for public financing. The action I am proposing will now assure proper treatment of this measure in the House.

Mr. Griffin, Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I do not believe I will object—but could we have a short quorum call?

Mr. Mansfield. Sure you.

Mr. Griffin. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant Legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. Griffin. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. Griffin. Mr. President under my reservation, I want to indicate that when the unanimous-consent request was made the other day, I indicated to the distinguished majority leader, I objected not particularly because I personally opposed the request, because I certainly think that title V does appropriately belong in the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee, but because there had not been opportunity for those on this side of the aisle to know that that important step with respect to the legislation was going to be taken and that it would be taken by unanimous consent.

Now there has been notice, and those on our side who have or before the interest have had the opportunity to register that interest. There has been no indication of opposition and, under those circumstances, I withdraw my reservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Montana?

The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. Mansfield. I thank the distinguished acting Republican leader.

Mr. Mansfield subsequently said:

Mr. President, just to make sure, in connection with the unanimous-consent request I made relative to striking title V, if an unanimous consent that it be referred to the Committee on Finance, and all amendments thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. Griffin. Mr. President, in connection therewith, I was going to ask that the amendments at the desk to title V also be referred.

Mr. Mansfield. All amendments thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair observes that part of a bill cannot be referred, but it could be reduced to a separate bill and then referred.

Mr. Mansfield. I will undertake that responsibility, on behalf of the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. Long), and introduce a bill, which will, therefore, negate a request that it be referred to the Committee on Finance at this time.

MR. GRIM. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee be authorized to have until midnight tonight to file its report on S. 384.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bartlett). The Chair, on behalf of the Vice President, in accordance with Public Law 85-179, appoints the Senator from Maryland (Mr. Long) and the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Muskie) to the American Revolution Bicentennial Board.

SENIOR HARRY F. BYRD, JR., ON DETENTE

Mr. Nunn. Mr. President, my good friend and colleague, Senator Harry F. Byrd, Jr., recently made an excellent speech on the floor of the Senate concerning the policy of detente. I invite the attention of my colleagues to four excellent editorials in newspapers regarding this speech. Senator Byrd is one of the outstanding Members of this body and his position as a Member of the Senate Armed Services Committee and the Finance Committee has given him an excellent perspective of both the national security and the financial dangers of detente.

Senator Byrd's warning to our Nation should be read by every man in this body, and the well written editorials bring due attention to his well made points.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following editorials be printed in the Record:

AGAINST GIVEWAYS

The policy of detente—a relaxation of tensions—with the Soviet Union is generally regarded as a signal accomplishment of the Nixon administration, whose fate in foreign affairs, yet, as U.S. military strategy has undergone. Detente is looking more and more like a give-and-take proposition: we give and the Soviets receive.

In an astute and comprehensive analysis, Senator Byrd said that "while the Russian leaders have signed agreements with the United States, we must remember they have received far more than they have given. This is true both in trade and in arms."

As evidence that the Soviets operate on the principle that they receive more than they give, the Virginia senator cited the American-Soviet agreement signed in 1972 in which the United States now appears to have gotten the short end of the line.

(1) The grain deal. Not only did Wash-ington sell Moscow wheat at cheap prices of $20 a ton—a small crop failure, but it provided a $300 million subsidy to sweeten the deal for the Communists. So that when our world is hungry with a comfortable surplus while Americans confront rising grain prices and a possible shortage of bakery products, American aid made it easier for the Russians to spend more on the weapons.

(2) The Land-Lease settlement. The Nixon administration agreed to let Russia sell its remaining $5.6 billion world War II debt to us for $1 billion—about 18 cents on the dollar. But the Soviets stipulated that this money would not be used to pay off World War II debts, or a small part of their debt—to American taxpayers. Since a majority of Congress now appears to be opposed to giving Moscow most-favored-nation treatment, the Soviets may be obliged to repay only $468 million of a $2.8 billion debt.

(3) The Strategic Arms Limitation Talks. SALT-I permitted the Russians numerical superiority in intercontinental missiles, submarine-launched missiles, and missile-carrying submarines. The U.S. ace in the pack is supposed to be technological superiority. But the Soviets are now feverishly developing new, sophisticated weapons, including long-range missiles capable of carrying multiple independently-targeted reentry vehicles. With its technological edge rapidly being eroded, the U.S. could find itself in a clearly inferior strategic position vis-a-vis the Soviet Union, and such a result could only achieve the original communist objective of gaining worldwide domination.

The much-publicized plight of exiled Russian dissident Nikolai Solomentsev, who has reminded Americans of the basic nature of the regime with which our government is dealing. But shameful as it was, the Solomentsev affair is a point of departure for an up-or-down decision on detente. Agreement and commerce work as well for the Soviets as for us. How is this nation's welfare, I ask? Personally, I believe it is promoted at least as much as the Kremlin's. As Senator Byrd pointed out, there is gone to doubt in the West, with the two superpowers, that at present there is such a two-sided flow of benefits from detente.

The senator went on to suggest that President Nixon and Secretary Kissinger ought here and now to decide an end to detente. But it is high time that some advantages could be given to the Soviet Union. They have made it clear that arms deals with the Soviets. A good place for our negotiators to start is with this.

The heart of detente is not in the end to detente. It is in the good faith with which we will deal with the Soviets. It is in our determination to send a signal to the rest of the world that we are now understanding the complexities of detente in favor of equality between the two superpowers.

Lenin invented the book-burning censorship that is used today to send political dissidents, prisoners, and schools into exile. The used book trade flourished in the Soviet Union. Brestine did in Czechoslovakia. Neither of them is the main aim of world Communist domination.

Lenin once said the capitalists would sell the Communist the bullet with which the Reds would hang them. That's just what the Soviets are trying to pull off now. We would be fools if we read it for again.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN REFORM AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate, I understand that the Senator from Alabama has an amendment that he is ready to offer and on which he is willing to agree a very short time line in the conference in connection with the pending measure. S 3044. Senator Buckley has made an in-depth study of this measure, and the questions and answers in this article are very illuminating.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the interview be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

S 3044 IS THE BILL THAT INCLUDES PUBLIC FINANCING OF PRESIDENTIAL, SENATE AND HOUSE CAMPAIGNS

Q. S 3044 is the bill that includes public financing of presidential, Senate and House campaigns. What is your reaction to this bill?

A. That's right. The bill that we will soon debate includes provisions that would allow candidates for any federal office to draw on public funds to finance their campaigns. This system would replace the essentially private system now in effect and would cost the American taxpayer some $38 million every four years.

More importantly, however, this scheme presents us with some constitutional and practical questions that I hope will be fully debated on the floor of the Senate before we vote.

Q. Why do you object so strongly to public financing?

A. I object because I am convinced that such drastic measures are needed to clean up the problems we confront, because I suspect that the proposals as drawn are unconstitutional and because if implemented they would alter the political landscape of this country in a way that many don't even suspect and very few would support.

Those in and out of Congress who advocate public financing are selling it as a cure-all for our national political ills. For example, Sen. Kennedy recently went so far as to say that "most, and probably all, of the serious problems that we have today have their roots in the way we finance political campaigns."

This statement reminds me of the hyperbole associated with the selling of New Frontier and Great Society programs in the 60s. The American people were asked then to accept expensive and untested programs as panaceas for all ourills.

These programs didn't work. They were oversold, vastly more expensive than anyone anticipated, and left us with more problems than they solved.

Public financing is a Great Society approach for our political problems of public concern and like other solutions based on the theory that federal dollars will solve everything should be rejected.

Q. In what ways should public financing alter the political landscape?

A. In several very important if not totally predictable ways.

First, under our present system, potential candidates must essentially compete for private support. This support, they have to address themsevies to issues of major importance to the people who will be contributing and then, upon selecting a candidate, voting for them on election day. Public financing might allow candidates to ignore these issues, funneling their efforts into designing a system in which intelligent debate on important matters is subordinated to a "Madison Avenue" approach of the voters.

Let me give you a couple of examples. During the course of the 1972 campaign, it is reported that Sen. McGovern was forced by the need for campaign money to place greater emphasis on his support of a Vietnam pullout than his political advisers thought wise. They felt that he should have downplayed the war and concentrated on others that might be better received by the electorate.

I don't doubt for a minute that the senator's emphasis on his Vietnam position hurt him, but I wonder if we really want to move toward a system that allows a candidate to avoid such issues or gloss over positions of concern to millions of Americans.

The need to court the support of other groups creates problems for those who believe that we should maintain a friendly stance toward Israel, for example, as well as those who believe that we should support independent union positions on a whole spectrum of issues. As campaigns become more and more dependent on financial support, the need to compete for campaign dollars forces candidates to address many issues and I consider this vital to the maintenance of a sound democratic system.

Second, millions of Americans now contribute voluntarily to federal political campaigns. These people see their decision to contribute to one campaign or another as a form of self-expression. Public financing of federal general election campaigns would deprive people of an opportunity to freely express their strongly held opinions.

They would still be contributing, of course, since the federal government will give them hundreds of millions of dollars in tax money. But their participation would be compulsory and we would involve the use of their money to support candidates and positions they find morally and politically reprehensible.

Third, the proposal reported out of the Senate Finance Committee, like similar proposals advanced in the past, combines public financing with strict limits on expenditures. But this bill, on the whole, works to the benefits of incumbents, since they are lower than the amount that a challenger might have to spend presently in a hotly contested race if he wants to overcome the advantages of his opponent's incumbency.

Fourth, the various schemes devised to distribute federal dollars among candidates and between the parties has to affect power relationships that now exist. Thus, if you give money directly to a candidate, it is like further weakening the party system. If you give money to the national party, you strengthen the national party, above all, relative to the state parties. If you don't extremely carefully you will freeze out or lock out minor parties. These are real problems with significant policy consequences that those who drew up the various public financing proposals tend to overlook.

Public financing will have two significant effects on third parties, neither desirable. In the first place, it makes it more difficult for legitimate third parties to compete against genuine national third-party movements such as that of George Wallace in 1968.

Q. You say public financing raises grave concerns. Could you be more specific about what you mean?

A. In a number of ways, but I don't think we had the chance to establish a voting record of the kind required to qualify for financing.

On the other hand, once a third party qualifies for future federal financing, a vested interest arises in keeping it alive—even if the George Wallaces who gave it its sole reason for existence should move on. Thus we run the risk of financing a proliferation of parties that could destroy the stability we have so carefully restored through our two-party system.

were examined and that the committee was satisfied that objections involving the effect of the bill on existing political campaign arrangements were without real functions.

A. I can only say that I must respectfully disagree with my colleagues on the Rules Committee. The committee report discusses a number of compromises worked out in the process of drawing up S. 3044, but I don’t think the report leaves them to say how much they have actually accomplished. The result of these compromises would not, I think, be to show that an adequate time a viable candidate would have to run his own campaign, that the public treasury would have to provide the money to support a viable candidate, or that a viable candidate might sway a man whose support comes primarily from blue collar, middle class, union workers.

B. I should like to point out that a candidate running on an issue that attracts the vocal and "independent" support of groups that can provide direct support without falling under the rubric of political parties is something of the anti-war movement and the way in which issue-oriented anti-war activists were able to mobilize the energy of those friendly candidates illustrates the problem.

C. David Broder of the Washington Post noted in a very perceptive analysis of professional maneuvering on this issue that most members seem to sense that these reforms will, in fact, help a certain kind of candidate. His comments on this are worth quoting at length.

D. I think the votes by which the public financing proposal was passed in the Senate had a marked partisan and ideological coloration. Most Democrats and most liberals in both parties support public financing; most Republicans and most conservatives in both parties voted against it. And Kerrey, one of the leading Republicans and Demo- crats would benefit from the change is strengthened by the realization that money is the life blood of political campaigning. If access to large sums is eliminated as a potential advantage of one candidate over another, the influence of those who can provide man-power or publicity for the campaign.

E. Yet another way in which the public financing proposal would lead to less inequality of public subsidies for all, and on that day, the election outcome will likely be determined by the ability to mobilize other forces.

F. But doesn’t the wealthy candidate have an advantage as compared to less-known candidates? am not sure it’s as great as some people believe, but I would like to think of myself as overly "The most important of these other factors are probably manpower and publicity. Legislation that eliminates the dollar in the technical sense merely enhances the influence of those who can provide manpower or publicity for the campaign.

G. The fundamental objection to this sort of thing is perhaps best summed up by the words of Thomas Jefferson who wrote: "To I don’t mean to imply that there aren’t determinations of political candidates, and causes with which many of them will profoundly disagree. The fundamental objection to this sort of thing is perhaps best summed up by the words of Thomas Jefferson who wrote: "To have is estimated that the plan designed by Subcommittee S. 3044 would cost nearly $30 million every four years and other plans that have been dismissed might cost as much as $100 million.

H. Necessarily, this will involve spending tax dollars, extracted from individuals for the support of candidates and causes with which many of them will profoundly disagree. The fundamental objection to this sort of thing is perhaps best summed up by the words of Thomas Jefferson who wrote: "To
I happen to believe rather strongly that this is the case with public financing and with proposals that would impose arbitrary limits on campaign spending and, thereby, on political activity.

The same problem must be faced if we decide to limit the size of individual political contributions. In this area, however, I would not oppose reasonable limits that would neither unduly discriminate against those who wish to contribute nor give too great an advantage to other groups able to make substantial non-monetary contributions.

The least dangerous form of regulation and the one I suspect might prove most effective in the long run is one which simply imposes disclosure requirements on candidates and political committees. The 1971 Act— which has never really been tested—was passed on the theory that major contributions best be handled full and open disclosure.

The theory was that if candidates want to accept substantial contributions from people associated with one interest or cause as op-to another, they should be allowed to do so as long as they are willing to disclose the receipt of the money. The voter then might then decide if he wants to support the candidate in spite of—or perhaps because of—the financial support he has received.

The far-reaching disclosure requirements written into law in April 1972 after much of the money used to finance the 1972 campaigns had already been raised. This money—raised prior to April 1, 1972—did not have to be reported in detail and it was this unreported money that financed many of the activities that have been included in what seems to be known as the Watergate affair.

I feel that the 1971 Act, as amended last year, was a step in the right direction.

On the other hand, there are a few loopholes that we can close right away. It seems to me, for example, that we might move im-ediately to bar cash contributions and expenditures of more than, say, $10,000.

Q. So you believe that “full disclosure” is the answer?

A. Essentially. But I don’t want you to get the idea that disclosure laws will solve all our problems or that they themselves don’t create new problems. I simply feel that they create fewer problems and are more likely to eliminate gross abuses than the other measures we have discussed.

Q. You mean “disclosure” laws also create new problems. What kind of new problems?

A. Well, you may recall that Sen. Muskie’s 1972 primary campaign reportedly ran into trouble after April 1972 because a number of his larger contributors were Republicans who didn’t want it publicly known that they were supporting a Democrat. The disclosure requirements included as part of the 1971 Act clearly inhibited their willingness to give and, there-therefore, at least arguably had what constitutional lawyers call a “chilling effect” on their right of self-expression.

These were large contributors with prominent names. Perhaps their decision to give should not be viewed as lamentable in the context of the purpose of the law.

But consider the smaller contributor who might want to see a candidate viewed with hostility by his employer, his friends and others in a position of influence. How about the drugstore clerk who wishes to give $10 to a candidate who wants to get rid of the national banks? Or the City Hall employee who might want to give $5 to the man running against the incumbent mayor? These proposals being circulated that we haven’t had a real chance to discuss, but I’m afraid most of them raise more questions than they answer.

Q. Senator, are there any other “reforms” that you think worthy of consideration?

A. Well, there are a good many proposals that might be worth consideration and have, in fact, been raised separately by a number of senators. Under our current tax laws a taxpayer can either take a tax credit or a deduction for political contributions to candidates, political committees or parties of his choice. The allowable tax credit that can now be claimed amounts to $12.50 per individual or $25 on a joint return and the deduction is limited to $50 or $100 on a joint return.

The authors of S 3044 would double the allowable credits and deductions. Sen. William V. Roth, Jr., said he believed doubling the credit was a step in the right direction.

These proposals would presumably increase the incentive for private giving without limiting the choice of the individual contributor. If such proposals are passed, we can even further by increasing the allowable credit to $150 per individual or $300 on a joint return.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the question on the amendment be rescinded.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I call up the amendment I have at the desk having to do with Members of the House and Senate and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 5, line 6, strike out “FEDERAL” and insert in lieu thereof “PRESIDENTIAL”.

On page 4, line 6, strike out the comma and insert in lieu thereof “and”.

On page 4, beginning with line 7, strike out through line 12.

"(d) The Federal Election Commission shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate in connection with his primary or general election campaign in excess of 10 percent of the limitation in subsection (a) or (b)."

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the vote that I had on the amendment to strike title I from the bill was a most encouraging vote from the standpoint of those who are opposed to public financing of Federal elections because it indicated that more than one third of the members of the Senate oppose public financing in any form because they were willing to vote to strike from the bill any reference whatever to public subsidies in Federal elections, indicating that it might be difficult to pass the bill in the final analysis, and indicating the possibility that some members of the Senate would be willing to vote for it.

Mr. President, the bill, in effect, while the provisions are intermingled and intertwined, really provides for a subsidy on a matching basis for House and Senate members in primaries, and then full financing of campaigns for House and Senate members in general elections. That is one major division of the subsidy provision.

Then, the next major provision of the subsidy portion of the bill relates to subsidies with respect to the Presidential general election and the contests for the nominations for President of major parties.

Let us take those subsidised races piece by piece, the amendment that has been reported, and which is the pending business of the Senate, would strike from the bill any subsidy of the U.S. House of Representatives primary elections, any subsidy of U.S. Senate primary races, any subsidy of U.S. House of Representatives general campaign races, or any subsidies of the Senate general campaign races. So it would leave the subsidies in the request for the Presidential nomination, by any number of candidates, and then the Presidential election itself.

We already have a subsidy of the general Presidential election. That is already provided for in the checkoff. As I pointed out on the floor that is available to the parties the sum of around $21 million or $22 million only if they forego private contributions.
I do not believe either party is going to come under that by certifying they will accept that in lieu of all private contributions.

Let us see, Mr. President, if the Members of the House and the Senate want to subsidize their own primary races and subsidize the much larger general election races. If they do, they will vote against this amendment when it comes up for a vote. If it is felt that the incumbents have an advantage—they have access to funds, but not necessarily funds—then the incumbent, from $600,000 up to $100,000, if he has no public financing, would get $700,000. If he has $1,000,000, or $700,000 matched, then his total amount would be $1,400,000.

The amount he is able to spend in the primary, before the challenger in a congressional race or a senatorial race is able to get anything from the public Treasury, he has got to collect, in small contributions, 20 percent of the amount that he is able to spend in the primary. The amount he is able to spend in the primary is 10 cents per person of voting age in the political subdivision in which he is running. So, many of the challengers never would get up to that 20 percent.

Take the first State on this list, my own State of Alabama. Before a candidate could participate in public financing, he would have to collect, in small contributions of $100 or less, $460,000. It would be a very big job for a challenger, or an incumbent—either one—to collect $460,000 in contributions of $1 up to $100. Yet that is what he would have to do in order even to qualify for public funds. I think that is unfair.

But let us just assume, in round figures, that a Senator or a Congressman collected the following: The State of California. In the State of California it is permissible for a senatorial candidate to spend $1,417 million, half of which could be contributed.

Let us just assume that the Senator from California is opposed by a lesser known candidate, and this lesser known candidate is able to raise $100,000 in small contributions of $100 or less, then he can get $1,000,000 from the public Treasury. The incumbent, though, Mr. President, could raise the whole $700,000 in small contributions, and then the Government would give him another $700,000.

So the lesser known candidate, without the public financing, would have $1,000,000 to go up against the incumbent with $700,000. He would have a $600,000 spending advantage with public financing, and he would get $100,000 to match the $100,000 that he had collected. However, the incumbent would get $700,000 matched.

An incumbent, then, would have $1,400,000, and then the lesser known challenger, would just have $200,000.

So the spread between the amount available to the challenger and the amount available to the incumbent ranges from a $900,000 differential under private financing to a differential of $1.2 million. It doubles the advantage that the incumbent already has.

Mr. CANNON. Will the Senator yield?
Mr. ALLEN. I yield.
Mr. CANNON. I think rather than for the Senator to say it doubles the advantage, let me say it greatly reduces the advantage an incumbent would already have because of the fact the nonincumbent is going to have the difficulty raising private financing.

Mr. ALLEN. That is correct.
Mr. CANNON. In this fashion, he would at least be able to get some assistance if he raises the threshold amount. But, on the other hand, if we do not put a limit on private financing, and let the person who is the incumbent raise money through whatever source or method he wishes, he will have not too great difficulty raising the campaign financing from private sources. Yet the nonincumbent challenger is going to have an extremely difficult problem of raising money from private sources to compete against an incumbent.

Mr. ALLEN. I agree with the Senator, age, but I believe he has the matter confused, in that where the challenger is permitted to do so on the overall limitation, we do not have to have the use of public funds to put a—a—in the election. I submit that the incumbent, being able to raise more funds, could receive the entire $700,000 for matching, and he would end up with $1.4 million; whereas the challenger, raising only $100,000, would have a differential, by reason of public financing, between him and the incumbent, from $600,000 up to $1,200,000.

Mr. CANNON. That is not quite that differential, though, because if there is no public financing, one simply places his limit. The incumbent is not going to have difficulty raising that amount, because the facts are that in the State of California, which the Senator uses as an example, the campaigns cost more than that and that they have traditionally used more than that amount. So an incumbent is going to spend whatever that limit is, whether it be private or a combination of private and public; but the challenger, on the other hand, if he can only raise $100,000 or less, in public financing, he will have only that $100,000 to put into the campaign.

Actually, it would be a little higher than that, because $125,000 is the trigger amount. So if he could raise $125,000, he would get matching funds of $125,000 to give him $250,000 to put into the campaign. On the other hand, if he is limited to what he can raise, and there is no public financing, he would get no money. So the spread would be not the proportion of funds available in a campaign against an incumbent who can spend, and certainly could raise, as the facts show, $1.4 million.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I submit to the Senator that the amount by which the incumbent can outdraw, so to speak, the challenger is compounded and intensified and exactly doubled by reason of the campaign financing. So the more the incumbent receives in contributions, the more the Treasury is going to give him, up to the limit.

Mr. CANNON. Up to the matching amount.

Mr. ALLEN. So the challenger would have been better off with $100,000 as against $200,000, rather than $200,000 against $1.4 million.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know whether he would or not, because that is in exactly the same proportion, but I shall simply say that this would not be up against if there were no public financing.

If $1,100,000 is all a challenger could raise, it would be a proportion of $460,000, because the incumbent in any of the big States consistently spends more than that.

Let us refer to the State of Texas, for which it happens to have figures. In the last campaign in Texas, for example, $23 million was spent. The limit we have now, that is covered in the bill, would permit an expenditure of $750,000 in a primary election. So it is obvious that this would be quite restrictive, and thereby, by the restrictive factor alone, would limit the cost of a campaign and make it less disproportionate—rather than the challenge is an incumbent who has more access to private funds.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not think it would be quite accurate to say—I do not think the Senator would agree with me—that the extent to which an incumbent can obtain more contributions is going to be duplicated in the Federal campaign, because the incumbent receiving much in contributions would have that amount doubled, whereas the challenger would have his lesser amount doubled. That would just downmake the difference between the two, according to the arithmetic of the Senator from Alabama, from which he sees no escape.

I feel that it is somewhat presumptuous of the part of Members of Congress to say to the American people, “We want you to finance our campaign for us. We want you to pay half the expenses of our primaries and all of the expenses of our general election. This is necessary to keep out improper influences.”

I do not like the suggestion to the people which would say that Members of Congress would be susceptible to improper influences by reason of having received a $3,000 contribution from an individual. The Senator from Alabama has no received any contributions of that size. He has an amendment which seeks to cut the amount of contributions in Presidential races to $250, and in House and Senate races to $100, because that is all that the Government will match, and there must be something evil, something sinister, about that portion above that the Government will match.

I do not believe, though, that Members of Congress and people who are of sufficient stature to run for the House and the Senate are going to allow themselves to be restrained by the provisions of a contribution of $3,000. I simply believe it is impugning the honor and integrity of Members of Congress to suggest that they would be so influenced.

Is there any law that makes a person accept a contribution that he does not want to accept? I do not know of any. Is there any reason to believe that Members of Congress could be restrained in the amount and type of contributions they receive? It would seem to the Senator from Alabama that that might be the case.

This is too, Mr. President, I think that there has developed among Members of the House and Senate a highly commendable restraint in the matter of the acceptance of campaign contributions.

Weeks ago, Representative Vanik of Ohio said that he would not accept a single contribution in his race for Congress. Not only was he in my judgment this public financing of campaigns would not be accepted a single contribution in his race for Congress. Not only was he in my judgment this public financing of campaigns is not good for the men who are in the Congress, for the people who are running, and for the people who are voting. The distinguished Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McGovern) said earlier this evening, to go to the grassroots for help, for a small contribution? There would be no incentive for Members of Congress.

Mr. President, we have enough apathy or input into their thinking, their campaigns, and their philosophy. They would not be approachable by their constituents, and not just look to the public Treasury for payment of their campaign expenses.

It comes out of the pocket of the taxpayer, with the taxpayer not having any right to designate to whom the contribution will go.

The matter of tax credits and deductions is allowed under the present income tax law. The reason I do not object to tax credits is that they can be spread by the taxpayer wherever he wants to spread them, and the amounts can be given to the candidates of his choice.

Having wiped out, in the matter of the checkoff, where the taxpayers can designate the party of their choice, the money almost all a common pot and then divided between the parties, if they come within the law.

I am glad we are going to have a test vote. I want to see how many Members want to see Uncle Sam pay the cost of their campaigns at a terfice amount, at 15 cents a person per vote in his State, in the case of a Senator, or in his congressional district in the case of a Member of the House. How much would that be? In California, this is what would be paid to each of the Senate candidates.

Suppose the checks would be written out for them as soon as they became nominees. I hope I will be corrected if my statement is not correct. And the amounts are paid in advance; I do not believe it is on certification of expenses. If I am wrong, I should like to be corrected. I believe that the check is written first. For how much? For $21,450. Possibly there is some formula by which the candidates come by it. I am not advised as to the present time. I assume that as soon as the candidates are nominated, they will start to spend the money, and Uncle Sam will have to get there before they can get there.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McGovern) said earlier this evening, to go to the grassroots for help, for a small contribution? There would be no incentive for Members of Congress.

Mr. President, I think that we have enough apathy and disininterest in our elections now, and in my judgment this public financing of our elections would only add to and increase the apathy and disininterest on the part of the American people in their elections.

Mr. President, the Senate of the United States, just a few short weeks ago, took action here in the face of strong public opinion and refused to raise the salaries of the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives—and I was one who voted against the raise—by around $2,500. I believe that every Member of the Senate feels that the strong force of public opinion influenced his vote on that issue.

We were talking about $2,500 to each Senator at that time. But what about giving one $2 million for his election campaign? What is the public going to think about that? That is what we would provide here.

Ido not believe that a public opinion that is opposed to a raise of $2,500 for Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate is going to look with a great deal of satisfaction and approval on subsidizing the election campaigns of the Members of the House and Senate.

Let us look at some of the States, and see what the Senators would get. For the State of New York, the Senator would get a subsidy in the general election of $1,800. The Senator from Pennsylvania would get a subsidy of $1,236,000. The Senator from Missouri, who was here a few moments ago.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, would the Senator consider the possibility of a time limitation on the pending amendment, after the vote on the conference report on the minimum wage bill tomorrow?

Mr. ALLEN. Before or after, it does not matter to the Senator from Alabama. I shall be glad to agree to any time the distinguished majority leader would say. I am ready to vote. Say 30 minutes?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the vote on the conference report on the minimum wage bill tomorrow, there be a time limitation of 1 hour on the pending Allen amendment, with the time to be equally divided between the distinguished Senator from Alabama, the sponsor of the amendment (Mr. ALLEN), and the chairman of the committee, the distinguished Senator from Nebraska (Mr. GLEETON). The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, with the approval of the Senator, I ask unani-
Manager and the running minority members as presented, that on the floor to individual groups of opposition to it. If some other State, Mr. President, have some other Senator, or of representatives. Mr. President, I understand now that, under the terms of the amendment, the national committee could spend 2 cents per voting age population in that State but not to exceed $20,000 or not to exceed $20,000 whichever is greater, but the population formula would depend on the State or the area in which it is to be spent?

Mr. HATHAWAY. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that, under the House rule of representatives, the ceiling figure would be $10,000 or the 2 cents per voting age population whichever is higher in that particular area?

Mr. HATHAWAY. The fixed amount is $10,000.

Mr. CANNON. It is a fixed amount, then, without using the 2 cents formula?

Mr. RIFORD. Yes. That is the ceiling, of course.

Mr. CANNON. Very well. I can understand now correctly, and so far as this Senator is concerned, I am ready to accept the amendment.

Mr. HATHAWAY. I thank the distinguished Senator from Nevada.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Maine, No. 1066.

The amendment was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

Mr. CANNON. The pending business is the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, Mr. ALLEN. The pending question is:

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, the Senate will adjourn shortly to come in at 9:30 a.m. tomorrow. There are three special orders which will take up to about 10:15 a.m. We have morning business for not to exceed 10 minutes, with statements thereof limited to 3 minutes. At the hour of approximately 10:30 a.m., the Senate will start on the time limitation covering the commerce report on the minimum wage bill, the vote on which will be taken at 11:30 a.m.

After that vote, the pending Allen amendment will then be the order of business, with a time limitation of one half-hour, to be equally divided.

After the conclusion of that vote, the Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY) will offer his amendment. Hopefully, a time limitation can be agreed on tomorrow. I hope to discuss this matter with

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The agreement provides for the vote to occur at 11:30 a.m. The unanimous-consent agreement could be changed by unanimous consent. It is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. We yield back our time.

Mr. GRIFFIN. What is the change in the agreement?

Mr. JAVITS. No change. We merely wish to yield back our time. We have no further speakers; unless we have a quorum call before the vote.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The Senator can suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. JAVITS. We have only 3 minutes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. We can call it off.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I do not yield my time. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Under the previous order, the hour of 11:30 having arrived, the vote on the conference report is now in order. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. Fulbright), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. Gravel), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGee), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Mankle), and the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. Pastore) are not present. I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. Pastore), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Mankle), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. Gravel), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. Fulbright), and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGee) would each vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEALL), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. Mathias), and the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. Thurmond) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Hatfield) is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. Aiken) is absent due to illness in his family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Vermont (Mr. Aiken), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Hatfield), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. Mathias), and the Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEALL) would each vote "yea."

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. Thurmond) would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 71, nays 19, as follows:
Mr. COOK. I have no objection to that. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. President, I remind the Senate that we have a vote on the extradition treaty with Denmark at 12 o'clock tomorrow. There is a rumor going around that that would be the only business tomorrow. However, it is the intention of the joint leadership to consider amendments to the pending business, and it is anticipated that there will be a yeas and nays vote in addition to the vote on the treaty of extradition.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Marks, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Presiding Officer (Mr. Hruska) laid before the Senate, messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of Senate proceedings.)

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Abourezk). Under the previous order, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, S. 3044, which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and for other purposes.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. Allen's amendment (No. 1109) is as follows:

On page 8, line 6, strike out "FEDERAL" and insert in lieu thereof "PRESIDENTIAL".

On page 4, line 6, strike out the comma and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon.

On page 4, beginning with line 7, strike out line 12.

On page 4, line 13, strike out "(a)" and insert in lieu thereof "(c)".

On page 4, line 17, strike out "(d)" and insert in lieu thereof "(b)".

On page 4, line 21, immediately before "FEDERAL", strike out "a"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time for debate on this amendment is limited to 3 minutes, to be equally divided between and controlled by the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) and the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON). Who yields the time?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

This amendment would merely take from under the bill the races for the House of Representatives and the Senate, both for the primary and the general elections.

Mr. President, I do not believe it is right for Congress to be cited that the taxpayers, through the public Treasury, should pay for their election campaigns. I do not believe it is right to present to a candidate for the Senate in the State of California, $1,900,000 in the State of New York, and lesser sums on down?

All this amendment would do would be strike the House and the Senate from the provisions of the bill, and I do not believe that the House would accept the provision anyway, and I believe that the Senate should take the leadership and strike the primary and general elections of House and Senate Members from the bill.

For another thing, matching funds are provided in the primary for the House of Representatives and the Senate, and this would actually aid the incumbents, in that we would match the private collections of sums up to $100 of House and Senate Members. Naturally the House and Senate Members, being incumbents, and being better known, would be able to collect more funds from individual contributors, and then the Federal Government would match that amount, compounding the advantage that the incumbent would have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. President, it is not in the public interest to require the taxpayers to pay for the primaries, or half of the primaries and all of the general election expense, of Senators and Representatives, and I hope that the Senate will approve the amendment.

Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER).

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Alabama for yielding me this time.

I think the distinguished Senator from Alabama to exempt ourselves from public financing. If the matter of the setting of our own salaries is a patent conflict of interest, the matter of providing for our own war chests to campaign with is an even greater conflict of interest.

I think the distinguished Senator from Alabama for yielding me this time.

As a general rule those who wish to win favor with a prince offer him the things they most value and in which they see that he will take most pleasure; so it is often seen that rulers receive presents of horses, arms, piece of cloth of gold, precious stones, and similar ornaments worthy of their station.

The only real change today, when the favors available from the modern Congress and the modern Federal Government would bogey the mind of any medieval prince, is that the most valued presents are not horses and arms, but contributions to political campaigns.

Just as cigarette and private campaign contributions have mired the executive branch in its present quicksand of corruption, so, I am convinced, the present low estate of Congress is the result of the ingrained corruption and the appearance of corruption that our system of private financing of congressional elections has produced.

Today, in Congress, the problem has reached the epidemic level. For too long, we have tolerated a system of private financing that allows the wealthiest citizens and biggest special interest groups to inject our democracy by buying a preferred position in the deliberations of Congress.

It is no accident that Congress so often fails to act promptly or effectively on issues of abiding vital importance to all the people of the Nation—issues like inflation, the energy crisis, tax reform, and national health insurance, to name but four subjects where the ineffective action of Congress over many years, appears to bear a direct and obvious correlation to the massive campaign contributions by special interest groups. It is no secret to any citizen that such interest groups have a stake at least in the status quo, and often a stake in something worse, in flagrant disregard of where the public interest really lies.

Not until we root out all the corrosive aspects of the present system will we be able to cure this worsening infection of our Government, and bring our democracy back to health.

To make the case for public financing of congressional elections, we need look no farther than the figures released today by Common Cause. Beyond any reasonable doubt, these figures demonstrate that special interest groups have a stranglehold on Congress, and that the stranglehold can only be broken by public financing.

The figures tell a dismal story of how Congress is bought in each election year.

Mr. JAKER. I thank the Senator from Alabama for giving me, again, enough time so that we can have this colloquy with the Senator from Massachusetts.

My response is, I do not think we should have any contributions from anyone except qualified voters; I do not think the Treasury of the United States, or the treasury of the State of Tennessee, or that any corporation, or association or co-op, or whatever, should make contributions or give financial support to any campaign. Rather, I think that the support should come only from individual human beings who can vote. Corporations cannot vote. Common Cause cannot vote. Chambers of Commerce cannot vote. Why should they contribute? I proposed, and there is at the desk, an amendment to the bill which I will call up later, that says that no one except a qualified voter can contribute.

That is my reply.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, so long as we have private contributions, the special interests will try to influence their money and make their influence felt.

As indicated earlier, the Common Cause figures are only the tip of the iceberg because they reflect only the contributions reported or collected by organized political committees. They do not reflect contributions by individuals.

Yet we know, as in the case of oil money, that vast amounts of special interest money come rolling in, each election year, in the form of individual contributions.

We know why these special interest groups are building up their war chests for 1974. To take but one example, it is clear that this Congress is now well into a major debate on national health insurance. Possibly, a comprehensive bill to establish a program of national health insurance may pass the Senate and the House before the end of the present session, and work its way into the 94th Congress that convenes in January 1975, after the congressional elections this fall. Obviously, health reform and national health insurance are issues that are now coming into the forefront of the agenda of Congress.

And what do we see when we look at the Common Cause figures, published today, showing the war chests that special interest groups have already accumulated for the purpose of making contributions to the 1974 elections? We find that one of the special interest groups with the fattest war chests is none other than the American Medical Association and its affiliated political action committees in the various States.

Mr. President, I ask at this point that an excerpt from the Common Cause materials showing the breakdown by State of the AMA war chest, may be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Mr. KENNEDY. We see from these figures that the AMA and its affiliates have already collected the massive sum of $880,000 in voluntary contributions for the 1974 congressional elections. We also know the position of the AMA on health reform, which is a position of total opposition to the sort of national health insurance program that many of us believe is essential if the Nation is to have decent health care.

Clearly, the AMA position will be well represented in the next Congress. More than $800,000 in campaign contributions speaks with a very loud voice indeed.

But who speaks for the average citizen? Who speaks for the mother trying to get a doctor because her child is sick? Who speaks for the family driven into financial ruin because of the high cost of serious illness? Who speaks for all the people fed up with a health care system that suits the doctors and the insurance companies very well, but that fails to meet the people's basic need for decent health care at a price they can afford to pay?

That is the nature of the problem we face. There are probably only a handful of Members of this body who have not received at least some contribution from one or another of these various interest groups. I think that public financing is the only realistic answer to eliminate the corrupting influence of the special interest contributions on our Senate and House elections.

We see the picture. The special interest groups are waiting with their checkbooks to make their influence felt. If this amendment passes, the effect will be to say that we in Congress are glad to get that money, that we welcome their campaign contributions in 1974 and on into the future. I oppose the amendment, and I hope that the Senate will reject it.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I do not know what the parliamentary situation is at the moment. The Senator from Massachusetts asked me to yield, but on whose time, I do not know. We have been having this colloquy. If I still have the floor, I should like to have 1 minute more to speak.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield the Senator from Tennessee 1 more minute.

Mr. KENNEDY. Whatever time remains to me I will gladly yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am really most distressed by the concept embodied in the President's proposal, which is that the Senator from Massachusetts which I read to mean that we can trust ourselves so little to cure the ills spotlighted by the Watergate case that we are going to throw the baby out with the bath water. I really am concerned that we do not consider ourselves to be good enough legal draftsmen or legislative scholars to be able to draft a plan which will prevent the special interests from having an effect on the elective process.

I know half a dozen ways to do that without tearing down the destiny and the political system of this country.

We could hand out $2 million in California or $365,000 in Nevada, or whatever, and pretty soon we will have a little booklet coming out that says "Federal Rules and Guidelines for Qualifying for the Expenditure of Funds"—and pretty soon the Federal Government will be supervising how campaigns are going to be run. Thus, we will have created political incest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. If I have any time remaining, I should like to have 2 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the thing the American public should understand is that they are paying for the system now. We hear the statements about the raid on the Federal Treasury. The Senator from Tennessee understands who is paying for what now. And one of the most obvious is the people are forced to pay is through tax loopholes. The Internal Revenue Code is riddled with tax loopholes. The American public is paying for those loopholes. Vast amounts of tax welfare are being paid through the tax laws to big contributors and special interest groups.

And we know who makes up the difference. The working man and woman, the lower paid income groups are the ones who pay higher taxes to make up for the various tax loopholes.

We know how those various tax loopholes have been obtained. As the Senator from Tennessee and every other Member of the Senate knows, it is through the work of the highly paid lobbyists and the special interest groups down here in the conference rooms and in the committee rooms and in the halls of Congress. They make sure that the loopholes are written in and stay in and they are always around when campaign contributions are being made.

So, make no mistake about it. Mr. and Mrs. Public, you are paying for the system, and you are paying for it in hidden billions of dollars every year.

All it takes to change the system and put it on an honest footing is to make sure that the public pays the bill for elections to public office. We are talking about a cost of $360 million over a 4-year period, to make Members of Congress and the Senate, and the President of the United States accountable to the people and not to the special interests. That is a bargain by any standard, a price we cannot afford not to pay.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. President, I have not participated very much in this debate so far and I do not serve on the Committee on Rules and Administration, but I think I have just heard the most illogical argument from the Senator from Massachusetts that I have heard in my whole life in the 12 years I have served in this body, and my 3 years of service in the House.

Every single thing, including what he calls the tax loopholes, were originally put in for a social reason of one kind or another, like the tax loophole which gives an extra deduction, for example, to one who is blind or over the age of 65. There is a whole group of things like that, which he lumped into so-called tax loopholes. It does not have a single thing to do with the bill which is designed to put Members of the Senate and Members of the House in the public trough.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield for a question?

Mr. DOMINICK. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Would the Senator support a bill to eliminate all the tax loopholes? But I can’t think of them at the end of this year over a 2- or 3-year period, then rebuild them back into the Revenue Code, if they really serve a social purpose? I believe that many of those loopholes are directly tied to campaign contributions by the people who enjoy the benefits of the loopholes. Would the Senator be willing to test the social purpose of the loopholes by re-enacting them or is he simply prepared to continue?

Mr. DOMINICK. Is the Senator asking me a question?

I wonder whether the Senator from Alabama would yield me another minute to answer the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes. I thank the Senator. The answer to the Senator from Massachusetts is, “no,” I would not support such a bill.

A great many social projects are of extraordinary impact in this country. One of these projects that I hope to do to get a tax credit for higher education. We have passed it in the Senate twice, and I have no intention of saying that the Senator from Colorado would simply eliminate these and use the proceeds to try to accomplish in a tax bill.

Besides, that comes out of the Ways and Means Committee, not out of the Rules Committee, and has nothing to do with the public trough bill that is before the Senate now.

I have been adamantly against public financing from the very beginning. I am against it for any kind of race—President of the United States, Senatorial, or any other, like the tax loophole which gives a tax credit to higher education.

These have gone on for years, the Senator from Alabama has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield to the Senator 1 additional minute.

Mr. STENNIS. I feel that to get into our race as to let the taxpayers pay them the people out of it, so to speak. The taxpayer pays his taxes because he has to, and he should, of course. But the idea of taking his money and putting it to this use is contrary to what many people believe it. Worse than that, it takes the people out of the race, so to speak, because they feel that what they can do will not count. We have to get these elections back closer to the people, closer to their voluntary actions, to their enthusiasm, to their willingness to be active citizens, to become involved. We need the public involved in these elections, particularly congressional elections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senate yield?

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, it is my intention to vote against the proposal of the Senator from Alabama, but I would be remiss if I did not say that one of the reasons why I intend to do so is that I think the people of the United States have an opportunity to try what we have proposed for some time.

I must say, in all fairness, that I am surprised at the extreme length of the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Nevada that I have just listened to as to the Internal Revenue Code as it now exists, with what are called complex and absolute loopholes.

I think that an average taxpayer who files his form 1040 seems to think of everybody who has a loophole as not being an average taxpayer. I am thinking about the fellow who owns a gas station, the fellow who deducts for the utilization of his truck, which he also drives home at night because it is his vehicle, and that is a loophole.

I am thinking that hundreds and hundreds of things that give a little individual who is a small, independent businessman, not the giant businessman, an opportunity and an incentive to be a businessman, an incentive to make a living.

I hope that during the course of this debate we will not take into consideration such broad, sweeping statements that we got in this bill. That is a modification that takes away all loopholes.

What does “all loopholes” really mean? What are we really saying to the Internal Revenue Service? What are we really saying to every person who pays his taxes on a quarterly basis, not once a year?

I hope we will look at this situation from the standpoint of what we now have an opportunity to try a process that is not totally untried in the world of politics, and I think we all know that Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the time expire?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I thank the Senator vehicle, and that is a loophole.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the time expire?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I thank the Senator vehicle, and that is a loophole.

We do not provide in this law that every candidate must go to the Federal funding source. We leave it up to his option. If he sees a great danger in it and wants to go to the private sector, he may do that within the limits of the bill. Of course, we provide a limit on the amount. We will not see another situation, if this bill is passed, where Senator Stennis and people like that would make tremendous contributions, or a committee, like the milk fund or a like organization makes tremendous contributions, because we have said we do not want that individual who is unknown and wants to try, if he can demonstrate initially that he has a certain amount of appeal, can find the funds without going to private interest groups to finance a portion of his campaign, provided the funds are there.

The law now provides for the checkoff provision. In this bill we increase that and double the amount of the checkoff and increase the amount of the tax credit or the tax deduction that may be taken. They can use those to provide funds to the candidate.

The way the Committee on Rules and Administration is trying to comply with the instructions given it last year by the Senate in reporting a bill on this subject and we think we have done the best we can to hold hearings and listening to the testimony of witnesses who appeared before us.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is rejected. The way the President, yes, or the Committee on Rules and Administration did discharge its commitment in reporting the bill, but there is no obligation on us to take the bill. It is just a vehicle for the Senate to express its will with regard to public financing.

I do not believe that the people of this country, having rejected the thought of Congress raising its salary by some $2,500, will look with favor on Congress voting itself funds in the primary; up to some $2 million in California and lesser amounts distributed through other States for Members of the Senate to run their campaigns. I do not believe they want to see Members of Congress have their campaigns subsidized.

This amendment will take House and Senate races, both primary and general elections, out from under subsidy provisions of the bill. I hope it is approved by the Senate.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment No. 1109 proposed by my friend from Alabama (Mr. ALLN). This amendment would place $15,000 as the maximum contribution in Presidential races and $3,000 in Senate and House races.

We must do away with the corrupting influence of big money—for more money than is necessary to present a candidate's views to the people, I think the steps I have outlined here can do the deed. At the same time, they will avoid the pandemonium that public financing and more government meddling are bound to create.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I have said on numerous occasions that the most important task now before us is to reform the confidence of the people in their Government. Public feeling toward elected officials is at an extremely low point. In fact, this Congress—despite its fine record—could muster a favorable rating from only 21 percent of the people interviewed in a recent Lou Harris survey.

It appears to me, then, that this is the worst possible time for Congress to enact legislation that would provide for private funding, tax deductibility, and Federal financing of congressional campaigns. I have grave doubts that public financing of House and Senator races would ever be advisable, but I doubt no doubt is among the wrong time, of all times, to provide for Federal financing of House and Senate races.

The bill now before us would allow every candidate, no matter what party, for every House seat in the country to collect $45,000 from the U.S. Treasury. Those who survive the primaries could be rewarded with a $90,000 campaign checkoff. I have grave doubts that such a provision would ever be advisable, but I think it is a principle that the use of tax dollars to finance Senate and House campaigns highly questionable, but the amounts involved here seem out of line with what would be considered realistic limits.

In the 1972 House races, for instance, 74 percent of all the candidates recorded expenditures of less than $50,000. In the 1974 races, it is likely that the same would be true. The amounts available for Senate races, although varying according to the particular States, are also high. In West Virginia, for example, the voting age population is listed at 1,228,000. That means that $122,800 would be available for primary campaigns, based on 10 cents per voting age citizen, and $184,200 would be available for the general election, based on a 15-cent ceiling.

However, if one of the objects of campaign reform is to limit expenditures—by which we mean what is spent, not what is contributed—to an absolute minimum, then public financing of congressional campaigns is not going to accomplish it. Actually, public financing of Senate and House races threatens to increase expenditures, not only by setting higher-than-needed limits, but also by opening a crack in the Treasury for this kind of spending. No one can say that the 10-cent and 15-cent limits contained in this bill will not be increased to 25-cent or 50-cent limits in the future. The public became enraged recently when there was the use of dollar-a-vote finances. I imagine how enraged the same taxpayers will become when there is talk of dollar-a-vote Federal expenditures for congressional campaigns.

The way to bring about reform is not through the use of taxpayers' dollars for Senate and House candidates; but rather by setting limits—reasonable but strict limits—on what congressional campaigns can spend; limiting the amounts that single contributors can give to campaigns; and strict disclosure of contributors: and more vigorous enforcement of the laws against violations.

With all the problems facing the taxpayers of this country today, we should be trying to find more ways to save their tax dollars—not new ways to spend them.

Therefore, I support the amendment to delete public financing of congressional campaigns from this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama. The ayes and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. PERRY) would vote "yea." Mr. Wyomin ming (Mr. Wyom iss) that the Senator from Maine (Mr. Hathaway) would not have the means to introduce the amendment. The motion to lay the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1082

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of the amendment by the Senator from Maine (Mr. Hathaway). No. 1082. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 75, line 19, redesignate subsection (a) as subsection (a) (1). On page 76, line 10, strike the word "person" and substitute the word "individual." On page 76, line 22, strike the word "person" and substitute the word "individual." On page 76, following line 23, add the following new subsection:

"(2) No person (other than an individual) may make a contribution of $6,000 or for the benefit of, a candidate for nomination for election, or election, which, when added to the sum of all other contributions made by that person for that campaign, exceeds $6,000." On page 76, line 25, strike the word "person" and substitute the word "individual." On page 76, line 2, strike the word "person" and substitute the word "individual." On page 76, line 2, strike the period and add the following: "or, from any person (other than an individual) which, when added, to the sum of all other contributions received from that person or that campaign, exceeds $6,000."

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I spoke the other day at some length in support of the amendment. I am not going to burden Senators by repeating everything I said the other day, but I should like to make a few points in support of the amendment.

The purpose of the amendment is to differentiate between individuals and organizations. The amendment allows organizations to contribute up to $4,000 per candidate rather than $3,000, which is the limitation now in the bill. The $3,000 limitation will still apply with respect to individuals.

I feel to me that it is inequitable to equate one wealthy individual with an organization whose membership runs hundreds or thousands. Large citizen groups, whether they be liberal or conservative, single-issue groups, such as conservation groups, perform a valuable function by serving as funneling organizations to give more contributors a voice and an impact in the election.

By giving to the political committees that reflect their philosophies or views, more people get interested and stay interested in the political process.

In areas where it is difficult to raise funds for a statewide ticket, other because the area simply does not have the funds to provide, or because the candidate is not very well known, these groups provide a means of channeling funds into the area while preventing any outside influence.

Most liberal organizations, trade associations, or business groups already have State, local, or regional affiliates as existing networks to support candidates and each of them may contribute a large sum to each candidate. But citizen groups are usually national. They raise funds by mailings to the general public and would not have the means to multiply their committees and set them up in separate States. So the $3,000 limitation, which is at present in the bill for contributions is not enough for broad-based citizen groups or nationwide organizations.

An organization representing 80,000 or more people, such as the National Committee for an Effective Congress, or 70,000, such as the American Conservative Union, should be allowed to contribute as much as a man and wife contribute, under the bill, that amounts to $6,000.

It has been said that it would be preferable to have no group contributions at all that only individual citizens could make contributions. I agree that it would be nice to have so many individuals interested in our electoral process that we could rely solely on individual contributions. Ultimately, that should be our goal.

But at present, organizations that pool contributions from groups of citizens who share a view or an ideology perform a valuable function in our system, and I feel that they are being treated unfairly as individuals in the committee bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GRiffin. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. I ask unanimous consent that the time for the quorum call be charged to this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I ask unanimous consent that during the consideration of the pending legislation, Mr. Philip Reberg of my staff be granted the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR., On the same time that ran before I called off the quorum call.
Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I withdraw it.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require, to the virtual elimination of special interest groups—organizations that collect and distribute campaign money for business, labor, farm, and other special interest groups—including the infamous milk fundamentals, which are limited to $3,000 in the contributions made to the campaign of any candidate. The amendment proposed would increase that limit to $6,000.

In my humble opinion it would be well if we could wipe out contributions of any size from special interest groups to a candidate's campaign. I considered offering just such a counter-amendment which would eliminate even the $3,000 contribution. I recognize, however, that there would be little chance that such an amendment could prevail.

I shall not argue the constitutional issue, essentially is one of direction and principle. It is my view that to increase the limit from $3,000 to $6,000, as the Senator from Maine would do by his amendment, would be to go in the wrong direction; it would be going away from campaign finance reform—which is supposed to be the purpose of the bill.

As the distinguished Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BARKS) said earlier today in a colloquy, special interest groups do not vote; people vote. And it seems to me that we should be endeavoring, in this reform legislation, to focus on more direct participation by individual citizens rather than to encourage the channeling of campaign support through special interest groups.

When an individual contributes to a special interest group—whatever its ideology, philosophy or legislative purpose—and then allows the directors of that organization to determine which candidates should be supported opposed with his money, that individual is thereby delegating an important element of his own citizenship responsibility. I just do not think it is in the national interest to encourage that practice.

This amendment, in my view, would erode and weaken the strength that is in the bill now. It should be voted down.

I realize that in many campaigns—in some Senate campaigns and certainly in Presidential campaigns—the enlargement from a $3,000 limit to a $6,000 limit could be considered relatively insignificant. But the amendment would not be so insignificant, I suggest, in many races for seats in the House of Representatives.

At the present time, many candidates who lose seats conduct their entire campaigns on total amounts of $12,000, $15,000, or $20,000. Certainly, in those situations, a $6,000 contribution could make a real difference. On the other hand, a special interest group would be a large portion of the total amount spent in the campaign.

It would be much better, it seems to me, if all contributions made to a campaign were to come directly from individuals and not from special interest groups. It would be much easier to make complete and full disclosure concerning all such contributions.

The amendment leaves open the possibility that simply wiping out fund raising could be "laundered" through the conduit of a special interest group.

Whatever may have been possible in the past in that regard, it seems that this amendment would be eliminated. That is the reason people want clean elections; they want full disclosure.

To allow contributions to be channeled through special interest groups could be a method of concealing and covering up financial support, rather than disclosing it.

So, for those reasons, I urge my colleagues to vote down the amendment.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I rise to speak for the amendment. I have listened but have not had the opportunity to be exposed to all the arguments on both sides. I realize the point the Senator from Michigan is making, that this permits the enlargement of the laundering fund, but with all this legislation we have to weigh the good and the bad. My own view is that the organizations that would be most affected by the $3,000 limitation would be organizations whose contributions were basically small and that they should be permitted to contribute, because they are organizations that would be representing large groups of people.

The $3,000 figure is an arbitrary figure. The $6,000 figure proposed in the amendment of the Senator from Maine is also an arbitrary figure. Perhaps the $6,000 figure more nearly meets the needs of the situation.

It is for these reasons that I would respectfully disagree with the Senator from Michigan and support the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I yield again the floor to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I want to answer a few points raised by the Senator from Michigan. He pointed out that we would be allowing organizations such as milk co-ops to double the contribution which they can now make under the bill. To be sure, those co-ops have come under some surveillance in the recent past, and some suspicions have been cast on those particular organizations, but the same thing is true of some individuals. A husband and wife can give $6,000, and I suppose there are husbands and wives that might come under some suspicion as to what motivated them to make such a contribution.

Certainly, in this bill, we cannot pretend to examine every potential contributor and say that only those who do not come from special interest groups make contributions and those who are under suspicion may not do so. That is a matter for the individual candidate to judge for himself whether or not he is able to accept such a contribution.

Also, I should like to mention that the amount involved is not the point at issue there. The reason for the amendment is to equalize and justice contributions. Under the terms of the bill itself, an individual can give $3,000 and a husband and wife can give $6,000, even though all the money is coming from the same purse. Organizations which have many members—and I have already cited two such organizations—the Committee for an Effective Congress and American Action, which have 80,000 and 70,000 members respectively—on the same basis for making contributions as a husband and wife.

Many people throughout this Nation have a propensity to participate in politics. They make contributions to various candidates. Many people throughout the country, from Maine to Hawaii, are interested in knowing the composition of the House of Representatives and the composition of the Senate. They are not necessarily interested only in the candidates who are running for their particular States. Organizations serve as the vehicle for these people to make contributions to those candidates throughout the country who represent their ideology or philosophy. Individuals who may be able to contribute only $5 to $100 each, and who do not have access to information about all the candidates running for office, are justified, I think, in relying on the organizations which give them leadership and direction about where to make their contributions.

The point was made by the Senator from Michigan that the people do not necessarily know where their contributions are going. Certainly they know the purpose of the organizations to which they are making contributions. I do not know of any organization that deceives its supporters into believing the contribution will be used otherwise than in a way that will be consistent with what the organization holds as its principles.

In conclusion, let me say that I feel that the amendment merely puts an organization on a more equitable basis than the basis on which it will be if the bill passes in its present state.

Mr. President, I urge Senators to support this amendment.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, how much time remains on this side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUBLESTON). Fifteen minutes remain.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, of course, I respect the views of the distinguished Senator from Maine. I realize there is some points to what he says, but I do not find his argument weighty enough to convince me that I should support his amendment.

I take issue, particularly, with the thrust of that part of his argument which appeared to condone the delegation by individuals to special interest groups of their citizenship responsibilities.

Of course, there is an infinite number of special interest groups—many of them are interested in only one particular issue. For example, I think of the National Work Organization, which is interested in nothing except the one issue of so-
I support Senator HATCHWAY's amendment. It is a reasonable compromise. It is a compromise that will be unpalatable to the large corporate interests, each of whom would like to give their $3,000 contribution and still retain their present level of influence. But it is a compromise that will work to expand and broaden the political process, not to narrow it.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no time on the bill.

Mr. GRiffin. I yield the Senator 5 minutes.

Mr. COOK. First of all, Mr. President, we are talking about a matter of semantics, and I hope it does not get down to an argument between whether C. Clement Stone and his wife give $6,000 or the Committee for an Effective Congress can give only $3,000. We are debating the whole issue that we really picked a figure with no study as to how we got to that figure. Therefore, any plea we go from that particular figure to another particular figure is just a matter of making a determination as to whether we agree or do not agree.

Another point I should like to make is that I discussed this business of whether it is or is not a means by which we can launder funds. Obviously, one can launder funds at $3,000 contributions as well as at $6,000 contributions. But this bill depends on the federal laws of the United States to have a basic concept of what the law is and whether they are willing to live by the law or whether they are willing to break the law.

I suggest to the Senator from Michigan that under this act, if we pass it relatively in the form it is in, we provide that one cannot do what the Senator has suggested I read to him from page 76, paragraph (c):

(c) (1) For purposes of the limitations contained in this section all contributions made by any person directly or indirectly to or for the benefit of a particular candidate, including contributions which in any way earmark or identify, or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to that candidate, shall be treated as contributions from that person to that candidate.

So the only point we have to raise here, if we believe in the operation of the political process it is our intention to abide by the law, is that if one wishes to give $3,000 and say, "Will you please give it in the name of Mr. Stone, and that is whom I want you to go for," under the law, the organization that receives the $3,000, and is a conduit to get it to the Senator from Maine, has to report where it came from, and that it was instructed to pass it on.

The point I really think we are getting down is no: a point between C. Clement Stone and the Committee for an Effective Congress, but an honest-to-goodness point. I think the only point that has merit is whether a husband and wife who have substantial assets can give to one person the $6,000 and to someone who has substantial assets and gives a facility or a lobbying group such as the Committee for an Effective Congress, the Committee for a Federal World, or the Committee for a Cleaner Environment, can give only $3,000 because they cannot marry another committee.

I think that is the issue before us, and that is the issue on which we have to make a determination as to what we vote on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Abourezk). Who yields time?

Mr. GriffiBN. Mr. President, how much time remains on this side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 6 minutes.

Mr. GriffiBN. Mr. President, I do not take issue with the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COOK. I thank the Senator for the time.

Mr. GriffiBN. I am pleased that the language to which he refers is in the bill, and it will be helpful. It is an important step in the right direction.

However, I still believe that the basic question is the one I raised at the outset of my presentation—that is whether the citizenship responsibility should be delegated by individual citizens to special interest groups.

I find it interesting and somewhat ironic that some of the organizations that are the loudest in their pleas for reform, including ceilings on contributions and expenditures, are in the forefront of support for weakening amendments to help the one pending now. The New York Times, which frequently calls for election reform, is unrealistic when it contends that special interest groups could give 3 or 4 times as much as the bill provides without influencing or affecting elections. That is absolutely absurd as it would apply to House races. If the limit were to be three or four times what it is in the bill, then a special interest group could, in effect, provide the major portion of the funds on which a candidate would run for the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, the arguments have been presented; and so far as I am concerned, I am willing to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HATCHWAY. Mr. President, I yield the floor to the Junior Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. GriffiNB. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HUDSTON. I thank the distinguished Senator for yielding.

Mr. President, I have a couple of points to make in support of this amendment.

It has been a long accepted concept in this country—and indeed a tradition—that citizens are able to join other citizens of like philosophy, of like purposes or objectives, so that their combined force may have a combined impact greater than the individual would have himself.

I would think that a person who has only a few dollars to contribute to a candidate of his choice must feel somewhat helpless as he considers what impact his contribution might make or what influence he may have, when he considers that other individuals can contribute $3,000 or, in the case of a married couple, $6,000.

We are doing here, it seems to me, is to give individuals who are willing to join because they have a like interest or like philosophy or a like objective, and provide some impact, if they have $50,000, $100,000, or whatever, comparable to a couple. It is reasonable to assume that Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, it should be recognized that a $3,000 contribution for some individuals means no more than a $5 contribution for other individuals.

I believe that the fact no automatic implication is attached to individual's contribution under normal circumstances.

Mr. President, I do not want the Congress to go in the direction of this amendment. They expect more from this Congress in terms of campaign financing reform.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, how much time is remaining to both sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate from Michigan has 1 minute remaining and the Senate from Maine has 14 minutes remaining.

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. President, I just want to point out in conclusion that as far as the amount involved is concerned, the President advocated a $15,000 limitation, at least with respect to Presidential campaigns. It seems to me the $3,000 for individuals and $6,000 for a group limitation, being considerably below the amount recommended by the President, is realistic. I do not believe that the distinction which was being made by the distinguished Senator from Michigan with respect to special interest groups can be made between a group and a married couple. A married couple that is able to contribute $6,000 to a candidate is just as apt to have a special interest as a special interest group.

I do not think we can make a legislative decision about whether a special interest group, cor or individual should or should not make a contribution.

The Senator from Michigan mentioned earlier in his remarks that there are constitutional problems involved. Certainly, we do not want to inhibit any person or group in making a contribution; whether an individual is interested in all legislation before Congress or only in one piece of legislation, be or a group to which he belongs should be able to make a contribution. And as I have said, a group should be able to make the same contribution as a married couple.

Mr. President, I find of no reason not to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield back the time on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll. Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senate from Arkansas (Mr. PULSBRIGG), the Senate from Alaska (Mr. HAYDEN), the Senate from Michigan (Mr. McCLURE), the Senate from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), the Senate from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), and the Senate from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS) are present.

I further announce that, if present and voting the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) would vote "aye."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEALL), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MCCARTHY), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHWECKER) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 42, as follows:

[A report of the committee of the whole House was read, and on motion of Senator Anderson (Mr. HATHAWAY), an amendment to the amendment proposed by Senator HATHAWAY (Mr. HAYDEN)]

...So Mr. HATHAWAY's amendment (No. 1082) was agreed to.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to. Mr. COOK. I move to lay that notice on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of the whole House of Representatives on the amendment of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2747) to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to increase the minimum wage rate under that act, to expand the coverage of the act, and for other purposes.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, before the Senate from Alabama is recognized, I should like to make a request. I ask unanimous consent that following the disposition of the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Alabama there be a 30-minute limitation on the Bentsen amendment, which is next in order, the time to be equally divided between the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN) and the manager of the bill (Mr. CANNON); and that in addition there be a 10-minute limitation on an amendment to be offered to the amendment, to be divided between the sponsor of the amendment, the distinguished Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), and the acting Republican leader, the distinguished Senator from Missouri (Mr. GLEASON).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is this an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Thirty minutes and 10 minutes, the 10 minutes to be on the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent in order to ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I now ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, while a large number of Senators are in the Chamber, would the distinguished majority leader allow me to ask unanimous consent that it be in order to ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment to the amendment, with the understanding that if the amendment is accepted, the order for the yeas and nays will be withdrawn.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order for me to ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate asking that it be in order to ask for the yeas and nays at this time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator describe his amendment? Or is his request merely to ask for the yeas and nays?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That it be in order to ask for the yeas and nays at this time. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan?

Withdrew. It is so ordered.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I now ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1110

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Alabama is recognized to call up his amendment No. 1110, which will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 21, immediately after "(C)", insert "and".

On page 4, line 24, beginning with "(d)" and through line 3 on page 5 and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon.

On page 7, line 9, immediately after the semicolon, insert "or".

On page 7, line 17, strike out the semicolon and "or" and insert in lieu thereof a period.

On page 8, beginning with line 3, strike out through line 7.

On page 9, line 7, strike out "for nomination for".

On page 9, line 8, immediately after the comma, insert "the candidate and his authorized committees must have received contributions for his general election campaign in a total amount of more than $250,000 and"

On page 9, line 13, strike out "primary" and insert in lieu thereof "general".

On page 9, line 24, immediately after "candidate", insert "other than a Presidental candidate"

On page 10, beginning with line 3, strike out through line 10.

On page 10, strike out lines 11 and 12 and insert in lieu thereof "(2) For the purposes of paragraph (1), no contribution from"

On page 13, line 16, strike out "(1)"

On page 13, line 17, strike out "(f)" and insert in lieu thereof "(e)"

On page 13, line 24, strike out "(g)" and insert in lieu thereof "(f)"

On page 14, beginning with line 0, strike out through line 9 on page 15.

On page 15, line 5, strike out "(f)" and insert in lieu thereof "(e)"

On page 15, line 10, strike out "(g)" and insert in lieu thereof "(f)"

On page 15, beginning with line 22, strike out through line 3 on page 16.

On page 16, line 4, strike out "(e)" and insert in lieu thereof "(d)"

On page 17, line 4, strike out "(f)" and insert in lieu thereof "(e)"

On page 17, line 21, strike out "(g)" and insert in lieu thereof "(f)"

On page 18, line 4, strike out "(h)" and insert in lieu thereof "(g)"

On page 72, between lines 3 and 4, insert the following:

"(3) (A) Except to the extent such amounts are changed under section 504(e) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, no candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may make expenditures in connection with his primary election campaign in any State in which he is a candidate in such an election in excess of the greater of:

(a) 20 events multiplied by the voting age population as certified under section 504(f) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 of that State or

(b) $250,000.

(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraph (A), no such candidate may make expenditures throughout the United States in connection with his campaign for that nomination in excess of an amount equal to 10 percent of the voting age population of the United States for purposes of this subparagraph, the term "United States" means the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands and any area from which the national nominating convention of a political party is selected.

(C) The Commission shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President or use in two or more States will be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State under subparagraph (A) based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure."

On page 72, line 4, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(1)"

On page 72, line 7, strike out "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(2)"

On page 72, line 12, strike out "(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)"

On page 72, line 13, strike out "(5)" and insert in lieu thereof "(4)"

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at this time for me and my friend and my friend in the third Allen amendment, on which there is a limitation of 30 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. BENTSEN). I do not think the taxpayers should have to foot the bill for half of their expenditures.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, this bill does not set any limit on the presidential race for which matching funds are available. If a fellow said, "I do not want any money from Illinois that has already provided for in the checkoff system," I would say, "oh well," he could be getting Uncle Sam to finance his campaign.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 8 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, this amendment removes from the bill, and from the Presidential nomination contest, the $5 million subsidy to the Democratic Party. It would leave the Senate and House primaries and general elections, and the general election for the Presidency, but would not provide matching funds for the nomination contest for the nominations for President and Vice President of the two major parties. The bill as it now stands would provide for matching fund contributions of up to $250,000, for up to some $7.5 million for every candidate for the nomination of the two major parties who was able to raise $250,000.

The self-determined limit of $250,000 is the maximum the candidate is allowed to raise, not the amount he can spend. The Federal Election Commission will have the task of audits but the candidate will have the decision in how to spend the money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, this amendment removes from the bill, and therefore from the Presidential nomination contest, the $5 million subsidy to the Democratic Party. It would leave the Senate and House primaries and general elections, and the general election for the Presidency, but would not provide matching funds for the nomination contest for the nominations for President and Vice President of the two major parties. The bill as it now stands would provide for matching fund contributions of up to $250,000, for up to some $7.5 million for every candidate for the nomination of the two major parties who was able to raise $250,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at this time for me and my friend in the third Allen amendment, on which there is a limitation of 30 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. BENTSEN). I do not think the taxpayers should have to foot the bill for half of their expenditures.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, this amendment removes from the bill, and from the Presidential nomination contest, the $5 million subsidy to the Democratic Party. It would leave the Senate and House primaries and general elections, and the general election for the Presidency, but would not provide matching funds for the nomination contest for the nominations for President and Vice President of the two major parties. The bill as it now stands would provide for matching fund contributions of up to $250,000, for up to some $7.5 million for every candidate for the nomination of the two major parties who was able to raise $250,000.

The self-determined limit of $250,000 is the maximum the candidate is allowed to raise, not the amount he can spend. The Federal Election Commission will have the task of audits but the candidate will have the decision in how to spend the money.
Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. CANNON. I yield.
Mr. ALLEN. I am sure that the Senator understands that the amendment is not directed at the Presidential general election; it has to do only with the nominating process.
Mr. CANNON. I understand that the amendment relates only to the primary portion, which does have the triggering factor that the candidate might have demonstrated support.
Mr. ALLEN. He could get that all in one State, could he not, under the provisions of the bill? So it would not have to be really very widespread.
Mr. CANNON. Well, I think he would have a very difficult time raising that kind of money in one State. That would be my own reaction, that he would have a difficult time meeting the triggering factor in only one State, though it might be possible.
Mr. ALLEN. But I guess one could expect that in California for a candidate to get up to $700,000 in one State, in $100 dollar contributions, or $250,000 in $250 contributions in Presidential nomination contests.
Mr. CANNON. Well, the triggering factor in the State of California provides a maximum limit as well as the minimum.
Mr. ALLEN. Yes, but he could get—
Mr. CANNON. The Senator candidates, if they campaigned in California, would raise only $125,000.
Mr. ALLEN. Yes. But $700,000 would be available to him on a matching basis, would it not?
Mr. CANNON. That is correct, provided he met the triggering factor.
Mr. ALLEN. Yes, so if he could raise $700,000 in $100 contributions in one State, it would certainly seem likely that a Presidential candidate of not too much stature could raise $250,000 in $250 contributions in one State.
The point I was making was that I was taking a mild exception to the Senator's statement that it required widespread support. But the support could come from one State or from the District of Columbia.
Mr. CANNON. The Senator is correct. It could come from one State, provided he raised that triggering amount from one State.
Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.
Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?
Mr. ALLEN. I yield.
Mr. LONG. How many States did the Senator wish a person to raise money in?
Mr. ALLEN. I rather imagine it will be adopted—I am not absolutely sure—because I do not have too much success voting up to some States—but I have an amendment that would require that the $250,000 triggering amount would have to be raised with $2,500 contributions from at least 40 States to show widespread support.
Mr. LONG. It would seem to me that if a man had support in 10 States that should be enough.
Mr. ALLEN. I take a man like the head of Common Cause. Mr. Gardner, he could raise the $250,000 without too much trouble. He seems to be able to raise larger amounts than that. That would entitle him to start dipping into the Public Treasury, ostensibly to run for President, if he has the contributions. I do not feel that we should encourage anyone who has to raise $250,000 from getting that matched and getting subsequent contributions matched on an equal basis out of the Federal Treasury up to a limit of $7.5 million in matching funds. I do not feel that is what we want to do with the taxpayers' money.
Mr. LONG. I find myself thinking along the same lines as the Senator, that any Senator from a large State, a personable Senator from a large State, say, who could raise a quarter of a million dollars easily—even an average size State—I think that the man potentially could have that much money in his own State if the people thought he had the slightest chance. So that it would seem appropriate he should have to demonstrate that he could raise a substantial amount—maybe $100,000—just to indicate that he was not purely a candidate of his own constituency.
Mr. ALLEN. I have an amendment to offer later on which would carry that into effect.
Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator from Alabama.
Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Senator from Louisiana.
Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.
Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.
Mr. ALLEN. A PERIOD OF DISCUSSION. All time on this amendment has now been yielded back.
Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. OWEN), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULCHER), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GAVRIL), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCCURRY), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. WILLIAMS), and the Senator from New York (Mr. WILLIAMS) are necessarily absent.
I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCCURRY) would vote "nay."
Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. BAKES), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEALL), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHWEIKER) are necessarily absent.
I also announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is absent on official business.
I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. ATKIN) is absent due to illness in the family.
I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) would vote "nay." On this vote, the Senator from Vermont (Mr. ALLEN) is paired with the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Mondale). If present and voting, the Senator from Vermont would vote "yea" and the Senator from Minnesota would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 53, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 2714) to amend certain provisions of law defining widow and widower under the civil service retirement system, and for other purposes.

The Vice President subsequently signed the enrolled bill.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general elections campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Rich Glaub, a member of my staff, be accorded the privilege of the floor during the debate on this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Under the previous order, the pending business is the amendment of the Senator from Texas (Mr. BEIRNES), amendment No. 1083. The amendment will be stated, to clarify the situation.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

The amendment is as follows:

"(2) (A) A political action committee may not knowingly solicit or accept a contribution for its campaigns from any agent of a foreign principal or from any person who is a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined in section 611(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended, other than a person who is a citizen of the United States; or

(B) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined in section 611(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act."

On page 76, line 3, strike out "(2)" and insert in its place:

"(1) An individual who is:

(A) a foreign principal directly. The term "foreign principal" as that term is defined in section 611(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended, or

(B) an individual who is a candidate for Federal elective office, and to amend agent provisions of law defining widow and widower under the civil service retirement system, and for other purposes.

So Mr. ALLEN's amendment (No. 1110) was rejected.
consider an appropriate amendment to 18
U.S.C. 613 at the time it begins floor debate on S. 3044. We will be pleased to provide further information or assistance on this sub-topic if you desire.

Sincerely yours,

L. Fred Thompson,
Director.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I wish to point out that last June, in testimony before the Committee on Rules and Administration, Mr. Phillip Hughes, who was then Director of the Office of General Electoral Studies, testified that restrictions should be placed on political contributions by foreign nationals.

President Nixon as well in his recent message on campaign finance reform of the United States as resident immigrants. My amendment would exempt foreign nationals who have lived here for years and who spend most of their adult lives in this country; they pay American taxes and for all intents and purposes they are Americans. The Voting Rights Act of 1965 broadened that.

Mr. COOK. The Senator from Texas says that these people are in any way impeded in making a contribution to the political process in their country. Mr. BENTSEN. The Senator from Texas is he precluded from that. He is an American citizen living overseas and he can participate. The American political process should not be left to the political of individual from writing his individual check and sending it to a political organization of his choice in the United States in any election?

Mr. COOK. I do not think the public knows, and it should be in the record, that in the vicinity of 2 million Americans, who by reason of employment, study, and many, many other situations existing in the commercial world, are located overseas and live there for long zens. They maintain voting records.

Mr. BENTSEN. The Senator from Kentucky is absolutely right.

Mr. COOK. I thank the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I have no quarrel with the basic purpose of this amendment, which is directed toward contributions from abroad to influence political campaigns, but I think it should be pointed out that last year in this country there were, as aliens lawfully here, 4,633,457 people. That is a pretty sub-table.

Mr. COOK. I do not think the Senator from Texas knows exactly what he is doing, because a sub-table.

Mr. CANNON. I have no quarrel with the basic purpose of this amendment, which is directed toward contributions from abroad to influence political campaigns, but I think it should be pointed out that last year in this coun-was put out would result in that person's mail going to hundreds of people in his own State, including the great State of Texas, who would not be eligible to make contributions under this particular amendment. I think that it is also important to underscore the fact that obviously U.S. citizens and by aliens who have not been admitted for permanent residence in the United States, and those people who have indicated their intention to live here, are here legally, and are permanent residents. Those people would be and should be allowed to make political contributions in this country.

I think one statement ought to be made in response to the comment made by the Senator from Nevada. It has been stated (Sec. 613 of title 266). Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I ask of the Senator from Texas in that it provides contributions under this particular amendment by aliens who have not been admitted for permanent residence in this country, and by aliens who have not been admitted for permanent residence in the United States.

I agree with him that, by and large, our political process should be in the hands of those who are citizens and have the right to vote. Actually, our amendment does not really close up that much. It acknowledges that we cannot prohibit contributions by those who have been admitted for permanent residence. Even then, they do not have the right to vote in that instance, they would have the right to make financial contributions. But my amendment goes further. It also prohibits a contribution in the form of a check written on a foreign bank. The distinguished Senator from Texas, in his argument for his amendment, referred to foreign banks. I would agree with the concern that he expressed by that reference. However, the amendment as it has presented it does not touch the matter of foreign banks.

I realize that some persons will make the argument that it is going to be inconvenient, particularly for American citizens who live abroad, if they cannot write their checks on foreign banks. However, I think that it is also important to underscore the fact that obviously U.S. law does not reach and cannot control foreign banks. We cannot, by the court process of the United States, investigate a foreign bank. We cannot examine its accounts. We cannot have access to its checks. Some of the stories of abuse that we have been exposed to have involved...

S 4717

Mr. BENTSEN. I must say that the Senator from Kentucky has been so persuasive I will yield him 3 additional minutes.

Mr. COOK. I thank the Senator; I will not use nearly all that time.

Mr. President, I have no idea, and I do not think the Senator from Michigan has any idea, either, how many people in the northern rural areas of our border States between the United States and Canada may find that a Canadian bank, which is much closer to their residence, their farm, or wherever they live along that border line, so that they may well do business with a Canadian bank. There may conceivably be other families who come to have never done business with an American bank, because of its location.

Let us take the plains areas of North Dakota, or the area of northern Michigan, the Senator’s State.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I was going to suggest taking Michigan.

Mr. COOK. I am wondering, really, how many people who live by the common border of the United States and Canada do business and have done business for years and years with Canadian institutions. What we are really saying by this is that if you will drive the 40 miles to an American bank, open an account, write out your check for $10, and then close your account, because you are not going to deal with that place because of its inconvenience, you are going back to your own bank that you are now doing business with."

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, if I may respond most respectfully to a Senator who comes from a State within the very center of the United States, responding as a Senator who does live in a State which borders all along the Canadian line, my amendment does not bother me one bit whatsoever insofar as that concern expressed by the Senator from Kentucky. I concede there might be a few contributions that would not come into the campaign as a result of what I am doing, but I really do not think the mischievousness or inconvenience in all that great. I do not think there is a lot to be gained in terms of building confidence in our campaign process, the other respects generally called reform, in taking the step which I have suggested.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. BENTSEN. I can understand the concern of the Senator from Michigan with trying to stop this laudingering of accounts through foreign banks, but if you have someone who is trying to move a large sum of money through a foreign bank, they will be able, as I understand it, to take that to his American bank, and they could use that as a U.S. bank, if they wanted to, or buy an American Express check, if they wanted to, and circumvent what the Senator is trying to do very easily.

I think what the Senator’s amendment would really do is make it inconvenient for 2 million Americans living overseas who might not want to take the time and trouble to overcome its restrictions by going to a U.S. bank, by trying to prevent
Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I think, on the basis of one or two episodes which have occurred, we are trying to decide whether we should interfere with the balance of all international transactions, and still, as a result, this transaction by an American citizen must have the added restriction that it must be through an American institution.

We are saying that American banks cannot have international relations in their banking departments, which obviously every major bank in the United States has, and they make daily transfers of deposits back and forth. Yet we are saying that this individual who wants to contribute to the American political process as an American citizen will be forcibly prevented from doing so.

Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HATFIELD) is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. ANKN) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 89, nays 0, as follows:

[YEAS—90]

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFIN. Mr. President, is there time remaining?

Mr. GRIFIN. Mr. President, I wish to focus again on the major reason why this amendment should be accepted. That is that Mexican banks, Swiss banks with numbered accounts, and other foreign banks are not subject to the laws of the United States. It is not possible to investigate a campaign situation and require a foreign bank to reveal canceled checks or otherwise provide an accounting for what has happened in that bank.

I think that the time has come when the American people expect Congress to provide for control by the laws of the United States over the facilities and institutions that are going to handle the funneling of campaign contributions. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BENNET, Mr. President, I would reluctantly oppose the substitute for my amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan, despite the very noble objectives of the amendment from Michigan has outlined. The Senator from Kentucky has convinced me that this would result in substantial inconvenience to a couple of million Americans living overseas, and yet would not accomplish the objective the Senator from Michigan is trying to accomplish in this regard. Therefore, I would urge the Senate to defeat the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields the floor? The Senator from Michigan has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. GRIFIN. Yield it back, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCURR). All remaining time having been yielded back, this is an amendment to the substitute amendment of the Senator from Michigan. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRALF), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCCa), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE) and the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) are necessarily absent.

Mr. GRIFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEALL), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. FANNIN), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHWARTZ) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. ANKN) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 89, nays 0, as follows:

[YEAS—90]

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be excused from attendance on the Senate on Friday and Monday, to conduct hearings in Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Backey, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 274) to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to increase the minimum wage rate under that act, to expand the coverage of the act, and for other purposes. The enrolled bill was subsequently signed by the Vice President.
FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT
AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an amendment I am submitting to S. 3044 be considered as having met the requirements of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Under the previous order the pending business is the amendment of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN).

The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 13, between lines 14 and 15, add a new subsection (d), as follows:

(d) No Member of the Ninety-third Congress or any committee of such Member shall be eligible to receive matching funds in connection with the candidacy of such Member for nomination for election to the office of President for the term beginning January 20, 1977.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 6 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be given leave of absence for tomorrow, because of the fact that about a month ago I accepted an invitation to speak to Alabama audiences on tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the pending amendment is very short, but it is important.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, may we have order? We cannot hear the Senator. May we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the amendment is very short and to the point. It says:

No Member of the Ninety-third Congress or any committee of such Member shall be eligible to receive matching funds in connection with the candidacy of such Member for nomination for election to the office of President for the term beginning January 20, 1977—

Which would be the term starting after the 1976 election.

We already have, under the checkoff provision, adequate machinery, and there will be adequate funds, to finance the general election campaign of 1976.

Under the checkoff provision there would be accumulated in this fund by the 1976 Presidential elections more than $50 million, and it is provided that some $21 million shall be available to each of the major parties for the conduct of the Presidential election of 1976.

Of course, a minor hitch in the law is that, in order to get that money, the political parties would have to certify that it would not accept funds from the private sector, and the members of that party might think they could not run for President with $21 million. So unless they have the law amended, it is possible they will not come under that provision in 1976.

But it is quite obvious where much of the drive for further Federal campaign financing, public Treasury financing, is coming from. It is quite obvious that it is coming from those here in the Congress who have an ambition to serve as President of the United States.

This amendment would preclude any Member of the Ninety-third Congress from receiving funds, not to run for his present position—but would preclude him from obtaining a subsidy from the tax-payers to conduct a campaign for the Presidency of the United States for either party.

We frequently hear it said, "Well, it is not the money that is involved; it is the principle." Well, if the candidates for the Presidency who are in the Congress really believe that, and they believe that campaign financing by the taxpayer is a good thing, that the principle is right, they ought not to have any objection to a provision that would preclude them from running for the Presidency to the tune of up to $7.5 million.

Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT. I note a section of the Constitution that my distinguished colleague is quite familiar with, article I, section 8:

No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time.

The Senator is speaking of principles. I wonder if there is not a correlation in principle between this section of the Constitution with regard to appointment to a civil office and creating a fund from which a campaign for the Presidency might be utilized. It seems to me there is a corollary between the two.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Senator for that suggestion. I doubt, however, if they would be analogous. That section of the Constitution applies to emoluments which would accrue to an individual as an office holder, whereas the present proposal provides for funds to help him get that office. I doubt if they would be analogous, but there occurs the principle of voting for a measure that would result in a person's receiving up to $7.5 million.

I am hopeful that the Senate and those who might possibly be beneficiaries of this provision will see fit to add the amendment to the bill, on the theory that the principle of public financing would still be there; but those who feel so strongly that this is a good principle, and if it is a principle that they are standing for, possibly would be willing to forego the receipt by them of a subsidy of this size of up to $7.5 million.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. MATHIAS. I understand the principles that underlie the amendment. I want to assure the Senator that, as far as I am concerned, I quite approach this with a great deal of objectivity.

Mr. ALLEN. I am sorry to hear that, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. MATHIAS. But, on a more serious note, I wonder if in proposing this amendment the Senator has in mind that the President of the Senate is to be included as a Member of the Nineteenth Congress.

Mr. ALLEN. If what?

Mr. MATHIAS. If the President of the Senate is to be included within the definition of Members of the Nineteenth Congress.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator think he would?

Mr. MATHIAS. Well, the distinguished Senator is the author of the amendment, and I was just probing for his intention.

Mr. ALLEN. No, I would not feel that he would be a Member of the Nineteenth Congress. He presides over one branch of the Nineteenth Congress, but he is not a Member of the Congress, quite obviously.

Mr. MATHIAS. I think the Senator. I thought it was important to make that a matter of legislative history, to find out what was in the Senator's mind.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know that that legislative history is necessary, because I doubt seriously if this amendment is going anywhere, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. MATHIAS. Well, I think it is useful. Of course, the President of the Senate is, for many administrative purposes, a Member of the Senate, and when he is called upon, under the provisions of the Constitution to break a tie, he votes as a Senator votes. So I think if this amendment, or if the thought which underlies this amendment, should proceed either now or later, that would be an important point.

Mr. ALLEN. Is it the Senator's idea that the Vice President is a Member of the Nineteenth Congress? I stated it was my idea it was not. What is the Senator's idea?

Mr. MATHIAS. Well, the Vice-Presidency, of course, has been defined in various ways in various periods of history, and sometimes most colorfully, by those who have occupied that lofty and elevated chair. I think we all remember the definition of the office that was given by Vice President John Nance Garner. But for some purposes the Vice President is a Member of the Senate. Let us suppose, just hypothetically, that the Senator's amendment would produce a tie and that the Vice President had to be called upon to break the tie.

Mr. ALLEN. He is not here.

Mr. MATHIAS. We are talking hypothetically. Suppose that.

Mr. ALLEN. I see.
Mr. MATHIAS. And then he voted. Certainly under those circumstances the principles of equity which the Senator has described as applying to everybody else would operate on the Vice-Presidency.

Mr. ALLEN. The chances are he would have a lot of company in that predicament. If he voted for the subsidy.

Mr. MATHIAS. I thank the Senator. Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CONNOR. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back my time and am prepared to vote, if the Senate so desires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McCLELLAN) to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. MONDALE). All time having been yielded back, and the ayes and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk then proceeded to read the amendment.

The Assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment. Mr. BROCK's amendment is as follows:

On page 24, line 18, strike out "and 617" and insert in lieu thereof "617, and 618". (1) cast, or attempt to cast, a ballot in the name of another person shall:

"(a) No person shall:"

"(1) cast, or attempt to cast, a ballot if he is not qualified to vote;

"(2) force or alter a ballot;

"(3) cast, or attempt to cast, a ballot if he belongs to a voting machine, or"

"(4) count any act (or fail to do anything required of him by law),

"with the intent of causing an inaccurate count of lawfully cast votes at any election; or"

"(5) A violation of the provisions of subsection (a) is punishable by a fine of not more than $100,000, or imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both."

"On page 25, line 19, strike out "and 617" and insert in lieu thereof "617, and 618". (2) cast, or attempt to cast, a ballot in the name of another person, shall:

"(a) No person shall:"

"(1) cast, or attempt to cast, a ballot if he is not qualified to vote;

"(2) force or alter a ballot;

"(3) count any act if (or fail to do anything required of him by law),

"with the intent of causing an inaccurate count of lawfully cast votes at any election; or"

The amendment was rejected.
for my own and say that Tennessee has made remarkable progress in reducing ballot abuses. But it is not perfect yet, and I am not sure that anyone else is either. It is important that people wherever they may live in this country should have the assurance that we intend to protect this most essential of their rights.

I cannot believe that we can pass comprehensive campaign reform legislation without dealing with this most fundamental reform as it relates to the ballot and the right to vote and the right to have that vote counted. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield for a question?

MR. BROCK. I yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Does the Senator have any idea in how many States the process he outlined is now illegal?

MR. BROCK. I would say to the Senator generally speaking, virtually all of them are. The problem, it seems to me, is more with the inadequate ability to deal with the problem. Our law is either not adequately enforced or else they are poorly drawn so as to be unenforceable. Much of the time the State laws are enforced by the very people who are engaging in the abuse. This is the problem I am trying to deal with.

Mr. GOLDWATER. The Senator would make it a Federal crime for those who participate in the activities that he has outlined and illustrated today and that would apply to the Presidency, to the Senate, and to the House?

MR. BROCK. That is correct.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Has the Senator suggested any penalty?

MR. BROCK. Yes, I have a sizable penalty which would go, in the ease of extreme abuse, to a $100,000 fine and 10 years in jail. We must have a severe penalty.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Would the Senator—would this sound funny, but it has happened in my city—would the Senator’s amendment cover the use of names in graveyards?

MR. BROCK. Absolutely.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I thank the Senator. I think his amendment is worthwhile and I shall support it.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield for a question?

MR. BROCK. I yield.

Mr. TOWER. If I understood the Senator correctly, one of the reasons he is offering this is that although virtually all the States have laws that define such abuses as crimes, the fact is that very often the beneficiaries of the rigged election are those responsible for administering the election laws of the State and, therefore, they are rarely ever brought to justice and justice is often not done.

MR. BROCK. That is correct. There seems to be no recourse in some instances today for voter protection against this kind of abuse. We have seen it on too many occasions, in elections that were stolen, where the enormity of the fraud actually changed the course of the election and the people who then were elected were in the position to enforce or not to enforce the statute.

Mr. TOWER. Is it not true, in the instance of election fraud, in elections involving people running for Federal office, that virtually all those that have been brought to justice under any existing laws have been brought to justice under the aegis of a Federal investigation or a Federal prosecution rather than by the State?

MR. BROCK. That is correct, to the best of my knowledge.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

MR. BROCK. I yield.

Mr. COOK. May I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee, relative to his response to the Senator from Arizona a few moments ago, that there is one thing in here that gives me a problem. I wish he would consider, although the title says “Intended to be proposed by Mr. Brock” that he would say “* * * and general election campaigns for Federal elective office * * *” I would say to the Senator from Tennessee that in the body of his amendment as such, it shall be a Federal crime for those who do not say “for Federal elections.” I am wondering because at least in my State we do have off-year elections, where we have elections for members of the State legislature, the State senate, and for the governorship, I am concerned as to the overall constitutionality of this amendment, unless he would consider, on line 4, page 2, where it has said: “(a) No person shall * * *”... Then add, in elections held for the purpose of Federal officials such as the Senate, Congress, the President, and the Vice President.

Mr. TOWER. I am wondering whether I could convince the Senator from Tennessee that that language should be in there, so that we do not have the problem of interferring with State election laws in those years when elections are held on a statewide basis and when no Federal elections are up.

Mr. BROCK. Of course that language should be in there. The Senator is absolutely right. I appreciate his suggestion. If I may, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment on page 2, line 4, to add after the word “shall” the words: “in a Federal election.”

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Helmet). All those in favor?

Mr. BROCK. Will the Senator please send his proposed modification to the desk.

Mr. BROCK. If that language will suit the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. TOWER. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Tennessee. I must say that that resolves the problem. Without that language in there, were were risking getting into a rather serious question in regard to State constitutionality and also with regard to the Constitution of the United States, by the way.

Mr. BROCK. I appreciate the Senator's diligence. I have no intention of interfering with any State process. We have a real responsibility to maintain the sanctity of the ballot box in Federal elections.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, do I correctly understand that the effect of the Senator’s modification will be to narrow the effect of the proposed amendment to elections for Federal offices only?

Mr. BROCK. That is correct.

Mr. TOWER. It would not apply to any State, county, or local election then?

Mr. BROCK. That is correct. That was the amendment’s intention. The Senator has pointed it out correctly. We were not specific enough.

Mr. COOK. If I may enlarge on that a little, under the Constitution of the United States, we do not have the right to prescribe the rules and regulations for the conduct of State and local elections.

Mr. TOWER. That is correct. As an old States’ Righter, I would concur with that.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, does the Senator from Tennessee have any objections if he might withdraw the call for the yeas and nays and just have a voice vote?

Mr. BROCK. I would be delighted to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the yeas and nays on my amendment.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 1999, as modified, of the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Brock).

That amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1104

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I now call up my amendment No. 1104 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

ILLEGAL CONTRIBUTIONS AND UNEXPENDED FUNDS

Sec. 317. (a) Any contribution received by a candidate or political committee in connection with any election for Federal office in excess of the contribution limitations established by this Act shall be forfeited to the United States Treasury.

(b) Any political committee having unexpended funds in excess of the amount necessary to pay its campaign expenditures within thirty days after a general election shall deposit those funds in the United States Treasury or transfer them to a national committee.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, this amendment attempts to deal again with what I view as perhaps the inadvertent absence of existing law, dealing with leftover funds after a campaign. It may
I am not really prepared to give any substance to the proposal that the Senate should have the power to assume any of the control which I think it is vital that the Senate should have. I think it is absolutely necessary that the Senate should have control over the whole of the operations of the Treasury, and I think it is absolutely necessary that the Senate should have control over the whole of the operations of the Treasury.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I wonder whether the amendment would not be a substitute for the provision in page 2 of the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on the subject of the Senate's action in the matter of Unlawful of the by death or by involuntary commission of the four, by death or by imprisonment for life.

Message from the House

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Barry, one of its reading clerks, informed the Senate that, pursuant to the provisions of section 10(a), Public Law 93-179, the Speaker had appointed Mr. Boscos and Mr. Redmite as members of the American Revolution Bicentennial Board, on the part of the House.

The message announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7724) to amend the Federal Election Act to establish a national program of biomedical research fellowships, traineeships, and training to assure the continued excellence of biomedical research in the United States, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Stagg, Mr. Ferris, Mr. Sandersfield, Mr. Devere, and Mr. Nelsen be appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT

AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of presidential and general election campaigns, in a Federal election office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I wish to address a question to the distinguished manager of the bill, Mr. CANON.

Mr. CANON. Yes.

Mr. HASKELL. I would like to ask the floor manager of the bill as to his interpretation of the bill as applied to a particular situation. Assume that a multiple candidate committee engages in certain expenses in connection with the fund raising for a multitude of different candidates. The concern expressed is that possibly the bill would be interpreted to allocate as a contribution to any candidate raising funds from that committee a pro rata share of expenses incurred in raising funds for other candidates.

I would like to ask the Senator's interpretation and intention in that situation and whether the legislation would be so applied.

Mr. CANON. Do I understand the Senator to mean a general committee that is widespread in scope and that is not a political campaign committee of the candidate?

Mr. HASKELL. That is correct.

Mr. CANON. It is the intention as to that type committee in the solicitation of funds that the expense of solicitation could not be charged to the candidate because that committee may be contributing to many, many candidates and they are limited in the amount they could contribute to the candidate, but the candidate himself would have to include in his expense itemization the cost they expended in raising those particular funds.

The other hand, if a candidate's own campaign committee that he designates is out raising money for him, obviously those expenses would be chargeable to the amount he can spend in his election.

Mr. HASKELL. I thank the distinguished Senator from Nevada. That is the way I interpret the legislation. There are Members who expressed some concern. I think this makes the record very clear.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator withdraw that request?

Mr. HASKELL. I withhold my request. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I call up my amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was stated as follows: The Senate by lines 5 and 6, insert the following:

"Suspension of Prank for Mass Mailing Immediately Before Elections"

"Sec. 318. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no Senator, Representative,
Mr. BROCK. I thank the Senator. He points out that the problem with the boxholder frank is with the House and not with the Senate, but I think it is important that we point out the potential for abuse here and, at least for this body, express our desire that every person should have access to a political process and should have, as much as we can guarantee it, full and free opportunity to seek his own election.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back the time.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee having been used, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. As a matter of efficiency, if the bill were referred to both committees, so that either could hold it up, wouldn't the Senate want to have it referred seriatim, or to both at the same time?

Mr. BROCK. The chairman of the Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Committee has indicated that the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee had no particular interest in this legislation, but he did not want to lose any jurisdictional right, which I fully understand and support.

So may I amend the request to ask that the bill be referred to the Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Committee?

Mr. JAVITS. I would object to that, because I do not agree with the chairman, with all respect. I think one of our big failures, and other members of the committee are present, such as the Senator from Montana (Mr. MANSFIELD), has been the failure to realize the critical impact on foreign policy of economic policy. I would ask that soon the Senator leave it as he has put it.

Mr. BROCK. Would referral seriatim be preferable?

Mr. JAVITS. No; leave it as it is. We have the explanation. Leave it as it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be so referred.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOK).

U.S. COAST GUARD

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to have considered sundry nominations in the U.S. Coast Guard which were reported earlier today, and ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BENNETT) Without objection, it is so ordered.

The second assistant legislative clerk read the nominations of Rear Admiral William F. Rea III, to be commander, Atlantic area, and Rear Admiral Joseph J. McClelland, to be commander, Pacific area.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations will be considered and confirmed en bloc.

The second assistant legislative clerk read the nominations of the following named officers for promotion to the grade of rear admiral: Rober I. Price, Winford W. Barrow, James P. Stewart, G. H. Patrick Burns, Robert W. Durley, and James S. Gracey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations will be confirmed and confirmed en bloc.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I request that the President of the United States be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nominations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION—TREATY ON EXTRADITION WITH DENMARK, EXECUTIVE U (93D CONG. 2D SESS.)

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session to consider the treaty on extradition with Denmark.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. BIDEN). Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will read the resolution of ratification.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved, (Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the Treaty on Extradition between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Denmark, signed at Copenhagen on June 22, 1972, Ex. U, 93-1.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BIDEN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Under the previous order, the hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, the Senate will now proceed to vote on the resolution of ratification on Executive U, 93d Congress, 1st session, the Treaty on Extradition with Denmark.

The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the Treaty on Extradition? On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. LEGISLATIVE SESSION—FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now return to legislative session and will re-consider consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, which will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) is recognized to call up amendment No. 1671, on which there is a limitation of 30 minutes.

AMENDMENT NO. 1671

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I call up Amendment No. 1671.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the Record.

The amendment is as follows:

Strikes out everything after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

COMPLETE DISCLOSURE OF ALL CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

SECTION 1. (a) Section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to definition) is amended—

(1) by striking out "in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000" in subsection (e);

(2) by inserting in subsection (e) (1) after "subscription" the following: "(including any assessment, fee, or nominal dues)";

(3) by striking out in subsection (e) (1) "or for the purpose of influencing the election of a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office";

by adding subsection (a) (2) to read as follows:

"(2) funds received by a political committee which are transferred to that committee from another political committee;

and

(5) by striking out paragraph (f) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(f) expenditure—"

(1) means a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, or gift of money or anything of value, made for the purpose of—

(A) influencing the nomination for election, or the election, of any person to Federal office, or to the office of Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates.

(B) influencing the result of a primary election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party, and (C) the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President; or

(D) paying, at any time, any debt or obligation incurred by a candidate or a political committee in connection with any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office;

(2) "means the transfer of funds by a political committee to another political committee;

(3) "means a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make an expenditure; and

(4) "includes any payment made or obligation incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610 of Title 18, United States Code, would not constitute an expenditure by that corporation or labor organization.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, on Tuesday, I submitted an amendment to S. 3044, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974. Basically, this amendment calls for full disclosure of all campaign contributions from every source, and of all campaign expenditures.

Additionally, this amendment plugs up a loophole in the existing Federal Election Campaign Act regarding the reporting of contributions made imminently prior to election day.

Under the 1971 act as it now stands, section 304 requires that each treasurer of a political committee shall be required to report receipts and expenditures on or before the election, or 15 days after the election, whichever is later.

On that date, a report must be filed for all contributions received since the closing date of the last reporting period, the date of filing for which is 15 days prior to the election. Since the "5-day" report must be filed 5 days prior to the election, but must include only those contributions received at a period ending 10 days before the election, there is a time lag of 10 days between the reporting of contributions made with this exception.

This amendment, as it is to close that loophole in the 1971 act effective, will plug up the provision will go a long way in restoring public confidence in the election process: for example, much of the alleged last-minute "vote buying" would be curtailed by public disclosure.

The fundamental principle of this amendment is to assure that all contributions and expenditures be fully disclosed to the public.

S. 3044, avoids serious constitutional questions that have been raised about the provisions of S. 3044 which limit contribution and expenditure made for the purpose of influencing the result of an election.

Mr. President, amendment No. 1071 to S. 3044 gives the American people true freedom of the press in the financing and conducting of Federal elections. It is a realistic and needed reform measure, based on the public interest and to which I want to address myself. Too often, political candidates receive support from groups not directly connected with their campaigns but which nonetheless provide assistance to their campaigns. To plug up that loophole, the soft money contributions from powerful labor union bosses that we hear so much about these days; but also, I speak of the aid provided by other organizations, formed for the specific purpose of rallying support around a particular candidate by rallying support for a particular issue which he espouses, thereby evading the letter and the spirit of the 1971 Act. Amendment 1071 takes care of these issues: public financing. Consent to have printed in the RECORD a the letter and the spirit of the 1971 Act. Mr. President, we will never have cam-issue which he espouses, thereby evading cetera, to reform.

Mr. HELMS. Between the 10th day Mr. President, I am prepared to yield serves

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.
Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes. I do not think that a frivolous amendment such as this deserves more than 2 minutes time in response.

I wish to say to my colleagues that all this does is knock out public financing; it knocks out the central campaign committee which many people feel is important; and it knocks out the Federal Election Commission which would be in this act. Furthermore, it requires complete disclosure of every penny of contributions. If a person makes a 25-cent contribution, there would be, $1 worth of paperwork to do the filing and reporting of the terms and provisions of this proposal.

We have a rather full disclosure provision in S. 372. The distinguished Senator from Rhode Island and many other Senators spent a lot of time on that matter, helped in its passage, and it was passed by the House. But this amendment would require absolute disclosure of the name, address, and principal place of business of every person making every contribution. He could not pass the hat at a political gathering. He could not send out a solicitation by mail and have people send in $1 or $2 in contributions without having to spend more than he actually received to carry-out the reporting provision.

Again I say to my colleagues that if they are opposed to the bill as it is now, vote for this amendment because all it is intended to do is to kill the bill as now written.

Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back my time.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I would like to respond to a question to the distinguished Senator from Nevada. Does the Senator agree that the loophole I described in the present act does exist?
Mr. CANNON. I am sorry. I did not hear the description of the so-called loophole. If the Senator will describe it to me, I shall be glad to respond.

Mr. HELMS. Between the 10th day before election day and the 5th day before election day, as the law stands now, it is wide open. Candidates can do anything they want without the public knowing what is going on because no report is required in that period until January 31 of the following year. Further, under existing law, in the final five days before election day, contributions over $5,000 must be reported within 48 hours. This is a loophole. This means that anything under $5,000 does not have to be reported, if contributed during the final 5 days of the campaign.

Second, if he receives during the election, 10 through 6, are the big holes because nothing is required to be reported until January 31.

Third, the final days, 5 through 1, are only partially covered that is, the 48 hours' reporting requirement.

Mr. CANNON. I would be happy to respond to the Senator. Under existing law, if a person receives $5,000 it must be reported within 48 hours. If the candidate received a campaign contribution of $5,000, 64 hours before the election he has to file the complete report on it.
Under this bill the Senator is saying this is a loophole; under this bill he cannot receive a contribution of $5,000.

Mr. HELMS. Oh, yes he can.
Mr. CANNON. The amount he can receive from any one person is $3,000. There is still the 5-day reporting under the terms of this bill. It is $5,000 from the committee but $5,000 from the individual. We adopted the $6,000 amendment yesterday so that a committee could give the same as a husband and wife, who together can give $6,000. But one individual can only give $3,000 under the terms of this bill as it stands now, and the filing is required 5 days before the election.

Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will someone yield me 30 seconds to ask a question?

Mr. HELMS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BAKER. Is it lawful under the present bill or under the amendment as proposed by the Senator from North Carolina to contribute anything during the 5 days before the election?
Mr. CANNON. Is it lawful to do so? Yes.

Mr. BAKER. When is that reported?
Mr. CANNON. There is a reporting period. It is not necessary to report before the election because the committee determined that between the 5 days and the election it is really a bookkeeping process that cannot be reported and publicized in that time. But the dangers of the big contributions have been taken out of the present bill. This is where the last minute big contributions entered into it in previous periods of time. This was an important loophole.

Mr. BAKER. It still is. I am not convinced that a way could not be found through the proliferation of committees to make possible a great many $5,000 contributions.

I have an amendment I will call up later, which would place a prohibition on the receipt of any campaign contributions at all, say 10 days before the election, so there will be full disclosure before election day.

May I ask one question of the Senator from North Carolina?
Mr. HELMS. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. BAKER. Do I understand the Senator's amendment removes the limitation on contribution?

Mr. HELMS. No, it does not address itself to limitation. It specifies what will be reported. But it leaves the limitations as they are.

Mr. BAKER. I do not think it makes much difference. I am not sure how I am going to vote on this amendment, but I want my colleagues to know that there is another amendment coming up which would make it unlawful to receive contributions a certain number of days before the election.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the manager of the bill yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Is not the main thrust of the amendment which is presently being considered to do away with public financing?

Mr. CANNON. Yes. Mr. PASTORE. That is the main thrust of the amendment. The other part is a sweetener, and I think if it is to be considered at all, it ought to be considered separately. The main thrust of the amendment is to knock out public financing. That is another way of getting around the so-called Allen amendment that was defeated.

Mr. HELMS. One of the main thrusts of the amendment is indeed to prevent putting the burden of campaign expenses on the backs of the taxpayer. The Senator is correct; this amendment will prevent that.

Mr. PASTORE. I have not accused the Senator of any deviousness. I am merely saying the main thrust of the amendment is to do away with public financing. That is the main thrust of it. I think we ought to know that.

Mr. HELMS. That is one of the thrusts of it. There was no attempt to digress. I am opposed to public financing of political campaigns. There is no question about that. This amendment improves the reporting of contributions provisions.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the manager of the bill yield me 1 minute?

Mr. CANNON. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, is the debate on the Wether amendment on Monday at 3 p.m.?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Approximately.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the Wether amendment occur at 3 p.m. on Monday, and that immediately following the disposition thereof, the Bellmon amendment (No. 1094) be called up, on which there is a time limitation, and that on the disposition of amendment No. 1094 by Mr. Bellmon, amendment No. 1095 by Mr. Bellmon be called up, and on that disposition of amendment No. 1095 by Mr. Bellmon, amendment No. 1096 by Mr. Buckley be called up, and that there be a time limitation on the Buckley amendment of 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled in accordance with the usual form.

These requests have been cleared on both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. Archer) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Hous Scott), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Taft) would vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Maryland (Mr. Beall) is paired with the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Hatfield). If present and voting, the Senator from Maryland would vote "yes" and the Senator from Oregon would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 43, as follows:

March 29, 1974

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWER. I would simply like to ask the Senator from West Virginia what he can project in the way of main from Senate business today, and, in addition to the Monday orders, what he might anticipate throughout next week.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, in addition to the distinguished Senator's inquiry, I have endeavored, on both sides of the aisle, to inquire as to whether or not there are other amendments which we do not already know about that could be called up this afternoon. I find that there are no Senators who are ready to call up further amendments this afternoon, with the exception of the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Huddleston), who has an amendment on which there is a time limitation of 30 minutes, and there is every indication that the distinguished manager of the bill will accept the amendment, and, hence, there will be no rollcall vote on that amendment.

In that event, there will be no more rollocall votes today. An amendment by the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. Wyden) has been laid on the table, and the distinguished author of that amendment wishes to talk at some length on it, and consequently there will be no vote on that amendment today.

The Senate will then adjourn until Monday at noon. After two special orders on Monday of 5 minutes each, there will be routine morning business until 1 o'clock, at which time the Senate will consider the amendment of the Weicker amendment, with a vote to occur on that amendment after 2 hours of debate, at 3 p.m.

Following the vote on the Weicker amendment, the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELL) has two amendments on each of which there is a 30-minute limitation, and they will be day votes, which, in my judgment, will be the automatic waiving of the amendment, and, consequently, there will be no rollocall vote on that amendment.

So as it looks from here, there will be at least four rollocall votes on Monday.

Mr. TOWER. Can the Senator project what our business is likely to be beyond Monday? I am trying to get his overview of the entire week, if that is possible, to the extent that the distinguished Senator from West Virginia knows.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The principal thing would be—and I have discussed this with the distinguished majority leader and the distinguished Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI) we will continue with the consideration of the unfinished business, with no-fault insurance waiting in the wings at some point, and the education bill coming along also. So we have three difficult pieces of legislation which will require some time for the Senate to complete. A busy week lies ahead.

Mr. TOWER. I thank the Senator from West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order to take up the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI) be vacated. The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MAGNUsson. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho has an amendment the he will probably on Monday, and I am hopeful that perhaps the distinguished Senator from Nevada will accept it. It will not take much time, but, anyway, I am now—Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. May I ask the distinguished Senator from Washington, is there any possibility that that amendment could be called up today?

Mr. MAGNUsson. I do not know that he is here. He can if he wants to. But we can do it, I think, very quickly; it is 5 minutes on Monday.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. In the event he would want to take it up today, if it is acceptable and can be handled by voice vote, he can do it either today or Monday.

Mr. MAGNUsson. I want to suggest also that we will all like to proceed on the no-fault measure as soon as possible, but it may not be quite ready for taking up in the very part of next week. It might be later in the week, because it will be a big, complex bill, and there will be a lot of amendments and a lot of debate on it.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes. Mr. MAGNUsson. We all understand that. But I wanted to give notice that the Senator from Idaho has an amendment, I have talked with the authors of the bill, I talked briefly with the Senator from Nevada, and I am hopeful that over the weekend they will accept that amendment.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Very well.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

AMENDMENT NO. 1114

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the previous order, the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON) is recognized to call up an amendment, on which there will be a vote in 30 minutes at the latest.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I call up my Amendment No. 1114.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUDDLESTON's amendment (No. 1114) is as follows:

On page 25, beginning with line 10, strike out through line 14 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Sec. 201. (a) Section 315(a) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315(a) is amended—

(A) by inserting "(1)" immediately after "(a);

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (1), (3), (4) and (5) as subparagraphs (A), (B), (C), and (D), respectively; and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(2) The obligation imposed by the first sentence of paragraph (1) upon a licensee with respect to a legal candidate for any elective office (other than the offices of President and Vice President) shall be met by such licensee with respect to such candidate:"

"(A) the licensee makes available to such candidate not less than five minutes of broadcast time without charge;

"(B) the licensee notifies such candidate by certified mail at least fifteen days prior to the section of the availability of such time; and

"(C) such broadcast will cover, in whole or in part, the geographical area in which such election is held."

"(3) No candidate shall be entitled to the use of broadcast facilities pursuant to an offer by a licensee under paragraph (2) unless such candidate notifies the licensee in writing of his acceptance of the offer within four hours after receipt of the offer."

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is quite simple: To insure that every legally qualified candidate has an opportunity to present his views.

In order to do that, I am seeking to amend section 201(a) of the reported bill.

The purpose of section 201(a) of S. 3044, as reported, is to encourage broadcast stations to schedule debates or discussion programs featuring the major candidates for a particular office. The requirement that all candidates for the same office be given equal time when there are numerous candidates, some of a "minor" nature, has proven to be a significant deterrent to this type of programming. To the extent that the revision proposed by the committee promotes joint broadcast appearances, including debates by major candidates, it is highly desirable.

However, as written, it is subject to great abuse that could be detrimental to the election process and to the public interest. It would, in fact, permit each broadcast station to be sole judge of which candidates could use its facilities. A station could give one candidate an unlimited amount of free time while severely limiting or denying his opponents any use at all. Some candidates could be totally precluded from any broadcast exposure.

As a broadcast station owner and manager for some 20 years, I believe that the vast majority of the Nation's broadcasters would be scrupulously fair in providing all candidates an opportunity to use their facilities. Yet the possibility for the above mentioned abuses does exist as the revision is presently contained in section 201(a) of S. 3044.

Therefore, my amendment would permit the automatic waiving of the equal time requirement of section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 for Presidential and Vice Presidential races—but for other elections it could be waived only if the broadcast station offers 5 minutes of free time to all candidates seeking the same office.

In my judgment, the requirement of 5 minutes of time for a candidate for a particular office, even if there are several, would not be such an onerous burden on the broadcast station as to preclude the scheduling of debates or discussions with the leading candidates and at the same time would insure that every candidate would have at least a minimal opportunity to present his views.

Again, calling on my experience as a broadcaster, I am convinced that this modification is in the best interest of the election processes, the broadcast industry, and most importantly, the general public.

Mr. President, I believe the managers of the bill are in general agreement with this proposed amendment. I urge its adoption and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, may I ask a question of the distinguished author of amendment? Do I correctly understand now that section 315 would be waived only in the event that the President and Vice President?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is correct, automatically.

Mr. CANNON. With respect to the other offices, it would be waived only in the event that the President and Vice President?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is correct. The only differentiation in the elections in my amendment is the election for President and Vice President.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is correct. The only differentiation in the elections in my amendment is the election for President and Vice President. They can be treated legitimately as a separate case because that is a nationwide contest, of course, and they are viewed by all the citizens of this country at the same time. So those two offices would be automatically exempt from the equal time requirement of section 315 of the Communications Act.

Beyond that, all other races whether for Congress, the school board, the Governor, whatever, would be treated the same. A station could be exempted, provided it offered all candidates seeking the same office 5 minutes of free time.

The reason I believe it should apply to all levels and not just Federal is that the broadcast stations then would be able to treat all elections in the same way and not have to keep a separate set of books or regulations for candidates running for Congress, for Governor, or whatever.

Mr. CANNON. But this amendment would impose no requirement on the broadcast stations to furnish free time?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No, sir.

Mr. CANNON. If they furnish free time, they would have to give the time to every candidate?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is correct. If they give one candidate free time, then they must offer at least 5 minutes free time to every other candidate seeking the same office.

Mr. CANNON. Would that be on a race-by-race basis? For example, let us suppose a hearing is determined, in a race for the governorship, that it would give the candidates free time and therefore he would have to give every candidate 5 minutes free time. If that were the case, and the candidate running for attorney general at the same time, would he have to, likewise, give that time to the other candidate?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No, sir; he would not. It would be strictly on a race-by-race basis. He could seek exemption in the race for Governor but not for any other race going on at the same time. The amendment applies only to candidates running for the same office.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. PASTORE. To each candidate on this side as a part of the purpose of section 315 would be to give the candidates free time and therefore the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. With respect to the language in the bill as presently drawn, this would exempt completely from the office of President and Vice President, which is desirable.

As the Senate knows, I have remarked on this a number of times. When I talked to the newspapers, the Associated Press, ABC, CBS, and NBC, they did promise that if we lifted the exemption from section 315, they would be willing to give adequate time to candidates for the Presidency and the Vice Presidency. Everyone knows how expensive that is true.

As to other Federal offices and State offices, there, I am afraid, that if we lifted it completely, we could open up a can of worms because we have many different people running for many county races and this sensitivity has some merit—if we left it entirely to the discretion of the local stations whether radio or television, we would be more or less at the mercy of the owner who could use the medium to his own advantage day after day editorializing on radio or television. There is no objection to editorializing, of course, expressly favoring one particular candidate. But if he could do that after day and not give the opposition any time, we could be in serious trouble.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, you are on the basis of that explanation, I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. TOWEE. Mr. President, I have discussed this with the distinguished minority leader, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Cook), and he has authorized me to say that he is prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDENT. All time on this amendment has now been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment—No. 1114—of the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Huddleston).

The amendment was agreed to.

SENIOR BUCKLEY ON CAMPAIGN REFORM

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, in the most recent issue of the publication, Human Events, the distinguished junior Senator from New York (Mr. Buckley) has true "campaign reform" legislation.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. CANNON. Would that be on a race-by-race basis? For example, let us suppose a hearing is determined, in a race for the governorship, that it would give the candidates free time and therefore he would have to give every candidate 5 minutes free time. If that were the case, and the candidate running for attorney general at the same time, would he have to, likewise, give that time to the other candidate?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No, sir; he would not. It would be strictly on a race-by-race basis. He could seek exemption in the race for Governor but not for any other race going on at the same time. The amendment applies only to candidates running for the same office.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. PASTORE. To each candidate on this side as a part of the purpose of section 315 would be to give the candidates free time and therefore the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. With respect to the language in the bill as presently drawn, this would exempt completely from the office of President and Vice President, which is desirable.

As the Senate knows, I have remarked on this a number of times. Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDENT. All time on this amendment has now been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment—No. 1114—of the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Huddleston).

The amendment was agreed to.

SENIOR BUCKLEY ON CAMPAIGN REFORM

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, in the most recent issue of the publication, Human Events, the distinguished junior Senator from New York (Mr. Buckley) has true "campaign reform" legislation. The detailed responses which Senator Buckley has made to the probing questions presented in this interview deserve the considered attention of every public official who is committed to supporting true campaign reform legislation designed to reform the conduct and financing of political campaigns. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator's comments be printed in the Record.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am willing to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.
The President's proposals seem designed to deal with the problems in our present system, while the Senate bill will have: before us shortly would scrap the current method and would cost the American taxpayer some $358 million every four years. More importantly, however, this scheme presents us with grave constitutional and practical questions that I hope will be fully debated on the floor of the Senate before we vote.

Q. Why do you object so strongly to public financing?
A. I object because I am convinced that such drastic measures are needed to clear up the problems we confront, because I suspect that the proposals presented are under consideration and because I believe they would alter the political landscape of this country in a way that many don't even suspect and very few would support.

Those in and out of Congress who advocate public financing are selling it as a cure-all for our national and political ills. For example, Sen. Kennedy recently went so far as to say that "most, and probably all, of the problems we have today have to address themselves to issues of major importance to the people who will be contributing to their campaigns and voting for them.

First, under our present system potential candidates must essentially compete for private support, and to attract that support they have to address themselves to issues of major importance to the people who will be contributing to their campaigns and voting for them.

Public financing might allow candidates to ignore these issues, thus their stands and run campaigns in which their emphasis and like other solutions based on the theory that federal dollars will solve everything should be rejected. Q. Should public financing "alter the political landscape"?
A. In several very important if not totally predictable ways.

First, under our present system potential candidates must essentially compete for private support, and to attract that support they have to address themselves to issues of major importance to the people who will be contributing to their campaigns and voting for them. Public financing might allow candidates to ignore these issues, thus their stands and run campaigns in which their emphasis is concentrated on others that might be better received by the electorate. I don't doubt for a minute that the Senator's Vietnam position hurt him, but I wonder if we really want to move toward a system that would allow a candidate to avoid such issues or gloss over positions of concern to millions of Americans.

The need to court the support of other groups creates similar problems. Those who believe that we should maintain a friendly relationship with the U.S.S.R. as well as those who think a candidate should support union positions on a whole spectrum of issues want a candidate to stand before they give him their vocal and financial support. The need to complete for campaign dollars forces candidates to address many issues and many issues vital to the maintenance of a sound democratic system.

Second, millions of Americans now contribute to federal state and local political campaigns. These people see their decision to contribute to one campaign or another as a vote. Publicly financing of federal general election campaigns would deprive people of an opportunity to participate and to express their strongly held opinions.

They would still be contributing, of course, since the Senate proposal would fund hundreds of millions of dollars in tax money. But their participation would be compulsory and would involve the use of their money to support candidates and positions they find morally and politically reprehensible.

Third, the proposal reported out of the Senate Rules Committee, like similar proposals advanced in the past, combines public financing with strict limits on expenditures. These limits must be flexible, whole, work to the benefit of the candidates, since they are lower than the amount that a challenger might have to spend presently in a hotly contested race. If he is to have any advantage the advantages of his opponent's incumbency.

Fourth, the various schemes devised to distribute federal dollars among various candidates and between the parties has to affect power relationships that now exist. Thus, if you give money directly to the candidates you further weaken the party system. If you give the money to the national party, you strengthen the national party organization. If you aren't yourself essential to give more to the candidate you are further weakens the party system.

On the other hand, one a third party qualifies for future federal financing, a vested interest in perpetuating that party, even if the George Wallace who gave it its sole reason for existence should move on. Thus we run the risk of financing a proliferation of parties that could destroy the stability we have historically enjoyed through our two-party system.

Q. You say public financing raises grave constitutional questions. Are you saying that these plans might be struck down in the courts?
A. It is obviously rather difficult to say in advance just how the courts might decide when we don't know how the case will be brought before them, but I do think there is a real possibility that subsidies, expenditure limits, and contribution ceilings could all be found unconstitutional.

All of these proposals rest on the premise that public financing would either ban or limit or diminish a candidate's right of free speech. In this light it is interesting to note that a three-judge panel in the District of Columbia has already struck portions of the 1971 act unconstitutional.

The 1971 Act prohibits the media from charging for political advertising unless the candidates pay the directly charged amount, for this would not cause his spending to exceed the limits imposed by the law. This had the effect of restricting the freedom both of individuals wishing to buy ads and of newspapers and television stations that might carry them and, in the opinion of the D.C. court, violated the 1st Amendment.

In contrast, according to the report prepared by the Senate Rules Committee on S 3044, it is claimed that these questions were examined and that the committee was satisfied that objections involving the effect of the legislation on existing political arrangements were without real foundations.

I sincerely hope, however, that the debate on this issue will be conducted with respect and that any compromise that might carry them and, in the opinion of the D.C. court, violated the 1st Amendment.

The ethical, constitutional, and practical questions remain.

The fact is that the ultimate impact of a system of this kind on our present party structure cannot be accurately predicted. S 3044 may either strengthen parties because of public control the party receives over what the committee calls the "marginal increment" of campaign contributions, or it may further weaken parties because the government subsidy is almost assured to the candidate, thereby relieving him of substantial reliance on the "insurance" the party system had. Whatever happens, one can be sure that alone should lead one to doubt the wisdom of supporting the bill as drawn.

I favored public financing as the bill is equally unclear. It does avoid basing support for third parties simply on performance in the last election and thus "perpetuating" parties that are no longer viable. But the proposal does not deal, for instance, with the possibility of a split in one of the two major parties or where there are two more groups claim the mantle of the old party.

Q. Senator Buckley, advocates of public financing argue that political campaigning in America is such an expensive proposition that only the wealthy and those beholden to special interests can really afford to run for office. Do you agree with this claim?
A. No, I do not.

First, it is erroneous to charge that we spend an exorbitant amount on political campaigns in this country. In relative terms, we spend far less on our campaigns than in virtually any other country in the world.

Moreover, this scheme, like many other schemes devised to distribute federal dollars among various candidates and between the parties would alter the political landscape of this country in a way that many don't even suspect and very few would support.

Finally, if we base our defense of the existence of third parties simply on people who restricting the limits imposed on others that might be better received by the electorate. I don't doubt for a minute that the Senator's Vietnam position hurt him, but I wonder if we really want to move toward a system that would allow a candidate to avoid such issues or gloss over positions of concern to millions of Americans.

Q. S 3044 is the bill that includes public financing of presidential, Senate and House campaigns, isn't it?
A. That's right. The bill that we will soon debate includes provisions that would allow candidates to use federal office to raise sums for the purposes of financing their campaigns. The system would replace the essentially private system now in effect and would cost the American taxpayer some $358 million every four years.

More importantly, however, this scheme presents us with grave constitutional and practical questions that I hope will be fully debated on the floor of the Senate before we vote.

Q. Why do you object so strongly to public financing?
A. I object because I am convinced that such drastic measures are needed to clear up the problems we confront, because I suspect that the proposals presented are under consideration and because if implemented they would alter the political landscape of this country in a way that many don't even suspect and very few would support.

Those in and out of Congress who advocate public financing are selling it as a cure all for our national and political ills. For example, Sen. Kennedy recently went so far as to say that "most, and probably all, of the problems we have today have to address themselves to issues of major importance to the people who will be contributing to their campaigns and voting for them. Public financing might allow candidates to ignore these issues, thus their stands and run campaigns in which their emphasis is concentrated on others that might be better received by the electorate. exceptions to this rule. There are dishonest people in politics as there are in other professions, but they certainly don't dominate the problem.

Q. But doesn't the wealthy candidate have a real advantage under our current system?

A. Oh, he has an advantage all right, but I'm not sure it's as great as some people would have us believe.

I say this because I am convinced that given adequate access to the media, a candidate will be able to attract the financial support he needs to get his campaign off the ground and thereby gain a decided advantage over his personal, personally wealthy opponent. And I am also convinced that a candidate who doesn't appeal to the average voter won't get very far regardless of how much money he throws into his own campaign.

My own campaign for the Senate back in 1970 illustrates this point rather clearly. I was running that year as the candidate of a minor party against a man who was willing and able to invest more than $2 million of his family's money in a campaign in which he began as the favorite.

I couldn't get him personally, but I was able to attract the support of more than 40,000 citizens who agreed with my positions on the issues. We still weren't able to match his dollar for dollar, but we spent twice as much as we did—but we raised enough to run a creditable campaign, and we beat him in the election.

At the national level it is just as difficult to say that money is the determining factor and the evidence suggests that the rich and the wealthy won't get a man to the White House. If it were the case that the richest man always comes out on top, Rockefeller would have triumphed over Goldwater in 1964. That, over Eisenhower in 1952 and neither Nixon nor Stevenson would ever have received their party's nomination for President.

What I'm saying, of course, is that while money is important it isn't everything.

Q. What is needed now is more spending by the challengers trying to unseat entrenched congressmen and senators who have lost touch with their constituents?

A. I don't like to think of myself as overly cynical, but neither am I naive enough to believe that majorities in the House and Senate are about to support legislation that won't at least give them a fair shake.

The fact is that most of the "reforms" we have had to date have been to the advantage of the incumbent—not the challenger. The incumbent has built-in advantages that are difficult to overcome under the circumstances and might well be impossible to offset if the challenger is forced, for example, to observe an unrealistically low spending limit.

Incumbents are constantly in the public eye. They legitimately command TV and radio news coverage that is exempt from the "equal time" provisions of current law. They can regularly communicate with constituents through means not available to the challenger. They can draw on a personal staff which the challenger is likely to find lacking.

Incumbents are constantly in the public eye. They legitimately command TV and radio news coverage that is exempt from the "equal time" provisions of current law. They can regularly communicate with constituents through means not available to the challenger. They can draw on a personal staff which the challenger is likely to find lacking.

Q. What is needed now is more spending by the challengers trying to unseat entrenched congressmen and senators who have lost touch with their constituents?

A. I don't like to think of myself as overly cynical, but neither am I naive enough to believe that majorities in the House and Senate are about to support legislation that won't at least give them a fair shake.

The fact is that most of the "reforms" we have had to date have been to the advantage of the incumbent—not the challenger. The incumbent has built-in advantages that are difficult to overcome under the circumstances and might well be impossible to offset if the challenger is forced, for example, to observe an unrealistically low spending limit.

Q. What kind of candidates will benefit from public financing?

A. Any candidate who is better known when the campaign begins or is in a position to mobilize non-monetary resources must naturally do better than the unknown candidates and those whose supporters aren't in a position to give them such help.

This is necessarily true because the spending limits that flow from the integral part of all the public funding proposals I have seen even out only one of the factors that will determine the outcome of a given campaign. Other factors therefore become increasingly important and may well determine the winner on election day.

Thus, incumbents who are usually better known benefit because experience has shown that a challenger often has to spend significantly more than his incumbent opponent simply to achieve parity in the eyes of most voters.

In addition, consider the advantage that a candidate whose backers can donate time and money to his campaign has over the candidates whose backers just don't have the time to donate. In this context one can easily imagine a situation in which an issue-oriented candidate might swamp a man whose support comes primarily from blue collar, middle-class workers who would contribute money but don't have time to work in his campaign.

various "reform" proposals now before us. Our job involves a balancing of competing and related interests. It is not always as easy as it might appear to the casual observer.

The problem we are called upon to do what we can to eliminate abuses, we must do so with an eye toward side effects that could render the legislation that we issue a number of his larger contributors were Republicans who didn't want it publicly known that they were supporting a Democrat. This disclosure required included in the 1971 Act clearly inhibited their willingness to give and, as you may have guessed, we have nothing what constitutional lawyers call a "chilling effect" on their right of self-expression.

These were both innovators with prominent names. Perhaps their decision to give should not be viewed as inamsmate in the context of the purpose of the act.

Q. Senator, are there any other "reforms" that you think worthy of consideration?

A. Well, there are a good many proposals being circulated that haven't had a real chance to discuss, but I'm afraid most of them raise more questions than they answer. Senate approval is a certificate with prominent names. Perhaps their decision to give should not be viewed as in ammendable in the context of the purpose of the act.

Q. You say that "full disclosure" laws also create problems. What kind of new problems?

A. Well, you may recall that Sen. Muskie's 1972 primary campaign reportedly ran into a serious trouble area because a number of his larger contributors were Republicans who didn't want it publicly known that they were supporting a Democrat. Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUMBLETON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF THE LAND AND WATER CONSERVATION ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2844) to amend the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act, as amended, to provide for collection of special recreation use fees at additional campgrounds, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation on the pending bill, S. 2844, for not to exceed 15 minutes, with 10 minutes to be allotted to Mr. Bartlett and 5 minutes to be allotted to Mr. Biles.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. President, I ask that Mr. McClure be allowed to speak for not to exceed 15 minutes, out of order, without the time being charged against the time on the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McClure. I thank the Senator from West Virginia.

VIETNAM VETERANS DAY

Mr. McClure, Mr. President, the President of the United States has designated today as a national day of recognition of the contributions of the veterans of Vietnam. In conjunction with that designation, the President of the United States from South Vietnam to pay their tribute and to bring their greetings from President Thieu concerning the contributions of the American veterans to the struggle for freedom and the maintenance of South Vietnam.

President Thieu has sent this delegation, which consists of Mr. Pham Do Than, who is no other than the President of the Central Logistics Agency; and Mr. Buu Thang, Assistant to the Director General of the Civil Logistics Agency; and Mr. Le Huu Phuc, a lawyer in the Court of Saigon.

They presented their credentials to me, on behalf of the President of South Vietnam, the proclamation by President Thieu, and I ask unanimous consent that the message from President Thieu be printed at this point in the Record.

There being no objection, the message was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

MESSAGE OF PRESIDENT

PRESIDENT NGUYEN VAN THIEU, TO THE AMERICAN VETERANS OF THE VIETNAM WAR, ON THE OCCASION OF THE FIRST VIETNAM VETERANS DAY, MARCH 29, 1974

DEAR FRIENDS: On the occasion of the first Vietnam Veterans Day, I would like to express my best personal regards to each and every American who has chosen to make common cause with the Vietnamese people at a dark moment of our history.

This is to your nation's selfless determination to stand by a small and struggling nation in its hour of peril. America has proved once again the sterling worth of its commitments and its unshakeable faith in an international order that refuses to condone aggression. This strength and greatness of vision have resulted in a world made much safer after nearly three decades of the Cold War, in which the chances of peace are probably greater than at any other time in recent history.

In the case, the aggression from the North, checked only by the forces American, Vietnamese, and allied comrades-in-arms, has resulted in an agreement which in some degree, has the South Vietnamese, allowed for the first time the South Vietnamese people to think in terms of reconstruction and development efforts. The Paris Agreement of January 27, 1973, did not merely bring out an honorable conclusion to the direct American involvement in the conflict in our land, it also strengthened the legal bases of the Republic of Vietnam in its continuing struggle for defense and freedom this part of the world.

The army and people of the Republic of Vietnam are therefore eternally grateful to the American people, especially to its valiant sons, for their past contributions and present continued support; we are confident of the further and the way to consolidate results that we have all won together so that the sacrifices you have accepted on our behalf will never go thought to have been in vain.

In this hour of communion, the people and army of the Republic of Vietnam also turn our thoughts to the 50,000 Americans who made the decision to make peace to make peace for the cause of freedom in Vietnam to them and to the bereaved families of the heroes, who will always be in the deepest expression of our respect and gratitude, praying that they rest in heaven in the happy knowledge that they had contributed no small share to the defense of human dignity and honor.

My friend, in the name of our country, I ask for 1 minute, time not to be charged against my time. As a result of the Vietnam War, many veterans who had participated in the conflict in our land, for without their faith and silent acquiescence in the heroism of their country, the Vietnam War could not have been brought to a successful end. To them and to their loved ones, we will honor a most memorable Vietnam Veterans Day.

Thank you and may God bless you all.

Nguyen Van Vinh
President of the Republic of Vietnam.

AMENDMENT OF THE LAND AND WATER CONSERVATION FUND ACT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2844) to amend the 1976 Land and Water Conservation Fund Act, as amended, to provide for collection of special recreation use fees at additional campgrounds, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask for 1 minute, the time not to be charged against either side.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 2844 be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate resume consideration of the unfinished business.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT

AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1972, as amended, to provide for the election of members of the U.S. Senate from Idaho. The Senate proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CANNON. Without Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume consideration of S. 2844.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF THE LAND AND WATER CONSERVATION FUND ACT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2844) to amend the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act in order to clarify that Act in several respects relating primarily to user fees on Federal recreation lands.

The Senate amended S. 2844, as amended, to amend the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act in a manner which was interpreted to mean that certain number of campgrounds for which user fees may be charged by Federal agencies. S. 2844, as reported, seeks to clarify the situation with respect to those facilities and services for which no fee may be charged while retaining the general criticality of the other provisions of the Act.

In addition, the bill makes clear that the Gold Eagle and Golden Age passports will only entry by means of other than private, non-commercial vehicle and may be used by parties entering, for example, on foot, by commercial bus, or by horseback. It also provides that the Gold Age Passport will be a lifetime passport, rather than one which must be renewed annually.

The bill also gives the head of any Federal agency the authority to contract with any public or private entity to provide visitor reservation service and allows the states to attach matching land and water conservation fees. It also provides for the collection of special recreation use fees at state park areas. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, there will be no further action on the unfinished business. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, there will be no further action on the unfinished business. The amendment was agreed to. The amendment was ordered. The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

"(d) No payment shall be made under this title to any candidate for any campaign in connection with any election occurring before January 1, 1977.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the distinguished senior Senator from Washington (Mr. Masseison) be added as a cosponsor of this amendment."
3. Section 1(c) is a conforming amendment, consistent with changes made in the Golden Eagle Passport provision.

4. Section 2 amends the Golden Eagle Passport. The amendment would change the Golden Eagle Passport to a lifetime passport that could be used to reimburse a passenger for the purchase of a motor vehicle, bicycle, horse, or other means of transportation. The amendment also includes a provision allowing the passport to be used for recreational purposes, such as fishing or hunting.

5. Section 3(b) amends the Golden Eagle Passport to provide for the issuance of the Golden Eagle Passport to individuals who are not U.S. citizens, and to provide for the issuance of the Golden Eagle Passport to individuals who are U.S. citizens but who are not residents of the United States. The amendment also includes a provision allowing the passport to be used for international travel.

6. Section 4(a) amends the Golden Eagle Passport to provide for the issuance of the Golden Eagle Passport to individuals who are not U.S. citizens, and to provide for the issuance of the Golden Eagle Passport to individuals who are U.S. citizens but who are not residents of the United States. The amendment also includes a provision allowing the passport to be used for international travel.

7. Section 5 changes the definition of "special use" for the purposes of the Golden Eagle Passport. The amendment eliminates the requirement that the Golden Eagle Passport be used for the purchase of a motor vehicle, bicycle, horse, or other means of transportation, and instead requires that the Golden Eagle Passport be used for recreational purposes, such as fishing or hunting.

8. Section 6 amends the Golden Eagle Passport to provide for the issuance of the Golden Eagle Passport to individuals who are not U.S. citizens, and to provide for the issuance of the Golden Eagle Passport to individuals who are U.S. citizens but who are not residents of the United States. The amendment also includes a provision allowing the passport to be used for international travel.

9. Section 7 amends the Golden Eagle Passport to provide for the issuance of the Golden Eagle Passport to individuals who are not U.S. citizens, and to provide for the issuance of the Golden Eagle Passport to individuals who are U.S. citizens but who are not residents of the United States. The amendment also includes a provision allowing the passport to be used for international travel.
SENATE FLOOR DEBATES ON S.3044 APRIL 1, 1974
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE

April 1, 1974

Workmen installing a television surveillance unit had cut out power for a key safety device used to start the shift.

Unwittingly, a control rod was pulled out, while the one next to it was already fully withdrawn. An "adventitious criticality"—an unintended nuclear reaction—began. After about two seconds, computerized controls cut in with a "scram", the nuclear word for an emergency shutdown.

The incident also caused somewhat of a chain reaction at the Atomic Energy Commission, resulting in an instant memorandum on the situation with a 71-destination routing slip, an investigation, and, eventually a $18,000 fine, only the second the agency has ever levied against a nuclear power plant.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR HATFIELD—TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the order, Mr. Hatfield be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a Senator.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS TO 1 P.M. TODAY

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 1 p.m. today.

There being no objection, at 12:31 p.m., the Senate took a recess until 1 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. HASKELL).

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASKELL). Morning business is now concluded.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume the consideration of the unfinished business (S. 3044), which the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 3044, to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum with the time to be taken out of both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is amendment No. 1070 to S. 3044. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment No. 1070 is as follows:

"SECTION 5. (a) No person who is or becomes a candidate, or political committee for such candidate, in a campaign for nomination or in a campaign for election to Federal elective office may, directly or indirectly, in any way whatsoever—

"(1) accept or arrange for any contribution, or expend or contract for any obligation, prior to the filing deadline for the election;

"(2) accept any cash contribution in excess of $50; or

"(3) accept any contribution, contract for any expenditure, or expend or contract for any expenditure, or contribute, or expend through the use of a third party.

"Any deficit in connection with a campaign for nomination or election to Federal elective office shall constitute a violation of this section, and such deficit shall be paid only by means of contributions received under the supervision of and according to a procedure which shall have the prior approval of the Comptroller General.

"(c) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000, imprisonment not to exceed one year, or both.

"S. 3044. Contributions by political committees—Political committees shall not make any contribution to any candidate, political committee, or other campaign for Federal elective office: Provided, That such committee may administer and solicit contributions, so long as such contributions are given directly by the initial contributor to a candidate, political committee, or other campaign for Federal elective office.

"§ 615. No more than one political committee "A candidate may establish no more than one political committee, which shall be in such candidate's own name: Provided, That the name of the committee, as well as the name of its chairman and treasurer, shall be filed with the Comptroller General immediately upon its formation; and should such a committee be established, all contributions received or expenditures made in connection with the campaign with which such a committee is associated shall be contributed to Federal elective office shall be received or made by such committee and not by the candidate."

REPORTS

Sec. 5. Section 434 of title 2, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 434. One report by political committees or candidates "(a) Each treasurer of a political committee supporting a candidate or candidates for Federal elective office, candidate, or such candidate's political committee, shall file a report with the Comptroller General two weeks prior to a scheduled election date for such candidate or candidates.
"Contents of Reports"

"The report shall be cumulative, shall report with respect to any activity in connection with the candidacy, and shall disclose—"

"(1) the full name and social security number of each person who has contributed to the campaign, together with the amount of such contribution;"

"(2) the full name and mailing address of each person to whom a debt or obligation is owed;"

"(3) the full name and mailing address of each person to whom expenditures have been made, together with the amount of such expenditures;"

"(4) the total sum of all contributions received;"

"(5) the total sum of all expenditures; and"

"(6) the total sum of all debts and obligations.

Penalties

Sec. 6. (a) Section 444 of title 2, United States Code, is amended to read as follows: "Section 441. Penalties for violations

"Any person who violates any of the provisions of the subsection shall be fined, in an amount as least equal to three times the amount of any monetary violation, or, in the case of nonmonetary violations, such amount as will satisfy the provisions of the provisions of subsection. The moneys collected from the fine shall be paid by the violator for general publication or transmission, to the highest possible extent in the geographical area in which the campaign or election was held, of at least the Comptroller General's findings. The means of such transmission or publication shall be determined by the Comptroller General, and shall require the complete expenditure of the fine, unless the Comptroller General determines that a lesser amount, determined by him, will achieve complete publication and transmission of the nature of the violation. An additional fine may be levied if the Comptroller General shall determine that, due to the nature of the violation, an additional amount is needed to properly publish the violation."

(b) Title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding the following section: "Section 616. Penalties for violations "Any person who violates any of the provisions of this subsection shall be fined, in an amount as least equal to three times the amount of any monetary violation, or, in the case of nonmonetary violations, such amount as will satisfy the provisions of the provisions of subsection. The moneys collected from the fine shall be paid by the violator for general publication or transmission, to the highest possible extent in the geographical area in which the campaign or election was held, of at least the content of the Comptroller General's findings. The means of such transmission or publication shall be determined by the Comptroller General, and shall require the complete expenditure of the fine, unless the Comptroller General determines that a lesser amount, determined by him, will achieve complete publication and transmission of the nature of the violation. An additional fine may be levied if the Comptroller General shall determine that, due to the nature of the violation, an additional amount is needed to properly publish the violation."

Comptroller General

Sec. 7. The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1976 is amended by inserting the words "Comptroller General" wherever the words "supervisory officer" appear. The Comptroller General shall make such rules or regulations as may be necessary or advisable for carrying out the provisions of this Act: Provided, That any rules or regulations so promulgated shall be published in the Federal Register not later than December 31, 1978.

Effect of State Law

Sec. 8. The provisions of this Act, and of rules or regulations promulgated under this Act, preempt any provision of State law with respect to campaigns for nomination for election to any Federal office (as such term is defined in section 301(c)).

Partial Invalidation

Sec. 9. If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the Act and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

Effective Date

Sec. 10. The provisions of this Act shall become effective on December 31, 1975.

Mr. Weicker, Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it necessary that the amendment be read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been called up. It is not necessary that it be read.

Mr. Weicker. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Messrs. Field, Mihalec, Dotchin, and Baker of my staff be permitted access to the floor during debate on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. Allen. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. Weicker. I am happy to yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. Allen. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Connecticut for yielding time to me. I shall support his amendment, but the purpose of asking for the time now is to comment on two amendments that I will send to the desk after I have concluded my remarks, that would change the matching formula on primary races and would change the substantive provision on general election races as to House and Senate races.

There has been considerable conjecture and argument as to whether the bill is an incumbent challenger's bill, that is, whether it is weighted in favor of the incumbents or weighted in favor of the challengers.

The Senator from Alabama feels that if one side or the other, that $1 dollar for dollar it should be the challengers on account of certain built-in advantages that the incumbents do have. So in order to remove any doubt about whether the challengers or the incumbents are favored, I have prepared two amendments, one dealing with the primaries of House and Senate Members and the other dealing with general elections of House and Senate Members.

The first amendment would have to do with primaries, and under the provisions of the bill the Federal Treasury would match dollar-for-dollar the contributions up to $100 received by the various candidates for the House and the Senate, and there would be equal matching.

The amendment I am offering as to primaries, as to incum bents it would match only one-half of matchable contributions, whereas for challengers it would match 1 dollar for dollar the contributions received by challengers. In other words, the Federal Government would match only one-half of the private contributions, private eligible contributions for primaries, to the Federal Treasury and match all of the eligible contributions received by challengers.

In the second amendment, in general elections, whereas the bill as written the Federal Government would pay a subsidy of 15 cents per person of voting age in the congressional district or in the State, as the case might be, whether Congressmen or Senators, the amendment would provide that only one-half of that amount would be paid to an incumbent, whereas the full subsidy in the general election would be paid to a challenger.

Under these provisions there would be no doubt but what this would give the challenger a break and would offset some of the built-in advantages an incumbent would have.

I believe it is necessary to make some distinction between a challenger and an incumbent and to provide as to the general subsidy that is given to the challenger and an incumbent. I believe these amendments, if adopted, would remove some of the built-in advantages an incumbent has over primaries and in the general election.

Mr. President, I submit these amendments and I ask that they be printed and lie on the table, to be called up at a later date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received and printed, and will lie on the table.

Mr. Weicker. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time. I thank the distinguished Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. Weicker. Mr. President, it is my intention to ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. I will not do so at this time but certainly as we draw closer to the hour of 3 o'clock I would appreciate it if we might get a sufficient number of Senators to the Chamber to assure the yeas and nays.

Mr. President, the amendment before the Senate in the nature of a substitute for the bill before the Senate. Some parts of the bill are incorporated, so far as tightening up finance procedures during a campaign, yet the principal thrust of the bill as relate to the federal financing process is not only different from any proposed in the bill but completely different from our common practices so far as the selection and election of candidates within our present political system.

First, I wish to try to set a tone for what I advocate by saying I do not doubt in any way the desire to reform our campaign financing process. As has been pointed out in S. 3944, there are members of the committee, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Carasso) and others who have laid the way, the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy), and organizations such as Common Cause. I believe very much in their desire for reform and their desire to set straight that which has been done wrong, as brought forth by various bodies during the past year.

Yet it seems to me the problem is far bigger than any individual abuse of campaign contributions to incumbents, but it is a problem solved in the normal way. Rather we have to take a careful look at our political procedures and relate back to the abuses that have taken place. So I intend to argue vigorously for my way to achieve results that I hope will be a step forward. This is meant to discredit those who have another way of going about the same business. First let us relate to the bill, if we might, and go over the various aspects of that bill and see how they intend to accomplish. Then, I would like to spend most of my time discussing the principles involved.

SECTION 1

Page 1 of S. 3044 is retained, thereby keeping the title of the act as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974." Everything else in the original bill is deleted.

This section it titled "Time Period for Federal Elections," which indicates the main purpose of the section—to cut down the lengthy campaigns. This has two objectives: First, to save money; and second, to make campaigns more palatable and reasonable.

This is brought about by adding a new title—title V—to the "Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971." The first section of the new title sets up a filing date:

On the first Tuesday in September, or 60 days before a special election, all candidates must file a registration statement, containing:

Name of the candidate; Names of any person or committee authorized to accept or spend money; Names of any campaign deposits; An affidavit swearing that no money has been collected or spent prior to the first Tuesday in September; Name of the party of the candidate, or that the candidate will run as an independent. The second section of the new title V sets up a procedure for one, and only one, primary to select nominees for the election itself. First, all nominees would be selected through this direct primary, including Presidential, senatorial, and congressional nominees. Second, the primary date would be the first Tuesday in October. Third, a candidate could only run for one party's nomination. Fourth, voters could only vote for one party's slate of possible nominees. The qualification of voters, parties, and the procedures for conducting the primary would be handled by the States, which is the same as it is handled presently.

In summary, the second section means that the people, not some circus-like convections, would select candidates. It would prevent the so-called cross-over vote, which often distort primaries—voters have to choose one party primary to vote in. It also allows independents to participate in determining who the final choice is.

The third section of the new title V says simply that the nominee selected by the primary shall be the candidate receiving the highest number of votes from his party's voters. No runoffs, with their attendant expenses and added campaigning. The incentive is clearly for the parties to bring their support behind a reasonable number of possible nominees, to avoid excessive fragmentation of the party's vote and an offshoot, enhance the role of the party.

This is the essence, and I will get into other aspects of the bill, of change that is considerably different from anything that has been discussed in tackling the financial aspect of the problem that confronts our country today. There really are two problems that relate to the difficulties we have encountered in our campaigns. One, we all would agree, is the cost of those campaigns; and, two, is the failure to utilize the entire electorate in the selection and election processes. We all concede that the cost of campaigning in this country has gotten beyond all reasonable bounds.

When President Eisenhower was reelected in 1956 the campaign cost was roughly $8 million. To the best of our knowledge President Nixon's 1972 campaign cost $72 million. So clearly the cost of campaigns has some great impact to the legislation presented on the floor of the Senate. I wish to just ask a simple question, or set forth a hypothetical example in the extreme. If the cost of all the campaigns were $100,000 wouldn't we be turning to the Federal Government to resolve the problem? The answer is "no." So it is not the question of money; it is the amount of money. We are spending $72 million almost as a floor rather than trying to tackle it and cut it down.

We concede the expense. And we turn it over to the Government. We do not do anything to reduce the amount. We merely shift it from the private sector to the governmental sector. We shift it from an area of choosing to an area of law, and I do not know of anything that relates to amounts of money spent by the Federal Government that ever went down. It is going to go up. No politician now has any contributions, as the reason, he is guaranteed the contributions, and it seems to me all we are leading to is the subsidization of mediocrity.

The additional fact is that what you have done is shift the burden to all the taxpayers, whether they like it or do not like it. Probably the most unfortunate of all is that it is an open-ended type of operation. There is no ceiling on it, either insofar as the number of dollars or the number of candidates is concerned. I grant you what is presented during the past year are considerable and we do need reformation of our spending practices in the political sense, but I do not concede to you that a presidential campaign has to spend $72 million. I do not concede to you that a senatorial campaign in my State of Connecticut has to cost $1 million. I do not concede to you that a congressional campaign, in my State of Connecticut, has to cost $100,000 or $200,000.

I would rather go ahead and see whether we can cut down that cost so it can be appropriately and properly handled as a matter of choice among the public as a whole, rather than become a governmental obligation.

All the bills to date have had some sort of ceiling. They have implied Government financing. What about changing the basic structure of Congress itself? There is not a man in this Chamber who does not understand that for 2 years—I speak as a Senator—he makes preparation for his election or reelection—2 years. So the process is to take a careful look at those to whom they are elected, to see whether we can cut down the cost of campaigning? The answer is "Yes.'

This inevitably brings me to another phenomenon which is occurring at the present time which we are increasing from our political spending abuses, and that is the way the electorate itself is changing. In my State of Connecticut in the last four-year period there were 14,000 who registered as Republicans, 14,000 were registered as Democrats, and 45,000 were registered as independents. So clearly the role of both major parties is declining instead of continuing, and that is not a phenomenon restricted to my State. The latest Gallup poll has shown again a linking up of the voters between each major party is diminishing month by month and year by year.

What are we going to do with people who call themselves Independents? Do they have to choose either the Republican or the Democratic Party? If so, can anyone on the floor tell them why they should choose one or the other?

I recently received what I considered to be a rather insulting letter from one organization of party workers which asked, "Will you please give three reasons why you are a Republican?" I find it a little difficult as a Senator, and think Democracy would find it similarly difficult, to answer any of three reasons why one is either a Republican or a Democrat. I think more and more it is the Senators and Congressmen who are giving the image to the party rather than the party which is giving it to Senators and Congressmen and those who serve in an elected capacity.

That is nothing to be afraid of. It indicates a maturity on the part of the American voting public, that the man or woman, their ideas, their principles, are far more important than a label. What does it mean if somebody comes to you and says, "Vote for me. I am a Democrat," or, "Vote for me. I am a Republican?" It means very little. People want logic. They want reasons. They do not want labels. And yet, in a technical sense, I suppose each one is saying, "Well, what we do not want to do is abandon the two-party system. It has served us so well in an administrative sense." What I have tried to do in the course of this amendment is to provide a machinery which will not do away with the two-party system but which permits this huge number of voters to come into the system and to participate in the selection process, which is fully as important as the election process. Fifty percent is selection and 50 percent is election.

What happens if the trends that have taken place continue? As the parties get smaller and smaller, fewer and fewer will dictate who the candidates are going to be. Yet I do not accept as a reasonable basis the fact that one has to join the Republican Party or the Democratic Party. Rather, I want to give to the voters of the country the opportunity to join in the election process even if they themselves wish to remain aloof from a particular political label.

So on both counts, in view of the abuses that have occurred in the political system, when we shorten the campaign and when we use the primary process, inevitably the cost comes down. By using that primary to allow the independent to vote, the maximum number of people participate in the electoral process.

I will tell you, Mr. President, we can write every law on the books 'from this day forward' and in the principles of the country, as has been the case with the Bill of Rights. America as a whole has sprung, has failed to pay after it has been done. Either they were ignorant, they were careless of the fact that we have in our Constitution our Bill of Rights. America as a country will be a great disaster to the Republic of the United States.

I am going to get to my point. The same holds true as far as candidates, from whom will be the candidate on January 1 of an election year? Am I going to say that he cannot use his franking privilege in a newsletter after February 1 of the election year? Anything to try to make the count of days a matter of something to put it on an equal footing. Anyway, insofar as financing is concerned, we are talking about 60 days, not a year or 2 years.

Mr. COOK: Mr. President, will the Senate yield?

Mr. WEICKER. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COOK. I thank the Senator from Kentucky. There is a bill introduced by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, Mr. Robert C. Byrd, and myself. The bill passed the Senate by a vote of 90 to 0 and I think that no primary in the United States for a federal office could occur before the first Tuesday in August. The Senator is for the first Tuesday in October.

We further provided that no national convention—I notice that the Senate has eliminated national conventions, and that would be a blessing to the American convention voter—could occur before the first Tuesday in August. The National election day would remain the same.

It may say to the Senator from Connecticut, I have no great problem with his October date. I have always contended that one can shorten the period. But put down on the demand for tremendous sums of money is to shorten the period in which one could campaign. If we establish a Federal primary date for congressional elections, as we certainly have the right to do, we could then bring the dates of this period closer together. We will find ourselves in the position we find ourselves in today.

I am sure that the Senator in the State of California should cost $7 million or $8 million, or more than that, let us say, in the State of New York. It would seem to me that if we bring the dates closer together, we will not only have the necessity for the expenditure of such tremendous sums of money.

That bill passed by a vote of 71 to 25 and is in the House. I must say that I do not know whether the 4-week or 5-week campaign could resolve the problem. I am not saying that it could not.

As the Senator well knows, we do put a limit on the Federal Government in regard to taxpayer expense, unless we have some really strong restrictions on the use of the frank—which I have no objection to doing. I think the Senator knows that. We in the Rules Committee really did not tackle this matter from that point of view.

But I must say that the Senator's arguments are very valid in regard to bringing the dates closer together, shortening the period tremendously. We then find ourselves in a position that we cannot, under any circumstances, call for or justify any other point, which expenditure of funds that we now find candidates feel is necessary to continue a year-long or longer campaign for election to Congress or the Senate or the House.

I commend the Senator from Connecticut for his remarks, because I hope that his argument will dissuade States from making determinations as to who may be in a position of filing for a primary—and most of them are Presidential primaries—and finally making a determination as to whether he can make an expenditure in January, or who can establish a basis by which our remarkable friends in the press can start to get the bandwagon rolling, and put things together. I hope that they would be able to dissuade the States from doing that, because we do ourselves tremendous harm in regard to our ability to finance campaigns and raise that kind of money from the public.

We speak of the large number of independent voters which we now have—and I think that is tremendously helpful—what we do in a way by this bill, and I think the people of the country should understand it and become very aware of it—I have not read it in anything that has come out of Common Cause or the National Committee for Political Reform that I have seen that this is what we must do, and that is that the Constitution does not name any parties.

The Constitution does not say there shall be two parties in the United States. But I am afraid we are looking at a bill that will absolutely build in no more than two parties. I am afraid we are looking at a system whereby we build in, in fact, two major parties in the United States.

Let me give the Senator an example. If, under the election we had the two major parties, the Republicans and the Democrats, I give one, for the sake of argument, 60 percent and the other 40 percent. That is, 45 percent of the voters in the country were for one of the two major parties. Therefore, we split the difference, and we have some 27 percent, plus or minus.

There is a third party which has a candidate, and that third party candidate had 5 percent. Take the fraction 5 of $6 million, or 5 percent of that. That means we give the Republican Party, in the next Presidential election, $9 million out of the funds, we give the Democratic Party $9 million out of the Federal funds, and we give the third party $1 million. How can a third party ever become a first or second party in the United States? Are we not building in permanence and forever the two major political parties and saying to the American people "Take your choice"?

I have serious misgivings about this, because nowhere in the Constitution did they try to raise money to make itself be in this Nation. Yes, I am afraid that by this bill we may well be doing that. I think we should understand it, and I think the American people should understand it. I think the American people should also understand—I am not sure they want it this way: if they do, then this is the way we should do it—as we go forward in this effort, and apparently this is the way the Senate wants it. I think we should, the consequences of saying, "Here are the two giants, and the third shall always be last."

Because the distribution in 1976, the distribution shall be made in 1980, and that means that the two major parties, whatever their percentages are—a candidate becomes a major if he reaches 25 percent or more—and if he is below he shall always be a minor unless he does not take under this bill, and then he subjects himself to the criticism of the two majors, because he has got to try to show himself equal, in the eyes of the American people, to the candidates of the two major parties.

I think this is something we have got to understand. I thank the Senator for this digression.

Mr. WEICKER. I thank the Senator from Kentucky. I think it is especially useful to listen to the words of the Senator from Kentucky, we have realized across this Nation, with the problem, and he has pointed out the pitfalls, not this democracy being threatened, but the Constitution does not make any difference whether it is his head or my head, we think that we are going to do things right. I think that is basically what the Senator from Kentucky is saying to the American people: that neither of us are going to rely on campaign funds from our own States. That has nothing to do with the debate on this floor. As I said before, it is not simply a case that those who are for the bill as written are for reform, and those who are not are against it. That is not the case at all.

Why should we be subsidized, Mr. President? Why should we not be out there on our own merits, facing the American people, rather than have Federal campaign financing and have our mediocrity and our inattention to detail subsidized by the people of this country? When we get to the financing areas, the Senator from Kentucky and I can be very much in agreement when it comes to full disclosure, limited contributions, no cash, and all the rest. But there is no such way our present system. We do not. We want change, but as I say, we want change that is worthy of the institution of Congress, rather than something that is based on temporary expedient.

There are two points I would make in relation to one of the comments that the Senator made. My bill does not eliminate the convention. It does not say anything about it. Obviously, there will be serious debate among the political parties when it comes to the fact that they are just going to meet for the purpose of selecting the candidate. We would imagine that it will have as great an appeal; I imagine that ought to attract the viewing, listening, and reading public as much as anything, but these people will tell us, "You are going to have all the appeal away when you eliminate the candidate selection process." But under my amendment, the selection is not necessarily done in a hall or a smoke-filled room; it will be done across this Nation, with the people of this democracy being the delegates.

We talk about one man, one vote. We have people who believe in the principle that as few as any less so when it comes to choosing the candidates? Why should it be any the less so when it comes to choosing a candidate, so far as one man, one vote is concerned? It should not be. And choosing a platform in October should be the same as going ahead and choosing a candidate.

Just as I will come to the conclusion, will me, my State of Connecticut is far in arrears on this whole business. We are one of the few States still operating on the basis of election rather than on a primary. I have already advocated that we change our laws in our State, and that we eliminate the convention by going to the direct primary.

Now we move into the financing area. As I say, it is naturally limited by the 60 days. People can say, "Well, you know, you can go ahead and solicit, and throw an awful lot of money in." The fact is that under my amendment 2 weeks before the election a full report is published, so if somebody has gone in there and thrown a great wad of money in, everybody will know about it before the election takes place.

But we are talking about gearing ourselves to the exception. The fact is that 60 days of a political campaign, from the choosing of the candidates to the election proper, will be one heck of a lot cheaper than what is now roughly a year and a half, really, extending out to two years. It has to be, I cannot give any definite figure, that it will cut it in half or cut it by a quarter; it is just going to cut it substantially, and I think bring it within manageable bounds.

The interest of the hill relates to the collection of money. As I have stated, no one can collect money and no one can spend money except within that 60-day period. They have to report their expenditures and their collections 2 weeks before the election.

Now, someone is going to step up and say, "How can we possibly do that?"

What I am saying is that every candidate has to start right from the first day and keep the books. And why should he not? If he cannot keep his own books, he should not be sent to keep the books of the country, either with the capacity of President or Senator or Representative. Two weeks before the election, everything should be right in place, and then people will know exactly the role the money plays. It will be a self-policing measure, which should do a great favor to all of us in politics, and should go a long way toward eliminating theondrous deficits which occur in the course of campaigns, and which, again, too many of us spend too much time on, after we are elected.

Point No. 2: it calls for one committee, and eliminates the laundering of funds. In other words, in the case of a personal contribution to one committee, the candidate's name sticks to that contribution, even though the contribution goes from one pocket to another. We will not get any laundering of funds. It allows a candidate—I am doing this from memory now—$10,000 in personal money, which of course is the business of the candidate, as such. According to the bill as I have written it, you are not allowed to run on a deficit, or to put it this way, if you have $10,000, use it any way you want to. You can have the deficit any way if you want to, but if there are problems, they will be known, and your breaking of the law will be known to the voters before the election.

I would wonder that anyone would want to find themselves in violation of the law which would be known to the public 2 weeks before the election. Again there is another practical reason for setting this deadline to more nears before election. I will speak for myself so that no one else will "sit on my head," but I know that a good portion of the money I received for my successful campaign in 1970 came to me after I was elected, and I do not consider to be much of a testimony to Lowell Weicker. It is a testimony to the seat which he has won, to the power which he has achieved through an election win.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. WEICKER. Better let me finish what I am going to say first. What I am saying here is that for ca- Se tion of the people of this country, either in now sits over in the Hot,se. Many ideas to exc_:_ssive contributions than the sane-

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

Good heavens, what is it that we have seen that appalls us the most from the revelations of Watergate? Is it not the individual guilt or innocence of the various participants? It is the abuse of power, the tremendous power that the Government has.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOMENICI). All time of the Senator from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. WEICKER. That included the colloquy with the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOK) and myself?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. WEICKER. That came from my time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is correct.

Mr. WEICKER. Could I ask the Senator from Kentucky to give me a few more minutes?

Mr. COOK. I yield 5 additional minutes to the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, we have learned of the abuse of power in the FBI, the CIA, the military intelligence, and the various law enforcement agencies—the Internal Security of the Justice Department. That taint of these agencies was totally believed. They had a magic name. We did not have to supervise them. They were good enough. They had the right names. They were in the right business—forget it, no accountability was necessary.

But, what did we learn?

We learned that there always has to be accountability, no matter whether it is an individual or an agency.

Today, we are being asked to do the exact same thing, that because it is the Federal Government it is all right. For heaven's sake, the Watergate investigation did not for the most part, investigate the private portion of our populous. What has gone wrong has gone wrong in the Federal Government. But we still want and I want the Federal Government the power to finance the election campaigns. Giving the Federal Government power to finance, the power to be responsible for the administration of the financing of our political campaigns is not the end of it.

As I said, I am going to go up or down. I hope that the amendment passes. If it does not, it will stand within the next few years. I can assure you, Mr. President, but I am not going to be party to giving the Government with all of its power, additional power in this area, until the Government can prove itself.

I feel much safer with the American people than I feel with the Government on any aspect of it.

I stated at the outset of my talk that in the participation of the American people in the democratic process lies our greatest safeguard against the abuses which occur within the political process.

Mr. President, I would yield now, if I could, to the Senator from Kentucky and I would be willing to allow the Senator a few minutes time before the vote to summarize my argument.

I should also ask again—I am trying to accommodate myself to the convenience of everyone—but I should like to ask for the yeas and nays and would appreciate it if we could possibly do something along that line as we get closer to the time of the vote. But I want to indicate to the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK), and to the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) at this time that there will be time remaining. There will be no problem in yielding him further time.

At this time, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK), and if he cares for more time, he may ask for more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Kentucky.

Certainly, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky speaks with great information and authority. His record in the Senate on the Watergate Committee, the courage he has shown on that committee, and the fairness and nonpartisan attitude he has had; makes him one of the most informed Senators on this issue.

I would like to talk just briefly about his amendment. It seems to me that it is weighted too much in favor of the incumbent. Presumably, the greatest portion of all incumbents in Congress are reelected to office. That was true in the last election, and it has been true for decades. We should be very careful about a legislation that will make it even more difficult for challengers to be elected by limiting their campaign time so strictly that, in effect, we limit the challenger's opportunity.

By limiting campaigns to 30 days in the case of a primary election and 60 days in the case of a general election, an unknown candidate may not become well enough known to be a serious challenger.

I dislike using myself as an example, but many other Senators could use their experience to make the same point. I remember that about 3 months before my campaign, the political polls showed that I was known by less than one-half of 1 percent of the voters. That may or may not have been the situation with the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI), or the Senator who preceded him as Presiding Officer, the Senator from Colorado (Mr. HASSELAU), who had held the Federal office before, and it is inconceivable that we could have become well enough known in 30 days to have won a primary, or in 60 days to have won a general election, or even to be serious candidates. And the same is true of many Members of this body—the campaign of the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BIDEN) is probably another example.

One could go on. With 15 million eligible voters in California, how could a relatively unknown person who wants to run for Congress, become known in 30 days? That is probably not true in Connecticut which is very much the size of Iowa with about 2 million eligible voters. But we are not legislating for Connecticut or Iowa; we are speaking on behalf of all the states and from the point of view of the average citizen, even in some of the smaller States a severe time reduction would give a natural advantage that would be difficult if not impossible to overcome.

Some people have made the argument that the campaigns are very short in England. A group of high school students just asked me today why we cannot limit the campaign, as England does. The Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) did not raise the point, but it is worth discussing.

The simple fact is that we do not have their system. They have no national election in the plane that we do. Nor do they have candidates who run nationwide. They have nothing comparable to a Senate race. The House of Representatives consists of no more than 100,000, so they can become known more rapidly than in California, for example, where there are millions of voters, or even in Iowa where there are 2 million.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. Tield.

Mr. COOK. Is it not true that the area covered by a candidate is in the vicinity of 1 mile square?

Mr. CLARK. That is correct.

Mr. COOK. One has to understand that the State of Texas has one Representative and that State is twice the size of Alaska. We have other States with one Representative and it is the responsibility of that Representative to cover the entire territory. That is a pretty big job.

Mr. CLARK. That is correct. One other point to be made is that, in England, candidates run on a party label, and they have party lines almost exclusively, so the vote is for the party rather than for the individual. Here, we run much more as individuals, and we have to become known in terms of personality and issues.

To try to do so in 30 days, or in 60 days in a general election, is virtually impossible.

So there are really only two effective ways a candidate can become known: one is through the media, and the other is person-to-person contact. If this amendment were passed, it would cut down on any extensive person-to-person contact. But if a candidate had only 30 or 60 days to become known, he would have to do it through the media. There is no State in the United States where a person could come in contact with one million people because there are too many people to contact. So campaigns will become entirely media campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for 2 additional minutes?

Mr. COOK. I yield 2 additional minutes to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, in conclusion, attractive as the amendment would seem, in the sense that it would limit the time and the expenditures, it would have the effect of virtually assuring the reelection of incumbents, giving them yet another advantage. I know that is not the intent of the amendment, but I think it would be the effect. As we look at the bill now, it does two or three very significant things. It limits the amount that can be accepted to $3,000, and the amount that can be spent to 10 cents in primaries and 15 cents in general elections. It does away with the corrupting influence of unlimited funding and, at the same time, limits expenditures, giving equality of opportunity to the candidates and incumbents so that in general elections they can spend the same amount. That is important.

But if we limit the campaigning time, we will have a bill that insures that 98 or 99 percent of the incumbents are returned to office.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may need.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Connecticut on the philosophical premises and the aims and the purpose of this bill. I am in accord with this bill, so I am completely in accord on that facet.

Second, with regard to contributions by political committees I see no basic harm in contributions by political committees if they are properly regulated. It was not the fact it was a political committee, per se, that engaged in wrongdoing in the so-called Watergate campaign that concerns us now. The basic problem. The committees, if they are properly regulated, can contribute, should be able to contribute, and can properly contribute, under such regulations as we prescribe, to assure there are no abuses, just as we propose there not be abuses in contributions of individuals, by full disclosure of those contributions and limiting the amount and by providing penalties for contributions in excess of those that could be made. The abuses that were pointed out in the recent elections were for violations of law or taking advantage of loopholes in laws that we propose to correct in the legislation we have before us and in other legislation that we have heretofore passed. I might say that S. 372 that is now in the House would correct and closed a number of loopholes that did occur and of which advantage was taken.

With respect to the provision of no contributions before the final date and none prior to the time beginning two weeks before the election, I might say that an unknown candidate would have no way to find out if he had a possibility of getting contributions sufficient that he could carry on his campaign unless he were so able to get the facts prior to the filing date. So if he had to file first and then go out to see if he could get contributions to support his candidacy he might have invested his filing fee unwisely.

With respect to the time beginning 2 weeks before election, everyone knows there are many last-minute occurrences that take place in an election campaign that occur in the last 2 weeks. In many instances it is the responsibility of the candidate to be able to respond to charges that may be made during that period. Charges frequently are made in that period and if he has spent his money and cannot respond by radio, television, or other means of the opportunity to participate fully in that campaign. This would be a very bad mistake. On the point of whether a national convention should be held on the first Tuesday of November. I do not have any particular feeling one way or the other on that issue.

On the matter of no national conventions, I think that if we are going to do anything with national conventions, we are doing away with the two-party system. We are almost doing away with the two-party system in this bill, if it is enacted, by the restrictions that are prescribed, because, as the distinguished Senator pointed out earlier, a person who is an unknown would find it almost impossible to campaign and to try to win in either a primary or general election under the terms of this bill.

I know the Senator from Connecticut did not intend it, but I cannot think of a bill which could make an incumb-ent's bill than this bill, were it put into effect, because it just virtually precludes a person who is a nonincumbent, unless he has been a Governor of the State or some other high public official. It virtually precludes everyone except those in that category from having an opportunity to run successfully.

Mr. President, I oppose the amendment even though I am disposed to agree that I do not disagree with completely, but the basic parts of this amendment would destroy the political system as we know it.

I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. COTTON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I, too, am sympathetic with the objectives that the Senator from Connecticut obviously had in mind when he initiated this bill. But when I drafted this bill, I think we all agreed that the long, drawn-out process we go through now—from the time of the party conventions, which has more or less disappeared from the day when we had to travel by train and I do not know whether it would be in the day of the stagecoach—could be speeded up.

But, among other general objections, I think it is inconceivable and entirely unwise to try to nominate all our officers, including the candidates for President, on the same day, and only a matter of 5 weeks before the election. I would have preferred a period of 6 months. It is well known around the United States that New Hampshire has—an I think this is true—the first Presidential preference primary. Vermont has one a week later. We have it way back in March. The reason for this is that the second Tuesday in March is the date of all the town meetings—many of you know what the old-fash-ioned town meeting is—and our municipal elections are held then in most of our cities. Therefore, by having the Presidential preference primary on that date, we are assured of getting out a good, representative vote, because we have all the people out to take care of their local business in towns and they turn out for contested municipal elections.

A large percentage of the voters are out, and when they are there, they register their preference as to who shall be their party's nominee for President of the United States.

I am sure that there are many other States that may have Presidential preference primaries that have selected some and that this would coincide with the political contest that is sure to make it easier to get out a good, representative vote.

The saddest thing in this country is the fact that such a small percentage of our people vote.

Furthermore, the fact that Presidential preference primaries are spread over a period of various times in various States means that the various candidates get a chance to go into the smaller States. If there were all on the same day, why, outside of television appearances, nobody would see the leading candidates of either party for the Presidency of the United States except in the big metropolitan areas of New York, Chicago, San Francisco, and Los Angeles. They would not have the opportunity to present themselves to the people, and the people would be presented to the candidates with the people and go from State to State.

Furthermore, and this is most practical, frequently it has been our experience—it must be true in many other States—that we have legal contests as to who has been nominated for Congressman or for Senator in the State, and there is provided an appeal directly to the supreme court of our State. If there is any charge that the law has been violated by a candidate in some grave way, which might even cause his name to be removed from the ballot, there is an appeal of that contested election directly to the supreme court of the State. How in the world would we be able to go through that sort of process under this provision? We would not know who was the nominee in time even to print the ballots, where ballots are used.

Again, there are many other objections. This Institute, as I said, is a good institution, but it is too much of a good thing. It shored things up so that it would be extremely difficult to have an orderly process of nominating candidates within States, and it would certainly disrupt the Presidential preference primaries. I think many of us hope many more States will nominate in that manner. But the States should still have the right, within reasonable limits—I do not object to shortening the time for the campaign—to provide their own process, and the other States should continue to have their elections in the courts if there is a contest on the ground of alleged fraud or anything else concerning the primary election.

I must make it very definite that we in New England, following New Hampshire's example, like to have, every 4 years, our Presidential preference primaries on a day when the people of a State are turning out to vote to take care of their local business and thus be sure that we have a large turnout and a large vote, and no: have just a small number of people expressing their preference as to who shall be the nominee for President of the United States.

I agree with the Senator from Nevada that conventions are not always a pleas-
Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WEICKER. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WEICKER. I wish my good friend from Iowa were here, so I might comment on, not debate, his statement, because he has the same intensity and feeling about this matter as I do, even though there are some specific points on which we disagree.

But to know what happens under this bill, my campaign ran roughly $625,000 in 1970. Under S. 3041 I could get $767,000 for my campaign.

The problem we are confronted with is that it is not going to reduce in any way the cost of campaigns. It will go up and up and up. I am sure that my experience will not be dissimilar to that of any other Senator. So if the American people feel that this will cut down the cost of campaigning, they should be told that it will not. The burden will be shifted from those who voluntarily participate in a campaign to every taxpayer in the United States; and when they realize that they will all participate in the cost, it will be "Katy bar the door."

Other factors may be involved. However, cutting down the costs of the campaign will not be the result of this legislation.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a clarification of what will happen to the cost of the campaign if the bill goes into effect?

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield me additional time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield additional time to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, did the Senator say anything about the increases in the levels of spending that would occur with respect to races for the House of Representatives under the committee bill?

Mr. WEICKER. No.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I have some figures which I would like to cite for the Record. In 1972, according to the statistics available from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, 1,010 candidates ran in the primary and general elections for the House of Representatives. They spent a total of $39,959,356.

Against that total of actual expenditures in 1972 in all races for the House of Representatives the Government Accountability Office estimates that the cost of Government financing in House races, if this bill were to pass would be, not $39 million, but $103,307,896.

Furthermore, it might be of some interest to know that in 1972, 52 percent of the House candidates spent less than $15,000 in their campaign.

Under the committee bill, once the candidate is nominated, he will be entitled to $90,000 for his campaign. Each candidate ever elected will be entitled to up to $90,000 out of the public treasury, of course, if one candidate is going to spend $90,000, it would be very difficult for his opponent not to spend that much, especially when it is available out of the treasury.

Mr. WEICKER. In addressing comments to my good friend, the distinguished Senator from Iowa--

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WEICKER. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator from Michigan did not give a correct figure. He made it appear that a person can get that amount whether he spends it or not. That is not the case. If he does not spend it, he has to turn the money back into the treasury. He get it only if he elects to go public financing route. He does not have to go that route.

He has to have made his threshold figure to get any matching at all in the primary race. In that connection, the distinguished Senator from Connecticut mentioned that he got or spent $850,000; but that under the bill he could get $786,000. That is not the case. According to my figures, the Senator from Connecticut would be able to get the maximum of $525,250 in the primary, but the expenditure in the primary would be divided by one half the primary figure. So he would really get $105,000 less than that. That would be the maximum he could get with the matching of the figure in the primary and the public financing in the general would be a total of $525,250.

Mr. WEICKER. I have other elements.

In a runoff primary the State central committee has the right to spend. Those are my figures, and I think they are correct, based on consultation with various staff members of that body.

Let me get back for a minute to the statement made by the Senator from Iowa, who raised a valid point that is of concern to me. There is no doubt that the factor of incumbency is important. It is an important matter. First of all, the statement was made that the candidate could not become known in 30 days or even in the first week of his campaign. The Senator from Iowa said that in the primary election 30 days or even 30 days may be too early to begin to take notice. The campaigns of some Senators will be a little better than mine. But the question is whether the people are going to pay attention in the last 30 or 60 days, or whether there will be a gradual buildup in that course of time. I think that proves the point I am trying to make. It is not until a period of 60 days before the general election that people begin to take notice. The distinguished Senator from Iowa said that, just before he left the Chamber.

Let us consider how last-minute occurrences could still be handled. It is possible, for example, for a candidate to go into the primaries, considering his expenses, to plan his campaign to prepare for unfair charges which might be brought against him as he goes into the last weeks of his election campaign. I may point out that I think that this legislation would overturn the system as we know it. I am afraid nobody listens to us for a whole year. I do not blame them. They figure that maybe 30 or 60 days is enough. So maybe this is an unusual system which makes the time shorter than a year. It relates to what we have got as we go along. It will show up in primaries the time from just before Labor Day.

Under this system, the focus of the entire Nation will be on the Federal election. In the final analysis, this system would reduce the amount of campaigning and expense.

The Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. Corrrow) has long ago recognized the faults of a convention. His State has a State primary. The candidates go directly to the people. New Hampshire has the wisdom to see that a convention does not take the place of having every man and woman express himself or herself. Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WEICKER. I yield.

Mr. COTTON. That is certainly true. I want to make it plain that my objection was not intended to shorten campaigns to an almost impossible date. I agree with the Senator that under the bill we are piling corruption upon corruption and money upon money. My chief objection to the Senator's amendment is the vice it puts us in by shortening the campaign and bringing everybody together on the same day, with only a matter of 4 weeks of campaigning. But I did want to make it plain that I am in accord with him in opposing the bill.

Mr. WEICKER. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. In conclusion, I wish to say that I hope the Senate would lead, not in some empty theory, but to changes in the facts of life politically in this country. We as politicians, in the election process, need to communicate with the people who prefer independence to slavish adherence to the present system.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 2 minutes have expired.

Mr. WEICKER. I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Anywho who has achieved political maturity knows that campaigns must guarantee against corruption and against abuses in the financial area or in the areas of power. People will judge us not by how our political parties, Republican or Democratic, are subsidized, but rather by what we say and how we campaign under the rules to which we ourselves hold. People have a right to expect from us, and I think they have a right to demand from us, our own respect for the American people.

I do not for 1 minute mean to impute to the backers of this bill that they are not anxious for reform as I am. They are. They are in this in their words and their actions. But no small measure will suffice in these times. Rather, if this democracy is to survive, and it will as long as the people are allowed to go ahead and run it, then artificially will have to be done away with.

Today we owe our presence here, to too great an extent, not to the Constitution, not to the Bill of Rights, not to the validity of our political system, but rather to artificiality.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will reject the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut.

I want to say at the outset that there are parts of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, which I think are desirable. Certainly, the overall thrust is desirable, in terms of the shortening of political campaigns. There have been a number of proposals advanced in the Congress to consider the shortening of political campaigns, and to deal with the problem of the long primaries. At the national level a proposal has been made by the distinguished Senator from Oregon (Mr. Packwood) for a system of regional primaries. In the House of Representatives by Representative Hall of Arizona to fix the dates on which primaries may be held. I think it deserves very serious study. The distinguished majority leader closed a single national primary. And, in the case of the national congressional elections, the Senate has already passed a bill, S. 343, that is now before the House, and which is not nearly as drastic as the amendment.

So I am in sympathy with the direction of the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, but I feel that it goes too far in condemning the election period. The amendment would have long-range implications in terms of our election system, and would in many ways go much farther than the proposals in the bill reported out by the Committee on Rules and Administration and managed by the distinguished Senator from Nevada.

First, if the amendment is accepted, we would then be relying upon private financing of campaigns. We would still have that campaign evil, of which all of us have become crucially aware in the course of the Watergate hearings, as well as that evil which exists from coast to coast. Cause about the vast amount of special interest giving that exists today.

Second, this proposal, in spite of the assurances given by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, would be basically an incumbents' bill. The challenger would have to win a primary in October and then try to familiarize himself to the electorate in time for the November election. This is simply not enough time to do the job.

For these two principal reasons, first, because the amendment retains private financing, and second because it is, basically, an impractical one, I think the amendment should be rejected.

Also, Mr. President, there are two additional points which I think are important. The month of October has a series of Jewish holidays. This amendment would have an adverse impact on the Jewish participants, and involvement of those of the Jewish faith, not only for Republicans, but also for others participating in the election system. This issue was debated quite completely in connection with S. 343 last year. Originally, that bill sought to set the general election period. Because we thought it was important that the young people participate in the election system. The practical impact of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut is that many young people, arriving in college in early September, might have difficulty in meeting the residence requirements in time to vote in the primary.

We have taken steps in the past to recognize and eliminate some of the hazards and some of the obstacles for young people to participate in election campaigns. I think this measure would provide an uncertainty, an additional hinderence to that participation.

So, Mr. President, although the thrust of the amendment has value— I think all of us and the American people would like a shorter election period and campaigns—the impact of the amendment would have too many undesirable effects for the Senate to accept.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I do not wish to be considered anti-Jewish and anti-young people in proposing my amendment. I concede that if the period from the first Tuesday in October to the first Tuesday in November interferes, that is something that can be worked out as a technical matter.

Second, how many young people participate in the selection of the Democratic or the Republican candidate for President? Very few. They do not have the privilege of sitting at the conventions. So let us make it clear that this amendment gives them a far greater voice in the election process than the present system. They not only have the opportunity to have a voice in the selection of the candidate without tying themselves into either the Democratic or the Republican party. So as far as young people are concerned, this amendment extends the franchise to a far greater extent than they already have.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, contrary to the Senator's remarks, the Democratic Party has opened up the political system for much greater participation by youth.

Under the amendment in question, the residence laws for voting in most States would severely restrict voting for young people if the election is held in October. Congress should not take such a step without adequate information. Certainly, we ought to shorten campaigns, but this is the wrong way to go about it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I would like to address just one point raised by both the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Connecticut: namely, what they consider to be the excessive cost to the Federal Government of this measure.

According to the bill, it would cost about $90 million if all candidates took $100 percent public financing in the general election. I do not consider that excessive. Last year, we needed a fleet of Trident submarines. One Trident submarine, at $1.3 billion, would run these elections for more than a decade. That is a cheap price to pay for a better government.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will defeat this amendment. As the Senator from Massachusetts has said, this proposal, in the form of an amendment, ought to be the subject of hearings by an appropriate committee. This proposal, when we were considering an election campaign reform bill this year, was not presented to us. There was no testimony offered on most of the particular points raised in this amendment, and I think it ought to be given due consideration, rather than legislating on the Senate floor.

With respect to the point made by the distinguished Senator from Michigan when he said that we have a much greater amendment in this bill than the average cost of House campaigns, we did not fix this $90,000 figure as a magic figure. We selected it because the amendment already acted on S. 372 last year, and it has the $90,000 figure in it for House campaigns as a maximum figure. That is why we carried the figure over. If it was good last year—and I would venture to say that the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Michigan, perhaps not both but one of the two, voted for it last year, because it went over to the House of Representatives with an overwhelming vote—we felt it should still be valid.

I would simply say we do not have any preference for that particular figure. We felt, really, that the House Members themselves ought to decide on what was a fair amount to reduce the cost of campaigns. If they see fit to come up with a figure of $65,000 or $50,000 as the limit, fine: that is up to the House Members with us, and I would have no objection to lowering some of the other limits in the bill or the figures in this chart we arrived at. This was the best consensus that we could arrive at between the members of the Rules Committee, after the hearings that were held on the subject matter, in order to report back a bill, as we were committed to do.

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, I want to indicate my support of the motion to strike title V of S. 3044, the Federal Campaign Act Amendments of 1974.

S. 3044 proposed to increase the amount a taxpayer could claim as a tax deduction or tax credit as a result of participating in a political contribution. In addition, title V proposed to increase the $1 tax check-off to $2, or in the case of a joint return $4.

These provisions of title V, however, pale to insignificance compared to the proposal to reverse the procedure governing the checkoff plan. Under existing law, if a taxpayer wishes to participate he does so by “checking off.” In doing so, the taxpayer is electing, through a position on support or opposition to the checkoff plan. Under S. 3044, however, the spirit of volunteerism which is the foundation of the plan, is to be replaced by a procedure which can only erode that individual taxpayer’s opportunity to designate the party choice.

Mr. President, I hope that the Senate Finance Committee, to whom title V will be referred as a separate bill, will take the position that the automatic designation plan as contained in title V is wrong and contrary to common sense and will move to strike that particular part of title V altogether.

Mr. President, in addition to considering the proposed change in the checkoff plan, the Senate Finance Committee to review the right of the individual taxpayer to designate the party of his choice for receiving his tax dollar under the checkoff plan. As organized, the tax checkoff plan allowed the taxpayer to designate the party of his choice for receiving his tax dollar under the checkoff plan. As organized, the tax checkoff plan allowed the taxpayer to designate that $1 shall be paid over to the Presidential election campaign fund for the account of the candidates of any specified political party for President and Vice President of the United States, or if no specific account is designated by such individual for a general account for all candidates for election to the offices of President and Vice President according to a non-partisan entitlement formula.

Whether we agree or disagree with the proposal to reverse the checkoff plan, it is a disaster in legislation especially in this particular provision of S. 3044. Mr. President, it is of course regrettable, that the Senate saw fit to modify the checkoff plan by requiring the taxpayer to designate the political party of his choice as a recipient of his tax dollar. But what is even more distressing is the complete lack of concern with regard to the amendment as to the effect of the amendment on the value of free choice.

The reason given by the proponents of the amendment is that by striking the opportunity to designate a political party was that it would help to simplify the administration of the checkoff provision on an individual’s tax return. So, Mr. President, for the sake of administrative simplicity, we deprive the American taxpayer, should he so desire, of the right to designate the party of his choice to receive his tax dollars.

If we must sacrifice the value of free choice to gain simplicity in our tax return administration, I am afraid that we have failed our responsibilities. If we shall succumb to the kind of reasoning which was the foundation for modifying the checkoff plan, then we might as well turn over our authority to the Federal administration and go home.

Mr. President, I am sure that the Internal Revenue Service could find a way to accommodate the dual choice provisions of the original checkoff plan. In this regard, it is interesting to note that the IRS is able to accommodate two parties for a federal or state’s tax form. It would seem possible therefore, that they could accommodate an opportunity to designate party choice.

Mr. President, the real issue here is the design of the new form or the administrative problems of IRS, but whether Congress will recognize the right of free choice under the checkoff plan. That is the issue and that is what concerns me.

Mr. President, numerous groups concerned with campaign financing have authored statements of principles which seek to amend the laws governing campaign financing. These principles almost always recommend the reform of campaign financing practices and in particular that the Federal Government use public funds to support campaigns. Yet, in respect to the use of Federal funds under the so-called statement of principles deal with the question of how to achieve that goal and whether such dollars will not be used to support a party or a candidate with whom he disagrees.

Those who advocate public campaign financing through the checkoff plan prefer a system in which the taxpayer is deprived of the right to designate any political party he wishes to support. Instead, if the taxpayer chooses to participate, his dollars will be divided among the major parties but, perhaps, minor parties as well. This is not fair to those who want to support one party over the other. It is not fair for the simple reason that the taxpayer, if he desires to participate, has no choice.

I hope, Mr. President, that a way can be devised to accommodate freedom of choice under the checkoff plan. If we fail to accommodate that political freedom then any public campaign financing program will be seriously deficient in preserving the rights of our citizens to choose whom they wish to support.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Proctor). The hour of 3 o’clock having arrived, under the previous order, the yeas and nays having been ordered, the Senate will now vote on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. Wexenberg) No. 1070. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. Bentsen), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Eastland), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. Fulbright), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. Glass), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. Hughes), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. Long), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Metzenbaum), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Mondale), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. Montoya), the Senator from Maine (Mr. Muskie), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. Ribicoff), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson), and the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Symington) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Huddleston) is absent due to illness.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson) would vote "nay."

Mr. G. H. Baker. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Brock), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. Mathias), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Scott) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. William B. Scott), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. Stevens), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Taft), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. Young) are absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. Allen) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Scott) and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Taft) would each vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 68, as follows:

So Mr. Wexenberg's amendment (No. 1070) was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Hackney, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bill of the Senate:

S. 969. An act relating to the constitutional rights of Indians; S. 1836. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the American Hospital at Paris," approved January 20, 1913 (77 Stat. 654); and S. 2441. An act to amend the act of February 24, 1925, incorporating the American War Mothers, to permit certain stepmothers and adoptive mothers to be members of that organization.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 39) to amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to provide a more effective program to prevent aircraft piracy, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two houses thereon, and that Mr. Thompson, Mr. Javits, Mr. Dingell, Mr. Davids, and Mr. Rives, were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate so the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1341) to provide for financing the economic development of Indians and Indian organizations, and for other purposes.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3094) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Helms). Under the previous order, the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. Bellmon) is recognized to call up amendment No. 1084, on which there shall be 30 minutes of debate.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for 10 seconds so that I may make an announcement? Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, for the benefit of colleagues we have a 30-minute time limit on this amendment. I do not expect to use more than 3 minutes inasmuch as we already have voted on this identical issue.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has not been stated.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The ayes and nays were ordered.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I ask that this amendment be laid away.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 78, line 19, strike out "and 617" and insert in lieu thereof "617, and 618."

On page 78, below line 22, after the item relating to section 617, add the following new item:

"618. Early disclosure of election results in Presidential election years."

On page 86, below line 17, insert the following:

"PART VIII—EARLY DISCLOSURE OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION RESULTS

Sec. 101. (a) Chapter 29 of title 23, United States Code, is amended at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 618. Early disclosure of election results in Presidential election years.

"Whoever makes public any information with respect to the number of votes cast for any candidate for election to the office of President and Vice-President in the general election held for the appointment of Presidential electors, prior to midnight, eastern standard time, on the day on which such election is held for the appointment of more than $1,000, imprisoned for more than one year; or both."

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the debate on this amendment the floor be closed to any remarks that occur thereafter. Mr. Charles Waters of my staff may be accorded the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, the objective of this amendment is easily understood. As the Chairman said, we have set the stage for the Senate on other occasions and it has been voted upon before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend.

The Senate will be in order.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, quite simply, this amendment would make it unlawful for local election officials to announce the election returns for President and Vice President prior to midnight, eastern standard time. In so doing, this amendment would prevent the public disclosure of Presidential election returns in the Eastern and Central States while polls are open and citizens are still voting in Western States.

This amendment previously has been considered by the Senate on two occasions as an amendment to other proposals. It was introduced on June 28, 1973, as S. 3094 and referred to the Rules Committee where it is presently pending.

On June 27, I offered a similar amendment to Senator Robert C. Byrd's bill to change the date of Federal elections. During debate on my amendment, the ranking minority member of the Rules Committee, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Cook) stated:

I would vote for the amendment, if in fact the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Cook) stated:
April 1, 1974

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

and Vice Presidential elections. I think that it would resolve one of the great problems, and we would be halfway to what the Senator wants to accomplish.

But I think the restriction as to all Federal elections is a serious hardship and I, therefore, will oppose his amendment on that basis.

Senator Cook’s objection has been removed from this amendment making the disclosure provision apply only to the election returns in the Presidential and Vice Presidential elections.

Considering Senator Cook’s objection, this amendment was withdrawn and then introduced as a bill, S. 299, which was referred to the Rules Committee.

On July 28, 1973, this proposal in modified form as suggested by Senator Cook, was called up again as an amendment to S. 372, the Federal elections bill. During debate on this amendment Senator Cook stated:

We all know the effect of television. We know that after ¾ of the votes are counted and the winner is announced, the peoples of Alaska are just going to the polls. Something really ought to be done about it. I think something ought to be done but I think we ought to have the opportunity to have hearings to make a determination of the best way to do it.

Therefore, the ranking member of the Senate Rules Committee is on record on two different occasions supporting either this approach or Senate consideration of this proposal. There has been ample time for hearings. The problem of early Presidential election disclosures has been the subject of numerous hearings during the past 15 years. Now is the appropriate time and this is the appropriate bill for Congress to finally act in order to end a practice which has the potential of distorting the normal outcome of Presidential elections.

The net effect of this proposal will be to prevent the public disclosure of Presidential election returns until midnight, eastern standard time; 11 p.m., central standard time; 10 p.m., mountain standard time; 9 p.m. Pacific standard time; 8 p.m. Alaska-Hawaii time; and 6 p.m., Bering time. By these times, polls throughout the United States will be closed.

I seek unanimous consent that a table showing the voting hours of the 50 States, as well as the hour of public disclosure under the terms of my amendment be inserted in the Record at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

One thing should be made absolutely clear—voting hours would still be regulated, and the States and only the public announcement of the Presidential results would be delayed until the appropriate closing of public disclosure by local election officials of Presidential election results would be affected. The counting of votes in all races, including the Presidential contest, could begin as soon as the polls close and only the public announcement of the Presidential results would be delayed until the appropriate closing of public disclosure.

In the last Presidential election year, since 1960 citizens have been alarmed because of the likelihood that the present practice of publicizing and predicting election returns influences the way many voters cast their votes or vote for others from voting because of the belief that the outcome of the election has already been decided.

None would contend that the publicizing of election results while citizens are voting has anything but a negative impact.

I believe the problem was summarized quite well by Senator Hartke in a letter addressed to the chairman of the Subcommittee on Communications of the Senate Commerce Committee.

"I am of the unanimous consent that Senator Hartke’s letter be printed in the Record at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Senator Hartke’s letter—

"There is, additionally, the question of whether listeners and viewers who have yet to vote are influenced by certain results elsewhere or by projections of results. There have been elections recently where the closure of majorities in one or more Western States could have tipped a Presidential election. It is possible that some voter already cast has decided the important elections. This, in turn, may have repercussions in local elections.

"The late President John F. Kennedy won the 1960 Federal election by a plurality vote. If one voter in each of the 173,000 voting precincts in the United States had switched his vote from B. Johnson to Richard M. Nixon, Nixon would have won the popular vote. . . .

"Realistically, had there been a switch of one vote in each of the 10,400 precincts in Illinois plus a switch of nine votes in each of the 5,000 precincts in Texas, Nixon would have exceeded the required 270 electoral votes and would have been our President.

. . . A switch of 27 electoral votes by Illinois and 24 votes by Texas, combined, would have resulted in a different choice of candidates for President of the United States.

"I am not disputing the inherent right of the people to know the results of their elections, and their vote and confidence in the greatest democracy on earth.

"I would recommend to you that your schedule hearings of our Subcommittee to inquire into this matter and its attendant problems."

Mr. BELLMON. In response to Senator Hartke’s letter criticizing early disclosure of Presidential election results, public hearings have been held before Senator Pastore’s subcommittee which aptly restated the problem in its final report by saying:
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE

April 1, 1974

Mr. COOK, Mr. President, I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BELLMON. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I agree with the Senator. I agree from experience and not from theoretical, academic discussion. I did not like to hear on television in 1968 from a few precincts telling me I was going to be slighted, and having all my people across the country so informed. I happen to believe it did have some effect in some parts of the country.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield. Mr. COOK. That happened when people still had to reach correct.

Mr. BELLMON. Where they were watching on television and the polls were still open.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I do not know whether this is the right amendment, but something ought to be done so the "Solomons" cannot just sit around and tell people what is going to happen in the election, particularly when it is an election, is close, and where a difference of 1 percent in each precinct will make the difference of who is going to be President. I do not know how the rest of my colleagues are going to vote, but I am going to catch up on this one.

Mr. BELLMON. Let me say that this matter has been before the Senate now for months and months, and a better approach, we ought to know what it is, but, lacking something better, I, like the Senator from Minnesota, think something might be better. I think the best approach I have seen so far.

I yield now to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. GOLDBATER. Mr. President, I would like to join the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY). I remember in 1964, after the first precinct, we were told I was going to get skunked, and, you know, they were right (laughter). The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BELLMON. I yield.

Mr. COOK, Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BELLMON. I yield.

Mr. COOK. I shall not argue this matter at great length. It is not just the result that is involved. What bothers many of us is that if it did in the previous debate is that when a network picks up four precincts in an entire State, and the announce goes on television and says, "By the reason of our previous position so and so will carry the State by a certain vote," there is a problem there and it is a very serious problem. It is not only a matter of projecting who will win, which has no effect on voters, but it does on those who courthouses and whose responsibility it is to count votes, particularly where many States still have ballots and where the result is in question. We do have a problem at 5 after 6 in the evening when 15 States well know how they are going to vote before the last three precincts in a State. This causes a problem, and I think it is serious. We can wrestle with this for a long, long time, but it causes more problems than anything else.

Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BELLMON. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I agree with the Senator. I agree from experience and not from theoretical, academic discussion. I did not like to hear on television in 1968 from a few precincts telling me I was going to be slighted, and having all my people across the country so informed. I happen to believe it did have some effect in some parts of the country.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BELLMON. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is correct. Mr. BELLMON. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Where they were watching on television and the polls were still open.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I do not know whether this is the right amendment, but something ought to be done so the "Solomons" cannot just sit around and tell people what is going to happen in the election, particularly when it is an election, is close, and where a difference of 1 percent in each precinct will make the difference of who is going to be President. I yield now to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. GOLDBATER. Mr. President, I would like to join the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY). I remember in 1964, after the first precinct, we were told I was going to get skunked, and, you know, they were right (laughter).
at a time when the polls in the west still had several hours to remain open.

It is a very open question whether people are or not, if they are a-fected, whether they may vote for the underdog or vote for whoever seems to be above. Obviously, we do not know what action is needed. I would certainly support a study to determine the answers, but I do not see how we can legislate until we know the magnitude of the problem.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a question?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. BELLMON. Does the Senator feel that it is healthy or bad if the voters on the west coast know how the voters on the east coast voted, so it may influence them as to how to vote when they go to the polls?

Mr. KENNEDY. I say, with all respect, I have yet to see any convincing evidence that it has a real impact. In some instances people may want to vote for a winner, but there will be a back-and-forth effect. In other instances, there may be an underdog effect. A voter may say, "I am going to vote for the other candidate, because he is the underdog, and because I am on a roll of the winning belong here by computers and being told that is the way I am going to vote. I am going to vote for A because they say I am going to vote for B.

I have not seen convincing evidence presented to the committee or on the door which would indicate what impact the earlier announcement will have on the other States. As a matter of fact, the evidence seems to be conflicting. We ought not to rush into legislation that will have such a seriously restrictive impact on the media, until we determine how serious, if at all, the problem really is.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator from Massachusetts may be right. Whether or not they are convincing results, I know there is something wrong in people turning away, and having someone in New York tell them what is going to happen across the country. Even if they are right, I think we are entitled to make our own mistakes. In Minnesota we are denied any right to campaign on election day. No candidate can even be near the polling place. No advertisement can appear in a newspaper or anything else except a announcement that this is election day. The reason for that is that there may be last minute election pressures brought to bear.

I think on election day people ought to be left alone to make up their own minds, instead of having the "wise one" tell us how it is going to come out. Just wait for the result. Get a good night's sleep. We do not see the result the next day.
If one is angry about it, he will not be too so angry.

Mr. COOK, Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts in many respects, but what bothers me about prognosis is that they ring a bell and put a big X there and say this State is going in this column because of their projections. I would feel much better if we were told about results.

Under S. 343, which we have already passed, election day would be a national holiday, so we would not have their matter of whether people could vote or could not vote and have the opportunity to do so.

Under S. 343 we already have resolved that issue and made it a national holiday.

My main objection is to the progno tication based on one, two, or three districts.

Mr. CANNON. The prognostication would not be prohibited under this amendment. One could make all the projections he wanted, but this amendment simply says that whoever makes the influence simply says that whoever makes Burdick Hats, legislate until we know the answers, but I do not see how we can legislate whether legislation has been enacted or not.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS) would vote "yea."
with the Commission shall be complete as of two days on which it shall be filed. Such report shall contain the amount received from such advertising, the name and address of the person from whom payment was received, the candidate whose name appeared in such advertising, and a facsimile or other copy of such advertising.

On page 40, line 2, insert after the word "report the following: "Each published shall file a copy of such record with the Commission on the twentieth day of each month except that during the period beginning one month before the date of an election such records shall be filed on the first day of each month until the date of the election. Each such report filed with the Commission shall be complete as of two days before the date on which it must be filed. Such report shall contain the amount received from such advertising, the name and address of the person from whom payment was received, the candidate whose name appeared in such advertising, and a facsimile or other copy of such advertising."

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, the objective of this amendment is easily understood. The present provisions of S. 3944 provide that any broadcast media which engages in political broadcasting must "maintain a record of any political advertisement broadcast, together with the identification of the person responsible for the advertising, for a period of 2 years." This record would be available for public inspection at reasonable hours. A comparable provision applies to published political advertising in section 205 of the bill.

My amendment would greatly strengthen these reporting provisions of the bill, by placing an affirmative obligation on all communications media to prepare periodic reports with the Federal Elections Commission which would contain the following information:

First, the amount received for political advertising;

Second, the name and address of the person from whom payment was received;

Third, the candidate whose name appeared in the advertising;

Fourth, and a facsimile or other copy of such advertising.

By adopting this amendment the Senate will further guarantee full compliance with the law by all candidates for Federal office.

In my judgment, adequate reporting procedures are absolutely essential and represent a major method of eliminating the campaign abuses we have witnessed in recent years. In enacting campaign reform legislation, at least two basic objectives must be accomplished: First, we must insure that the law cannot be evaded by either winners or losers, regardless of their ethical standards. Second, we must complete the picture by requiring accurate facts on campaign expenditures by candidates before, not after, the votes are cast and counted.

By adopting this amendment, the Senate would guarantee that these two basic objectives become a reality. Let me explain. Enactment of this amendment requiring the communications media to make periodic reports to the Federal Elections Commission will provide a new and simplified reporting mechanism which will act as a double check on a candidate's own reports. It will make it far easier for the Federal Election Commission to enforce the law without creating an undue burden on it when communications media which often has required under the terms of this bill to keep reports. It will simplify the process by not making it necessary, for example, for a member of the Federal Elections Commission to send a representative to the candidate's state and check the records of many sources in order to determine whether a candidate has fully complied with the law.

This amendment would provide a two-pronged approach, involving not only the candidate and his campaign committee, but the communications media as well. By requiring the media to actively participate in the reporting system, we can obtain a true picture of how much money is spent by each candidate for advertising. By comparing reports from advertising media with the reports of the candidate, we can provide a check and balance system that should deter any tendencies toward evasion or falsification.

I urge the adoption of this amendment. The PRESIDENT OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I yield myself as I may require. This amendment would change the bill before us. It would, I believe, complicate it even further, because we all know how complicated the bill is now and how, with the best of intentions, it would be very hard for individuals to carry out all its provisions.

What the amendment does is add to all the reports to be filed, the virtual mountain of items, an additional report, on the first day of each month, as to the advertising that is being placed in the media. And I think we would find that it would apply not only to that report, but also to the financial side as well, because the important thing is not the advertising, but where the money for the advertising is coming from.

In addition to that, it plies a burden on the people who receive the money and who are responsible for the advertising, to help the candidate by being representative, he has to file a copy of such record as well, which is a duplication.

So, while the objective of the proposal is good, it would seem to me to further complicate the bill, and I would be compelled to oppose it.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, in my judgment this does not in any way complicate the reporting procedures provided in the bill. If the Senator will check on page 27, line 9—and the same language appears in another place in the bill as it applies to newspapers—in line 9 on page 27 it says: Each station licensee shall maintain a record of any political advertisement broadcast, together with the identification of the person responsible for the advertising, for a period of two years.

All my amendment does is require that a copy of that record be furnished to the Federal Elections Commission. It is in perfect harmony with the subject before us. All the amendment does is require that the records be accumulated in one place, so there would be a way to check against the records of the media and the records filed by the candidate, to be sure the candidate is telling the truth, and so the people will know before the election.

We should do it, so that 6 months later that the candidate is not telling the truth, because by that time the election will be over and the people will have made their decisions. We are trying to get the facts out ahead of time, so that people will know who is backing the candidate, and be able to take that into consideration in casting their votes. It does not, in my judgment, complicate the reporting procedures. It only makes the reports available ahead of time, so that people can make that decision as to those they want to have represent them in Congress.

Mr. PELL. The Senator is correct as to the records maintained by radio and TV stations, but it does not apply as to the publishers.

Mr. BELLMON. If the Senator will yield, on page 40, the same provision applies to newspapers. It begins on page 39, line 21, as follows:

Any publisher who publishes any political advertisement shall maintain such records as the Commission may prescribe for a period of two years and so on.

The amendment covers both the electronic media and the publishers.

Mr. PELL. The Senator is correct in that regard, but it does not cover the actual publication of it. There is a good deal of difference between keeping it on file and filing the report.

In addition, the Presidential candidate who has to file now, I think four times in an election year, would have to do it on the first day of each month. The question is whether there should be more reports filed or whether the bill at present provides an adequate number.

The Senator from Oklahoma does not believe it is adequate, and we believe it is. That is the issue.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, the filing provisions under the law are, I believe, adequate and representative, but the problem is the difficulty of checking with half a dozen television stations and perhaps a hundred newspapers to get the information necessary for the election. We are simply requiring that the information be filed in a central place before the election, so that the voter will have an opportunity to know who is supporting each candidate and to what extent.

This does not complicate the matter. It simplifies it by having one central place to get the information, and not having to scatter all over the country to find out what is going on.

Mr. PELL. Am I not correct in saying that the information is required to be filed by any candidate, and therefore there would be a duplication if not a duplication? There would be at least a duplication, because the candidate files the information now.

Mr. BELLMON. The Senator is correct; this is a duplication, for the very good reason that it is my feeling that we need to have the information from the media to be sure that the candidates are telling the truth, and so that we will know before the election whether they they have been reporting the true extent of their financing.

If a candidate is running badly behind in a campaign, he may decide to spend a large amount of money just before the election to have a violation of the law, and it would not be known until after the election.

Mr. PELL. Then his election would be invalidated and he would be subject to criminal penalties.

Mr. BELLMON. That would be true, except that it would happen many months after the election, and, if carried, would cause his district to be without representation. It seems to me it would be better to have an inducement for the candidate not to file a false report in the first instance.

Mr. PELL. I agree with the Senator's viewpoint; I disagree with the necessity for it, and that is the reason for my disagreement.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I think this really illustrates that the problem.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PELL. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WEICKER. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. President, the problem here is with the whole bill. I know why the bill contains no such requirement: We did not want to tread on the toes of the press. But as soon as you get the Government into the act of financing political campaigns, then it is inevitable that you come to the point where you are asking the press to participate in an enforcement function. We can go ahead and control just about everything in this country, but there is a big difficulty when we get into the electoral process itself. I do not think there should be any obligation imposed on the press to be candid, and neither do I feel that the Federal Government should be into this area, but as long as we have put the Government in control, I do not see the news media all of a sudden brought in, this time as an enforcement arm of the Federal Government.

The problem highlighted by this amendment is the problem with the whole bill. A lot can go wrong with Government, but as long as people are totally free in their elections there is a remedy we have. When the remedy is in the hands of the Government, that is when our troubles start.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOMENICI). All time on this amendment has now been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1095) of the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON).

The roll call vote is ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

So Mr. BELLMON's amendment (No. 1095) was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY) is recognized to call up his amendment No. 1081, on which there shall be 1 hour for debate.
that incumbents have a very significant advantage over challengers and especially those challengers who have never held office from the same basic constituency. Therefore, I propose that challengers be granted 30 percent more money than the limits now stipulated in the pending legislation.

During the course of the debate on S. 3044 that has occupied a major proportion of our time for more than a week now, several references have been made to the fact that this bill may favor incumbent officeholders over those attempting to challenge them.

The fear that S. 3044 will favor incumbents over challengers is, in my opinion, a most realistic one. I am convinced that this legislation as presently drawn would make it even more difficult than it now is to unseat an incumbent Congressman, Senator, or President.

Recent poll figures force one to the conclusion that the Congress is not exactly held in the highest esteem by the American people. In fact, as most of us are aware a number of pundits have observed by way of illustration that Congress is markedly less popular even than the President with a collective approval rating of but 21 percent.

One might conclude from figures like this that incumbents would be frequent victims of the public's desire to "throw the rascals out." But, in fact, we rascals have always fared rather well in seeking reelection. I will grant that we are perhaps all good fellows and that it is at least possible that we are so loved by our constituents as to be personally unbeatable, but I suspect there are other, better reasons for our remarkable success at the polls.

It is well known, and, indeed, obvious to even the most casual observer, that as incumbents we have certain tangible and intangible advantages over almost any prospective challenger.

As U.S. Senators we are more familiar with the issues than most for we are paid to think about them. Our comments and our feelings are news in our home States and occasionally nationwide. We have on our various payrolls people as well as constituent groups and so forth are committed to our positions to constituents, servicing the requests of constituents in trouble and portraying our views to the public in the most favorable light possible.

We have access to the frank, to the open, to the personal, to the private, and to the press. We can only aid incumbents because the advantages incumbent's advantage. It is this factor that makes it both fair and accurate to characterize the bill as the Incumbent Protection Act of 1974.

It is difficult to place a dollar value on incumbency, especially in Senate races. Senators' campaigns are personalized to one person, estimate that placed the value of House incumbency at some $60,000. I suspect this figure is a bit high, however, because it includes money spent on things that have only marginal value at reelection time.

The true value of incumbency is difficult to determine primarily because it is only one of a number of factors that determine the outcome of any election.

For example, a number of studies have shown that party is even more important as the vast majority of congressional districts especially are dominated by a single party. Indeed, while 90 percent of those incumbents running are reelected in House races 75 percent or more of the candidates representing those winning incumbent's party are also elected. With this in mind it is indeed difficult to separate out the dollar value of incumbency in a meaningful way so that we can structure our laws to allow all candidates to start the race at the starting line.

Therefore, I must admit that my amendment to S. 3044 which allows non-incumbents to spend 30 percent more than incumbents represents a somewhat arbitrary attempt to compensate for the advantages an incumbent presently enjoys.

Still, arbitrary as the 30 percent figure itself may be, the available evidence indicates that it may well accomplish the authors' major objective. Prior to presenting this amendment I reviewed various studies that convinced me that a 30 percent differential would do much to overcome the advantage of incumbency without tipping the scales too far the other way.

One of these studies was undertaken by my own common cause. I cited it at the time I originally introduced this amendment and I would call your attention to it again today. I am referring, of course, to the common cause study of 1972 congressional campaign financing that was released last year.

The authors of the study are numbered among the principal supporters of public financing and use its results to bolster their case. But I am convinced that in fact it argues against public financing generally and the provisions of S. 3044 specifically.

In 1972 more than three-quarters of all House races were decided by pluralities of 60 percent or more. In these races the average winning candidate spent $55,000 or less and the average loser spent even less.

These races all took place in what political analysts like to call "safe" districts. The districts involved were either so totally dominated by one party that a serious fight for the seat impressed almost everyone as futile, or the seat was occupied by a personally popular incumbent who just was not about to be beaten.

The authors of the study apparently believe that real races might be run in these districts if enough dollars are poured into the campaigns of those challengers who are firmly entrenched incumbents. I am not persuaded that this would happen.

For reasons outlined above the incumbents holding these seats are probably impervious to real challenge and their spending against them we the partly because they have lacked funds; they have lacked funds because their campaigns were doomed to failure.

Common Cause has simply confused cause with effect in a way that has led Mr. Gardner and his friends to precisely the wrong conclusion.

Supporters of incumbents and challengers alike in these districts were apparently reluctant to give to campaigns unlikely to be affected one way or the other their contributory sums. The scales did not tip.

This three-quarter figure cited in the Common Cause study helps verify another figure I cited a few minutes ago. As you will recall, I mentioned earlier that another study found that in 75 percent of those congressional districts where an incumbent retired, the next race was won by a member of his party.
The authors of the other study used this figure to demonstrate the importance of the Federal subsidy. In effect, that because of party three-fourths of all congressional races are won by the dominant party's nominee regardless of incumbency or other factors. I must conclude, therefore, that in such districts the $90,000 per candidate allowed under S. 3044 will merely increase the level of spending without having any real impact on the final outcome.

The races in which the Federal subsidy and the limits associated with it will have an impact take place in the 60-odd districts that might be considered marginal.

According to the same Common Cause study, only 66 House races were decided by less than 55 percent of the vote in 1972. These districts could be considered marginal by most standards and the victor in each of them had to fend off an extremely tough challenger.

Winners and losers alike spent more money in these races than was spent in the districts I have described as "safe." The cost to winners and losers alike in these districts averaged somewhat more than $100,000. As both the winners and losers spent about the same amount in these races, it suggests that the raising of funds needed for such campaigns is not too different. I will also admit that the money spent by S. 3044 might not have much of an effect in the average close race.

The real impact of the limits imposed by this legislation will occur in the races in which an incumbent finds himself in trouble and stands a chance of being defeated. Only 10 House incumbents were defeated in 1972 and in all but 2 cases the challenger had to spend significantly more than his opponent to overcome advantages of incumbency.

The average spent by candidates who unseated incumbents in 1972 was $125,000 as opposed to the average of $86,000 those incumbents spent. Thus, it can be argued on the basis of these figures that a challenger may be able to outspend an incumbent opponent by a significant margin if he expects to beat him and that he will have to spend in excess of $100,000 to stand a realistic chance.

But what effect will the $90,000 limit imposed by S. 3044 have in these races? It is not at all unrealistic to assume that it will prevent challengers in marginal districts from overcoming the advantages inherent in incumbency. It is not at all unreasonable, in other words, to assume that those limits, had they been in effect in 1972, might have saved most, if not all of those 10 incumbents.

I have referred to the figures involving House races because the figures for these races are more easily quantified and compared. But the same principles apply to Senate and Presidential races—under ordinary circumstances it costs money to overcome the advantages of incumbency and a uniform spending limit might well make it impossible for the average challenger to accomplish this.

Mr. President, I think my amendment will encourage real competition in those districts where competition is possible. It will also dispel any public idea that what the Congress is really engaged in the protection of incumbents.

The people of this country are growing more cynical by the day. They are convinced that we care only about ourselves—not about their problems or the problems of the country.

I am not at all convinced that public financing will dispel this cynicism, but I do think that if we are going to move in this direction the people are going to demand that the candidates of both parties be held to approximately uniform forms that have the practical effect of protecting ourselves from those who would seek to unseat us.

Therefore, I urge the adoption of this amendment. Even though the incumbent Senator has a 5-year period, if I understand it correctly, objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUCKLEY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. I have an interest in this amendment and its application where an incumbent Congressman is running against an incumbent Senator.

Mr. BUCKLEY. My amendment specifies that the definition of incumbency includes anyone who holds office or has held office within 5 years, which office has the same public duty as the person in office. In other words, if a governor should challenge a Senator, he would not receive more money, or in any State where there is one Member of the House, he would not be granted a larger sum of money.

Mr. DOLE. Take Kansas as an example, where there are five congressional districts. Even though the incumbent Member of Congress and the incumbent Senator have one common area, under your amendment the Congressman would still get the total bonus. Is that correct?

Mr. BUCKLEY. He will, because he must also compete in areas where he has not had the advantage of being able to send out literature to constituents.

Mr. COOK. Will the Senator yield for one correction in the colloquy? I think the amendment the Senator sent to the desk eliminates the 5-year period, if I understand it correctly.

Mr. BUCKLEY. It reads: "holds any public office to which he was elected by the voters in an area which is the same as, or includes completely, the area in which the voters reside . . . ."

Mr. BUCKLEY. That is correct. That was one of the technical corrections.

Mr. COOK. So there is no 5-year period provided for.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for that correction.

Mr. DOLE. I think basically I agree with the statement of the Senator from New York. There are some who would suggest that this year the incumbents should have more than the base amount because many problems, not of their own making, are faced by incumbents. But it seems to me that where there is a partial incumbency on behalf of the challenger and the incumbent, it might be advisable to provide some sliding scale or some sliding formula. As the amendment stands now it provides, in effect, more of an advantage to an incumbent Congressman who is running against an incumbent Senator, as compared to someone who is not holding a similar public office and running against an incumbent Senator.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I believe the point made by my friend from Kansas is well taken.

Mr. DOLE. In other words, both the incumbent Senator and incumbent Congressman have the same advantage in one of their State's congressional districts. That question is of peculiar interest to me, because my opponents is an incumbent Congressman.

Mr. BUCKLEY. The Senator has raised a good point. I think, also, it illustrates some of the difficulties we are apt to run into when we set arbitrary limits and ceilings on expenditures, and so on, none of which I support. Nevertheless, we do recognize the basic problem of the advantage of an incumbent in normal election years, and accordingly, an amendment such as mine is, I think, badly needed. I think it injects equity. It protects the Congress from the charge of self-service.

I am sure that if the Senate will adopt this amendment, in the conference process we may see some other approach taken that would come adequately with the kind of fact situation suggested by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. If the Senator will yield further, it seems to me it could be reduced proportionately. In the case of the State of Kansas, there are five districts which are approximately equal in population. The Senator from New York's formula could be reduced one-fifth, so the challenger would have 124 percent of the Senator's share instead of 130 percent.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I wish the Senator from Kansas had collaborated with me before I offered the amendment, but I do offer it as a significant improvement over what we now have.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Helms) as a co-sponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question on the time of the manager of the bill, so it will not be taken from his time?

Mr. BUCKLEY. I yield.

Mr. COOK. I think we fight this question of how one handles a non-incumbent, and I think the Senator faces up to the issue very well. My problem is one which I will state for the record, and for no other purpose, so we can get some legislative history.

How did the Senator from New York come to the conclusion that 30 percent was the equitable figure?

Mr. BUCKLEY. The Senator from New York had to close his eyes and think and reach up into the air, which I think, incidentally, is as fine a basis for legislating as the basis for much of the legislation we enact in this Chamber.

Actually, it was not entirely that arbitrary. I did look at the races included in the 1972 Common Cause study, which seemed to indicate that there was a disparity of between 20 and 40 percent in what was spent by successful challengers as compared to the challenger.

Mr. COOK. I must say that is our problem when we amend a bill so freely on the floor. I will say to the Senator from New York, in all honesty, I think we have to resolve this problem and I think it should be resolved. I have serious misgivings about pulling figures out of the air. We are pulling substantial financial figures out of the air—30 percent to nonincumbents in 50 States for 435 House seats.

Could the Senator tell me, based on the charts produced for the Rules Committee, the additional sums this would cost in the overall picture, so the taxpayers, who are obviously footing the bill, will have some idea of what the 30 percent really constitutes for 435 House and 33 Senate seats?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I have not done that, but it is a simple matter of arithmetic. We can determine the cost and add a certain amount to it.

Mr. COOK. I do not disagree with the Senator. I think we ought to know what we are doing. We ought to know what we are doing for the budget. I think the taxpayers ought to know. Whether the amount be 10 percent or 20 percent, there ought to be some basis by which we could evaluate this proposal and know the amount we are talking about.

I know the situation is very serious. The facts prove that incumbency has a value. But when we move in the other direction and take a figure out of the air, we should know what it represents in dollar bills.

Mr. BUCKLEY. If the Senator will yield, this information was not taken out of the air; it is based on such conclusions as could be gleaned from an analysis of the Common Cause study.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on my time?

Mr. BUCKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I think the Senator has raised a good point as to whether an incumbency actually does have a value. We have seen polls which show in what low esteem the incumbent is held, plus the fact that he has to be in attendance here and vote on issues that are very unpopular at home. He has to be here to answer quorum calls, and so on.

There is a real question as to whether he does have an advantage, let alone whether one can evaluate whether the amount ought to be 20 percent, 30 percent, or perhaps 2 percent or 1 percent. One Senator suggested a few moments ago that the incumbent is the one who has the disadvantages, because the incumbent is held in such low esteem by the public.

Mr. BUCKLEY. It is not only since 1972 that Congress has been held in such low esteem, but to unfortunate fact that has existed for many years. Nonetheless, election after election demonstrates that 80 percent of the membership of the House is returned to Congress, and more than 80 percent of the Senate is also returned.

Careful studies have been cited by the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Block) which place a monetary value on it. We have seen other studies which place a 5 or 6 percent advantage on incumbency. May I ask the distinguished sponsor of the bill whether, during the consideration of the bill, any hearings were held to determine this?

Mr. CANNON. There certainly were hearings, and the hearings went into almost every question that I could conceive of.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Was this question raised?

Mr. CANNON. I do not believe the precise question was raised as to whether the incumbent ought to get less than the person who is the challenger. But in simple frankness, if we write into the bill a different figure, we would kill the bill. If the distinguished Senator from New York is desirous of killing the bill, this amendment is a means of doing it. But if he is honestly opposed to the bill and arrives at a different formula, it is unfortunate that he did not propose that formula at the time of the hearings, because we tried to make the formula as fair as we could, and fact, every member of the committee worked together to try to devise the fairest formula we could come up with, and that is what we did.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I appreciate the sincerity of the efforts that have been made. However, as is so often the case, many of us do not have an opportunity to study the legislation until it is reported by the committee. We have had our own work to do.

I have also had an opportunity to study a careful analysis by Prof. Ralph Winter of the Yale Law School, among others, that highlights and demonstrates a significant advantage.

I would like to refer to the very excellent point raised by the Senator from Kentucky that my amendment has the effect of increasing the cost of $2,044. I ask unanimous consent that I may withdraw my amendment to provide that we reduce by 30 percent what is allowed the incumbent, instead of allowing it to do disclosure properly my contributions.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from New York yield on my time?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, how much time have I remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has 8 minutes remaining.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Kentucky yield to me some time. The Senator from New York then takes the floor.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, while the distinguished Senator from New York is drafting his modification, I think it might be well to point out that it is a matter of concern to this Senator, who is running as an incumbent candidate and has a vital interest in the proposed legislation.

I would point out to the Senator from New York and other Senators the great difficulty we face in trying to make everything uniform and give everyone equal treatment. I would like to make my own efforts to play it straight and to disclose properly my contributions and expenditures; to open public offices and pay those who work in them with political contributions rather than with official staff salary allowances and to lease planes, automobiles, and other things as the campaign approaches.

I just do not see how it is possible in any bill to make certain by legislation that everybody will have an arithmetically equal shake.

I agree with the distinguished Senator from New York, because of early efforts to mount a campaign and because of strict compliance with the laws passed heretofore, the junior Senator from Kansas had spent in excess of $105,000 before any opponent decided to make an announcement. So here is a case where the incumbent has already been penalized. Now we come along with this amendment that says, if one is challenging an incumbent, he is disadvantaged and ought to have 30 percent more.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, is there not a serious constitutional question as to whether Congress can say that a person who is an incumbent can spend only so much money, but that a person who is a nonincumbent can spend 30 percent more? Would not that be a constitutional question that might jeopardize the incumbent?

Mr. DOLE. I think a serious question is involved. Once we start tinkering in this area, we invite real trouble. I believe, in all seriousness, that there are some disadvantages in incumbency in normal times. But I suggest that these are not normal times, and I am not certain there are any advantages to incumbency this year.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Ohio, and in order to make a substitute amendment with the modifications we have been discussing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so modified.

Mr. BUCKLEY's amendment, as modified, is as follows: On page 13, line 17, strike out "(f)" and insert in lieu thereof "(h)". On page 13, line 17, after "no" insert "incumbent". On page 13, line 24, strike "(g)" and insert "(i)". On page 14, line 9, after "No" insert "incumbent". On page 15, line 5, strike "(f)" and insert in lieu thereof "(h)". On page 15, line 5, after "No" insert "incumbent".

The above amendment is before the Senate, and a Senator from Texas (Mr. STEVENS), a Senator from Mississippi (Mr. FYNE), a Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY), as modified. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. FELDBRIGBT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GAVET), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. MIERENBr), the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKRE), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. R coping), and the Senator from Missouri (Mr. SYMMETR) are absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. H DULESTON) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BCO), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HUGH SCOTT) are absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. W L. SCOTT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFF) are absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIXEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HUGH SCOTT) and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFF) would each vote "nay."
The result was announced—yea 17, nays 66, as follows:

YEAS—17

Mr. BUCKLEY, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of Mr. Gorton’s address be printed in the Record as follows:

"REFLECTIONS ON AN IMPERATIVE ADMINISTRATION" (By Attorney General Sadie Gorton)

Today I should like to present for your sober consideration some thoughts about Richard Nixon, his presidency and the impeachment investigation now in progress. This is the principal political issue of the day; it is being debated in the press, in classrooms, over dinner tables and in just about every other place in which people gather. Let us focus our attention on determining how a successful path for our nation through these difficult times may be best assured.

To most of us, myself included, the very word "Watergate," and all that it entails, has become a pejorative label. When one adds to that unique problem all of the continuing challenges of war and peace, the energy crisis and the increasing influence of government in almost every aspect of our lives, it is easy to become discouraged.

A certain comfort, however, can be gleaned from our own history. One hears in the story of our nation in wartime, for instance, that Americans seem to have gone from triumph to triumph in a time of constant change and danger, was certainly anchored, and so from the opening of the War of the Revolution to the close of George Washington’s second term as president, and in the midst of those exciting years, Washington wrote to a friend:

"We have probably had the good opinion of human nature formed by our conduct with the strangers that will not adopt or carry into execution measures best calculated to secure our power. * * * * * *"

"From the high ground we are perched at the foot of this cliff, we see before us, from the plain path which invited us to be so far safe and lost!"

One year after that day, Washington produced the Constitution of the United States. That triumph is perhaps the most significant when we reflect that it was accomplished in a nation with a population roughly equivalent to that of the State of Washington today. But in that nation, politics was considered everybody’s business. All we need today, I believe, to cause the strengthening of our own government is a similar dedication and perseverance. Nor can we ever be content with our government as it exists if we offer our country any less.

During the months since an impeachment of the President was first possible consequences of the Watergate revelations, the views of most persons who have lived through the Watergate period have fallen into one of three categories.

The first consists of a collection of radical demands: for the impeachment and removal of the President. This reaction, for example, charges that with twenty-eight violations of the criminal code. This category is also well represented by the few of the President, Nixon's impeachment, the appointment of Howard Phillips as director of the Office of Economic Opportunity and the removal of his deputy, Mr. William Barlow, from the Office of Economic Opportunity. The result was announced—yea 17, nays 66, as follows:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT ADOPTION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate, there will be no roll calls today. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at such time as amendment No. 1120 of the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. Bartlett) is called up and made the pending business before the Senate, there be a time limitation of 30 minutes to be equally divided and controlled in accordance with usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at the hour of 12 o’clock tomorrow the Senate proceed to the consideration of amendment No. 1120 of the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. Bartlett) and for the vote to be ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at this time to order the yeas and nays on amendment No. 1120 of the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. Bartlett) and for the vote to be ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

S 4943

Finally, in the first Congress of the United States, James Madison, in advocating the Constitution, said: "It will make provisions for the appointment of bars, and for the security of persons and property. It is the duty of the President to see that the laws are faithfully executed." 12

We must, therefore, as passionately as possible, characterize President Nixon's record — characterized by his enemies, but as described by himself — measures up against those standards which our founding fathers required of the President. Let us look at three separate aspects of that record.

First, in June of 1970, President Nixon in his own words, 13 approved resumption of certain intelligence operations (the Director of an investigative Special Unit of the FBI known as the 'plumbers').

The President added his voice to the adage:

"It is only with those whom you depend for support, whom you have to turn to in time of trouble, that you are able to expect the most faithful service."

Second, on April 30, 1973, President Nixon reported to the Congress:

"Last June I learned from reports of the Watergate break-in.

"Until March of this year [1973] I remained convinced that the charges of involvement by members of the White House Staff were false.

Here, I want to emphasize that I am not questioning either of the President's actions or inaction. I am questioning the President's repeated statements that he does not know of any involvement by members of his administration in Watergate.

Moreover, he knew that he had in his possession the best possible evidence of the extent to which he had been involved in Watergate. He either had denied or hidden it from him, in the form of conversations which he had had carried on with each of them and had secretly taped, and evidence which also related to their involvement or lack of involvement as Watergate-power-up. President Nixon failed to disclose even the existence of that evidence either to the Department of Justice or to the Congress. In July of this Congress discovered the existence of those tapes. The President then refused access to that evidence and to the Congress. Thereafter, when those tapes became the focal point of a legal controversy whether the President, the number and the very existence of some of the tapes were mistated. Finally, after blind-
This statement appropriately describes the position of the President. In the United States, the President is the head of the state as well as the government. He must be able to provide moral leadership to the entire nation, to command respect for his office, and to do so without legitimacy if his policies.

How does President Nixon's conduct stand against James Madison's explanation of impeachment as being designed to defend the nation? "... * against the incapacity, negligence, or perjury of the Chief Magistrate * * * *

Andrew's own statement in his April 30, 1973 speech:

"In any organization, the man at the top must bear the responsibility. That responsibility, therefore, belongs here, in this office. I accept it." 22

Richard Nixon, out of the evidence of his own mouth, has given impeachable grounds to vote Article II of Impeachment.

Impeachment is, of course, a legal and a constitutional proceeding. It is my own considered judgment that each of the three sets of laws which I have discussed earlier at some length constitute clear grounds, at the very least, for impeachment by the House of Representatives. First and foremost,

But impeachment also seems to me to constitute a judgment about the moral status of the person in question, for in the connection of determining that the President has rightly and irretrievably lost the confidence of the American people by the acts of his own Administration, he bears the final judgment of the entire nation, to convey respect for his office.

There is, however, another way out of the dilemma:

It is for President Nixon to realize that the nation does not owe him unlimited consideration... for Mr. Nixon to place the nation's way of government in government, above any other interest which relates to him personally, and to resign, which we believe is the right action.

To speak of resignation is not to suggest that Mr. Nixon should submit his resignation. Rather, I believe it to be the finest service which Mr. Nixon can perform for his country, to enable it to start afresh.

The difficulty of the situation in which we find ourselves today is that not only action, but inaction, will have serious and inevitable consequences.

We are all conscious of the low esteem into which the hands of all public officials have fallen. We are beginning to be almost equally conscious of the low esteem into which the community, the free enterprise system, and a most every other institution in our society is falling at the same time.

When we examine our own conscience, we are driven to a conclusion that the reaction a few years ago was not due to a reasonless pessimism about government and society but to a passive resistance to the spirit and a pervasive feeling that the nation is in the face of the present crisis of confidence can only confirm, and make more dangerous, that cynicism.

Equally close to our own concerns must be this question. If the actions of Richard Nixon are not proper that the subject of impeachment, what actions of a future president will be?

What violations of our privacy, what violations of our civil rights, by a radical president, for example, will subject him to impeachment in the future? What acts of the present president after April 30, 1973: to extend or preserve his powers or to cause his re-election which will be called upon to start at that point?

Certainly, no citizen may properly call for impeachment or resignation except on grounds which are willing to apply to all presidents, and by the same token, is both improper and dangerous to do actions on the part of this president which we are not as willing to defend in future presidents.

We will create, in effect, our present situation and increasingly powerful government which are at such a point.

One last point. Questions of vital public policy which is to be deliberated without thought or concern to congressmen, senators, or to anyone else. In the most vital public policy question of our day, the views of all citizens are important, but perhaps the views of those who were supporters of President Nixon in 1972 are the most significant, since they clearly do not stem from any possible personal or political hostility. These questions which we must decide for ourselves: our history and our children, and our answers today as surely as our d. answers of 1787.

More than 2,400 years ago, the first of the three societies of which we are the inheritors, the city of Athens, fell upon difficult times. In commemorating the death of the opening year of a bloody war, Athens' first citizen, Pericles, described his fellow citizens in a democracy in these magnificent words, which words must speak to our own Americans: "Our ordinary citizens, though occupied by the pursuits of industry, are still fair and good judges of public affairs. For, unlike any other nation, regarding them who takes no part in these duties, not as an unambitious but as a dishonorable, and who does not make use of his public service, will be able to judge, to give us, or to any other discussion as a stumbling block in the way of action, we think: it is an indispensable preliminary to any wise action at all..." 23

AMENDMENT OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have an unprinted amendment at the desk which I would like to ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 64 between lines 5 and 6, insert the following:

"PROHIBITION OF FRANKED SOLICITATIONS"

"Sec. 316. No Senator, Representative, Resident Commissioner or Delegate shall make any solicitation of funds by a mailing under the frank under section 3210 of title 39, United States Code.

Section 3210.

Section 3210.

The franking privilege accorded to Members of Congress is just that, a privilege and an official one. It is not a right guaranteed everyone elected to office. The frank is intended simply and clearly to enable members of Congress to communicate with his constituents on official matters, and on this basis I believe it serves a highly important and valuable public purpose.

There are, admitted, many gray areas in the franking law. Many questions are raised over what is and what is not frankable matter, and these questions are being reviewed almost continuously by the proper authorities in Congress and elsewhere.

In addition such a use of the franking privilege adds tremendously to the incumbent's advantage over anyone who might seek to challenge him in an election. This is obviously unfair, and the franking law was obviously never intended to be put to such use.

I note that the House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards agrees with my view on this matter, and I ask unanimous consent that a letter from the Committee chairman, the Honorable Morris Udall, and a memorandum on the subject of franked solicitations be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the letter and the memorandum were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

COMMISSION ON CONGRESSIONAL MAILING STANDARDS

Washington, D.C., February 27, 1974.

Mr. President: In past years, many Members have printed, in connection with their newsletters and other mass mailings, a brief appeal for small donations to assist with printing and preparation costs. Recently your Commission was asked to render an opinion on the frankability of such letters or questionnaires containing such appeals.

Because of the widespread use of this device, and its importance to the Members, the Commission is not inclined to make any final determination without giving Members a full opportunity to be heard on the question.

Accordingly, the Commission at its last meeting adopted a proposed regulation holding that such appeals are not "official business" within the meaning of the statute, and should not be included in franked mailings.

Since this matter is not explicitly covered in the franking law, we are enclosing a memorandum of points on which the Commission requests comments and comments are urgently solicited. To be considered, they should be submitted to the Commission before March 14th, with kind personal regards.

Sincerely,

Morris K. Udall

Chairman.

MEMORANDUM ON THE FRANKABILITY OF SOLICITATION OF FUNDS TO FINANCE THE PREPARATION OF NEWSLETTERS

Mail matter which is authorized to be mailed under the franking privilege is categorized under paragraphs (A) through (J) of subsection (a) of section 3210 of title 39. The purpose of the franking law is, in writing these paragraphs was to be as specific as possible in listing the types and content of mail matter which is frankable in order to eliminate the uncertainties which had existed under the prior law.

Even the broadest declaration of frankable matter is carefully restricted to "official business, activities, and duties" of the public officials authorized to use the frank.

Therefore, each item which is transmitted in the mail must meet the test of relating to official business, or it is not frankable.

Newsletters are specifically treated under section 2319 of title 39. The purpose is to permit any newsletter to be franked if they "deal with such matters as the impact of laws and decisions on State and local governments or individuals; reports on public and official actions taken by Members of Congress; discussions of proposed or pending legislation or government orders; and debates of the House and Senate of the Congress." The regulation of the franking law provides that the franking privilege adds tremendously to the professional advantage over anyone who might seek to challenge an incumbent in an election.

Inasmuch as the authority to frank newsletters clearly limits and controls the content of newsletters, the absence of authority to solicit funds for any purpose under the franking privilege would prohibit the franking of such solicitations.

The solicitation of funds by a Member of Congress, for whatever purpose the funds are used, constitutes a personal effort on the part of the Member to sell personal solicitation being personal, in that it elicits a monetary response to him, causes the solicitation to be non-frankable under 23213(a)(6) which prohibits the use of the frank for the transmission of matter "which in its nature is purely personal to the sender or to any other person and is unrelated to the official business, activities, and duties of the public officials covered by the franking statute."

It can safely be concluded that while funds solicited for the preparation of a newsletter which is a document in and of itself frankable, the solicitation is not official business nor related to official business, and is therefore not frankable.

In an ethical sense, the act of personally soliciting funds, for whatever purpose, under the frank was not intended by the Congress.

It should be borne in mind that the cost of the transmitted franked mail is paid for by appropriation from the general treasury and that it is the duty of each Member to adhere to the letter and spirit of the franking law, which confines the use of the frank to official business, activities, and duties.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I believe the law as it is clear. The commission certainly believes such solicitation is improper. But I believe it would be proper and appropriate to provide an absolute and unquestionable legislative answer to this question.

Therefore, I offer this amendment to S. 3044 to forbid any Senator, Congressman, Resident Commissioner, or Delegate from using the frank to make solicitations. This should end any doubt or confusion and provide the public with firm assurance that we in Congress are vigilant in eliminating opportunities for abuse of the franking privilege.

Mr. President, I wish to state briefly that there has been a practice in the House of Representatives to solicit funds for newsletters and other purposes under the use of the frank. This simply makes it clear that there shall be no solicitation of funds for any purpose under the frank.

I am aware of the provisions of the present law. Public Law 93-191, the restrictions on mass mailing, and other provisions of the law, but I am not convinced that in effect they prohibit the mailing under the frank of solicitations. This amendment would clarify that matter and the amendment is in accord with the comments of Mr. Udall. I have submitted a copy of his letter for the Record.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON, Mr. President, I have discussed this matter with the Senator. This amendment reduces the franking privilege, adds nothing to existing law. On December 18, 1973, Congress passed and there became law Public Law 93-191, which makes it absolutely clear, in my judgment, that a franked mail of matter which in its nature is purely personal to the sender or to any other person and is unrelated to the official business, activities, and duties of the public officials covered by subsection (b)(1) of this section.

I think that section would preclude use of the franking privilege for solicitation of funds, even if it were for publication of a newsletter. In addition, there is a later provision of the law, which describes the intent of the law as follows:

- Members of or Members-elect to Congress may not mail as franked mail—(c) mail matter which specifically solicits political support for the sender or any other person or any political party, or a vote or financial assistance for any candidate for any public office.

Therefore, in my judgment, the situation is covered, but if the Senator feels there may be some weakness in the law which was enacted on December 18, 1973, so that perhaps House Members were sending out such solicitations prior to that time, I would be willing to accept the amendment, even though I do not think it adds anything to the law.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. DOLE. As I said in my statement, I am aware of that law and its effect. The written memorandum from the Committee on Commerce was written after this law was passed. The memorandum suggests the law is not being observed in that regard. But the gray area is that Members had classified mailings as official solicitations. They were raising funds for the purpose of newsletters or other business and, therefore, were not soliciting funds for a political candidate or for any other political purpose. To me this is a gray area and it is another advantage that incumbents have over incumbents. The amendment would close a loophole that may be exploited.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. COOK. I agree wholeheartedly with the remarks of the chairman relative to its illegality. My personal and legal thought, in the framework of the language that the chairman and I have come to accept, is that even if he does solicit in his newsletter, it is a solicitation of funds that he personally controls and, therefore, constitutes a violation of the law.
I must say that I hope in all fairness that by the adoption of this amendment, and I agree with the chairman we should accept it, this is a reaffirmation of what the law really is. It comes as quite a surprise to me that anyone would use the franking privilege, a newsletter or anything of that nature, to make a direct request for financial assistance for something that the Member of Congress himself controls as a result of solicitation of funds under the franking authority.

Mr. DOLE. It is another of those areas that brings criticism upon Congress and Congressmen. This matter was given special attention by Jack Anderson one evening several months ago, where he named Members of Congress in both parties who follow this practice in the House. It seems to me it is an area that, despite the law passed last December, should be clarified. I offer the amendment with that hope and motive.

I thank the distinguished Senator from Nevada and the distinguished Senator from Kentucky for accepting the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on Agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO 11:15 A.M.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, tomorrow the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until the hour of 11:15 a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR BROOKE TOMORROW AND FOR PERIOD FOR TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, following the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Oregon, (Mr. Hatfield), the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Brooke) will be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes, after which there will be a period for transaction of routine morning business in not to exceed 15 minutes, with statements limited therein to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RESUMPTION OF UNFINISHED BUSINESS: TOMORROW AT THE CONCLUSION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of routine morning business, tomorrow, rather than precisely at the hour of 12 o'clock noon in accordance with the previous order, the Senate resume consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of routine morning business tomorrow, when the Senate resumes consideration of the unfinished business, the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Bartlett amendment, No. 1120.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR SPECIAL DELAY IN CONSIDERATION OF APPOINTMENTS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, tomorrow the Senate will convene at 11:15 a.m. After the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Hatfield) will be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes, after which the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Brooke) will be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes, after which there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to exceed 15 minutes, with statements limited therein to 5 minutes each.

At the conclusion of the transaction of routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Bartlett amendment—No. 1120—to the Public Campaign Financing Bill. There is a time limitation on the Bartlett amendment of 30 minutes. The yeas and nays have been ordered thereon. Consequently, a roll call vote will occur on the adoption of the Bartlett amendment at about 12:30 p.m. tomorrow.

ADJOURNMENT TO 11:15 A.M.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate I move, in accordance with the previous order, that the Senate stand in adjournment until 11:15 a.m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and at 5:21 p.m., the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 2, 1974, at 11:15 a.m.

SENATE FLOOR DEBATES ON
S.3044
APRIL 2, 1974
answered. "After all, we met almost every morning for four years at White House morning briefings, we have a good working relationship, and I'm comfortable in it. . . . Kissinger has devoted much of his energy to the Arab-Israeli conflict and that's what I'm dealing with here at NATO."

I arrived at the Rumsfeld home in the Avenue des Verte Clochers here, his wife, Joyce, greeted me graciously and then left us alone (the dog), Sam, national politicians. During the next hour or so, we had visits from Senator Volter, who was homecoming queen at the Russell-Schaman School last fall, and Marcy, 17, who is enrolled in a Belgian school and is studying in French—Latin, math, and Frenchmen, and her 24-year-old brother, who showed me his increasing his on his head. Nice school and his studies in French.

Rumsfeld is clearly glad to be away from Watergates Washington.

A recent rumor-dusses several times here that he is headed back to D.C. For example, a crow quickly assembled on his front lawn one night a few months ago when reports circuated that he would be the on the vice president.

Nothing came of the rumors of course, and the ambassador told me, "I like it here, and I wouldn't be here if it were an important time for the U.S. in NATO." Ob-ers here believe he felt that the present period is a bad growing season for aspiring Republicans back in the United States.

Rumsfeld and his wife shun much of the social side of Brussels—diplomacy. Unlike most European diplomats, he prefers to be in his home or at the French Embassy in Brussels, rather than the American Embassy in Washington. He is also known for his dislike of traveling, and prefers to spend his weekends at home in the United States. He is an avid reader, and enjoys spending his evenings reading and writing.

CURRENT U.S. POPULATION

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I would like to report that, according to U.S. Census Bureau approximations, the total population of the United States as of April 1, 1974, is 208,906,243. In spite of the widespread reductions in our fertility levels, this represents an increase of 1,197,476 since April 1, 1970, projecting an increase of 1,197,476 since April 1, 1974—this is, in just the last month.

Over the year, therefore, we have added enough people to fill a new Cleveland, Ohio, and San Diego, Calif. And in just one short month, enough additional people for another Ann Arbor, Mich.

THE OIL CRISIS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, presently we are in a period of negotiations with the Arab oil producers on how it will be applied in future years.

A succinct editorial warning our Government leaders reference these negotiations appeared in the March 25, 1974 issue of the Ohio State University newspaper in Aiken, S.C. The editor, Samuel A. McIlhenny, pointed out that our Nation must be prepared to push forward in developing our own resources so that in future generations we might be self-sufficient in regards this vital resource.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this editorial be reprinted in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be reprinted in the Record, as follows:

PLAYING "CUT-AND-MOULD?"

One of the most remarkable statistics ex-tants today is a poll which indicates that the American public surprisingly do not want the government to be involved in the energy crisis. The result of this poll is 3 per cent of the respondents believe the government should be involved in the energy crisis. The American public surprisingly do not want the government to be involved in the energy crisis. The result of this poll is 3 per cent of the respondents believe the government should be involved in the energy crisis.

Whether or not this poll is accurate, it is a clear indication of the public's desire to have less government involvement in the energy crisis.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that David Russell, a member of my staff, may be present during the consideration of this bill and the votes thereon.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions that Mr. BARTLETT be authorized to report the same to the Committee on the Judiciary.
Section 611 was passed in 1972 with the idea of avoiding the abuse inherent in the awarding of Federal contracts. However, although 611 serves a useful purpose in making sure that people who give contributions to Federal campaigns, do not make a contribution during the period of a Federal contract, there is no prohibition on contributing before or after the contract. The potential for abuse is particularly critical in Federal contracts awarded on a noncompetitive basis.

My amendment has the affect of prohibiting anyone who receives contracts from the Federal Government on a noncompetitive basis from making contributions to a Federal campaign for a period of 4 years plus the length of time of the contract.

The amendment will work this way: If a person makes a contribution to a Federal campaign he will for 2 years thereafter be ineligible to receive any Federal contract let on a noncompetitive basis. Likewise, if a person receives a noncompetitive Federal contract he will be prohibited thereafter from making political contributions.

The need for this amendment is apparent. The present system of letting noncompetitive contracts is sought after for the potential for abuse. Architects and engineers are the primary recipients of Federal Government contracts on a noncompetitive basis. There is sound basis for architects and engineers contracts being on a noncompetitive basis and I am convinced this policy should continue. The set fee is one which has been determined to be a fair return to architects and engineers. If these professionals were forced to bid for contracts it could only result in a lessening of the quality of the work performed.

Certainly, a lawyer could not be expected to bid for a client—and a client would not want a lawyer who would do so.

It is not an abiding dedication to good government that a high percentage of architects and engineers contribute to many political campaigns, but it is a result of pressure from the political system. In many cases the risk of insurance not to be blackballed for not contributing. The system creates an unnecessarily gray area for the architect and engineer and the appearance to the public of a lack of interest groups to pay the interest on the fund, then he is also in violation of the law, because he has made a political contribution.

But if we do continue the present system, we must reckon with the potential for abuse or the appearance of abuse in the awarding of noncompetitive contracts.

Certainly, my amendment will not take architects and engineers out of politics. They have a constitutional right to support candidates of their choice. But my amendment will eliminate one means of support, the one which possesses the potential for abuse—namely, the giving of political donations.

Architects and engineers who want or do business with the Federal Government can continue to give of their time and their ability and their money. I have discussed my amendment with architects and engineers and they fully support the goal represented by this amendment. They wish with every contract be awarded on merit rather than on the political consideration of who gives or gave how much to a candidate.

Mr. President, if our political system and political contributions are a measure of respect with the electorate, we as a Congress must be willing to pass this type of legislation.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time. Mr. COOK. I yield myself, such time as I may require.

Mr. President, we discussed this aspect of campaign financing with the Senator from Oklahoma, that we say people who gave large sums. They were fined as individuals; they were fined as corporations. They were sued by public intervenors to pay the interest on their money. Yet, we still sit here and say, "Where is the end result?" The end result is, who has to pay for the solicitation of having sought a contribution from an individual who the Senator wishes to exclude?

The only thing that bothers me is this: As I read the law now, section 611—perhaps the Senator from Alabama may wish to enter into this—we have a provision on our income tax return, and we have had a discussion about whether we are going to make contributions that $1 or $2 may be allocated to a political fund. I contend that if it is made mandatory that any amount of money from an individual taxpayer has to go into this fund, then the architect or the engineer is already violating the law by filing his income tax return. If it is optional and he happens to make a mistake and checks it, so that he pays $1 or $2 to a political fund, then he is also in violation of the law, because he has made a political contribution.

Mr. FASTORE. Let me ask this question. I think the Senator from Oklahoma that I get a distinct feeling that this is a much more serious problem on State and local levels than it is on a national level. I get the distinct feeling that, somehow or other, this is the same as the individual who might make a contribution, and we have very little enforcement on the part of an individual candidate who is the recipient of a contribution. We read every day that there are literally hundreds of people who fail to file their reports. We read that on State levels, there are numerous candidates who have failed to file a report. Never yet have we seen, to my knowledge, any prosecution of the candidates—the successful candidates or the losing candidates—for engaging in a noncompetitive contract. Yet, we have just gone through an unfortunate episode. We have seen situations in which somebody put the bite on land, first, that this proposal amends section 611—perhaps the Senator from Alabama may wish to enter into this—we have a provision on our income tax return, and we have had a discussion about whether we are going to make contributions that $1 or $2 may be allocated to a political fund. I contend that if it is made mandatory that any amount of money from an individual who the Senator wishes to exclude?

The partners, the architects, and the engineers.

Mr. PASTORE. What about corporations? They are prohibited by law anyway.

Mr. PASTORE. That is the point. Suppose the president of that corporation checks off a dollar contribution. The question is: If the president of a corporation makes a contribution, does that mean that the corporation cannot engage in noncompetitive contracts? This is a simple question. What is the answer? Is it yes or no?

Mr. BARTLETT. The answer is no. It is my opinion it would not. It does not apply to the architects—

Mr. PASTORE. That is not what the amendment states. The amendment states that any person who makes a contribution, that person is forbidden from engaging in noncompetitive contract situations with the Federal Government.

Whom do we mean? Do we mean the president, the corporation's employees today, the secretary? Whom do we mean by "person"?

Mr. COOK. May I say to the Senator from Rhode Island that first of all we have to make a distinction and when we make a distinction we also present a problem. The distinction is that the individual is an officer of the corporation, but the corporation is an entity. Therefore, he is not a partner, an association, or acting in his individual capacity.

Mr. PASTORE. Therefore, in the case where there is a corporation and the president makes a contribution, that corporation can engage in noncompetitive contracts, but in a partnership they cannot do it. There is the hiatus and the vacin in this amendment that should be explained, and we have not had the explanation yet.

Mr. COOK. I say to the Senator from Rhode Island, with all due deference to the Senator from Oklahoma, and I do not support his amendment, that under sections 610 and 611 of the code that problem exists, and that problem is really in the law, where an individual who is an officer of a corporation, in his individual capacity may make a contribution regardless of whether he does or does not do business with the Federal Government. But under the present situation if an individual is an officer of a corporation, he could not. This would extend it for 2 years beyond the life of the contract. Is that correct? Am I correct in my assumption?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes, the Senator is correct. On the first point the corporation cannot make a gift. On the second point under the corporation's employees today, who cannot make a gift legally to campaigns, the employees can and do contribute. That is the point I was making.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PASTORE. Yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I think that this amendment gives Congress a chance to set a good example for the States. In 1978 there were only 72 contracts entered into between architects and engineers and the Federal Government, totaling $8.5 million in fees.
So there are not a lot of contractual relationships, but do to that it is very clear from conversations I had recently with a number of architects and engineers that there is a gray area here that the professional people do not appreciate precisely.

Both point out that when the line is drawn between the pressure they feel to contribute so they will not be blackballed, and then contributing a large amount and have it interpreted as influencing contracts, it is a gray area that they should not be forced into. It places the responsibility in the wrong area.

I think the amendment removes architects and engineers from this kind of invasion of their professional ability because they certainly are interested in doing a good job and they are interested and they should be in doing a good job for the Federal Government. I believe this amendment creates a very muddy area, a gray area that has caused lots of trouble for engineers and architects.

I think it is obvious it would set a great example for the States.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I wish to say that one of the parts here I cannot comprehend is how anybody in his right mind could be forced or compelled and I point out to Senators this language:

No person who has made a contribution may accept any contract referred to in subsection (a) (other than a contract the award of which will be made on the basis of competitive bids) at any time within 24 months after the contribution has been made.

That means if an individual in a partnership has made a contribution to the Senator's campaign or my campaign, that partnership is prohibited for 24 months, or 2 years from even bidding on an architectural or engineering contract with the Federal Government.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COOK. If I were to guess, I would be glad to yield in just a moment.

Second, I suspect that what one would have to do is get an affidavit. Suppose a person is in the business of bidding on Government contracts. He would have to get an affidavit from every new member brought into the partnership to the effect that he had not made a contribution to a political campaign or to a candidate within the past 24 months; otherwise he would be forced by law to set up a separate campaign fund.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOK. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. As a matter of fact, when he checks it off on the income tax return, he is stopped.

Mr. COOK. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, in our Committee on Rules and Administration, we have a number of contracts that are presented to us by various members of the committee or otherwise for approval, contracts for personal services to carry out investigations or studies on particular subjects. Under this amendment, were it to be adopted, if a person had checked off on his income tax return $1 for political purposes, he would be ineligible to enter into such a contract.

Mr. COOK. Not only if he had checked it off, but for 24 months of time the contract could not be presented to the committee.

Mr. CANNON. And he would be ineligible for 2 years.

Mr. COOK. That is correct.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, does that mean it would apply to someone who had contributed to a losing candidate?

Mr. COOK. Either one, Senator, either a successful or failed candidate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COOK. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. My question does not go to the merits or demerits of the amendment, but I would like to ask if it is the disgusted Senator's contention that a checkoff on the tax return is a contribution to the person who makes the checkoff.

Mr. COOK. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it his money?

Mr. COOK. Well, we could get into a debate about that, but it is his tax liability.

Mr. CURTIS. No; he would have the same tax liability whether he check-ed it off or not.

Mr. COOK. That is right, but he has an option as to what he wants to do with that $1 or those $2.

Mr. CURTIS. But he does not put up any money?

Mr. COOK. I am not disagreeing with the Senator. All I am saying is that until we decide—which, by the way, we will discuss shortly—whether this contribution is to be made, or if at the option of the taxpayer, I would suggest to the Senator that if the taxpayer takes the option that that part of his tax liability be diverted for the purpose of a political campaign, he may well come under this provision or section 611 of the code as it exists.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time of the Senator has expired. The proponent of the amendment has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I appreciate the point that was expressed by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska. I think it is a very good point. I would like to mention to the Senator from Nevada that when he expressed concerns about the checkoff, this amendment would not have the effect of an ex post facto law. It would not apply to checkoffs that may have been made in the past, but would be prospective in nature. It would not apply to firms that have contracts in existence, but would apply only to the future.

I would mention to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, who expressed concern, that there would be a problem with a new architect entering a firm, as to whether he had or had not made a contribution. I think the whole purpose of this proposal is to remove engineering or architectural firms from the arena of political contributions, and I think that is what we want. They do not want to be involved and they do not want to be in that gray area which is sort of between the contribution of an interested citizen and that of trying to influence people in Government.

Mr. GOLDBLATT. Mr. President, will the Senate yield for a question?

Mr. GOLDBLATT. I yield.

Mr. GOLDBLATTER. In view of the way this debate has turned, I would like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma what the situation would be if we passed a law providing for federally financed campaigns. Would we not all be contributors?

Mr. CURTIS. Not if we had deficits.

We would be turning it over to our grandchildren.

Mr. GOLDBLATTER. I am not talking about deficits. If we passed a law for publicly financed campaigns, would we not, in effect, all be making donations, whether we are doctors, lawyers, or whatnot? What is the Senator's opinion on that?

Mr. GOLDBLATTER. Well, the Senator raises a point. I, of course, am not in favor of the public financing provisions of the proposed law.

Mr. GOLDBLATTER. Neither am I.

Mr. GOLDBLATTER. And I hope it does not become reality, but I think public financing does raise a lot of questions. I believe this amendment does the job of removing from the political arena, and the pressure of making a contribution if for no other reason than just to be considered or not to be blackballed, architects and engineers, and puts them in a strictly professional area, which they would like to be in.

When a number of architects and engineers from my State were here recently, talking about the problems thatexist around the country, they brought out the point that people feel that the answer would be bidding, but I think bidding would be just as unsuitable for an architect or engineer as it would be for a lawyer in trying to obtain a client, and I think it is very important that they be removed from that area.

Mr. FASOR. Mr. President, will the Senate yield for a suggestion?

Mr. FASOR. I yield.

Mr. FASOR. Why doesn't the Senator modify his amendment to read in the positive rather than in the negative, by saying that any person who has a noncompetitive contract cannot make a contribution to the political party within 2 or 3 months from the time of the election? Then the Senator would be getting the person.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I have an amendment that I would like to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's amendment would not be in order until all time has been yielded back.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to modify my own amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will read the modification.

The assistant legislative clerk read the modification as follows:

The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to any contribution check-off provided on a Federal income tax return.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, has all time been yielded back?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield back the remainder of his time?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BARTLETT), as modified. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, is the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AMERICAN) is absent due to personal problems that are unrelated to his duties in the Senate?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, would the Senator from Montana (Mr. HUGHES) be involved and they do not want to be involved in that gray area which is sort of different from that of the contribution of an interested citizen and that of trying to influence people in Government.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I am speaking of course of that class for no other reason than that it is what we are talking about.

S 5065

S. 1673, An Act for the relief of Mrs. Zoelma Telebano Van Zanten; S. 1674, An Act for the relief of Georgina Henrietta Harris; S. 3238, An Act to provide funeral transportation and living expense benefits to the families of deceased prisoners of war, and for other purposes.

ECONOMIC STABILIZATION PROGRAM REPORT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDENT (Mr. HATHAWAY) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs. The message is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I hereby transmit to the Congress, in accordance with section 216 of the Economic Stabilization Act of 1970, as amended, the most recent quarterly report on the Economic Stabilization Program, covering the period October 1, 1973 through December 31, 1973.

The fourth quarter of 1973 was a period of continued inflation although slower than in the period following September. Our gross national product grew to $1,338 billion, an increase of $33 billion over the previous quarter. Employment increased by approximately one million workers to 65.7 million. The American dollar continued to regain some strength abroad.

During the fourth quarter, inflation remained our most serious economic problem and continued to rise at an unacceptably rapid pace, due in large part to the worldwide shortages of many raw materials. The pattern of price increases also began to reflect the impact of the Arab oil embargo against the United States and other world prices for oil.

The beginning of the fourth quarter, the fourth phase of the Economic Stabilization Program had been fully underway. The increases anticipated after the summer freeze on prices were set in but over the next three years with the help of the Phase IV regulatory mechanism.

Phase IV was also designed to provide an effective system of tight standards and compliance procedures that would lead to a gradual return of industry and labor to the free market. Throughout the fourth quarter, decontrol proceedings demonstrated that the public and private sectors of our economy can work cooperatively and effectively to meet common goals of price restraint. As part of the commitment under which they were removed from mandating controls, many firms have pledged voluntary price control. More importantly for the future, many have stepped-up their capital expenditure plans to enlarge supplies—the only really effective way to halt inflation.

We are firm in our commitment to meet the challenge of inflation. The energy shortage and the problems resulting from it have significantly added to this challenge. We can, however, look with satisfaction to the efforts and sacrifices our Nation has made in response to these problems.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE
April 2, 1974

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1321) to provide for pension relief for retired Federal Employees, approved the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6186) to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1947 regarding taxability of dividends received by a corporation from insurance companies, and for other purposes; agreed to the committee's recommendation that the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Perkins, Mr. Hawkins, Mrs. Mink, Mr. Nye, Mr. Quie, Mr. Ashbrook, and Mr. Steiger of Wisconsin were appointed managers on the part of the Senate at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1321) to provide for pension relief for retired Federal Employees, approved the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6186) to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1947 regarding taxability of dividends received by a corporation from insurance companies, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Perkins, Mr. Thompson of New Jersey, Mr. Dent, Mr. Burton, Mr. Quie, Mr. Eddleman, and Mr. Samasin were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2) to provide for pension relief for retired Federal Employees, approved the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6186) to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1947 regarding taxability of dividends received by a corporation from insurance companies, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Perkins, Mr. Thompson of New Jersey, Mr. Dent, Mr. Burton, Mr. Quie, Mr. Eddleman, and Mr. Samasin were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

Mr. ALLEN, Mr. President, under the case of any candidate for the office of President or Vice President, $250; and

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, under the present law, contributions can be made to various committees for a candidate of up to $1,000 without the incurring of a gift-tax liability. This has enabled many wealthy contributors to contribute $3,000 to each of multiple committees, thereby allowing them to contribute much more than the $3,000 to a candidate without incurring gift-tax liability.

On July 30 last year the Senate passed S. 372, which at the time was hailed by many as a great forward step in the regulation of campaign expenditures. That bill provided—and the bill before the Senate at this time, S. 3044—provided—for a $3,000 limitation per contributor per candidate per election.

It is true that this bill will permit a man and his wife to contribute $6,000 to a family, thereby allowing a $6,000 contribution by the family.

The present bill provides a $3,000 limitation per contribution, and, Mr. President, I think that is certainly a fine regulation. I think that is certainly a fine regulation up to a point. It is contained in S. 372 which was passed last year in this Congress, now pending in the House. I believe it would be the better part of wisdom if we waited and saw what the House was going to do with respect to campaign financing.

There is no doubt that the Senate wants stricter regulation. The Senator from Alabama wants stricter regulation. So I believe, Mr. President, it would be well for the Senate first to wait on the House to act, because there is some question as to the degree to which the House has embraced or will embrace public financing. Once we find out what the House will do, the Senate can write its version, and then we will be very near to an agreement on a bill, which could very nearly be resolved in the conference, and a bill would ensue.

We have already sent one bill over to the House, S. 372, passed on July 30 last year by a vote of 82 to 8. During the course of the consideration and action and passage of that bill, a public financing amendment was defeated by the Senate. That was just July of last year. So we sent to the House a bill providing for strict regulation of campaign expenditures, with a strict regulation on campaign contributions, but confining all of the contributions to the private sector. That was the action of the Senate in July of last year.

Now, before the House has acted on that bill—I will not say before the House has had an opportunity to act on it, not the full House; the committee has not seen fit to report a bill, but there is an indication that the chairman of the committee is going to see that some legislation is reported. And so the Senate is being called on to pass a bill with an entirely different approach.
What was the effect of our action before? I am not sure how many days or weeks we debated it. I think it may have been as long as 10 days on the floor. The discussion of the committee (Mr. CANNON) is here. He could give the exact number of days. But the Senate debated that bill for a week or 10 days and decided to keep campaign contributions from the private sector, by a yeah-and-nay vote here on the floor, and by a substantial margin.

The present bill changes that approach, and seeks to finance the primaries of the Members of the House and Senate on a 50-50 matching, or potentially a 50-50 matching, as between private contributions and the Public Treasury, and to finance general election expenditures 100 percent out of the Public Treasury, which would allow, taking the largest State in the Union, a candidate for the Senate—and both of the California Senators have voted for public financing—to have a contribution by the Federal Government, or a part of the Federal Government, up to $200,000, in matching funds. That would be the Government's contribution to the candidacy of any number of candidates for the nomination of the two major parties.

That would be up to $700,000 based on the amount of private contributions for each candidate for the nomination of the two parties. With that kind of financing, I rather imagine quite a number of candidates will be seeking the nominations of the different parties. And if the Federal Government is going to pay up to $700,000 in matching funds for the contributions of the various candidates, I think there will be a large number of candidates running for the Democratic nomination and a large number of candidates running for the Republican nomination. Then, if the two parties choose their candidates, who have been financed by the Federal Government, up to $200,000, the Federal Government will take it over altogether.

Paying half the amount is not enough. We are asked to pay half of a candidate's expense—a large expense, I might say. I think that a little later on I shall offer an amendment to cut down the amounts allowed to be spent under the bill. I think that this bill scales the cost of a campaign at a time when we ought to be trying to cut down on the cost of the campaign.

What does the bill provide for the fortunate fellows who have been chosen by the two major parties as their candidates in the general election for the Senate? Why, the taxpayers write each one of them a check for $2,020,000. Is that reform? I am for reform; I am not for a public subsidy. I am for cutting down on the overall expenditures, and I am for cutting down on the individual contributions. We cannot write a bill that is too strict for the Senate. That is what we have the powers and the discretion and expenditures being in the private sector.

I would not care if they eliminated all private expenditures and all contributions just so long as they leave it in the private sector and do not hand the bill over to the taxpayers.

Mr. President, they say that the lessons of Watergate are imperative that campaign election laws be changed and tightened up. They say that the only way we can do that is by handing the bill to the taxpayer. Well, that is the lesson of all of our problems for the last decade. When any problems come up, they pump a little more Federal money into the area of the problem and say that that is the solution of all of our problems for the last decade. When any problems come up, they pump a little more Federal money into the area of the problem and say that that is the same thing applies where they pump a little more money into the pockets of the politicians. They say that we will have a clean election in that way.

I do not see that policy. That is a non sequitur. There is no magic potion attached to a dollar received from the Public Treasury as distinguished from a dollar received from the private sector.

So turning the bill over to the taxpayer is not going to solve anything. But strict regulations, private contributions and expenditures, and strict rules as to the disclosures of all of our expenditures and expenditures will go a long way.

The law that we have on the books now, the 1971 Campaign Expenditures Act, did the wrong thing reform. One thing that it did not do was to cut down on the amount of contributions; and that is what needs to be done. It was argued at that time that disclosure was all that was needed; that if we disclosed what each candidate was doing, we would not need to put any limit on contributions. It does not work that way.

Another shortcoming, another shortfall in the present law, is that there is no effective limitation on campaign expenditures. What is covered in the campaign expenditure field? Why, all they seek to put a limit on is the expenditures for the so-called media advertising. I believe it is 10 cents for each person of voting age in the population from which the candidate is running. I believe it is up to 6 cents for radio and television and possibly 4 cents for other types of media advertising. So there are no limitations ever on the tremendous number and amount of other types of campaign types of expenditures.

What about mass mailing? I have not sent any mass mailing as a candidate. However, I understand that is frequently resorted to.

Oh, sure, it is hard, with office space, car rental, campaign staffs, and the tremendous number of expenses that can come up. There is no limitation whatso- ever on those areas of expenditures. Of course, there means tightening up.

S. 372, which the Senate has already passed, placed a 15-cent limitation per person on those of voting age for campaign expenditures. If we cut that 15 cents down to 10 cents, we would have a better law. That law has not passed. I say that we should wait for the House to send a bill over here that we can work from. The House has given the House committed to that much of a concession in the area of campaign reform.

I would suggest caution in moving ahead at this time with an entirely different theory as to the approach to campaign financing, an approach of 180° in about 180 days to switch from private financing to public financing which is what we are being called upon to do here by the authors of S. 3044.

I say that since the acute need for this legislation is pointed up by Watergate, I think it would be highly appropriate that we wait and examine the report which I understand is going to be filed either this month or next by the Watergate commit-tee, the report which the Senate charged that committee with bringing back to the Senate on the recommendation that the committee makes to the Senate, Congress, and the Nation as to the best way of reforming the electoral process and the best way of properly controlling campaign contributions and expenditures.

That mission was assigned to that committee, and it has labored diligently for 15 months or more, and received the plaudits of the entire Nation for the plausibility of its recommendations and the results which it achieved. Why not wait and see what recommendations that committee will make?

Mr. President, I would say it is rather obvious why we are not going to wait on that report. All you have to do is read some of the votes here in the Senate on some of the issues both last year and this year. It is quite obvious that five members of the seven-man Watergate Committee are opposed to public finan-cing of Federal elections. That is one reason why we are not waiting on that report, because it is known what the report is going to say, in principle. It is not going to recommend public financing; that is obvious from the votes taken here in the Senate. So that is the reason why this bill must be pushed at this time.

Mr. President, we have not yet tried strict regulation, such as would be provided by S. 372. We have not yet tried strict regulation of campaign receipts and campaign expenditures. If the House of Representatives would pass S. 372, we are sure that the Senate given a fair trial, I believe it would go a long way toward cleaning up Federal elections in this country.

And not only has private regulation, one regulation of the giving and control of contributions in the private sector, not been tried, but we already have Federal financing, taxpayer finan-cing of Federal elections, up to a point. We already have the checkoff; this bill as it came from the committee contained a plan not only to double the checkoff from $1 for a single person and $2 for a couple, for a single person and $4 for a couple. But they were not satisfied with doubling that process, which is going to bring in enough money already to finance the 1976 election; they wanted to weight the thing in favor of the tax spenders, of the polit-icians running for Federal office.

How did they plan to do that? Well, they thought they would do it by the checkoff being on a voluntary basis, as it is now, that if the taxpayer did not say that he did not want his money checked off, they would check off anyway; and he would be assumed to desire a checkoff as to his return if he did not specify to the contrary. That was just a little twist around to where it made the contribution involuntary, requiring him to take affirmative action to prevent the checkoff rather than the present law, which requires affirmative action to implement or put in motion the checkoff.

I am aware of the fact that this section has been deleted, to come up at a later time on another bill, but we might not have an opportunity to discuss it as fully at that time as we have at the present time. I am sure that the checkoff provides in the way of money out of the taxpayers' pockets. Under the present checkoff regulation or law, which the Rules Committee which brought out this bill passed, I believe, by a vote of 8 to 1—the Senator from Alabama is on that committee, and his vote represented the one opposed to the bill—le primary and general election, as page 28 of the committee report: If all returns, individual and joint, should take full advantage of the one dollar check-off the cost would be $17,740,000.

With this amendment that they have: If all returns should take full advantage of a two dollar check-off the cost would be $33,740,000.

That is what the cost would be under this little checkoff provision that they have got. It looks like some important money coming under the checkoff. They are going to have enough money under the checkoff to finance the Presidential election in 1976.

Would it not be the better part of wisdom—I will ask the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY)—would it not be the better part of wisdom to go along by this plan provided in the 1976 Presidential election before adding other offices or adding the Presidential nomination and the House and Senate primaries and general elections? Would it not be better to see how it works at the Presidential level before adding other area offices?

Mr. PERCY. If the distinguished Senator from Alabama is asking me, I would be very happy to say that I have no objection to using our best judgment and going ahead with other offices as we in our judgment think may be good for one level as for another.

Mr. ALLEN. He would not want to wait and see how it works before trying to extend it to other areas then?

Mr. PERCY. All I know is that any system, almost, would be better than the present system we seem to be using.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the distinguished Senator from Illinois. We are going to try to give him a better system but keep it in the private sector.

I have been addressing my remarks, I will say for the benefit of Senators who have just come into the Chamber since I started talking, to the fact that we already have public financing of Federal elections up to a point, and the Presidential election in full under certain circumstances, which I will outline in a moment.

Other elections are financed by the Federal Government in the operation of the income tax laws because the present law—and this bill seeks to double what I am going to outline—the present law. I believe gives a single person an absolute credit. In other words, just handing this amount to the taxpayer of $12.50 for any political contribution to the Federal Government in the operation of the party, I might make, including, of course, to the Presidential or the Senatorial or the House of Representatives candidates.

A couple would claim a credit of $25. Now if they wanted to go a different route and go the deduction route, there was a $50 deduction for an individual or $100 for a couple. This bill as it came out of the committee doubled those amounts. I think that is going to be the pattern throughout, if we get this Federal financing, as every Congress will double what it will cost the taxpayer.

But here we have got the checkoff already financed by the taxpayers of the country, financed by the Public Treasury, it would be better to say, because it does not cost the taxpayer any more as an individual taxpayer to assign a dollar of his tax liability toward this checkoff fund. We would not tax the taxpayers, by the Public Treasury—the checkoff plan—and we have the credits that are allowed to the taxpayers if they want to go to the deduction sections if they want to go the other route.

Obviously, the deduction route would be chosen by a person whose income was high because he would then get more than this credit. The credit would be better used by a person of low income.

So, Mr. President, the committee bill sought to double these amounts and make it, I believe—speaking from memory, and if I am wrong, I am sure I will be corrected—the committee bill provided for credits of $25 for an individual, $50 for a couple, or deductions of $100 for an individual or $200 for a couple.

So S. 3044.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, if the Senator were to yield at that point, the Senator is correct. That is the proposal that was in the bill as we reported it, in addition to raising the dollar check-off to $2. That is the $2. The Senator correctly stated earlier, which is now in Title V and was stricken from the bill and has been referred to the Finance Committee. So it presently is not in the bill as it now stands.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Alabama did not state to the contrary. He stated that the provision had been stricken from the bill. He has a better opportunity to discuss it than we might have at a different time.

Mr. CANNON. I was just verifying the fact that the Senator's figures are correct.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, and I thank the distinguished Senator from Nevada. I appreciate his diligence, his dedication, and his great interest in this area. Also his sincere desire to set up a workable plan that will inure to the benefit of the people of the United States as he sees it.

I just happen to see it differently. But I would be happy to see us try this out and see if I feel the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), the chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, has done an outstanding job in this area and in coming up with the bill as he was committed to do last year at the time the rider to the debt bill was added.

But the Senator from Alabama disagrees with the conclusion that the distinguished Senator from Nevada has drawn, that to a certain extent public financing is in the best interest of the election process and of the people of this country.

I was commenting on the bill as it came from the Committee on Rules and Administration.

So, now, Mr. President, this bill, S. 3044, sets up a system of matching contributions in primaries and financing 100 percent the general elections.

Now let us see who is paying the bill. In the primaries the Government is paying half of the contributions up to a certain amount in total. The people of this country.

Now the taxpayer that is the Government, under the present law and to a great extent under this law, it came out of the committee, would provide for matching the individual contributions. But the taxpayer can put up a large portion of his income and charge it off on his income tax with little net loss or cost to the taxpayer on the small contributions. So the Government is getting it in the neck going and coming. It matches the contributions and it funnels the money over to the taxpayer to put up a portion of his end of it. So, in a sense, it is the Government paying it all the way.

The rider that was not agreed to in the Senate did not go so far as to cover primaries of House and Senate Members. They said, "This is a little farther than we should go." But I notice that the Rules Committee has come out with a bill providing for matching funds in primaries.

Mr. President, let us see what it takes in the various primaries to become a candidate. Let us take the top office and see how that operates under the Senate bill, and let us see if this is the public interest.

In the first place, it provides that a candidate for the nomination of one of the two major parties can spend up to $15 million in seeking the Presidential nomination. I say that in round figures. It is based on a formula of 10 cents per person of voting age throughout the country, and that is estimated to be approximately $15 million. It is provided that anybody desiring to seek the nomination of one of the parties can do so, but he does not receive any subsidy, any interest, any handout from the Federal Government until he has raised $250,000 in contributions of $250 or less. As soon as he reaches that threshold level, as it is called, of having raised $250,000, he goes into the show business of that to the Commission, I assume, and the Treasury pays him that $250,000. Now he has another $250,000 with which to run.

Every time he receives a contribution of $250 or less, he is entitled to have that money matched by the Federal Government, by the taxpayers of the Nation, up to the point of $7.5 million. That is what every candidate wants. The nomination is the nomination, or the nomination that will receive; and if this bill is passed, there will be several dozen, including 8 or 10 who serve in this Chamber.

I might mention in passing that one of the amendments that has been defeated in the Senate since this bill has been under debate was an amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama that would have stated that no Member of the 93d Congress would be eligible to receive any matching funds for a race for the Presidential nomination for the term starting January 20, 1977, which is the next race. That amendment received 36 votes. Numbered among those 36, however, was not a single person who is reputed to be, or alleged to be, or understood to be a candidate for the nomination of one of the major parties.

I took the position that if this Congress sets up a subsidy program of $7.5 million, no body who wants to run for President, the Members of the Congress that creates that subsidy program should not be able to participate in any such subsidy. The majority of the Senate did not agree; I was pleasantly surprised, however, to receive 36 votes on that amendment. So 36 Members of the Senate felt that a program should not be set up by the 93d Congress in which Members of that Congress would stand to benefit to the tune of several million dollars apiece. It might be a good idea to remember that when a bill is passed and submitted again, to see what the Members of the Senate think about it, after having reflected on it for awhile.

Mr. President, a person who is very popular in a State and who has no nationwide following whatsoever would not have too much difficulty, in my judgment, in raising $250,000 in his home State; nor would the leader of some pressure group, some far out group, have difficulty in raising that money. He would present the bill to the Federal Treasury and, in effect, would have Federal funds from then on out, by the Federal Government matching his $250 or less contributions on up to $7.5 million.

Another consideration is this: It is not necessary that the recipient of this Federal subsidy spend any of it prior to the convention—or ever spend it, for that matter. But certainly he does not have to spend it prior to the convention. If he has collected $7.5 million in contribution of up to $250 and the Federal Government has matched that amount and he goes to the convention sitting on a war chest of $15 million, and another candidate or two follow the same policy, and we have several candidates in Miami or in Chicago—which seem to be the cities that bid for these conventions—they could be at the convention with $15 million apiece.

Look at the possibilities for improper practices with these Presidential candidates who are greatly desirous of high office and are willing to work hard in an effort to obtain that nomination. I believe that the financing of these Presidential election campaigns or Presidential nomination campaigns certainly is not in the public interest. Look at some of the beneficiaries of such a program. I notice in the New York Times an article about the governor of New York, Mr. Rockefeller, may possibly aspire to the Presidency. This Federal subsidy program would make it possible that he would be able to subsidize Mr. Rockefeller up to the extent of $7.5 million. Governor Rockefeller is said to be a candidate for nomination, I believe, of the Republican Party. If the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. Pell) contributed up to $250 he would be eligible for a Federal subsidy of $7.5 million.

Governor Reagan of California would be eligible for a subsidy of up to $7.5 million. The distinguished senior Senator from Illinois (Mr. Pecora) has a commission set up to study whether he shall run for the Presidency or not, and if he decides to run and is able to get sufficient private contributions he would be eligible from Illinois (Mr. Pecora) has a commission set up to study whether he shall run for the Presidency or not, and if he decides to run and is able to get sufficient private contributions, he would be eligible for a subsidy of $7.5 million.

Some of the other candidates who have run in the past would be eligible. The distinguished Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McGovern) has shown he can get small contributions in abundance so he would be almost certain to receive a subsidy of $7.5 million if he ran for the Presidency.

This is the kind of type reform. If that were the law the candidates for the Presidential nomination of the two major parties could receive up to $7.5 million out of the Public Treasury, and that is provided under this bill. Mr. President, you can rest assured that there will be a cry throughout this land for true reform, and that would be to do away with this $7.5 million-per-candidate subsidy plan. That is what the reform would be. It is not reform to set up a subsidy program for Presidential nomination. It is a fundamental reform. That is subsidizing politicians, and that is not in the public interest, in the judgment of the Senator from Alabama.

Now, Mr. President, when the bill first came to the floor of the Senate I questioned the distinguished junior Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. Pell), who was one of the original sponsors of the bill. I pointed out to him that my examination of the bill did not disclose that there was a starting point for the making of contributions which would be matchable under this Federal subsidy.

He stated that that was true. So I asked him if that would indicate, then, that contributions made possibly several years ago, prior to the passage of the bill; would have to be matched out of the Public Treasury if they otherwise complied with the law. The distinguished Senator from Rhode Island considered there was no starting point, so these contributions made sometime back would be matchable.

I also pointed out to the distinguished Senator from New York that if I were to state that the Presidential elections referred to would be the last Presidential election, and it appeared that a man could take the position, "I cannot run in 1976; I am not ready yet and others are better known;" it would be possible that the person who would be a challenger's bill; does it make better provisions for the incumbent, or does it make better provision for the challenger? Well, I stated here on the floor of the Senate that possibly some Senators were not here then, as I see it this bill providing for the matching of candidates' contributions in the primary—I would say for the Senate for Presidential races but it also applies in Presidential races, as well—the candidate in the primary who is well known, who is the incumbent, who is in high office already, is in a better position to obtain more funds and contributions than the nonincumbent who is the lesser-known candidate.

I use an example the State of California. There, Mr. President, it is permitted to receive in contributions $1.4 million in the primary. By the way, I neglected to mention that the purpose of the amendment is to cut down on the amount of permissible contributions, and I will get to that a little later. If all of his contributions were $250 or less, or $100 or less in the case of a House or Senate candidate, he could receive in private contributions up to $700,000, and the amendment would match that with $700,000.

I use for an example a lesser known candidate who might receive $100,000, $175,000 and $125,000. No additional or spread, so to speak—a $500,000 advantage—as between the incumbent and the challenger. That is a pretty big advantage.

Let us see what happens when the formula of Federal aid applied. There is a $500,000 spread before the matching takes place. The lesser-known candidate's $100,000 is doubled, and he receives $200,000. The incumbent, being better known, having done favors for hundreds of people, and being the favorite, I assume, would be able too receive larger sums and in contributions. The hypothetical instance, having received $700,000, that is matched by the Federal Government, so he ends up with campaign funds of $1.4 million. The challenger, having been at a $600,000 disadvantage before the public financing helps out, being $600,000 behind, when public financing gets through with him, he is $1.2 million behind his better known challenger, his better known incumbent.

So what is there here for the challenger? It looks to the Senator from Alabama as though the advantage lies with the incumbent. What a lack of plausibility. That a bill of this sort, public financing, is needed to do away with large contributions. We do not need public financing to do away with large contributions; all we have to do is pass S. 372. That cuts it down to $3,000 per person.

But the pending amendment which, after these few preliminary remarks I have gotten to, makes this provision. The $3,000 is too high. The $3,000 permissible contribution is too high, in the opinion of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I have been listening to the comments of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts. It is a pious statement that a bill of this sort will leave the decision to the individual candidate. It leaves the decision to the individual candidate whether he wants to choose one method or the other to finance his campaign, or a combination of the two. S. 372, which also came out of the Rules Committee, was debated here on the floor of the Senate last July, and by an overwhelming vote of some 80 to 20, it was the considered and overwhelming judgment of the Senate that $3,000 was a realistic limitation for private contributions—low enough to prevent the most serious abuses of large contributions, but high enough to enable candidates to finance their campaigns without undue difficulty.

I wonder why the Senator from Alabama, who has obviously taken such a strong position in opposition to public financing, is offering an amendment whose effect may well be to eliminate the possibility of private financing of campaigns for public office, by setting the contribution limits at a level so low that no candidate may be able to finance his campaign privately. Most experts would say, I think, that this amendment would make public financing the only realistic way to go.

It seems that on the one hand, the Senator is saying, "I am opposed to any public financing of campaigns," and on the other hand, he is offering an amendment which provides public financing in a major industrial State, where hundreds of thousands, or even millions, of dollars are now routinely spent. How will they be able to reach that amount of money by contributions of $100 or less?

And his effort to raise funds will be more difficult, because other candidates will be tapping the same pool of small contributors. What happens when both candidates for President, both candidates for the Senate, and both candidates for a House seat are trying to raise small contributions in the same congressional district? Is the pool of contributors inexhaustible? What if candidates for State and local office are also making the effort to tap the pool? Would not the well run dry?

I wonder why the Senator is opposed to what I think has been the very constructive and positive compromise in S. 3044. Public and private financing can exist side by side as reasonable alternatives. A candidate could say, "I am going to run on public financing, so that I will not be beholden to special interest groups, and so that I will be accountable to all the people." Another candidate could say, "I am going to rely on private financing, because I would rather not use public funds for my campaign, and the danger of special influence groups is not very great if their contributions are limited to $3,000." To me, the amendment of the Senator from Alabama runs the risk that it abolishes completely the opportunity to run with these kinds of alternatives.

I would like to know whether the Senator from Alabama can indicate to us the amount of money that has been raised already to fund Senate races. I would like to know whether that money has actually been contributed in amounts of $100 or less. I wonder whether the Senator from Alabama has any figures on that point.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Senator for his comment. I am delighted that he finally got around to asking a question rather than making self-serving comments.

I would say to the Senator from Massachusetts that there is no magic in the $3,000 figure. Certainly, it is a step in the right direction, because under the present law there is no effective limit whatever. I support the $3,000 limit, if that is the best we can do.

When S. 372 was before the Senate, if the Senator will recall, there was an amendment brought to cut the $3,000 down to $1,000. If I am not mistaken, a public service organization known as Common Cause recommended the $1,000 limitation. The Senator from Alabama voted for that limitation. At that time he would have voted for a stricter limitation. The Senator from Alabama is not one who believes that Members of the House and Senate are conspiring together to make races to the point where they might challenge the Members of the House and Senate, are people of such nature that their conduct, their votes, and their actions would be influenced by contributions that they might accept.

I think that Members of the House and Senate should show restraint in this field. I think that we shall be willing to adopt a lower level of contributions, a lower level of spending. I will submit that public financing, far from cutting down on the amount of average expenditures in political races, is going to increase the judgment of the Senator from Alabama.

So I believe that the best way to reform the election process, the best way to get a true reform—will certainly be not going to get true reform just by turning the bill over to the taxpayers—the best way to get true reform is to limit everybody—the incumbent and the challenger—to the overall expenditures and to limit the amount of permissible contributions.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I had not finished answering, but I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. If we follow the reason- ing of the Senator from Alabama, it will lead us to public financing. We are talking about reducing the amount of contributions to an exceedingly low limit. The presence of public financing and the dollar checkoff periods for federal campaign can pay for the entire 1976 Presidential election by what we, in effect, $1 contributions from millions of taxpayers.

If we follow the reasoning of the Senator from Alabama, I think it leads us right into the public financing legislation which we are currently considering. Instead of large contributions, the Senator from Alabama thinks that $1,000 is too large. So the Senator from Alabama goes to $250 in a Presidential race and $100 in a congressional race.

Let us carry that argument to the point of the dollar checkoff periods for the individual taxpayer to contribute $1. That is the heart of the public financing that has been incorporated into this bill. It makes the Members of the Congress responsible to all the people because all the people are financing the campaigns.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I rise to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts. The point that the Senator from Alabama is making is that if we limit contributions, to $250 in Presidential races and $100 in House and Senate races, there is no possibility of these evil, corrupting influences that the Senator from Massachusetts fears. There will certainly be no way for a vested interest to gain any support or influence from a Member of Congress if his contribution is limited to $100, or to $250 in a Presidential race. It would be just as fair for one as for the other. It would deprive the incumbent of his ability—supposed ability—to get large sums of money, and it would put him on the same basis as the challenger, whose contributions in all likelihood would be small.

So the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama would be to have a leveling influence that would have the biggest and fullest amounts, as would be permissible under the bill as presently drawn. I feel that a $3,000 limit is better than no limit whatsoever. When we were unable to reduce the amount in S. 372 to the $1,000 limit, the Senator from Alabama support the $3,000 limit. At that time the Senate took a stand for regulating campaign contributions and expenditures in the private sector. He reminded the body that the S. 372 was passed, of presenting a bill of a half a billion dollars every 4 years to the American taxpayers to enable the politicians in the land to run for Federal office.

So, as the Senator from Alabama sees it, under the present bill there is no matching for amounts over $250 in Presidential nomination races and no matching for contributions over $100 in the House and Senate races. So, there must be something evil or sinister about contributions above that amount, therefore, to cut them all down to the amount that the Federal Government will match. Thereby, we will help the challenger, the challenger being unable, according to the Senator from Massachusetts, to attract large contributions, to obtain public financing in his primary election up to $7,500, 000.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. When I finish my thought I will be glad to assume that the Senator from Massachusetts was right here when I gave this presentation to the United States. That, at the State of California, where, in the primary, it is possible for the Government to contribute as a subsidy to a candidate in a primary election up to $700,000, based on the amounts contributed by the individuals to the incumbent or the challenger. The incumbent, supposedly having the ability to get more in private contributions, might well obtain in the private sector $700,000 in matchable contributions, whereas the less known challenger might have to be satisfied with obtaining the contributions from individual contributors.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. Let me finish my point. I understand that it takes $135,000 to trigger this procedure, but it is harder to work out the problem of mathematics with $135,000, I will say to the Senator, than with $100,000.

The challenger, receiving $100,000 as against the $700,000 received by the incumbent, that is the position he finds himself in before campaign reform, before public financing sheds its beneficent influence on the race. But at that time the Federal Government comes in, and presents to the incumbent $700,000 and to the challenger it presents a check for $100,000; so that, whereas the challenger was only $600,000 behind the incumbent before public financing enters into the picture, when public financing gets through with him, he is $1.2 million behind the incumbent.

So it is hard for the Senator from Alabama to see how the public financing aids the challenger. It may be that it is taking care of the incumbent just as this provision for $7.5 million for the various candidates for the nomination for the Presidency takes care of Members of the 93rd Congress.

So I believe that this amendment should be adopted. It would prevent the case of the incumbent, supposedly able to get larger sums in contributions than the challenger, receiving the large contributions and would put the incumbent and the challenger on exactly the same basis.

I might say to the distinguished Senator from Maryland (Mr. Mathias), after his campaign has proceeded up to a certain point, and certain contributions have been received in his race, that he put a $100 limit on contributions that he is to receive in his race for the Senate right now.

I notice that Representative VANN of Oregon is going to make a contribution or to make an expenditure. My hat is off to him, to a man who will receive no contributions and make no ex-
Mr. President, the distinguished former Senator from Delaware, Mr. John J. Williams, had a most distinguished career in the U. S. Senate for some 24 years. I believe he was such a high-minded and able Senator, that he was a man of integrity and nobility of purpose, that he was a model for many of us. I believe he was a true science of the U. S. Senate, and he retired from the Senate voluntarily at the peak of his career. I heard him once on the Senate floor, explain that he had proposed a constitutional amendment that no Member of Congress should take the oath of office as a Member of the Congress after he reached the age of 65.

In other words, if he were 64 at the time and took the oath of office, he might finish out his term; but after he reached his 65th birthday—it could be wrong on the date—he could have been 66 or 67, but I believe he was 65—he would no longer be eligible to commence a term in Congress. He said that while that amendment never did get anywhere in the Senate, even though it was not agreed to, he felt bound by its provisions inasmuch as he did not feel that he should ask the people of Delaware to return him to the Senate, as I feel certain they would have done overwhelmingly, and he retired. So, I believe he would have taken an objective view; he would not have had a biased view of an issue pending before the Senate.

But this great man, this conscience of the U. S. Senate, has written an article which appeared in the Reader's Digest in March 1974.

Mr. President, I think it is most unwise to have this article printed in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, former Senator Williams has made five suggestions as to reform of the election process. I believe that Members of the Senate might profit by reading them. He suggested that we have a plan to control campaign bankrolling. A man known for years as the conscience of the Senate proposes five essential steps to remove the for sale sign from the U. S. Government.

I have heard language like that on the floor of the Senate, that that was the status of affairs in this country. I would hate to think that were true. Let us see what he suggests. Possibly he has a public financing plan to suggest: I do not know how I would think he would when I first picked up the magazine and read the article. On reading the article, I find he does not make that suggestion. His first suggestion is to shorten the campaign:

Political campaigns cost so much, in part, because they last so long.

Well, the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. Wicker) had a plan to shorten the campaign. His amendment did many expenditures. I would be glad to vote for an amendment of that sort on this bill and would grant, were to be adopted and it became the law of the land.

So, limit contributions to $250 for the presidential nomination or the presidential general election or unit contributions to $100 in House and Senate primary races.

So, Mr. President, this would be a reform amendment. Public financing is not reform. That is just an added burden upon the taxpayer. That is all public financing is.

Does it help to clean up American politics and provide a system whereby $15 million could be spent by a candidate for the Democratic or Republican nomination for President, as much as half of it could be provided by the Federal Government? Put them on the same basis. They want to run, let them run. If they have the support, they will get the votes. If they have not the support, they will not. It is as simple as that.

It is not necessary for the American taxpayer to provide $7 1/2 million worth of hoopla and carnival type publicity. That is what it would be used for, what it will put on a big show. It is not necessary to spend that kind of money to present the issues to the American people.

Whoever gave the public finance people the idea that by making more money wasted, it will be wasted. But wasted it will be—we can count on that—because some candidates would never have had it so good as under public financing. I believe that amendment that no Member of Congress should take the oath of office as a Member of Congress after he reached the age of 65.

In other words, if he were 64 at the time and took the oath of office, he might finish out his term; but after he reached his 65th birthday—it could be wrong on the date: it could have been 66 or 67, but I believe he was 65—he would no longer be eligible to commence a term in Congress. other things, but I do believe Members of the Senate might be willing to vote for some of them. As a matter of fact, I believe last year we did pass a bill to shorten the campaign by providing the primary must be held closer to the time of the election. That was a good measure, but also in the House and Senate races, campaigns should be shortened. They last too long. There is too much apathy and there is too much boredom, number. So it seems to me only fair that what is not what this bill does. This bill

Then, skipping ahead, and the entire article will be printed in the Record, he goes on to say:

Mr. President, I support that that is what the amendment I have offered, No. 1058, would do. It would make small contributions the backbone of political financing.

While reducing the costs of campaigns—

He is talking about suggestions he has made that would reduce the cost of campaigns. I do not see that this bill would reduce any costs.

Make small contributions the backbone of political financing. While reducing the costs of campaigns, we should endeavor to spread the legitimate costs that do remain among as many citizens as possible.

So, Mr. President, I have proposed a limitation for House and Senate races of $100. Say a candidate got 2,000 individ-

That is over 10 times what the Senator from Alabama would spend in the primary this year in his home State. But all he would have to do would be to get 2,000 people to make a contribution of $100, and he would have a fund of $200,000, much that with another $200,000, that would provide $400,000 for a candidate in a primary.

That is certainly not beyond the realm of the possible or likelihood that this provision, if adopted, would change the political climate of this country by putting campaign financing in the hands of people who would contribute $100 or $250 to Senate and $250 or less in Presidential races, still carrying forward the matching feature.

If this amendment were adopted, we could follow it with an amendment that would cut the 15 cents per person of voting age down to 10 cents per person of voting age in the general election, and in the primary cut it down to 7½ cents from the 10 cents per person of voting age.

SENIOR WILLIAMS said, and I believe this is the best at the five suggestions that he made:

Make small contributions the backbone of political financing.

That is not what this bill does. This bill permits contributions of up to $3,000 per person. For a man and his wife, it would be $6,000, and I daresay they would find other ways to make $5,000 contributions.

Technically, I want law makes it illegal for anyone to give a candidate more than $5,000. However, a donor may contribute to unlimited numbers of local committees established solely to funnel money to a candidate.

As I pointed out at the start of my remarks—

Thus, big contributors continue to supply a disproportionate share of campaign funds.

I believe if the word ever got around in the business community, they would be being financed by people who could not contribute more than $250 to a presidential race, and $100 to a race for the Senate or the House, we would have a whole lot more interest being taken in our political campaigns and in our election process and in the operation of government generally. The people would feel that they have an interest in a part of the election process.

Mr. President, I believe this amendment is an amendment that should receive widespread support throughout the country. It might make the political climate of this country by putting campaign financing in the hands of people who would contribute $100 or $250 to Senate and $250 or less in Presidential races, still carrying forward the matching feature.

It might make the political climate of this country by putting campaign financing in the hands of people who would contribute $100 or $250 to Senate and $250 or less in Presidential races, still carrying forward the matching feature.

If this amendment were adopted, we could follow it with an amendment that would cut the 15 cents per person of voting age down to 10 cents per person of voting age in the general election, and in the primary cut it down to 7½ cents from the 10 cents per person of voting age.

SENIOR WILLIAMS said, and I believe this is the best at the five suggestions that he made:

Make small contributions the backbone of political financing.

That is not what this bill does. This bill permits contributions of up to $3,000 per person. For a man and his wife, it would be $6,000, and I daresay they would find other ways to make $5,000 contributions.

Technically, I want law makes it illegal for anyone to give a candidate more than $5,000. However, a donor may contribute to unlimited numbers of local committees established solely to funnel money to a candidate.

As I pointed out at the start of my remarks—

Thus, big contributors continue to supply a disproportionate share of campaign funds.

I believe if the word ever got around in the business community, they would be being financed by people who could not contribute more than $250 to a presidential race, and $100 to a race for the Senate or the House, we would have a whole lot more interest being taken in our political campaigns and in our election process and in the operation of government generally. The people would feel that they have an interest in a part of the election process.

Mr. President, I believe this amendment is an amendment that should receive widespread support throughout the country. It might make the political climate of this country by putting campaign financing in the hands of people who would contribute $100 or $250 to Senate and $250 or less in Presidential races, still carrying forward the matching feature.

If this amendment were adopted, we could follow it with an amendment that would cut the 15 cents per person of voting age down to 10 cents per person of voting age in the general election, and in the primary cut it down to 7½ cents from the 10 cents per person of voting age.
a most important amendment and one that should receive the careful consideration of all Members of the Senate. I only wish that more Senators were present to hear this matter being discussed. Let us read on: recognizing that a candidate should not become beholden to a contributor; and that a plan which would make any substantial public contributions would be a much more effective deterrent than just increasing the income tax.

That reminds me, Mr. President, of something the Post editorialist had to say about this plan. They did not think much of the primary plan. Let us see what they said. I do not usually quote the Washington Post. However, I think their comment here is rather interesting. This is from the lead editorial of March 26, speaking of S. 372, a bill which I voted for in the Senate, as did most Senators, since the bill passed by a vote of 53 to 0.

And there is much more important point. In the general elections, if we do deprive the people of their right to make contributions, we would just say that the taxpayer is going to pay it all and the people do not have to participate and that we do not need their money. How much interest is a member of the public going to have in that then?

That is another good point. In areas that are predominantly Democratic or Democratic candidates of the less-favored party would receive tax funds vastly disproportionate to their popular support.

That is an even better point. In areas that are predominantly Democratic or Republican, candidates of the less-favored party would receive tax funds vastly disproportionate to their popular support.

Incidentally, that has been the system of Federal programs in the country. They start out small. There is or a program—I will not say which one it was—that was put aside as an appropriations bill and it grew until it was an appropriations bill and I heard Senators discussing it. I believe they put in some $40 million in this particular program.

In a matter of some 6 or 7 years, it had increased to $1 billion. It was just put as an afterthought on an appropriation bill. So that could well—certainly not to that extent, but an increase in the program would certainly come about. They are already talking about doubling the amount of the federal subsidy to a billion dollars; and it was just put on as an afterthought on an appropriation bill.

That is what the Washington Post thinks about this question of the primaries.

I continue to read from the editorial:

Injecting even partial public funding into this process, without rationalizing it in any other way, if practiced in the congressional primaries, they are so varied in size, cost and significance among the states that no single amount of public support seems justifiable without much more careful thought.

So I say, "Amen" to that phase of the editorial from the Washington Post.

Mr. President, I was reminded of that editorial by the article written by former Senator Williams.

I read again from the article by former Senator Williams:

That is the very reason why I think the Washington Post and Senator Williams are right.

I notice that the chairman is making some notes from time to time. I would like, at some later date, to be informed as to just when a campaign gets started and when the limit of overall expenditures starts applying.

As an alternative to straight federal financing, I think we should adopt an idea first advocated by President Kennedy. His objective is to stimulate small contributions, which would be available as an afterthought to a man earning $100,000 a year each contributed $50, exactly the same as if a man earning $100,000 a year each contributed $50, the two of them would be treated equally—each would receive a tax deduction of $150.

Well, that is a little higher than I feel they should do, but I am moving in the right direction, anyway. That is the way that plan. And I understand that the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin), joined by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Baxtor), on tomorrow will offer an amendment that would strike title I and substitute in lieu thereof a provision enlarging on the amount of the credit; it might be this very same figure—I rather believe it is—of $300.

Simultaneously, to discourage a contribution, Congress should bar a candidate from receiving money through more than one committee—

I think that is certainly a step in the right direction. Instead of having 200 or 300 committees, just have one. Just have one, who or book has to be audited. Just have one committee, so that these contributions cannot be split up and lost sight of, and come within the gift tax exemption. I think that is fine, to have only one committee.

There is another point. Congress should bar a candidate from receiving money through more than one committee and prohibit anyone from contributing more than $300—and with stiff tax penalties and jail terms for those caught cheating. Candidates with the spontaneity, truly voluntary support of many small contributors would be the most likely to produce the right political representation for all the people.

Item No. 5, suggested by Senator Williams:

Enforce the campaign-funding laws. If properly enforced, existing statutes are, by and large, adequate to do the work. Yet the邢台 instances of dishonesty that will always be with us. Thus, no new laws were necessary during the past two years to prosecute former Vice President Spiro T.
Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the Congressional Digest of February 1974 contains an interesting history of the public financing legislation, beginning on page 35. The foreword points out:

Viewed by some Members of the Congress as the most complex subject which the newly-convoked Second Session is likely to face is that of how U.S. election campaigns are financed. One aspect of the subject which will receive particular attention is whether, as some Senators and Representatives have proposed, some system should be adopted of using Federal tax revenues to provide significant financing to campaigns for Congress and for the President.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have this article, beginning on page 35, and its conclusion, printed in the Record.

Of these five suggestions, not a single one of them calls for public financing of elections in the manner provided by this bill. He does suggest several points that would allow individual taxpayers for their contributions, and he does advocate requiring free broadcasts over television and radio at times.

Mr. President, the Rules Committee has provided a more valuable paper indicating the proposed candidates' expenditure limitations on the U.S. population figures as of July 1, 1973. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

financed. One aspect of the subject which will receive particular attention is whether, as some representatives have proposed, some system should be adopted of using Federal tax revenues to provide significant financing to campaigns for Congress and the Presidency.

Over the years since 1910 (see page 36), Congress has enacted a number of laws seeking to control campaign financing. The 93rd Congress took several far-reaching actions in this regard, passing in 1971 the so-called "Checkoff Act," a bill providing for public campaign financing and—effective in 1972—a comprehensive "Federal Elections Campaign Act" (see page 36 for more on campaign financing, among other things, detailed disclosure of both contributions to and expenditures by candidates for Federal office).

Notwithstanding these developments, efforts have been mounted in the present 93rd Congress to legislate further in the area of campaign financing. As will be seen in the article on page 40, pending before both House and Senate are a number of bills touching upon diverse areas of campaign financing and—effective in 1972—a comprehensive "Federal Elections Campaign Act" (see page 36 for more on campaign financing, among other things, detailed disclosure of both contributions to and expenditures by candidates for Federal office).

There is, of course, no magic solution to the problem of campaign financing. What we need is the kind of comprehensive financing reform that can be brought about by a coordinated effort to reform campaign financing. It is evident that the issue of campaign financing is one of the most pressing concerns of our democratic process by far. The public's lack of faith in our political system is based in part on the perception that political contributions are used to influence the outcome of elections. This perception is reinforced by the frequent news reports of political corruption and the influence of money on government decisions. It is essential that we take action to address this issue in order to restore public confidence in our political system.

There is a need for a comprehensive reform of campaign financing laws that would place limits on contributions to political campaigns and create a system of public financing to ensure that all candidates have a realistic chance of winning an election. This would help to ensure that the will of the people is represented in government and that our political system is accountable to the public.

In conclusion, it is clear that there is a need for comprehensive campaign financing reform. The issue is too important to ignore, and we must take action to address it in order to restore public confidence in our political system. We must work together to create a system of public financing that is fair, transparent, and effective.
April 2, 1974

S 5077

4. Make small contributors the backbone of political financing. While reducing the costs of campaign finance, we should spread the legitimate costs that do remain among as many citizens as possible. Technical solutions, such as the idea of pre-election loans, will not have the desired effect unless they are backed by voter commitment. For this reason, I think we should adopt an idea that big contributors stop using their own money to promote politicians. By the same token, we should stop granting tax-funds to the parties. Moreover, I think that candidates should not become beholden to a comparatively few large donors, Congress is currently considering legislation to have the federal government finance national election campaigns for national office. Worthy as the aims of this proposal are, I think we should adopt an idea that would have the effect of making campaigns more democratic, more accessible to the people. Guaranteed millions of dollars from the public treasury, a party would pursue extremist or outworn aims year after year without any need for candidates to spend and by restricting individual permissible campaign expenditures and overhead, all payroles, all printing, all stationery, all telephones, all automobile expense—nothing at all on any of that. So there should be a limit on that. I am glad that the present bill does not increase this overall amount to—I say increase it—10 cents per person of voting age, I believe, with more than 60 percent of it going to the media and 40 percent to other forms of expenditures. But he pointed out that this leaves so many areas for expenditure that are not limited, as in all the limits on these forms of advertising. I would prefer to have the 10 cents per person of voting age, but the Rules Committee has raised this up to 15 cents per person of voting age in a general election and 10 cents in the primary. This Senate bill adds the primaries, the House and Senate primaries. They were not covered in the original rider that was offered here last year and that failed of passage.

So the present law is inadequate; and the Senate last year, realizing that fact, passed a bill on July 30, 1973, by a vote of 82 to 8 and sent it to the House, where it was defeated in conference. The new limits on campaign contributions to $3,000. It provided that no cash contributions in excess of $50 could be made. A separate election commission was set up. All these were very unconstructive proposals; and in time, I daresay, the House will act on this measure and send it back to the Senate.

The significant feature of S. 372 was that it provided for financing Federal elections in the private sector. No mention was made of public financing whatsoever. No extension of what we already have was provided for. As a matter of fact, the Senate bill was still under consideration in the Senate, defeated a public financing amendment by a vote, I believe, of 52 to 40. It defeated the Eccles-Kennedy amendment at that time, which provided public financing. That was turned down; and a pure bill—that is, a bill not infected with the public financing feature—went over to the House.

Now, Mr. President, this whole theory has been changed. No longer, apparently, do some Senators want to keep financing all campaigns in the private sector. They want to add public financing. They want

Mr. SYMINGTON. Then the chances are there will be no vote today?

Mr. ALLEN. I believe we need to vote on this tomorrow.
to turn this bill for Federal campaign financing over to the public Treasury. That is their answer to the issues, if any, of Watergate.

Reform the procedure? Greatly restrict contributions and expenditures? Provide for full disclosure? Is that enough? You have to hand the bill to the taxpayer. You have to let the taxpayer pick up the bill. If that is the answer to Watergate, if that is all the ingenuity and resourcefulness the Senate has, to present this multihundred million dollar bill to the taxpayer, we do not have too much originality.

When the Watergate Committee was set up some 15 months ago or so, the resolution provided that the committee would investigate these various happenings and make recommendations to the Senate as to what changes should be made in the election procedure. They are going to come out with a report, either this month or next month, making recommendations. I do not believe anyone has to be a seer or a soothsayer to predict that their recommendations are not going to embody any public financing proposals. Why do I say that? It is not that I am a member of the committee. It is not that I have made inquiry as to what recommendations they are going to make. All one need do is to check the votes of the Senators on the Watergate Committee. By checking the votes closely, or just casually, one will find that five of the seven members do not favor public financing. They believe that there are better answers to our problems, and better solutions than that, and I agree with them. They are voting against these public financing provisions, because they know that is not a true reform. If you reform something, you improve it, you change it for the better, and you do not just give up and say, "Let the taxpayer pay the bill."

I note that pending at this time are amendments to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Evory) and the distinguished Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Baxter) to knock out titles I, the pay-as-you-go feature, and to substitute in lieu thereof a tax credit provision allowing the taxpayer a credit on his political contribution. It may be asked, Why not just subsidize the election? This would give the taxpayer the right to funnel his own funds to such candidates as he sees fit. The plan embraced in this bill, S. 3044, requires the taxpayer to pay for the campaign of candidates with whose views and with whose philosophy he is in entire disagreement.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ALLEN. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. TOWER. The 24th amendment prohibits the imposition of a poll tax or the payment of any other tax as a qualification for voting. I wonder what the Senator might think of perhaps amending the Constitution and applying the user theory here, to the extent that every voter pays a fee and that fee is used to provide the seed for public funding of the campaign. In that way the people who do not choose to vote or participate will not get soaked for the expense of the campaign.

Mr. ALLEN. That is an interesting proposal, but I do not think I would submit such a proposal or be in favor of it.

Mr. TOWER. I doubt that I would either, but it seems to me that would be a fair way, rather than to take money from the general revenues of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. It may be, but it does not offer too much appeal to me.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield when he completes his thoughts?

Mr. ALLEN. That will take quite a while.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the Senator yield now?

Mr. ALLEN. I am delighted to yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, understand the Senator from Alabama does not desire to vote on his amendment tonight.

Mr. ALLEN. That is the request made by the Senator from Alabama; that it be voted on tomorrow.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Would the Senator care to suggest a time?

Mr. ALLEN. I have no suggestion at all; any time the distinguished majority leader would suggest.

Mr. MANSFIELD. How about 12:30 p.m. tomorrow?

Mr. ALLEN. That is all right, or an earlier time.

Mr. MANSFIELD. How about 12 o'clock noon?

Mr. ALLEN. That suits me.

Mr. MANSFIELD. We will come in at 11 a.m. I wonder if the Senator, in view of the informal agreement just made, would consider the possibility of continuing his remarks tomorrow in the free period left, so the distinguished Senator from Delaware (Mr. Rorr) could offer his amendment this afternoon, on which amendment there is a time limitation.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no objection. I wonder if the distinguished majority leader would incorporate in his request a little time for further discussion on when we might possibly have a greater number of Senators present.

Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator from Montana wishes to ask if the Chair what Senators have been recognized under special orders for tomorrow, if any.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are no special orders for the recognition of Senators tomorrow.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 11 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator for his remarks made in the first half of his statement about the Senator from Alabama. I appreciate his kindness in that regard; I offer no thanks for his adverse motion.
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE

April 2, 1974

Mr. MANSFIELD. I am sure that the Senator from Alabama was not caught by surprise.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at this time to ask for the yeas and nays on the Allen amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is before us.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I ask for the yeas and nays on the Allen amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? There is a sufficient second. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, again my thanks to the distinguished Senator from Alabama.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum pending the arrival of the distinguished Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ALLEN. May I first yield the floor?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to ask the distinguished Senator from Montana if in his unanimous-consent request he asks that the pending amendment be set aside so that there can be a discussion of the amendment by the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I did not. I appreciate the suggestion of the Chair. I make that suggestion at this time. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Now, Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is still the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I take it upon myself, with the approval of the acting Republican leader, to ask unanimous consent that the Roth amendment be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

The amendment is as follows:

TITLE VI—MAILING OF CAMPAIGN MATERIAL DEFINITIONS

Sec. 601. For the purpose of this title—
(1) "candidate" means any legally qualified candidate for election who (A) meets the qualifications prescribed by the applicable State law for the office for which he is a candidate; and (B) is eligible under applicable State law to be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors;

(2) "Federal office" means the office of Senator or Representative;

(3) "Representative" means a Member of the House of Representatives, the Resident Commissioner from the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the delegate from the District of Columbia, Guam, and the Virgin Islands;

(4) "general election" means any regularly scheduled or special election held for the purpose of electing a candidate to Federal office; and

(5) "State" means each State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States.

AUTHORIZATION

Sec. 602. (a) Each candidate for election to a Federal office in a general election is authorized to make three mailings of his campaign material, free of postage, to persons registered to vote—

(1) in the case of a candidate for election as Senator, in the State in which he seeks election; and

(2) in the case of a candidate for election as a Representative, in the district in which he seeks election.

(b) Campaign material of such a candidate may be mailed free of postage only if the material—

(1) is mailed not earlier than sixty days preceding the date of the general election in which the candidate seeks election;

(2) bears, or is accompanied by, a return address in the upper right-hand corner the words "Campaign Material"; and

(3) sent to each registered voter each mailing does not exceed sixteen ounces.

(c) There are authorized to be appropriated to the United States Postal Service an amount equal to the amounts which would have been paid on the campaign material mailed in accordance with this section if this section had not been enacted. In determining such amount, the campaign material shall be considered mailed by a qualified nonprofit organization under section 4402(b) of title 39, United States Code, as such section, existed on August 11, 1970.

LIMITING USE OF FRANKED MAIL

Sec. 603. Section 3201(a)(5)(D) of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "or general"; and

(2) by inserting immediately after "run-off", the following: "and less than one hundred and twenty days immediately before the date of a general election (whether regular, special, or run-off)".

PROHIBITION AGAINST OTHER MAILINGS

Sec. 604. (a) Except as authorized by section 3202, no candidate for Federal office shall make a mass mailing of his campaign material less than one hundred and twenty days immediately before the date of a general election (whether regular, special, or run-off) in which he is a candidate.

(b) As used in this section, the term "mass mailing" means any mailing which the content of which is substantially identical but shall not apply to mailings—

(1) which are in direct response to inquiries or requests from the persons to whom the material is mailed; or

(2) of news releases to the communications media.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum without the time being taken out of anyone's time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER TO LAY UNFINISHED BUSINESS BEFORE THE SENATE TOMORROW

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow the unfinished business be laid before the Senate at the conclusion of the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, without the time being taken out of anyone's time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZATION FOR COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND PUBLIC WELFARE TO FILE REPORT ON S. 3203 UNTIL MIDNIGHT TONIGHT

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report by the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare on S. 3203, to amend the National Labor Relations Act, may be filed by midnight tonight.
The PRESEDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT
AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to public finance of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. ROTI obtained the floor.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I ask unanimous consent that the time on the Senator's amendment run from the time of the recognition of the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. ROTI. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1121.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is already before the Senate. Mr. ROTI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Ray Jacobsen, of my staff, be permitted the privilege of the floor during the consideration and votes on my pending amendment and others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROTI. Mr. President, I am today offering the first in a series of amendments which I plan to offer to S. 3044, the Federal Elections Campaign Act Amendments of 1974.

Before proceeding to explain this amendment, however, I am compelled to state my general views concerning campaign reform on which each of these amendments is based.

Without a doubt, there must be a reform of the current methods of conducting and financing political campaigns. These campaigns are too long, they are too expensive, they force a potential candidate to raise large amounts of money to purchase television time, make mass mailings, or travel throughout the Nation, his State, or his district.

The bill now under consideration, S. 3044, corrects several of the abuses associated with improper campaign activities. It limits the amount of money which any candidate can expend on behalf of his campaign. It limits the amount of funds which any particular person can contribute to a candidate's campaign. It requires each candidate to disclose the identity of his contributors and the amounts received by each donor. Moreover, an independent Federal Election Commission will be created by this bill to enforce and regulate the financing and disclosure requirements of the 1971 Election Act and the penalties for violating these provisions have been increased.

Yet, in addition to these salutary provisions, S. 3044 goes one step further by authorizing the use of Federal funds to pay the costs of all future campaigns for Federal office. I have opposed the concept of "public financing" because I believe it fundamentally changes the exchange in campaign financing which diminishes each citizen's role in the political process.

As an alternative to "public financing," I have introduced legislation to allow each taxpayer to take a 50 percent tax credit for a political contribution of $150 by a single taxpayer or $300 on a joint return.

It has been estimated that public financing would cost $260 million in a Presidential election year while the Treasury Department says my tax credit approach will cost only $152 million. Through a combination of my proposal and the present dollar checkoff, it is my estimate that over $500 million will be available for the financing of all Federal elections in 1976.

I intend to present this proposal to the Senate Finance Committee when the Committee considers the rest of the tax-related provisions of S. 3344.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the "public financing" provisions of S. 3044, in reality, place more, rather than less, emphasis on the use of money in political campaigns.

In addition, these provisions may tend to separate the candidate from his constituency. For, once a candidate learns that he can tap the Federal Treasury for his campaign funds, he will no longer be encouraged to seek the maximum amount of personal contact with prospective voters.

Instead of carrying his campaign to the people through personal appearances or on television debates, a candidate will be encouraged to allow an elite group of specialists—such as "campaign consultants"—to manage his campaign by "packaging" the candidate through use of the latest technological techniques.

In the future, slick, well-rehearsed "spot" announcements will become even more prevalent once "public financing" becomes law.

In order to give each citizen the knowledge which is a prerequisite to an informed exercise of the right to vote, I am offering two amendments to the Federal Elections Campaign Act.

One amendment will amend the Communications Act of 1934 to direct the Federal Communications Commission to develop regulations to require television licensees to grant free air time, on an equitable basis, to candidates for Federal office. This will help equalize campaign resources.

The second amendment—and the one which I am today submitting for the Senate's consideration—will permit all candidates for congressional office, whether incumbent or challenger, to mail, at Government expense, three mass mailings of their campaign material to their potential constituents in the 60 days prior to an election.

In exchange for the authorization to make three mass mailings during the final 60 days of the campaign period, all congressional candidates will be prohibited from making any mass mailings of their campaign literature within the 120 days immediately preceding a general election day. This provision is in accordance with S. 343, the bill presented by Senator Frahm which was passed by the Senate last June which would shorten the campaign period to approximately 8 weeks.

Included in my amendment is a change in the laws governing the use of the franking privilege by Members of Congress. At present, no Member of Congress can make a mass mailing to his constituents during the 30 days before a general election in which he is a candidate. My amendment extends this time period to 120 days in order to place both an incumbent and a challenger on equal terms.

As used in my amendment, the term "mass mailings" includes literature, such as newsletters, which are substantially identical in appearance or content. It excludes mailings which are in response to persons who have written to the candidate during the campaign period. In addition the term does not include news releases sent by the candidate to the members of the press.

Mr. President, by giving each candidate the opportunity to mail, without postal charges, these mass mailings to voters, each candidate will be encouraged to present his or her views to those whom they seek to represent without incurring the large postage costs which are associated with large-scale mailings. By adopting this amendment, I believe the Senate will have made a substantial contribution toward reforming our present methods of campaigning for Federal office. I urge the Senate to adopt this amendment.

Mr. FELL. Mr. President, I recognize the objective of the Senator from Delaware. It is an excellent objective. I recognize also his thinking here, that it would eliminate abuses, while I feel compelled to oppose it. However, I believe the principal cost of these mass mailings of this sort to every registrant is not substantial and should not be paid for by the public Treasury. It actually could amount to more than the present 10-cent allowance in a print mailing in a general election. We are just checking now with the Post Office for the actual figures as to what it would cost. I think these are expenses that should be properly borne by the candidates and committees. And the way to handle it is to make sure that the frank is not abused. And this we have done by stretching out the present 30-day prohibition to make it 60 days. Those are my reasons for objecting to the Senator's amendment.

For that reason and recognizing the objective and the merits of the Senator's arguments, I feel compelled to oppose the amendment.

Mr. ROTI. Mr. President, I would like to make a few observations with respect to my amendment.

As I stated, what I would like to see done is a deemphasis of money in the campaign rather than an emphasis on funds.

Of course, I feel that is the basic thrust and one of the basic criticisms that can be made about public financing and that this is what we are really saying is
Mr. ROTH. That is not necessarily exactly what the out-of-pocket cost to the Government would be. Mr. PELL. We have not been able to ascertain without Uncle Sam's reputation. I cannot believe that he would charge many times the cost of delivery. Perhaps he makes a little profit. Mr. ROTH. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Delaware has 3 minutes plus.

Mr. PELL. I am not able to make one further observation. It seems to me that if we are willing to pay unlimited postage for incumbents, as we are—every Member of this body as well as every Member of the House of Representatives has no limit on the number of mass mailings he is permitted to make—this proposal would be well worth the cost to help the election process as well as to de-emphasize the need of money. I agree that while it would involve a certain amount of cost to the Federal Government, it seems to me that we can justify it for our own use during our own campaign, it is justifiable as well during the campaign period.

Mr. PELL. Senator, will the President yield for a question?

Mr. ROTH. I am happy to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. PELL. We have not been able to ascertain without Uncle Sam's reputation. I cannot believe that he would charge many times the cost of delivery. Perhaps he makes a little profit. Mr. ROTH. President, how much time do I have remaining?

Mr. PELL. Senator, will the President yield for a question?

Mr. ROTH. I am happy to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.
I want to compliment the Senator from Delaware (Mr. Roth) for offering the amendment. I hope that my colleagues will vote in favor of it.

Mr. PELL, Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished senior colleague, Mr. PASTORE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIDEN). The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, If I thought for 1 minute, without trying to impugn the motives of any sponsor of an amendment, that those sponsoring these amendments were amenable to the idea, the philosophy, and the ideology of public financing, I would be more reluctant to do what I intend to do, and that is to move that this amendment be tabled.

Mr. President, what we are doing here is imposing on the Postal Service. The Postal Service is more or less, a private institution today. Here we are, bringing up all these amendments in a debate that is fast becoming a charade to the people of this country, a charade enacted by these so-called dignitaries being sponsored by those who will vote against public financing.

Financing is the name of the game insofar as this bill is concerned. So that when the momentum comes my way, Mr. President, I am going to move that this amendment be placed on the table because I am afraid, with all the pressing problems that confront the people of this country today, here we are in the Senate, with the price of meat going up, with the price of food going up, and we are in this inflationary spiral—why today I heard from my own Governor who told me that the fuel adjustment will cost the consumers of Rhode Island one third additionally on their heating bills. But here we are, fusing around whether we will have two mailings, or three mailings, on a bill that is not going to go anywhere once we pass it in the Senate. I think it is a wasteful use of our time to go on an advantageous purpose. After all, if this Congress is against public financing, let us stand up and vote against it: If we are for it, then let us vote for it. But we are beginning to get it into practice it with how the days go by, it began to look more like a siege.

These people who sit up in the galleries and watch us, will look down on this very austere body and to the last breath of their survival, they will say, "What are you doing down there? You are acting like a bunch of schoolboys."

I have been at this thing for now and we are going nowhere—and we are going nowhere pretty fast. I say, if we are for public financing, let us say so. If we are against it, then let us say so. Let us have it done with, regardless of how we decide it—it makes no difference to me. But we get up here and say we should do this, and then we should do that, and then we should do the other thing. We passed a similar bill a short time ago. It is lingering and languishing over in the House of Representatives. It will never see the light of day. Now we come along with this one. It will never see the light of day, either.

I say, we have got the no-fault insurance bill to consider, have we not? I say to my good friend, the distinguished Senator from Washington (Mr. Magnuson), that this is a bill which is very important to every person in this country. We have got a lot to do in education. There are many other pressing problems that will come before the Senate.

I say, it is time to act like legislators and stop kidding ourselves, because the people of this country are not buying this charade for one moment.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island yield?

Mr. PASTORE. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN. Has the Senator from Rhode Island just made a very fine argument for drawing the bill down and let us proceed to other matters more important?

Mr. PASTORE. I do not want to draw down the big issue, which is, are we for or not for public financing? Let us face it. That is what this bill is intended to do. That is the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIDEN). All those now expired. Mr. PASTORE, Mr. President, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. Pastore) to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Delaware (Mr. Roth).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeds to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD of West Virginia, I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin), Senator from Arkansas (Mr. Fulbright), Senator from Florida (Mr. Cannon), Senator from Indiana (Mr. Hartke), Senator from Iowa (Mr. Hickenlooper), Senator from Georgia (Mr. Talmadge), and Senator from California (Mr. Tunney) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Huddleston), is absent on official business.

Mr. GURNEY, I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Brock), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Hatfield), and the Senator from Maryland (Mr. Mathias) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. William I. Scott), is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. Allen), is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Hatfield), would vote "yea.

The result was announced—yeas 55, nays 32, as follows:

Abourezk
Hathaway
Muskie
Bartlett
Hollings
Nelson
Bayh
Humphrey
Pastore
Bodman
Inouye

So Mr. Pastore's motion to table Mr. Rorrs amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PECARY, Mr. President, we now have the opportunity to debate and vote in the Senate on the type of financing of campaigns that we think best serves the interests of this country.

In studying this issue I keep three fundamental objectives in mind: First, Elections should be won and lost on the relative merits of the candidates and their positions, not on the basis of who can raise and spend the most campaign funds;

Second, No contributor should be in a position to extract special treatment from an office-holder;

Third, Additional safeguards are needed to prevent self-enrichment through the improper use of public office.

I favor realistic, enforceable limits on campaign spending with insurance that credible challengers have a fair chance to obtain campaign funds. In my own case in 1972, committees for my reelection campaign raised and spent a total of $1,710,517, including $228,160 raised and spent prior to April 7, 1972, when the provisions of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 became effective. This sum of money, though $1,000,000 less than a senatorial campaign for reelection also conducted in 1972 in a State of comparable population, still enabled me to far outspend my opponent in the 1972 Illinois Senate race, leaving him at a substantial disadvantage in getting his message across.

The Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974, S. 3044, currently being debated in the Senate, would limit a Senatorial candidate in Illinois to $756,801 in the primary and $1,135,200 in the general election in 1974 for a total of $1,892,000. If this expenditure ceiling had been in effect in 1972, I would have been under the allowable spending total by $191,783.

I am aware that campaigns in other States may have been over the new proposed limits as they were more costly per capita due to such factors as highly contested primary, the number of media markets, the viability of the State party organizations, and so forth, so Illinois may not be the best example of the effects of S. 3644 in politics in the future. However, I think Illinois is an instructive example.

Therefore, Mr. President, I have come to the conclusion that we need responsible legislation on campaign spending that will make the system fair for all who seek public office and a main concern of ours must be equity for the challenger.

The age of my views on the subject of campaign spending, Mr. President, I am asking unanimous consent that a speech I delivered before the Money/Politics in Washington on February 27 be printed in the Record at this point.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

KEYNOTE ADDRESS BY SENATOR CHARLES H. PERCY

FEBRUARY 27, 1974.

I'm not sure that it's fair to ask me to cover the subject of money—cash—politics—in the brief time allotted. Alice Roosevelt Longworth, who is sharper than the rest of us, was talking about money and politics for 90 years, and even she has barely dented the subject. Add gasoline lines, the Red Sox and next year's money and politics, and you encompass 90 percent of the conversation in Washington on any given night.

The temptation and consequences of money in politics have been with us for a long time. While Washington's army starred at Valley Forge, Samuel Chase, a signer of the Declaration of Independence and later Chief Justice of the United States, tried to convince Congress on the hazards of inside information. Andrew Jackson's Postmaster General was forced from office for accepting kickbacks in awarding contracts for postal deliveries. An administration that had to remove his Secretary of War, Simon Cameron, who had arranged military contracts according to which he and his friends had an interest.

Two things, I suspect, have been responsible for the dilemma of money in politics from a nuisance into a catastrophe:

1) Elected officials now often play the decisive role in both our personal and institutional financial affairs. If, for example, government did not have the power to influence milk prices and milk profits, it is doubtful that we would be concerned with the propriety of a political "milk fund" today.

2) The costs of gaining public office have increased astronomically. In 1956, it cost Dwight Eisenhower some $60 million to campaign successfully for re-election to the presidency; in 1972, Richard Nixon spent a staggering $60 million to gain the same thing.

It has become expensive to run for almost any kind of public office, but staggering expenses to run for the presidency.

This year, as most of you know, I am exploring the feasibility of a '76 presidential race of my own. My proposed '74 budget for this limited exploratory effort is $200,000—a puny amount compared with the cost of recent full-scale campaigns, but nonetheless an enormously expensive effort—especially for those who have to raise it.

As more and more money oozes into the system, it is probably inevitable that the irresistibly seductive lure of so much cash would one day take its toll. And in 1972, it did finally.

Today, I am speaking of a situation in which a candidate who is paying a dear price for the perversion of money and power we call Watergate; we all pay penalties, Democrats, big business, politicians at every level—and especially those of us in Congress. The entire country is paying a telling price in national self-esteem.

In a way, unhappily, we all deserve to pay. For too long, too often we turned away from obvious abuses of money in American politics.

When John Kennedy won Illinois' electoral votes in 1960 on the basis of some widely disputed returns from Chicago, much of the country winked at the triumph of good old-fashioned machine politics.

In 1972, when burglars connected to the Nixon campaign were apprehended in the frequent and costly perjury, I have talked about money and politics, and so have all who are concerned about the triumph of money over principle in politics.

I have held in a blind trust, much of the country—including most of the media—dismissed with a shrug the enormous illegalities Nixon had been completely so cynical about politics and politicians, in fact, that spying and break-ins were widely sampled as commonplace facets of campaign strategy.

I, for one, do not believe they are commonplace facets of the corrupting influence of big money in politics unquestionably is. If ever we are to reform the rickety apparatus which supposedly regulates the interaction of money and politics, surely this is the moment. In the aftermath of Watergate, public attention and concern at last are focused on the questions of what we must act now, for if not now, then when?

The trouble is that while the malady is obvious, the cure is not. That is one reason I believe this conference is so timely and important.

In the weeks just ahead, Congress will be dealing with highly complex legislative initiatives in this area, some of which would reaffirm our political landscape. This is particularly true of taxpayer-financed federal election campaigns, which Common Cause and others have assumed to be commonplace at all, but the corrupting influence we all know so well.

It is the relative merits of the candidates and their qualifications, not now, then when? one of their most cant disclosures. If we fail to act this time, we shall richly deserve public rejection of the political class which will have brought America's political system to its knees.

Many national institutions are on trial today, some literally, some figuratively. So, too, Congress stands at the bar of public opinion as once again we assume responsibility for policing ourselves, a role we have performed with minimal distinction in the past.

Perhaps it has always been the case, but one of the roadblocks to genuine political reform is that those who play the rules of the game are hardly disinterested spectators; one assumes the Redskinks would have been dead to the Supreme Court if, only George Allen had been the referente.

My hope is that time will test the effectiveness of this year, if only George Allen had been the referente.

I hope it is that time, we will look beyond our self-interest to the public interest. The country is understandably demoralized. Americans need a clear sign that their elected representatives remain capable of actually doing something with the given national problem. If we fail this time, we shall richly deserve the election-day consequences which are almost sure to follow.

Ultimately, of course, even the best legislation can not by itself stop pay-offs, unreported contributions, padded ambassadorships, laundered money, and all the other shoddy political rip-offs to which America has become so acclimatized. But legislation which will prevent fast and loose money from further perverting the political process; that's one option. Of its four-fifths, the contempt we already have earned by perpetuating the toothless guidelines which govern money in politics now.

Many national institutions are on trial today, some literally, some figuratively. So, too, Congress stands at the bar of public opinion as once again we assume responsibility for policing ourselves, a role we have performed with minimal distinction in the past.

Perhaps it has always been the case, but one of the roadblocks to genuine political reform is that those who play the rules of the game are hardly disinterested spectators; one assumes the Redskinks would have been dead to the Supreme Court if, only George Allen had been the referente.

My hope is that time will test the effectiveness of this year, if only George Allen had been the referente.

I hope it is that time, we will look beyond our self-interest to the public interest. The country is understandably demoralized. Americans need a clear sign that their elected representatives remain capable of actually doing something with the given national problem. If we fail this time, we shall richly deserve the election-day consequences which are almost sure to follow.

Ultimately, of course, even the best legislation can not by itself stop pay-offs, unreported contributions, padded ambassadorships, laundered money, and all the other shoddy political rip-offs to which America has become so acclimatized. But legislation which will prevent fast and loose money from further perverting the political process; that's one option. Of its four-fifths, the contempt we already have earned by perpetuating the toothless guidelines which govern money in politics now.

the 10-second spot, the groundless charge, the rainbow promise. Forever understating our ambitions, over-expecting, over-rating our "solutions", we hardly notice that we have created a nation of disbelievers through 25 years of induced disappointment. Our political dialogue has become so laden with misdeeds that now they are completely taken for granted. As if deciding what is expected of us politicians. Score one for the "everybody-does-it" syndrome.

One result of this is that something important and quite wonderful has slipped away from us in recent years—not so much incoherence, as virtue. We trust our leaders in America, as indeed we trusted most of our institutions, and each other. Government has long been viewed as foolish, bureaucratic and hopelessly extravagant, but only recently has it become an object of national contempt.

If we do not learn how to reverse these trends toward disgust, despair, and disbelief; some would say it's foolishly to try. But I think we must take a determined effort if these United States are to remain united in any fundamental sense.

Political leaders can help . . . must help, really, if we are to regain what John Gardner calls "a sense of ourselves . . . of our own values."

A good way to start is by seeking an end to the kind of duplicity and secrecy in government that Vice President John F. Kennedy described as Watergate. Much too much of the public's business is stamped "Top Secret", or shrouded in a nationalistic fog of secrecy, or carried on behind closed doors. Why be so secretive about the workings of a government, which, after all, still belongs to and serves the people?

The reforms you will be analyzing at this conference can do much to "declassify" the way the government does business. To declassify certain portions of national security, and to declassify the way these matters are handled. For a start, I think the President should at the earliest possible moment call the Senate and ask for further discussion of the Rep. [Speaker of the House], Mr. HARRIMAN. Mr. President, any one wishes to object, I do not mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, if anyone wishes to object, I do not mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the amendment first?

Mr. DOMINICK. I am happy to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. It is the intention of the Senate to have no further votes tonight.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I would like to have this measure as the pending business. I would like to have it become an object of national The PRESIDENT pro-blem for anyone. If it does not like the computer syst-ems in the several States for the election, I am going to say, "I am going to vote tonight."

It seems to me that the easy way to get out of this situation would be to have simultaneous closings of the polls. This would be difficult unless the people are given enough time to vote, so we have required that the polling places would be open for 12 hours, starting in the eastern zone from 10 to 10, mountain time from 9 to 9, the Pacific time zone from 8 to 8. Once it becomes an object of national conscience, can influcen-all on other time zones, particu-larly when predictions of the election are made on a nationwide basis.

The different time zones have a great effect on elections, as the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY) and the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDFINGER), who have accepted as an assumption of the American Bicentennial deal, was proposed, first, to take the stump of the Bellmon amendment and, second, because it is indivi-dual and of itself.

Therefore, this amendment, which has been ac-cepted before as part of the American Bicentennial deal, was proposed, first, to take the stump of the Bellmon amendment and, second, because it is individual and of itself.
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE  S 5085

April 2, 1974

Mr. DOMINICK. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for his courtesy. I think the first part of his suggestion would be something I would be happy to comply with, namely, to withdraw the amendment and put it all off for a vote after the Allen amendment.

As far as making election day a holiday is concerned, I went into that at some length. There were enormous problems with that proposal. One of the problems that everybody cited was that this was a Tuesday. If it were a holiday, immediately there would be a demand for a long weekend, upon which occurring, everybody would take off, some to go South and go fishing, and some to go North and go hunting.

Mr. COOK. There is merit in the Senator's remarks. I do not know why we in the Congress and who are responsible for the conduct of elections should find a great deal of magic in Tuesday. Again, I think we would have many more people participating in a national election in the United States if the election were held on a Saturday.

Somehow or other, it is very easy to sit here in Congress and decide to shift weeks and decide on someone's birthday on a weekend, when that was not his birthday at all, and then we get accolades from the people because of a long weekend. Perhaps the best thing we could do about elections is to hold them on a weekend, so the people could get another long weekend. There is nothing magical about Tuesday. I think we might be able to get a very great percentage of the American people to participate in a national election.

Mr. DOMINICK. I can say to the Senator from Kentucky that I wrestled with the problem of changing the whole structure and trying to have an election earlier and the primary earlier and the convening of Congress earlier, so that we do not come into session in January and that we try to comply with the school law. I did all kinds of things in this area. The difficulty I ran into is that part of it requires a constitutional amendment, part of it requires a law, and after 18 months of it I gave up, realizing that I was not getting anywhere.

Mr. COOK. Of course, when the Senator from West Virginia, who is present on the floor, discussed an amendment to have all primaries in the United States for Federal elections take place in August and moved the general election from November to October, unfortunately he and I were still traditionalist, because we stuck with Tuesday. Yet if we were perfectly willing to move the primary dates, we were perfectly willing to move the general election dates, but we still stuck to Tuesday. Yet I think the Senator would honestly agree with that.
Especially in times like this when the integrity of the legal profession is constantly an issue before us, Frank Hogan’s career stands as a model of inspiration.

For Mrs. Jarvis and myself, we extend our profoundest condolences to Mary Hogan.

DEATH OF PRESIDENT POMPIDOU OF FRANCE

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time for the consideration of the motion be extended.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I feel certain that Senators have heard of the untimely death of President Pompidou. I know that many will join in the expression of sympathy for the people of France, who have lost their Chief of State, which is always a tragic moment in the life of any people. It is uniquely applicable, because death merges all the cares of life and allows restatement of the tremendous bonds of friendship which exist between the French people and ourselves. This goes back in our history to the most perilous, earliest days, when France, through its great military leaders, helped to win the Revolutionary War, and to bring into being American independence. All of our difficulties—and they are many and are serious—become small when compared with the bonds of friendship and the love of freedom and our comradeship in arms, including comradeship in arms in World War II, in which I had the indescribable privilege, as a military officer, to serve.

I express the hope that in France, as here, the profoundly human values of freedom and the will to fight for ideas and culture, which we share with France, may bring us both to a better understanding of our respective positions, and may enable us to work out our immediate problems and continue under our auspices for all mankind.

France is a great nation with a proud history. President Pompidou personified nothing could be done in the effort toward the peace and prosperity of all mankind to rekindle as a result of President Pompidou’s untimely death, this new attitude of cooperation and common striving. That, I believe, would be President Pompidou’s finest memorial.

Mrs. Jarvis and I extend our deepest sympathy to Madame Pompidou and the Pompidou family.

PROGRAM

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the Senate will convene at 11 a.m. tomorrow.

After the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order, there will be accorded for the transaction of routine morning business for not to exceed 15 minutes, with a 3-minute time limitation on each speech made therein, at the conclusion of which the Senate will resume consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044. The pending question at that time will be on the adoption of the Allen amendment (No. 6307), on which there is a division of time with a vote to occur on the Allen amendment at 12 noon. The yeas and nays have been ordered thereon.

Upon the disposition of the Allen amendment, the District amendment, Amendment No. 11, will be called up again with a time limitation of 30 minutes thereafter after which a vote will occur. And we have been notified that it will be a rollick vote.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. HOBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the previous order, that the Senate stand in adjournment until tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and at 5:49 p.m. the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 3, at 11 o’clock a.m.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Marks, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the President of the Senate (Mr. Hashake) laid before the Senate the following messages from the President of the United States:

S. 2411. An act to provide for financing of Indian organizations, and for other purposes.

S. 2412. An act to establish the American Institute of Foreign Policy and for other purposes.

S. 2413. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of the American College of Physicians," approved January 30, 1913 (77 Stat. 654); and

S. 2414. An act to amend the act of February 24, 1915, incorporating the American War Mothers to permit certain stepmothers and adoptive mothers to be members of that organization.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is concluded.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume the consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, which the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 3044, to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. Allen) No. 1059. Time for debate on this amendment is equally divided and controlled between the Senator from Alabama (Mr. Allen) and the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Cannon), with a vote thereon to occur at 12 o'clock noon.

MR. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the existence of a quorum, with the time taken from both sides.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

MR. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MR. ALLEN. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, No. 1059.

MR. ALLEN. Mr. President, the time is under control until 12 o'clock. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Each side has 15 minutes. The vote will take place at 12 o'clock.

MR. ALLEN. I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to reduce the amount of permissible contributions to Presidential primary or Presidential general elections and House and Senate primaries and general elections.

Under present law, the existing law, there is no effective limit on the amount of contributions, and I feel that there lies much of the problem, and that by limiting the amount of total overall contributions, the amount of total overall expenditures, and by limiting of the amount of individual contributions, the election process can best be reformed, and not by turning the bill over to the taxpayer and requiring that individual taxpayer, in half the cases, probably, to support the views and philosophies of candidates with whom they disagree, and taking out of the election process the voluntary participation by the electorate. That is the evil of public financing.

The bill, S. 3044, as it comes to us, provides that in Presidential nomination contests, the contributions can be matched, provided they are $250 or less in Presidential races and $100 or less in House and Senate races, and permitting candidates for the Presidency to receive up to $7.5 million of public funds to aid them in their campaigns. But the bill, S. 3044, permits contributions far beyond the matchable contributions.

We have heard so much talk about, "Well, you have got to take care of the challenger in these various races. You have got to protect the challenger." It is admitted all the while that the incumbent, by reason of his being known, by reason of his name identification in the minds of the voters, by reason of the many favors he may have done for his constituents through the years, would be in better shape to attract larger contributions, and the challenger would be at a disadvantage in this country.

So this bill, while it matches contributions up to $250 for the President and $100 for the House and Senate, allows contributions as high as $7,500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 5 minutes of the Senator have expired.

MR. ALLEN. I yield myself an additional minute.

And in the case of a man and his wife, up to $6,000. That is something that is going to benefit the incumbent. That is not going to take care of the challenger.

The purpose of the amendment that is now pending, cutting contributions down to $250 for the President and $100 for the House and Senate, is to broaden the base of those participating in our elections. The proponents of reform say they want to eliminate the large contributions. I believe the $250 limit is going to eliminate the so-called large contributor. The $100 contribution for the House and Senate is going to eliminate the large contributor. That would put the incumbent and the challenger on exactly the same basis.

This whole process can be solved inside the framework of private financing, by the small contributor and still allow Federal matching. It seems Members of the Senate are going to insist on having their campaigns subsidized by the taxpayer, instead of the vote being quite evident here in the Senate. Members of the Senate want to see the taxpayers finance their campaigns, because I had an amendment knocking Members of the House and the Senate out of the subsidy, and that amendment was voted down. So it is evident Senators are going to want public financing.

Therefore, let us limit the public financing to the amounts set out, $250 and $100, but let us chop off all amounts above that, because there seems to be something evil or sinister about contributions that are over $250 for the President and over $100 for the House and Senate, because we are not allowing the Government to match these excessive contributions.

So if Senators want reform and not just public subsidy, let us cut these contributions down to where the campaigns can be financed by the average citizen of this country, which will encourage citizen participation in our election process. That is what the amendment does. It drastically cuts the amount that can be contributed.

We have heard a lot from Common Cause to the effect that, "Well, we want to cut these contributions down." Let us see if Senators who seem to be influenced by that plea—or demand—would be a better word—by Common Cause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

MR. ALLEN. I yield myself 1 minute.

Let us see if they are going to be for cutting contributions down to a realistic amount that would lead the average citizen to feel he has a part in the election process. Let us see if they want election reform or if they want to allow the small contributor the issue presented by this amendment.

I reserve the remainder of my time.
Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. President, the problem of campaign reform is certainly not a black-and-white issue. It is not susceptible of very easy solution. It requires a long time and a lot of learning before something is actually accomplished.

As a matter of fact, since I have been in the Senate, I have been involved in campaign reform bills. Since 1959 the Senate has either passed in the Senate or has reported to the Senate out of the committee, another one in 1960, another one in 1961, May I say passed the Senate by a vote of 87 to 9 and went to the House side, and then amendments were passed in August of 1971.

On top of that, S. 372 that we passed by an overwhelming vote last year and sent to the House, has not been acted on as yet. I might say frankly, Mr. President, to the Senator from Alabama that I believe that has S. 372 been acted on by the House last year, I believe we would not have passed it. We now need to get into the area of public financing.

But we have not pointed out, as a result of the Watergate hearings, the unfair size of big money in campaigns. That is what we have tried to resolve. We have not done it completely, but we have tried to do it in an equitable fashion in the pending bill. We have left it so that the candidate need not go to public financing if he does not desire to.

On the other hand, we have limited the effect of big contributions and have made it so that only small contributions can be used in computing the triggering factor in determining whether a person would be entitled to match the difference if he went the public funds route. We believe it is fairer, in that fashion, to a nonincumbent than to an incumbent, because it would give the challenger, not the incumbent, the chance to use small contributions to get up to his triggering amount on an equal basis with an incumbent who might not have any trouble getting large sums from some contributors. But we do not let the incumbent use those larger figures in determining eligibility.

Much can be said on both sides of this issue. There is no special magic in many of the figures we have used.

For example, in the limit on expenditures, the Senator from Alabama correctly pointed out yesterday that last year we limited all expenditures and then only as to a portion of the expenditures. In this bill we have tried to limit the overall expenditures. I must say frankly that I am certainly not wedded to the formula we have used here. If Senators feel the figure is too high, we ought to have a vote on an amendment to reduce it. We used the figure somewhat arbitrarily, I might say, but by looking at past experience in trying to determine what expenditures had been made, and recognizing the fact that too much had been spent in Federal campaigns, not only in the congressional races, but most certainly in presidential and Vice-Presidential races.

So we came up with a formula of 10 cents per voter for an eligible voter of voting age, and then 15 cents in a general election. We used a somewhat arbitrary figure of $800,000 in the House races. Actually, I felt, and the majority leader of the Senate felt, that the House was not entitled to that particular amount. We talked about $700,000, as the committee felt, last year, that this is a matter that the House itself ought to determine. So we used the arbitrary figure, as has been pointed out in the argument. Some Members of the House used less than that figure; some used much more.

So we used an arbitrary figure, hoping that the House would make a determination as to what the correct figure should be. I am not wedded to any of these figures. I would be willing to go along with whatever the House decides that could be spent in the primary or the amount we have in this bill, and the amount that could be spent in the general election, if that is consistent with the wishes of a majority of this body.

But we have seen, as a result of the Watergate hearings, the inherent danger of large contributions and the undue influence that the largest at least is attempted to be exerted, by the making of tremendous contributions. Those are the sorts of things we want to do away with.

I do not often quote from the New York Times. But I read an editorial in the April 2 issue from which I shall read a part into the record, because it expresses my views on this matter quite clearly:

> Although small contributions are important, experience has shown that they are easier to raise at the Presidential level than in many Senatorial and Congressional contests. Even in Presidential races, the candidate who appeals to a passionate minority, a George McGovern or a George Wallace, is likely to have an easier time of it than a middle-of-the-road candidate.

May I say that in the discussion on this matter last year, the Senator from South Dakota Mr. Meid (sic) on the floor of the Senate admitted that having, or was forced, to take some large contributions—seed money—to get himself into a position to make a large solicitation for funds at a low level, and that some of that money came from small contributors.

I continue to read from the editorial:

> Even those with devoted followings do not escape the need for large gifts or loans from wealthy individuals or interest groups to pay for campaign start-up costs, for direct mail solicitation of small givers, and to tide campaigns over rough spots. In short, if large contributions are not a wholly reliable substitute, there has to be an alternate source of funds, and that can only be public money.

> The debate is between exclusive reliance on private money or on public money. In the best pluralistic tradition, the Senate reform bill provides a mixed system in which small and medium sized contributors perform a critical function but in which public money is available as the necessary alternative, reserved for the people and not for the candidates but with the assurance that the latter have the support of all those such as Senators Weicker and Baker who genuinely favor cleaner elections.

Mr. President, I must say that I agree with the assessment of the importance of making some contributions available and providing access to public funds if we are going to do away with larger contributions. If we are going to rely on large contributions, as we have done in the past, we ought to do so without worry about public financing because some people could go out and raise large sums of money, and they will continue to do so if we do not have the money.

We tried to get at that to some degree in S. 372 last year by fixing the amount of expenditures in the campaign. We did not use the arbitrary formula in the bill in determining the amount that could be spent.

Yesterday the distinguished Senator from Alabama pointed out that what we ought to do is to try to shorten the campaign. The Senate has already acted on that point. I hope that the House will act on it. I am all for shortening the time of the campaign. That will do more to reduce the cost of a campaign, perhaps, than any other one thing, other than providing free time and free mailing privileges, which would certainly reduce the cost to the candidate as the Senator from Alabama suggested yesterday.

But even a former Member of the Senate from Alabama quoted yesterday, pointed out that small contributions are the backbone of political financing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 5 minutes of the Senator have expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself additional time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I agree with that statement. That is why we reduced the matching amounts to $100 in congressional races and to $500 in a presidential race. However, we do permit contributions up to $300 limit per person so that the person can get seed money and have an opportunity to start his campaign which is so important, as pointed out in the editorial from which I have just quoted.

One of the suggestions he made yesterday was to increase the tax credit on tax deduction and to make possible a gift tax deduction for this purpose. We did not go that far on the gift tax. We did under title V, that has now been taken out of the bill, the doubling of the tax deduction and/or the tax credit, and doubling the checkoff.

I might say the distinguished Senator from Alabama has found some fault with the checkoff provision by saying that in order not to be—that you have to check if you do not want the money used. I agree with him on that. I think everything ought to be an affirmative action on the part of the taxpayer, so that if he wants his money used for that purpose, to go into the political fund, the $1, which I suppose to say $2 per person, then I think he ought to have the affirmative obligation of making a check to so indicate, and have that money go into the fund.

But I hope the Senate will not support the Allen amendment on this particular issue, even though I find myself in agreement with him to a very high degree on the basis of what we are trying to do. We just differ on some of the procedural aspects, as to what would get the job done.
As I pointed out yesterday, in the State of California the nominees of the two parties will receive from the Federal Government to conduct their general election campaigns for the Senate, from the public treasury all of the necessary funds to get them on the ballot. With that money, Senator McGovern's committee has been able to raise $2,121,000, which is more than nine times what a Senator would earn as a U.S. Senator in the entire 6 years of his term.

If that is reform, I do not believe I know the meaning of the word, to just write a check. Mr. President, with no control over it whatsoever except post-election audits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. President, I do not believe that we ought to permit contributions of $6,000 to be made. I believe we should limit Presidential campaign contributions to $50, and House and Senate campaign contributions to $100. That is the amount that can be matched, and that is all that ought to be permitted to be contributed. That will get the influence of large contributors out of the election process.

So I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The Senator has made one proposition that I think does not truly represent the situation, when he says that an incumbent would be able to get $1,000 or $3,000 contributions, and then go to the Federal Government and get the matching funds. That is simply not true. Whatever amount--

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the Senator from Alabama did not say he would get greater advantage to make the contributions up to $3,000. That I am trying to do is cut the permissible contributions down to what can be matched. The Senator must have misunderstood. The record will show.

Mr. CANNON. Perhaps I did. But I want to make it absolutely clear that the challenger and the incumbent would be on an equal footing with respect to the matching funds, which could be matched at the Federal level. If the candidate of either party receives funds in excess of the matching formula funds, those moneys then go to offset moneys that the Federal Government would not necessarily have to match, and the total amount of the moneys, the overall expenditure limit would still be in effect. That would include moneys over and above the matching formula triggering funds, as well as those within those limits, for the purpose of the overall limitation.

So I would simply suggest to my colleagues that if he supports this concept, we can have limitations to get the bill in the proper form. For example, if he feels that the amounts of expenditures permissible are too high, we ought to have amendments along that line, rather than try to add the type of amendments such as this one, which would make it impossible for a person to carry on a campaign without being able to get contributions of more than that amount, even according to Senator McGovern's own testimony, and he has had the experience that any other person in raising tremendously large campaign funds from small contributors.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, will the distinguished chairman yield on that point for a brief comment?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. MATHIAS. While I cannot claim to rival the scope of Senator McGovern's expertise, I have had recent experience. I announced earlier this year that I would take no contributions of over $100.

I am speaking in support of the amendment. Since December 21, 1973, it is interesting to note that more than 2,700 individuals have contributed to my campaign. No contribution has exceeded $100. The total amount has been over $45,000. Thus, the total average contribution has been approximately $16.25. I could only say to the distinguished chairman that I am tremendously encouraged by this kind of response.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask the Senator, that is a period of 4 months. Is the Senator saying, then, that if he collects twice that amount in the next 4 months, which would be $90,000, and he adds that to the present $45,000, would that be enough to run his campaign, $135,000?

Mr. MATHIAS. I wish I could say yes to that, but there is another rule here, that in the course of a campaign public interest tends to rise, and the number of contributions, and perhaps the average size of the contribution, would rise with the interest as we come closer to the campaign.

Mr. CANNON. I would simply say to the Senator, based on his experience up to the present time, that if it continues in that fashion up to the primary, he will not have raised much more than the amount that would be needed in Maryland.

Mr. MATHIAS. I thank the Senator from Nevada for his comments.

I am speaking in support of the amendment, proposed limit contributions from any individual to $100 for congressional races and $250 for Presidential races. This amendment would not affect the public financing provisions of this bill, but must be considered in the context of the entire bill.

In such a context, the question is raised: Can candidates raise a substantial amount of funds in congressional contests from contributions in amounts of $100 or less?

Last December I announced on the Senate floor that I would make my re-election campaign this year, an experiment to test that proposition, as well as a number of other reforms which have been proposed, debated, passed by the Senate, but yet not enacted into law.

Although the fundraising efforts for my campaign have not yet really gotten underway in a substantial way, the very early returns clearly show that the people...

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a unanimous consent request?

Mr. DOMINICK. I yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that upon the disposition of the amendment by Mr. DOMINICK, Senator STEVENSON be recognized to call up his amendment No. 971, and that, if there be any objection, it be dispensed with hereon of 40 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled in accordance with the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes, and I say to my colleagues I think this is an interesting amendment. I talked a little about it last night.

The purpose of the amendment is to try to make Senator BELLMON's amendment. The voting is to enforce the law. If the people believe Brooke Hatfield Pearson Thomas M. Noonan, is necessarily absent. Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, is absent on official business.

Mr. SPOONER. I announce that the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. OLSON), is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), and the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FEURTH), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), and the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), are necessarily absent.

Mr. WILSON. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUMPHREY), is absent on official business.

Mr. WILSON. I announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT), is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. Aiken), is absent due to illness in the family.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE S 5177

I come from, 8 until 8 in the Pacific zone, and so on through Hawaii and the Bering Sea.

In order to make this effective it seems to me we should concentrate, first, probably on the presidential election of 1976 rather than this one, the senatorial and congressional elections of 1974. I say this because although predictions are made in senatorial and congressional races, those races are not influenced by as many voters as the presidential election. It would be effective in every national election starting with the national election in 1976.

Last night the distinguished Senator from Nevada, my good friend Howard Cannon, brought up the question of expense. Frankly, most of the States that lie in a specific time zone have 12 hours of polling time, anyway. This happens in Colorado, it happens in Kansas, and in New York. I have been a watcher in many of these places on various occasions and unless they have changed the laws recently there are still 12 hours available and so there will be no additional expense, and if there is additional expense, it will be minimum.

It is interesting that in our election process, for reasons I am not sure of, we probably have less people voting in any other affluent and economically viable area in the world. Our average is extraordinarily low. I wish to give some figures in that regard. In 1964, the year Senator Goldwater ran for the presidency, only 62 percent of eligible Americans cast a ballot for one of the presidential candidates, that is, either Lyndon Johnson or Barry Goldwater.

In the off year congressional elections, the record is even worse. Less than 50 percent of Americans over 21 voted. On the other hand, in Europe, where uniform, nationwide voting hours are common practice — and granted in most of those countries there is a much smaller population — the percentages range from 87 percent in Denmark, which is quite small, and up to 100 percent in France, a country with which, as everyone knows, we are having some difficulty at the moment.

This might increase the number of people who feel they have the opportunity and privilege of going to vote when the horserace has not been decided by the electronic news media after the results are in from precincts.

The other day during the debate on the Bellmon amendment, the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Humphrey) said that he felt the predictions made after polling places in the eastern time zone had closed affected his election for President in 1968. The Senator from Arizona (Mr. Goldwater) said that the news media had predicted after three precincts were in in the eastern time zone that he was going to be clobbered, and he said they were right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada may proceed.

Mr. DOMINICK. Nevertheless, what I am saying in general is that we have a provision which, in my opinion, is a very bad provision. Second, we will not need that provision in force and we can get away from all enforcement problems if this amendment is accepted. Third, it will not cost any more money. Fourth, we might get away from the problem of what is going to happen.

As the Senator from Rhode Island said in previous colloquy, some years ago the National Governors Conference recommended this provision in 1966. In addition, the chairman of the board of ABC, surprisingly enough, also has come out in favor of this type resolution of the problem.

Mr. President, when the National Governors' Conference favors this provision, when the chairman of the board of ABC favors the provision, and we have the criticism of people throughout the country who do not know whether it is worthwhile to vote after there has been electronic predictions, it seems to me that here we have an inexpensive way to take care of the problem.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, in the absence of the chairman of the committee, speaking of the ranking minority member of the committee, and speaking with respect to the amendment, it was interesting that last night on ABC News Mr. Reasoner and Mr. Howard K. Smith discussed this matter.

Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me 3 minutes of his time?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. COOK. I was amazed because they went back to the election of 1972 to sustain their point. At no time during the discussion between Mr. Reasoner and Mr. Smith did they give actual voting figures, and about the fact that "based on our predictions we have predicted so and so will carry such and such a State." This is the very point we got into a discussion with the Senator from Maryland (Mr. Goldwater) and the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. Bellmon) the other day. Mr. Howard K. Smith proceeded to say that their studies showed there was no problem. I thought to myself what a lacing we would get if we stated that based on a study we had made it was shown that it does have an effect. It reminds me that they would have their own fox in their own chicken-house.

I must say to the Senator from Colorado that one of the things they did say at the end of their remarks blasting the Bellmon amendment and giving them right, not to make any flat figures, but to make predictions, and the president of ABC is on the side of the Senator from Colorado, because he said if they wanted to resolve that problem they would stagger the voting hours so all returns would come in at the same time. So I do not know whether the Senator from Colorado wants a major network on his side in regard to his amendment, but I would have to say, in all fairness, he now has one.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

I have mixed emotions about this amendment, because I agree with the author of the amendment in principle as to what he is trying to do. I just have some reluctance about imposing these restrictions on the States. Again, I voted the same way he did on the Bellmon amendment. I think it was bad legislation, but the majority of our colleagues did not agree with us, even though some of them agreed with us last year, and some of them changed their positions, because it was defeated last year two to one, but it was passed a few days after.

I cannot help but refer back to section 4 of article I of the Constitution, which says:

In time, places and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof.

It is true that the section goes on to say:

But the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

I hearken back to the initial statement there, where it was quite clear that it was the intent of the framers of the Constitution to leave it to the States to make their own determination as to the times of holding elections.

I personally do not find any fault with the Senator's amendment with respect to my own State, because it coincides somewhat with the times that we use, but I am thinking about the eastern part of the United States, where the polls could not open until 11 o'clock in the morning, in the State of Maryland, for example, unless Maryland decided it wanted to open them more than 13 hours a day, and, if it did that, it would have the problem of having to have another shift of workers or paying overtime to the people who were there.

So my reasons of opposition to this amendment solely is that it ought to be left to the States to make the determination as to what hours will be set for holding the election, a time best suited to their needs.

I am fully cognizant of the fact that I did not support the Bellmon amendment, which precluded making any of that information public, and making it a criminal offense to do so. I can imagine someone being prosecuted because he called a friend on the phone in California and told him that the results of the election are such and such. There is a worse penalty for violation of that law than for transmitting illegal gambling information, I may say.

Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I yield myself 30 seconds.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Arizona (Mr. Goldwater) be added as a cosponsor of the amendment,
The yeas and nays have been ordered, and high-paid Federal employees, and cannot be dealt with. Senator floors, and the question has been yielded, back, the question was yielded, back, and the Select Committee is also absent. Mr. McFadden, the Senators from Tennessee (Mr. Brock) and the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr.
Perry) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. Watkins) is absent due to illness in the family.

This amendment would not restrict the polling hours to 12 hours. Any State can make it 24 hours or whatever amount it wants to. All it provides is that each time zone has to close at the same time. That is all it says.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio (Mr. DOMINICK). The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

So Mr. DOMINICK's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. I move to lay that motion

THE PRESIDENT'S TAX RETURNS

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to file with the Senate a report of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, transmitting a report of the committee staff to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Haskel). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. I might add, Mr. President, that the document I have just submitted is a staff analysis of the President's tax returns, as requested of the committee by the President. This document is not publicly available to the press at this point.
We believe that it will be available at 2 o'clock and that there will be copies made available in the caucus room of the Senate Office Building at that time.

FEDEAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT
AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Illinois is recognized to offer an amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 977

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 977, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistance legislative clerk proceeds to read the amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENSON's amendment (No. 977) is as follows:

On page 79, strike lines 6 and 7 and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"Sec. 411. (a) Any candidate for nomination for or election to Federal office who,"

On page 79, following line 21, insert the following new subparagraph and number subsequent subparagraphs accordingly:

"(1) the amount of each tax paid by the individual, or by the individual and the individual's spouse filing jointly, for the preceding calendar year: Provided, That for purposes of this subparagraph "tax' shall mean section shall be due thirty days after the date of enactment and shall be filed with the Commissioner General of the United States, who shall, for purposes of this subsection, have the powers and duties conferred upon the Commission by this Act.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Basil Condos of my staff be granted the privilege of the floor during the debate and the vote on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without
objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, title
IV of S. 3044 requires financial disclosure by all elected Federal officials, high paid Federal employees, and candidates for Congress in general elections.

Its provisions are a vast improvement over existing law, and I commend the
Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

I have sort of mixed emotions about this amendment. The full disclosure provision that is in the bill now before us was my idea. I thought it was quite comprehensive. It related, I thought, to every item that would reflect on a person’s public life, that is, the source of each item of income, of reimbursement. If any gift that they might receive outside of the immediate family, the identity of assets held, the amount of liabilities, all transactions in securities, all transactions in commodities, and the purchase or sale of homes, and I thought we did everything in there that was necessary to have a full and complete disclosure. I did stop short of an amendment requiring them to file the income tax return which would carry with it the items the Senator from Illinois has suggested. I did that because many people have felt and still feel that everyone is entitled to some privacy and perhaps the privacy left is that which is covered on the income tax return. But I may say, if this amendment is adopted, then the only thing that would be omitted would be contributions to charity. That would be the only thing I can think of that would not be covered under this disclosure.

I do not feel very strongly about it but I think it is a question of whether Congress wants to include all these people—not simply Congress—but to include civil servants with grade 16 and above, to include the military, and to include all members of the judiciary.

So I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time and, at such time as it is appropriate, I intend to move to table the amendment, because it is just a straight up and down issue of whether we want to have complete disclosure to include the income tax return, or whether we do not, because, as I see it, the only thing remaining after we have this, is contributions to charity, I can well understand why that objection is. Fortunately for all of us, these were defeated. My next try to provide a series of cloture votes and delay action long enough so the senators may feel compelled to move something. I do not have to do it, but I would like to see it discussed. Public support should a cloture move to cut short delay and let the Senate vote on the bill on its merits.

In the House, too, public backing is needed to keep campaign reform action going. The House is considering two bills. The first, the Anderson-Udall bill which was submitted to the House last year, embraces most of the Senate bill’s desirable campaign reform. The second bill is that emerging from the House Administration Committee under Chairman Wynn. The Udall bill appears to be shaping up as a version asking the least change—but unfortunately it, not the Anderson-Udall bill, will form House action. Thus the task in the House will be to beef up the eventual House bill in the three areas it appears likely to be weak—providing for a strong enforcement arm under an independent Federal Election Commission; in making sure campaign spending limits are set high enough so that rivals will have a fair chance to unseat incumbents; and in providing public financing for congressional as well as primary races.

Representative Bills only a couple of weeks ago seemed determined to clamp procedural restraints on his amendment would have to pass it or reject it, without demo-

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until 12 o’clock noon tomorrow.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday next, the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. Foy) be recognized for 15 minutes, after the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I inquire of the distinguished majority whip, is it the in-

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The vote on cloture will occur after the call to establish a quorum, which would begin at 1 o’clock.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Chair.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the amendment of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT, Mr. President, an amendment to the Rules Committee bill, is today’s Christian Science Monitor wraps up the entire campaign finance reform picture. In view of our continuing debate on this subject, I offer this outstanding editorial for the record.

I ask unanimous consent that this editorial be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

THE MONITOR’S VIEW: CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM

Campaign reform, made daily more imperative by the continuing flood of disclosures of massive abuses during the 1972 campaign, is not moving ahead through the Congress as fast as we would like. But it is moving. And prospects are reasonably good for a healthy reform bill.

The legislative situation is as follows:

The Senate has before it a comprehensive reform bill which was approved by the Rules Committee last month. It has been on the floor of the Senate for the last week. Sen. James Allen of Alabama, who was outvoted 95-0 last week, is now running a sophisticated filibuster effort on the floor.

The first stage of his delay campaign was to introduce four series of amendments. Unfortunately for those, these were defeated. His next try to provoke a series of cloture votes and delay action long enough so the senators may feel compelled to move something. This is a public point to a cloture move to cut short delay and let the Senate vote on the bill on its merits.

Representative Bills only a couple of weeks ago seemed determined to clamp procedural restraints on his amendment would have to pass it or reject it, without demo-eradicating debate and agenda-setting. Fortunately, a group of senators led by Frank Cannon (D-Utah) has proposed a new bill that would create a Federal Election Commission (FEC) with the power to prosecute offenders of federal campaign finance laws.

The bill would allow for independent enforcement of the campaign finance laws, and it would require candidates to disclose all campaign contributions and expenditures. The bill would also limit campaign contributions to $2,000 per person per election cycle, and it would require candidates to disclose all campaign expenditures.

The purpose of the campaign finance reform is to reduce the influence of special interest groups on the political process by reducing the amount of money that special interest groups can give to candidates. Special interest groups would be required to disclose all contributions and expenditures, and they would be required to follow the same rules as candidates.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON).

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada (Mr. HUNSOLD) to table the amendment of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. Rusk) be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. Rusk), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. Lurie), the Senator from New York (Mr. Hatfield), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. Bentsen) are necessarily absent. from Kentucky (Mr. HUBBLEDON) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRiffin. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BEECH), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MAZUR), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PRASCY), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWN) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business. I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AKEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PRASCY) would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 55, as follows:

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1082 and ask that it be stated by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The legistative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Amendment No. 1082 is as follows:

Sec. 402. No Member of Congress shall accept or receive any honorarium, fees, pay- ment, or expense allowance other than the actual cost of travel and lodging expenses from any source whatsoever for any speech, article, writing, discussion, message, or appearance for payment of his official salary and for official reimbursements or allowances from the United States Treasury.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; I am delighted to yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. It is my understanding that the Senator would want the yeas and nays on this amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Having discussed this amendment with the distinguished Senator, I understand it is agreeable with him if we get consent to vote on the amendment at the hour of 2:30 p.m. today.

Mr. ALLEN. That would be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I propose an unanimous-consent request, without any division of time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. COOK. Does the Senator have any idea how long he wishes to take on this amendment?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the amendment yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. COOK. All I wish to do is clear the time situation. I have no objection to the amendment. From my standpoint, I would be perfectly willing to accept the amendment. I was wondering, with the vote not occurring until 2:30, whether the Senator would wish to dwell on this subject until 2:30, or recess until a convenient time.

Mr. ALLEN. No. I do not think we ought to recess. I think this is a very important matter, which should be fully debated. I do not think we should recess. I think it would be well if the Senator could encourage other Senators to come in and listen to this discussion.

Mr. COOK. I wish to make a statement is being made.

Mr. ALLEN. I appreciate the distinction Senator from Kentucky's sitting through the discussion. I hope he will lend his unprejudiced voice to the amendment. I understood him to say he was for the amendment.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1082 and ask that it be stated by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1082 and ask that it be stated by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The legistative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Amendment No. 1082 is as follows:

Sec. 402. No Member of Congress shall accept or receive any honorarium, fee, pay-ment, or expense allowance other than the actual cost of travel and lodging expenses from any source whatsoever for any speech, article, writing, discussion, message, or appearance other than in payment of his official salary and for official reimbursements or allowances from the United States Treasury.

That would include a Member of the House of Representatives or a Member of the Senate.

The figures that I noticed in a memorandum just the other day—I do not have the memorandum with me at the time, but this would be an important point—indicated that in 1972, Members of the Senate received more than $600,000 in honoraria or payments for speeches or appearances.

I have no hesitancy in offering this amendment, because the Senator from Alabama, since he first entered politics as a member of the Alabama State Legislature in 1938, has accepted any fee, payment, honorarium, expense payment, or anything else of value whatsoever for any appearance or speech that the Senator from Alabama has ever made.

The Senator from Alabama takes the position that if he feels that it is a part of his duty and responsibility as a Member of the U.S. Senate to accept an invitation to speak on a program, that appearance should be at the expense of the Senate from Alabama. That is the irrevocable custom the Senator from Alabama has followed for some 35 years, and he expects to continue that custom.

Much more important, though, than this amendment, which I anticipate will get a fairly good vote, was an amendment that the Senator from Alabama introduced some time ago. That amendment received very little notice in the media. It was an amendment that would have prevented—

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, so that we might ask for the yeas and nays?
Mr. ALLEN. Yes, I yield for that purpose.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COOK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the amendment that the Senator from Alabama proposes would have prevented any Member of the 93d Congress from running for President from the political parties for the Presidential term commencing January 20, 1972, which, of course, will be the position that will be at stake in 1976. A fairly good vote was cast for that amendment.

The Senator from Alabama took the position that if the public taxpayer subsidy was an idea whose time had come, then certainly a Member of Congress who favored the subsidy plan would have no objection, in order to get the principle entered among his rights or claim to any subsidy payment by the taxpayers who would aid him in furthering his political ambitions in the race for the presidential nomination of one of the two major parties.

The Senator from Alabama felt that surely what was involved was not money, but principle. He felt certain that those who are pushing the bill—and it is quite obvious that some of the people who are pushing the bill are perpetual candidates for President—the Senator from Alabama thought that since there was so much interest in this principle, they abet the Senator's position and would be willing to waive their claim to a subsidy in their race for the presidential nomination. But he was wrong about that.

There was not a single Member of the Senate who was regarded as a possible or probable potential candidate for the Presidency who voted for the amendment of the Senator from Alabama—not a single one of them.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. DOLE. I would say, as a part of the question, that I share the view that the Senator expressed with reference to the amendment. I was wondering whether he could not modify his amendment to include a Member of Congress, so as to prevent a Senator or Member of the House from receiving any such income. It might be fair to prevent him from receiving any other income, whether it be stocks, bonds, interest, or whatever else it may be.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator wishes to offer the amendment, he might open it to the Senate or Member of the House from receiving any such income. It might be fair to prevent him from receiving any other income, whether it be stocks, bonds, interest, or whatever else it may be.

national convention armed with $15 million in cash. That is possible under this bill. I do not know that a sinister use would be made of that $15 million. But I do not see that the Federal Government, the taxpayers of the country, shall be called upon to subsidize a subsidy of $7.5 million to everyone who wants to run for President and who can get out and raise a quarter of a million dollars. That is the requirement.

I guess you have to be 35 years old to get this money, but that would be the only requirement—that and getting $250,000 in contributions of not more than $250. So it could all be raised in one State; it could all be raised in one county, or it could all be raised in one city. It could all be raised by members of a pressure group, and once they raise the $250,000, they apply to the Federal Government to match them. It backs up and takes that in, and acts prospectively and retrospectively. It takes them all in, everything they have collected and everything they will collect in the future, on matching.

I believe that that amendment, if provided for in the country, would receive the support of the American people, not making that money available to Members of Congress to set up the subsidies that would be given.

There has been talk about the danger of big contributions. Well, if Senators have any worry about big contributions, they ought to support the amendment I introduced earlier today—to limit the contribution to $250 to a Presidential fund for House and Senate. They are not worried so much about that. It seems to me that they are worried about wanting tremendous sums on which to run. That is what they want.

A time or two I have used the example of the State of California. I use that because that is a large State. Not only do they provide for matching half the contributions in the Senate race up to a $100 contribution, not only do they provide for matching half the contributions up to a total of $1,400,000 in a Senate race, which would be, potentially, possibly $700,000 from the Federal Government and $700,000—

Mr. President, during the primary—but once they get to the general election, what do they do?

The Federal Government writes them a check for each one of the candidates in the major parties. They may have financed half a dozen or a dozen candidates in the two primaries, but once that shapes down and it gets down to one on each, they write a check for each of those candidates a check for $2,121,300. That is a pretty nice little "kitty" to be paid out of the taxpayers' pockets.

Mr. President, earlier this year, the Senate proposal was submitted to it of raising the salaries of Members of Congress, House and Senate, by some $2,500—and the Senator from Alabama votes the Senate by a very heavy vote, as a result of strong public opinion against it, voted down that pay raise, even though it provided for only a $250 raise for Members of the House and Senate.

Mr. President, what is the public going to think—if they are ever advised, and so on?

of course the news media are not going to do a great deal about advising the public—when they find out that they are setting up a fund of up to $7.5 million for each Member of the House and Senate that wants to run for President—$7.5 million. I do not believe that the public will look with much favor on that. I do not believe the public, and I do not believe the citizens of the United States, that for every candidate in both primaries out there running for the Senate, and then $2,121,000 for each candidate for the Senate in the general election.

If they balk at raising a Senator's salary by some $3,500, do you not think, Mr. President, they would choose on a $7.5 million fund for a Presidential candidate who is a Member of Congress?

I believe that they would. Do you not think, Mr. President, that they would look with disfavor on setting up a general election campaign financed to the extent of $2,121,000 for each party candidate for the Senate?

Why should such tremendous sums be spent, Mr. President, in taking the election process far away from the grassroots, far from the people back home, at a time when we need to take more interest in our campaigns, when we need more voluntary participation than what this mandatory contribution by the taxpayers?

Mr. President, on the general election subsidy, it would require the taxpayer—as a member of the great body of taxpayers throughout the country to help finance, because every taxpayer and every citizen has an interest in the condition of the Treasury and where the tax money goes—to pay for the campaign expenses of a candidate with whose views and political philosophy he is in strong disagreement.

That is democracy? Is that reform, to put that burden on the taxpayer and say: "Whether you like it or not, your funds will be used to support a candidate whether you agree with his views or not"?

A dyed-in-the-wool conservative would be paying the campaign expenses, the organized—whether the ultra liberal or ultra liberal taxpayer would be required to help pay the expenses of an ultraconservative candidate?

I would much prefer the approach of the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin) and the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Baker). Later on today, as I understand it, they will propose an amendment to knock this down and substitute a provision giving the taxpayer a credit of half his contribution up to $300. In other words, that would be in effect a rebate of $150. That would let the taxpayer make contributions to the fund that would fit, somebody whose views more nearly coincided with his own.

So that sort of approach appeals to the Senator from California (Mr. Tower). Could he support that amendment?

Mr. President, getting back to the case of the situation in California—and it is the same situation throughout the country, although to a lesser degree, but naturally the figures are higher in California—the subsidy that the taxpayer would be giving each of the candidates in the Senate in the general election, this theory of a $2,121,000—get that figure from information prepared by the Committee on Rules and Administration—I did not furnish myself—after all I was using the information. I see that my memory was right on it—the figure is $2,121,000.

Let us compare that with the salary of the Senator. There should be some relationship. I want to assume between the compensation paid to the holder of an office and the amount of his campaign funds. Let us see how that compares with the Government paying each of the Senate candidates $2,121,000. There is no provision about prudent management of this money. It is turned over to him, apparently, just in one big check. He can go out and hire his brother-in-law to be his campaign manager, at a big salary. He can give some cousin in the advertising business an override on his advertising. But the Government, the taxpayer—the regimented taxpayers, I might say, not the voluntary taxpayers—would be paying for his campaign funds 9 times as much as the Senator would earn in his entire 6-year term. There is something wrong somewhere with a situation like this. That is what this bill provides. I am not making this up; I am not advocating it; as a matter of fact, I am condemning it. The Government would pay 9 times as much money to the Senator as he would earn in 6 years of service in the U.S. Senate, with not a single bit of control over that money, except that it is required to go for campaign expenses.

Mr. TOWER. If the President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. TOWER. I agree with the Senator and his argument against public financing. I am strongly in favor, but I do not quite see the relationship between the amendment the Senator has offered now to the issue of public financing, and I am wondering whether the Senator would accept an amendment in this form.

Mr. ALLEN. I am sorry; I did not hear the first two words. Would the Senator read his amendment or let me have a copy?

Mr. TOWER. I would be glad to provide the Senator with a copy.

At the end of line 7, strike the period and insert in lieu thereof a comma and the following language:

nor shall he accept any subsidy payment from the U.S. Treasury, nor shall he accept any income from any enterprise that is regulated or financed either wholly or in part by the government of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. I am sorry; I did not hear the first two words. Would the Senator read his amendment or let me have a copy?

Mr. TOWER. I would be glad to provide the Senator with a copy.

At the end of line 7, strike the period and insert a comma and the following:

Mr. ALLEN. I would suggest to the Senator that he would like to have a vote up and down on the amendment I have offered. If the Senator would like to offer it as an amendment, he would certainly have a right to do so; and I would be willing at this time, inasmuch as we have a vote scheduled at 2:30, to yield to him, if we can get unanimous consent, so much of that time as he would like to have in order to advocate his amendment.

Mr. TOWER. If I might ask the Senator a further question, Mr. ALLEN, I would not want to dilute the amendment I have offered.

Mr. TOWER. This would not dilute it; it would strengthen it.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator feels that way about it, he is at liberty to offer an amendment.

Mr. TOWER. Does not the Senator feel that this is consistent with the amendment he is offering?

Mr. ALLEN. What the Senator from Alabama is seeking to reach is one thing. If the Senator from Texas wishes to reach something else, he has a right to offer an amendment.

Mr. TOWER. It is my understanding of the thrust of the Senator from Alabama's amendment that a Senator should not use his office to make additional money. What about a Senator who votes on an agricultural subsidy and yet receives that subsidy? What about a Senator who votes on the regulation of the securities industry and has income from securities?

Mr. ALLEN. Is the Senator talking about a Senator using his office to obtain additional funds? The Senator is talking about a Senator using his vote.

Mr. TOWER. Is he using his office to lecture, if perhaps it is a professional lecture? Why is it necessary that he use his office for a lecture fee?

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Senator if he thinks that a Senator is as much in demand for leaving the U.S. Senate as he is while he is a Member of the Senate?

Mr. TOWER. It is very probable that membership in the Senate enhances one's ability to be invited to speak for honoraria. But it also occurs to me that a Senator does have the opportunity to vote on matters from which he may derive income. That is the thrust of this amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest to the Senator that he offer his own amendment. The Senator from Alabama has offered his. It would be up to the Senator from Texas to offer his amendment, if he thinks well of it.

Mr. TOWER. I am sorry; I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. Did the Senator offer an amendment?

Mr. TOWER. I will offer it as an amendment when the time of the Senator from Alabama has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. As I told the Senator, if the time comes, the Senator from Alabama will yield him such time as he wishes, in order that he might offer his amendment and discuss it.

Mr. TOWER. All right.

Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment that may be stated.

Mr. ALLEN. How much time does the Senator wish?

Mr. TOWER. 3 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has expired, and I would be willing at this time, inasmuch as the amendment I have offered is not yet on the table, to yield to the Senator from Texas, if we can get unanimous consent, so much of that time as he would like to have in order to advocate his amendment.

Mr. TOWER. If I might ask the Senator a further question, Mr. ALLEN, I would not want to dilute the amendment I have offered.

Mr. TOWER. 3 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator from Alabama that he has no time under his control.

The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 7, strike the period and insert thereafter:

or shall he accept any subsidy payment from the United States, or shall he accept any income from any enterprise that is regulated or financed either wholly or in part by the Government of the United States.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TOWER. Inasmuch as this is an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered, is it necessary to get the yeas and nays on this amendment, specifically?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The answer is "Yes."

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COOK. If the Senator asks for the yeas and nays, he may have the yeas and nays. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. COOK. But am I not correct, from a parliamentary point of view, that the yeas and nays on his amendment cannot take place until 2:30?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote on the amendment of the Senator from Texas can be ordered right now, if he has finished speaking.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment. I will ask for them as soon as we get enough Senators in the Chamber to provide a second.

Mr. President, while other Senators are coming to the floor, let me say that if we are going to bar one form of outside income from Members of Congress, I think we should bar other forms. I do not believe that anybody I know in the U.S. Senate uses his office in an untruthful or unethical or illegal way to line his pockets. I believe there are hundreds of honorable men here. But if the intent of this amendment is to remove any suspicion from Members of the Senate, it seems to me that we should go all the way.

It appears to me that the amendment I offer is entirely consistent with the letter and the spirit of the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so we may ask for the yeas and nays?

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator modifying his amendment?

Mr. TOWER. We have to draft it first. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may modify my amendment by adding a comma after the words "United States" and the words:

Provided that any income from U.S. Government securities shall be exempt from this provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment as modified, to the Allen amendment, as modified, to the Allen amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment, as modified, to the Allen amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAGIAL), and the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUNDELEST) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Peary) is necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. ARNEN) is absent due to illness in the family.

The result was announced—yeas 56, nays 37, as follows:

Allen—Long
Barrett—Muske
Berliner—Nune
Bennett—Packwood
Benton—Pell

So Mr. Allen's motion to lay on the table Mr. Tower's amendment, as modified, to Mr. Allen's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Texas, as modified, to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama. On this call of the roll, the yeas and nays have been ordered.
PASTOR

So Mr. Townsend’s amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I have an amendment to the Allen amendment at the desk which I ask be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the Allen amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On line 5, following “appearance,” insert the words:

“and any other compensation including but not limited to income from a law practice, stock and bond dividends and rentals,”

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. ABOUREZK) to the Allen amendment.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. Fulbright), the Senator from Alabama (Mr. Gravel), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. Hruska), and the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. Johnston) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Huddleston) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRiffin. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. Humphrey) and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Percy) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. Williams) is absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. Allen) is absent due to illness in the family.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I announce that the Senator supporting the Allen amendment, and the yeas and nays.

Mr. PASTORE. No; I mean with respect to the question of laying it on the table.

Mr. President, this kind of schoolboy activity does not lend great credit to our institutions which are under such constant attack today. I am sorry we sometimes act in a way which justifies the accusations of our critics.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I want the record to be clear as to why I am supporting the Allen amendment, and the amendments thereto, that would outlaw honoraria and other sources of outside income. I personally see no reason why a Senator should not supplement his income in such spare time as he may have. It is not secret that many of us need supplementary income to cover the full cost of servicing our constituents. Expenditure allowances for larger States simply are not adequate to cover all expenses. But if it takes adoption of this kind of pious and hypocritical nonsense to scuttle a bill that I am convinced will do profound harm to our political system, I will gladly cooperate.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, now that the folly of the last few minutes has had an opportunity to sink into my colleagues, may I pose a parliamentary inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HELMS). The Senator will state it.

Mr. CANNON. Does the question now occur to the Allen amendment as modified, as amended by the Tower amendment as modified?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. And would the Chair advise whether a motion to table would now be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would not be in order.

Mr. CANNON. Would the Chair state the reason the motion to table would not be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An unanimous-consent agreement was entered into to vote on the Allen amendment. Therefore, a motion to table is not in order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, was the unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the Allen amendment as modified, as amended and modified?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the answer is “No,” but the precedent prevails since there was unanimous consent on the Allen amendment, regardless of whether it was modified or not.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to move to table the Allen amendment as modified, as amended by the Tower amendment, as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLEN. I object.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PASTORE. What is the ruling of the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. PASTORE. No; I mean with respect to the question of laying it on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to table is not in order.

Mr. PASTORE. I make an appeal from the ruling of the Chair. I appeal the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CANNON. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second. The yeas and nays are ordered.

The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. If a Senator wishes to uphold the ruling of the Chair, does he vote aye or nay?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. He would vote “Yes.”

MR. MANSFIELD. And if he does not, he loses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

MR. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the Chair is correct in its ruling. The unanimous-consent request earlier was to vote on the Allen amendment at the hour of 2:30 p.m. By virtue of that order, a tabling motion would not be in order. I hope, with all due deference to my distinguished friend from Rhode Island, that the Senate will not now vote to overrule the ruling of the Chair because if we do that we are going to override precedents going back a long way, and I think it is a very dangerous thing for the Senate to do.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. We had a unanimous-consent agreement to vote at 2:30 p.m. Why have we waited until 3:20 p.m. to do it?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Because amendments were offered to the amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. Why were they in order?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Because under the precedents, even though a vote is to occur at a given time on an amendment, any Senator is entitled to offer an amendment when the time has expired and have a vote on his amendment without debate.

Mr. PASTORE. Did the distinguished majority whip agree with the Senator from Alabama that this would be the situation on the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The whip, and I am sure the Senator from Alabama, did not foresee all the amendments, but in accordance with precedent, may I say to my distinguished friend that I hope we do not overrule the ruling of the Chair?

Mr. PASTORE. Would it please my distinguished friend the whip if the Senator from Rhode Island were to withdraw his motion?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I wish the distinguished Senator would do that.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, in order to accommodate the distinguished whip, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I would suggest that the Senator ask unanimous consent to do so because he asked for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will take unanimous consent.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to so do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I wonder if the distinguished Senator from Nevada would not allow the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Cannon) to propose anew his unanimous-consent request that a tabling motion be in order.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I think that while we are discussing rules we should go a little further.

The unanimous consent agreement was to vote on the Allen amendment on an hour certain. There was not a unanimous consent to vote on the Allen amendment, as amended and as modified.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. No, because no Senator could foresee that the amendment would be amended. When consent of the Senate is given to vote on a designated amendment at a designated time any Senator can offer an amendment, when time has expired, without debate and get a vote on it; but when the Senate gives consent to vote on an amendment at a given time, there has to be a vote on the amendment up and down, and there can be no motion to table.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Just to develop the record further because the rules are important, there was unanimous consent to vote on the Allen amendment.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Not the Allen amendment, as modified, as amended by the Tower amendment, as modified.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I wonder if we might not develop some record for future guidance: that when you get unanimous consent like this, it includes anything that might happen along the way. I do not think the unanimous-consent agreement prevails in light of all that has happened here.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. If we did not follow the precedents, it would mean that in the future, if we got an agreement to vote on the Allen amendment at a certain hour, we would have a vote on the amendment at that hour.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I have been in Alaska and Minnesota, and I came in at the last minute and wanted to offer an amendment to the Allen amendment he would be deprived of offering the amendment. Under the precedent he can now delay an amendment, even though without time to debate it.

There is one way to meet the situation the Senator is talking about. We could get unanimous consent to vote on the Allen amendment at 2:30, with the understanding that no amendments to that amendment be in order.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The only other point, I would say, is that it is also understood at the time you get the unanimous consent to vote on the Allen amendment, that it be as it may be modified because otherwise you are not establishing a clear line.

Mr. PASTORE. Is the Senator saying the unanimous consent agreement on the Allen amendment was made on the Allen amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Exactly.

Mr. PASTORE. And now the Allen amendment has been changed; it is no longer the amendment agreed to. Something has been added. Does not that break the unanimous consent agreement?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. No, because the Senator from Rhode Island, if he wished, would be entitled at 2:30 p.m., after the time has expired on the Allen amendment, to offer an amendment. He has that right.

I wonder if the Senator from Alabama would allow the Nevada (Mr. Cannon)—now that the Senator from Rhode Island has yielded on his point, which was very gracious of him—to make a motion to table?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object and I shall not object, in view of the request of the assistant majority leader, it occurs to me that two things evoke the most interest in the Senate in addition to public financing: Matters having to do with the pay of Senators and something having to do with the honorarium system. So I have no illusions that this amendment is going anywhere. Whether it is voted up or down, or up or down on a motion to table is not of too much concern, so I withdraw my objection.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment that we are to vote on now be stated so that we may understand what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 85 between lines 5 and 6 add the following new section 402, as follows:

Section 402. No Member of Congress shall accept or receive any honorarium, fee, payment, or expense allowance other than for actual out-of-pocket travel and lodging expenses from any source whatsoever for any speech, article, writing, discussion, message, or appearance other than in payment of his official salary and for official reimbursements or allowances from the United States Treasury, nor shall he accept any income from any enterprise that is regulated or financed either wholly or in part by the Government of the United States, provided that any income from U.S. Government securities shall be exempt from this provision.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Does that include income from a bank where he may have been drawing interest?

Several Senators. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. How ridiculous can one get?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order for me to make a motion to table the Allen amendment, as modified, as amended by the Tower amendment as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I make such a motion. I move to table and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of Mr. Cannon to lay on the table the amendment of Mr. Allen, as amended by the modified Tower amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULLERTON), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), and the Senator from Iowa (Mr. Hucy) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUSKIA), and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. FRACY) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent due to illness in the family.

The result was announced—yeas 61, nays 31, as follows:

[Table of yeas and nays]

So Mr. CANNON'S motion to lay Mr. ALLEN'S amendment, as amended, on the table was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, reported that the House had passed the following Senate bills, each with an amendment, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

An act to abolish the position of Commissioner of Fish and Wildlife, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills:

The enrolled bills were subsequently signed by the Acting President pro tempore (Mr. Howard Scott).
ORDER THAT AMENDMENTS AT DESK BEFORE CLOSURE VOTE QUALIFY UNDER RULE XXII

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow all amendments at the desk at the time the vote on the motion to invoke cloture begins, be considered as having been read by the clerk so as to qualify under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT

AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of presidential campaigns, to establish campaign accounts for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 1102

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1102 and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 75, between lines 4 and 5, insert the following:

“(g) This subsection does not apply to the Democratic or Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, the Democratic National Congressional Committee, or the National Republican Congressional Committee.”

On page 77, between lines 5 and 6, insert the following:

“(e) This section does not apply to the Democratic or Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, the Democratic National Congressional Committee, or the National Republican Congressional Committee.”

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I offer this amendment to exempt in a limited fashion the two campaign committees of the Senate and the two campaign committees of the House of Representatives because that is the way that the bill is written. We could literally operate in support of our candidates under the existing language. I am not sure that that was the intent, but it is a matter of great concern to me, and I think it is important that we know the potential hazard for our two major parties in the proposed legislation as it may finally be enacted.

I believe it is important that our parties not be weakened, but strengthened, by whatever action Congress takes. I would hope that in writing this particular bill we can provide that kind of sense of purpose with this amendment. The amendment simply exempts the House and Senate campaign committees from the specific limitations established for other political committees.

I have discussed the amendment at length with my colleagues, both on the committee and those who are involved in campaign activities. I would hope the amendment will find favor on both sides of the aisle and that it can be expeditiously handled. I do not see the need for extended debate, so I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOMINICK. My immediate impression, when my colleague was offering his amendment, was that I would like to be added as a cosponsor.

Mr. BROCK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, this amendment is to page 75, between lines 4 and 5. We are dealing here with a section. If I may find the place in the bill—which relates to limitation on expenditures generally. This limits expenditures made by a presidential campaign committee to 2 cents per voter, and an unlimited number of such expenditures by the Senate and House campaign committees. We have an exemption, under subsection (5) (b) on page 75, for the national political parties. But I am concerned that this amendment would constitute a great big loophole being created before this bill is even passed. I would envision that as time goes on other loopholes will be created.

To create a loophole right at this time, before the bill even becomes law, seems to me to be unwise. I would like to inquire of the distinguished Senator if there would be any limitation whatsoever on a congressional campaign committee, either Republican or Democratic, on receipts it may receive or expenditures it may make.

Mr. BROCK. I am delighted to yield the floor.

Mr. ALLEN. I commend the distinguished Senator from Tennessee for the concern that he is manifesting with regard to the party system. The party system, it occurs to the Senator from Alabama, will be a near casualty if not a casual casualty of public financing, and I can certainly understand, since the Senator is an organization member, that he would be concerned about the party system.

Mr. President, there would be no objection whatsoever to the amendment before us.

Mr. DOMINICK. My immediate impression is that the amendment would permit a great big loophole being created before this bill is even passed, and I would envision that as time goes on other loopholes will be created.

Mr. BROCK. I would assume, and I believe I am correct—if the chairman of the committee disagrees, he may correct me—my impression is that receipts or ceilings given under other sections of the bill. There would be no ceiling on what the committee could receive in sum total, nor would there be any ceiling on what the committee could spend, except as it applies to a specific candidate and the limitation in that particular candidate's campaign.

Mr. ALLEN. In other words, theretically, then, the campaign committees could take in and disburse literally millions of dollars in furtherance of the candidacies of House and Senate Members; is that correct?

Mr. BROCK. I would say so.

Mr. ALLEN. And this money could be spent separate and apart from the campaigns of the Members of Congress, could it not?

Mr. BROCK. No, it is still subject, as the chairman has pointed out, to the limitations the bill imposes on an individual candidate.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well. But this money could be used to supplement the campaigns or the campaign funding of any other candidate for the House of Representatives or the Senate that these committees selected.
Mr. BROCK. That is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. But that could add millions of dollars of receipts and expenditures, could it not?

Mr. BROCK. Well, I do not know that it would be added, because what the committees do is afford a vehicle for people to raise and spend money. I am not critical if there are a few individuals left in the country who would prefer to give to the political party of their choice rather than trying to seek out candidates individually.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, would it be possible for an individual to give, say, $1 million to one of these campaign committees?

Mr. BROCK. No. Under other sections of the bill, that would be prohibited. We exempt here, by this amendment I have offered, the committees only from that section which limits the giving by a particular committee to a particular candidate. It does not change the limitation on political contributions on the part of any individual at all.

Mr. ALLEN. What if it adds a section there under the provisions for limitations on contributions, and another one—Mr. BROCK. They are both to the same section.

Mr. ALLEN. To the section on limitation on expenditures.

Mr. BROCK. No; the amendment here applies only to section 615, which is limitations on contributions. It does not affect the limitation on expenditures at all, as the Senator from Nevada has pointed out.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, what would be the maximum amount that could be received by a campaign committee, a senatorial or House campaign committee, from any contributor?

Mr. BROCK. There have been so many amendments that I may be a little confused as to what is the present limit, but the same limit that would apply to giving to a campaign or to the national committees would apply here. I am not sure what the amendment says with respect to that—was it a $3,000 or a $8,000 limit?

Mr. ALLEN. If the committee is authorized to make contributions in any size, would the House or Senate Member be authorized to receive a contribution in any size?

Mr. BROCK. From these committees?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. BROCK. That is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. In other words, the senatorial or congressional campaign committees could get money from all over the country within certain limits and then funnel that without limitation as to the amounts into the campaigns of the various Members of the House and Senate; is that not correct? Provided it did not run over the amount he could spend, of course.

Mr. BROCK. That is right. If I may say to the Senator, the purpose of the section as originally written was to diminish and, hopefully, to eliminate the possibility of undue influence on the part of special interest groups who form committees rather than the use of legislative advocacy on a particular issue and raise a great deal of money and then give to those candidates who would support, say, a consumer protection bill, or who would be opposed to such a bill. For example, there is no sin in relating to House and Senate campaign committees. These are party committees. They receive their funds from a broad base. We have thousands of contributors—hundreds of which my average contribution would be well under $100, I am sure, from both committees. I am sure I can speak for the Republican Party.

The contribution would be on a broad base, to incumbent and challenger alike. In the sense that this bill must preserve and enhance the party structure, as I know the Senator feels, and we share this concern with the bill as it is written, the bill, unless amended further, impinges on our ability as parties to support our own candidates.

Mr. ALLEN. Would it be impossible, as the Senator from Alabama sees it, then, for a candidate who has a legal right to spend $1 million in his campaign but, having collected half that amount from private sources and from the party, could apply to one of these committees for a contribution—that is, theoretically, half a million dollars; is that not correct?

Mr. BROCK. I think it is.

Mr. ALLEN. I am just wondering if that would be in the public interest, to allow these contributions to come in to a big fund there and have it parcelled out without any limitation as to the amount. That is what worries me.

Mr. BROCK. May I say, there is a limit on the individual candidates and on how much he can spend.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; but if he is running short, then the committee can give him a present of tremendous sums of money under the Senator's amendment; is that not correct?

Mr. BROCK. That is correct. I would say to the Senator, and I think that he would agree, that what this is far preferable to receiving a check from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; if he would accept this in place of the provisions, that would be fine; but I am afraid that we will have the other provisions and what the Senator is adding to. If I thought his amendment would help defeat the bill, I would be for the amendment, but as it is now, it looks like a tremendous loophole to provide a method of making large contributions not otherwise permitted under the bill to various candidates for the House and Senate.

I wonder whether the same objective could not be accomplished, possibly, by increasing the amount that the committees can receive and expend rather than leaving it with the sky as the limit.

Mr. BROCK. Perhaps I have an unwarranted faith in our two parties. I do have that faith. I have enormous respect for both parties for their adherence to their basic principles, in their belief in their own party philosophy and their belief in this country. I frankly fear no conflict of interest and I do not put the fear that individuals disburse the money. I have a great deal of fear of a conflict of interest when the Federal Government, or when we, enhance vested interests. That is what I am trying to avoid.

I would point out to the Senator, if my figures are correct—Mr. ALLEN. I think they are fairly close—that as of a month ago, our average contribution was something on the order of $23.75 in the Republican party, which survived and has been sustained ourselves simply because we have a huge number of people willing to participate in support of the party. By no definition can the $23.75 be sufficient to influence the election or the vote of the Senator running for the Senate. But individual senators do not have the capacity to establish that broad base in sufficient magnitude to warrant the confidence that they can finance their own campaigns.

It is the purpose of the committees not to finance a candidate's campaign. That must come essentially from his own State, but it is supportive in the early stages—ait the genesis—of a campaign so that it will attract a broad level of support. The candidate must have a chance to win. Unless his exemption as a candidate is as that House and Senate Campaign Committees. I think that what we will do will be to run the terrible risk of making the bill worse than it is. I share this concern with the Senator from Alabama, in the public aspect of it. We will make the bill worse unless we afford the party some opportunity to support the people who adhere to the party's philosophy.

Mr. ALLEN. Would it be possible for contributors who might not want to appear on the report of a given candidate to make a contribution to the congressional committee, and then the congressional committee makes a contribution to the candidate without the identity of the contributor being made known?

Mr. BROCK. No contributor can, either directly or indirectly, overtly or covertly or even implicitly, imply that he wants funds to go to a particular candidate, without it being reported as a donation by the committee for the candidate. Even under current law in our own committee—I am not sure about my colleague's committee, but I would assume it is similar—we will take a campaign contribution for a particular Senator or challenger and report it forthwith. But we tell the contributor and the challenger that we do not operate a laundry in the Republican party and have no interest in it whatsoever. We adhere religiously not only to the letter but the spirit of the law. We do report those, and we should.

Mr. ALLEN. Under the Senator's amendment, would a contribution to the committee be limited to $3,000?

Mr. ROTH. Yes, as I understand the bill, that is correct.

Mr. COOK. Yes, that is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. What would be the value of getting the candidate contribution to the candidate direct? What magic is there in going through congressional committees?

Mr. BROCK. I would say to the distinguished Senator from Alabama, for whom I have such enormous respect, that nothing at all is wrong with that. In many cases, this Senator would so advise a particular contributor. We do not have many $5,000 contributors. That is not the problem. What we are trying to do is to broaden the base of the party. As I said, the average contribution is $23.75 and we are trying to enlist large numbers of people. That, frankly, is not for the benefit of the candidate broadly. Certainly we can support our candidate broadly. That is the kind of thing we want to attract to, and I think we can attract. If we do, we need to have some method of exemption so that we can get the contributions in bulk. We could not physically handle the volume of each one individually, as the Senator was suggesting the $3,000 contribution, which we could do quite readily.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator for giving me this information. I will not stand in the way of the amendment. Rather, I would say, I should like to be recorded as voting "nay" on the amendment.

Mr. BROCK. I have nothing further, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills:

S. 71. An act for the relief of Ubel D. Polly;
S. 205. An act for the relief of Jorge Mario Bell;
S. 607. An act for the relief of Wilhelm J. B. Majy;
S. 816. An act for the relief of Mrs. Jozefa Sokolowska Domaniewicz.
S. 912. An act for the relief of Mahmood Sharif Seidman;
S. 2112. An act for the relief of Vo Thi Chuong (Nini Anne Hoyt).

The enrolled bills were subsequently signed by the President pro tempore.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1126 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the Record.

The amendment, ordered to be printed in the Record, is as follows:

On page 78, line 16, strike the closing quotation marks and the second period.

On page 78, between lines 16 and 17, insert the following:

"618. Prohibition of contributions other than by individuals.

"Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 615 and 616, no person other than an individual may make a contribution. Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine of not more than $50,000 imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

"On page 78, at the end of the matter appearing below line 22, insert the following:

"618. Prohibition of contributions other than by individuals."

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, this amendment would allow only individuals to make contributions to political campaigns. It would strictly prohibit contributions by organizations, associations, co-ops, caucuses, committees, or any other group which aggregate funds from its members and gives those funds in the name of a cause, interest, or section of the country.

Having served over a year as vice chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities, I can conceive of no more effective way to eliminate the distortive influence of special interests than by banning group contributions. Obviously, not all contributions by groups distort or, in any way, influence the political process. However, there is no effective way to eliminate contributions that do, short of prohibiting group contributions or segregate funds completely—and that is precisely what I propose to do.

I do not think corporations or labor unions should be permitted to contribute. They cannot, but they do through AMPAC, BIPAC, COPE, and a half dozen other devices. Moreover, I do not think purely political action groups should be permitted to contribute.

They cannot vote. The American Medical Association cannot vote. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce cannot vote. Common Cause cannot vote—except at our behest. So, why should they be allowed to contribute. Only individuals can vote, and I believe only individuals should be allowed to contribute.

I do not wish to infringe upon the freedom of association. That freedom is guaranteed by the first amendment to the Constitution; and I do not believe that my amendment would diminish that right in the least. However, it would diminish the ability of groups to assert influence beyond what they wield by virtue of their numbers.

Al Rehrig, the ranking minority member of the Senate Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities, has said the amendment would 'dramatically diminish the ability of special interest groups to influence the election process.'

Mr. President, I might add that if the amendment were adopted, it would diminish the ability of special interest groups to influence the election process. It is for that reason that the amendment is so significant. It is for that reason that the Senate shall vote on this amendment today. And I hope that the Senate will adopt it.
However, I suspect that some might be if that $12,000 were matched by three other committees or corporations of similar interest—interests which would then be represented by $48,000, and probably far more in contributions than they deserve. This is what I mean by the distorting effects of special interests.

The sponsors of the bill argue that S. 3044 is the most realistic answer to this most serious problem. But, I respectfully urge them to tell me how they can make such a claim. Granted, S. 3044 imposes a limit on the amount individuals and groups may contribute to political candidates. But, S. 372 did that; and we could impose such limits without ever having to resort to partial or full public financing. Under S. 3044, any special interest can contribute up to $12,000 to a candidate if it is given separately in the primary and general election campaigns.

I realize that if a major party candidate reaches the required threshold during the primary campaign, he is eligible for a grant from the Treasury to the tune of 15 cents times the voting age population of the State or district. However, individual contributors can still contribute if they wish, so long as their contribution is deducted from the subsidy provided by the Government. Moreover, in any event, the incumbent is not seriously challenged, and that incumbent decides against public financing, the special interests can contribute $5,000 in the primary and another $5,000 in the general election. So what has been done is to protect the political process from special interest contributions in this bill? They can still contribute at least $8,000, and possibly $12,000.

Limiting the total amount of their contributions is a significant improvement over what we have had in the past and what we have today; but I do not think it is enough to convince the American people that the financial influence of the special interests has been diminished, much less eliminated. That is why I propose that only individuals be allowed to contribute—groups and the group contributions be strictly prohibited. Otherwise, the $14.2 million which Common Cause reports have been raised for House and Senate races will be given and public suspicion about corporations, labor unions, and others wielding inordinate political influence will continue.

In disclosing the study last week, a spokesman for Common Cause said:

"Anyone who thinks the Watergate scandals have put special interest groups out of business has a close look at this figure." He went on to say that there is "no way to restore confidence in this system when the same old thing is going on."

This is precisely my point. The special interest groups are alive and well in 1972. Watergate and potential indictments notwithstanding. Moreover, I could not agree more that confidence will only be restored if we correct the glaring abuses of past campaigns. S. 3044, with the avid support of Common Cause, allows the same old things to continue. It will allow groups or organizations, whether they are occupational or otherwise, to distort the most sensitive of all processes. It will perpetuate the worst part of our electoral process. And it will continue the serious erosion of public trust in our major governmental institutions.

I cannot accept the argument that group contributions are necessary to adequately fund an effective two-party system. But even if they were necessary in the past, they certainly should not be under a system of public financing, even or under a refined form of private financing through realistic tax incentives such as I have proposed with Senators Ervin, Talmadge, Germs and others.

I would be willing to bet, though, that under the provisions of S. 3044, in which the role of private contributors has been substantially reduced, this reduction will not be felt so much by the special interests as by the individual contributor. In fact, I doubt very seriously that S. 3044 will reduce at all the number of special interest contributors. I may only reduce slightly the amount of money they can give to individual candidates.

Now, is that real reform? It seems to me that this bill is designed to eliminate the distortive effects of special interests is to prohibit contributions by groups altogether. They cannot vote. Only individuals can vote; and I, therefore, propose that only individuals be allowed to contribute. In my view, it would be the single most constructive improvement we could make in the political process, in the wake of the events of the past 2 years.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. President, while the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee is very laudable in its objectives—all of us want to see a reduction in the influence of special interest groups—it is sor of like throwing the baby out with the bath water. It is an overall situation. It would put all political committees out of business, as well as other types of groups, over and above that of individuals. I do not think it is politically feasible. The candidates could be carried on in this fashion, under the terms of the bill, as we have drafted it, if we are to prohibit any contributions from committees. And I do not see that it really achieves an objective that would be very helpful to the process.

I think the main thing that is going to result in a lessened influence in the political giver field is the fact that we have not required a complete and full disclosure and have limited the amount, so that a person cannot give more than $3,000, and in turn we have limited the expendable income of the committee.

So I would hope my colleagues would not support the amendment. As I said, I do not think it is a practical one. I think we are gradually getting ourselves into a position where it is going to be impossible to carry on political campaigns.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me some time?

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, after my discussion the other day with the Senator from Tennessee, I find myself in a strange position with the amendment of my good friend and colleague from Ten-that we are really building two political parties, as we know them—the Democratic Party and the Republican Party. But nowhere does the Constitution say that there shall be two political parties in the United States. I think that we are saying that a third party will never see the light of day in this country, because the biggest portion of the money will go to the two principal parties, and that they will wish to see reform and make a major impact on the country will not be able to do.

Abraham Lincoln was not a Republican all of his life. It was in 1854 that he joined another group and established the Republican Party. It was a minority party, because he came from the Whig Party. But he decided to change and that showed me that the basic philosophy in this country, I really cannot see that happening, and it bothers me.

I look to the future. I look to 1976 and for a fact later, and I see ourselves in this situation. We discussed it the other day. One party will get 40 percent and the other will get 50 percent. That is 90 percent. The other party gets one-ninth of the money, or $1 million. That means that if there is $10 million, one party would get $9 million and the other party would get $9 million. That would leave a million for the other party.

How can a third party be an effective party in the United States philosophically, to impress its desire and philosophies on the American people, when only one party will get 40 percent or more of the vote? I think that is happening and it bothers me.

This bothers me. I truly bothers me as to how we will freeze in something that the writers of the Constitution never intentended us to do. My salvation is that what Congress can do, Congress can undo. If we can find a better way, we will find a better way. However, I do not honestly believe that in looking for a better way, maybe we will have to try this way.
Maybe we will have to try to find a more equitable solution for equitable distribution of what we do.

I just cannot see how we can say to the American people that we have made honest givers out of them so that each one will give $100, and only $108, and that no organization can give more.

We have done this so many times that we cannot count them. We have said we have the Corrupt Practices Act saying how much Members of Congress can spend on our campaigns. It has not been done in 5 years or more. So if this is the route we are to take, I am afraid it will not be long before we do not know what we are to do. What are we to do in order to put a person in jail because we give $50? Reports that have failed to be filed, and nobody is even concerned over doing anything about it.

So maybe we have to make a stark choice between this and it may sound to me and perhaps find a way out of this to a better way. Maybe we have to go all the way over the hill before we find a way to get back. That is the only way we are to make a change. Every time we make a slight change, we find a way to violate it, knock holes in it, and get around it.

So, Mr. President, I am going to vote against this amendment purely and simply because I think we have to reflect a consideration of the American people.
Rightly or wrongly, we have made a remarkable change, and I totally dislike it. We may be putting the system in jeopardy. But then it is their system that is changed, and if they do not like it, it will be reflected in this Chamber.

Whether they like this system or not, we are not trying to make a change for our convenience. Certainly, some politicians are more interested in the party that made a contribution, somebody cheated.

Mr. President, I am opposing the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee because I think, on reflection, that we have tried, at least, to send to the House of Representatives a chance that will be tremendous, but now we have gotten no action at all. We will get some action, and up to now we have gotten no action at all.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the
Senator yield?
Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Kansas as much time as I have.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I do not know how much time the Senator has, but I want to propound a question to the Senator from Tennessee.

In the discussion he defined the word "contribution." Is that limited to money, or is it limited to so-called volunteer services? Is the meaning of "contribution" under the amendment?
Mr. BAKER. The definition of "contribution" in the body of the bill itself is unchanged. As I understand the bill, that would include many things of value. It would not include, as I understand the description in the bill, the efforts of volunteer workers. It would include office rent, stationery, and things of that sort.
The amendment in no way changes the definition in any section of the bill itself.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, a recent article in the Cincinnati Enquirer—Mr. BAKER. I do not have before me—which speaks about the money spent in Cincinnati, Ohio, and Grand Rapids, Michigan, where labor through paid volunteers was used to work for the candidates and for the telephone banks.

It occurs to the junior Senator from Kansas whether it is a labor organization, or one of the organizations mentioned by the Senator from Tennessee, whether or not they are paid volunteers, paid by the associations or paid by COPE or paid by the unions or paid by the milk producers, we are getting into another area that deserves some attention.

As I understand the amendment, I think it is a step in the right direction.
This problem may be addressed in another area, but, as I understand the amendment, I think it is a step in the right direction.

I do not share the views expressed by my friend the Senator from Kentucky that nothing else has worked, and that we will not have a first party, let alone a second or a third party. If we adopt such a financplan, I think that the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee is a big step in the direction not only of disclosure, but also of limiting contributions to an individual. As far as I am concerned, we are taking a long way toward cleaning up the process.

I support the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. PREJDING OFFICER. Who yields time?
Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. BAKER. I yield.
Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I am strongly in favor of this amendment. I think it is the right approach. I think it has a twofold virtue. It enables a party's candidates to get sufficient campaign funds if they have sufficient public appeal.

Furthermore, it interests the American citizens in the electoral process voluntarily, and not involuntarily as the bill does. I sincerely believe that this will come nearer to solving this problem than any suggestion that has been made at any time prior to this amendment, and I strongly support it.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am certain that the Senator from North Caro-лина has more experience on this problem than any other Member of this body. I appreciate his remarks.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. BAKER. I yield.
Mr. BROCK. I commend the Senator for this amendment. I have great sympathy with it.

I would like to clarify one point, for the purpose of establishing legislative history, and that is, does the amendment inhibit the right of the Senate or House of Representatives Democratic or Republican campaign committees to support the candidates of their choice?

Mr. BAKER. It is my understanding that the effect of this amendment on the bill as a whole—has to do solely with those who can legally contribute; the amendment would require that only qualified voters be allowed to contribute to those committees. It would not prevent those committees, however, such as the Democratic or Professional committees campaign committees or campaign committees, from performing their function.

Mr. BROCK. And the committees could support the candidates of their choice?
Mr. BAKER. That is my intention.
That is the way I interpret the amendment when read in context with the rest of the bill.

Mr. BROCK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. DOLE. I yield.
Mr. COOK. If only qualified voters can contribute to that fund, which then, in turn, contributes to a candidate, if that fund is not a qualified voter how can it contribute to a candidate?

Mr. BAKER. Because there is another form of the bill which recognizes campaign committees.

Mr. COOK. In other words, the section the Senator is amending allows not only qualified voters, but campaign committees, to contribute to a candidate?
Mr. BAKER. That is right. The committees which are described in the bill itself, the central campaign committees, for instance, $30, and the congressional and senatorial campaign committees which are referred to in the bill as well. We do not change that section, therefore we do not change their rationale, nor for being the legitimacy of contributions by them.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the Senator very much, and I appreciate his intent and purpose.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Do I correctly understand, in other words, that the COPE organization of the AFL-CIO, under the amendment, would be able to make a contribution?

Mr. BAKER. No, it would not.

Mr. HUMPHREY. What is wrong with that? It is a committee.

Mr. BAKER. Yes, but neither COPE, the Anti-Defamation League, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, nor anything of that sort could contribute to one of the committees involved, except the senatorial or House committee of either party or its central campaign committee.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Why not, if the workers want to contribute $2 apiece, let the committee write out a receipt showing that they contribute $2, and put it into a fund? Why cannot someone make a contribution under the limitations of the bill? I do not think they ought to have an unlimited right, but if I understand, under the bill the maximum amount would be $6,000.

Mr. BAKER. That would be $12,000 for a primary and a general election; $6,000 if it is only one.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes. Mr. BAKER. My reason for it, in answer to the question of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, is that I think the aggregation of money in that way creates an aura of mammon, in many instances, that has a distortive impact far beyond the importance of the individual committee, whether it is a labor organization, a business association, or a COPE.

I think it is perfectly appropriate and much to be desired that the individual worker make his $2 contribution, but he should send that $2 contribution to the central campaign committee of a candidate, or a congressional or senatorial campaign committee, and not under the aegis or auspices of his company, his union, or any other group that itself is not a bona fide member of society.

This strikes at the very reason and rationale for this amendment, I might say to the Senator, in section 301, and it is my belief that only individuals should contribute, and that special interest groups, whether they are business-oriented, labor-oriented, industry-oriented, commerce-oriented, or whatever kind of groups, should not be able to make these huge contributions that they do frequently make.

Mr. HUMPHREY. What about the Democratic or Republican Central Campaign Committees?

Mr. BAKER. They are specifically referred to in another section of the bill, and would continue to function, except that this amendment would preclude the receipt of those committees of contributions except from individuals.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Except from individuals?

Mr. BAKER. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. But it would not prohibit those committees, as such, after they have garnered in the money from individuals, which is exactly basically what they do, from contributing up to the maximum amount that right?

Mr. BAKER. It would not prohibit them from functioning as they now function. The distinction, and the reason for it, is that the party system itself contemplate that the party will contribute to its nominees and candidates, but that is distinguished from special interest groups, whether it be the milk industry, labor unions, or whatever.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Or the AMA? Mr. BAKER. Or the ABA, or the Sierra Club. There is a legitimate reason for a party to try to elect its candidates.

Mr. HUMPHREY. There does not call the Democratic National Committee a party as such, does he?

Mr. BAKER. Yes; there are two, one Democratic National Committee, the Democratic Central Campaign Committee and the Democratic Congressional Committees are in fact a part of the Democratic Party.

No one doubts that. I think they add strength to the party system, and I have a great deal of respect for the two-party system, and believe this amendment will strengthen it rather than diminish it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Just to get the record clear, then, once again, this amendment would eliminate, for example, any funds from, let us say, the political action committee of the American Medical Association?

Mr. BAKER. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Or the Chamber of Commerce?

Mr. BAKER. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Or the insurance industry?

Mr. BAKER. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Or the labor movement?

Mr. BAKER. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Or the Friends of the Wilderness?

Mr. BAKER. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Or you name it; in other words, if they went out and solicited their membership for voluntary contributions, they would still not be eligible under this particular amendment.

Mr. BAKER. This is absolutely correct. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time, if the chairman is prepared to yield back his.

Mr. CANNON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HELMS). All remaining time having been used, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. Fulbright), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. Gravel), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. Hughes), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Metzenbaum) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Hornbeck), the Senator from Montana (Mr.计FFIN), the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. Young) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia, the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Percy), and the Senator from New York (Mr. Buckley), the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Humble), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. Aiken) are absent due to illness in the family.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 53—:

Mr. BAKER from Kentucky (Mr. Hornbeck) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRiffin. I announce that the Senator from New York (Mr. Buckley), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Percy), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. Young) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia, the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Percy), and the Senator from New York (Mr. Buckley) are absent on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. Aiken) is absent due to illness in the family.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 53.

Mr. Baker Dominick McGovern.

Mr. CARR. I call the roll.

Mr. CARR. The roll is closed. The result is—yeas 36, nays 53.

Mr. BAKER. The amendment (No. 1126) was rejected.

THE INCOME TAX MATTER OF THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this morning I made a statement before the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxa-
April 3, 1974

S 5195

STATEMENT OF CARL T. CURTIS BEFORE WHAT all this mean to me is that there are papers and the which Messrs. Rose and cross-examination, as is recollection of the _sident's statements of agreed. They the staff's report on of pre-presidential which the President not present and the cross-examination. In my view, therefore, all agreed with certainty so far there are fundamental facts. The resolution of particular controversies, especially legal significance as to the facts, a judicial approach, and nothing less, is required. We are not the people.

I also now appear agreed that, even if we had an agreed statement of facts, which we do not have, we could not simply apply well-established principles of law to those facts as we originally thought we could do. This is because it now has become apparent there are honest differences as to what the law requires.

Let me illustrate the staff's report states that a deed was required to effect the 1969 gift of papers because there were restrictions on their use. The President's counsel disagreed. I have no need for a deed since it should have been assumed that the restrictions attached to the 1969 gift were equally applicable to the 1968 gift. As a matter of common sense, this is persuasive to me. Moreover, if I recall the principles of the law governing such a deed, it is not an essential element of a gift of personal property. Additionally, the Presidential Libraries Act suggests a favorable policy in favor of gifts of papers. The President's counsel made much of this fact. It seems to me that some of their points are well-taken. Yet, it seems to me that the staff may disagree. I could go on, but these two examples illustrate to me that the legal principles are not as clear-cut as has been supposed they would be.

Since there are both fundamental factual disputes and legal principles, what course of action should we take? In my view, there is only one proper course. We should be decided in a proper judicial forum. If fairness to the public, to the President, and to the truth, we see no other alternative if the facts were undisputed and complete, and they are neither, perhaps we might make a judgment. But, at present, we have no basis for such a judgment.

I therefore propose that we let the IRS make its assessment and, if the President disagrees, we can decide ourselves. If the IRS agrees with the other taxpayer, may have his recourse to the courts. The Staff's report may be forwarded to the Committee so decided together with any supporting evidence. This would not properly read.

If we cannot agree on a decision, the time may come in the future to decide what course we will follow.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote taken on amendment No. 1192, for a technical correction.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, that amendment would not change the calendar limit on the $25,000 which an individual may contribute to all candidates and committees, as applied to Senate and House campaign committees. The motion showed that that was not the intent.

We have discussed the matter with the Parliamentary and the legal counsel in order to get the correct wording; and I therefore move to amend that amendment as follows: On line 7, after the word "to" insert the following: "contributions made by".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 35, line 7, after the word "to" insert "contributions made by".

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I say to my colleagues that all this does is to make absolutely clear that this does not remove the $25,000 overall contribution limit that we had written in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the Record.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 35, line 14, strike out "tenth" and insert in lieu thereof "fifth".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the Record.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 35, line 14, strike out "tenths" and insert in lieu thereof "fifth".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is now before the Senate.
On page 36, line 15, after "filed on" insert the following: "the fifth day preceding an election or".

On page 63, beginning with line 11, strike out three lines and insert in lieu thereof "318."

On page 64, line 7, strike out "318." and insert in lieu thereof "317."

On page 64, line 14, strike out "319." and insert in lieu thereof "318."

On page 75, line 19, strike out "(a)" and insert in lieu thereof "(a) (1)".

On page 75, between lines 23 and 24, insert the following:

"(2) No candidate may knowingly accept a contribution from, or for the benefit of, or a candidate for that candidate’s campaign for nomination for election, or election, during the period which begins on the tenth day preceding the day of that election and which ends on the day of that election."

On page 77, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following:

"(e) No candidate, or person who accepts contributions or authorizes the use of that candidate, may accept a contribution which, when added to all other contributions accepted by that candidate or person, is in excess of the amount which is reasonably necessary to defray the expenditures of that candidate’s campaign."

On page 77, line 6, strike out "(e)" and insert in lieu thereof "(f)".

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, it is my intention, if it is agreeable to the managers of the bill and the leadership, now that the amendment has been laid before the Senate, to reserve until tomorrow the debate on the amendment and the vote. It is 5:20 p.m., and if the leadership or the managers of the bill wish, I will be happy to proceed; but it appears now more important to make this the pending business after the cloture vote tomorrow.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator will be doing us a favor if he does that. I wish he would.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Regardless of the outcome of the cloture vote. Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BAKER. Does that require a unanimous-consent agreement? If it does, I do propound that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does not require a unanimous-consent.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair. Under those circumstances, I reserve my time until the appropriate point during the proceedings on tomorrow.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE ACT OF 1974—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I submit a report of the conference committee on H.R. 6186, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PELL). The report will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (H.R. 6186) to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1974 regarding the taxation of dividends received by a corporation from insurance companies, banks, and other savings institutions, having met, after careful consideration of the report of the Senate, the amendments reported to the Senate by the Senate conferees, recommend to the respective Houses the following:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate agreed to consider the report.

The conference report was printed in the House proceedings of the Congressional Record of March 27, 1974, at p. H3271.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, this conference report has been cleared with both sides.

I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 6186. This legislation must be viewed in the context of the Hatch Act. The need for this legislation arose when the Civil Service Commission rendered an opinion indicating that the current appointed Mayor, Commissioner, Chairman, member of the City Council, and District of Columbia would have to resign their offices in order to seek one of the elective offices created under the Home Rule Act. The legislation has a twofold purpose. First, it prevents a possible hiatus in governance in the District of Columbia by allowing the current appointed officials to run for elective office without resigning. Second, the legislation is designed to actively promote the widest possible participation in the first elections held under the Home Rule Act.

This legislation provides that persons employed by the United States Government and by the government of the District of Columbia shall be permitted to be candidates in the first elections for the offices of Mayor, Chairman, or member of the Council. Without this legislation, the Hatch Act, which prohibits Federal and District employees from taking an active part in political management or political campaigns, would have prevented such persons from being candidates. The legislation provides that an individual who works for the U.S. Government or the government of the District of Columbia who becomes a candidate may take an active part in political management or political campaigns in the elections for the offices of Mayor, Chairman, and member of the Council. The exemptions apply only to candidates.

The exemptions are very limited and are intended to allow Federal and District employees to be candidates for these offices without resigning their employment. It is important to stress that participation in political management and political campaigns will still be prohibited by persons who do not qualify as bona fide candidates. It is also important to stress that all of the other provisions of the Hatch Act will continue to apply to Federal and non-Federal employees.

timent in Britain. An unprecedented small proportion of Chancellor Brandt is said to be facing serious political difficulty within his own party which places added pressure on his coalition government. He continues to have many problems they have over the years and Georges Pompidou, there is new political uncertainty in France as the election process proceeds.

The clear lack of political stability in Europe, combined with the uncertain economic climate of the Atlantic, makes the coming months a particularly auspicious time to embark on unilateral troop reductions. Some European experts of the political process see the very likely possibility that an American unilateral troop reduction would greatly "radicalize" European politics. Whether this is the case, it is clear that the political implications of an abrupt American move would have many of the same dislocating influences on the European political scene at a time of existing political and economic difficulties.

If a unilateral American troop withdrawal were to occur increased political uncertainty, it would surely heighten nationalist sentiment in Western Europe. I have little doubt that greater European nationalism could, in turn, trigger an increased economic and political reaction in the United States. Ultimately, the alliance would suffer from such a deterioration of economic and political relations. It is perhaps not best to be found in military power alone. It is also to be found in economic and political cooperation in a context of greater consultation.

Almost every member of our alliance at one time or another has complained because its allies were not giving it material or moral support in some area outside of the geographical limitations described before. This is an other fundamental issue which must be faced and discussed openly.

The Dutch had their complaints about the U.S. attitude toward the former East Indies. The French have often raised the issue that the United States somehow promoted the loss of the Congo. Above all, the French have complained bitterly about inadequate U.S. support in Southeast Asia and virtually nonexistent support with respect to North Africa. The United States for its part turned right around and complained about the lack of enthusiasm of its alliance partners for the struggle in Southeast Asia when we took it over from the French. There is a certain irony and a certain justice involved in that proposition.

Myself and most importantly, the United States and its Western European Allies have had a very real difference of opinion over developments in the Middle East. This is a matter of profound concern to me personally because of my deep interest in the Middle East settlement. I have been disappointed that the weight of the Atlantic Alliance has not been brought to bear on us in helping to bring about such a settlement.

At the same time, I can intellectually, if not emotionally, appreciate a number of the arguments made by our European friends about their desire for non-involvement. Considering the more fortunate position of the United States with respect to energy and the dominant role played by American companies in the oil production of the Middle East, Western European Allies should have parted company with us to some degree in their rather frantic efforts to deal with the energy crisis. They have had some reason to feel fractious because of their higher collective dependence on foreign oil for a far greater exposure to Arab blackmailing efforts, and they are already enormously more concerned about the maintenance of the balance of payments. The loss of our help and express the belief that we have been making substantial progress in remedying the breach caused within the alliance by these very important disagreements. I am not just being an instinctive optimist in expressing the view that we will overcome any such problems; as we have overcome others in the past.

But it should be noted that every occasion one NATO member or another has been disappointed by the behavior of other allies when efforts are made to transfer the moral and political authority of the United States to the European context. Despite these understandable differences, the NATO alliance remains strong and durable.

During the past few weeks both Americans and Europeans have spoken more bluntly and frankly about European-American relations both within and outside of the NATO alliance than at any other time in more than a century. I have expressed my dissatisfaction with the remarks made by President Nixon and others which seemed to threaten our allies and demand certain behavior from them in order to insure our participation in their defense.

I want to restate my strong belief that these tactics do not strengthen a military alliance and surely do little to encourage greater economic and political cooperation across the Atlantic. If the American presence in Europe is indeed a key element in its security, then using this fact as a bargaining chip in economic and political negotiations among allies does little to convince Europeans of our desire to see the defense of Europe and the United States in one and the same. It is an unfortunate way of behaving when time and time again we have heard that our commitment to Europe is non-negotiable.

It is clear that we must search for a way to increase the consultation procedures both in and outside of the alliance. Both the United States and its NATO allies have to stop failing to consult one another. Without the development of formalized consultation procedures, I fear that we will be continually faced with recurring crises as a result of precipitous action taken without consultation. The tendency for action without consultation to occur in the economic and political context is compounded by the same necessity in the military context. But it is impossible to contain the resulting ill feelings and hostility among allies solely in the original area in which the crisis arises. Of course, the spillover which damages the entire range of European-American relations.

These are only some of the complicated areas we must deal with on a daily basis in order to maintain and improve our alliance relationships.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I believe we must continue to deal with the Soviet Union and the countries of Eastern Europe in ways approaching normal relationships as closely as possible, while simultaneously remembering that we cannot help but express and act in concert with our own opposition to the totalitarian rule of societies to the East. We are going to have to deal more vigorously with the question of creating a more different understanding of the use of nuclear weapons, in all their varieties and in all their menace. The critically important SALT talks must be fostered and assisted to the best of our abilities, as well as the current MBFR negotiations.

These are all great and challenging tasks. And the road ahead assuredly can be regarded as a smooth one. On both sides of the Atlantic we face serious economic and political dislocations which only serve to exacerbate tensions within a military alliance. But I am confident that if we are able to work together to assure their mutual security as they have done over the last quarter of a century, NATO continues to be the shield of our defense, and a vital force for peace and cooperation.

THE PRESIDENT'S TAXES

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation has reviewed its staff report on the President's taxes for the years 1969 through 1972. While we have not completely analyzed all of the technical aspects of the report, the members agree with the substance of most of the recommendations made by the staff. Because of the President's decision to pay the deficit and invest in 1972, as asserted by the Internal Revenue Service, whose determinations closely approximate the recommendations of the committee's staff, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation has decided to conclude its examination of the President's return. The committee commends the President for his prompt decision to make these tax payments.

The above statement was agreed to by all of the members of the joint committee present except the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. Currie).

Senator Cooper expressed the view that he concurred in the motion to conclude the examination but dissented from the concurrence with the staff report.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN

ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the hour of 11 a.m. having arrived, the Senate will now resume the consideration of the unfinished business. S. 844, with the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 844. To amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for the public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Time for debate between 11 a.m. and 12 o'clock noon will be equally divided, and controlled by the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. Cannon) and the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. Allen).

Who yields the floor?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the question now before the Senate is whether debate on this great and fundamental issue shall be brought to a close and the bill in its present shape, with little likelihood of amendments, will be read a second time and go forward to a Committee of the Whole, where there will be no opportunity to amend the bill.

That is what this bill provides, and I submit that it is not.

Now, what are the facts? First of all, the Senate from Alabama has been trying to get them reduced to $250--what reform is the Senate from Alabama advocating? And then paying a subsidy running up to over $2 million in the State of California, or any other State in the Union, and then paying a subsidy running up to $2,121,000.

When I talk about the evil of big contributions, and the Senator from Alabama has been trying to get them reduced, but the advocates of public financing want them reduced. They want it to be $3,000----I call that a big deal.

I submit that it is not.

The issue presented here, as the Senator from Alabama sees it, is whether by extending the debate we might end up with a true reform measure, or whether we are going to settle for a solution of handling the bill to the taxpayer.

Mr. President, earlier this year, the Senate rejected an effort to increase the compensation of the Members of the House and the Senate by $2,500. The Senator from Alabama voted against that effort. How can we consistently say that we are not going to pay the House and the Senate Members $2,500 more in salary, but that we are going to make it possible for them to reach into the Federal till and pull out up to $2 million in the State of California, or any other State in the Union, and then paying a subsidy running up to over $2 million in the State of California, or any other State in the Union.

The issue is whether we are going to pass a measure, a so-called reform, which in actuality is for a Federal subsidy. When we already have Federal subsidy to a great extent----Federal subsidy in every field one can think of, for that matter----and we are now getting around to subsidizing the politicians directly. There has been a great deal of talk about subsidizing them indirectly. This would subsidize them directly.

Mr. President, earlier this year, the Senate rejected an effort to increase the compensation of the Members of the House and the Senate by $2,500. The Senator from Alabama voted against that effort.

If the public is unwilling to compensate the Members of the House and the Senate by an additional $2,500, once the media is willing to make this issue known, do you think they are going to be content with a Federal subsidy to a neighborhood of a half billion dollars every 4 years for the politicians of this country, those who are in the House and the Senate, or want to be in the House and the Senate, and those who want the Presidency? I do not believe that the people of this Nation will do so.

If this issue is properly presented, not as a reform measure, but as a reform, all right, in the sense that it reforms, it reforms the law; it reshapes the law; but it is not reform. Yes, it changes the law by taking it out of the private reforming law and putting it under the Public Treasury pay for it.

If the public ever finds out the true issues involved here, they are not going to look kindly on this effort to saddle the taxpayers of this land with the campaign expenses of all the politicians from every party and every state with no delegation. The matter of public financing is not a fair and reasonable means for the country who aspire to serve in the House and the Senate or in the Presidency. The members are the only people in this community who believe in that. I urge them to consider this, to take their position and to express to the Senate, the House of Representatives, and to the American people that they are not going to be satisfied with the campaign expenses of all the politicians from every party and every state with no delegation.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I shall cast my vote today against the cloture motion, because I realize full well that my position may be misunderstood. It is largely, I fear, that the public will be misled into the belief that campaign reform is being filibustered to death in the United States Senate.

Tragically, in my view, the American people will find it difficult to get the facts. Three of the four titles left in this bill can be described as genuine campaign finance reform. But unfortunately, title I, which would establish public financing of campaigns—financing directly out of the Public Treasury—does not contribute reform. It would allow for contributions to super PACs, the secret ballot to fund the Treasury, and an attempt to raise $90,000 for individual candidates. It would be a step forward, but it would be a step in the wrong direction. I believe that public financing is an important issue that should be considered.

Now, we could argue a lot about the formula. The distinction from Michigan said the amount for Members of the House was too big. It may well be that it is too big. There is no magic in the figure of $90,000. We arrived at that because it was a figure we had used in S. 372 last year. But basically, I, for one, feel, and I think the remainder of the committee members felt, that this is a matter that the House should determine. So let the bill go over to the House, and whatever figure they decide is reasonable for Members of the House we can go along with, but we did try to arrive at a formula that would determine the races for President and Vice President and would determine senatorial races. The House was not wedded to the figures there. When we use the figure 10 cents per voting population in the primary, that may not be the correct figure. Perhaps 8 cents is more correct, with a maximum of $1,000,000 for small states and small districts. I do not know whether 15 cents per voting age population is the correct formula or not on the general election. But I say the way to decide that is not to try to kill the bill. The way to decide that is to try to offer amendments to this particular bill to change the formula if one does not like that particular formula.

Last year the Senate voted 58 to 34 for some form of public financing of presidential primaries and general elections and congressional general elections only. In this bill we went further than that. We made one-half matching in the primary election if the person reached the threshold amount, so we would attempt to discourage persons who were not really serious candidates and who had no widespread appeal. We did include the primary elections based on that matching amount in this bill.

So, Mr. President, I am going to vote myself in a rather unusual position this morning. I am a person who has traditionally opposed cloture in the Congress, because...
I felt these matters should be debated at length. On the other hand, as floor manager of the bill here, I would like to get to the issue. I have not voted for cloture many times in the period I have been in the Congress. While I did not join in signing the cloture motion, I do intend to vote for cloture in this instance, in the hope that we can go through the other amendments, that we can adopt amendments that may vary the formula we have and may change some particulars of the bill itself, but mainly so that we can carry out what has now been determined on at least two occasions by the Senate—first by Senator Watergate and the furor over the milk producers, and now by the House so that we can get it to the House so they can work their will on it.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, on whose time?

Mr. CANNON. On my time.

The Acting PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The Acting PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON).

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Nevada very much for his yield and I also thank him for the very effective work he has been doing in handling this measure on the floor.

I want to say to the Senator from Alabama that I am delighted he is on the floor, because I wanted to cover one point while he was present, since he has been mentioning one aspect of the bill as it relates to the State of California from time to time.

As I listened to his remarks a couple of days ago, I found myself in some agreement with him in his references to the amount of funding which would be available to a candidate from California under this bill.

This aspect of public financing of election candidates I have given me real concern. I am troubled by the amount of Federal funding which would be available to me personally as a candidate for the U.S. Senate in the Nation's most populous State, although, obviously, there is almost no chance that a public financing proposal might be enacted in time to affect this year's election.

I would like to say to the Senator from Alabama that even if I am re-elected, we are looking ahead to the 1980 election.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that precise point?

Mr. CRANSTON. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. One of the amendments we have already adopted now is to completely eliminate the 1974 election, so if the bill is passed with that amendment in it, it would preclude the Senator himself from being involved in it in any way.

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank the Senator very much for his statement. I will ever be affected by it depends on what will happen in this year's election.

My first reaction—and this was when I developed a similar bill affecting California—was that the rest of the nation was that I should propose a ceiling lower than 15 cents per eligible voter in Senate and Presidential races in such large States as California and New York—so that my proposal would not appear to be self-serving, monetarily, and also to reduce the total cost of public financing.

My second reaction was that such a ceiling in itself could be self-serving, since it might deny a potential opponent adequate funds to overcome whatever was built in advantage I have as an incumbent.

On Monday, I had the opportunity to vote with the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. Buckley) on his amendment to reduce by 20 percent the amount of money available to an incumbent. I supported that amendment, because I believe that incumbents do have a substantial advantage in their efforts for reelection.

A number of Senators in the course of this debate have commented on the inconsistency between recent polls showing a candidate with an extremely low esteem, a number of individual incumbents are running stronger in polls taken on their own races, and the majority of incumbents are expected to win reelection.

Possibly fewer incumbents will be re-elected this year, but a majority will be re-elected—that is normal insofar as incumbents seeking reelection is concerned.

This inconsistency, it seems to me, illustrates the enormity of advantage to holding public office, which enables an incumbent to overcome this public doubt about the legislative body in which he serves. Clearly, it is reasonable to allow nonincumbents more campaign funds in order to try to equalize the imbalance in the present system.

Even though that amendment was defeated, the bill before us, which provides Federal funding for and nonincumbents, will be of greater advantage to the challenger than the present system. The reason for this is fairly obvious: an incumbent usually finds it easier to raise campaign funds than does a nonincumbent. When I support public financing, I do so knowing full well that the news of the unconscionable war chests of days ago, I found myself in some fact reality. Without objection, it is so ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. Yes, I believe that to be the case.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy).

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the central issue in the struggle for cloture on the election reform bill now before the Senate is who owns Congress? Put another way, the question is whether we in Congress are going to put our own house in order by adopting public financing for our own elections.

We already have public financing for Presidential elections. In fact, we enacted it into law 7 months before the Watergate break-in. Yet, today, nearly 2 years after the Watergate break-in, Congress is still trying to decide whether public financing is right for its own elections.

If any set of facts can tip the balance in favor of public financing in Senate and House elections, it ought to be the news of the unconscionable war chests that special interest groups have already put together for the 1974 congressional elections. As reported recently by Common Cause, registered political committees affiliated with special interest groups had already amassed the enormous sum of $1.6 million, or more than the entire amount spent by such committees in all of 1972.

The message from that list is unmistakable. The lobbyists and special interest groups have already put together a more than $1.6 million, or more than the entire amount spent by such committees in all of 1972.

The message from that list is unmistakable. The lobbyists and special interest groups have already put together a more than $1.6 million, or more than the entire amount spent by such committees in all of 1972.

The message from that list is unmistakable. The lobbyists and special interest groups have already put together a more than $1.6 million, or more than the entire amount spent by such committees in all of 1972.
would have been gun-shy about campaign contributions. Hardly. Not when vast benefits to the hundreds of thousands or even millions of dollars are to be gained for the bargain price of a well-placed campaign contribution. And so, AMPI's publication lists the following, the list of all special interest groups in the size of the war chest for 1974—$1.4 million by the end of February and still counting. The price of a quart of milk is more than Sky Full. Who knows how much more the forgotten American consumer will be paying, once AMPI's 1974 war chest works its way into the mainstream of Federal legislation?

To take the American Medical Association. The AMA has a war chest of $889,000. Is there any doubt that this AMA money will be used in the fall elections to subvert national health insurance and to support candidates who oppose health reform?

Undoubtedly, anyone in Congress who goes down the list of special interest committees will know exactly what each group wants from Congress.

The issue is an ancient one. No man can serve two masters. No Senator or Congress can serve both the people of America and his big campaign contributors. So long as we in the Congress continue the practice of financing our campaigns with the dollars of a wealthy few who have a stake in the laws we pass, corruption will keep increasing and democracy will keep decaying.

The names of future scandals will be different, but the problem will be the same, because the laws we pass will always bear the brand of the special interest groups.

We can end this shameful spectacle by which Congress puts itself up for auction every second year. We can wash away the growing stain on America's democracy. But we can do so only by making a clean break with our corrupt and discredited system of private financing of elections.

It is time for Congress to change its spots. It is time we held up the mirror of what Congress is doing to itself. The issue is a distinguished Senator from Nevada. Mr. CANNON), we have had extensive committee hearings. Different groups put forward their ideas and suggestions. The committee has acted. We are ready to vote.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Massachusetts has expired. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. I ask for 3 more minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I yield the Senator 3 additional minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Nonetheless, after we have come through this extensive and exhaustive procedure in the Senate, we find ourselves embroiled again in a full and extended debate on the filibuster. The overwhelming majority of Members of this body, want to face up to this issue. The overwhelming majority of the American people want Congress to face up to this issue. Still, we are being frustrated in facing up to it by a filibuster.

Many Members of this body recognize extended debate as the means of protecting us from the folly of one or of the Members of this body is able to prevent the majority from acting. And it is a difficult decision and a difficult moral judgment because all of us in the majority want to respect the strong views of the minority among us, but all of us also want the Congress to get back on the path of truly representing all the people. It is not just today's vote we look at, but the road ahead for Congress in the Nation's future.

Few issues have been debated and discussed as extensively as this one has. There is a very clear mandate for this proposal from the American people. That mandate has been expressed here by past votes and during the course of this debate by the Members of this body. What we are asking is an opportunity to face up to the issue, and not to be portrayed from doing so by those who are unalterably opposed to this reform. I am hopeful that we will invoke cloture on this issue.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, how much time remains to the Senator from Alabama?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 3 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts has said that the issue is who owns Congress, indicating, I assume, that some Members of Congress are subservient to special interests. He did not bother to name any, and I wonder who those Senators are.

The Senator from Alabama is not one of them. I daresay that the Senator from Alabama, in the upcoming race in his home State this fall, will not spend one cent of the amount of money that would be available to him under this public financing, so it would be interesting to know who some of these Senators are who are subservient to special interests.

Also, Mr. President, there is the non sequitur that the distinguished Senator from Nevada has used and the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts is using that the way to remove the influence of special interests is to provide for public financing, and hand the bill to the taxpayers.

That is not necessary at all. All that is necessary is to cut down on the amount of money that is needed. That is what the Senator from Alabama has been trying to do. But I notice that the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Nevada voted against my amendment to cut permissible contributions to $250 in Presidential races and $100 in House and Senate races. That is the way to remove any sinister influence, if we are going to have any sharing of the costs at all. Also, the Senator from Nevada said:

Well, we ought to improve the bill by offering amendments.

The Senator knows that if cloture is invoked in a few minutes, there will be no opportunity to offer any other amendments; so the way to get perfecting amendments offered and considered would be to vote down cloture, Mr. President, so that other amendments can be presented.

The issue here is whether we will continue to have the process of voluntary participation by the American people in elections, or whether we are going to turn the bill over to the taxpayers, and let the taxpayers pay the bill.

I was somewhat amused by the doubts of the distinguished Senator from California, who said he was disturbed about this $52 million which would be handed to a candidate for the Senate out there. He was troubled about it, but he has resolved his doubts and is willing to see a candidate for the Senate received $2,- 131,000 to make his general election campaign.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. What is the situation, Mr. President?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada has 6 minutes remaining. The Senator from Alabama has 1 remaining minute.

Mr. CANNON. At 12 o'clock, does a quorum call ensue?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. A quorum call is automatic under the rules.

Mr. CANNON. To be immediately followed by the cloture vote?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. When there is a quorum, that is correct.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I do not know that these matters have add to what has already been said on this matter. The issue is simply whether we do or do not want campaign reform, and with that reform, whether we have it include the public financing of campaigns on a matching basis in the primaries and on a complete basis in the general elections.

As I said before, the Senate has already spoken on that particular issue. A majority of the Senators have voted at least twice that is what the Senate desires. So this is an opportunity, now, to make a determination of whether the percentage is high enough that cloture can be invoked, in order that this... bill can come to a vote of the Senate and the Senate can invoke its will.

Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Do I correctly understand that if cloture is invoked today, various amendments—and I am not sure I understand there are about 80 at the desk, dealing with a range of public and private financing issues—will be considered by the Senate, and that the Senate will have an opportunity to debate these amendments and vote on every one of them, and get an expression by Members of the Senate on each amendment? Is that correct?

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is correct. It is my understanding that there are about 86 amendments at the desk, each of which would be available to be called up and for a vote to be had on them in the process after the conclusion of the cloture vote, so that those particular issues certainly could be considered over and over as the issues that have already been considered in the bill.

I do not know just how many amendments we have adopted so far, but I know we have had a considerable number of votes on the bill so far.

Mr. KENNEDY. Would the Senator not agree with me that it would be surprising if any new issues are introduced, since this matter has been thoroughly discussed over the last 2 weeks?

Mr. CANNON. This issue has been before us for a long time, and it would seem to me that Senators who have issues in which they feel strongly would have them at the desk by now. I cannot conceive of many new issues that would come up by this late date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. All time of the Senator from Nevada has expired. The Senator from Alabama has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield my 1 minute to the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Cannon).

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, if this bill passes in its present form, the public may be fooled by the reports into thinking that the abuses of Watergate have been corrected—that Congress has voted for reform.

It is important, I believe, to state again that five out of the seven members of the Senate’s Watergate Investigating Committee have positioned themselves against public financing. They do not regard public financing as the reform needed to take care of Watergate.

Furthermore, while the bill dips deep into the Treasury, it does not eliminate special interest contributions and influence. Indeed, the other day, an amendment which I opposed, was adopted to increase the ceiling on a contribution from a special interest group to a candidate from $3,000 to $6,000. So, we have been going in the wrong direction.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the campaign reform bill pending before the Senate today may well be more important than any other legislation to come before this Congress, in terms of its long-term implications for our country. In my judgment, it is essential that we overcome the delaying tactics being employed by opponents of this bill; for one certainly will vote to limit debate so that we may take a final vote on this bill, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Every responsible American citizen has recoiled in revulsion at the disclosure of the abuses of our political system committed during the 1972 presidential election campaign. These acts, lumped together generically as “The Watergate Scandal,” represent an alien and diabolical perversion of our political system. Nevertheless, they occurred; they occurred within the highest levels of our governmental and political structures, and they occurred despite laws which prohibit such behavior.

The Watergate scandal was a national trauma that continues to this day, and is likely to become even more serious before it is ended. It is a tribute to the American people that they have insisted on a full airing of this dismal business, despite the pain involved. It is a testament to our system of justice that those guilty of crimes are being called swiftly to account. And it is an affirmation of the strength of our political and governmental systems that they will survive Watergate, perhaps stronger than before.

The Watergate scandal is the disgrace and tragedy of a handful of cynical men. But, it would be a national disgrace, and perhaps a national tragedy, if we as a people failed to learn from this experience and act to prevent it from happening again.

As a member of the Committee on Rules and Administration, where this bill was developed, I can say it was carefully drafted with the cooperation of Watergate, and the guiding principles of our democracy, firmly in mind. It is certainly not a panacea, but no legislation is. However, I think nearly all Senators would agree that most provisions of this bill are necessary reforms that would be effective in insuring high standards of political conduct.

The provisions that some Senators strongly disagree with is public financing of election campaigns. It is appropriate that this be the greatest point of controversy, since it is the most important point contained in this bill.

I am not sure whether I would agree that “money is the root of all evil.” But, it was unquestionably the root of much of the evil associated with Watergate, and must be considered in many other areas of political activity. Furthermore, we have seen that no number of laws to regulate the use of political contributions can be effective in eliminating all abuses in the area. The only way we will ever effectively eliminate the abuse of political contributions as a deterrent to good politics and good government is to finance campaigns for public office, from the public treasury.

This bill establishes the principle of public financing in federal elections and general elections for Federal office. At the same time, it allows for gradual transition by offering candidates for Congress and for President the option of raising money entirely on public financing, or on private contributions, or on a mix of both. Furthermore, it is carefully designed to preserve the two-party system, allowing for challenges from serious third-party, or independent candidates. And, it contains safeguards against the public financing of frivolous candidates.

Mr. President, the provisions of this legislation, the reasons why it is needed, and the arguments for and against it, are well known to Members of the Senate. If we are to behave responsibly and respond to the demands of our constituents for reform, we must turn away from further debate and get quickly to a vote on the merits of this legislation.

CLOTURE MOTION

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Nunn). The hour of 12 o'clock noon having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement, pursuant to rule XXXII, the Chair lays before the Senate the pending cloture motion, which the clerk will read.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close the debate upon the pending bill S. 3044, a bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

CALL OF THE ROLL

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to call the roll to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

[No. 114 Leg.]
Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), and the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUSTON), is absent on official business.

Mr. GRiffin. I announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HATHAWAY). A quorum is present.

The question before the Senate is, Is it unanimous consent that the order for the amendment by the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Baker), No. 1075, on which there is a 1-hour limitation. Who yields the floor?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and ask unanimous consent that the time not be charged against either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read amendment No. 1075. Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, would the Chair state the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read amendment No. 1075. Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendments be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Amendments No. 1075 are as follows: On page 35, line 14, strike out "tenth" and insert in lieu thereof "fifth". On page 36, line 9, after "other than," insert the following: "the fifth day preceding an election or". On page 36, line 15, after "nond" insert the following: "the fifth day preceding an election or". On page 53, beginning with line 11, strike out through line 5 on page 64. On page 64, line 7, strike out "318." and insert in lieu thereof "319.". On page 64, line 14, strike out "319." and insert in lieu thereof "318.".

On page 75, line 19, strike out "(a)" and insert in lieu thereof "(a)".

On page 75, between lines 23 and 24, insert the following:

"(2) No person may make a contribution to, or for the benefit of, a candidate for that nomination for election or, during the period which begins on the tenth day preceding the date of that election and which ends on the date of that election.".

On page 76, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following:

"The candidate may knowingly accept a contribution for his campaign for nomination for election or, during the period which begins on the tenth day preceding the date of that election and which ends on the date of that election.".

On page 76, line 3, strike out "(b)" and insert in lieu thereof "(b)".

On page 76, line 6, strike out "paragraph (1)" and insert in lieu thereof "paragraph (1) or (2)".
With respect to the reporting provisions, we have checked carefully with the people who have had some experience in the field and found that making the information available on some useful basis, and they advise us that this type of reporting is not long enough for a report to be mailed in and for them to put the information in and make the public available.

Therefore, I am opposed to the amendment. I think that page 3 subsection 6 is completely redundant. I think that that person cannot accept a contribution in excess of the amount reasonably necessary to defray the expenditure. We will never know what the expenditure is and how they have been incurred. Sometimes the resolutions are late, at the last minute. Sometimes bills come in even after the campaign is over. We have in the bill a provision: for payment to the Treasury over the excess amount that may have been collected. That provision is in the bill. I think it is adequate.

This amendment is vague and uncertain in its reporting of an undue burden on a candidate and those working in his behalf to determine what is reasonably necessary to defray the expenditures of the candidate, so that he will not have excess money and in violation of that particular provision.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am virtually prepared to yield back the remainder of my time and proceed to a vote. I have one brief remark in response to the observations of the distinguished chairman, the manager of the bill.

Briefly stated, the rationale of the amendment in this respect is to be public disclosure, it has to be an integral part of the system: if it is to attract importance in the eyes of the public, and if it is to have something to do with whether one votes for or against a candidate. It seems essential to make that final report, before the election, because between the time 10 days before the election and January 31, a candidate could collect a million dollars, and the public would never know it. The sole purpose of the amendment is that if we are going to have full disclosure, if we are going to do it before the election, not after the election.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to extend 35 minutes to the consideration of the amendment (Mr. ALLEN), and 30 minutes under the control of the distinguished manager of the bill (Mr. CANNON).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the argument has been made and again here on the floor that in order to remove the influence in Government of large contributors to Federal election campaigns, it is necessary to resort to public financing. It occurs to the junior Senator from Alabama that this is certainly a non sequitur, that it is not necessary to resort to public financing in order to remove the influence of large contributors or to prevent the making of large contributions. All that is necessary is to reduce the amount of the contribution. The bill as passed is a step in the right direction, because under the present law there is no effective limitation on a contribution. There is a limit as to how much can be contributed for an individual($3,000). There is a limit to how much can be contributed without incurring the gift tax liability. I believe that is $3,000. But we have seen that many candidates set up multiple committees—in some cases, a hundred or two hundred. The Senator from Alabama does not have but one committee during a campaign. So there is no effective limitation. But the incumbent raises $700 permitted by the bill and the $6,000 for a man and his wife are tremendous contributions, in the view of the Senator from Alabama, and should be cut drastically.

Earlier this week, the Senator from Alabama offered an amendment to cut the maximum permissible amount of a contribution in Presidential campaigns to $250—that is, both the nomination race and the general election—and $200 for House and Senate races. How did we arrive at those figures? Very simply, Mr. President. Before the Senate, S 3044, provides that in primaries, contributions to Presidential races up to $2,500 shall be matched out of the Public Treasury and contributions up to $1,000 for House and Senate races shall be matched out of the Public Treasury by subsidizing, out of the pockets of the American taxpayers, the campaigns of politicians running for various Federal offices.

Apparently, the theory of the bill is that there must be something evil, something wrong with contributions in the area between $250 in the one case and $100 in the other case, and the $3,000 permissible contribution, because they do not match those amounts.

Where does that leave a challenger and an incumbent? Mr. President, it leaves the incumbent at a decided advantage—and I suppose this certainly could be removed, because it provides matching funds for incumbents as well as challengers who run for the constituencies that they have or that they might hope to have. So only these amounts are matched. It gives the incumbent the decided advantage that since the amounts in the area from $100 to $250 up to $3,000 are not matched, the incumbent, once better known and having accommodated, during the term of his office, many of his constituents, is in better position to get contributions in that area—from $250 up to $3,000—leaving the challenger at a decided disadvantage. Even as to the matching amounts, it is stacked in favor of the incumbent, because—I have used this example before—in the State of California, theoretically, they match up to $700,000 of contributions, up to $100 in House and Senate races.

Let us assume that the challenger in a State, because of being less well known, is able to raise $100,000—or $125,000, since that is the threshold amount, but let us say $100,000 because it makes the arithmetic a little simpler—and in the primary, the incumbent raises $700,000. So there is a $600,000 spread.

Then public financing comes into the picture and matches the incumbent’s $700,000 and then matches the challenger’s $100,000. This is in the primary. The incumbent then would have $1.4 million, and the challenger would have only $200,000, which would give the incumbent a $1.2 million advantage over the challenger.

The Senate, in its wisdom, saw fit to strike down the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama to cut the contribution down, to leave it in the private sector; but the amendment, of course, would not have accomplished all that I was after in public financing. But it would have reduced the amount of permissible contribution. The Senate voted down the $250 and the $100 limits.

The pending amendment would raise the permissible contribution from these figures to $2,000 in Presidential races and $1,000 in House-Senate races, which would be a reduction from the flat $3,000 provided by the bill. That still would leave the right to make massive contributions, in the view of the Senator from Alabama—a $2,000 limit in a Presidential race and a $1,000 limit in the House and Senate races.

It is said that we should get rid of the big contributors. I submit that this amendment would do that to a greater extent than would the pending bill, which allows contributions of up to $3,000 a person or $6,000 for a couple. The figures in this amendment still would be capable of being doubled by a man and his wife. So it would be $2,000, but it could be doubled by a man and his wife. Therefore, $4,000 really could be contributed in a Presidential race.

Then, doubling the $1,000 permitted by the bill in House and Senate races would... increase to $2,000 the amount that a couple could contribute. So these amounts are large enough if we want to get rid of the influence of so-called large contributors familiar to many of us. I am not familiar with large contributors myself. I have not had the benefit—or detriment—of that situation. I would feel that these limits are ample. I might say that this bill does not cut down on campaign expenses. It greatly escalates the cost. It gives each candidate for the Presidential nomination of the two parties up to $7.5 million. They talk about the reform bill. But, Mr. President, how much time does the Senator from Alabama have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, these contributions offered by the amendment would still be ample. If we are going to try to clean up the political campaign, the way to do it is not to just hand a great big pile of money to these various candidates to office but to restrict the amount that individual contributions can be.

A little later on I have an amendment I wish to bring up that would reduce by one-third the permissible overall expenditures.

For instance, in the State of California they would give a candidate for the Senate in a general election, a candidate from a major party, a check for—I guess he could ask for cash, I do not know, but he could get the check cashed if he were given a check—he is handed $2.1 million. I have another amendment that I shall call up later to cut that down to $1.4 million. That would seem quite adequate to the Senator from Alabama to present to the various candidates; $1.4 million in California, and lesser amounts on down as the population of States would decrease from that level.

So, Mr. President, the answer is not just giving tremendous sums to candidates out of the public treasury. The answer is limiting the overall amount that can be spent by a candidate and then reducing drastically the amount of individual contributions.

The amendment that we have before us now approaches one of these aspects, that is, reducing the amount of permissible contributions.

If Senators want reform, this reform. I get a little dispelled and frustrated sometimes when I read in newspapers that an effort is being made here to kill a campaign reform bill. Well, if this bill protects the public treasury and will not increase the costs of campaigns, I do not see why that is a reform. Reform is defined as a different idea of what reform is must prevail from the idea that I have about reform.

This bill reforms the law, changes the law, changes it over from a voluntary participation by all the people to recommended payment out of the Public treasury. So this is a reform bill we have before us. It is another Federal subsidy bill. It is a bill that would remove Government and candidates away from the people they represent. How do we figure that? Well, if they give a candidate up to $2 million to do his campaign, do Senators think he is going to bother to ask for modest amounts of support from his constituents, or would his campaign committees bother to try to get voluntary participation from his constituents?

The Senator from California earlier today was stating that he was a little bothered worried about this $2.1 million. He thought maybe that was too much, but then he went on worrying about the challenger out there and thought he should be well funded and, therefore, he was not going to raise any point: about the $2.1 million if a senatorial candidate might receive.

I might say with respect to the Senator from California (Mr. CRAINSTON), who was making the remarks, that the subsidy would not apply to his upcoming race, because it would go into effect January 1, 1976. But it would apply to all these candidates in Congress who are running for the Presidency.

As I read the various Gallup polls and Harris polls, there are about 10 candidates for the presidency here in the Halls of Congress, candidates eligible for up to the Presidential nomination. Is that campaign reform? That is a campaign handout, in the view of the Senator from Alabama.

Now, Mr. President, earlier today we had a vote Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I find the Senator from Alabama's argument somewhat amusing in some particulars, in that he suggests we ought not to have public financing and then at the same time says that we ought to reduce the amount of financing from private sources. If we are not to have public financing, when there has to be some form of raising money to carry out a campaign. The committee considered that, and this is one of the reasons why we put in the alternative provision so a person could elect to go to public financing, if he could meet the matching money requirement in the primary and desired to do so, but, on the other hand, candidates were not forced to go to public financing if they did not desire it.

The Senator's amendment, if it were adopted, would force practically everyone to go to public financing, which is something he opposes. The very thing he is speaking against is public financing. If his amendment were adopted, and if his amendment of the other day, which was more restrictive, had been adopted, there would have been no alternative, because it would have been impossible to raise funds for campaigns for these types of election and raise enough money to carry on a campaign.

He also indicated that the amendment was not really going to reduce the expenses of campaigns. I have made just a quick review of some of the States involved. In the last campaign to see if it would, and I will read some of them. Here are 12 States, and I may say, they were States which had the most expensive campaigns last year: Texas, Michigan, Illinois, Alabama, Kentucky, Oklahoma, North Carolina, Tennessee, Louisiana, Georgia, Idaho, and South Dakota. Those States would not be able to spend as much under the limits of this bill as was spent in the last campaign, and some of Mr. Bentsen. Mr. President, will the chairman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. Bentsen. Will the chairman also say that was not for this particular Senator? (Laughter.)

Mr. CANNON. Yes. I merely wanted to point out that the expenditure was considered to be at the limit that would be imposed under this formula.

Mr. Bentsen. Let me also say, so far as the figure from Alabama concerned, that I think that the committee has done a good job. I wanted to be sure that we did not have an incumbent's bill.

I know that when I was considering running for the Senate, running against an incumbent, we took a public opinion poll to see what my name identification was. It was a little under 1 percent. I was practically unknown. Most people confused me with Ezra Taft Benson, who was an unpopular Secretary of Agriculture. So, in effect, I had a negative recognition. I stayed well within the amount that was indicated by the committee. I ran against an incumbent; and to win in the general election means that one has to have enough money to spend. But this has not become an incumbent bill. I commend the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. CANNON. I pointed out to the Senator from Alabama that was the effect of an amendment he had offered to reduce the amount to 5 cents in the general election. If the amount were to be reduced in that magnitude, it would really become an incumbent's bill. I said I could support something identical.

Mr. Bentsen. I stayed within those limitations; but if they were dropped back to the limits here proposed, I think it would be very difficult to secure recognition by the public and interest them in what is the issues are.

Mr. CANNON. We have gotten somehow off the track of the amendment; but the Senator from Alabama had discussed these very issues. If his amendment were to be adopted, it would drive people away from the opportunity to use private financing, if they did not want to go to the public financing.

That is the reason we arrived at a somewhat arbitrary figure and used $3,000 in the bill. It is true that a husband and wife could give $6,000--$3,000 Fannin McClure Williams in the interest in it that it is. As I said, we decided on this particular figure based on an overview of what campaigns had been costing and recognizing that the 10 States with primaries and 10 States without primaries a moment ago had campaigns that were entirely too costly, and that some of the States had no primaries but still had campaigns too costly. That was the basic information we considered in deriving the formula of 10 cents per voting age for the primary election and 15 cents per voting age for the general election.

I see my good friend from Texas (Mr. Bentsen) in the Chamber. I read the definitions a few minutes ago under the formula. In the general election campaign in the State of Texas, the formula at 15 cents per voting age population, would permit an expenditure of $1,167,-$750. According to our table, the expenditures in the general election in Texas, in the States for the winning party, amounted to $2,301,870.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimously consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreement to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. Allen). The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. Fulbright), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. Hughes), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. Loan), and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McCoy) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Huddleston) is absent on official business.

Mr. Griffin. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Cook), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. Goldwater), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Taft) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. William L. Scott) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 53, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

April 4, 1974

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Hackney, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of correspondence on the disapproval of the Joint Resolution of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12283) to amend the General Education Provisions Act to provide that funds appropriated for applicable programs for fiscal year 1974 will remain available during the succeeding fiscal year and that the funds for fiscal years 1973 will remain available during fiscal years 1974 and 1975.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed this signature to the enrolled bill H.J. Res. 346, to amend the District of Columbia Reimbursement Act of 1947 regarding taxability of dividends received by a corporation from insurance companies, banks, and other savings institutions.

INCREASES IN CERTAIN ANNUITIES

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Stryker) announced that at 2 p.m. having arrived, the Chairmen before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to title I of the United States Code, and for other purposes which was to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

"(2) Notwithstanding any provision of this subchapter, other than this subsection, the monthly rate of annuity payable under subsection (a) of this section shall not be less than the primary insurance amount, including any cost-of-living increase added to that amount, authorized to be paid from time to time under title II of the Social Security Act.

(3) The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to an annuitant or to a survivor who is in receipt of retirement or disability benefits under title II of the Social Security Act, a pension, veterans' compensation, or any other periodic payment of a similar nature, when the monthly rate thereof, is equal to or greater than the smaller of primary or supplementary insurance amounts, including any cost-of-living increase added to that amount, authorized to be paid from time to time under title II of the Social Security Act."

SEC. 3. This Act shall take effect upon enactment of this Act.

INCREASES IN CERTAIN ANNUITIES

The Senate, in accordance with the passage of S. 1866, is to be considered as the monthly rate of annuity payable under section 8345(f) of the Social Security Act, as amended by the first section of this Act.

SEC. 3. This Act shall take effect upon enactment of this Act. Annuity increases under this Act shall commence before, on, or after the date of enactment of this Act, but only shall be payable on or after the first of the first month which begins after the date of enactment of this Act, or the date on which the annuity commences, whichever is later.

The Chair will state that one-hour debate is allowed from North Dakota.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the Senate will agree to the bill to which the Chair has already referred.

Mr. RUSSELL. I would like to state that S. 1866 as amended by the Senate, is to be considered as the monthly rate annuity payable from time to time under title II of the Social Security Act.

In lieu of any increase based on an annuity payable from the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Trust Fund to a surviving spouse of an employee or former employee of the Federal Government, Member, or annuitant, which is based on a separation occurring prior to October 20, 1969, is increased by $240.

In lieu of any increase based on an annuity payable from the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Trust Fund to a surviving spouse of an employee or former employee of the Federal Government, Member, or annuitant, which is based on a separation occurring prior to October 20, 1969, is increased by $240.

The monthly rate of annuity resulting from an increase under this section shall be considered as the monthly rate of annuity payable under section 8345(f) of title II, United States Code, for purposes of computing the minimum annuity under section 8345(f) of title II, United States Code, as amended by the first section of this Act.

Annuity increases under this Act shall commence before, on, or after the date of enactment of this Act, but only shall be payable on or after the first of the first month which begins after the date of enactment of this Act, or the date on which the annuity commences, whichever is later.

The Chair will state that one-hour debate is allowed from North Dakota.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the Senate will agree to the bill to which the Chair has already referred.

Mr. RUSSELL. I would like to state that S. 1866 as amended by the Senate, is to be considered as the monthly rate annuity payable from time to time under title II of the Social Security Act.

Second, the bill would increase the annuity increases of those who retired prior to October 20, 1969, by $260 annually—or for a retiree and by $132 annually—$1 per month—for a retiree's surviving spouse. Members will recall that October 20, 1969, was the date on which the law liberalized the retirement-computation formula. Prior to that date, an annuity was computed upon the basis of the five highest salaries; after that date, the annuity is computed on the high-three average salary. With higher salary averages used as a computation base, retirees since October 20, 1969, enjoy substantially improved annuities. The thrust of this provision is to take a step toward redressing this inequality in compensation method.

Third, the provision provides that the surviving child of an annuitant who would receive a monthly-based annuity would receive a minimum social security annuity of $84.50—the social security minimum—and provides that no more than three times $84.50 would be payable to the surviving children of any annuitant.

When I introduced S. 1866, it contained the $20 per month across-the-board benefit that I have described. In committee, the bill was amended to remove that provision because of its cost. In floor action, however, Senator Gurney's amendment restored it by a vote of 20 to 20. This vote represents strong Senate approval; I know the provision was approved in the other body; and I am satisfied that it should remain, as being in accord with substantial congressional consensus.

Mr. President, the merits of this measure speak for themselves—help those Federal annuitants and their families who need help most. Those struggling to make ends meet do not subsist on small annuities based on the lower salaries of past decades and computed under a less liberal average-salary formula. Approximately 15 percent of current civil service annuity beneficiaries are receiving less than the present minimum social security benefit of $84.50. Among these are 65,000 people 65,000 seniors, 65,000 widows, and 3,000 children. Many of these people live on the ragged edge of poverty; they need and deserve congressional help.

Now, as to costs, I would like to state that under law, increases in the unfunded liability of the civil service retirement and disability fund are amortized by payment of $30 equal annual installments. The annual cost of this bill over 30 years would amount to $119 million.

I mentioned earlier that the House amendments were minimal in their scope. Under the Senate bill, the $84.50 minimum would not apply to a retiree receiving social security benefits; the House version broadens this exclusion to a retiree receiving any other pension, including social security. The effective date of the measure as amended by the House is upon enactment. In the Senate version, the effective date is three years after enactment.

For the surviving child, the House measure allows $84.50 per month, but limits the total amount payable to the children of a deceased retiree to $245.50 per month. The Senate bill allowed $84.50 or approximately $65 for the first child and $48.50 a month each for additional children.

Mr. President, the Senate has already enacted virtually the same measure. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.
relating to members of the armed forces, and for other purposes, which were on page 2, line 16, strike out "$12,000," and insert "$15,000."

On page 2, line 18, after "computation,", insert "Bonus authority provided under this section shall be administered in such a manner that no member reenlisting for two or more reenlistments may receive a total bonus amount that is larger than the amount to which he would have been entitled had his initial reenlistment or active-duty extension been for a total period of additional obligations equal to the two or more reenlistments."

On page 14, strike out "Navy."

And insert "Navy."

On page 3, after line 14, insert:

"(f) No bonus shall be paid under this section with respect to any reenlistment, or voluntary extension, of an active-duty enlistment, in the armed forces entered into after June 30, 1977."

On page 5, line 14, strike out "January 1, 1974." and insert "the first day of the month following the date of enactment."

On page 5, strike out all after line 14 over to and including line 4 on page 6.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conference on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President Appointed Mr. Stennis, Mr. Sasser, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Thurmond, and Mr. Cranston confers on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF CHAPTER 5, TITLE 37, UNITED STATES CODE

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 2770.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Sasser) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2770) to amend chapter 5, title 37, United States Code, to revise the pay structure relating to medical officers of the uniformed services, which were to strike out enacting clause, and strike out all after the word "insert:

That chapter 5 of title 37, United States Code, is amended as follows:

(1) Section 532 is amended to read as follows:

"(1) $100 a month for each month of active duty if he has not completed two years of active duty in a category named in this section; or

"(2) $300 a month for each month of active duty if he has completed at least two years of active duty in a category named in this section.

The amounts set forth in this section may not be included in computing the amount of an increase in pay authorized by any other provision of law. The amount of computing reenlisted pay or severance pay.

(2) That portion of the first sentence of section 313 of title 37, United States Code, clause (1) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense, or by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, as appropriate, an officer of the Army or Navy in the Medical or Dental Corps above the pay grade of O-6, an officer of the Air Force who is designated as a medical or dental officer and is above the pay grade of O-5, or a medical or dental officer of the Public Health Service above the pay grade of O-6 whose.

(3) By adding the following new section after section 313 of title 37, amended by the amending Act of 1969, to the chapter analysis:

"§ 313. Special pay for medical, dental, veterinary, or optometry officers who exceed agreements prescribed by the Secretary of Defense or by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, as appropriate, an officer of the Army or Navy in the Medical or Dental Corps above the pay grade of O-5, an officer of the Air Force who is designated as a medical, dental, veterinary, or optometry officer and is above the pay grade of O-5, or a medical, dental, or veterinary officer of the Public Health Service, who

"(1) is below the pay grade of O-7;

"(2) is designated as being qualified in a critical specialty by the Secretary concerned;

"(3) is determined by a board composed of officers in the medical, dental, veterinary, or optometry profession under criteria prescribed by the Secretary concerned to be qualified to enter into an active duty agreement for a specified number of years;

"(4) is not serving an initial active duty obligation;

"(5) is not undergoing intern or residency training; and

"(6) executes a written active duty agreement which may be entered into and which is subject to subsections (b) and (c) of this section, the total amount payable becomes fixed and may be paid in a lump sum at the end of the period of active duty specified in the agreement, as prescribed by the Secretary concerned.

"(b) Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense or by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, as appropriate, the Secretary concerned, or his designee, may terminate, at any time, an officer's entitlement to the special pay authorized by this section. In that event, the officer is entitled to be paid only for the fractional period of the period of active duty that he served, and if he is required to refund any amount he received in excess of that entitlement.

"(c) Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense or by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, as appropriate, an officer who has received pay under this section and who voluntarily, or because of misconduct, fails to complete the total number of years of active duty specified in the written agreement which may be entered into and which is subject to subsections (b) and (c) of this section, the total amount payable becomes fixed and may be paid in a lump sum at the end of the period of active duty specified in the agreement, as prescribed by the Secretary concerned.

"(d) That portion of section 313 of title 37, United States Code, as added by section 1(3) of this Act, which will expire on June 30, 1978, the authority for the special pay provided by this section, and a review of the program for the fiscal year report shall be submitted not later than April 30 of each year, beginning in 1976.

"(e) By repealing sections 302a and 303 and the corresponding items in the chapter analysis.

Sec. 2. The amendments made by this Act become effective on April 1, 1974. Except for the provisions of section 313 of title 37, United States Code, which will expire on June 30, 1978, the authority for the special pay provided by this Act shall, unless otherwise extended by Congress, expire on June 30, 1977.

And amend the title so as to read:

"An Act to amend chapter 5 of title 37, United States Code, to revise the special pay structure relating to medical officers and other health professionals of the uniformed services."

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conference on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President Appointed Mr. Stennis, Mr. Symington, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Thurmond, and Mr. Tower confers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. STENNIS. I thank the Senator from Nevada for his courtesy in yielding.
public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pursuant to the previous order, the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) is to be recognized to add an amendment.

Mr. GIFFIN, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1184 and ask that it be read in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment ordered to be printed in the Record is as follows:

On page 3, beginning with line 1, strike out through line 4 on page 25 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"TITLE I—INCREASE IN POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS CREDIT AND REFORM OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION FINANCING

Sec. 101. (a) Section 41 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to contributions to candidates for public office) is amended—

(1) striking out 'one-half of' in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the term 'one-third of';

(2) amending section 41 (b) (1) of such Code (relating to maximum credit for contributions to candidates for public office) to read as follows:

"(1) Maximum credit.—The credit allowed by subsection (a) for a taxable year shall not exceed $100 ($1000 in the case of a joint return under section 6013)."

(b) The amendments made by this section apply with reference to any political contribution payment of the amount which is made after December 31, 1973.

"PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION FINANCING

Sec. 102. (a) Subtitle H of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to financing of Presidential election campaigns) is repealed.

(b) Part VIII of subchapter A of chapter 61 of such Code (relating to designation of income tax payments to Presidential election campaigns) is repealed.

(c) The amendments made by this section apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1973.

On page 26, lines 2 and 3, strike out "under section 504 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, or"

On page 27, lines 3, 4, and 5, strike out "A candidate shall deposit any payment received by him under section 506 of this Act in the account maintained by his central campaign committee."

On page 63, lines 14 and 15, strike out "(application of section 507(b) (1) of this Act)"

On page 64, line 9, strike out "title V,"

On page 71, beginning with line 20 strike out through line 2 on page 73 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) (1) Except that such amounts are charged under subsection (b) (1), (2), no candidate (other than a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President in connection with his primary election campaign in excess of the greater of—

(i) 10 percent multiplied by the voting age population of the United States, for purposes of this paragraph, the term 'voting age population of the United States' means the sum of—

(1) 15 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States of the United States in excess of an amount equal to 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States, For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'voting age population of the United States' means the sum of—

(2) 90 cents, if the Federal election office is that of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative.

(3) No candidate who is unopposed in a primary or general election may make expenditures in connection with his primary or general election campaign in excess of 10 per centum of the limitation in subsection (a) or (b)."

(d) The Federal Election Commission shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for nomination for election to the Senate in two or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

(e) (1) Expenditures made on behalf of any candidate are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by such candidate.

(2) Expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate for the office of Vice President in connection with his primary election campaign in excess of the greater of—

(i) 10 per centum of the limitation for the election on behalf of such candidate in the Senate in the State in which candidate is elected, or,

(ii) 90 cents, if the Federal election office is that of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative.

(3) For purposes of this subsection, an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice-Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

(A) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure, or

(B) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate to make the expenditure.

(f) (1) For purposes of section 41 of this title the expenditure made by the national committee of a political party, or by the State committee of a political party, in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate affiliated with that party which is in excess of the limitations contained in subsection (a), is now considered to be an expenditure made on behalf of that candidate.

(2) (A) 'price index' means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and

(B) 'base period' means the calendar year 1973.

(3) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1976), as necessary data become available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Federal Election Commission and publish in the Federal Register the percentage difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each amount determined under subsections (a) and (b) shall be changed by such percentage difference. Each amount so changed shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

(g) During the first week of January 1975 and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Federal Election Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, for each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, eighteen years of age or older.

(h) Upon receiving the certification of the Secretary of Commerce the Secretary of Labor, the Federal Election Commission shall publish in the Federal Register the percentage difference in effect for the calendar year for the United States, and for each State and congressional district under this section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a 1-hour limitation on this amendment. Who yields time?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require. I would like to discuss the merits of the amendment, that I wish to yield briefly to the distinguished senior Senator from West Virginia, chairman of the Subcommittees of the Senate Committee on the Budget and Ways and Means, so that we may have a brief colloquy on another matter, the time for the
April 4, 1974

S 5287

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, the tornadoes as struck yesterday be mini-1200, the exact number is not known yet. But destruction and hardships follow in the wake of such a disaster.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the Senate yield at this point, so that we may ask for the yea and nays on my amendment before we lose that capability?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Is there a sufficient second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, the exact number of those reported as having been killed by this disaster runs over 300, the exact number not being known yet. But destruction and hardships follow in the wake of such a disaster.

The able Senator from Tennessee, who is a member of our Subcommittee on Public Works, will speak in a colloquy, as he has indicated.

I have just been given the latest figures. As of 2:30 p.m. the number of dead is 338.

Agencies of the Federal Government have responded, and are providing relief. Our Subcommittee on Public Works has jurisdiction over disaster relief legislation. Since early morning, we have been contacting several Senators from States ravaged by the tornadoes yesterday. Members of our subcommittee, and other members of this full committee, will visit disaster sites in States tomorrow and this Saturday.

They will examine the extent of the damage and evaluate the implementation of disaster assistance measures by the Federal Government. It will be a first-hand inspection, and it will take place under the leadership of the Senator from North Dakota (Mr.汇总), who is the chairman of our Subcommittee on Disaster Relief.

There are damaged areas in Tennessee, Indiana, Ohio, and in Kentucky, and in response to requests of Senators Baker, Brock, Bayh and Hart, Secretary of Agriculture and Secretary, and Huddleston we shall go into those States. The Senator from New Mexico (Mr. Domenici), the ranking Republican member of our subcommittee, will, of course, participate.

I think that the tour is necessary. The information that can be obtained by an on-the-ground check into the matter will provide important guidance, not only for this committee and subcommittee, but for the Senate as well.

The subcommittee is at the present time considering major revisions of the Disaster Relief Act of 1970. Many Members of the Senate will remember the devastation wrought in several States during the period when that act was being developed. Alabama, I shall say to Senator Allen, was one of the States struck at that time.

We have tried to set in motion a response to disasters at the Federal level that will assure us the quickest possible relief to victims of these disasters—tornadoes, hurricanes, floods, or whatever, because they strike suddenly, without warning.

The Federal role must also include an effective response that the communities can be rebuilt as quickly as possible and the persons who live there can go back to their occupations and their normal lives. I think we all agree that while there is no way that we can prevent natural disasters from occurring, we can provide the relief and rebuilding programs which are necessary.

Mr. President, I think it is the duty of the Senate to see that any suffering and any disruption that result from such tornadoes is as quickly as possible be kept to a minimum. Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from West Virginia, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Public Works. I must add to his remarks by pointing out that according to the Weather Bureau this is the worst tornado disaster in 49 years; that in Kentucky there are 58 known dead, in Tennessee 48, in Ohio 40, and in Indiana 43 known dead; and that 91 tornadoes were reported sighted by the U.S. Weather Bureau in just the eastern part of Tennessee last night.

It is hard to imagine the destruction that accompanied these untimely and unfortunate deaths and I commend the chairman for authorizing this first-hand field examination into the disaster by a subcommittee chaired by the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. Branick), the ranking Republican Member of which is the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. Domenici) in the morning and to cover the affected States.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? And if he does, I ask unanimous consent that the time not be charged against his amendment.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will the Senate yield? And if he does, I ask unanimous consent that the time not be charged against his amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, we all recognize the vast compassion that the distinguished Senator from West Virginia always manifests toward the American people who are in distress and when they sustain tragedies such as have befallen many of our people in the last 36 to 48 hours.

The Senator mentioned the damage to Alabama, to begin with, his attention to the victims as much as some of the buildings have been destroyed to such an extent that they have not been able to ascertain what bodies are still in the buildings, that many more dead are anticipated, a larger number injured, and tens of millions of dollars in property damage sustained.

I appreciate the interest that the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Hart), manifesting in this tragedy, and I am hopeful that the subcommittee will be able to get into Alabama, in the northern tier of the States, and see our ravaged areas firsthand, also.

I do feel that we should have some permanent legislation that will do the necessary job and will provide the mechanisms for doing the necessary job to alleviate the suffering that our people have sustained. We feel that the present legislation is inadequate, and I am pleased that the President has declared Alabama and the other States mentioned by the distinguished chairman as disaster areas, which will allow public facilities, public utilities, and public improvements to be made and will make available loans for assistance. I am pleased with the readiness that we understand has taken place among the Federal agencies in rushing to aid our people. It is a feeling that we have as we travel throughout the damaged area.

I commend the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Baker), his full committee, and particularly his subcommittee which is going to travel over large portions of the country and examine the extent of the damage.

I wonder if the members of the committee might have an itinerary.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I appreciate the concern that the Senator from Alabama has expressed for the people of all the affected areas. He correctly calls attention to the very heavy damage in his own State of Alabama, and to the very high death toll there.

We are not certain of how just our trip can move, but I have a feeling that we will want to inspect other disaster areas. Mr. ALLEN. Yes, Mr. Randolph. While it might not be possible this week it would be our intention to inspect, as far as we can, the area the Senator has spoken of in Alabama.

I know that Senator Domenici and, of course, Senator Burack identify with these matters in subcommittee leadership. As I have indicated earlier, they are working with the staff very carefully, and we want to do a thorough job.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, Mr. Randolph. Hopefully we will not miss those areas that need to be covered.

I want to indicate this before I finish: I have noted that the Senator spoke about the inadequacy of the present law.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. There was a time not so many years ago when, frankly, all we did, when disaster came by way of tornado, flood, hurricane, or earthquake, was to come into the Senate Chamber and vote money for relief and on rebuilding. But we did, back in 1970, set in motion a good—Mr. ALLEN. I agree.
Mr. RANDOLPH (continuing). Program, by which we have been able to give relief and to rebuild in a very realistic and helpful manner. Thus, I respond again to the Senator from Alabama, that I am sure the committee will act up to the areas which have been devastated. I appreciate his understanding of our problem and the words that he has spoken.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I should like to say my good offices to the distinguished Senator, George C. Wallace; so that the committee will come to the aid of the cities in Alabama and that we can project its plans in such a way as to provide for a visit by the subcommittee or the full committee to our State, such transportation by State trooper car, or by State airplane will be made available to the committee, and all the necessary lodging requirements of the committee will be arranged for. We would cordially welcome the committee with open arms.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That offer of cooperation at the local level is very valuable and necessary, oft times. We will keep that in mind, and the distinguished Senator from Alabama.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I should like to comment on the dialog which has proceeded between the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Alabama. I am the ranking Republican member of the subcommittee, and I should like to tell the Senator from Alabama that I think I have shown in my record of economic circumstances that we are in a state of serious consideration a $2,500 quake in California. We have not been able to act immediately, but we will act up to the areas which have been devastated. I appreciate his understanding of our problem and the words that he has spoken.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield to the Senate from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, so far, the documentation given by the able Senator from New Mexico is very helpful. I had said at the beginning of the hearing, that the work of the subcommittee is strengthening the present legislation has been in process, and we will, of course, the leadership of the committee, and with the cooperation of all the other members of the subcommittee and the committee, give attention to these matters.

I want to say to you, Mr. President, that when we had the trouble with the earthquake in California, there was literally hundreds of people who took advantage of such situations. So I have to say when we set a sum of money, that is money like that. That is a side issue, of course.

I yield now to my colleague from Illinois.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I want to comment, also, the distinguished Senator from West Virginia for his vigilance and the way in which his committee instantly responded to the plight of those who have been damaged by recent tornadoes. Many of those people reside in Illinois. Illinois was not so severely damaged as other States, such as Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, but there are people in the State of Illinois who are suffering some damaged property. There has also been some loss of life.

So, in addition to commending the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, I want to express the hope that in the deliberations of the committee, it might try to find some time to visit the districts damaged in Illinois. It would be of great help to the committee's understanding of the suffering caused by the division of relief and also, perhaps, in the preparation of legislation for a longer term.

I am sure our Governor and all of our local officials would be more than grateful and delighted to provide every accommodation possible for the convenience of the committee, if it were possible to include a visit to the State of Illinois in forthcoming trips by the subcommittee.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the able Senator from Illinois. We do know that the President is now declaring certain States as disaster States or areas within those States. As the Senator indicated, the death toll in the one State is not so large as to compare with other States but the impact in many ways is felt in West Virginia. There was the death of one small child in West Virginia, which of course saddens us all very much, especially the little community of Meadow Creek, which I know very well and have visited there dozens of times. The damage was quite severe in the community. But we have the responsibility, certainly as a Congress, the committee, and especially the subcommittee, in moving quickly and earnestly to discharge our duties as responsible legislators.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank my chairman for his remarks. About this important matter and the opportunity to listen to the testimony by so many other senators, including the distinguished occupant of the Chair, who is the ranking minority member on the subcommittee. This is an important matter, one to which the committee, Congress, and the Senate have responded very quickly.

Mr. President, turning my attention now to amendment No. 1134, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. President, this amendment would strike all of title I of the bill regarding public financing of campaigns for Federal office. In its place, I would substitute a revised form of private financing designed to broaden the base of participation and prevent the abuse of earlier campaigns.

Specifically, I would propose a 100 percent tax credit on all political contributions made in a calendar year up to $50 for an individual return and $100 for a joint return. As it is now, an individual can claim a tax credit of 50 percent of all contributions made in a year up to $12.50. On a joint return, the credit is up to $25. In S. 3044, the tax credit is still 50 percent; but the amount is increased to $50 on an individual return and $50 on a joint return. Once again, my amendment would allow a 100 percent tax credit on all contributions made in a calendar year up to $50 on an indi-individual return and $100 on a joint return. In this way, the small contributor is offered a clear and realistic incentive to contribute between $50 and $100 to the candidate of his or her choice.

Moreover, most of what I consider to be the intrinsic liabilities of partial or full public financing of campaigns for Federal office. What are those liabilities, in my view? I shall attempt to list them.

The question of public participation in our political process is one which concerns me greatly, as I am sure it does most of my colleagues. In new years, this participation has declined steadily, as has public trust and confidence in our major governmental institutions. In the wake of Watergate and related events, it becomes increasingly incumbent upon us to ascertain the key to increasing public participation and promoting public trust in elected officials.

Those who advocate public financing argue that it is the way to prevent further erosion of public confidence is to remove the opportunity for financing that process from the hands of the special interests. As I understand it, the partial portion of that responsibility in the Federal Government, I do not quarrel with the need to eliminate the inordinate influence of special interests. In fact, I believe that only individuals should be allowed to contribute to political campaigns; and even then, not in excess of the limits prescribed in S. 3044. But, I strongly disagree with the presumption that the financial influence of special interests necessitates granting that influence of responsibility to the U.S. Treasury. It seems to me the American people should be given the option of assuming that prerogative rather than the Federal Government.

It is not just a question of whether we need the power of the Government to enforce the relevant statutes, nor whether we need an effective means of prosecuting those who violate those statutes; for clearly, the Government must play a major role. However, the question is really how necessary is it that the Government directly involve itself in financing political campaigns. If it were the only viable means of funding a clean and competitive two-party system, then I might support public financing. But it is not, in my judgment, for the following reason.

To the present day, the Congress has never successfully sought to effectively limit the amount of money an individual or group could contribute to a political campaign. In fact, I believe S. 372 was the first time that either House had passed legislation which actually sought to bring this about. Thus, rather than political candidates being compelled to raise $50 contributions of $100 each, they have chosen to benefit from the single $5,000 contribution when they can find it.

It is only natural; and as a politician, I think that candidates find it easier to raise a specific amount of money in large contributions rather than small ones. But we should also realize what influence this has had on our respective fundraising techiques. For reasons of expediency, we have traditionally geared our fund-raising efforts to the so-called fat cats and sought small contributions when the big money was not available. Thus, we are comparatively inexperienced when it comes to undertaking a broad, low-level solicitation effort.

Under the expenditure limitations of S. 3044, a presidential candidate can spend up to 15 cents times the voting age population of the country in the general election campaign. If my calculations are accurate, that comes out to about $24 million. Furthermore, the arithmetic argument a little further, that translates into 8,000 contributions of $3,000 each. I realize that we are talking about only one Presidential candidate and the general election campaign, but this can be extrapolated into other races for Federal office; and I submit that a thorough examination of the actual number of contributions is necessary. To fund campaigns for Federal office would shock many people. In fact, that number is infinitesimal in light of a voting-age population of over 140 million people.

Regardless, we are, therefore, that we enlist the aid of the Federal Government through a system of partial, but substantial public financing.

But I cannot accept that alternative. I cannot accept it because there seems to me something politically inchoate about the Government financing, and I believe inevitably then, regulating the day-to-day procedures by which the taxpayer pays the President, or my colleagues in the Congress are convinced that we cannot raise sufficient funds so long as we limit the size of individual contributions. It is pure politics, therefore, that we enlist the aid of the Federal Government through a system of partial, but substantial public financing.

Moreover, I feel that the rotation system as it exists now gives the individual's negative one; and this, I believe, is wrong. Moreover, if insufficient funds are raised under S. 3044, $2 on an individual return and $4 on a joint return is automatically paid into the Federal election campaign fund regardless of the taxpayer indicates the contrary. In other words, the only option available to the individual is a negative one; and this, in my judgment, is wrong.

However, if the funds are raised under a partial system, the Congress is required to appropriate the necessary difference, thereby negating the decision of taxpayers not to have their tax dollars used for political campaigns. This, too, is wrong in my opinion, and abridges still further the individual's first amendment rights of freedom of political expression.

Moreover, this amendment would avoid all of these constitutional questions by protecting the freedom of political expression and by encouraging that expression through a realistic tax credit system.

At a time when public confidence in our Government is at an all-time low, it is difficult to resist the temptation to throw the baby out with the bath water. And it is equally difficult to enact constructive and meaningful reform. But, going from one extreme, that is, essentially unrestricted private financing, to that other extreme, that is, partial funding of campaigns for Federal office, is not the answer. Rather, we should consider a refined form of private financing in which the size of individual contributions is strictly limited, and in which there is full public disclosure and an effective enforcement mechanism. That would seem to be the most logical next step, and that is why I am privileged to a majority of my colleagues on the Senate Watergate Committee as well as a number of other Senators.

Mr. President, in a word, I am not prepared to say we have reached the place where we can no longer discuss the political process. We can and we should refine, refurbish, and redesign our political system so that it is fully supported by voluntary contributions of individuals. We must eliminate contributions of special interest groups and restrict contributions to those made by qualified voters only. We should have timely disclosure of all contributions, and by "timely" I mean the time that has elapsed on contributions before the election and not after.

Mr. President, S. 3944 provides for the final report to be filed on January 31 in the year following an election, when it is of precious little importance to the average voter.

We should limit the amount of contribution that an individual can make. We should limit the dollar amount that can be expended.

There is a range of other options which will bring more representative government. The various people and groups that make contributions form a package infinitely more attractive to this Senator than the present system.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I find myself in agreement with the distinguished Senator from Tennessee on a good many points he made. However, there are a number of points I cannot support in this amendment for reasons I shall enumerate.

First, the most recent point he made, that he thought a final report should be filed prior to election so voters could know about it. This is a practical impossibility, because the final report is intended to finalize everything that was transacted from a reporting standpoint, in the campaign. Obviously, one cannot file any report that would take care of those details in the 2 or 3 days of the campaign. It would be a physical impossibility. However, a report has to be prepared, it has to be filed with a receiving officer, and it has to be made available and publicized. One cannot even get something in the newspapers unless it involves something of a headline nature these days. So the practicality of that suggestion is out of the question.

Now, we have required a number of reports in the reporting process. The latest one would be a complete report of everything that happened up to 10 days before election day. We felt that was as close to election day as we could go and still make information available to the public so that they could be informed and make an informal judgment with respect to the voting process.

The distinguished Senator made some reference to the checkoff provision in title V. I would point out that title V has been eliminated from this bill and is no longer a part of the bill. Therefore, we should not discuss the matter in the context of title V, except as he proposes to put it back in in his amendment and have it called title I.

I agree with the Senator on the provision as it was originally in title V on the checkoff. I think a person should take affirmative action if he desires his money to go to the political process rather than to have it go to this purpose unless it were checked off otherwise.

When that proposal comes up in the proper form from the Committee on Finance, I would expect that proposal to be made to go to vote with the Senator from Tennessee and others on that point.

I would hope that the Senator would not pass the day by, as it were, relating to the checkoff, tax deduction, and checkoff. I say that, because there is a serious constitutional question involved as to the propriety of that issue on this bill.

We have discussed this on the floor on numerous occasions before. There is no question that it would be subject to a point of order in the House. We have had the assurance from the Garamondmen on several occasions, and on this occasion we have had the motion of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana that title V be inserted in the Committee on Finance with the assurance from him that they would attach that to an appropriate revenue bill from the House and report it to the floor of the Senate so that we would have an opportunity to vote thereon.

With respect to the compensation, I completely agree with the distinguished Senator from Tennessee on the compensation proposal. It is agreed to increasing the amount, I am in favor of increasing the tax credit; I am in favor of increasing the deductions; and I am in favor of the checkoff position. But I am very fearful that if we leave it on this bill we are going to run into some serious difficulties. We have voted already on the floor of the Senate on one occasion to strike that from this bill and refer it to the Committee on Finance. So I would be quite hopeful that the Senator from Tennessee would at least modify his amendment to take out that particular portion of the bill. Then we have remaining only the bill S. 372, which we passed last year without public financing added.

So we get back to the issue we voted earlier with the Senator from Alabama. If one is for public financing, he should vote against the amendment; if one is against public financing, he should vote for the amendment.

The Senate already has expressed its judgment overwhelmingly on S. 372, which is a good bill, and the House acted on it. Had the House acted on it last year, I do not think we should be here going through this exercise at this time, because the pressure would have been relieved somewhat. It was a good bill although it did not have the feature of public financing and other features in this bill.

So, Mr. President, I again say to my colleagues that I would be very hopeful he would not press his amendment with respect to the financing item. The issue has already been determined once. It is not properly on the bill and will create more difficulties for us. If that is the Senator's objective, we might have a vote on it. I would vote for the tax credit, the tax deduction, and the checkoff, but I cannot vote for them in his amendment without deleting public financing.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I yield to my distinguished colleague from North Carolina, I would like to make a brief remark. If I were to withdraw the amendment, if I were to run into that nature, it seems to me it would deprive the Senator of an effective reform measure as an alternative to public financing.

All the Senate could vote for would be for public financing or nothing. Therefore, I feel a strong obligation to insist on this amendment. I might point out that there is no tax deduction included in this amendment.

I yield now to the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin).

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, in furtherance of the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, if the Watergate affair indicates anything, it indicates that we need some reform in raising of campaign funds for Federal officers.

Despite my great respect for my good friend from Nevada, I cannot agree that there is any constitutional question involved here. The constitutional provision which is germane to one of that nature is in section 7 of article I, which says:

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives.

There is not a syllable in the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, of which I am a co-sponsor, that undertakes to raise a single penny of revenue. It does not undertake to raise revenue. It does not impose any taxes. But it not only does provide a method whereby we can reform the financing of Federal elections in such a way as to leave the power to make voluntary contributions to the people of this country, but is also calculated to stimulate the political parties and candidates for political office to insist on further involvement by the people of the United States in those election processes and that is the crying need, along with the need for reform.

We have gotten into an unfortunate state in this country when anything goes wrong, we say, "Go down to the bottom of that empty hole we call the Treasury of the United States and get some money out of that empty hole to cure the problem." In my judgment, we would multiply the problems, because here is an indirect encouragement to anybody who wants to have a lot of money at his disposal to have a good time traveling through this country by becoming a candidate for the Presidency of the United States. This bill is going to be a stimulation to get more money out of the Treasury of the United States, and people can indulge their political fantasies, and I do not think that is something to be encouraged.

I think the Senator from Tennessee should insist on having a vote in the Senate on this amendment, since this is not an amendment which would raise a single penny of revenue, but, on the con-
Mr. BAKER. I thank my colleague from North Carolina, who not only is a great constitutional authority in the chamber but the Senate, but I point out, has a greater familiarity with the very abuses we are trying to prevent in this country than anybody in this Chamber.

The point he makes with respect to the reasonableness of the amendment is entirely correct. The point he makes with respect to the awesome authority of the anonymous bureaucracy being brought to bear against the political system, the most delicate of all its governmental devices, is one that must commend itself to this body for consideration. I thank the Senator from North Carolina for his support.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAKER. I am happy to yield to my colleague from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. I would like to compliment the Senator from Tennessee for offering his amendment. I think it is a highly desirable alternative to the public financing approach.

I would just like to emphasize a point he made a few minutes ago. Those of us who support the "tax credit" approach to campaign reform, as opposed to public financing, are placed in a very difficult position. We are told that this option of a tax credit is parliamentary not feasible. I was happy to hear the arguments made by the Senator from North Carolina, but there are editorialists, for example, including in my own paper, which say those of us who support the other options should nevertheless vote for closure, so there is an up-and-down vote on public financing.

What this means, in effect, if it is ruled that the "tax credit" amendment is out of order, is that we really have no choice but to debate an alternate approach to public financing.

I would just say that one of my great concerns with public financing is that we are emphasizing money, rather than de-emphasizing it. It seems to me that if we are really going to restore public confidence and get greater citizen participation in campaigns, we have to use another approach than just to vote into law big spending.

I do not intend at this stage to debate either the merits or demerits, but I want to point out that the parliamentary situation, if this amendment is not proper, presents us with an alternate way in the position of having to vote up or down on public financing without a full opportunity to debate another way, which comes closer to correcting the problems of campaign spending.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am grateful for the remarks of the Senator from Delaware.

I am prepared at this time to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes for an observation.

There has been considerable discussion about the constitutional question here. I correctly stated the proposition that this matter had been raised, I believe in 1961, and it was on a campaign reform amendment of which I was a sponsor and which was before the Senate at that time. The then distinguished Senator from Virginia, Harry Byrd, who was not an opposite number, made the point that the amendment would be subject to a point of order, and it was for a tax credit similar to the tax credit in this particular amendment, and the Senate made with respect to the constitutionality of this legislative situation is entirely correct. The point he makes with respect to the awesome authority of the anonymous bureaucracy being brought to bear against the political system, the most delicate of all its governmental devices, is one that must commend itself to this body for consideration. I thank the Senator from North Carolina for his support.

with the distinguished Republican leader, the joint leadership has decided that while we will be on the pending business tomorrow, there will be no votes tomorrow, and that any votes which may arise will be deferred until Monday, May 6.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, if the distinguished majority leader will yield, I think it is essential that Senators from the affected States have the oppo- rportunity to come for the reasons cited, and for the further reason that they can best estimate the role of the Federal Government in applying such legislation as we have already enacted, whether we need additional legis- lation, or what Congress may do to as- sist in the relief of those people who have suffered from the damage; and if they can best advise it.

Moreover, they can advise the Execu- tive, as we did in the case of Hurricane Agnes, where the Federal Government moved into a legislatively and execu- tive role very promptly indeed. For example, mobile trailers and other equip- ment may be very promptly needed, and Senators, as representatives of their people, can best advise the Executive in this regard.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I would agree with what the distinguished Republican leader has just said. To reiterate, there will be no votes tomorrow. If there are any votes, they will be carried over until Monday, and no votes will occur before the hour of 3:30 p.m. on Monday, which should give the affected Members a reason- able time to assess the damage and determine how to frame their own conclusions as to what should be done.

It is the intention of the leadership to lay down a cloture motion tomorrow. It is the hope of the leadership that the Senate will agree to the cloture motion tomorrow and that a vote will occur, which will be held at 4 o'clock, on Tuesday afternoon.

That is about it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senate yield for just a moment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. This has been, apparently, a more serious thing that we estimated. I do not think legislation might be necessary. I will say to the Sen- ator from Pennsylvania. But it gets down to the question of appropriations and money. I see the distinguished chairman of the committee here and I would think that we might suggest to our colleagues that we would be available for maybe some special meeting on Monday to dis- cuss the matter of what appropriations may be made.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is a good idea and I include it in the supplemental now before us.

Mr. MAGNUSON. In the supplemental now before us, yes. But I do not think that legislation might be necessary.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, of course, any appropriation will have to originate in the House of Representa- tives. I think we would want to wait until Senators return from their respective States and get as much concrete in- formation as to probable need. If that is done, why the subcommittee under the Senator from New Mexico can hold im- mediate hearings or if he requests it, we will hold full committee hearings. In other words, the Appropriations Com- mittee is ready to act. All we are awaiting is adequate and necessary information to inform us, so that we can act intelligently and effectively.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I am informed that the Subcommittee of the Senate Public Works Committee is considering comprehensive disaster relief legislation much of which involves the consolidation—I know we have other in- formation on the basis of the existing disaster relief legislation, the subcommittee, as I understand it, from the distinguished Senator from West Virginia (Mr. Ran- dolph), a committee of Senator Bursuck and ranking Republican, Senator Domenici. Senator Baker also has been active in this regard, that I am informed.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I might say that they will look at the stressed areas on Fri- day, Saturday, and Sunday if need be and pass on the matter.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I wish to express my sincere and deep thanks to the distinguished ma- jority leader for working out this plan that will enable Senators to return to their home States and be with their people. Should the people they represent here in this body—during their time of tragedy and travel.

Certainly, I could do nothing less than to agree with the distinguished majority leader's request that the cloture vote be set, believe the majority leader said, for 4:30—for 4 o'clock?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Four o'clock.

Mr. ALLEN. Four o'clock. Certainly I would object, but I wish to commend the distinguished majority leader and the distinguished minority leader for working out this plan that will accom- modate Senators in very kind of them.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank the Senator from Alabama very much.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT FROM TOMORROW TO MONDAY NEXT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, when the Sen- ate completes its business tomorrow, it stand in adjournment until the hour of 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. McCLELLAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT FROM MONDAY NEXT, APRIL 8, 1974, TO TUESDAY, APRIL 9

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, when the Sen- ate completes its business on Monday next, it stand in adjournment until 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday, April 9, 1974.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time for the cloture motion begin at 3 p.m. on Tuesday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) for yielding us this time.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority and minority leaders for working out this schedule so that those of us who are affected will be able to make the trip.

SOLAR ENERGY

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be an extension of 30 days from April 12, 1974, to file S. 1184, to permit the committees having jurisdiction to complete their work on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consider- ation of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Fed- eral elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Baker) may yield to me so that I may proceed for 5 minutes, with the under- standing that by so doing the Senator from Tennessee will not lose his right to the floor.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I will be glad to do that but may I ask my distinguished colleague from North Carolina to permit me to lay down my amendment and ask for the yeas and nays while there are still a sufficient number of Senators in the Chamber? Mr. ERVIN. Of course.

AMENDMENT NO. 1133

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1133 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

On page 84, line 9, strike out "title V".

On page 71, beginning with line 20, strike out through line 2 on page 73 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) Except to the extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (f) or (g), no candidate (other than a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President) may make expenditures in connection with his primary election campaign in excess of the greater of:

(1) Ten cents multiplied by the voting age population in the State in which he is a candidate for nomination for the election to the office of President who make expenditures in connection with his primary election campaign in excess of the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure,

(2) Expenditures made on behalf of any candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States are, for the purposes of this section, considered to be made by such candidate.

(3) For purposes of this subsection, an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by:

(A) An authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purpose of making any expenditure, or

(B) Any person requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate or an agent of the candidate to make the expenditure.

(4) For purposes of this section an expenditure made by the national committee of a political party or the committee of a political party, in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate affiliated with that party which is not in excess of the limitations contained in subsection (1), is not considered to be an expenditure made on behalf of that candidate.

(f) (1) For the purpose of this section, "price index" means the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index for all items, United States city average published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and the base period means the calendar year 1973.

(2) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1978), as necessary data becomes available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Federal Election Commission and publish in the Federal Register the percentage difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each amount determined under subparagraph (A) shall be increased by such percentage difference. Each amount so changed shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

(g) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Federal Election Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of such congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means registered population, eighteen years of age or older.

(h) (A) Upon receiving the certification of the Secretary of Commerce, the Federal Election Commission shall publish in the Federal Register the applicable expenditure limitations in effect for the calendar year for the United States, and for each State and congressional district under this section.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, this is an amendment which I drafted to eliminate the tax credit from the pending bill, S. 3044, the Federal financing provisions to provide for financing of Federal elections through the voluntary contributions of taxpayers who would receive substantially increased rights to a deduction from their income tax and a substantial increase in their tax credit.

The vote on the amendment just offered by Mr. Baker, with my cosponsorship, and that of other Senators, that is, amendment No. 1134, convives me by the overwhelming nature of the vote that the Senate would not be doing a proper job in judging that amendment.

For that reason, I withdraw the amendment and thank my distinguished friend from Tennessee for yielding me the opportunity to explain the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I will not take very long with this amendment. It would simply eliminate public financing for candidates of Congress and substitute an increased tax credit.

That is the sole purpose of the amendment. It leaves the bill intact otherwise.
I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, do I correctly understand that this amendment is the same as the prior amendment, except that it would eliminate public financing in congressional campaigns only?

Mr. BAKER. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. The tax credit would remain at $50 or $100 on a joint return, but there would be no tax checkoff provision and no tax deduction; is that not correct?

Mr. BAKER. There would be as to a Presidential race but not a congressional race.

Mr. CANNON. In the Senator's previous amendment he struck out the tax checkoff provision. He also struck out the tax deduction. Is that out of this amendment as well?

Mr. BAKER. No; those provisions as the relate to Presidential races would remain intact, but as they might relate to congressional relations, they would be deleted.

This amendment simply takes leave of the presidential situation as the Senator has stated in S. 3044 but eliminates the congressional races from the coverage and places a tax check in its place.

Mr. CANNON. I thank the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BAKER. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on this amendment has now been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) No. 1135.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENNETT), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. PULBRIGHT), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARKER), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. STEWART), and the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HOOSELSTON) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT) and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. CASE) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. CASE) would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 54, as follows:

Mr. BAKER's amendment (No. 1135) was rejected.

Mr. STEWENSON. Mr. President, I have joined today in submitting three amendments to S. 3044 with Senators TAFT and DOMENICI which would authorize partial public financing of Federal general elections and eliminate from the bill public financing of congressional primaries.

The first amendment is directed at Federal general elections. In place of the 100-percent public financing provided for major party candidates, our amendment provides for not less than 25 percent, nor more than 50 percent of public financing for such candidates. Major party candidates would become eligible for a 25-percent formula grant upon nomination. They could also qualify for up to an additional 25 percent in Federal matching payments against small contributions, but no candidate could receive Federal payments totaling more than 50 percent of the applicable campaign expenditure limit.

It is probable that all major party general election candidates for Federal office could qualify for 50-percent public financing. It is also probable that the amount of money raised by taxpayers would more than equal the cost to the Treasury over the 4-year election cycle of 50-percent public financing for the Federal general election campaigns.

The small contributions eligible for matching are those same as those which the committee bill applies to primary elections, that is, $250 in Presidential campaigns and $100 in congressional campaigns. The relative size of the maximum subsidy available to minor party candidates in general elections is the same as in the committee bill.

This amendment also lowers the contribution limit for congressional general elections, now at $3,000 for individuals and $6,000 for political committees, to $1,000 for all donors. The contribution limits for primaries and Presidential general elections are not changed.

This amendment endeavors to strike a fair and equal balance between a host of competing considerations, including the need to replace big money with unquestionably clean money, the need to encourage citizens to make—and candidates to seek—small contributions, the need to assure the less well-known candidate enough start-up money to mount an effective campaign, and the need to minimize the cost to the Treasury.

The second amendment combines all of the features of the first amendment with the provision that the Senator eliminate public financing of congressional primaries. While I believe that a good case can be made for the principle that public funds should be made available to encourage greater and more equitable competition at the prenomination stage, particularly in connection with Presidential elections, I am convinced that the issues are so great in regard to congressional primaries and experience so slight that there exists a substantial possibility that the extension of public financing to congressional primaries at this time would do more harm than good.

I prefer not to run what I regard as a serious risk of weakening the political system in the name of reform.

Among the problems in public financing of congressional primaries are the following: First, it is not at all clear that a candidate's ability to raise the threshold amount is a good measure of popular popularity or legitimacy. It may merely measure the sophistication of his fund-raising operation, or it may be a reflection of the amounts of big money he or she was able to raise. Second, the matching system magnifies the amounts by which one primary candidate is able to outspend another. Assume, for example, that in a Senatorial primary in a State where the total contribution limit is $1.5 million there are two candidates, one who has raised $400,000 and one who has raised $700,000. Without matching the second candidate can outspend the first by $300,000.

If all the funds raised by both candidates are eligible for matching, the first candidate will have a total of $800,000; the second, $1.4 million. The result is that the first candidate is outspent by $600,000 instead of $300,000. It is not at all clear that such a system promotes more equitable competition between primary contenders; it may well have the opposite effect.

Third, matching may encourage a proliferation of primary candidates, some insincere, all of which will be more effectively funded. The effect could well be heightened public confusion and irritation, lower turnouts, less well-informed decisions in the voting booth, and the nomination of candidates less representative of the party as a whole. The result could be a weakening of the two-party system.

By no means does this exhaust the objectionable public campaign financing of primaries on a matching basis. I do not contend that the prenomination stage of the electoral process is perfect, or that it is impossible to devise a system of public financing which will improve that stage. I do maintain that the criticisms of public financing of congressional primaries are serious enough—and the risk of irreparable greatness enough—that the issue is best left for another day, a day when, through the experience with public financing in general elections, we will be in a better position to act constructively.

Indeed, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to order the yeas and nays on my amendment, as does S. 3044, to make what we in the Senate thought we had adopted in the Senate Education Amendments. It was then, and still is, our contention that under the language there was no authority for the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to require a needs test from students from families with an adjusted gross income of less than $15,000. However, the ignorance of the agency made necessary legislation of an emergency type.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the conference report was signed by all conference committee. Is that correct?

Mr. PELL. That is correct.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the majority, therefore, commend it to the Senate, as does the House.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay the table was agreed to.

HENRY AARON HITS SOMERSET NO. 714—TIES RECORD OF BABE RUTH

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I am very proud to notify the Senate that in today's 1974 baseball season's opening game between the Atlanta Braves and Cincinnati Reds, Henry "Hank" Aaron hit his 714th home run—tying the record of Babe Ruth.

This is indeed a momentous day in baseball history, and I extend my personal congratulations to Hank Aaron and the Atlanta Braves. It is my understanding that Aaron may be bunched for the other two games in Cincinnati, and I hope that this is true. As a Georgian, I would like to tell Hank hit the big one—the one to break Babe Ruth's record—in Atlanta Stadium Monday night in the Braves' game against Los Angeles.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT
AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the Record.

The amendment ordered to be printed in the Record is as follows:

On page 71, between lines 12 and 13, insert the following:

DEVIATIONS STATEMENTS ABOUT CANDIDATES FOR FEDERAL OFFICE

Sec. 304. Section 612 of title 18, United States Code, is amended:

(a)by striking at the end of the section caption a semicolon and "defamatory statements about candidates for Federal office"; and by designating the first paragraph thereof as subsection (a);

(c)by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

(b) No person shall be guilty to be published a false and defamatory statement about the character or professional ability of a candidate for Federal office with respect to the qualifications of that candidate for that office if such person knows that such statement is false. Violation of this subsection is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000, imprisonment not to exceed six months, or both.

On page 71, line 15, strike out "304." and insert in lieu thereof "305."

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, this amendment is designed to correct the situation that we observed during the Watergate hearings, where people go around the country issuing defaming documents that are knowingly false and willfully sending them throughout the country. We have seen several instances of that.

A man named Segretti was hired to perform dirty tricks and dirty tricks alone. Two of our colleagues in the Senate were victimized by that practice.

The cutting edge of this amendment states:

(b) No person shall be guilty to be published a false and defamatory statement about the character or professional ability of a candidate for Federal office with respect to the qualifications of that candidate for that office if such person knows that such statement is false. Violation of the provisions of this subsection is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000, imprisonment not to exceed six months, or both.

I have discussed this amendment with the manager of the bill (Mr. Cannon) and the assistant majority leader, and I understand they are prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator answer a question on the amendment?

In every case of this character, it would always be a question of first amendment rights and constitutionality.

Mr. TALMADGE. Yes.

Mr. JAVITS. I think it would be extremely useful. It sounds intelligible and sounds right and does not sound contrary to the Constitution.

Mr. TALMAGE. I may say I checked out the very question the Senator presented with the legislative counsel, and was informed that the first amendment did not protect a person knowingly publishing false and defamatory statements. The amendment is drawn so must be willfully false intentions being done.

Mr. JAVITS. As I say, it sounded right to me, but I think it would be useful to us if we could get the legislative drafting service to get a legislative memorandum which the Senator could put into the Recor-

Mr. TALMAGE. I think I have one in my office. I did not anticipate offering the amendment at this time.

At this time I would like to make the following statement as a part of my

Mr. President, during the so-called Watergate Committee’s investigation into the 1972 Presidential campaign, what has since come to be known as the “dirty tricks” escapades came to light. An investigation revealed the acts of one witness who deliberately put together a false and malicious letter accusing two prominent candidates of deviancy. Other campaigns workers prepared and circulated broadsides and letters grossly misrepresenting prior remarks of opposition candidates. Major candidates became the targets of halft-

American politics has always been rough and tumble. Campaigns are often highly partisan and, in many ways, this is a healthy sign of a free society. Certitled to hear both sides of the issues. But the idea that people ought to be mired by fraud and deception.

It does not make it unlawful for the media to transmit a candidate’s speech, even though that speech might misrepresent the facts or be laden with inaccuracies. It is a carefully drafted proposal which permits the free flow of ideas in the political marketplace. It forbids outright lying and intentional misrepresentations.

In Garrison versus Louisiana, the Sup-

I want to be sure that is a proper understanding.

I think it would. However, it is not a common practice to publish books in political campaigns. What this amendment is aimed at is some fellow circulating around the country, creating an instance like we had in New Hampshire, where they had Senator Murdock and said something derogatory about some particular ethnic group in the State of Maine.

Also, the distinguished Senator from Minnesota was victimized in the State of Florida by the same group. Also, the distinguished Senator from Washington was victimized.

This amendment is intended to provide a prohibition against that kind of action. I think it would be applicable to anyone who published it, but he must publish it knowing it to be false at the time.

Mr. PELL. It is my understanding that, under Sullivan against New York Times, if one is a public figure—and that includes any candidate for public office—there is virtually no law of libel that is applicable.

Mr. TALMAGE. They reduced severely, as I understand the Sullivan case, the ability to suit anyone in public office. I believe it must be proved that it was malicious and false and done with a malicious motive.

Mr. PELL. To prove a motive—the Senator from Georgia as a lawyer is much more familiar with this than I am—there is a provision, the constitutionality of it, but maybe not.

Mr. TALMAGE. I have no objection to a rollcall vote.

I understand the Senator to tell others Senators a few minutes ago that there would be no more rollcall votes tonight. It could go on until Monday. I would have no objection to that. If the distinguished acting majority leader would set a time certain for a vote, I would have no objection.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may I ask the distinguished Senator, along with the assistant majority leader and the acting manager of the bill, how much time they think they would want to debate this amendment?

Mr. TALMAGE. Thirty minutes, 15 minutes to a side.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, on Monday, after conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate resume consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, and that at that time the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Georgia (Mr. TALMAGE) be made the pending question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. And I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation on the amendment by the distinguished Senator from Georgia (Mr. TALMAGE) of 30 minutes, to be equally divided between the distinguished Senator and the manager of the bill, or if the manager of the bill supports the amendment, then the time in opposition thereto be under the control of the distinguished minority leader or his designee, and that the time be equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order on the amendment be recommenced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the day be adjourned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota.

HANK AARON'S HOME RUN RECORD

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, we listened with great interest and I did with excitement—to the announcement made by our distinguished colleague from Georgia (Mr. TALMAGE) about the spectacular feat of Henry "Hank" Aaron, tying the home run record of the "Babe" Ruth on April 8.

I have consulted with Senator Griffin, who happens to be a great Herman (Babe) Ruth fan, and I have consulted with the distinguished Senator from Georgia (Mr. TALMAGE) and the distinguished acting majority leader (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD), to submit a resolution immediate consideration of an immediate resolution, which reads as follows:

S. Res. 309

Whereas, baseball is a great American sport; Whereas, baseball is a great American sport; Whereas, the home run record of the Atlanta Braves honor to his team, his country, and his people; Whereas Hank Aaron on the date of April 8, 1974, has tied the home run record of George Herman (Babe) Ruth; Whereas, the United States Senate expresses its congratulations to Hank Aaron on April 8, 1974, in the game between Atlanta Braves and the Cincinnati Reds, as Chicago Cub, in the game between Atlanta Braves and the Cincinnati Reds, as Chicago Cub, in the game between Chicago Cubs and the Atlanta Braves.

Mr. TALMAGE. Mr. President, will the distinguished senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am happy to yield.

Mr. TALMAGE. I congratulate the Senator on his leadership in submitting the resolution, and I am happy to be a consponsor thereof.

A few moments ago we heard remarks on the Senate floor congratulating Hank Aaron. I urge the Senate to approve overwhelming the resolution that has been submitted by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, of which I am proud to be a cosponsor.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, as in many other instances in my life, I have received inspiration and guidance from the distinguished Senator from Minnesota. In this instance, I am reminded of the Senator who loves baseball and baseball, who has had wholehearted cooperation from this remarkable man of the Senate, who are baseball fans—our two friends from Georgia (Mr. TALMAGE and Mr. NUNN), the distinguished Senator from Michigan (Mr. GARRARD), and the distinguished Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD).

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we proceed to the consideration of the resolution and that it be approved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCLELLAN). Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 309) was agreed to.

export these crops and earn the foreign exchange necessary to purchase needed imports and commodities. This is significant, that, as of late December, the Agriculture Department had not publicly factored the world energy crisis into its projections of world grain and American food.

Agriculture's sense of new strength is also apparent in the American approach to trade, people of the Crop Insurance Board, on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) negotiations which began formally last September. Within the Agriculture Department there is little residual bitterness that in the Kennedy Round the interests of agriculture were given second billing to those of industry, as is evident to international trade negotiators to show "what our farmers and marketing system might be able to do consistently, several years down the road but with greater price stability—if many of the artificial barriers to import demand in other nations were reduced."

America, as of late fall, now seeks "a major, perhaps decisive role" in the GATT talks. "Our resolve must be made to go beyond international principles and on those foreign trade barriers which prevent one of the most efficient U.S. industries—one of the world's most efficient farm sectors—from reaching its potential. Let us improve our trade and payments position."

Our policy is easy to summarize: food for cash.

FOOD: FOR PEACE OR POLITICS?

While commercial exports have climbed toward $30 billion, shipments under Food for Peace have lagged, primarily because, "the future mechanism for aiding food-deficit countries is," an Agriculture Department representative in Paris notes, "a bilateral system.

Now it is true that, for recipients, Food for Peace has not always been an unmitigated success. Many of our farmers and their agriculture and have involved political and psychic costs. It has also become true in recent years to regard the "P.L. 480" aid program as, in effect, a primary surplus disposal program. It's for humanitarian purposes and for national security to help infuse purchasing power into countries on our defense perimeter. South Vietnam is a case in point.

Indeed, last year more than 800,000 metric tons of our wheat went to South Vietnam, and to these other countries regarded, in varying degree, as segments of the American "defensive perimeter," including Korea, Israel, Korea, Iran, Pakistan, and Indonesia.

Nonetheless, through these three decades, Food for Peace has nourished hungry millions. They have nourished our better instincts as a people.

For three decades, however, American diplomats have been political tool: to relieve the misery of our friends, to spare them the cost of buying the food on the open market, and to help them keep popular discontent within politically manageable bounds; to show off American productivity and to gain in other beneficent; and so on. It is within this tradition of food diplomacy that administration officials may sometimes sell American food to countries which won't sell us oil.

It is perhaps worth noting here that while countries in dures may appreciate sometime through clenched teeth—our food less, they tend to react strongly against the overt use of food as a political weapon. During a period of bad relations in 1963, for instance, President Hasser of Egypt denounced the United States for failing to provide food aid to states which the United States to "go drink sea water." During another bad period in 1966 he declared: "We have not the strength to bleed we shall not sell for wheat, for rice, or for anything." Three days before President Nasser was killed last fall, his government said the United States had refused to sell it, for cash, vitally needed supplies of wheat, because of a "political decision of the White House"; less than a month after the coup, the United States and to the new Egyptian government in an amount eight times the total commodity credit offered to the United States, however, with their cash and small populations—and their oil—are not similarly vulnerable. Plainly, it depends.

Until recently, nonetheless, the idea of feeding hungry foreigners was fading for other than political reasons. The chairman of the American Farmers Aid Council, Representative Herman Talmadge and Representative W. R. Poage, are known for their conservative philosophy and the need for international cooperation; they both have promoted themselves content with America's past and present performance on food aid. Food for Peace is a drain on American dollars, Poage said, "and it should be treated as just another kind of foreign aid like medecine or public works." The Agriculture Department, whose Secretary has been known to warn darkly of "alarmists," has constantly played down the possibility of famine, "frightful help of good weather, and pointing to the "international" nature of the world food problem without offering a solution. In the State Department, the attitude was growing more negative. "Food for Peace was based on the old-fashioned idea that the world by food," a State Department official said to me last summer at a time when Bangladesh was being fed, largely in vain, for a time on the idea that feeding the world is an international problem, maybe one for the United Nations.

Yet the idea would be to put it on a permanent dole. That would just give it the excuse to avoid solving its problems. Then Secretary of State Henry Kissinger warned last year that "there may be an effort in the future to promote a false sense of security in the world by feeding the people of the developing countries."

So, if you will, a food. But given the political and economic facts of life in Washington, a spark was needed to give the idea a political of the idea, for Peace was bas

A WORLD FOOD RESERVE

In fact, Food for Peace must be considered all but defunct. Only last summer did a new idea appear for a program or mechanism to fill its chief purpose of ease world hunger. The idea was a "world food reserve," and it came from the American, the Dutchman who was Director General of the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization. To be sure, the idea of a planned reserve is not new. A report of the Inter-American Development Committee recalls that, as early as 1912, Henry A. Wallace, the Biblical story of Joseph, wrote a final famine, among the创建 a "constantly normal grainary" in China, in order to urge a similar food store plan upon the United States. As Secretary of Agriculture, Wallace steered into law a Depression America a storage program intended to protect American farmers. The United States Com- bined Food Board provided some experience in international food cooperation in World War II. The Food and Agriculture Organization's (FAO) first chief, proposed a plan for purchase and storage of surplus food.

His plan founded on the same rocks that have endangered all such proposals since, whether the reserve was meant for the do- mestic or international market. That is, essentially, the fear of producers everywhere that at some point the reserves will be dumped on the market, thus depressing the prices. In the United States, the farm bill for many years had an overproduction title to induce the government to buy surpluses but to keep them of the market. Farmers, though politically weaker now, make the same appeal, the more so in a period of strong market demand and high prices.

"Food reserves held by government can never be a substitute for the market," But warned in December. "Farmers should not be fooled by promises that a system can be set up to control the market, a pre-mature release of stocks. Any set of rules would certainly be subject to change—especially in light of the those policies that were revealed in 1973, pressures which forced this Administration to impose counterproductive price controls. And even those officials who are indifferent to the welfare of farmers are slowed by the high costs of buying and storing food for a reserve and the U.S. Agriculture Department, that the United States has done plentifully in the past and that other developed countries themselves, should do more now.

Now, Boerma, offering his proposal in July, helped publicize the need to was addressed. The "non-aligned" nations, meeting In Algiers in September, made a like appeal. At the same time, the British economist, Timothy Jevons, published a widely circulated paper on international grain reserves. The idea is in the air. But given the political and economic facts of life in Washington, a spark was needed to give the idea a political of the idea, for Peace was bas

THE SBC STORY

This was done on September 11, at the former's confirmation hearing, by Secretary of the Cissenger, Senator Hubert Humphrey. Humphrey first started talking about reserves in the 1960's. Senator Edward Kennedy, for instance, remem-

Humphrey has been the commanding figure among the members of legislators who not only an internationalist outlook and a conscience but with farm expertise. As chairman of the Senate's Foreign Agricultural Policy Subcommittee, Humphrey has conducted a prodigious public record on issues of world food security. As a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, conducted that boil and Kissin-

Kissinger. You know, Senator Humphrey, that your suggestion runs counter to our traditional attitude with respect to agri-

Kissinger. We. We have always realized the idea of commodity-type agreements because we wanted to have the maximum opportunity for the export of American products, and we thought it necessary to take care of all needs. In this respect the experience of the last year (1973-74) has been a challenge to all our traditional assumptions. We recognize that now we are living in a new world.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for the President and the Senate, and to extend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The Acting President pro tempore, Mr. NELSON, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce. Mr. GRIFFIN, Mr. President, I reserve the right to object.

The Acting President pro tempore, Mr. Nelson, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR., Mr. President, I do not want to object to the request...
Mr. President, there can no longer be any doubt that a law of this kind is needed, for the harm caused by the abuses caused by a petroleum industry which is vertically integrated and monopolistic. According to figures in a Government Operations Committee report entitled "Investigation of the Petroleum Industry," that industry has in certain respects become even more concentrated and top-heavy in 1969 than it was in 1960. The top 20 companies together accounted for 50 percent of the domestic net crude oil production while the top 20 companies had 70 percent. In 1969, those four companies—Standard of New Jersey, Texaco, Gulf, and Shell—accounted for 50 percent in 1980 while in 1960 they shared 26 percent. In 1970, the top 20 companies accounted for 94 percent of proved domestic crude reserves, the top eight had 84 percent and the top four had 37 percent. In 1970, the company share of domestic crude oil and gasoline refining capacity were as follows: the top 10 had 53 percent, the top eight had 57 percent, and the top 20 shared 86 percent.

In hearings before Congress, Roosevelt's committee in the mid-1950's, before Senator Herbert, and in a lengthy study by my own staff, the same facts have been consistently brought out: these include short orders for retailers, unsolicited cancellations, artificially induced price variances, forced "trunk" "give-aways" which are beneficial only to the oil companies, and on and on. As recently as last year, in a front-page article in the Milwaukee Sentinel, it was stated that 3,800 independent retail gasoline dealers had begun concerted efforts to enfranchise legislation of this sort. The reason they include being forced to purchase such things as batteries, and accessories from the majors at prices dictated by the majors.

The oil industry monopoly has had a trillion dollar retail gasoline dealers. Justifying before the Senate Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. H. C. Thompson, president of the National Congressional Committee, has described the retail dealers' position as "largely that of an economic serf rather than that of an independent business man," in his July 12 testimony, Mr. Thompson estimated that the turnover in gasoline station operators is 25 to 35 percent each year, or about $50,000 to 70,000 dealers.

The legislation has not been the only branch to bring about competition in the oil industry. In his final speech on this subject last July 12, the distinguished Senator from South Dakota (Mr. Anderson) took the italicized portion of the Senate's policy in this case in the landmark case of Standard Oil Company of New Jersey v. United States, 221 U.S. 1 in 1917.

An exhaustive examination of this whole problem has recently been completed by the Federal Trade Commission. It is a 141-page document entitled "Complaint Against Pecodiscovery State Commission," dated February 25, 1974, and is in support of the Commission's complaint in the Matter of Exxon Corporation et al. This document is discussed in two recent newspaper articles.

The first is an article by Morton Mintz in the Washington Post, February 24, 1974, and the second is from the Wall Street Journal, February 25. Among the remedies it proposes, the FTC suggests refiner and refiner and the stability of the independent petroleum industry.

Unfortunately, proceedings of this sort take very much time. Mr. Mintz suggests a final resolution is 8 to 10 years away. Given the present state of our petroleum supply and the state of the oil industry, I feel that is a bit long. We can no longer put off legislation of this sort as being premature or ill-considered. Nor can we hide from the facts that there continues to be a petroleum crisis, even though its immediate effects may have been eased by the recent lifting of the oil embargo. This is a bill whose time has come.
Section 8 makes necessary allowance for operations during the period before divestiture can be accomplished. It permits companies otherwise subject to the prohibitions of Section 6 to continue operations for one year prior to the filing of an appropriate divestment plan with the Secretary of State. Operations are subject to inspection and thereafter during the period required for the consideration, approval and effectuation of such a plan. Section 8 imposes penalties for the violation of the Act, to consist of a forfeiture of $5,000 for each day a company is in violation.

In determining its official views toward other countries, the United States government could use its economic leverage to pressure nations into compliance. For example, sanctions could be imposed on Rhodesia, which is deeply dependent on Soviet trade. If a company operating a refinery in Rhodesia is subject to the Act, it may be presumed to be involved in activities prohibited by the U.S. government. Under such circumstances, it is possible to argue that the Secretary of State has the authority to impose the sanctions as a consequence of the act.

Mr. Byrd: The question of whether Rhodesia is a threat to world peace is a complex one. It requires a careful consideration of the facts and the potential consequences of military action. The situation in Rhodesia is a sensitive issue that involves a variety of factors, including political, economic, and military considerations.

Mr. Kissingler: The United States government has a responsibility to promote peace and stability worldwide. Byrd’s question is important, as it highlights the need for a comprehensive approach to addressing the issue of Rhodesia.

Mr. Byrd: Thank you, Mr. Secretary. I appreciate your insight. The situation in Rhodesia is complex, and it is important to approach it with care and moderation.

Mr. Kissingler: The United States government has a history of engaging with nations around the world, and it is important to consider the potential consequences of any action we take. In the case of Rhodesia, it is important to weigh the potential benefits of any action against the potential costs, including the impact on our own citizens and the stability of the region.

Mr. Byrd: Thank you, Mr. Secretary. I appreciate your perspective and the information you have provided. The question of whether Rhodesia is a threat to world peace is a complex one that requires careful consideration.

against Rhodesia, inspired by foreign internal racial policies, and the fact that the internal racial policies constitute an overwhelming majority of Rhodesia’s policies. Though blacks constitute a majority of the population, it is not a majority of the population that comprises the government, nor of its polices. As with many other governments, in power for its racial policies endorse diplomatic and economic sanctions, which kill all of its people under the brutal heel of totalitarianism.

Whether these internal policies are bad or good, they are real. Besides, if Mr. Kissinger’s factor 0.111 is a factor, then there is one complex United States government that is no longer subject to Rhodesian policies. It is a major source of harm to the American economy. Because of that, it has been designated as a result of the embargo, we become embattled up—of all nations—Russia, the major potential threat to America’s survival.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT

AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3644) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

AMENDMENT NO. 1067

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1067.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 3, beginning with line 6, strike out through line 4 on page 35 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION

"Sec. 502. (a) There is established, as an independent establishment of the executive branch of the Government of the United States, the Federal Election Commission, to be known as the Federal Election Commission.

"(2) The Commission shall be composed of seven members who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate. Of the seven members,

"(A) two shall be chosen from among individuals recommended by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon the recommendation of the majority leader of the Senate and the minority leader of the Senate; and

"(B) two shall be chosen from among individuals recommended by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, upon the recommendation of the majority leader of the House and the minority leader of the House. The persons appointed under subparagraph (A) shall not be affiliated with the same political party; nor shall the two members appointed under subparagraph (B) of the three members not appointed under such subparagraphs, no more than two shall be affiliated with the same political party.

"(3) Members of the Commission shall serve for terms of seven years, except that, or the members first appointed,

"(A) two of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for terms ending on the April 30th first occurring more than six months after the date on which they are appointed;

"(B) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2) (A) shall be appointed for a term ending one year after the April 30 on which the term of the member referred to in subparagraph (C) of this paragraph;

"(C) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2) (B) shall be appointed for a term ending three years thereafter;

"(D) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending three years thereafter; and

"(E) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2) (A) shall be appointed for a term ending four years thereafter; and

"(F) the Commission has pr

"(4) Members shall be chosen on the basis of their maturity, experience, integrity, impartiality, and good judgment. A member may be reappointed to the Commission only once.

"(5) An individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term shall be appointed only for the unexpired term in which that office was originally filled.

"(6) The Commission shall elect a Chairmen and a Vice Chairman from among its members for two-year terms. The Chairman and the Vice Chairman shall not be affiliated with the same political party. The Vice Chairman shall act as Chairman in the absence of the Chairman, or in the event of a vacancy in that office.

"(b) A vacancy in the Commission shall not impair the right of the remaining members to act; or to fill vacancies in the Commission and four members thereof shall constitute a quorum.

"(c) The Commission shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

"(d) The Commission shall act at the close of each session of Congress, and to the President concerning the action it has taken; the names, salaries, and duties of all individuals in its employ and the money it has appropriated shall be published in the Federal Register, and the Commission shall make such further reports on the matters within its jurisdiction and such recommendations for further legislation as may appear desirable.

"(e) The principal office of the Commission shall be in or near the District of Columbia, or in the district of Columbia, and shall be open to the public.

"(f) The Commission shall appoint a General Counsel and an Executive Director to serve at the pleasure of the Commission. The General Counsel shall be the chief legal officer of the Commission. The Executive Director shall be responsible for the administrative operations of the Commission and shall perform such other duties as may be delegated to him by the Commission by regulations or orders of the Commission. The Commission shall not delegate the making of regulations regarding elections to the Executive Director.

"(g) The Commission may obtain the services of experts and consultants in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

"(h) In carrying out its responsibilities under this Act, the Commission, to the fullest extent practicable, shall, to the extent practicable, issue its own orders, regulations, or other written directives, and shall not rely upon, or otherwise permit the use of, an order, regulation, or any other administrative or judicial order, rule, or decision.

"(i) No person shall be subject to civil or criminal enforcement for any violation of this Act.

"(j) No person shall be subject to civil or criminal enforcement for any violation of any provision of any regulation under this Act.

"(k) In verifying signatures on petitions required under this Act, the Commission shall have the power—

"(1) to make, pursuant to the provisions of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, any regulations necessary to achieve the purposes of this Act under this Act, including rules defining terms used in this Act and rules establishing procedures for gathering and certifying signatures on petitions required under this Act;

"(2) to make rules governing the manner of signatures, organization, and personnel;

"(3) to require, by special or general order, that any person to submit in writing reports and answers to questions the Commission may prescribe; and that reports and answers shall be submitted to the Commission within such reasonable period and under oath or otherwise as the Commission may determine;

"(4) to administer oaths;

"(5) to require by subpoena, signed by the Chairman or the Vice Chairman, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all documentary evidence relating to the execution of its duties;

"(6) in any proceeding or investigation, to order testimony to be taken by deposition before any person designated by the Commission, who shall administer oaths, and to compel testimony and the production of evidence in the same manner as authorized under paragraph (5) of this subsection;

"(7) to pay witnesses the same fees and mileage as are paid in like circumstances in the courts of the United States;

"(8) to initiate (through civil proceedings and through presentations to Federal grand juries) or to cause to be initiated any court action in the name of the Commission for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this section and of sections 602, 606, 610, 611, 612, 613, 615, 616, 618, 619, and 619 of title 18, United States Code, and to recover any amounts payable to the Secretary of the Treasury under section 10, through its General Counsel; and

"(9) to delegate any of its functions or powers, other than the power to issue subpoenas under paragraph (5) to any officer of the Commission.

"(b) Any United States district court within the jurisdiction of which any inquiry is carried on, may, upon petition by the Commission,

"(1) in case of refusal to obey a subpoena or order of the Commission issued under subsection (a) of this section, issue an order requiring compliance thereon, or failure to obey the order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof;

"(2) upon the request of the Commission, convene a special Federal grand jury to investigate possible violations of this Act.

"(3) in case of refusal to obey a subpoena or order of the Commission issued under subsection (a) of this section, issue an order requiring compliance thereon, or failure to obey the order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof;

which a candidate for nomination for election, or election, to the office of Senator (or for appointment, to the office of Delegate, in the case of the District of Columbia) may incur within that State in connection with his campaign for that nomination or election: "(2) No candidate for election to the office of President may incur any expenditure in connection with his general election campaign in excess of 20 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under subsection (b) of section 107) of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July preceding the date of certification. The term 'voting age population' means resident population, eighteen years of age or older.

"PETITION DRIVES"

"Sec. 507. (a) The extent that such amounts are changed under subsection (b) —

(1) no candidate who seeks a major party nomination for election to the office of Representative may incur any expenditures in connection with his petition drive to meet the requirements of section 504 which exceed an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under section 106) of each congressional district in which he seeks election; or

(2) no candidate who seeks a major party nomination for election to the office of Representative is entitled to only one Representative, Senator, or President, may incur any expenditures in connection with his petition drive to meet the requirements of section 504 which exceed an amount equal to the greater of —

(A) 1 cent multiplied by the voting age population (as certified under section 506(f)) of the geographic region in which he seeks election; or

(B) $7,500.

(b) No person may make a contribution to any candidate for use in connection with the petition drive of that candidate to meet the requirements of section 504 which, when added to all other contributions made by that person to that candidate in connection with the same petition drive, exceeds $100.

"(3) No candidate may knowingly accept a contribution from any person made in connection with the petition drive of that candidate, when added to all other contributions made in connection with that petition drive, exceeds $100. For purposes of this paragraph, a contribution consists of any payments made by any person in connection with the petition drive of a candidate is considered to be accepted by the candidate.

(c) No candidate may make any expenditure or accept any contribution in connection with his petition drive except during the period beginning three hundred days before the date of the primary election of the major party whose nomination the candidate seeks and ending two hundred and ten days before that date.

(d) (1) Each candidate who files a petition with the Commission under section 504 shall report to the Commission the amount of each contribution he receives in connection with his petition drive, the identity of each contributor, and any other information the Commission requires at the time and in the manner the Commission prescribes.

(2) If a candidate meets the requirements of section 504, the Commission shall pay an amount to each person who contributed to that candidate an amount equal to the contribution made by that person under subsection (b) to that candidate.

(3) Each amount under subsection (a) shall be changed at the beginning of each calendar year by the percentage difference between the price index for the twelve months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each amount determined under subsections (a), (b), and (c) shall be rounded to the nearest whole dollar.

(2) (1) The Commission shall create and maintain an account for the receipt and disbursement of sums that are, or become, attributable to that account, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title.

(2) The Secretary of the Commission may transfer to the fund any moneys in the Federal Election Campaign Fund established under section 9006 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

(3) The Secretary of the Treasury may transfer to the fund any moneys from the Federal Election Campaign Fund which he determines, after consultation with the Commission, are in excess of the amounts which are necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

"PAYMENTS BY THE COMMISSION"

"Sec. 508. (a) (1) There is established in the Treasury of the United States a fund to be known as the Federal Election Campaign Fund.

(2) The fund shall be appropriated to the Com- mission to be used to cover the expenses of the Commission.

(3) The amount necessary to carry out the provisions of this title shall be paid to the Commission from time to time as necessary, but the amount necessary to be paid for any fiscal year shall not exceed $5 million.

"(b) The Secretary of the Treasury may transfer to the fund any moneys from the Federal Election Campaign Fund which he determines, after consultation with the Commission, are in excess of the amounts which are necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"Sec. 314. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission, for the purposes of the functions under this title, such funds as are necessary for the fiscal year ending July 30, 1975, and each fiscal year thereafter.

(b) The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by
(A) striking out "Comptroller General" in section 505(2) and inserting "Fiscal Year Commission";
(B) striking out "Comptroller General" in section 506 and inserting "Federal Election Commission";
(C) amending section 301(g) (relating to organization of political committees) and inserting "Commission";
(D) amending section 302(f) by—
(A) striking out "appropriate supervisory officer" in the quoted matter appearing in paragraph (1) and inserting "Federal Election Commission";
(B) striking out "supervisory officer" in subsection (2) and inserting "Commission"; and
(C) striking out "which has filed a report with" in paragraph (2) (A) and inserting "it with".

(6) striking out "which appears in section 305. (relating to formal requirements respecting reports and statements) and inserting "Commission";

(B) striking out "supervisory officer" each place it appears in section 305 (relating to reports on campaign financing) and inserting "Federal Election Commission";

(6) amending subsection (c) of section 308 by—
(A) striking out "supervisory officer" each place it appears therein and inserting "Commission";
(B) striking out "him" in the second sentence of subsection (a) and inserting "it";
(C) amending subsection (b) of section 308 by—
(A) striking out "him" in paragraph (1) and inserting "it";
(B) striking out "he" each place it appears paragraphs (f) and (h) and inserting "it";
(C) amending subsection (d) of section 308 by—
(A) striking out "Supervisory Officer" wherever it appears in this title; and inserting "Commission";
(B) striking out "the first place it appears therein and inserting "Commission";
(C) striking out "he" the first place it appears in the second sentence and inserting "it"; and
(D) striking out "the Attorney General of the United States" and inserting "Commission".

(2) Section 5316 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

(60) Members, Federal Election Commission.

(2) Section 5316 of such title is amended by redesignating the second paragraph (133) as (134), and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

(135) General Counsel, Federal Election Commission,

(3) the Fiscal Year Commission, and

(4) the Election Commission.

(3) until the appointment of all of the members of the Federal Election Commission, and its General Counsel and until the transfer provided for in this subsection, the Comptroller General, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of Representatives shall continue to carry out their responsibilities under title I and title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as those titles existed on the day before the date of enactment of this Act, and such powers and duties shall be performed by the members of the Commission and its General Counsel, the Comptroller General, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall be performed by the members of the Commission and its General Counsel, the Comptroller General, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall continue to carry out their responsibilities under title I and title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as those titles existed on the day before the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) The Election Finance Act of 1971 is amended by—

(1) striking out "struck in lieu thereof". (a) No person may make a contribution or loan to a major party who seeks the nomination of a major party, or to the candidate of a major party for use in connection with a primary election or general election campaign of that party or candidate.

(2) No major party candidate who seeks the nomination of a major party may knowingly accept a contribution from any person in connection with a primary election or general election campaign of that party or candidate. For purposes of this paragraph, a contribution accepted by any political committee makes the person making the contribution a candidate of a major party.

(b) No minor party may accept contributions in connection with its Federal election campaign activities in excess of an amount which, when added to the maximum amount of payments by the Federal Election Commission to which the party is entitled under section 505 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, exceeds the amounts expended by the party which is a major party and is entitled under section 505 of such Act.

(c) A candidate of a minor party or an independent candidate may accept contributions in connection with his general election campaign only during the period beginning one hundred and eighty days before the date of the general election, and on the date on which a major party nominates a candidate for the office the minor party or independent candidate seeks, whichever date is earlier and ending on the date of the general election.

(b) No candidate of a minor party or independent candidate may accept total contributions in connection with his primary election campaign which exceeds the amount the limitation of such campaign which applies to a candidate in a primary election campaign under section 506 (a) (1) or (b) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

(2) A candidate of a minor party or an independent candidate may accept contributions in connection with his general election campaign only during the period beginning one hundred and eighty days before the date of the general election, and on the date on which a major party nominates a candidate for the office the minor party or independent candidate seeks, whichever date is earlier and ending on the date of the general election.

(2) No candidate of a minor party or independent candidate may accept total contributions in connection with his primary election campaign which applies to a candidate in a primary election campaign under section 506 (a) (2) or (b) of such Act.
"(d) For purposes of this section, a contribution to a political committee which makes any expenditures in connection with the primary or general election campaign of a minor party, a candidate who seeks the nomination of a minor party, a minor party candidate, or an independent candidate, is considered to be accepted by that party or candidate and made in connection with the primary or general election campaign and with a general election campaign.

(3) No party or candidate may knowingly accept contributions in connection with its Federal election campaign from any person which, when added to all other contributions accepted by that party or candidate which were made by that person in connection with the same campaign, equals an amount in excess of $100. This $100 limitation applies separately to contributions made in connection with a primary election campaign and with a general election campaign.

(e)(1) No person may make a contribution which, when added to all other contributions made by that person to all political parties and candidates in connection with any primary election or general election campaign during the preceding twelve months, exceeds $10,000.

(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), 'clearly identified means—

(A) the candidate or political party is named;

(B) a photograph or drawing of the candidate or political party is appended; or

(C) the identity of the candidate or political party is apparent by unambiguous reference.

(3) For purposes of paragraph (1), 'person' does not include a political party.

(4) For purposes of this section—

(A) 'contribution' does not include monies collected for a petition drive under section 607 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

(B) 'major party' and 'minor party' have the same definitions as under section 501 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

Mr. CLARE. Mr. President, this amendment of ours, if it has a substitute number, it is title I of the Senate Rules Committee bill (S. 3044) now under consideration, and the amendment is identical to the Comprehensive Election Reform Act (S. 2943) which passed the House this week. The legislation goes beyond the provisions of S. 3044, and far beyond anything previously considered by the Senate, but there is no question that this is the time and the place to again raise the concept of total public financing of Federal elections. It is a proposal to eliminate the influence of the private dollar in the public's business.

The introduction of this amendment in no way reflects a lack of support for the public financing legislation that Senator Long and Senator Clamoury and Senator Pell have managed so ably over the last week or so. If anything, my support for the Rules Committee bill has grown during the debate as the Senate has considered the weaknesses of the opponents to public financing.

But the introduction of this amendment does reflect a far different belief that S. 3044 does not go far enough. Given the dominance of the political process, given the skepticism and doubt of the American people, a system of public financing that is either partial or optional simply will not be enough.

Over the last few days, the Senate has heard hours of debate over public financing, and in all of that time, we have gotten lost in the complexities of amendments and exceptions and there has been a tendency to forget about one central point: the present system of financing political campaigns simply does not work.

It is beyond reform. Like an old tire with too many miles and too many patches, it cannot be reeled. It has to be changed—and that change must include more than partial or optional public financing of political campaigns.

The Senator from Alabama (Mr. Al- len) has argued at length that the public financing proposal now before the Senate has its own problems and infirmities, and that the proposals of those for partial financing make the problem worse.

If the Senator from Alabama would eliminate the infirmity advantage inherent in all matching plans for public financing is fundamentally flawed. This infirmity advantage would eliminate the use of private funds as a measure of public support.

The terrific advantages that incumbents now have over their challengers and the system of private financing. Incumbents have a built-in advantage in raising campaign funds. Only by eliminating the need to raise private funds can that advantage be substantially reduced by contest balanced. Matching plans not only fail to reduce the advantage, but tend inevitably to increase it. Decreasing the amount of public money required means candidates have to raise less money, but incumbents will always raise it quicker. Putting a ceiling on the size of contributions means the number of contributors is increased.

And here again, incumbents have an enormous advantage because of their network of friends and supporters.

Finally, this proposal provides for effective enforcement of the laws. Unlike any other bill, it creates a commission which covers all permissible political expenditures—goods, services, and salaries. Any candidate found to be against the candidate's accounts maintained by the commission.

Perhaps the central lesson of Watergate is that we must carefully guard, not only the sources of campaign contributions, but their use. The Commission established in my amendment would police expenditures before they are made, rather than simply audit them after they are made—when it is too late either to prevent the harm or to remedy its consequences. The threat of punishment alone is too weak a deterrent when so much political power is at stake.

The cost of my proposal is necessarily higher than the cost of the committee bill but at most, it will take $250 million a year to fully finance all Federal election campaigns. That amounts to less than one cent and a half of 1 percent of the annual budget of this Government. It amounts to less than one-fifth of the cost of one Trident nuclear submarine. It amounts to about $1 a year from every American. To spend this $250 million in small individual contributions each year to fully finance all Federal election campaigns would cost money to pay to restore trust and confidence in our political system, and to return to a government truly responsible to all the people.

Many contend that we must encourage, not discourage, small individual contributions to political campaigns. There is an argument that encouraging small contributions increases participation in the political process.

But only a tiny percentage of the American people now contribute in any amount to political campaigns. Fewer than 2 percent of those who voted in the last Presidential election in 1972 contributed to either Presidential campaign, and less than one-half of 1 percent of any constituency ever contribute to an individual candidate. When the majority of someone it is usually by virtue of their wealth and education. If we continue to allow private contributions, whatever the rules or limits, we will inevitably continue to favor that tiny group, which views itself as a part of the majority of Americans. I believe very strongly in increasing political participation, but only in a way that allows everyone to participate equally. This proposal would encourage equal involvement— with the provision of an income tax checkoff—and involvement on a volunteer basis where consideration of economic status is not a factor.

Others have suggested that to outlaw private contributions would somehow violate the first amendment right of freedom of expression. But in a number of cases, the Supreme Court has consistently affirmed the existence of another basic right—the right of citizens to be free of wealth distinctions in the political process—and the Court has further implied an affirmative obligation to eliminate the influence of wealth on political campaigns.

Prof. Archibald Cox, whose combination of scholarly and practical knowledge of the law discloses unique, made the case convincingly in the March 9, 1974 Saturday Review/World. He wrote:

"The objection is sometimes raised that prohibiting private campaign contributions violates the freedom of speech guaranteed by the First Amendment. Money is indeed necessary in order to make speech effective. Those of few or modest means can make themselves heard only by pooling their resources. Even so, spending money is one step removed from speech, and the checkoff is a second step away because he is using money to promote not his own speech but others. Nor can it fairly be said that ideas would be suppressed or opportunities for speech be restricted. Everyone would be left free to speak and write as an individual. Except for the very wealthy, everyone would be left free to spend money in disseminating his personal expressions. As for parties and candidates, the public subsidy would replace the private contributions. The opportunities to travel, to buy space or time in the media, to leaflet and advertise, would remain. The relative size of one or another candidate might be affected, but the First Amendment has never been supposed to guarantee the result of any election. The greatest opportunity for organized political expression.

A constitutional right" to use wealth in the political process is a right that only destroys the rights of others. The elimination of private contributions and the substitution of public financing of political campaigns is both legal and desirable.

In 1976 this country will celebrate its 200th birthday. I hope the Senate passes a bill that will enable us to cleanse politics of the real and perceived corruption that haunts the country, and that will encourage our citizens to renew their faith in the institutions of self-government. That is the only way to enter our third century with heads unbowed by shame, confident in the future. We can not afford to do anything less.

Mr. President. Provisional and independent candidates (see "Amount of Fundings and Regulations")—district state). (11 per cent for the First Amendment has never been supposed to guarantee the result of any election. The greatest opportunity for organized political expression."

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

COMPREHENSIVE ELECTION REFORM ACT OF 1974

PROVISIONS:

CANDIDATES AND ELECTIONS COVERED

President, First and general (incorporated Presidential check-off fund) Congress: primary and general.

No more than four of seven of same political party. Responsible for administering, auditing, and making campaign finance program. Has full investigative, subpoena, prosecutorial powers. Commission responsible to Executive Branch.

Executive Branch prohibited from censoring Commission comments or testimony.

Commission sets up accounting system for each candidate, pays all bills directly, except for petty cash expenses of $25 or less.

AMOUNT OF FUNDING

President: $50 x VAP • in each state; General: 20 x VAP • in each state.

Senate: Primary: 15 x VAP (or $1,750,000 if greater); General: 20 x VAP (or $2,500,000 if greater).

*VAP—voting age population.

House: Primary: $25 x VAP (or Senate amount if state has only one Congressional district); General: 20 x VAP.

HOW QUALIFY

Candidates agree to file all necessary records and comply with audit requirements, that he that will not exceed spending and contribution limits.

President: Primary: Petition signatures of 1% of VAP in each political district. Must be filed with Commission 210 days before primary, to be validated by Commission within 30 days.

General: Major party candidates automatically qualify for full funding.

Senate: Primary: Petition signatures of 1% of VAP in each political district. Must be validated by Commission 210 days before primary.

General: Major party candidates automatically qualify for full funding.

House: Primary: Petition signatures of 2% of VAP in each political district must be filed with Commission 210 days before primary (1% if single district state).

General: Major party candidates automatically qualify for full funding.

National party: Automatically qualifies for funding based on a percentage of the presidential candidate entitlement.

CANDIDATE SPENDING LIMIT

Same as total entitlement allowed for major party candidates (see "Amount of Fundings"). In presidential primary, candidate can authorize his or her national committee to spend up to 10% of the allowable limit in states entered, reducing own spending by that same amount. Unopposed primary candidates may spend only 20% of amount allowed opposed candidate.

LIMITS ON INDIVIDUAL PRIVATE CONTRIBUTIONS

No private contributions can be given to or accepted by major party candidates or major party candidates with partial funding. (Exception for $100 maximum contributions allowed in petition gathering, all contributions to be refunded later from primary entitlement.) Limit of $100 on contribution to minor party, independent candidate (separate limit for primary, runoff, general). Minor party, independent candidates may accept private contributions up to overall spending limit.

LIMITS ON CONTRIBUTIONS BY POLITICAL COMMITTEE TO CANDIDATE

No contributions allowed to major party candidates or to major party. $100 limit on contributions to minor, independent candidates.

TREATMENT OF MINOR AND NEW PARTIES/CANDIDATES

Entitled to a fraction of major party funding based on ratio of minor/new party candidate votes received to average votes received by major party candidate. May raise proportionately more in private funds up to spending limit.

Can receive additional funding—up to total funding—after election on basis of performance.

SPECIFIC RESTRICTIONS

Major party candidate must repay full entitlement if he or she spends less than 15% of votes in primary or 25% in general election.

Candidates may withdraw under certain conditions, repaying half of entitlement received.

No election audit can require repayment of excess funds received by candidate.

Minor party candidate or his or her family may spend $1,000 in primary or general election (treated separately); major party candidate or family can spend $1,000 in connection with petition drive.

All private contributions to minor, independent candidates must be sent to Election Commission, fully identified.

For reporting of petition drive contributions.
Spending limits for petition drives:

House: 2 x VAP
Senate: 4 x VAP or $7,500, whichever is more.

Limit of $100 on individual's contribution to petition drive.

Tax incentives for small contributions:

Increase tax credit to 100% of contribution up to $60,000 return. Provides automatic income tax payment to Election Fund of $2, unless taxpayer specifically designates "no."

Other provisions:

Repeals Sec. 315 "equal time" requirements of Communications Act for all federal candidates.

Bans use of frank for mass mailings 90 days before any federal election.

Directs Postal Service to establish special rates for all federal candidates.

Penalties:

Up to $50,000/five years.
Civil penalty: Up to $10,000 per day per violation.

Estimated annual cost:

$250 million (assumes three candidates in each party primary for each federal office).

Effective date: January 1, 1975.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senator from Iowa on the completeness and fairness of his amendment. I think we have for the thought that has gone into it. It is, as he suggests, a very innovative and meaningful amendment. It would involve substantial expense, substantial amounts from the public treasury, perhaps twice or three times as much as is foreseen in the bill that is presently under consideration. This matter was not considered in the deliberations of the subcommittee. It was not adequately considered at that time. Finally, there is the question of the courts would rule in connection with the flat out prohibition on private contributions. They might be willing and already have supported a limitation on the amount an individual can contribute. To prohibit him from contributing anything might be a violation of his constitutional rights.

For these reasons, as the acting manager of the bill, I would be compelled not to support the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. President, I move that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa be tabled at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, today I submit an amendment for myself and my distinguished colleague from Arizona (Mr. Goldwater) that would make the day on which General Federal elections are held a legal public holiday.

While I have been successful in each of the last 2 years in winning Senate approval of similar amendments, neither of them have been enacted, for various reasons unrelated to the substance of this proposal. I hope that this time it will be passed by the Congress and become law.

The logic of this amendment is just as compelling today as it has been in years. In our present electoral system, a number of serious obstacles have been erected that block full democratic participation by all Americans in our Government and politics.

We have made some great strides in the last 25 years, however, in reducing and eliminating these barriers. Unconstitutional restrictions imposed by the poll tax, literacy requirements, residency laws, and some of the more subtle racially motivated obstacles, have been removed. And, we are making some progress in facilitating voter registration as a step of great importance in increasing democratic participation in our Government.

Yet there is more that we can, should, and must do. In the name of true popular democracy, to bring the mass of the people into the political system of our Nation.

Mr. President, according to a survey conducted by the U.S. Census Bureau, 51.2 million eligible Americans did not vote in the general elections in November 1972. That number represented a full 31% of the voting-age population in this country at that time.

Many of these people have been denied this basic right of citizenship because of hard-to-find registration offices and a full day's work.

The amendment I submit today would eliminate one of the major obstacles to fuller voter participation in elections. It would assure that the millions of American working families are not detered from exercising their franchise in Presidential and congressional elections.

My amendment makes election day the first Wednesday after the first Monday in November, and also creates a legal holiday on that day.

Several other Nations—Denmark, Italy, France, Germany, and Austria—which enjoy 80 to 90 percent voter turnout in nearly every election have designated election day a holiday.

These are nations that are industrialized. They find that workers participate freely openly, and in much larger numbers when there is an election holiday.

I believe that it would substantially improve participation in our elections, as well.

Workers who commute long distances to work often leave home before polls open and return after they have closed. People working irregular shifts in a shop or factory are also discouraged from voting. In some areas rush hours at the polls mean a long wait in line causing many who must get to work, and many others who are tired from a full day's labor, to give up their franchise in despair.

Mr. President, it is time we put an end to this obstacle to democracy. The amendment I am proposing today would achieve this goal. It would eliminate the work day as an obstacle to expanding suffrage.

The right to vote should not be hampered by any economic consideration. It is too important to the survival of our system of government. In the 19th century we eliminated property ownership requirements from this country. As we enter the last quarter of the 20th century, it is time for us to act to prevent a job from keeping the 80 million Americans who work in factories, on farms, and in the businesses of this Nation, from the voting booths.

Mr. President, I believe this amendment—providing a legal election holiday for those workers beginning in 1976—would increase voter participation for the most important office in the land: The Presidency of the United States—an open day so that every citizen will have all the time in that day available to consider the candidates and exercise his franchise.

And the same, of course, would apply to the offices of U.S. Senator and Member of the House of Representatives.

I send to the desk my amendment, for myself and for Mr. Goldwater, and ask that it be printed.
Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the previous order, and, pursuant to Senate Resolution 304, as a further mark of respect to the memory of Georges Pompidou, President of the French Republic, that the Senate now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and at 11:33 a.m. the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 8, 1974, at 12 noon.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 5, 1974:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

William J. Schooth, of Georgia, to be U.S. attorney for the middle district of Georgia for the term of 4 years.

S. John Cottone, of Pennsylvania, to be U.S. attorney for the middle district of Pennsylvania for the term of 4 years.

George A. Locke, of Washington, to be U.S. marshal for the eastern district of Washington for the term of 4 years.

(The above nominations were approved subject to the nominee's commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.)

IN THE JUDICIARY

Joseph W. Morris, of Oklahoma, to be U.S. district judge for the eastern district of Oklahoma.

Murray M. Schwartz, of Delaware, to be U.S. district judge for the district of Delaware.

AMENDMENT NO. 1152

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1152 and ask that its reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the text of the amendment will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The text of the amendment follows:

On page 78, after the matter appearing under Sec. 304, add the following:

REPEAL OF CERTAIN EXCEPTIONS TO CONTRIBUTION AND EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS

Sec. 305. Section 614(c)(3) of title 18, United States Code (as added by section 304 of this Act), and section 618(e) of such title (as added by section 304 of this Act) (relating to the application of such sections to certain campaign committees) are repealed.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) be added as a cosponsor of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, last Wednesday, with only a handful of Senators on the floor, the Senate took action by voice vote to amend the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry's amendment No. 1102 by vote voice. The amendment exempted the House and Senate campaign committees of the two major parties from the contribution and expenditure limitations on the campaign financing bill now before the Senate.

In my judgment, the amendment opens an obvious loophole that will allow massive amounts of private money to influence congressional campaigns, seriously compromising the excellent legislation that Chairman CANNON and the rules committee have brought to the floor.

The amendment I have introduced would repeal the sections of the bill added by the amendment passed last Wednesday.

In offering that amendment, the distinguished Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROOK) said:

It is important that our parties not be weakened. But strengthened, by whatever action Congress takes. I would hope that in writing this particular bill we can provide that sense of purpose with this amendment.

(Pg. S 5189 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 3, 1974.)

This bill had just that “sense of purpose” already—which the Brock amendment. The committee bill as reported provided a major role for both the state and national political parties by allowing each of them to contribute an additional 2 cents a voter to a campaign, over and above a candidate’s expenditure limitation. The amendment approved last Wednesday deleted not with the role of political parties, which have millions of supporters and thousands of small contributors, but with the role of the “In-House” campaign committees of both Houses of Congress.

During the course of the debate, Senator ALLEN expressed some concern about “levying—contributions and expenditure limits for these committees—with the sky as the limit.” In response, Senator BROOK said:

Our average contribution was something on the order of $23.75 in the Republican Party by no definition can that $23.75 be tied to influence the election or the vote of an individual running for the Senate.

Perhaps the average contribution to the Republican Party is $23.75, but that certainly can’t be the average contribution to the Campaign Committees of the House and Senate. The ticket price for the Republicans’ annual fund-raising dinner is $1,000—for the Democrats, the price is $500. And many of those tickets are purchased in blocks by various groups. No one should confuse national political parties, supported as they are by thousands of people giving in $5 and $10 amounts, with the Senate and House Campaign Committees.

There was another confusing aspect of the amendment which Senator ALLEN inquired about: The maximum amount that could be received from any contributor by one of the “in-house” Campaign Committees, Senatorial campaigns.

The same limit that would apply to giving to a campaign or to the national committees would apply here.

I am not at all sure that’s the case.

Under S. 3044, an individual is limited to giving $2,000 overall with the limit being applied to the ticket price, e.g., $50 going to the Democratic and giving $600 to any single candidate’s campaign. But an individual would be limited only by the $2,000 overall ceiling in contributing to one of these committees, and for groups there would be no limit at all.

What this amendment has done is exempt the House and Senate Campaign Committees from any effective restrictions. Individuals could contribute to them almost without limit. Groups could contribute completely without limit. And, unlike any other political committees, these committees could contribute unlimited amounts directly to the candidates—with the candidates’ total expenditure ceilings as the only effective restraint.

In the case of a Senate race in California, it would mean that the legal limitation on what the Democratic and GOP senatorial campaign co-committees could give would be $2,121,400 in the general election. In Iowa, it would be $288,000.

In Tennessee, it would be $406,500. It is apparent that last Wednesday the Senate set aside any effective limitation on contributions.

My amendment No. 1152 would repeal the provisions added by amendment No. 1102. I would not lightly raise an issue that already had been considered. But if the Senate allows the amendment of No. 1102 to stand, it will be compromising the very integrity of this campaign financing legislation.

Let me provide an example. Suppose that in 1976 the Democratic or Republican senatorial candidate has pinpointed 10 key Senate races. An organization—and there are many that would be willing and able—decides to give $100,000 to the campaign committee, which in turn passes along $10,000 to each of its 10 “key” candidates.

Now there would be nothing illegal... about that transaction—the money would not have been specifically earmarked for any particular candidate. But the effect would be clear. Each of those candidates would know how they got that $10,000 check, and its real source.

The rules committee has withheld virtually every challenge to S. 3044 so far. Amendment 110 is the one glaring exception. As the Washington Post reported last week:

It is the first substantial breach in provisions of the bill that limit individual contributions to any one candidate and organizations to a $6,000 contribution.

The amendment passed last Wednesday directly contradicts the basic goal that we have been working toward over the past 2 weeks—dismantling of our political process. It should be withdrawn.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will withdraw the amendment.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the recess be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Barry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House insisted on its amendments to the bill (S. 2770) to amend Chapter 5 of title 97, United States Code, to revise the special pay structure relating to medical officers of the uniformed services, disagreed to the Senate amendments, and was agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two House thereon; and that Mr. Stratton, Mr. Nichols, Mr. Hunt, Mr. Hébert, and Mr. Bray were appointed managers of the conference on the part of the House.

OPPOSITION TO CAMPAIGN FINANCE BILL

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, one of the greatest dangers of congressional service is that some Members get so imbued with what they read and hear in the Washington news media that they tend to forget that the greatest number of Americans and the bulk of our country lie beyond the Potomac River.

I fear that this is the case in consideration of S. 3044, the bill for public financing of campaigns. The poll-men rush to support public subsidies for politicians with what they read and hear in this legislation, is being led—or should I say misled? in part by the Washington news media.

But there is a rising chorus of opposition throughout the rest of the country to this proposed raid on the Public Treasury. And as newspaper editors in the 50 States understand the implications of this proposal, they are writing editorial opposition to public financing of campaigns. The heartland of America is speaking, but I feel that some Senators are still not listening.

u

Mr. President, as examples of this rising public outcry, I have an editorial, "A Misuse of Public Funds: . . ." from the Saturday, March 30, 1974, issue of the Chicago Tribune, and an editorial, "Mired in Molasses," from the Wednesday, April 3, 1974, issue of the Birmingham Post-Herald.

I ask unanimous consent that those editorials be printed in the Record for the information of all Senators.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, Mar. 30, 1974.]

A Misuse of Public Funds: . . .

An irresponsible Congress United States Senate has twice defeated attempts by Sen. James Allen to remove public financing of political campaigns from the Senate's campaign reform bill. The measure now seems assured of Senate passage.

The House soundly defeated a similar measure last year and is not happy about tributes of more than $25,000 contribution requested by the Senator. It is plain, too, that public campaign financing is being foisted on this country's two-party, majority-rule system against the great majority of Americans.

As the President and many others have noted, the bill is designed to eliminate private contributions, and thus deny to voters the right to give financial support to the candidate of their choice. Instead, their tax money will be spent on behalf of all candidates, including those they opposed. Black taxpayers, for example, could be supporting the candidacy of a white in a white's neighborhood.

True, the scheme would curb the appalling cost of Presidential elections; shown in the accompanying graph, but in congressional campaigns, spending might well increase. Congressmen who have been reelected easily pour millions into political campaigns this year.

Congressional and Presidential primaries. Candida-

An independent commission to limit how much pressure groups can give to candidates; no limits on how much candidates can spend, and an independent commission to blow the whistle when necessary.

This is fine and dandy for lobbyists and special interest groups, who stand ready to pour millions into political campaigns this year, much of it aimed at keeping good old boys "in the game," but it is not good for the people who have no real base of support. It would provide too much money in some places, too little in others. Even if it passes the House, which is unlikely, the President's veto over public financing is expected to veto it.

That would leave the reform campaign back on its feet—stereotyped with no limits on how much pressure groups can give to candidates; no limits on how much candidates can spend, and no independent commission to blow the whistle when necessary.

RECESS UNTIL 3 P.M.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 3 p.m., today.

There being no objection, at 2:35 p.m., the Senate took a recess until 3 p.m., whereupon the Senate proceeded to business when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. BARTLETT).

TRIBUTE TO THE STAFF OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL REVENUE TAXATION

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR., Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an inscription in the Rules be permitted by the distinguished senior Senator from Louisiana (Mr. Long).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARTLETT). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement by Senator Long and the Washington Post article of April 4, 1974, by Spencer Rich as follows:

"STATEMENT BY SENATOR R. H. LONG"

In connection with the entry into the Congressional Record of Spencer Rich's April 4, 1974, Washington Post article on the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, I would like to add a few brief comments.

It is our privilege as Senators, to work with many outstanding committees and their respective staff members. Of all those with whom I have had contact as a U.S. Senator, the professional staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation must rank as one of the most visible in terms of professional expertise, impartiality and discretion on sensitive matters. In this regard, I would, therefore, like to add my commendations to the Committee for the outstanding job it has done in its recent and extensive examination of the President's tax returns.

This is an example of our Congressional Committee system of general government operations at their very best. It certainly is my privilege and pleasure to be chairman of such a dedicated and outstanding committee.

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 4, 1974]

JOINT TAX STAFF SHOULD WORK AS BEST ON HILL

(As printed in theroll)

"When members of Congress get legislative advice from Larry Woodworth, the 56-year-old soft-spoken son of an Ohio Baptist preacher, they listen with special care and respect.

For Woodworth—who heads the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation which has just issued a devastating report on President Nixon's taxes—has a universal reputation as one of the best, perhaps the very best, staff man on Capitol Hill."

And the 40-member staff over which Woodworth has ridden here for the past 10 years is known as the ablest, most discreet, most savvy and most intelligent group of committee aides in Congress.

Few people on Capitol Hill and virtually no one of the Treasury Department and the private tax lawyers and lobbyists—know much about the Joint Committee. Yet, most portrait of the Congress, with tremendous influence over legislation affecting the lives of millions.

The joint committee, created under the Revenue Act of 1969, consists of members of the tax-writing committees—House Ways and Means and Senate Finance. The chairman and vice chairman this year is Sen. Russell B. Long (D-La.), with Rep. Wilbur Mills (D-Ark.) as vice chairman. For years the Senate chairman was Harry Flood Byrd Sr. (D-Va.), an arch-conservative in fiscal matters.

The joint committee provides the major staff for both committees on Congress on tax matters, and right now—in addition to Woodworth, who holds a doctorate in public administration from Georgia State University, is a former tax lawyer—it has 25 professional staff members.

Including secretarial and clerical positions, the total staff is about 70. The professional staff includes two legislative counsel, six legislative attorneys, six economists and a number of tax-statistics analysts. Several of the members have accounting training as well. The staff has been built up as a Type of staff—non-political and nonpartisan.

When a tax bill is before either Ways and Means of Finance on the floor of either chamber, it is the job of the Joint Committee staff to draft the legislation, to write the reports and to brief the side of committee members. Ask four or five staffers are almost always seen on the House and Senate floors whenever a tax bill is being considered.

Woodworth gets $40,000 a year, the highest possible staff salary in Congress. With the committee since 1964, he is a master at trying to junk the proposal of members into a coherent whole. He is a model civil servant—able, discreet, honest and hardworking, according to members and associates. He could probably triple his salary in private industry but he won't jump.

Second in command on the committee staff is Lineberger, a former state district judge in Thief River Falls, Minn., who was an Internal Revenue Service attorney, senior legislative analyst, and a lawyer working in private practice for 15 years with Alford and Alford.

Another staff aide, with a major role on the Nixon tax report is Bernstein (Bobby) Shapiro, a soft-spoken lawyer in his early 30s with a trace of a drawl (he's from Richmond) and training in accounting as well as law. Shapiro sometimes serves as a surrogate on the floor when Woodworth can't be there.

Assistant staff chief Herbert L. Chabot, 42, who comes from New York and got his law degree from Columbia, provided staff work on pension reform bills when they were considered by the Finance and Ways and Means committees.

From the start, a staff team worked extensively and virtually full time on the president's 1973 return consisted of Woodworth, Arnold, Shapiro, attorney Mark McGonaghy, attorney Paul Oosterhuis, accountant Allan Rosenbloom and economist James Wetzel. From time to time, other staffers pitched in, and at the end most of the staff was working to get the final report in shape.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR., Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, earlier in the debate, I discussed at some length the reasons that the Senate should adopt my amendment (No. 1155) to repeal amendments No. 1102 and some voice vote last Wednesday. That amendment exempted the House and the Senate campaign committees of the major parties from the contribution and expenditure limitation provisions of the Federal Election Act, as now in force.

The amendment approved last Wednesday deals not with the role of political parties, which have millions of supporters and thousands of small contributors, but with the role of in-house committees of the House and the Senate.

This is the essential point: all other committees are limited to $6,000 in terms of what they can contribute to an independent candidate and that restriction leaves $25,000 as the only effective limitation on what an individual can give to a committee.

If there is a loophole, if a loophole is left, it leaves a loophole that restriction leaving $25,000 as the only effective limitation on what an individual can give to a committee.

There is another serious problem with the amendment passed last Wednesday (section 614(c), on page 71 of the Rules Committee bill. The amendment exempted the senatorial and congressional campaign committees from the $1,000 independent expenditure limitation. It is true that the State and national parties are also exempt from this limitation, but they are subject to a 2-cent-a-voter ceiling on any contributions to or expenditures for a particular candidate.

The senatorial and congressional campaign committees, however, are not subject to any restrictions. I am sure this is not the intent of the amendment, but its effect is certain.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I should like to take a few minutes to explain the purpose of the amendment as it was offered and as it was intended.

Upon reading the Rules Committee bill, members might perhaps be advised that there were no safeguards to maintain the viability of the various congressional committees of the two parties. The bill as it was written would have effectively operated on the House and the Senate campaign committee of the two parties, respectively; and that, I think, is one of the things that I find dangerous in the proposed legislation.

The bill, to my way of thinking, goes far too far toward damaging the two-party process. I believe that places parties in an unfair position. If we are to have an effective political system, we have to have some mechanism by which the parties not only maintain themselves but also have some opportunity for internal discipline.

The amendment was not drawn with the view of escaping the safeguards of the campaign contribution ceilings. I said on the Senate floor during the debate that there would still be limited, as I understood it, to a $3,000 gift from an individual or a committee. Perhaps my impression is wrong. If it is, I would be delighted either to modify the amendment or to accept other language that would so correct it.

I am not sure that that is the case. However, I would be willing to make sure it is, not only by legislative history but also by specific language. But the Senator's amendment does a great deal more than that. In effect, it strikes all the language of the amendment; and, in effect, he would put us back into the position originally reported by the Committee on Rules and Administration. I do not find that acceptable. I hope the Senate does not support the amendment as presently worded.

The Senator from Nevada, the Senator from Texas, and a number of other Senators and I have discussed the thrust of my amendment. There is no disagreement as to intent. If clarification is necessary in terms of legislative history, that is one thing, but simply strike and, in effect, go back to the original position of eliminating these two committees, which do perform a valuable function in terms of supporting and serving our candidates, would be self-defeating and highly dangerous.

I cannot support the amendment, although I do understand the concern of the Senator in raising the particular point. I think he goes too far and I hope the Senate does not accept this particular amendment.

Mr. CANNON, Mr. President, as has been pointed out, the Senate did adopt the Brock amendment last week. I do not share the concern of the Senator from Iowa with respect to the one provision that he contends opens wide the door.

I think the possible opening of the door here, if the door is open, relates to the paragraph beginning on line 8, page 74 which provides independent expenditures in excess of $1,000. It does appear that perhaps the Brock amendment (No. 1102) exempts the Senate and House from limits on independent expenditures, if it does, and counsel is checking this now, later an amendment, not only to change that possibility and make it clear that these committees were not exempted from subsection (C)(1) on page 74.

But I think the hazard, if it can be called such and if I do not think it is a hazard, of larger contributions being made to these committees—I think that was what was hoped for by the amendment—was that larger contributions could be made to the authorized committees, and let them make contributions to the candidates which are within the candidates' spending limits, obviously, and that this would help maintain the party structure by permitting the campaign committees and rational committees of both parties to make contributions to the respective candidates.

So while I would be inclined to support the amendment as far as it does, I think under the circumstances I would be opposed to it here. If we need a perfecting amendment later that could be offered with respect to the limit.

Mr. BROCK. I agree, and I thank the Senator.}

Mr. BROCK. I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Ohio (Mr. CLARK), the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENNETT), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CURNER), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. COTTON), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HARKIN), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TAFT), are absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT) would vote 'yea.'

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 56, as follows:

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1156

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, for myself and the distinguished Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) I call up amendment No. 1156, which is at the desk, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be discontinued and that the amendment be printed in the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment ordered to be printed in the Record is as follows:

On page 86, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following new section:

Section 202(a) of title 5, United States Code is amended by inserting between—

"Veterans Day, the fourth Monday in October," and

"Thanksgiving Day, the fourth Thursday in November." the following new item:

"Election Day, the first Wednesday next after the first Monday in November in 1976 and every second year thereafter.

Mr. HUMPHREY. This is an amendment that has been agreed to by the Senate in each of the last 2 years. Unfortunately, for reasons extraneous to the substantial amendment, it has yet to be enacted. The amendment would make Federal election day the first Wednesday after the first Monday in November, and create a legal holiday on that day.

I will not repeat all of the arguments for this amendment. I am sure that all Senators are familiar with them. The logic of the amendment is just as compelling today as it has been in the past, when this body voted overwhelmingly in its favor.

Mr. President, making election day a national holiday would move us still closer to the ideal of popular democracy that all of us cherish. It would help to bring the mass of the people even more into the mainstream of our national political system.

I would remind Senators of the inadequate level of participation in the 1972 election. According to a survey by the U.S. Census Bureau, 51.2 million eligible Americans did not vote in the general elections in November 1972. That number represented a full 37 percent of the voting-age population in this country at that time. Many of these people have been de-

One of the few countries that does not recognize the importance of election day by making it a day off, is the nation at glass that proposal at great length. I think it would be desirable. In fact, anything we can do to get more Americans to be interested in our political system would be desirable. I am aware that what we have been going through during the past year is not the most pleasant thing in the world and makes many Americans wonder what is wrong with the system. I always told people that bad politicians are elected by good people who cannot vote.

If we can make election day a holiday, and then ask the assistance of both parties in really trying to get out the vote, perhaps we will see an informed electorate by creating in this country a turnout of voters which will be in excess of the.

I think this would be very healthy for America. It would be very good for everything that now ails the body politic in America. I am very happy that the Senate has passed this amendment. He and I happen to be very much that the manager of the Senate has passed this amendment. He and I happen to be thoughtful members of a very exclusive club. We have gone through this, and we have some understanding of what it is to address demands of millions of Americans, only to find that on election day only a relative hand-

I suggest that while it could be a problem of the candidate in my case, it certainly would not be in his case; so we sort of stand each other off.

I hope very much that the manager of the bill will accept this amendment. I have spoken to him about it, but this body has twice, as the Senator stated, passed this approach. I do not care to ask for a rollcall vote, and I am sure my colleague does not.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I agree with what the distinguished Senator from Arizona has said. This is a very important proposal, and I think we ought to have the yeas and nays to assure that when the bill goes over there, the other side will know how we feel about it.

So, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, before the Senator does that, may I say I have no objection to it. This was in the bill that we passed last year, largely because of the actions of the Senator from Minnesota, and at that time I had no objection. I think this is a

I am not mistaken we had a rollcall vote on that occasion.

Mr. President, having listened to the impressive argument of the Senator from Kentucky, I ask for the yeas and nays.

421
The yeas and nays were ordered.
Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. President, I have no further comment. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.
Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. President, I demand a vote on the yeas and nays ordered; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, as the Senator stated, the Senate has voted on this issue before. We are prepared to accept it.

I am not convinced, in my own mind, that we can force people to vote by simply making election day a holiday. I think the indications of our experience have been that whenever a holiday comes along—even though, as provided in this bill, it may be in the middle of the week, which may eliminate the situation of a long weekend holiday—it probably will result in a fishing day.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. President, I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARTLETT). All remaining time having been consumed, the question is on the amendment, made by Mr. MANNON, that the amendment from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY) and the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) be agreed to. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. FRANK), the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. EVINS), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULLER), the Senator from Alabama (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARKER), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LOWE), the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. McCREE), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM) are necessarily absent.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNET), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. FANKIN), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from Florida (Mr. GURNEY), the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. McCREE), and the Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BILLMORE), the Senator from New York (Mr. WILLIAM L. COOPER), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAYLOR) are absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 55, nays 21, as follows:

So the Humphrey-Goldwater amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCREE. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

THE FUTURE OF NASA

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, in September of last year, I introduced, for myself, Mr. MOSY, and myself, S. 2495, a bill to apply the scientific and technological resources of the country to the solution of domestic and international problems and to create a survey of science and technology resources and applications. Since that time in joint hearings between the Committee on Science and Space Sciences and Commerce, the objectives of S. 2495 have been almost unanimously endorsed by experts.

When the bill was introduced, I commented—

The program has been in the making for a couple of years, and it is far more important to face the challenges of life right here in our own country before we reach for stars.

My colleagues and cosponsor of S. 2495, Senator Moss of Utah, delivered a very outstanding and prophetic speech in the State of Utah of Boeing Co. on March 22 entitled "The Future of NASA." Senator Moss expressed great optimism for the future. He called it a "Great New Chance." He indicated that the Space Age would be characterized by a new space age, an era of new opportunities for all mankind. The space age is an era of new opportunities for all mankind.

Senator Moss clearly showed the importance of leading us to the outstanding benefits which NASA holds for the American people. The significance of Senator Moss' March 22 speech is such that I think the Congress consent to have it printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

By Senator Frank E. Moss.

[Reprint of Mr. Moss's speech on the future of NASA.]
FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT
AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I direct a question to the Senator from Kansas. Is he prepared to proceed with an amendment?

Mr. DOLE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. HARKKIE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOLE. I yield.

Mr. HARKKIE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that John Scabo and Guy McMichael III have the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I call up my unprinted amendment which is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 39, between lines 20 and 21 insert the following new subsection:

"(2) Subsection (e) is amended by deleting therefrom the word "this amendatory Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "the Veterans' Insurance Act of 1974".

At the beginning of line 10, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(2)".

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask for the years and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOLE. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. May we consider the point of order agreement?

Mr. DOLE. Five minutes?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation on the amendment of 10 minutes.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided between the sponsor of the amendment, the distinguished Senator from Kansas, and the manager of the bill, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Bentsen).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kansas will allow me, I should like to take up a bill, with the time not being charged to either side. I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be laid aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

VETERANS' INSURANCE ACT OF 1974

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 700, S. 1835.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARTLETT). The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1835) to amend title 38, United States Code, to increase the maximum amount of Servicemen's Group Life Insurance to $50,000, to provide for the enrollment of all-time coverage for certain members of the Reserves and National Guard, to authorize the conversion of such insurance to Veterans' Group Life Insurance, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, with amendments on page 1, line 4, after the word "of", strike out "1977" and insert "1974"; on page 4, line 20, after the word "Reserve", strike out "or" and insert "of"; on page 1, line 14, after the word "the", where it appears the first time, strike out "Armed Forces" and insert "unified services"; in line 18, after the word "Servicemen" and insert "Group Life Insurance to an individual policy under the provisions of law in effect prior to such effective date."; on page 11, line 2, after "(4)" insert of page 19, after the word "follows", strike out "all" and insert "All"; in line 23, after the word "revolving", strike out "fund" and insert "fund".; on page 13, line 2, after the word "acceptance", strike out "principles," and insert "principles,"; in line 5, after the word "first", strike out "paragraph" and insert "clause"; after line 15, insert:

"(2) Subsection (e) is amended by deleting therefrom the word "this amendatory Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "the Veterans' Insurance Act of 1974".

At the beginning of line 10, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(2)".

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask for the years and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOLE. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. May we consider the point of order agreement?

Mr. DOLE. Five minutes?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation on the amendment of 10 minutes.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided between the sponsor of the amendment, the distinguished Senator from Kansas, and the manager of the bill, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Bentsen).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kansas will allow me, I should like to take up a bill, with the time not being charged to either side. I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be laid aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

"1779. Incontestability "Subject to the provision of section 773 of this title, insurance coverage granted under this subsection shall be incontestable from the date of issue of such conversion except for fraud or nonpayment of premium."

In the matter after line 23, after "777. Veterans' Group Life Insurance", insert:

"779. Reinstatement "778. Reinstatement of insurance coverage granted under this subsection shall be under terms and conditions prescribed by the Administrator after line 15, insert:"
United States Air Force Academy, or the United States Coast Guard Academy;

(B) members of the Reserve, in duty training, who are not eligible for retirement under chapter 67 of title 10;

(C) a person assigned to, or who upon application may be eligible for, the Retired Reserve of a uniformed service who has not received the first increment of retirement pay, or has not reached the age of sixty-one years and has completed at least twenty years of satisfactory service creditable for retirement purposes under chapter 67 of title 10;

and

(D) a member, cadet, or midshipman of the Reserve Officers Training Corps while attending field training or practice cruises.

Sec. 4. Section 767 of title 38, United States Code, as amended, is amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a) is amended by inserting "or while the member is on an inactive duty training or drill" after the word "Maintaining" in paragraph (5) of the subsection.

(2) Subsection (b) is amended by adding the words "as such or on the date the policy is amended as such or on the date the individual policy under the Act is amended as such" after paragraph (A) of the subsection.

(3) Subsection (c) is hereby repealed.

The amendments made by this Act shall not be construed to prevent a person discharged or released from the uniformed services of the United States prior to the date on which the Veterans' Group Life Insurance program (provided for under section 777 of title 38, United States Code) becomes effective from converting such insurance to an individual policy under the provisions of law in effect prior to such effective date.

Sec. 5. (a) Section 768 of title 38, United States Code, is amended as follows:

(1) Section 768(a) is amended by inserting "or while the member is on an inactive duty training or drill" after the word "Maintaining" in paragraph (5) of the subsection.

(2) Subsection (b) is amended by deleting "ninety days" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "one hundred and twenty days".

(3) Subsection (c) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) If any member elects not to be insured under the Act, or is not eligible as provided in section 768(a) of title 38, United States Code, as amended, for any reason other than as herein provided, in lieu of section 768(b) of such title, any amount paid into the personal retirement fund under this Act, shall be paid to the person last shown to be his legal representative, as the case may be, upon a written application, proof of good health, and compliance with such other conditions as may be prescribed by the Administrator. Any member insured under Veterans' Group Life Insurance and eligible for coverage under Servicemen's Group Life Insurance in accordance with this title shall be insured under Servicemen's Group Life Insurance, if otherwise eligible therefor."
sored life insurance or to use this allotment provision.

In view of the action of the Armed Services Committee and in view of the amendments made by him, the Veteran's Affairs Committee is prepared at this time to accept S. 383 as reported as an amendment to the Veterans' Insurance Act of 1974.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Veterans' Affairs be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 6574, that H.R. 6574 be made the pending business, and that the text of S. 1335, as amended, be substituted for the text of H.R. 6574.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

H.R. 6574 will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 6574) to amend title 38, United State Code, to encourage persons to join and remain in the Reserve and National Guard by providing full-time coverage under Servicemen's Group Life Insurance for such members and certain members of the Retired Reserve, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all after the enacting clause in H.R. 6574 be stricken, and that the text of S. 1335, as amended, be substituted in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on the engrossment of the amendment.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 1335 and S. 2098 be pasted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, H.R. 6574, as amended, is now the pending business and has proceeded to the point where we have had third reading.

Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the provisions of S. 383 were added to S. 1335, and then the House bill was brought up.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not recall hearing the provisions of S. 1335, as amended, added as a substitute for H.R. 6574.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was a part of the unanimous consent request. Mr. ALLEN. Very well, I thank the Chair.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal officeholders, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

IDENTIFICATION OF TAX-SUPPORTED POLITICAL ADVERTISEMENTS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, if campaigns for Federal office are to become federally financed projects like housing developments, highways, and flood control levees then they deserve to be accorded the same treatment, and so I am introducing an amendment to the so-called public financing bill that will require tax-supported political materials to be clearly identified and called to the attention of the American people.

My amendment requires that any candidate for Congress, the Senate, President or Vice President who accepts Federal tax funds for his campaign shall print or otherwise distribute campaign literature, advertisements, bumper stickers, billboards, or matchbooks a clear notice that they are paid for with tax money.

The Federal Government has developed a very useful policy of identifying tax-supported projects, usually by means of a billboard or sign erected on the project site. Frequently, these notices give the total cost of the project, the Federal share, the local or State share, and a brief description of the project. Perhaps such great detail would not be practical in the case of tax-supported political advertisements, but the principle is valid. So part of a filibuster by amendment, and this is just one of a number. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute simply to point out that the statement itself calls for a false statement. A person elected under title I of the primary campaign bill would be entitled to 50 percent matching funds. Therefore, the statement on the billboard or in television advertising or in newspaper advertising or in the brochures he puts out that it is paid for by public funds would contain "50 percent matching funds." It would be paid for only in part by public funds if he elected to take advantage of title I.

I think what we are seeing here is a filibuster by amendment, and this is just another one.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am not putting a filibuster in the Senate, as the Senator knows. I had in my original amendment "paid for in whole or in part by Federal tax funds." I think that is the intent. If only 50 percent was paid for in tax funds, the statement would contain "only 50 percent," but I did not know how to draft that or how much each of us would take. At least, for legislative history, that would be the intent and the harm.

I could perhaps modify my amendment to show the percentage of the tax funds. I ask consent to have the modification made to the effect that, if it is not paid for by tax funds, the part that is shown.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Kansas have his amendment sent to the desk?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I would also point out that the percentage could be different in every instance, because one person may take advantage of it to the extent of 50 percent, and another person may take advantage of it to the extent of 20 percent. It relates to the amount of funds he is able to raise for the purposes of matching, so it could be different in every instance. It is a very bad amendment.

Mr. Dole. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada is entitled to his opinion, but I think the amendment is entirely appropriate. I might say, as a matter of clarification, to avoid that possibility, I have gone back to the original language of the amendment, which I think would clarify it.

Mr. Griffin. Mr. President, may I ask that the clerk read the modified amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment as modified.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment, as modified.

Mr. Griffin. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

On page 39, between lines 20 and 21 insert the following new subsection:

"Paid for in whole or in part by Federal tax funds."

On page 39, line 31 strike out "(o)" and insert in lieu thereof "(d)."

On page 40, line 3, strike out "(d)" and insert in lieu thereof "(e)."

On page 40, line 3, strike out "(e)" and insert in lieu thereof "(o)."

On page 40, line 11, strike out "(e)" and insert in lieu thereof "(f)."

Mr. Dole. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. Cannon. Mr. President, before I yield back the remainder of my time, let me say that, as the Senator pointed out correctly, he voted for cloture the other day. I hope he does so tomorrow.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the consideration of the bill, H.R. 674 to amend title 3, United States Code, to increase the maximum amount of Servicemen's Group Life Insurance to $20,000, to provide full-time coverage thereafter for certain members of the Reserves and National Guard to authorize the conversion of such insurance to Veterans' Group Life Insurance, and for other purposes, be called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will state it.

Mr. Hartke. Will there be a rollcall vote now on the insurance bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is correct.

VETERANS INSURANCE ACT OF 1974

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill H.R. 674 to amend title 38, United States Code, to increase the maximum amount of Servicemen's Group Life Insurance to $20,000, to provide full-time coverage thereunder for certain members of the Reserves and National Guard to authorize the conversion of such insurance to Veterans' Group Life Insurance, and for other purposes.

Mr. Harry F. Byrd, Jr. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. Harry F. Byrd, Jr. Mr. President, is H.R. 674 the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business now is H.R. 674 as amended.

Mr. Harry F. Byrd, Jr. As amended by what?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As amended by the substantive language of S. 383 and S. 1835.

Mr. Harry F. Byrd, Jr. A further parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. Harry F. Byrd, Jr. Am I correct in my understanding, then, that S. 1835 and S. 383 have been added to the House bill, or do they take the place of the House bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have replaced the language in the House bill.

Mr. Harry F. Byrd, Jr. Insofar as the substantive content of S. 383 is concerned, it has not changed and there is no cost to the Government involved in that amendment.

426 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE April 8, 1974
it was never ready there," he said. "When Jack Kennedy was killed— I looked forward to running against Jack. And we used to talk about it. We had a hell of a good idea that I think would have helped American politics. We would sit together but we would travel together as much as possible and appear on the same platform and express our views together.

After Mr. Kennedy’s assassination, he said, he decided not to run. Then it appeared that the Rockefeller people and the Eisenhower crowd wanted him to go back in the race. "But it was never life or death for me."

He says the idea of his running for President again is usually raised by young people. He spends as much time as a conservative spokesman on the campuses as he did in 1964 and 1968. He says he is no longer invited exclusively to conservative campus groups. Many of his appearances now are open to all students, and his staff says he draws large numbers of all political persuasions. He gets several invitations to speak at commencement addresses each year. The Senator reiterates his views with two or three speeches a week.

"I have a group of office," he said. "I will answer the questions and I won’t answer the questions for you. But I do have a group of people who say, ‘I will call the Senator and I will ask the Senator, and I am not agreeing with you.’"

The President of a huge, big government, he says, is the central theme of his college and campus appearances. His first stop a few days before he left was at the University of Kentucky. He said, "I think I was there. I think I was there."

"And so was the University of Kentucky. This has all changed, treatment and the kids have changed and I have my own office. The numbers of American citizens who want to know what they’re there for.

Nonetheless, enthusiasm for Goldwater among the young is still a little puzzling. I suspect that the Senator is doing more for new standard deep belle in American life. There has been numerous students who are more interested in government of any kind. Boise is different. Boise is different. Boise is different.

When Goldwater went to interview a group of college students, he said, "I think I was there. I think I was there."

"And so were the Boise students. This has all changed, treatment and the kids have changed and I have my own office. The numbers of American citizens who want to know what they’re there for.

Goldwater is different. Words like lust and passion do not fit him as he listens like him, but they do not yearn to go to bed with him or he with them. While Goldwater is a demagogue, Goldwater is a demagogue. He is a demagogue that Barry Goldwater is correct.

There is no doubt that Barry Goldwater is a correct. I think he is truthful when he says he never lusted for it. Perhaps the voters sensed that. And perhaps it is better to let him go so decisively, as some women instinctively reject a man when they sense that he is not blood-bonded in his heart.

The instinct is probably sound. It eliminates the frivolous, both in love and politics. Nevertheless, I am old-fashioned in love and politics. I think it is unwise to let him go so decisively, as some women instinctively reject a man when they sense that he is not blood-bonded in his heart.

They are a merit this evening?"

Mr. ROBERT C. BRYD, Mr. President, does the distinguished Senator from Alabama wish to speak on his amendment this evening?

Mr. ALLEN. No. I understand that the time limitation will be stated on it tomorrow.

Mr. ROBERT C. BRYD. Very well. I thank the Senator.
tion at that time will be on adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. Allen) as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield? Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN. May I state in brief just what the amendment and the modifications will do. The amendment would have changed the permissible amount of money to be spent in a primary from 10 cents per person of voting age to 5 cents, and to change the amount that could be spent in a general election from 15 cents down to 10 cents.

The distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. Cannon) stated in colloquy on the floor that he felt these reductions were too large, but if the amendment was submitted at 8 cents per person of voting age in the primary and 12 cents per person of voting age in the general election, he personally—but not speaking for the committee—would support such an amendment.

The overall amount that can be spent would control the amount of the Federal subsidy in the primary because the Federal Treasury potentially would be called upon to pay half that amount and it would of course reduce the amount that the Public Treasury would pay for the general election. Overall, it would accomplish about a 20 percent reduction in overall expenditures. I hope that on tomorrow the Senate will accept the amendment.

PROGRIPM

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the program for tomorrow is as follows: The Senate will convene at 12 noon.

After the 2 leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order, Mr. Proxmire will be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes. Mr. Allen will then be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes, after which there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, of not to exceed 15 minutes, with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

At the conclusion of the transaction of routine morning business, the Senate will resume consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, the public campaign financing bill.

The pending question at that time will be on adoption of the amendment, as modified, by Mr. Allen. There will be a yea and nay vote on that amendment. The vote will occur at approximately 1:45 p.m.

Other votes on amendments may occur subsequent to the vote on that amendment and prior to 3 p.m. At 3 p.m., the debate on the motion to invoke cloture will begin, and there will be 1 hour under the rule. The hour will expire at 4 p.m. At that time, the mandatory quorum call will be issued; and upon the establishment of a quorum, the vote, which will be a rollecall vote, will occur at approximately 4:15 p.m.

Subsequent to the vote on cloture, votes on amendments to the bill will be in order, and yea-and-nay votes will occur.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the previous order, that the Senate stand in adjournment until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and at 5:12 p.m. the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 9, 1974, at 12 noon.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD -- SENATE

S 5531

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on amendment (No. 1141, as modified) of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. Allen), on which there will be 1 hour of debate.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to yield 10 minutes to the distinguished senior Senator from Delaware (Mr. Rotty) with the time to be charged equally between the two sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Alabama for his courtesy.

Mr. President, I had intended to call up an amendment, but have determined not to do so. However, I do wish to discuss the reasons why I do not intend to call up further amendments from my campaign reform package.

Mr. President, the amendment I had intended to call up is an important element of my package of campaign reform proposals. The amendment would have permitted the Federal Communications Commission to develop regulations requiring each television station to make available, without charge, a limited amount of time to candidates for Federal office. My amendment would permit each candidate to gain exposure through the television medium and it will prohibit most expenditures for purchases of airtime on television mediums in addition to that provided by the stations without charge.

Although I believe that the adoption of my amendment is critical to the passage of true campaign reform legislation, I will refrain from calling it up and asking for a vote because, apparently, the Senate will not have the opportunity to seriously consider any campaign reform proposals which are alternatives to "public financing."

This fact is evident because of the result of two Senate votes conducted last week on amendments to the Federal Election Campaign Act. On one vote, my amendment to allow all congressional candidates to seek support from multiple mailings to each of their constituents was tabled without a vote being taken on its merits. On the second vote, the Senate defeated the Baker amendment—No. 1138—on which objections were made that, as a tax-related amendment, it should not be considered by the Senate, for it would be subject to a point of order in the House of Representatives.

This latter vote—in which the Senate defeated Senator Baker's amendment to substitute the public financing provisions of S. 327 with the tax credit approach to campaign financing with a 100-percent tax credit for a contribution up to $50 on a single, or $100 on a joint return—has indicated that supporters of campaign reform who favor the tax credit approach to campaign financing are placed on the horns of a dilemma. Since many constitutional authorities are convinced that any tax-related measure not mandatory in the House, those of us who support the tax credit approach are barred from presenting the Senate with a viable alternative to public financing until the House has considered this proposal or it can be attached by the Committee on Finance to an appropriate revenue bill from the House.

For this reason, I would prefer that a final vote on the pending bill be deferred until the Senate is faced with but one alternative. The public financing concept will have been steamrolled through the Senate.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that such a delay would allow the Senate to consider and consider the various approaches to reform in campaign financing. Since the radical changes envisioned by the supporters of public financing will not take effect until the 1976 general election, I see no reason why a vote must be taken on this bill before alternative avenues of approach to campaign reform have been fully explored. The Senate has already passed several bills to reduce the influence of big money in political campaigns.

One bill would shorten the campaign period to approximately 6 weeks, thus reducing the cost. Another proposal, S. 372, places limits on campaign contributions and expenditures, establishes a Federal Election Commission, and strengthens the disclosure requirements for all candidates and their campaign committees.

I have supported each of these measures and I have urged the Senate to strengthen their provisions by adopting my "package" of reform proposals. Rather than go from one extreme—in which candidates are financed by unrestricted private contributions—to another extreme in which the Federal Government becomes directly involved in campaign financing—I would favor the implementation and enforcement of laws designed to shorten campaigns, restrict contributions, and forbid all candidates to disclose the source of their campaign funds. Enforcement of these measures—together with the enabling package of reform proposals—should end many of the abuses of our political campaign process without creating any additional problems.

As I have stated on previous occasions, I am opposed to public financing at this time because I am convinced that it tends to emphasize, rather than de-emphasize, the use of money in political campaigns. In addition, the public financing approach to campaign financing may separate the candidate from his constituency. For, once a candidate learns that he can tap the Federal Treasury for his campaign funds, he may be encouraged to allow campaign consultants to manage his campaign through use of the latest Madison Avenue techniques instead of carrying his campaign to the people through personal contact with prospective voters.

As an alternative to "public financing" I have sponsored legislation to allow each taxpayer to take a 50 percent tax credit for a political contribution up to $150 by a single taxpayer or $300 or a joint return. I am convinced that the "tax credit" approach to campaign financing reform is a better alternative to "public financing" because it encourages every taxpayer to voluntarily contribute to the candidate of his or her choice. An expanded use of the present tax credit for political contributions should be made the base of campaign contributors' solicitation large donations from a few wealthy individuals or organizations.

Mr. President, my proposal (S. 3131) to finance political campaigns through an increase in the maximum tax credit allowed for political contributions is the major element in my proposal and campaign reform proposals. Since this proposal cannot be adequately considered until it has been attached to a House-passed bill, it is obvious that the Senate cannot engage in a serious debate on the merits of its provisions at this time. Moreover, the Senate has already tabled the second element of my campaign reform "package" which would have reduced campaign costs by permitting congressional candidates to make two mass mailings at Government expense.

Mr. President, I am committed to the passage of a meaningful campaign reform legislation. I am also committed to further delay the work of the Senate. For, in addition to campaign reform many other important issues are demanding our attention. I am not in favor of closing the debate on S. 3044 in the hope that the Senate can move to a vote on the "public financing" bill.

I remain convinced, however, that my proposals—taken as a whole—would regulate the conduct of future campaigns without injecting an unwarranted infusion of Federal funds into the political campaign process. Unlike "public financing" bills, "tax credit" bills will continue to fight for enactment of my alternative proposals.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that the time not be charged to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATHAWAY). Without objection, it is so ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

CELEBRATION OF 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF HERBERT HOOVER

Mr. GOLDBERGER. Mr. President, on April 10, 1943, I submitted a resolution calling for the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Herbert Hoover on August 10 of this year in his native town of West Branch, Iowa. I know that many Members of this body, who have contacted me with respect to the resolution. I will ask that a list of these spokespersons appear at the end of my remarks.

Mr. President, Herbert Hoover is known for his many careers as mining engineer, humanitarian, President, statesman, and author. In his lifetime, he has done some very important things for his country and the world. His humanitarian activities are unparalleled.

His humanitarian career began in 1899 when he directed the food relief efforts for the Boxer Rebellion. Then in 1914 he organized the American Relief Committee, and, as chairman, expedited the return of 126,000 U.S. citizens who were stranded in Europe at the outbreak of World War I. Later that year, with Belgium and northern France occupied by the Germans, he directed the relief to 10 million persons in the areas who had faced starvation. In 4 years of work he got a billion dollars worth of food to those people. Once we entered the war, Hoover was appointed U.S. food administrator by President Wilson and pioneered methods of mobilizing food resources in wartime. After the Armistice he was appointed Director General of Relief and Reconstruction of Europe and supervised the distribution of 7 million tons of bread and clothing to millions of cold and hungry persons in 30 countries.

In 1921, Hoover helped obtain relief to the starving Jews in Russia; and in 1927, when the Mississippi River flood was the worst flood in the memory of man, Hoover successfully undertook the job of moving a million and a half Americans to safety.

His humanitarian activities continued in 1946 when he was appointed coordinator of Food Supply for World Famine by President Truman. In that capacity, Hoover traveled 35 times to 22 countries threatened with famine and as a result of his recommendations, the United States shipped more than 6 million tons of bread grains to the people of the hungry nations.

His Government career, after 7 years of service as Secretary of Commerce and 4 years as President of the United States, was capped by distinction while in his seventies as head of the two Hoover Commissions for organizing the executive branch of government. The two "Powel Plans" made objective and nonpartisan recommendations more than half of which were adopted, for economy and efficiency of Government operations.
Mr. President, this brief résumé of events in the life of Herbert Hoover conveys some of the reasons why I feel so deeply that we should honor his memory by providing for appropriate ceremonies commemorating the 100th anniversary of his birth.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a list of the sponsors of Senate Concurrent Resolution 78 be printed in the Record:

There being no objection, the list of sponsors was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Mr. Goldwater, Mr. Bennett, Mr. Buckley, Mr. Doles, Mr. Domenici, Mr. Dominick, Mr. Eastland, Mr. Fannin, Mr. Griffin, Mr. Gurney, Mr. Hansen, Mr. Hatfield, and Mr. Hughes.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of political campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. President, this amendment is in truth a campaign reform amendment—certainly, insofar as the pending measure is concerned. It would accomplish a 20-percent overall cut in the permissible amounts that could be spent by a candidate for the House or the Senate or the presidential nomination or the general election—an overall cut of 20 percent in the permissible amounts that could be expended.

The one exception is where a minimum is provided for a small State. There would be no change in that.

This would be accomplished by changing two figures in the bill, one being a provision that in general elections, there may be spent 5 cents per person of voting age in the political subdivision from which the candidate is running, and 10 cents in primary elections.

This little amendment would save the Federal Treasury, save the taxpayers of the country, upwards of $60 million every 4 years. We talk about campaign reform, cutting down on the amount of expenditures. Public financing does not accomplish that. This amendment is an attempt to reduce the overall cost of elections.

The Senator from Alabama has already tried to add amendments cutting the amount of individual contributions. That amendment, in general, would cut the amount that could be contributed in a Presidential election to $250, and in House and Senate races to $100, the theory being that all amendments would match and that, therefore, there should not be any contribution over that. That amendment was turned down.

Then the Senator from Alabama offered another amendment which would raise those figures a great deal, to provide a $2,000 contribution permitted in Presidential races, a $1,000 contribution in the House and the Senate. That amendment was voted down by the Senate.

This leads the Senator from Alabama to the inescapable conclusion that the proponents of this bill, this public financing measure, are not interested in campaign reform. What they are interested in, if the primaries, is providing campaign expenses for themselves. They want the best of two worlds. They want contributions permitted up to $3,000 per person, $5,000 per couple, those contributions, and then they want a matching system, too. So they do not want reform. They want public subsidy added to the amount garnered from the primaries allowed a candidate from the bucket. It would save approximately $50 million or $60 million every 4 years. But it would be a step in the right direction. It would cut down on the amount of Federal subsidy to the candidates for Federal offices. In the campaigns for the Presidential nomination, it would accomplish a considerable reduction.

Whereas now, Mr. President, the bill would permit subsidies of up to 75 million to the various candidates for the Presidential nomination of the two parties, this amendment would cut those subsidies to approximately $5.7 million. That is a pretty good little subsidy—$5.7 million to subside 15 or 20 candidates for the Presidential nomination. I believe they could skimp along on that.

We all agree on the need to eliminate the influence of "big money" in the political process. So, the argument goes, we should diminish campaign expenditures, or at least curtail them beyond the present bill. It is a remedy that everybody can understand, and I think it has great appeal: Just cut down a candidate's offer by 20 percent. Everything will be all right.

But while this amendment may be an easy answer to one problem, it only opens up another series of problems. By reduction in the spending limit, this amendment would erode what little competition still exists in the political process. As we have seen, incumbent Congressmen and Senators are reelected—85 percent of the time in the past four years—largely because they have been able to outspend their challengers on the average of 2 to 1. S. 3044 with its public financing provisions, will diminish the fund-raising advantage incumbents now enjoy.

But the amendment now before the Senate would make it even more difficult to beat incumbent office holders, despite public financing. With money in the bank and the advantage of inherent incumbency—the frank, media access, for example—challengers must be able to spend enough money to become known. Senator Allen's proposal—8 cents a voter in the primary and 12 cents in the general election—would be totally insufficient.

I think the Committee on Rules and Administration gave careful consideration to this matter, and arrived at as equitable a figure as could be found.

Mr. President, I spent $251,000 in my general election campaign against an incumbent Senator. Only two other challengers, my good friend (Mr. HANSELY) and the Presiding Officer (Mr. HATHAWAY) spent less money in a successful race against an incumbent.

But my opponent in 1978 would be able to spend even less than that because the primary is a blanket primary. With only 12 cents a voter, it would be nearly impossible for any challenger to present his case to the people.

The American political system desperately needs more competition for public office, not less. I urge my colleagues to join me in defeating this amendment.
Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I have mixed emotions about the amendment. As the Senator from Alabama has pointed out earlier, I did say if he changed his figures from 10 cents in the general election to 12 cents and from 5 cents in the primary to 8 cents, I would vote for that and I intend to vote for it. I am not sure where the correct balance is as to the formula. I do know that in some of the larger States under the formula we used it mounts up to a lot of money.

For example, in California, under the 15-cent provision in the general election, $2,122,154 could be spent. In the primary election in California the figure could be $1,414,500 under the bill as we reported it. Under the compromise, if the figures would become $1,697,160 in the general election and $1,131,440 in the primary. That still is a substantial amount of money and I am not prepared to say what is right or wrong. I know in some elections, as pointed out on the floor the other day, in the ten largest spending States in the last election, all would be reduced somewhat by the limits we had in the compromise.

We have in the bill two provisions that would not be affected by the amendment. One of those provisions is that in the primary election a person could use his formula on the voting age population or the sum of $125,000, whichever was greater; and in the general election, the formula times the voting age population or the sum of $175,000, whichever was greater. So ordinarily arrives at a figure that the smaller States, that are small in population, but many of them small in area, such as my State, would be able to spend in both elections a sum of $300,000. If this formula that is proposed by the Senator from Alabama were adopted there would be more States that could be affected by that base level. In other words those States that cut below that base level and more than would qualify under that base level formula than now qualify under the present formula that the Committee on Rules and Administration give us.

As I say, I have sort of mixed emotions because I am not technically able to speak on this subject for those people who represent the larger States, States which require a lot more money from the standpoint of campaign financing. My distinguished colleague on the committee, the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Cook) would be able to speak for his State.

The formula under the formula we had in the Senate bill would be $335,250 in the general election and $233,500 in the primary election. Those figures would be changed under the formula of the distinguished Senator from Alabama to $285,250 in the general election and $178,800 in the primary election. So I would have to look to my distinguished colleague from Kentucky on what should be done in his State. As far as I am concerned the floor we have put in for the small States is ample. I believe it perhaps could be cut somewhat. That has been suggested by a number of Senators; that we should go below that amount. I am willing to abide by that and I would support the floor.

So while I intend to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, I look to my colleagues in that which I have all kinds of problems in my own mind, I must say to my colleagues that, if in fact we are going to do it, and if it is successful, then I do not think its very important should do it to them, because the funds expected and the figure allocated to the individual voter will result in an effective campaign in not even being able to be what we find, as a result of our attempts to keep cutting the figures down and down and down, that we would have to repeal a law because, even though it was a good law, it could not accomplish the purpose of it.

Every Senator has voted based on the population of his State and based on whether he can or cannot agree with respect to the figures as between 10 and 15 and 8 and 12 cents. I might say for the Senator's benefit that I have just found out, and I think faintness I should only say, that the bulk rate for what it would amount to to all their constituents and nothing more—no radio, no television, no other campaign of any kind that costs funds—that his entire expenditure, all gasoline, all travel, and everything else, can be represented in the difference between 6.1 and 8 cents. If. I do not to make a mailing to all the constituents that are available in their States, then that is the decision each individual has to make. I do not think, within the framework of the bill, it is possible.

What we are, in effect, saying, is that we are going to save you money, but if we do, the effort to save them money, we are going to make it impossible for a campaign which can be financed. In effect, we are going to give the people a campaign financing bill under which the candidates are going to cheat right from the beginning. I think the American people have sounded loud and clear that that is the very thing they want to get rid of.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I think it would be the Senator from Kentucky's hope that he could conduct a campaign with $335,000, but I think it is going to be very difficult, and one of the reasons it is going to be very difficult is the present status we have in the eyes of the American people. I think, because I do not think we ought to do it in the course of saying, "Here, we are going to save you $60 million in 4 years," because we might not. We had a project in the United States which might be worth over $60 million, and nobody in the United States would know about it except the people of Alabama. Somewhere or other, we have a habit of saying that all the money the American people contribute in taxes. Unfortunately, we spend more.

The Senator from Kentucky is opposed to deficit spending, and has always voted against deficit spending. But if we put it in the 8 and 12 as opposed to 10 and 15 cents, in the light of the 8-cent cost, if this program is adopted could a candidate make even one general mailing to all of the eligible voters in his State? I think the answer would have to be "No." I do not think he could run a campaign.

So the Senator would agree that the amendment of the Senator from Alabama only with that understanding that it does not change the money on this list for that. I do not think it was a victory for Kentucky, and probably it would be difficult for the Senator from Kentucky to raise amounts of this kind, because I think it is going to be very difficult to raise campaign funds.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, how much time remains to the Senator from Alabama?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has 16 minutes remaining.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield myself 6 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I have been somewhat mystified by the thrust of the argument of Senators supporting public financing. It does not seem to be part of their theory of what reform is to reduce the overall cost of campaigning. The word "restraint" on the part of candidates does not seem to be part of their vocabulary.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one slight suggestion? Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. COOK. If the Senator takes campaign expenditures for the two Senators running for the last campaign in my State and the maximum on the list, it is about half or a little more than half that each candidate spent in that election.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Senator for his interruption and his comment.

Mr. COOK. I apologize.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope that the next time he will use his own time for making a comment.

The idea of restraint on the part of candidates has not seemed to enter into the thinking of those who are supposed to be for campaign reform. I submit that paying bills for campaigns out of the Public Treasury is not the Senator from Alabama's idea of campaign reform. Reducing the overall cost of elections, reducing the amount of individual contributions, and keeping them in the private sector is the idea of the Senator from Alabama as to what campaign reform is.

I want to commend the distinguished Senator from Maryland (Mr. MANN), who is not here at this time. He has limited his contributions to $100. The Representative from Ohio, Mr. VANNE, states that he is not accepting contributions or making contributions.

So one ingredient that has not been mixed into this so-called campaign reform bill is the idea of restraint on the part of candidates.

Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama would mix a little restraint in campaign expenditures from taxpayers' money — into the idea of campaign reform. But every time the Senator from Alabama tries to cut down on campaign expenditures, he does not get any support from those who do not get any support from those who cut out for the need of campaign reform. They are opposed to it. They want what they can get out of the private sector which they can get out of the Government. That is not campaign reform — that is just escalating the cost of campaigns.

Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky is worried about inflationary costs of campaigns. Well, the drafters of this bill thought of that, too, and they wrote a little provision in here on page 17 of this bill that provides an escalator in the bill. It is reform. It is campaign reform. They wrote a little escalator clause that says that while the cost of campaigning goes up, in effect, the cost of the Government subsidy goes up. There it is in white and black. So the Senator from Kentucky need not worry about that.

Mr. President, apparently the so-called reformers—that is, the spenders of the funds from the Federal Treasury—are not willing to cut down on the amount of the Government contributions. The amount of the campaign contributions.

We passed a bill in July limiting the contributions to $3,000. That is too high. That is a big contribution. In the view of the Senator from Alabama, it permits two contributions, one by the man and one by the wife. That would be $6,000. That is a pretty big contribution. That is all this bill would do. We have already passed a bill providing that.

But it is not campaign reform to say that the American taxpayer has to pay the cost of the general election campaign of every Senator and every Member of the House of Representatives.

It is the reform to provide that the American taxpayer has to pay up to $7.5 million—and this is something that the American public does not realize—for each candidate for the Presidential nomination of the two major parties. Fifteen or 20 or 25 people are going to be running for the Presidential nomination. This will match the contributions of the various candidates provided that they find a campaign fund of $250,000 in small contributions. That would then match the contributions of all of them, including the $250,000 up to the point the President and the Senate had the $7.5 million to each of the various candidates.

Mr. President, there are some 10 or 15 Senators who would not turn down a draft for the presidential nomination. Some Senators who would not wage an active campaign.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized for an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, this subsidy program, this welfare program for the benefit of politicians, is not campaign reform. The Senator from Alabama is taking a bad bill and is trying to make the bill 20 percent less bad by reducing the overall campaign expenditures permitted under the law. That is what the amendment does. So we are going to see whether the reformers want reform or whether they want a Federal subsidy. It is as simple as that.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time. However, before doing so, I ask unanimous consent that the tabulation showing the amounts to the various States under the various formulae be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the tabulation was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Footnotes at end of table.
Mr. COOK. Mr. President, may I say that I apologize to the Senator from Alabama for taking any of his time.

Mr. President, how much time have we remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I would be perfectly willing to yield the entire 7 minutes to the Senator from Alabama, if he wishes to use that time along with his time, so that he will not feel that he was interrupted.

Other than that, we would be willing to yield back the time on this side. However, I would be willing to make it available to the Senator from Alabama, if he would wish to use it.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I would much prefer that the Senator from Kentucky yield back the time. I feel the argument he is making on behalf of not reducing this subsidy is certainly having an adverse effect on his position. I hope that he will use the remainder of his 5 minutes.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I think we have made our point. I yield back the remainder of our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, how much time have I remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has 8 minutes remaining.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendments, on bloc, of the Senator from Alabama. On this question the ayes and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. Bennett), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. Brown), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. Church), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. Fulbright), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HHughes), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. Long), and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McCracken) are absent.

Mr. COTTPIN. I announce that the Senator from Utah (Mr. Bennett), and the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. Fong) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. William I. Scott) is absent on official business.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Helms). Pursuant to the previous order, the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson) is now recognized to call up an amendment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me briefly?

Mr. STEVENSON. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Alabama, reserving my right to the floor.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend several other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during further consideration of the pending bill, Senator Wides of my office, be permitted the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I send an unprinted amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.
Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the amendment will be printed in the Record.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

On page 10, beginning with line 17, strike out lines 19 through 21, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) (1) Every eligible candidate who is nominated by a major party is entitled to payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount equal to the sum of:

"(A) (i) In the case of a candidate for election to the office of President, 40 percent of the amount to which a major party Rules Committee. . .

"(d) No candidate may receive payments under paragraphs (2), (3), (4), (A) (i) or (B) (i) in excess of an amount which bears the same ratio to one-half of the difference between the amount to which the candidate is entitled and the amount to which he would be entitled under paragraph (l) (A) as the amount of other contributions made by that person to or for the benefit of that candidate for his general election campaign.

"(g) The amendment would limit the contributions of committees to $6,000, which could be allocated between a general election campaign and a primary election campaign as the committee sees fit.

This amendment would also eliminate the corrupting contributions of big money from our politics, which the amendment would not accomplish, but it would not accomplish the innocent, small contributions which are a healthy and innocent part of our political system. This amendment would also limit the contributions of individuals to Federal campaigns to $3,000 in primaries and $5,000 in general election campaigns. In that respect, it does not alter the provisions of the bill reported by the Rules Committee. It would also limit the contributions of committees to $6,000, which could be allocated between a general election campaign and a primary election campaign as the committee sees fit.

This amendment would establish a system of partial public financing as opposed to the 100 percent public financing which is established in the bill reported by the Rules Committee. Instead of 100 percent public financing, congressional candidates would receive a front-end subsidy 25 percent of the expenditure limit applicable to congressional campaigns. In addition, private contributions of $100 or less would be matched with public funds on a dollar-for-dollar basis.

Presidential candidates would receive a 40-percent entitlement and matching funds for private contributions of $250 or less on a dollar-for-dollar basis.

That means that congressional candidates could receive up to 62.5 percent and presidential candidates up to 75 percent of the respective expenditure limits from public sources, instead of 100 percent.

This amendment strikes a fair balance between those who want 100 percent and those who want nothing, and it decreases the cost to the Treasury of the financing of campaigns for Federal office. If this amendment prevails, the amounts from the checkoff would be more likely to exceed the total of any private funds.

It does not in any way affect the committee bill's treatment financing of primary election campaigns. It preserves the healthy and innocent participation of small contributors, and it eliminates the dangerous participation that comes as a result of large contributions to campaigns for Federal office. It would more clearly be constitutional than any method that has ever been tried.
Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Illinois for his initiative in this matter as well as the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI) and others who have agreed to cosponsor this amendment to the pending campaign reform bill. We hope it will serve as a basis for compromise on public financing and thus move the debate forward considerably.

The pending bill, without our proposed amendment, provides Federal matching payments for all contributions of $100 or less for primary election congressional candidates—$250 or less in the case of Presidential candidates—who collect certain minimum amounts of private funding on their own, and 100 percent public financing for the general election campaigns of major party candidates, up to overall spending limits. Limitations on private contributions would be $3,000 for individuals and $6,000 for any organization such as COPE or SIFPAC.

By contrast, our amendment would restrict public financing for general elections, so that major party congressional candidates could receive 25 percent of the campaign spending limit in Federal funds for their primary elections with matching required, and $1 of additional funding for each dollar collected in private contributions of $100 or less for congressional races. A similar arrangement, with a 40 percent down payment and matching contributions up to $250, would be applied to Presidential general elections. As under the present bill, minor party candidates would be eligible for the same system but be ineligible for proportionately less Federal funding in general elections, based upon their performance. Limitations on contributions for organizations would be lowered from $6,000 in primary and general elections separately to $4,000 total.

I believe that basic reforms in campaign financing are essential so that our citizens may believe that their government is not being operated to satisfy the interests of the few large contributors, rather than the Nation as a whole. The most important step we can take in this effort is to introduce a system of public financing for Federal office that I believe is sane but not as clear and simple as its supporters would like.

The bill before the Senate attempts to do this, but has been loopholed with an amendment allowing contributions of up to $6,000 form organizations.

The bill before us also provides public financing in recognition that these limits on themselves will exacerbate the task of raising enough campaign funds for both incumbent and challenger to make their views known to the public. However, I am concerned that the bill will allow large-scale contributions too high to eliminate the abuses it seeks to correct: allow more public financing than necessary for general elections; foster a mushrooming of wasteful campaign expenditures at taxpayers’ expense; and the proliferation of campaign expert firms which have grown up in the increasing alarmist extent; and unnecessarily eliminate meaningful role for small private contributions.

The system we are proposing would clamp down on the size of private contributions; provide full public financing for the crucial initial portion of campaign expenses but force heavy reliance upon small private contributions for remaining expenses; continue and increase the importance of grass roots activities; and the small contributors involved, in campaign finance; and reduce Federal costs over the present bill by thousands of dollars for each campaign—indeed, so far as the small contributions would receive no public subsidy at all—possibly even senatorial races are concerned, by millions of dollars.

I am hopeful that the merits of this particular public financing approach will appeal to both supporters and opponents of full public financing.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I do wish to commend the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Ohio for the work that they have done. I have just had a number of thoughts to add to theirs.

First of all, I have supported the idea of public financing of all elections for many years. But I have looked very carefully at what we were trying to do when we moved in the direction of public financing and found that while we had very large contributions that really or to the American people having an inordinate effect on the political system. I think public financing would do that, and our amendment would do it. I think no one who was a proponent of public financing, to my knowledge, has said there was anything wrong with a candidate for public office taking contributions from small contributors, indeed, in large number. In fact, many of those who have been proponents of public financing have been equally strong proponents for the involvement of the average citizen.

What concerns me about the bill without the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, the Senator from Ohio, me, and others, is that basically it is saying, ‘We do not want any of the average citizen: $100, $200, $300, $500.’ It has been said here with regard to other bills before us that we frequently throw the baby out with the bathwater. In this instance, unless we not only permit small contributions but also encourage and en- tice them, we will, indeed, be doing that.

In campaigns across the country the average citizen has said, ‘I like that candidate. I want to give him a small contribution.’ Instead of that kind of contribution, which is basically at the heart of participation, and putting small money where the mouth is, and letting a citizen’s personal endeavors in behalf of the candidate follow, we would eliminate that in the bill before the Senate, where candidates could, if they choose, get private contributions. It is a matter of fact there is no incentive or encouragement because if the candidate does not he will get a check from the Federal Government. I believe there is nothing wrong with the $100 matching all the way up, with encouragement to get a $1,000 contribution, or up to $3,000. This would narrow and cut back on the effect that Federal tax dollars would have on the total amount to be used.

The same reasoning can be used with respect to Presidential campaigns. There is an amazing miasma about 25 and 40. To encourage the $100 and the $250 for Presidential races, minimizing the $6,000 contributions groups can give, leaving it at $4,000, but not permitting it in primary and general elections, and splitting the individual to $3,000 is a significant stroke in the direction of individual citizen participation. But it eliminates the thing that we started out with.

With reference to my campaign for the Senate, indeed, I had large contributors, but I believe my campaign stands in the State of New Mexico as a record for the number of small contributors that contributed to my campaign. For a small State like mine, it would approach 5,000 individual donors. We went out and asked them, and they, in turn, asked others, and from them came the nucleus who had a genuine interest, with small amounts of $100 to $150.

I truly do not want to be a part of eliminating that kind of participation which I think is salutory and has a good effect. I hope those who are genuinely interested in public financing will understand this is a genuine effort to start in a new direction where we have not been one, and start in a reasonable way for a reasonable amount of public money, and leave the ingredient of participation that comes from the contribution of many small Americans who are not millionaires and candidates seriously, and who would prefer to give their money, $100 or whatever, to their candidate and still make them feel it is important, and not say, ‘You do not have to contribute if you do not want to; we will get it all from the Treasury.’

That is the answer we will get from other than those who do not want any public financing. That is what we will be saying to the smaller contributor. We will be saying, ‘You are not important because if you do not give, we will get it from the Treasury.’

Those who favor this approach will understand it is possible to move from zero to 100 percent. The amendment of the Senator from Illinois, the Senator from Ohio, and the Senator from New Mexico would be a good and salutary start toward preservation of that which is good in the present system.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I wish to commend the Senator from New Mexico for recognizing that it is possible to eliminate the large contributors from politics without eliminating small contributors. Far from it; the source of corruption, the small contribution is a source of involvement by people in their politics.

The purpose of the amendment is to eliminate the big money, but not the people, out of our politics.

I wish to ask the Senator from New Mexico if he does not agree that to eliminate the $1 or $2 or $3 contributions to campaigns might very well be unconstitutional. It is not only that, but it seems to me there is a constitutional right of people to contribute in small amounts to the candidates of their choice. Without some basis for saying, "No, it is wrong; it is unreasonable to make small contributions."— and I see no basis for such an assertion—it is possible that we may be unconstitutional to take that approach.

Mr. DOMENICI. My answer is in the affirmative. I think there are serious constitutional objections to a provision which would prohibit it. I think from a legal and practical point of view, if a citizen cannot contribute, regardless of whether he wants to contribute, small or large, it is both practical and unconstitutional.

There is evidence which would justify drawing the line somewhere. I think $3,000 and $6,000. Those are a matter of proper legislative judgment on the facts that have been developed in the history of this Nation, but to say, "One cannot give; we will take it all from the tax coffers" would place this matter in serious jeopardy.

Mr. STEVENSON. I thank the Senator. Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota. Mr. HUMPHREY. Junior now.

Mr. STEVENSON. Junior now. Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have over the past few days been visiting from time to time with the distinguished Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson) about this amendment. Earlier today I talked with the Senator from New Mexico about it. I have been a strong proponent of what we call public financing of election campaigns, but I have been in this body long enough to know when we are really trying to get results or whether we are just going to have an issue. I think the question before the Senate is, Do you want an issue or do you want a change of the system of campaigns? Do you want to make some progress or do you want to spin your wheels?

I would prefer to have 100-percent financing of Presidential elections particularly. There are large contributions. Contributions are a source of corruption, the fact is they are always a source of suspicion, and in the times in which we live, that sense has been intensified.

Therefore, it is necessary for the Congress of the United States to reform the campaign election laws, to limit the size of contributions, to establish machinery that will supervise our elections fearlessly and honestly, and at the same time try to make use of our checkoff system, which we have already legislated, a checkoff fund or trust fund to which hundreds of thousands of dollars have been made payments, and to use that checkoff fund sensibly and honestly in the election campaign or in the campaign process.

So, Mr. President, I came to the conclusion that if you just want to talk camaign financing, then go the whole way and make Ivory soap seem to be contaminated and float right out of the stream of public life and private sensibility; but if you want to get some reform that will do the job that we need to do, namely, to limit this size of contributions, to have an accounting of every dollar that comes in as well as every dollar that is expended, to set limits on how much we can spend on a campaign per voter, and at the same time assure some private interest on the part of individuals in the election campaign and, then we have to make some changes along the line of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois and other Senators.

I am very proud to be a cosponsor of the amendment.

I have talked with the Senator, and I said, a number of times, and last week indicated my desire to be associated with him. I say great pressure has been brought on some of us not to be associated with it. Some people that are associated with what we call government or election government do not want me to go along with this proposal, but as I had to tell one of them, "I have to do the voting in the Chamber, and you are the very people who have told me we should not be influenced on the outside." So I am not going to be influenced. The only influence is going to come from the inside—what I know to be right. What I know to be right is what we are attempting to do. We have to close this debate and get to voting some responsible, sensible campaign reforms that the American people want of us. We have the duty to accomplish it in this session of Congress.

Everyone knows the other body is not going to go along with some of the things we have voted for here, but I have said privately to Members in this body what we have been doing will not sell. It will not wash. It makes good headlines. It pleases people who say, "You are doing 100 percent. Perfect. You are good and pure." But I will not pass. Do we want to get results? That will remedy the infection in our body politic, or do we just want to talk, talk, and talk, and have an issue to try to go out and prove that we were purer than the other fellow?

I think the proposal before us does the job that needs to be done. It will give us a road to a system of public financing that is based on intelligent compromise. That is the way we get our Constitution, and I am not going to be driven to the wall by somebody who says that if one compromises or if he trims down a little bit, somehow or other he has sold out. We are not selling out, but we are not going to permit people to buy in, either.

What we are doing is trying to do a job that needs to be done. We have been up this hill and down this hill a half a dozen times, and that is God's little show for it. The chance is now before us to have something to deliver to the American people.

I would hope that I said to the Senator from Illinois and to the Senator from New Mexico, that we might have had in the Presidential fund 50 percent public financing. I do not think there is anything particularly magical about 40 or 50 percent, but I would have thought it might have been a better figure. Be that as it may, the issue before the U.S. Senate is simply, Do you want to do a continued job where there are no results, or do you want to have results and be able to build on that from practice and experience? I think we have the chance to cleanse the stables of American politics and to get away from the demeaning and disgusting business of going out and raising millions of dollars of campaign funds from huge contributions and then having somebody point the finger at you and saying, "You are a crook or can't be trusted."

I think the Senate of the United States ought to face up to the fact that, whether big money is the source of cor-rup tion, it is the source of growing suspicion, and a big country like ours cannot live on suspicion and distrust. We have to implant into the system trust and confidence, and remove distrust and cynicism.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois—and I compliment him for his practicality—will remove doubt and suspicion and cynicism and it will put us on the high road to a clean system of politics that will involve both private and public financing and public participation.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. CRANSTON. I want to say that the Senator from Minnesota has stated very, very eloquently the reasons for my supporting this bill and why it should be enacted.

In relation to the pending amendment, I would like to compliment the Senator from Illinois, the Senator from New Mexico, and the Senator from Ohio for coming up with a formula that I think does constitute the change in support of the amendment. I will support the measure now before us in ways which I think had not been handled in the most appropriate way in the measure in its present form.

First, I am very concerned about the first amendment's right to express oneself not only by what one says, but by what one does. I fear 100 percent mandatory public financing would deny that right to individuals who wish to speak out by making contributions—hopefully small contributions—which we will be moving to under this measure.

Second, I think it is very important to reduce the overall cost of public financing. Many members cannot be subject to attacks that it is costing too much or that it is a raid on the Treasury. I do not believe that it is either of those two things, but I do believe that this amendment, reducing the total cost of public financing, serves a valuable purpose in that respect, as well as contributing in other respects. For these reasons I am glad to join the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson).

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. ABOUREZK. By way of information, does the existing legislation require mandatory public financing? Is there not a provision that allows for small contributions to be raised?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes; in the congressional.

Mr. ABOUREZK. How about the Presidential?

Mr. HUMPHREY. One hundred percent.

Mr. ABOUREZK. It is optional, as I understand it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes, optional. But this is mandatory. The subject matter of the Stevenson amendment is a mandatory provision. That is the difference.

Mr. ABOUREZK. But existing legislation does not prevent small contributions from being raised.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator is right in this instance. But in congressional elections, it is optional.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I wonder what the fuss is about concerning small contributions being made under existing legislation. It seems to me that this amendment is being sold on the basis that people cannot contribute small amounts because they take part in the public process. If what I read is correct—I wish the Senator from Illinois were always saying "maybe." Gee, I have always wanted to be a challenger in a Senate race, it is certain entreaties and demands certain contributions. Hopefully Mr. HUMPHREY. That would be the happiest Senator? The Senator could count on only $200 in a congressional race.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator is correct; whether he is an incumbent or a challenger.

Mr. ABOUREZK. If he is a challenger, he would not have access to those sources of money I have referred to. He would be out of luck, so to speak. If I might just say if I might offer an observation, that is why I am in the majority. But a challenger would have a difficult time raising money to challenge an incumbent.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Not one bit more. An incumbent has some advantages, but he also has some disadvantages.

If one is an incumbent, they say "Thank you very much but you voted 'nay' or you voted 'yea.'" There is not a great deal of advantage when in riding off on a white horse with a great big. When one is a challenger, he can always say "Thank you very much but you voted 'nay,' or not 'nay,' and maybe." Would I not be the happiest Senator?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Minnesota a question. It looks as though, with the 25-percent financing, even in congressional races, and the matching thereafter to be a maximum there would be a matching of 62.5 percent in Federal funding.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That would be the maximum.

Mr. ALLEN. Actually, that would be the maximum only, so what the minimum would be a sort of bargain base of 37.5 percent discount amendment to the American taxpayer. Is that a fair amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is good. I might say that in this time of inflation, that is a welcome discount.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator is giving the American taxpayer a 30-percent discount in the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY. He gets something else. The Senator has a way of capu-lizing some of these issues. We are giving the taxpayer something else. We are giving him good, clean politics. We are removing the element of doubt and suspicion.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator feel that candidates would be subject to improper influences during their campaigns?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I have never believed; but I will tell the Senator that a great many folks I know do believe that. I do not happen to believe it, but I believe the Senator from Alabama makes a valid point. But I wish I could convince everybody who writes to me.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator said that in being for this amendment he had to resist certain entreaties and demands certain pressure groups that were demanding all or nothing. I believe the Senator said. I want to commend the distinguished Senator for not being completely in the pockets of those pressure groups.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I thank the Senator for not being completely.

Mr. ALLEN. Some Senators are not quite as brave as the distinguished Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Sometimes bravery is only rewarding this body by blows, injuries, and defeats. I have suffered a little of that in my life. One more will not hurt. Long as it is mine.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have the floor, but I shall yield the floor so that the Senator from South Dakota may continue with his argument in support of the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has any time been set to vote on this amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. There is no time limitation on this amendment. I assume there will be plenty of time.

Mr. DOLE. Before the vote on cloture? Mr. MANSFIELD. Before and after the vote on cloture.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I would like to take a few moments to explore and inquire about what the aspects are and whether the Senator from Alabama's 62.5 percent is indeed what would really happen.

First of all, there is an incentive to give some small contributions in the congressional races—$100 for small contributions. However, in congressional races, they are entitled to raise the contributions up to $3,000. However, of this amount, only $100 is matched, unless someone were to receive his entire campaign contributions in amounts of $100 or less. Then he would have less than 62.5 percent Federal tax dollars involved. If one went out and got $10, $15, or $20 thousand raised in small contributions of $100 to $200, $100 of the credits would be credited to matching; $900 each would go in the campaign fund would be part of the total in arriving at that which he could spend. But to the extent it was in excess of $200, he would not receive any. So the idea is that 62.5 percent is the absolute maximum. So there will be contributions in addition to the 63.5 percent.

The same reasoning applies to the Presidential campaign, $250 is matched. You can receive $3,000 contributions, but to the extent that you are successful in garnering contributions over $250 from private sources, that extra money is charged to your total allowable, but is not matched with Federal dollars.

I would also say to the Senator, who is wondering about Incumbents and challenges of these cases the incumbent and the challenger would start with a 25-percent entitlement. The challenger today would have no certainty—I am speaking of today, without any public money—he would have no money to start his campaign, to do the things the Senator was speaking of, to get ready to go out and solicit contributions from the small contributor; but under this bill, he would start with one-fourth of that which he was entitled to, both to gear up for the campaign and to solicit small contributions looking toward his total amount, which is exactly the same for challenger and incumbent.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. ABOUREZK. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I would like to elaborate a little bit on a point made by the Senator from New Mexico. The Senator from South Dakota has expressed concern that the incumbent would automatically have access to more private financial support than challengers would have. I point out that the matching factor of the $100 limitation would probably eliminate that. Any challenger who is to have a reasonable chance is going to be able to go out and get those contributions up to $100. That is the kind of contributions he can get. He might not have as much background and resources in getting larger contributions over that amount, and I think the Senator from South Dakota is more properly concerned if we were matching gifts over $100. But with the $100 limitation or matching, it seems to me that there is not as much concern that any challenger with a reasonable chance of success is going to be put at practical disadvantage in relation to the incumbent insofar as that size of contribution is concerned.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I do not think in my State of South Dakota, for example, that there would be any difficulty for a challenger to raise the small amount necessary, but I wonder if the same is true for New York, Ohio, or any of the larger States. It seems to me that it would be extremely difficult to get that many small contributions in such States.

Mr. TAFT. We have all been challengers at times—

Mr. ABOUREZK. I was born an incumbent, I have had a challenge.

Mr. TAFT. I would think that, with the limitations introduced by the Senate, the amounts necessary for a reasonably financed campaign could be provided. In fact, the small amount of money that they could come up with.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ABOUREZK. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I rise to oppose this amendment because I think it could mean the total destruction of what we have been trying to do in public financing here in the last 10 days.

An amendment such as this ought not be taken lightly. It ought to be discussed at considerable length, because it flies in the face of the basic idea of the bill and the compromise worked out there.

We have heard about the necessity to compromise. That is exactly what this bill is—it is a compromise. No one is totally happy with it. But to compromise it further and further, and above all, not even to allow the option of public financing, really destroys the intent of the Rules Committee bill.

The committee spent a great deal of time considering the need for public financing and the best method to achieve it. The result, S. 3044, is an excellent bill which respects a balanced view and a considered view. This amendment would clearly undo the Rules Committee effort.

By passing this amendment, the Senate would rob themselves of many of the gains that it has made over these last 10 days. We cannot now suddenly change our minds about the alternative to total public financing—not on a few hours notice with a few minutes debate. The majority of the Members of the Senate clearly support public financing, and they have expressed that sentiment time after time.

Let us adopt cloture. Let us show the people we represent that we are committed to reforming a tried and treacherous system of private financing.

By agreeing to this amendment, we would be going back after we have accomplished so much, and saying, "We want more private money." That is particularly true in the Presidential race. Right now, the law says that the 1976 Presidential election will be totally financed by public funds. If we agree to this amendment, we will go back to a system—

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I would like to call to the attention of the Senator from Iowa what I think is a misunderstanding on the Senator's part.

The language of this amendment is not such that a candidate for Congress or the President would be forewarned from deciding to take any public funds if he decides to do so. It just sets up a formula if he wishes to take up the public financing. If he desires, he would receive the public funds; there is no difference from the Rules Committee bill in that respect.

Mr. CLARK. No; I do not think there is no misunderstanding. The amendment would forbid any candidate from taking total public financing in any general election.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is correct if that is his impression. I was afraid that the Senator was under the impression that there was not an alternative, because such an option does exist under the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. No; I understand that, and that a candidate, if he could raise the money on his own, could get up to 63.5 percent in the case of congressional elections or 75 percent in Presidential elections.

But the law already says that in the 1976 election there will be total public financing of the Presidential election. If we pass this amendment, we are going back and saying, "You must have private money, at least to the tune of 30 percent, in Presidential elections."

To insist on having greater private financing in elections is not a step in the right direction, especially not after what has happened in the last 18 months.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a unanimous consent request?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Mondale), that Jim Verdigier, of his staff, may have the privilege of the floor.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. COOK. My problem is the same as that of the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from South Dakota. I cannot figure out whether this amendment is fish or fowl.

I think we are debating whether we should have public financing. If so, let us vote that issue up or down, and let the country appreciate what we are doing. If Senators will pardon the use of an old country expression, this is like being a little bit pregnant; I cannot figure it out. This seems to be a method of trying to get cloture so that we could consider something like this, and after cloture is obtained, to almostemasculate the bill we have all worked on.

I have many problems about public financing, and the Senator from California says he has some problems with first amendment rights. But, Mr. President, the bill we debated, modified, adopted overwhelmingly, and sent over to the House last year took the first amendment and wrapped it around every tree and every telephone pole from precise to precinct.

I must say that I agree wholeheartedly with the Senator from Iowa that what we are really saying now is, "Let us give ourselves some kind of mixed bag," and we are holding that mixed bag until after 4 o'clock to see what the result is. The beginning is rather frightening.

We are saying that somehow or other we are putting on a limitation, and a man may only get $100 or less, and the President on $250 or less, after he has got so much money. All he has to say to people is, "Don't write me a check of over $250 or over $100; get all the kids and grandchildren to write me checks for $100 each, so that we can get it matched,” and the Federal Government can do it.

Several Senators addressed the Chair. Mr. COOK. I yield to the Senator from Iowa (Mr. STADTMUHLER), and say that the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) and the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON).

The clerk will state the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. ALLEN), and say there shall not be any further reduction in the amount of the overall expenditures, to cut down on the amount of individual contributions.

Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama has been trying day by day to get the overall permissible expenses reduced. That was accomplished today. The Senator from Alabama has an amendment that would cut $25 million from the total amount of permissible expenses.

May I, the distinguished Senators, give the Senator from the State of Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) and the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON).

The amendment proposed by Mr. Stevenson—

Amend subsection (b)(1), proposed to be inserted on page 13, beginning with line 17, as follows:

“(b)(1) an eligible candidate who is nominated by a majority party is entitled to payments for use in his general election campaign which he may make in connection with that campaign under section 504, and

(b) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of President, 100 percent of the amount of expenditures the candidate may make in connection with that campaign under section 594, and

(1) the amount of contributions he and his authorized committees received for that campaign.”

At the end of paragraph (6) in such subsection, insert “or (b)” before the period.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 6 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, it is quite obvious that cloture should not be invoked in this bill. The very pendency of the amendment of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON), joined in by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), shows clearly that there is no strong unanimity of opinion as to whether the amendment should be agreed upon. For the first time, this monolithic bloc of Senators who are determined to get public financing has shown some signs of breaking up, so that the issues can be debated on their merits.

Earlier today, the Senate reduced the amount of permissible contributions in a Federal election—that is, House and Senate, Presidential nomination, or Presidential general election, by 20 percent. Now, Mr. President, this amendment of the distinguished Senator from Illinois and the distinguished Senator from Minnesota would give a further potential 27.5 percent reduction in the Federal subsidy in congressional races, and a 30 percent potential reduction of the Federal subsidy in Presidential races.

I ask that possibly that was accomplished the first time in 5 years he had voted for an amendment which had been proposed by the Senator from Alabama. But it is indicative of the fact that Senators are beginning, for the first time, to determine these amendments and these measures on their merits.

If we will fail to vote cloture—if we will vote against cloture this time—it is hoped that the distinguished majority leader will set the bill aside.

It would be the better part of wisdom, since these predictions have been made on the floor of the Senate as to what the House will do, to wait until the House acts on S. 373, which is pending in the House now and does not provide for a single penny of Federal subsidy. The President may want to go along with that.

Why does the Senate want to change its position? It was against a Federal subsidy by a record vote in the Senate back in July when we passed S. 372.

So, let us see what action the House takes. If it is the action they take, if any, on public financing. But financing by the taxpayers of this Nation and paying up to $7.5 million for each candidate for the Presidential nomination of the two major parties—and that is what the bill would permit—that is not campaign reform, in the view of the Senator from Alabama.

I hope that upwards of 33, 34, or 35 Senators will vote against invoking cloture so that we can get down to debating some of the issues on their merits, which apparently Senators are more willing to do, than ever before during this debate.

Mr. President, I feel that this statement of mine may not do the amendment a great deal of good, but the amendment offered by the distinguished Senators from Illinois and Minnesota is a good amendment and moves in the right direction of eliminating Federal subsidies. It does not eliminate enough. It eliminates 37.5 percent in congressional races in general elections and 30 percent in Presidential elections, which is a step in the right direction, so help me, God. In a few more days and debate this issue we may eliminate public financing altogether.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, having been on the floor a good deal in the course of these debates, I would hope that the Senator from Alabama would not take offense if I say that he says we are now voting on the merits. I think maybe in some instances we are not voting on the merits, but voting on exhaustion.

I stand here, on this side of the aisle, as a member of the Republican Party, and I hear the Senator from Alabama say that it is going to cost the taxpayers of the United States $75 million to help finance Presidential campaigns.

We should remind the Senator—and we have all been reminded of it very much—that we in the U.S. Senate have already spent, with or without the Senator's consent, at least some $36 million of the taxpayers' funds to the Watergate Special Investigating Committee. The House has given itself a million dollars or more and will give itself more. I suppose by court order the House will spend a few million dollars in impaneling grand juries and bringing in indictments. That will all be spent, and it will all be taxpayers' money, and it will be done to seek a remedy for what occurred as a result of the Committee to Reelect the President.

Some of the cases have been brought up by some of the people on the other side of the aisle who received funds in that campaign during 1972 who either failed to report them or took some other action—perhaps some paid them back or something or other.

But I have to say to the Senator from Alabama that when we speak of how much money we are going to save the taxpayer, the best analysis we have to make is the analysis of the system as we look at it today. We have seen some remarkable people in the United States, very few who, by reason of some degree of sweet persuasion on the part of some people in the political system, made corporate contributions. They have been brought up before the House, and I believe some of them have been fined. Yet, we have not stopped that. Probably, in the long run we have an opportunity to save the American taxpayers much money.

As I say, I am a strange person to stand here and talk this way, because I have very serious reservations about this. But I believe that we can try it; and if it does not work, we can quit it. That is the legislative process; that is the way we function in this country.

When a few problems occurred with daylight saving time, it did not take very long for us to recognize the day-light saving time to come to the floor with support for getting rid of daylight saving time. I expect that we will do that in short order, and we will realize that we have made mistakes.

So I say to my colleagues that we see here an opportunity to try something different. We see an opportunity that some people in the Nation like and that some dislike. Some people are violently opposed to it.

With all due respect to the Senator from Illinois, the amendment that will be pending at 4:10 or 4:15 is another effort to mollify a proposal that I know some of the supporters do not really support, and end up with some form of the bill; but they fee. It is a way to compromise. I doubt seriously that those amendments have all the meritorous effect to which the Senator from Alabama alluded.

The Senator from Alabama just said that he was delighted, for example, that the amendment was before the Senate, because it was a way to save money and it was a way to change the basic formula of the bill, which he does not like. But I have a notion that ever if the amendment by the distinguished Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON and Senator HUMPHREY, Senator DOMENICI, Senator TAFT, Senator CRANSTON, Senator BEALL, and Senator MONDALE) is adopted, the amendment in the Senator's name for Senator Wile's name on this bill on final passage. So it is slight praise for the amendment, in all fairness.

I am going to vote to end debate, because I think we should get on with the legislative schedule. What really bothers me, may I say to the Senator from Alabama, is that we have already sent one bill over to the House of Representatives, and the bill is like; and I am afraid that if we send this bill over it also will be like. To that extent, I think that the pressure by the people of the United States should not particularly be on us but should be on the Members of the House of Representatives to do something in regard to campaign reform.

We have talked here on many occasions about these elections, and it has been my contention that the first thing we should do and the first thing the House should do is to pass the bill we sent them to reduce the time for campaigning.

If, in fact, we established our primaries in August, established our national conventions in the first week in September, some people were not voting in primaries, and totally and completely to death by campaigning for a year or two.

When we talk about how much money it costs to run for office in California and New York, I am of the opinion that if we are talking about a million dollars in a primary, there is no way that one could spend a million dollars if his campaign were for a year or two. It would be the last week of August, the 4 weeks of September, and the 4 weeks in October. That would be 9 weeks, basically. I think that $75 million of money could be spent. I do not see how candidates in my State, for example, could spend $800,000 or more, as they did last time they ran, if they were campaigning for 9 weeks. It is easy to spend that much when you have a primary in May and all of a sudden you are off and running. Some States have primaries in January and February, and I think the time is about right.

Part of reform really is to eliminate the necessity for long campaigns. We have that proposal in the House, and we cannot get anywhere with it. I voted to end debate before. I will vote to end debate again today, because I am afraid that what ultimately will be a result of this continuation, what we will really wind up with, is an amalgamation of the matter, something no candidate in the United States will be able to live with, whether incumbent or challenger, and something that a challenger really wants to be a sound challenger, the first thing he will have to do will be to get an office full of lawyers and CPA's and have them on duty nights. He will have to pay a body who does absolutely nothing but live with a timetable as to when and how much he has to report to and whom he has to report to. All this will be mixed in at the same time with whether this is entitled to a Federal matching fund or whether this is not entitled to a Federal matching fund; whether he made his last report so that he can get his next report; so he can get his contribution based on what he has collected in the last month.

In the end, I think the middle conglomeration. I think the American people will not be able to view a campaign but will be able to view candidates who are spending all their time seeing whether or not they are above board.

Therefore, I believe we ought to end debate and send some kind of bill to the House, so that the American people can have an understanding that we bring things to a conclusion; that they do not act on exhaustion but in fact on merit; and I have a notion that exhaustion prevails at this time.

Mr. President, I yield such time to the Senator from Kansas as he may desire.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Kentucky and share his view that it is time the Senate went on to something else. When we consider that we spent a number of days on whether we should have a pay raise and have spent more than 2 weeks on whether the President should be on our campaigns—both of which measures I opposed—I think that it is time we went on to something else.

I am against public financing. But I am also against spending more of this month on this legislation, so I intend to vote for cloture as I did previously.

Also I would suggest with reference to the timing of this bill and the proper procedure for considering legislation in the Senate that this bill be here before the Senate at the right time. I recall the opening statement of the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Eavenson) and the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Byrd) on the first day of the Watergate hearings on May 17, 1973. The distinguished Senator from North Carolina said:

"Of necessity the committee's report will reflect an agreement considered by its constituent committees on whatever new legislation is needed to help safeguard the electoral process."

The distinguished Senator from Tennessee said:

"This committee was created by the Senate itself—find as many of the facts, the circumstances and the relationships as we could, to assemble those facts into a clear, coherent and intelligible presentation and to make recommendations to the Congress for any changes in statute law or the basic charter document..."
of the United States that may seem indicated.

The Watergate Committee was charged with the job of advising the Senate on campaign reform legislation. The committee’s report is not due until May 28, and the deadline may be extended if the Senate desires to investigate. But the threat of Senate Resolution 60, at least as the Senator from Kansas viewed it, was too close to the election of 1972, in which the system they might and then come forward with a report and recommendations for legislation to be passed by Congress based on that report.

It seems to me that the legislation before us is premature. The amendment just offered by a group of distinguished Senators seems to indicate a lack of any strong feeling for public financing. But as much as I oppose the concept I believe it should be disposed of, because there is much more to do in this session. I believe the people in my State would like me to continue to work on the Easter recess and talk about something other than how much tax money the Senate has been able to get of the public Treasury for its expenses. We have been able to procure a pay raise, and things of that kind. They are more concerned about taxes, gasoline, inflation, and the possibility of impeachment than the financing of our campaigns.

Having said that, I shall vote to shut off debate and thereafter offer a substitute to the pending legislation. The junior Senator from Kansas believes that if we give the legislation passed in 1971 a little time, if we make full disclosure of our contributions and expenditures and strengthen other features of the present law there will be great and constructive change in the American political system.

I have great faith in Members of Congress in both parties, in their integrity, honesty, and character, and I do not believe we purify politics by honesty, and character, and I do not believe we purify politics by legislation. It is not enough to expect that something be done to change the political practices that allowed this to flourish.

They expect a significant change and new opportunity to change and improve the political process. If the need for public financing was well-established then, it is even more so now. This is a new year, and it presents new opportunities for improving the political process that has been marred over the last 18 months. If we do not take advantage of the opportunity, the result may be even more tragic than the legacy of last year. In just a few minutes, Mr. President, the Senate will have yet another opportunity to change and improve the political process.

We have been debating S. 3044 and the concept of public financing for Presidential and congressional elections for more than a week now. A majority of the Senate supports the bill and the concept. It is time to end the debate, adopt the bill, and pass this legislation.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am extremely hopeful that the Senate will end this debate and permit the Members of this body to act on the committee bill and the amendments at the desk. A thoughtful, constructive, and imaginative proposal for clean and honest government has come from the Committee on Rules and Administration. It has the substantial support of Members on both sides of the aisle, Democrat and Republican alike, and it deserves to go forward to a final vote.

This issue has been amply debated. The fundamental issue goes back to the discussions and debates which took place here in 1966 and 1967, again in 1970 and 1971, and once again last year as an amendment to the Debt Ceiling Act.

There are no new issues to be discussed. There may be some variations in the formulas or changes in the percentages, and so forth, but there are no new issues to be further debated. The Committee on Rules and Administration acted in a responsible way in considering all the various alternatives. They produced a remarkable work on the construction of this legislation. Those seeking public office may take advantage of the public financing provisions, or they may reject them, rely on private financing for their campaigns.

The bill provides this flexibility. It provides an element of voluntarism for Members of the Senate or the House, and for others. The people can understand if candidates choose one form or the other. It does not force anyone to adopt any particular method of financing their campaign.

Above all, the bill provides a significant legislative answer that we in Congress can make to the Watergate tragedy. It has been said of our political system that it is the best system that money can buy. That is a tragic indictment of a system that has served this country well for 200 years. I think any of us who have run for public office understand the similarity of the conditions that affect the field of campaign contributions.

So, Mr. President, I am hopeful that the Senate will act this afternoon. As I mentioned, this issue has been debated. I think it is to the credit of the members of the Committee on Rules and Administration that there is strong support for it by Democrat and Republican alike. It is really the best opportunity the American people in the election system.

The proposal has been criticized on the ground that it is going to cost millions of dollars, $90 million a year and $360 million overall. That price tag is a bargain. It is the equivalent of only one-tenth of 1 cent a gallon of gas. That is all the American public pays.

The committee bill makes sense. I believe it would be the soundest investment of taxpayers' funds that Government can make. I think we have the responsibility to act on this proposal this afternoon. The debate has really been completed. It is high time to move ahead and end the debate.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICIAL. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COOK. How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICIAL. The Senator has 6 minutes.

Mr. COOK. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky, in starting his remarks a moment ago, said that the Senator from Alabama had said this measure would cost the Treasury $7.5 million in the Presidential race. Well, either the Senator has not listened to what the Senator from Alabama has said, or he is not familiar with the contents of the bill, but what the bill will do is provide up to $75 million for each person who seeks the Presidential nomination of either of the major parties and who is able to get a starting fund of $250,000 in contributions. And actually, there are some 8 or 10 potential candidates for the Presidency here in the halls of Congress. So really, to get the figures of what the Presidential campaign would cost, it could run up to $75 million or $100 million, because Senators can assure that there will be a whole lot of special interest groups espousing the candidacies of various people, because it would take just a campaign fund of $250,000 to start getting one's hand in the Public Treasury.

The Senator from Kentucky also talked about a lot of people being in court, convicted, one thing and another, in connection with Watergate, and that this bill is necessary to cure the evils of Watergate. Well, the way to do that is not to put one's hand in the Public Treasury, but the way to do that is to cut down on the amount of authorized expenditures and cut down on the amount of personal contributions. The Senator from Alabama has been trying to do that all along, but without the help of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, who has been voting against these amendments.

The Senator from Alabama tried to get an amendment adopted that would have cut contributions down to $250 in Presidential races and $100 in House and Senate races, but with little help from the Federal taxpayers. If I submit it is not reform just to turn the bill for political campaigns over to the American taxpayers. What would constitute reform would be to cut down on the amount of overall contributions, to cut down drastically on the amount of individual contributions, provide for strict disclosure and reporting of all contributions in order to set up an independent election committee.

We passed such a bill and sent it over to the House last year, without the benefit of any public funds. I would feel that if we would stand firm on that theory of campaign reform, we would eventually get a bill.

I want to appeal now to the distinguished sponsors of the pending Stevenson amendment, Senators Stevenson, Humphrey, Domenici, T. Jeff, Cranston, Mondale, and Beall. If these Senators expect to get the amendment that they have at hand to their consideration, with any chance of adopting it, then it would serve them in good stead to vote against applying clause, because once clause is adopted, this election will be on the same footing as other elections, and they would end up with no amendment whatever. If the Senator from Illinois would vote against clause, he would be in a commanding position to insist on the adoption of his amendment, and I submit that suggestion to the distinguished Senator from Illinois and his colleagues.

I was interested, too, Mr. President, in the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Humphrey), who talked about all this pressure from pressure groups that he was receiving by reason of being for this 37.5 percent discount amendment that he and Mr. Stevenson have put in, because it would reduce potentially the Federal subsidy in Congressional races. House and Senate, by 37.5 percent and 50 percent in Presidential elections.

So apparently there are great pressure groups at work in behalf of public financing, and there are those pressure groups. I see them in consultation with Members of the Senate from time to time. They have not consulted with the Senator from Alabama. However, there are great pressure groups involved here, as indicated by the statement of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota.

I would like to see the Stevenson-Humphrey et al. amendment adopted, but we are not going to get it adopted if clause is invoked. If clause is not invoked, I think they can be sure that those who are for Federal subsidies would agree to adding the amendment. I think if the Senator is serious and is not just making a play on this amendment, but wants to get it adopted, he will vote against applying clause, because before the debate was over, he would be able to get his amendment adopted.

The distinguished Senator from Kansas and the subsidy in Federal subsidy bill, but is for clause. Well, if there ever was a non sequitur uttered on the floor here, that is it, because if a person is really against public financing, he would vote against clause, because I have a feeling that the majority leader, if we were able to defeat the referendum, would not bring it up more than one more time. So the way to defeat it, I would say to the distinguished Senator from Kansas this bill would be to vote against clause. Then we will get on to something else earlier than if clause were invoked.

The distinguished Senator from Kansas said—and this is what I really planned to say—that the Senate has spent quite a lot of time in considering pay raises for Senators.

The Senator from Alabama voted against the pay raises for the Senate 5 years ago and also voted against a pay raise for the Senate this year. However, the strong force of public opinion is what caused the Senate to vote against that pay raise. It was a modest pay raise—something like $2,500 a year. It was the first pay raise in more than 5 years. However, the Senate, sensing the wishes of their constituents, voted against that pay raise and turned thumbs down on it.

If the people disapprove of a $2,500 pay raise for the Senate, the distinguished Senator from California (Mr. Cranston) would not be covered by that law since it was passed during the term in which he was serving office.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Alabama ought to recognize that his amendment has been defeated. So the bill for California would not be $2,121,000. It would be $1,697,000 for the general election, in light of the Senator's own amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the Senator. The Senator from Alabama was so surprised that his amendment was adopted that he did not charge his memory with the figures.

So the Senator from California under the amendment of the Senate from Alabama would have to struggle along with a subsidy and a check for $1,697,000 just as soon as he became a nominee. That is what he would have to struggle along with under the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

If the public does not approve of a $2,500 pay raise for the Senate, what is the public going to think of subsidizing a public campaign for the Senate in the amount of $1,697 million. I do not think the public would approve of that.

So if we are going to shake together a bill—and it looks as though there is some chance of getting a better bill, because we have dropped 25 percent off the public expense earlier, and the distinguished Senator from Illinois has an amendment that would chop off an extra 37.5 percent of the Federal subsidy in congressional...

races, and up to 30 percent inPresidential races—maybe if the debate is allowed to continue a few more days we might be able to get an amendment through to redraw 100 percent of the Federal subsidy.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, first let me say that I was aware of the $1.7 million for one candidate. In fact, I used it in terms of one candidate.

The Senator asks about the cost to the public. But what amazes me, when we talk about this, is that the public does not understand what is in the bill. It gives the public the impression that the minute one becomes a candidate they will write a check for $1,700,000, and then they will write it automatically.

If the Senator reads the bill, there is quite a procedure that one has to go through. There is quite an accounting to go through. He is not immediately able to go in with $1,897,000 in his pocket and say, "All right. Now I am a candidate for the general election."

I must say in all fairness that we should at least equate the bill with reality, as I have not worked in the Rules Committee on the bill and, as a matter of fact, the Senator from Alabama worked hard along with us hard and arduously along with us. He has worked hard all along.

There is no question about how the Senator feels. And I must say that I respect him for how he does feel. I must say that we have been on the bill now for 2 weeks. And I am rather chagrined that the Senate of the United States must spend that much time on a bill that has the potential to make a difference in the United States with regard to presidential candidates and Senate and House candidates. However, I do know one thing.

The Senator says that we could chop at this thing, that we are getting closer to it, and that we are getting smaller contributions and trying to get the campaign to smaller contributions. May I remind the Senator how we tried to get away from the tremendous legislation. Whereas the bill that we passed last year, the legislation was defeated by, I believe, a vote of 53 to 40.

That bill is still pending in the House of Representatives, and before it is even acted on by the House, we have before us now S. 3044, which changes the entire thrust of the so-called campaign reform legislation. Whereas the bill that we passed last year, that is now pending in the House of Representatives, provided for financing in the private sector, the bill before us provides for public financing.

Mr. President public financing, letting the taxpayer do the job, requires a taxpayer to support a candidate with whose views and with whose philosophy he disagrees. Mr. President, we already have public financing in a sense. We have the 10-cent credit for Presidential elections right now, and they say there is enough in the fund, or will be by 1976, to finance the campaigns of the major parties and minor parties.

Mr. President, the committee bill does not apply to Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate in the 1974 elections. It does not go into effect until the 1976 elections. So what is the hurry about the bill? Why ram it through the Senate now? Why not lay it aside and get on to other measures?

Mr. President, we have the checkoff. We have a system—and all the taxpayers, I am sure, are familiar with this, having been working on their tax returns in recent days and weeks—of credits or deductions available for campaign contributions, I believe a $12.50 credit for a single person or $25 for a couple, and the deduction this bill provides for doubling that amount. That bill will be coming back from the House of Representatives before long. And on the matter of deductions, it provides $50 for a political contribution made by a single person or a $100 deduction for a couple.

So we already have public financing of elections, one big difference being that the taxpayer can make his contribution under those systems, either the credit or the deduction, to a candidate of his choice. But that is not provided for in the 50 percent public financing as provided by the pending bill.

Mr. President, we do not need any more public financing than we already have. I believe it is that.--I will defer in part of the wisdom for us to wait until the House of Representatives passes something, because we have heard time and time again that the House may not approve this measure, or may not take it, that it may get tied up over there.

What is the hurry? It does not apply until the 1976 elections. Let us see what the House does with S. 372. Let us see what the House initiates on its own, and then possibly we will be in less than a legislative jam when such a bill comes to the Senate.

Mr. President, there is no grand rush about passing this legislation. I am hopeful that cloture will not be invoked, so that we can give serious consideration to the Johnson-Humphrey-Cranston amendment, which would provide for a possible reduction of 37.5 percent in House and Senate races, a reduction in the public subsidy of up to 37.5 percent, or up to 30 percent in Presidential elections.

If we do not invoke cloture, we will have an opportunity to consider that amendment. If cloture is invoked, the amendment will be steamrollered, with no chance of passage whatsoever, and in my judgment some of the sponsors of the amendment possibly might not even vote for it when they read what the Senator from Minnesota was talking about are applied to them. Mark the word of the Senator from Alabama that some of the sponsors may well vote against their own amendment.

Mr. President, the fallacy of this bill is that here is a bill providing for paying for elections out of the taxpayers' pockets. It is posturing for legislation when in fact it is not. It is just taxpayer-financed elections, pure and simple. It is not campaign reform. It is campaign reform in that it changes the law, but it is not campaign reform, and there is quite a distinction.

Mr. President, those who have sponsored this raid on the taxpayers’ pocketbooks has not been interested in cutting down the overall campaign expenditures, save the distinguished Senator from Nevada, who did support that amendment. They have not been interested in reducing the individual contributions, because they had opportunity after opportunity to cut down those figures, and the Senator from Alabama has another amendment pending that will be considered whether cloture is invoked or not, which would cut contributions in Presidential races from a maximum of $3,000 down to $2,500, and in House races from $2,500 down to $1,250. Perhaps that would suit the tastes of a majority of the Members of the Senate. We have tried cutting them down to $250 in Presidential races and $100 in congressional races, and that failed. We then tried——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CANNON. If the remaining time is yielded back now, does the quorum call commence immediately?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The quorum call is supposed to begin at the hour set.

Mr. CANNON. At the hour set?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With 1 minute to go.

Mr. CANNON. A further parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CANNON. If time is yielded back, what happens in the interim of 1 minute before the hour stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rules prescribe that at the set hour, the Chair must immediately declare the hour.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I hope the cloture motion will be sustained, and that cloture will be invoked. We have been on this bill for a considerable period of time. We have had a test vote on almost every conceivable issue that I can think of in connection with the matter. We certainly have had every opportunity to debate every conceivable issue in connection with this matter.

Other People’s Money

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, in my more than 20 years in politics I have learned a thing or two about campaign financing. My knowledge has been acquired in several capacities—as a candidate, a fund raiser, and most recently, a member of an investigating panel looking to campaign finance practices. My knowledge has led me to an inescapable conclusion—our present system of financing our elections is unfair, undemocratic and unacceptable.

As a candidate I have raised for elective office some $2.5 million. By the grace of God and the good graces of the voters of Hawaii, I have been successful in each election. Because I am not a man of independent wealth, in each election I have had to rely on other people’s money to finance my campaign efforts. As the chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee in 1970, I learned to dispense money freely in all senatorial and congressional campaigns. And during the Watergate hearings we all learned that other people’s money fueled the campaigns of the various Democratic candidates for the Presidential nomination. It provided the Committee to Re-Elect the President the wherewithal to present Richard Nixon to the American people in the manner he wished to be presented. CREP also used other people’s money to create a string of scandals unprecedented in American political history.

The high cost of campaigning has escalated in the last two decades at a more rapid rate than the cost of living. Today a competitive campaign for a House seat can cost each side well over $100,000, while a Senator on the other hand can cost each campaign a minimum of $250,000 even in a relatively small State. As the Senate Watergate panel discovered over $100 million was spent in the Presidential campaign of 1972.

Television, radio, direct mail, telemarketing, printed pamphlets, newspaper advertising, transportation, and other essential means of modern communication used to present a candidate to the voting public are very expensive. Somebody must pay these campaign bills. The trend throughout this time has been toward other people’s money, that is small numbers of large contributors paying these bills. The damage to our democracy that the reliance on large contributors in elections has caused is plain for all to see.

The American people have never been more alienated from their political system than they are today. A smaller percentage of our people go to the polls than in any other industrial democracy. The decline of people willing to identify themselves with either of our major parties has been startling. Both American men and women hold politics and politicians in low esteem. Politics is very much a dirty word in today’s lexicon and the belief that all politicians are corrupt is dangerous and widespread.

We politicians did not need Watergate and the Agnew tragedy to learn that something was rotten in Washington. We have been aware of that for some time, but most of us have preferred to close our eyes to the campaign financing practices which have shamed our once honorable profession and—yes, let us face it—corrupted our system.

Let us ask at how the reliance on other people’s money to finance our campaigns has—and by its nature must—corrupt our present political process.

Since the Tillman Act of 1907, there have been new sources of campaign contributions. The Corrupt Practices Act of 1910 first required candidates for Federal office to report on campaign income and expenditures. Yet, in every election year candidates for Federal office have avoided, circumvented, and occasionally evaded just about every State and national law that it regulates the political fund-raising process. The techniques of avoidance may be complex, but they are well known. Secret conduits, spurious committees, and other forms of deceit and subterfuge come into existence to assure candidates the money needed to reach the voters. Honest men, with the best intentions, unwittingly take money from sources that are proscribed against giving it. It comes in prohibited quantities and in several capacities—as a campaign contributor, a fund raiser, and most recently, as a campaign consultant. Today, the illusion of corruption, dishonesty, and unacceptability of candidates for Federal office seven times to report their activities which have shamed American men and women.

Before my participation on the Watergate Committee, I was not fully convinced that a shift from reliance on private money to public money was the proper direction for our system. I have spent many long hours reading thousands of pages of committee documents, executive session transcripts, academic treatises on this subject. I sat through days of public hearings, listening to the tragic details of the campaign practices of 1972. During these past several months I have become convinced of the wisdom of the call for public financing of elections.

The Select Committee as a whole has not yet considered or expressed itself on legislation we recommend for full Senate consideration of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1973 and 1974 has forced each member of the committee to take a public stand on the questions of election reform. As my votes on these bills have shown, when the full committee writes its report, I will strongly recommend public financing of elections as a necessary element. But for a new system of campaign regulations. The facts of Watergate as I interpret them and the facts of political life in America today lead to that conclusion.

I cannot accept the argument that public financing will discourage, if not prohibit, the individual exercise of the first amendment right of freedom political expression. A system of matching small private contributions with public money will, in fact, encourage political expression from the millions of Americans who do not now participate. A tax checkoff system, as proposed in the legislation now before the Senate, will allow the taxpayer to contribute to the financing of political campaigns. It will, however, encourage the taxpayer to choose to participate in this essential part of the political process.

Further, I do not believe that public financing creates additional advantages for incumbents. The advantages we incumbents have are already overwhelming. We have staff offices and free use of the mails, frequent access to our constituents through the news media, and the campaign coffers of special-interest groups. The ability of incumbents to retain their seats indicates strongly that challengers often cannot get enough money to finance effective campaigns. Over the past 30 years in Congress, incumbents have won re-election in over 90 percent of their campaigns, while incumbent Senators have won over an 85-percent re-election rate. In 1972 congressional incumbents were on the average 5 years ahead in fundraising. I am not suggesting that every incumbent is a money chaser. Public financing may help to redress that balance by making access to large contributors less of a controlling factor in elections.

The argument that public financing will place an additional burden on the already heavily burdened taxpayer does not address the taxpayers who are at least paying for our system of campaign financing every time they go to the station, the supermarket, the drugstore, and everywhere as they fill out their tax forms. Tax loopholes were not written into our laws by accident. The special interests have not provided campaign financing for any sense of charity. And each time a change of legislative language or a preference or amendment, or a pork barrel bill or a “Christmas Tree Act” passes through Congress pays for the taxpayers through taxes. If we are to raise twice as much money as challengers. Public financing may help to redress that balance by making access to large contributors less of a controlling factor in elections.

Furthermore, many of the improprieties such as corporate contributions, were in violation of existing law.

However, last July the Senate passed S. 372 which provides strict limits on campaign expenditures and contributions, while leaving the financing of Federal elections in the private sector. An individual could give no more than $3,000 to a nonpresidential candidate in an election, or more than $25,000 to all candidates and committees in 1 year.

Senate candidates would be limited to 10 cents per eligible voter up to a ceiling of $125,000 in primary elections and 15 cents and a $175,000 ceiling in the general election. House candidates would be subject to similar limitations with a ceiling of $90,000 during primary and general elections.

That measure contained other restrictions such as prohibiting cash contributions over $50 and restricting the use of the frank in mass campaign mailings.

I believe that it would be wise to wait until the House acts on S. 372 before rushing ahead with public financing. If that measure is enacted into law, it will provide meaningful reform. After we have experience under its provisions, we might find it prudent to tighten the election laws still further. I deem it inappropriate to make such a drastic change in our electoral process as that entailed in public financing without first determining how to correct past abuses through the reasonable procedures contained in S. 372.

Mr. President, it is most enlightening to note that of the seven members of the Watergate Committee, five, including my distinguished colleague from the State of Georgia (Mr. Talmadge) are opposed to this bill’s public financing provisions. This committee has labored long and hard over many months to investigate campaign abuses and to determine how to reform our electoral process to prevent future improprieties. The Watergate reparation, now scheduled for the near future. However, the proponents of public financing refuse to defer action until after this body has had an opportunity to study the report’s recommendations. All too well do they realize that the report will not favor their view; all too glibly do they dismiss the wise counsel of the committee’s majority; and all too readily do they seek to expend the taxpayer’s dollars.

I want to point out that not one abuse would be prevented in the upcoming 1974 election by the pending bill since its provisions are not effective until the 1978 election.

We have all of 1974 and 1975 to draft additional campaign reform legislation if it is needed. Yet, the proponents of S. 304 urge that we rush through this proposal. Why? Because they wish to take advantage of the emotional tide that has swept over Watergate.

Mr. President, I do not believe a meaningful campaign reform should stand or fall on its own merits detached from the emotional sway of Watergate.
I oppose the unnecessary and unwise public financing provisions in this legislation.

Mr. MATTHIAS. Mr. President, as we continue to debate the merits of public financing and other proposals to reform our electoral system, I think it is appropriate to note that the General Assembly of Maryland, which just this week completed its 174 session, enacted a State election reform measure. Although different in its final version than the various individual bills that were introduced, this legislation does include the concept of public financing for general elections, in addition to a number of other features, many of them similar to the proposals we are considering here. Needless to say, there was extensive debate in the legislature, as well as general public discussion, about election reform. Full hearings were held, at which all shades of opinion were expressed. One of the most incisive statements against public financing of elections was submitted to the Judicial Proceedings Committee of the Maryland Senate by Ray Gill, a columnist for a number of Maryland weekly newspapers, and a long-time observer of government and politics in our State. I disagree on face value with the subject of public financing of elections.

But his statement is a clear expression of a point of view that must be taken into account here, as it was in Maryland. Because it is vitally important that all sides of the issue be fully explored, I ask, Mr. President, that Mr. Gill's statement be inserted in the Record.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

STATEMENT BY RAY GILL

Common Cause and other reform organizations have made a great issue of how special interests influence the course of government by contributing to the election campaigns of public officials. And God knows, we have seen enough evidence of abuses of the system within the past year.

The problem is that everybody has become so obsessed with the liabilities of our free political system that nobody seems to remember the assets. I am convinced that the greatest danger we face arises from the hysterical mania for reform, agitated by many well-meaning people and some whose motives are only dimly perceived.

At the congressional level and here in Annapolis, the craze to perfect the system threatens to strangle political liberty. The worst lung in that direction would be public financing of election campaigns.

The citizen's right to contribute or not to contribute would be abolished. The cash for electoral candidates would be forcibly taken from them by taxation.

The citizen would also lose any choice in the matter of which candidates get his money. The funds would go to a pool for distribution by the candidates according to some formula that would ignore the preferences of the taxpayer.

The distribution would be distributed to candidates hostile to the taxpayer's own political beliefs, as well as those he might favor.

I am convinced that would be unconstitutional and, if it is not, then surely it ought to be.

The courts of our land have repeatedly held that it is unconstitutional to prohibit the expression of any idea. I daresay it is just as unconstitutional to compel a citizen to support candidates whose ideology is contrary to his own, but that's what would happen under this pernicious legislation.

If public financing of presidential elections ever comes into play, I imagine the chagrin of a black taxpayer when he realizes that some of his tax dollars have been pumped into the campaign of George Wallace.

At the congressional level, I would surely be pained to have even one cent of my hard-earned cash going to Bella Abzug or Parren Mitchell.

And I can think of quite a few state legislators whom I would hate to support, including those who would vote for a bill such as this.

Instead of being obsessed with the scandals that have erupted lately, having been exposed and prosecuted by due process of law, I urge you to consider the cause of individual liberty.

Perhaps we all need reminding that government is the historic enemy of freedom, and its growing power in this nation is something we should not ignore.

Within the past 40 years, laws, rules, regulations, guidelines, plans, and bureaucratic decisions of government have increasingly invaded every aspect of life.

The economic power of government has grown to the point at which it consumes nearly 30 percent of the gross national product of the nation.

There are strong political forces that want government to assume more and more power over our lives, to tax more and spend more, to satisfy every human want and need, to plan your neighborhood, to practice sociology on your children, to regulate us all toward some concept of what society ought to be.

These organizations are well-organized and well-financed nationally. Their members recently campaign for more and larger government programs and for candidates who will support their goals. An I they are quick to denounce their opposition as "special interests."

But I would hate to think of a government in which those special interests were not represented.

I believe it is fortunate that business and labor contribute money to the election campaigns of candidates of their choice. So do countless individual citizens who perceive certain candidates to be representatives of their interests.

The economic power in elections is curried by law, as it was by law, because of the multitude of interests. A government elected thusly will try to balance and accommodate the interests at work in a free society.

The balance of interests checks the power of government, restrains it from committing excesses in any direction, and preserves freedom.

But public financing of election campaigns would eliminate important restraints on government and people.

I would also ask you to remember that the people are already taxed more than enough to support the galaxy of public services and attendant bureaucracies that have grown so vastly in recent times.

We might argue about the cost and necessity of some of those services, but at least the goal is service.

I wonder how you're going to convince the taxpayer that your election campaigns are public services for which he must be forced to pay.

The PRESIDENT Pro Tempore.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

A quorum is present.

The question before the Senate is: Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on S. 3044, a bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns, shall be brought to a close?

The clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate, so that Senators who are following the count may hear all the responses?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's suggestion is in order. The Senate will be in order. The Chair solicits the cooperation of all Senators.

The clerk will proceed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, we do not have the kind of order that would allow Senators to hear the responses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All Senators will take their seats. The clerk will not proceed until the Senators are in their seats in the chamber.

The clerk will proceed.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BIBLE (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. Magnus) and the Senator from Idaho (Mr. Craig). If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay." If they were present, they would vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. Craig), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. Long), and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. Magnus) are necessarily absent.

Mr. GRIFFIN, I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. Fong) is necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. William L. Scott) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. Fong) would vote "nay."

PRESENT AND GIVING A LIVE ROLL, AS PREVIOUSLY RECORDED—1

Bible, against.

NOT VOTING—8

Church | Long |
| Fong | McGee |
| Pong | Williams |

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote there are 64 yeas and 39 nays. Two-thirds of the Senators present and voting having voted in the affirmative, the cloture motion is agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate and in the galleries?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I rise to ask the distinguished majority leader if he will give us the schedule for the remainder of the day and perhaps he can give us the prognosis from now until the Easter recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I am very happy to respond to the distinguished Republican leader, and state that we will go as long today as there are amendments available.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 10 A.M.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in adjournment until the hour of 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, it is anticipated that the tornado disaster relief bill, which I understand was reported by the Committee on Public Works, will be taken up tomorrow after the conclusion of the pending business. There will be one or two other items which will be relatively noncontroversial. It is expected that the Senate, in line with the House action, will recess at the end of business Thursday rather than at the end of business Friday, as in the original schedule.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I understand a couple of the energy bills are on the way out or are out of committee. If so, I assume they will be brought up as soon as possible after the Easter recess.

Mr. MANSFIELD. After the no-fault insurance bill, which will be the next major item of business, has been disposed of—and it will be very controversial and debate will be extended—generally speaking, that bill will be followed by the education bill, which likewise will be subject to extended debate.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. We all hope that debate on the no-fault insurance bill will leave each of us with no fault personally.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Does the majority leader suggest that we lay down the no-fault bill before we quit?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes, and that it be the pending business.

Mr. MAGNUSON. And that it be the pending business when we return. Obviously, we could not have votes on it between now and Thursday.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is correct; and may I say, following the suggestions made by the distinguished Senator from Washington, who is the chairman of the Committee on Commerce and who will be the manager of the bill,

Mr. MAGNUSON. And that would mean that after the recess, no-fault would be the pending order of business?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes; and as far as the military authorization bill is concerned, that will not be taken up until sometime after the recess.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquiries as to who yields time.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. STEVENSON. What is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, as I understand the parliamentary situation, I do have an amendment at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I would to withdraw that amendment... and reintroduce another amendment which is at the desk and which has some technical changes in it to conform more accurately with the legislation before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is under consideration.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read Mr. KENNEDY's amendment to Mr. STEVENSON's amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. DOMINICK, Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. President, what was the objection to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts requested unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with. Objection was heard.

The clerk will read the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read the amendment to the amendment, as follows:

Strike the language proposed by Mr. STEVENSON in subsection (b) (1) (A) (1) proposed to be inserted on page 10, beginning with line 17, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(b)(1) Every eligible candidate who is nominated by a major party is entitled to payments for his own in general election campaign in an amount equal to:

"(A) In the case of a candidate for election to the office of President, 100 percent of the amount of the campaign the candidate may make in connection with that campaign under section 604, and

Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. President, I ask for the yea's and nay's.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. President, I will say, for the benefit of Members of the Senate, that this was an amendment which was introduced by myself, the majority leader (Mr. Hugh Scott), and Senators HART, SCHWEIKER, MATHIAS of California, and JAVITS. I do not intend to take much time, but as a point of information for the membership, this amendment is to——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend. The Senate is not in order.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. KENNEDY. This amendment would modify the Stevenson amendment to restore the provision in the bill reported out of the Committee on Rules and Administration for 100 percent public financing of general elections for the office of the President. The Stevenson amendment would cut this back to 40 percent public financing. This is an issue which has been debated and discussed since 1966. On many occasions over the past 6 years, the membership has voted on whether we want full public financing of Presidential elections. It is part of present law, the dollar checkoff we created in 1971. The Stevenson amendment would put this back to 40 percent existing law and change significantly the bill which is before the Senate dealing with Presidential elections.

The issue on the Stevenson amendment is an issue which we have voted on before. We rejected the concept of partial public financing a week ago, and it was also defeated as an amendment that was proposed last fall.

The purpose and thrust of my amendment is to preserve the features of existing law and the committee bill as they relate to Presidential elections. If this amendment is accepted to the Stevenson amendment, as it is now written, it would change the existing law which deals with the public funding of Presidential elections.

Financing of Presidential elections has really not been one of the principal issues debated or discussed on the committee bill. There has been general agreement in the Senate that the current is adequate. It is one of the most essential parts of the whole campaign reform proposal, and I would hope that at my amendment, which has the strong bipartisan support of many of those who have been working in this area, will be accepted. Certainly, we should not retreat from existing law.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, the subject of this amendment has been fully debated, and I certainly do not intend to prolong the debate. This amendment raises a question which I think can be simply put. It is simply, why pay more when, for less, we can do a better job?

Whatever the formula, Presidential candidates are going to get public financing. This amendment would drive out every last nickel and dime of private money for those Presidential campaigns in which the candidate has opted for public financing. No individual could contribute any money to the candidate of his choice. He could not contribute $5. He could not contribute $10.00.

Many people feel seriously about their politicians.

Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend until the Senate is in order. Staff members are solicited to cooperate.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. STEVENSON. The issue is very seriously about their election campaigns and feel seriously about their politics. They want to help. They want to be part of their Government. They want to help candidates of their choice. They want to do so by giving small contributions. The Kennedy amendment says, "No." It says whether one wants to contribute $5 or $10, he cannot do it. It says by implication that the citizen might corrupt a candidate for the Presidency of the United States with a $5 or $10 contribution.

Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. President, will the Senator yield on my time?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield.

Mr. STEVENSON. There is nothing in this amendment that would prohibit any individual who has unspent money on behalf of a candidate from taking out an advertisement or buying time on television or radio or sponsoring a program that would permit people to watch a candidate. He would be able to spend up to $1,000 for such purposes, regardless of the candidate's own spending limit. My amendment does not eliminate this provision. What it does do is make full public financing available to a candidate. And an individual would be able to spend up to $1,000 of his own money on behalf of a candidate, independent of the candidate's own limit. That provision is preserved, and I think wisely so.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Did the Senator from Illinois make his mark on his amendment as it is now written would remove every last nickel of private financing?

Mr. STEVENSON. In the case of every candidate who accepted the public funds made available by the bill, there could be no more private contributions. As the Senator from Massachusetts has pointed out, a person acting independently of a candidate could spend up to $1,000 of his own money to express his views, he could not contribute $5 to a candidate of his own choice.

Mr. ABOUREZK. But the Presidential candidates could raise private financing for a candidate.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is true. The purpose of public financing is to prevent corruption, essentially corrupting contributions, not $5 contributions. It is the small contributions which are innocent, and that is a healthy form of political participation.

The amendment I have offered, un-amended by the Senator from Massachusetts, would accomplish both objectives. It would eliminate from our politics the large contributions and would preserve the innocent, small contributions. It would decrease the cost to the Treasury of financing campaigns for the Presidency.

If the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts had been in effect in 1972, President Nixon and the Committee to Re-Elect the President would have received $30 million from the U.S. Treasury. There is no necessity for that. It is offensive to the American public. It could be offensive to the Constitution.

Large contributions could be eliminated and small contributions preserved without the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the genius of the committee bill we are considering this afternoon is its complete flexibility. A candidate is not required to accept any public financing. If he wants to raise his funds from small private contributions, he can do that. We do not have to change the existing legislation to accomplish the goal of the Senator from Illinois.

Many of the things that the Senator from Illinois advocates in terms of preserving small contributions are true. If an individual wants to go out and raise the money by $5 contributions, the endorsement in the committee bill would prevent that. But there is also nothing in it that would require him to raise private funds, if he preferred to finance his campaign from public funds.

Let me also point out that under the Senator's amendment, a candidate could still accept large contributions of $3,000, or $6,000. How many candidates relying on private funds will seek out the $250 donation for small grants, when they can get funds at $6,000 a clip from an individual or a special interest group? So, on the one hand, the Senator is putting a limit on what can be provided through public financing. On the other hand, he is not requiring a candidate to raise the money by small contributions. It would still be grants for him to finance his campaign in $3,000 or $6,000 contributions. That is a large loophole.

The lower we set the limit on public funds, the higher we make the incentive to rely on unduly large private contributions.

The bill before the Senate has been thought out in a responsible way. It seeks to provide flexibility for a candidate who wants partial public financing. He can say that he will take some public funds or all public funds, or no public funds. He has that flexibility. If he wants to raise his funds in small contributions, he can do that under the committee bill.

So I hope that at least the provision in Mr. KENNEDY, a raise his funds in small contributions, he merits of the Senator from Illinois' amendment will be considered.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON), as amended.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators HUGH SCOTT, HAZZARD, SCHWEIZER, MATTHIS, and JAVITS, I send an amendment for congressional elections and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASKELL). The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

In the matter proposed to be inserted on page 10, strike out proposed subsection (b) (1) (A) (1) (i) and (b) (1) (B) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(B) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator or Representative, the sum of:

"(i) 50 percent of the amount of expenditures the candidate may make in connection with that campaign under section 504, and

"(ii) the amount of contribution he authorized committees received for that campaign."

At the end of paragraph (6) proposed to be inserted on page 3, strike out "(1) (A)" and insert "(1) (A) or (B)".

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may need.

The committee bill provides for full public financing for congressional elections. There's a feeling, and rightly so, that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. If we have full public financing for Presidential elections, as we already do, then we should have full public financing of congressional elections as well.

There has been extensive debate on public financing for congressional elections, both before and after passage, over a period of few days as well as last fall, when a similar proposal was before the Senate.

Instead of full public funding for congressional elections, the Democratic amendment provides only a 5 percent front end subsidy, plus matching grants of public funds for the remainder of a candidate's spending limit. If matching grants are fully used by a candidate, he would receive matching public funds equal to half of the remaining 75 percent of his expenses, or 37.5 percent. Thus, his total public funds would equal the initial 25 percent plus the matching 37.5 percent, or a total of 62.5 percent public funds.

My amendment would raise the initial front end subsidy to 25 percent, and allow matching for the remainder. Thus, my amendment put a substantial limit on public funds. It is a significant retreat compared to the committee, but it is offered in a spirit of compromise to try to reach a middle ground with the Senator from Illinois and others who prefer a mixed system of public funds and matching grants in general.

The amendment we are offering would allow a candidate to obtain 75 percent public financing for his campaign—50 percent from the front end subsidy, and 25 percent through matching.

Now, that may not sound very different from the amendment of the Senator from Illinois—75 percent versus 62.5 percent—but there is an important additional point. Those amounts of public funds will be reached, only by candidates who raise all their private money in contributions of $100 or less. Far more likely, many candidates will choose that approach to the legislation at the Senate, what a candidate under the Stevenson amendment is likely to get public funds, and gets all the rest from wealthy contributors or special interest groups.

My amendment would at least raise this level to 50 percent, and that is an important difference.

This is a reasonable adjustment and compromise in this area. The sponsors of the bill are reluctant to make this adjustment, but who recognizes that the Senator from Illinois' approach is likely to be more acceptable to the House.

Our amendment is offered as a reasonable compromise to those who believe we should put a limitation on what is available in public funds. I would hope that the amendment would be accepted by the Senate.

Mr. President, I ask for the yes and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, as a Senator who is very likely to be a candidate this year, I support and, indeed, I am one of the cosponsors of Senator Kennedy's amendment, which I think is a fair compromise between the kind of informal vote of those who will support us financially, and Government financing. I was hostile to Government financing for years, as I saw many dangers in its use. But in all the problems of legislation, we always have to try to work off. We have to accept something we do not agree with in order to get the greatest good possible.

The seamy record we have seen under the general heading of raising campaign funds, with all the very, very shocking immorality which it has engendered, I believe we should have had the public financing route is the right one. I realize that we do not want to go at it all at once but, at the same time, to be practical about it, we have got to give the candidate the opportunity to use public financing effectively and not put him in the position where it does not amount to anything and be able to rely on it.

The virtue of the Kennedy amendment is that it is realistic. The 50-per cent figure enables a candidate to go with it and rely on it, whereas the 25-per cent figure is too little and does not give the public financing concept a fair trial.

For all those reasons, Mr. President, I hope very much that the Senate will approve the amendment.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I understood, during the debate we began here several weeks ago, that we were not going to be corrupted by accepting private funds. The prevailing view then was that we could not be trusted with private funds, that we, somehow, might be corrupted.

But now we are saying that if we accept 50 percent private and 50 percent public funds, there will be no problem. I agree with the distinguished Senator from Vermont (Mr. FALLOON), although I voted for cloture, that here we are either going to be financed publicly, or we should be financed privately 100 percent.

I do not know what merit there is in saying on the one hand that we are all subject to being corrupted because we accept private funds but, somehow, that is all right if half of it comes from the Public Treasury and half of it comes from someone else.

For the life of me, I cannot understand how this amendment makes anything better. It indicates that what we really want is public money. Fifty percent of public money will be all right if we can only get 50 percent out of the Public Treasury, that we are not concerned about being corrupted any more, that we are not concerned about where the contributions come from. We say, take 50 percent but do not take it all. I cannot see that if we purify our political system we want to let the Federal Government pay for the campaigns.

Well, I hope it never happens. But, if we are going to purify our political system, let us go on as we have been going. Most of the men and women in this country in public office are men and women of integrity. They are not corrupted by private donations. With the law passed in 1971, there will be full disclosure of our contributions and expenditures.

I see no reason for this amendment, or any modification of it, or for any more discussion of the pending bill.

It seems to me that the American people would like us to give a little attention to their problems. We wasted 7 days trying to raise our own pay. Now we waste 3 weeks trying to get back into the public Treasury. We have not concerned ourselves with the American people for the last 7 days trying to raise our own pay.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, there is very little difference between this amendment and the amendment I have proposed on the question of degree. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts would increase the maximum public share to 75 percent, while the amendment which I offered has a 65-per cent limit, and I believe all candidates can raise 100 percent of their funds privately—as they now do—they should be able to raise 75 percent from small contributions.

The amendment which I offered with the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from New Mexico and others would simply increase the degree of participation by citizens in the political process and decrease the burden on the Public Treasury.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the point remains that under the existing legislation, if an individual candidate finds the public financing sufficiently repugnant, he can go out and say, when he announces for public office, "I am not going to accept anything more than a dollar or more than $5" and run his campaign that way. Nothing requires him to take the public financing.

What we have done with this proposal is to say to every individual candidate who feel that some limitation ought to be provided, that we set a 50-per cent ceiling on the initial subsidy, and then allow matching up to the amount he is able to spend. I think that is a reasonable compromise.

I remind the Members of the Senate that this bill is going to go through many changes in the House and in the conference. The action by the Senate is going to be the high water mark in terms of the position Congress will take in this area. So I hope that when the bill does go to conference, our conferences will be given the strongest possible position to defend.

I am hopeful that we will have a strong bill.

Under the limitation that has been suggested by the Senator from Illinois, you can get only 25 percent front end funding. True, you will have to match up to 62 percent, if you raise private money up to $100 or less. But you can also go out and raise the rest of your money in $5,000 campaign contributions. There is no requirement in the Stevenson amendment that you get it from the Public Treasury. The 25 percent front end money will become a drop on the bucket, the shadow of reform without the substances. After getting the front end money, you can take $6,000 contributing from special interest committees. You can take $3,000 contributions from wealthy individuals.

How much reform is that? A Senator or Congressman wants to achieve 25 percent of the time, and the special interest groups the other 75 percent.

I think we are already achieving what the Senator from Illinois wants to achieve under the committee bill. There is no need for an arbitrary limitation as suggested by his amendment. I know that a number of Members feel strongly about it because they are the 50-per cent compromisers who have made the 50-per cent compromise we have offered in a constructive alternative.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. STEVENSON. A candidate, in both cases, has the option of taking private financing, as opposed to public financing. The only difference is whether it is going to be 62 percent from public sources or 75 percent.

Mr. KENNEDY. That is true only if matching public funds are fully used. If they are not used at all, the difference is 50 percent versus 25 percent. I say to the Senator that I will offer an amendment which I think is a compromise between the committee bill and the position which has been proposed by the Senator from Illinois.

Let me point out that if the Senator from Illinois or any other Member of Congress or any challenger wants to say, "I am going to run my campaign on $1 contributions or $5 contributions," he can do so. Yet, the Senator says that this is the goal of the Senator from Illinois. Also, if he says, "I will take 25 percent public and raise the rest on $5 campaign contributions," he can do that at the present time, under the committee bill.

The Senator is putting an arbitrary and mandatory limitation on what he can do. The only difference is whether or not he will have some contribution or $5 contributions, he can do that under the committee bill. Why does he want to make that mandatory for all candidates? Why does he want to drive candidates back into the arms of his contributors?

It seems to me that the alternatives in the committee bill achieve the thrust of the Stevenson amendment. The proposal I have offered as a substitute does not conform the Stevenson amendment more closely to the committee bill. It does not do it completely, but it does recognize that there are Members who want to put some limitation on public funds. I think it is a constructive middle ground between the Stevenson amendment and the committee bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, so that we might simplify it, the real argument here is over one thing, and that is whether or not it will be 25 percent maximum or 75 percent. There is nothing under the Kennedy amendment that would preclude somebody from taking 25 percent as the maximum amount of the public contribution, but it does leave what I say is a good deal of ambivalence as to what is going to happen. I think there ought to be standard rules.

Mr. KENNEDY. These ought not to be basic issues of public policy. What you are going to find is that you are going to have your campaign on whether or not you are the dollar man or the public finance man, or whether or not you take 25 percent from the public Treasury or 50 percent from the public Treasury. In the meantime, the public will have no one talking about inflation or health or education, and I do not think that you can be bought for 25 percent or 50 percent; or not bought. All of that is just painting ourselves into a corner.

The real truth is the problem of private financing is no accusation of corruption, which has been said here. Just because somebody contributes does not prove you are corrupt. But it does lend itself to suspicion, doubt, and speculation. This is the judgment that we ought to try to remove as much of that doubt as possible. We do that by putting severe limitations on the amount of a contribution. Anyone who can be bought for $50 ought to get out of here and not stand up and call himself a man or her- self a woman—at least, at prices these days. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, if anybody thinks that a $6,000 group contribution from a national committee or the labor movement or a Senate committee or the doctors, or whoever else it is, is something that will buy you, you ought to be ashamed even at the thought. I do not think that simply because somebody gets a contribution for $3,000 maximum, that proves ipso facto that you ought to spend several years in Sing Sing. We are just fooling around telling the public that is what happens.

What we have here on matching Federal funds is that if one gets $100 in private money, he can get $100 matched. That is what is in this formula of either the proposal by the Senator from Massachusetts or the amendment. The only argument is whether or not one ought to have 50-percent front-line financing. In other words, when one declares his candidacy, he walks over and says, "Give me 50 percent of everything I am entitled to under the formula in the bill." Or he can say, "I don't think I'll take 50 percent, because I hear that my opponent is going to take 50 percent, so I take 45 percent. That makes me a 5 percent better guy than the other fellow."

The advantage of the Stevenson amendment is that it is 25 percent.

I hope that we will stop kicking the gong around, because that is what is bothering me. I joined in the Stevenson amendment for one reason. I want a bill, and I think we can get a good bill. I believe we ought to approach public financing.

I had very serious doubts about any amendments that the Presidential campaign was one of the places where we might have full public financing, and I voted accordingly, except when I came here to try to find out how we can get a bill. The American people have a right to expect results of us and not just an issue—going around here trying to prove some of us are more pure than Ivory soap. There is not a saint in this audience, there has not been before and there will not be one. We have our failings and our weaknesses. We are trying to find an antibiotic to do something about that infection that has gripped this country. I happen to think Dr. Stevenson has a pretty good pill, a pretty good antibiotic. Now, we have other pre-scriptions coming to us. Either would succeed there has not been. The difference is the amount in the public Treasury.

I do think the issue before the Senate is: Do we want performance or do we want form? Do we want an issue, do we want a bill? I think I want a bill. I think it is time for the Congress of the United States to tell the American people we are capable of legislating something around here that will be passed, signed, and become law.

Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Minnesota. I think he has put his finger on the matter precisely when he said the important thing is disclosure and a limitation on contributions we can have both without public financing.

The Senator from Minnesota underscored another point. Every Senator will be trotting around and not take the bill. I have just arrived in the Chamber. Can the chairman of the committee tell us his point of view concerning the Kennedy amendment and the Stevenson amendment and what they would do to the bill that the committee brought to the floor?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, first, I am sure the distinguished Senator from Illinois inadvertently used the figures as to what he would be entitled to, but he overlooked the fact that Senator from Alabama had an earlier amendment adopted that reduces the earlier figure, so the Senator from Illinois may want to reduce his figure.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I was assuming an expenditure unit of 12 cents per person of voting age.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, basically this boils down to the question of whether you desire or do not want private financing involved. I long felt we should go to the private financing route. It was only recently that I changed my initial view after seeing the Watergate situation. I thought S. 372 with the amendment in the 1971 act would have been restrictive. had they been complied with and we would not have found ourselves in this situation if the House had acted on S. 372.

We were faced with the problem of reproposing that bill on this issue. This we did attempt to do. We did leave the matching provision in the primary and if private financing is paid then this system is a little bit bad, because we permitted it in the primary races.

But on the other hand we have been accused of writing provisions here that make this an incumbent's bill. Frankly, I believe the amendment of the dis-tinguished Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy) in this instance, if we are to go some other route, is more the advantage of a challenger than an incumbent, because it is relatively unknown, and certainly less known than the incumbent, and in a primary he can go in and say, "I am entitled to up to 50 percent of the limit," which would give him a leg up on the opportunity to start his campaign. Certainly, whether a person can raise $1 they will get a matching dollar under the Kennedy amendment and the Stevenson amendment. So I think it is more or less an individual view as to whether or not we think the person who wins in the primary would be able to go and say, "I would like to get 25 percent," or on the other hand, "I would like to get 50 percent." If he is going to get 50 percent, it favors the challenger rather than an incumbent.

My personal view, I think, is that I have a vote for the Kennedy amendment, although the committee has not taken a formal position on this situation. Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, back in 1971, well before Watergate, we enacted 100 percent public financing for Presidential elections.

Then we had Watergate, and now we are being asked to move backward. We have enacted public percent public financing for the Executive, and now we are going to enact only 25 percent for Members of the House and the Senate. That is the effect of what the Stevenson amendment will do. How can we accept such a timid reform for Congress, when we already have such a strong reform for the Executive?

What my proposal would do would be to make it 50 percent for the Senate and House. I think we have a responsibility, now that we have taken a position on how we are going to handle national elections, to do the same system as nearly as we can to Members of the Senate and the House. With the amendment I have offered, it would provide only 50 percent. That is a very significant step back from the committee bill. But I think it is a sound compromise and one which I hope will be accepted.

If we are going to go the route of compromise, I hope we would be willing to go halfway as far as we have gone for the Presidency. One quarter of the way is too little.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what the substitute does with regard to financing congressional campaigns in the primary. I have not seen the amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. It has absolutely no effect whatsoever.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson), as amended. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LOWE), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FELDMAN), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGEE), and the Senator from Oregon (Mr. MITZENBAUM) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 23, as follows:

<tr>
<th>Yeas</th>

So Mr. KENNEDY's amendment to Mr. STEVENS's amendment, as amended, was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I wish to point out briefly to the Senate what we have done. Then I shall move to lay the Stevenson amendment on the table.

The first Kennedy amendment amended the Stevenson amendment so that it went back to exactly the way the provision exists in the bill at present.

The second Kennedy amendment, which was just defeated, is a matter of quibbling over 25 or 50 percent, but would change the bill in that respect with respect to general elections.

In addition, the Stevenson amendment has in it, on the last page, page 4, subparagraph (2), a provision which again change action that the Senate took the other day by a vote of 46 to 42. This would change the language back to what it was prior to that vote.

With that explanation, I think we have discussed the whole issue completely.

Mr. President, I move to lay the Stevenson amendment on the table, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Cannon) to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson) as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy). The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FELDMAN), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LOWE), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. MITZENBAUM) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 46, as follows:

The result was announced—yeas 66, nays 23, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

CORRECTION OF A VOTE

Mr. McINTYRE. Mr. President, on April 3, 1974, I was present and voted "yea" on the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINIC). The Record indicates that I was necessarily absent and not voting. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the Record be corrected to reflect my presence and vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURDICK). Without objection, the correction will be made.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.
Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1127 and ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974".

APPLICABLE STATE LAWS

Sec. 308. Section 403 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended to read as follows:

"Title IV—Federal Election Commission

ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION; CENTRAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEES; CAMPAIGN REPORTERS

Sec. 431. (a) Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (relating to disclosure of Federal campaign funds) is amended by redesignating section 308 as section 402, and by inserting after section 402 the following new section:

"FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION

Sec. 408. (1) There is established, as an independent establishment of the executive branch of the United States, a commission to be known as the Federal Election Commission.

(2) The Commission shall be composed of the Comptroller General, who shall serve without the right to vote, and seven members who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The Commission shall be composed of all the individuals recommended by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, upon the recommendations of the majority leader of the House, and the minority leader of the House.

The members so appointed shall be entitled to receive such fees as are provided for in section 307(b) of this Act, and any expenses incurred in connection with such services as a holder of Federal office, may be used by such individual in his official capacity.

(3) The provisions of this Act, and of regulations promulgated thereunder, shall not be construed to apply to the conduct of the Federal Election Commission of its employees, or to the conduct of any individual or political committee, or any political committee, or any political party, which has not been so organized for Federal election purposes.

"Title V—Election of Members

"TITLE V—ELECTION OF MEMBERS

"Sec. 507. (b) (1) The members of the Commission shall be elected in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

(2) The members of the Commission shall serve terms of seven years, and terms of seven years, except that, of the members first appointed—
"(A) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending on the first occurring Monday after six months after the date on which he is appointed;
"(B) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending one year after the April thirtieth on which the term of the member referred to in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph ends;
"(C) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2)(A) shall be appointed for a term ending four years thereafter;
"(D) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending six years thereafter.
"(E) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2)(A) shall be appointed for a term ending four years thereafter;
"(F) one of the members appointed under paragraph (2)(B) shall be appointed for a term ending five years thereafter; and
"(G) one of the members not appointed under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term ending six years thereafter.

4. Members shall be chosen on the basis of their maturity, experience, integrity, impartiality, and good judgment. A member may be reappointed to the Commission only once.

5. An Individual appointed to fill a vacancy occurring other than by the expiration of a term shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member he succeeds. Any vacancy occurring in the office of member of the Commission shall be filled in the manner in which that office was originally filled.

6. The Commission shall elect a Chairman and a Vice Chairman from among its members for a term of two years. The Chairman and the Vice Chairman shall be affiliated with the same political party. The Vice Chairman shall act as Chairman in the absence or disability of the Chairman, or in the event of a vacancy in that office.

(b) A vacancy in the Commission shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the Commission. Four members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum. The Commission shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

(d) The Commission shall at the close of each fiscal year report the results of its activities to the President concerning the action it has taken; the names, salaries, and duties of all individuals in its employ; and its expenses. It shall make such further reports on the matters within its jurisdiction and such recommendations for further legislation as may appear desirable.

(e) The principal office of the Commission shall be in or near the District of Columbia, but it may meet or exercise any or all of its powers in any State.

(f) The Commission shall appoint a General Counsel and an Executive Director to serve at the pleasure of the Commission. The General Counsel shall be the chief legal officer of the Commission. The Executive Director shall be responsible for the administrative operations of the Commission and shall perform such duties as may be delegated or assigned to him from time to time by regulations or orders of the Commission. However, the Commission shall determine the making of regulations regarding elections to the Executive Director.

(g) The Chairman of the Commission shall act on all matters relating to the publication of such personnel as are necessary to fulfill the duties of the Commission in accordance with the provisions of title 5, United States Code.

(h) The Commission may obtain the services of experts and consultants in accordance with section 4109 of title 5, United States Code.

(i) In carrying out its responsibilities under this title, the Commission shall, to the fullest extent practicable, the assistance, including personnel and facilities, of the General Accounting Office and the Department of the Army. The Comptroller General and the Attorney General may make available to the Commission such personnel, facilities, and other assistance, including reimbursement, as the Commission may request.

(j) The provisions of section 7224 of title 5, United States Code, shall apply to members of the Commission notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (d) of section 7224 of title 5.

(k) The Commission shall transmit any budget estimate or request to the President or the Office of Management and Budget, or a copy of that estimate or request to the Congress.

(1) Whenever the Commission submits any legislative recommendations, or testimony, or comments on legislation requested by the Congress, it shall submit to the President or the Office of Management and Budget the procedural recommendations of the Commission. The President shall act upon such recommendations on the advice of the Commission.

(2) A civil penalty shall be assessed for a violation of any subparagraph of this section. In determining the amount of the penalty the Commission shall consider the person's history of previous violations, the gravity of the violation, the effect of the violation on the Federal Government and the public, and such other circumstances as the Commission may determine;

(3) A diagnosis by the Commission of a violation of any subparagraph of this section shall be made in writing, and shall be signed by the Chairman of the Commission.

(4) A diagnosis by the Commission of a violation of any subparagraph of this section shall be made in writing, and shall be signed by the Chairman of the Commission.

(5) The Commission may, in its discretion, prosecute any civil action to recover for a violation of this section.

(6) The Commission shall concurrently transmit a report of its order assessing any civil penalty to the appropriate district court of the United States. The report shall include a statement of the reasons for the action, the time to pay the penalty, and an assessment of the penalty. The Commission shall file such a report with the district court in which the action is brought. The district court shall enter a judgment enforcing the penalty. Any failure to comply with a judgment of the district court shall be punished by contempt of court.

(7) The provisions of sections 309 and 310 of title 18, United States Code, shall apply to any civil action to recover for a violation of this section.

(8) A civil penalty may be assessed by the Commission for any act or failure to act which is a violation of any subparagraph of this section.

(9) A notice of a civil penalty shall be given in writing by the Commission. The notice shall include a statement of the facts which formed the basis of the notice, the violation of the provisions of this Act, the amount of the penalty, and the time within which the person charged shall comply with the order of the Commission. Any failure to comply with an order of the Commission shall be punishable by the court as a contempt thereof.

(10) Any person may be punished by the non-compliance with a disclosure requirement of this section. Any such non-compliance with a disclosure requirement of this section shall be punished as a violation of this Act.
to the Commission upon the designation of any such committee.

(b) No political committee may be designated as the central campaign committee of more than one candidate. The central campaign committee, and each State campaign committee, shall furnish all reports required of it under section 304 (other than reports required under section 311(b)) to that candidate's central campaign committee at the time it would, but for this subsection, be required to furnish such reports to the Commission. Any report furnished to a central campaign committee under this subsection shall be, for purposes of this title, held and considered to have been furnished to the Commission at the time it was furnished to such central campaign committee.

(c) The Commission may, by regulation, require political committees receiving contributions or making expenditures in a State on behalf of a candidate to furnish the reports to that State campaign committee instead of reports to the central campaign committee of that candidate.

(d) Each political committee which is a central campaign committee or a State campaign committee shall receive all reports filed with or furnished to it by other political committees, and consolidate and furnish the reports to the Commission, together with its own reports and statements, in accordance with the provisions of this title and regulations prescribed by the Commission.

"CAMPAIGN DEPOSITORY"

SEC. 311. (a) Each candidate shall designate one or more National or State banks as his campaign depository. The central campaign committee of that candidate, and any other political committee authorized by him, shall make and keep on hand, on account of expenditures on his behalf, shall maintain a checking account at a depository so designated, and shall deposit all contributions received by that committee into that account. A candidate shall deposit any payment received by him under section 506 of this Act in the account maintained by his central campaign committee. No expenditure may be made by any such committee on behalf of a candidate or to influence an election except by check drawn on that account, other than petty cash expenditures as provided in subsection (b).

(b) A political committee may maintain a petty cash fund out of which it may make expenditures not in excess of $100 to any person in connection with a single purchase or transaction. A record of petty cash disbursements shall be kept in accordance with requirements prescribed by the Commission, and such statements and reports thereof shall be furnished to the Commission as it may require.

(c) A candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of President of the United States, may establish such additional accounts in each such State, which shall be considered by his State campaign committee, such accounts to be carried by the State campaign committee for the State and any other political committee authorized by him to receive contributions and to make expenditures on his behalf in that State, under regulations prescribed by the Commission, as a State campaign depository. The campaign depository of the candidate of a political party for election to the office of Vice President shall be the campaign depository designated by the candidate of that party for election to the office of President.

(d) Section 5114 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(60) Members (other than the Comptroller General, Federal Election Commission).

"(99) General Counsel, Federal Election Commission.

"(2) Section 5315 of such title is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(88) General Counsel, Federal Election Commission.

"(99) Executive Director, Federal Election Commission.

"(c) Until the appointment and qualification of all the members of the Federal Election Commission, and its General Counsel and under the transfer provided for in this subsection, the Comptroller General, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall continue to carry out their responsibilities under title I and title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 as such titles existed on the day before the date of enactment of this Act. Upon the appointment of all members of the Commission and its General Counsel, the Comptroller General, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall meet with the Commissioner and arrange for the transfer, within thirty days after the date on which all such members and the General Counsel are appointed, of all records, memos, memandus, and other papers associated with carrying out their responsibilities under title I and title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

"(d) Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by striking out "Comptroller General" and inserting "Commissioner".

"(e) Section 321 of Title 5 (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) is amended by striking out "Comptroller General" and inserting "Commissioner".

"(f) Section 312 (as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section) is amended by striking out "Comptroller General" and inserting "Commissioner".

Sec. 603. (a) Section 263(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to exclusion of gifts made to political committees (including transfers of funds and contributions by a committee) for the purpose of influencing the nomination or election of any candidate for elective office shall be construed to mean that a gift made on or after six days immediately preceding the date on which any election is held in which he is a candidate shall be deemed to have been made to that candidate unless the donor establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary or his delegate that—

(1) at the time he made the gift he could not reasonably expect to know which candidate would benefit from his gift, and
(2) at no time did he direct, request, or suggest to the committee, or to any person associated with that committee, that a particular candidate should receive any benefit from his gift.

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to gifts made on or after the first day in May during any year in which the elections of the President and Vice President are appointed.

TITLE VII—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY ELECTIONS

Sec. 701. (a) Each State which conducts a Presidential primary election shall conduct that election on a date occurring after the first day in May during any year in which the elections of the President and Vice President are appointed.

(b) For purposes of this section, the term—

(1) "Presidential preference primary election" means an election conducted by a State, in whole or in part, for the purpose of—

(A) permitting the voters of that State to express their preferences for the nomination of candidates for political parties for election to the office of President; or
(B) choosing delegates to the national nominating conventions held by political parties for the purpose of nominating such candidates; and

(2) "State" means each of the several States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

CONGRESSIONAL PRIMARIES

Sec. 702. (a) If, under the law of any State, the candidate nominated by a party for election to the Senate or to the House of Representatives is determined by a primary election or by a convention conducted by that party, the primary election or convention shall not be held before the first Tuesday in August. If a subsequent, additional primary election is necessary to determine the nominees of any political party in a State, that additional election shall be held within thirty days after the date of the first such primary election.

(b) For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "State" means each of the several States of the United States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the territory of Guam, and the territory of the Virgin Islands; and

(2) a candidate for election as Resident Commissioner to the United States, in the case of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or as Delegate to the House of Representatives, in the case of the territory of Guam or the territories constituting the Virgin Islands, is considered to be a candidate for election to the House of Representatives.
