Sec. 704. No Senator, Representative, Resident Commissioner, or Delegate shall make any solicitation of funds by a mailing under the frank, under section 1310 of title 39, United States Code.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I understand that this amendment is in the nature of a substitute to the pending bill; is that correct?

Mr. DOLE. That is correct.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, after discussing this matter with the manager of the bill and the sponsors of the amendment, I ask unanimous consent that there be a 5-minute limitation, with time to begin running tomorrow at the hour of 11 a.m., the time to be equally divided between the manager of the bill and the sponsor of the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I inquire if this is a complete substitute for the bill?

Mr. DOLE. The Senator from Alabama is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. 5 minutes would be sufficient.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Would the Senator make a suggestion?

Mr. ALLEN. We already have a limitation provided by rule XXXII. I should like to make inquiry, does the Senator leave out the public financing in his substitute?

Mr. DOLE. There is no public financing. The limitation is $35,000—cash contributions above normal financing. That is a departure from the pending legislation. I can discuss it tomorrow in 10 minutes to a side.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I will withdraw my request.

Mr. ALLEN. I would not object to 10 minutes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Fine.

Mr. ALLEN. But we should discuss it for more than 5 minutes.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire has not taken more than 2 minutes; therefore, I wish to object to the Senator's offer. Yet I wish that the time until the substitute amendment could be extended long enough so that I could have 5 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a one-half hour time limitation on the substitute amendment of the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), the time to be equally divided between the manager and the sponsor of the bill, with 5 minutes to be allocated specifically to the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. COTTON).

Mr. MANSFIELD. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COTTON. I thank the Senator from Montana very much.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be in order to call for the year and nay vote on the substitute amendment of the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask for the year and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NIMSMFEILD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be in order to call for the year and nays on the substitute amendment of the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), the distinguished Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) be recognized—because it had been his intention to call up one of his amendments tonight—so that it would be the pending business tomorrow.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, perhaps I should say that there was the understanding on the part of several of us that after morning business tomorrow, the disaster relief bill would be taken up, and that there would be a time limitation on that bill.

I wonder whether the distinguished majority leader would modify his request to provide that, following the disposition of the Dole amendment, the Senate proceed to the consideration of the disaster relief bill, and upon disposition of the bill, that the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) then be recognized.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That would be perfectly acceptable. I should have remembered that because I was told about it; but, in any event, it will be the next amendment after the Dole amendment in the future of a substitute.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent—and this request has been cleared with the leader of the Republican side, and with Senators BURRICK and DOMENICI; that time on any amendments thereto be limited to 30 minutes, equally divided and controlled in the usual form; and that the agreement be in the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I want to take one moment of my time this evening to commend our Senate leadership, the distinguished Senator from Montana (Mr. MANSFIELD) and the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania—
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE S 5565

(Mr. HUCK SCOTT), as well as the distinguished manager of the pending bill, Senator GARN, for their efforts over the period of the past few days in bringing the importance of this proposal to the attention of the Senate. Their conversations and assistance developed the vote for cloture and demonstrated that two-thirds of the Senate wants campaign reform legislation.

Many thought the battle for cloture could not be won. We know how far we had to come since the vote last week. And Senators MANSFIELD and HUCK SCOTT deserve great credit for so effectively turning the issue caused and discussed extensively. The time had come for decisive action, and thanks to the extraordinary efforts of the leadership, decisive action was taken by the Senate this afternoon. All of us interested in this issue should recognize the strong position our leaders took. Because of their efforts and initiatives, this legislation is now moving toward final passage, and all of us are in their debt. It is a tribute to the Senate's bipartisan leadership that we are able to see final Senate action on a bill that may well become the high water mark in the legislative record of the 93rd Congress, and a landmark reform that can bring honest elections to the people and integrity back to Government.

H.R. 13542—APPROVE Resolution of cloture, without objection, on the question of cloture on S. 1174—Resolution of cloture, without objection. The PRESIDING OFFICER. With the consent of Senator MANSFIELD, Mr. BYRD, the distinguished manager of the bill from Delaware (Mr. ROTTI) be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECONSIDERATION OF SENATOR ROTTI ON THURSDAY
Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, after the remarks of Mr. BYRD, the distinguished manager of the bill from Delaware (Mr. ROTTI) be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM
Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senate will convene at 10 a.m. tomorrow.

After the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order, the following Senators will be recognized, each to not exceed 15 minutes, in the order stated: Mr. MITTENBAUM, Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. BYRD, Mr. EIDEN.

At the conclusion of the orders above-mentioned, there will be a period for the transacting of routine business of not to exceed 15 minutes, with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

Upon the disposition of the Dole amendment, the unfinished business will be laid aside temporarily, and the Senator will proceed to consider the disaster relief bill, S. 3062, on which there is a time limitation of 2 hours, with a time limitation on any amendment thereto of 30 minutes, and with a time limitation on any debate motion or appeal of 10 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled in accordance with the usual form. Yea-and-nay votes may occur on amendments to that bill, and undoubtedly there will be a yea-and-nay vote on the final passage thereof.

Up until the disposition of the disaster relief bill, the Senate will resume consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3062, and the question at that time will be on the adoption of the amendment by Mr. CLARK. Yea-and-nay votes will occur on amendments to S. 3062, and on any question subsequent to the disposition of the Clark amendment, and hopefully the Senate will complete action on that bill tomorrow.

Mr. President, included in my statement of the program was the statement with regard to deatable motions and appeals, and I ask unanimous consent that the time related thereto as stated in the program be effectuated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT TO 10 A.M. TOMORROW
Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the previous order, that the Senate stand in adjournment until 10 a.m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and, at 6:15 p.m., the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 10, 1974, at 10 a.m.

TRIBUTE TO BOB ALLISON, SPORTS WRITER

Mr. FANNIN, Mr. President, it was with great sorrow that I learned of the death of one of America's finest sports writers, Bob Allison, the Phoenix Gazette reporter, who died last Friday, April 5, after a year-long fight against leukemia.

Bob Allison joined the Gazette in 1937, and he became a sports editor for the past quarter century. Tens of thousands of Arizonaans followed his columns as our area was transformed from a State in which high school football was the biggest sports event into a center of major sports activity comparable to almost any place in this Nation.

His skill was recognized nationally in 1964 when he was named "Sportswriter of the Year" by the National Association of Sportswriters and Sportscasters.

Mr. President, I know that Bob Allison had many fans and admirers all over America. I ask unanimous consent that articles from the Gazette and The Arizona Republic paying tribute to the great newspaperman be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From the Phoenix Gazette, Apr. 6, 1974]
Bob Allison, Gazette Sports Editor, Dies
Robert B. "Bob" Allison, who joined The Phoenix Gazette in 1937 as a combination news and sports writer, and served the newspaper more than 30 years as sports editor, died yesterday at Good Samaritan Hospital.

Allison, a Mesa native, had been suffering from leukemia since last spring. He was 57.

He was perhaps best known through his column, "Along the Way," the last edition of which appeared in Tuesday's Gazette.

He was named sports editor of The Gazette in 1947, and earned a reputation for fairness and clarity of expression which made "Along the Way" one of the most respected columns in the state.

The direct cause of death was listed as a cerebral hemorrhage.

 Eugene C. Pulliam, publisher of The Gazette and The Arizona Republic, said of Allison: "Bob was one of the most beloved men in the Gazette and Republic family."

"Almost any good thing that could be said about a man could be said about Bob Allison."

"He was a sweet man whose compassion always was enjoyed by his fellow employees. He knew sports as few writers did and loved to write about them. And the readers of the Gazette loved and appreciated what he wrote."

"Bob Allison was a man of great courage."

He battled his final illness with the same great spirit he showed as a combat soldier in World War II, and a strongly competitive sports editor.

"It is a heart breaking experience to have to say good-bye to such a great friend and loyal associate."

Allison was named "Sportswriter of the Year" in 1964 by the National Association of Sportswriters and Sportscasters.

His Gazette assignments, wide-ranging and varied, included such major sports assignments as the Indianapolis 500, the U.S. Open and U.S. Amateur Golf Championships, the World Series, heavyweight championship boxing, and major football events.

Allison was graduated from Mesa High School in 1933 and attended Arizona State Teachers College (now Arizona State University) where he became editor of the college newspaper, the predecessor of the State Press.

In 1938, Allison became editor of the Flagstaff Journal. The following year, he returned to the Phoenix area, and joined The Gazette as a combination all-purpose writer and sportswriter under sports editor Larry Grill.

World War II interrupted his sports career. Allison joined the U.S. Army in January 1944 and served in combat with the 80th Infantry Division in Europe until the Germans surrendered. His unit was then reassigned as occupational troops in the Philippines. He was discharged honorably as a staff sergeant in 1946.

He returned to The Gazette and was named sports editor the following year.

He was also a charter member and past president of the Phoenix Press Club, Sigma Delta Chi; a charter member of the Phoenix Press Club, a director of Golf Writers of America, a member of the Football Writers Association and a charter member of the Arizona Golf Hall of Fame.

He resided with his family at 2341 W. Keen Drive. Survivors include his wife, Mary; a daughter, Judy; two stepchildren, John Wilson and Mary Ann Emmons; a brother, Lew, and three grandchildren.

[From the Phoenix Gazette]

On Second Thought
Everybody always said Bob Allison was such a nice guy.

If I heard that once, I heard it a thousand times.

And every time, it seemed to irritate me a little bit more until finally I almost wanted to scream.

"He's not a nice man, dammit! He's a great..."

When other men might have given up, Bob Allison found the strength and courage to be at his typewriter, producingency, newsy sports columns which made him a reading favorite for over 25 years in Phoenix.

Colleagues and friends in Arizona were only part of a large legion of admirers. Sports editors around the country voted him the "Sportswriter of the Year" in 1964. Those who worked closely around Bob in a business made more grudging by deadlines knew him as a gentle leader who pitched in to handle his share of the copy deadline. A spacking new private office away from the hurried pace was not where Bob Allison hung his hat. He chose to be, at a typewriter near you.

Bob Allison the man, the friend, the craftsman—will be greatly missed. But the mark of excellence he gave to a generation of sportswriters will endure in the memories and skills of journalists for years to come.

SPECIAL CONFERENCE ON THE EFECTS OF THE ENERGY CRISIS ON TOURISM

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I would like to report to the Congress concerning final arrangements for the Special Conference on the Effects of the Energy Crisis on Tourism which has been arranged as a part of the hearings held by the Senate Commerce Committee Subcommittee on Foreign Commerce and Tourism on March 29 and April 1.

Tourism is as important to the American economy and the American people as any other industry. Because of this, as I announced at the Tourism Subcommittee hearings, this major Conference on Tourism was called to take place on May 3, 1974, in Orlando, Fla., tourist-oriented industries throughout Florida and other interested States, as well as representatives of the executive and legislative branches of Government, will participate in the Conference.

The purpose of this special conference is to delineate actions which can be taken by the national government, and the individual states, to reduce the impact of the energy crisis on the tourism industry, with special emphasis given to States such as Florida, which have highly developed tourism industries.

The conference will be composed of seven tourist-relate industry groups which will be charged with the responsibility of developing specific recommendations and suggestions to be delivered to Federal and State officials for subsequent implementation.

The urgent need for this conference can be readily understood by taking a brief look at the national crisis. In 1972 the tourism industry contributed approximately $16 billion to the U.S. economy and provided direct employment to approximately 1.6 million Americans.

In Florida, tourism is one of the largest single industries, accounting for 15 percent of the State's gross State product—OSP—in 1973. The energy crisis has hit this industry harder than any other. The tourism industry of Florida directly attributable to the energy crisis was 15 percent for Florida during the month of March alone.

The lifting of the Middle East oil embargo does not represent a solution to this crisis. We should indeed take advantage of the qualified relief due to the lifting of the embargo to plan now for future shortages.

Anyone desiring to participate in the Special Conference on the Effects of the Energy Crisis on Tourism should contact the office of Mr. Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20515.

Without objection, I ask that the program for the Conference be printed in the Record following this statement.

The following objection, the program was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

THE PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ABORUZER). The period for the transactiion of routine morning business is now concluded.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, which the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 3044, to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of presidential and primary election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), No. 1127 which the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows: Amendment No. 1127, proposed by the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), in the name of a substitute.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Time on this amendment is limited to 30 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) and the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), with the Senator from New Hampshire...

(Mr. COTTON) being guaranteed 5 minutes of that time.

Who yields time?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I yield such time as I may require.

As I indicated yesterday afternoon, we have gone full circle with public financing. At the outset, the promoters and the sponsors of public financing were, in effect, suggesting that we had to go to public financing to purify the political process, that those of us in politics must accept public financing in order to purify the political process, that for some reason, private contributions—even though they would require disclosure, even though we might set a spending ceiling, even though we would have strict reporting requirements—would lead to the suspicion that those who accepted private contributions, from whatever sources, were suspect, perhaps corruptible, or corrupt.

However, in the course of debate, we have seen a transformation. We now are asked to vote on the measure, unless there is significant change, to provide a mix—that is, some private financing and some public financing.

As I stated yesterday, it does appear that the original intent of the sponsors has been forgotten. We now hear the promoters of public financing suggesting that perhaps partly private and partly public money is all right, for some reason.

Mr. President, in fact, there is this great concern: What is the need for purifying the political process for those of us in politics, those who contribute, those who work in campaigns, or those who make contributions in kind, to purify the political process? I would say that there is one way or the other. There should be either total public financing, or there should be total private financing with adequate safeguards to make certain—perhaps as certain as we can—that there will not be these abuses which have been referred to over and over and over again, based on Watergate and based on elections outside of 1972.

Mr. DOLLY. Mr. President, the reform proposal would omit public financing, but it does provide reform. It does provide, in essence, what the Senate provided last year, and that is S 372 which is still awaiting action on the House side.

In addition, it has new provisions. It has an annual limitation on contributions of $5,000 for individuals and organizations. It has a limit on cash contributions of $50.

It addresses itself to the problem of so-called campaign "dirty tricks." There is a prohibition and penalty for violating the section. It does, as the other bills do, provide for certain changes in the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 with reference to reporting, disclosure, and registration of candidates and committees. It establishes a nonpartisan Federal Election Commission and provides assistance to the States to promote compliance with the act.

It deals with disclosure of financial interests—disclosure by Federal employees, and it covers the President, the Vice President, Members of Congress, candidates for Federal office, and any one in GS-16 or above, or anyone paid over $25,000 a year.

It provides additional incentives for small contributors by doubling the tax credit for contributions to $25 and the deduction to $100; and it provides that the Expenditure for the Watergate Committee that we are acting prematurely in the case of the bill before us. The hearings started on May 12, 1972, as I recall, and at that time by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. EATON) and the distinguished Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) that after the hearings were conducted, certain recommendations would be made, if necessary to clean up the political process. That report is not due to be filed until late May of this year. There have been no recommendations at all from the Watergate Committee.

Now, there appears to be some rush toward a judgment in the Senate of the United States. I am opposed to creating this committee, to look into political excesses and abuses and to recommend what we might do to correct those excesses and abuses. Now we find ourselves, perhaps based on the emotion of the moment, trying to pass legislation which permits the Members of Congress to dip into the Federal Treasury for the total cost or partial cost of their campaigns.

It is my belief that the American people have yet to understand the implications of "public financing." I suggest that this is just a foot in the door. I suggest that the last minute efforts to reduce the size of public financing to water it down, to reduce the size of public financing, really demonstrated their lack of commitment to public financing—or perhaps their awareness that the American people are beginning to understand the impact of public financing because of publicity it may have received during the past 2 or 3 weeks. It occurs to the junior Senator from Kansas that the American people are concerned about a great many things and the financial concerns of politicians are not high on their list. We addressed ourselves for about 7 days this year to whether or not we should have a pay raise. Now we are in the third week of addressing ourselves—and taking almost every minute of every day—to whether or not the Senator from Kansas and others should have their campaigns paid for out of the Public Treasury. I do not believe this is of any great interest to the American people. They want to purify the political process; but in doing that, I do not believe they ever expected the Federal Government to give every candidate for public office, for the House of Representatives or for the Senate, a blank check on the Federal Treasury.

Mr. President, an examination of America's legislative process might have foreseen a fairly sizable reaction to the spectacular political revelations of the past year or so. After all, the Freedom of Information Act, the Social Security Act, and a number of other important laws were sparked by major events or trends in our Nation's 200 years of development.

I question whether anyone could have predicted the direction that has been taken by many in Congress and numerous other observers in reaction to the bizarre and disturbing scandals which have recently swept Washington.

WATERGATE COMMITTEE CREATED

As the Senate will remember, its first response—and I believe an appropriate one—to the initial revelations of Watergate was the passage of Senate Resolution 60 establishing a committee on Presidential Campaign Activities. This committee was clearly and specifically charged "to conduct an investigation" and "to determine whether in its judgment any occurrence which may be revealed by the investigation and study indicate the necessity or desirability of the enactment of new congressional legislation to safeguard the electoral process..."

As every Senator knows this committee has devoted hundreds, perhaps thousands, of hours and several million dollars to fulfilling its mandate, and as every Senator should know the leadership of the select committee has been mindful of this legislative aspect of its responsibilities from the outset.

The opening statements of Senators EATON and BAKER on the committee's first day of hearings of May 17, 1973, are explicit in this regard.

"Senator EATON. Of necessity the committee's report will reflect the considered judgments of the committee on whatever new legislation is needed to help safeguard the electoral process . . ."

"Senator BAKER. This committee was created by the Senate to find as many of the facts, the circumstances and the relationships as we could, to assemble those facts into a coherent and intelligible presentation, and to make recommendations to the Congress for any changes in statute law or the basic charter document of the United States that may seem indicated."

When Senate Resolution 60 was considered, there were many strong and ringing statements in the Senate to the effect that a deliberate, thorough and unemotional investigation of Watergate was the appropriate and proper response for Congress to make in the face of the apparent abuses and irregularities which had been revealed to that point. The resolution was passed, and the committee was created, and substantial sums have been provided for its work.

Of course, the date for submission of the committee's report has been extended beyond the original February 28, 1974, date. But the reason for this exten-tion is the massive job of the committee, not procrastination or unreasonably delays on its part. And the Senator from Kansas has heard no suggestion that delay in submission of this report would in any way detract from the value of its legislative recommendations.

ACTION WITHOUT EXPERTS' RECOMMENDATIONS

So why should the Senate—after chartering a new committee and expending millions of the taxpayers' dollars to make its legislative recommendations as thorough and complete as possible—now pass a bill to deal with these matters before the select committee even has an opportunity to report? This is clearly illogical, it makes no sense as a matter of sound legislative procedure, and increases the danger that we will take mistaken or ineffective action.

If we are going to pass legislation without the benefit of our committees' recommendations, why bother having committees at all? Why not just save a lot of money and have the Senate sit as a committee of the whole and hold hearings and mark up bills and perform all the other jobs of our committee system?

UNTO DO "SOMETHING"

Of course, the immediate American reaction to any spectacular development is to "do something." Whether that development is Sputnik, a missile gap, an energy crisis or whatever, the American people and especially Congress seem to consider public action, the necessary and essential response.

That such action is not always required is a secondary consideration. And this point was clearly illustrated by the fact that the energy crisis came and went without any help from Congress a month or two back.

But that is another whole story that we do not have time to go into today. I cite it, though, as evidence that pure "action" is not always necessary to solve a crisis.

Sometimes, however, events do point to clear requirements for considered efforts. The abuses engaged in by monopolies cried out for the responses of the Sherman Act. Violence, disruption, and the weakness of what they had to offer. And I see this most desirably as a problem that giving away Federal tax dollars.

WHERE ARE WE GOING AFTER WATERGATE?

But a look at the current trend of events in the Senate today gives rise to a real concern as to whether we will see such a result in the wake of what has become known by the shorthand term "Watergate."

If this mass of unfortunate and deplorable happenings is held up against the "action" that is being generated in response to it, the American people must begin to wonder what is going on.

Of course, "Watergate" has come to mean many things to many people. But looking beyond the emotions, rhetoric, and other trappings that have been hung on it, it boils down to basic elements that can be described primarily in terms of the substantive criminal law. This is what the indictments, trials, and grand jury proceedings are all about. And any of the prosecutors who have had no trouble in matching title 18's provisions to the conduct that has come under their scrutiny.

UNNECESSARY STEPS

Public financing is unnecessary because, regardless of all the crocodile tears on Capital Hill to support the political system—candy, honestly and sufficiently—without milking the Federal Treasury. The campaigns of Barry Goldwater in 1968 and George McGovern in 1972 were available; that small contributors can be made responsive to some of the problems which do exist in politics.

Public financing is also objectionable, because it is an ineffective remedy for the ills of Watergate. In fact every public financing feature that is before the Senate today could have been in force for 5 years, and still the Democrats' headquarters would have been burgled, Ehrlich's psychiatrist's office would have been ransacked, cover-ups would have been attempted, lies would have been told—and Gerald Ford would still be Vice President of the United States.

Public financing is simply not a solution for human stupidity, individual criminality, or personal greed. Perhaps some might have felt better about the Watergate mess if the hundred dollar bills that were floating around had come from the U.S. Treasury instead of a Mexican bank. But I do not see how it would have made much difference to the overall outcome of the affair or to the criminal charges in question.

Other proposals have been made with regard to specific criminal code changes, and I support many believe they are responsive to some of the problems which do exist in politics.
A third point of objection I have to the policy of public financing is that it poses to the political system.

Admittedly, there are inequities in the present state of affairs. Incumbents have a number of advantages—both official and unofficial. Wealthy individuals and their families may be able to unfairly outspend an opponent in a campaign. Big business, labor and any number of special groups may be able to pump too much cash into the campaigns of their friends, and television, news magazines, and syndicated columnists may have too much influence over the information conveyed about candidates and their activities.

But is an artificial one-candidate, one-dollar formula of equality among candidates really an improvement over what we have today? I do not believe so.

When everybody gets the same amount of money, when everybody can only spend the same—what stresses will be put on the family as people jockey for new advantages?

Will it mean that the wealthy individual will quit his job 2 or 3 years ahead of the election? Will more "non-political" public campaign can gain the exposure required for a successful race? If so, where does this leave an equally or better qualified man, say a young lawyer with a wife and family to support, who also might want to throw his hat in the ring? How could he hope to compete against such an opponent on an equal dollar basis after a headstart like that?

As financial equality was imposed we would see more newsmen, astronauts, football players, and TV stars suddenly cashing in on their fame to become politicians?

And what about incumbents under such a system? How are you possibly going to give to some unknown first-time candidate equality with an incumbent Senator or Congressman—or an incumbent President? I suppose you could lock every Member of the Senate and House in his or her room and remember election year, but then what would prevent NBC from broadcasting the sounds they made trying to get out? Providing to be facetious, but this whole concept of forced equality in the political arena is a source of grave concern to me.

FORCED POLITICAL ACTIVITY

Looking at the constitutional side, is public financing a form of forced political activity which treads upon the first amendment's rights?

It is one thing to require a person to pay—through his taxes—for anything, the paraphernalia and frivolities of politics, which many men and women believe are wasteful and stupid.

But what of using a Catholic's tax dollars to further an advocate who calls for unlimited abortion? What of taking a black man's taxes to support an advocate of racial persecution? How many wheat farmers and other taxpayers spent to select a proponent of export quotas? How many parents would like to see their tax dollars put a probing candidate in the Senate?

I do not believe these questions can be answered by public financing is viewed in constitutional perspective.

Of course, the entire area of campaign reform treads on some very thin ice in regard to the First Amendment. Contribution limits, spending restrictions, even disclosure requirements, call in to play some basic principles of our Constitution which should be examined for shorter and closer. But I am most about all of these concerns I would rank public financing, for how can the Government force a person to support the advocacy of views in the political arena contrary to his economic and social interests or totally abhorrent to his most basic religious, ethical, or personal beliefs?

REFORM SHOULD BE PRESSED

Let me say, however, that, as I have indicated, there are areas of campaign reform that should be pressed.

Tax incentives for small contributors is one point. Stiffer criminal sanctions for voting fraud and so-called dirty tricks is another.

Overall, though, I believe the basic premises of the 1971 Campaign Act are still valid and should be maintained. Pulling down the barrier is the cornerstone of this approach. And coupled with effective contribution limits—which you recall we have not really had yet—and the incentives for shorter and less costly campaigns, I believe the American people can be provided with a much stronger and better political system. And this can be accomplished without doing anything to the tax load of the American people of tampering with our basic rights as free citizens.

In this regard, I invite the Senate's attention to a recent Reader's Digest article by one of our most distinguished and respected former colleagues, Senator John Williams of Delaware. In a few brief pages Senator Williams, in the manner which characterized his great service to the Senate, set forth the basic requirements for constructive and effective campaign reform.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of his article be printed in the Record at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

After Watergate: A Plan To Control Campaign Bankrolling (By John J. Williams)

It will probably be a long time before we can fully assess the impact of Watergate and its revelations on American life. Indeed, at this point we cannot foresee what more may yet emerge from continuing investigations. But from the evidence already available, it is clear that political corruption in this country is not just a moral problem. It is one that imperils the very survival of our democracy.

There is, of course, no magic solution to the problem of corruption, and we should be wary of any law that can be expected to offer one. But the recent scandals do illuminate one area where reforms are both possible and essential: the criminal and clandestine political acts connected with Watergate were financed and made possible by contributions, many of them secretly and illicitly obtained. Equally important, the flow of massive contributions into both parties has created the impression among millions of Americans that the government of the United States can be bought and sold.

To restore public confidence in the integrity of government, we need to end the dependence of our candidates on special-interest contributions. This is a significant extent by reducing the costs and changing the methods of campaign financing. I believe there are reasonable steps that can be taken toward this goal.

In short, the campaign. Political campaigns cost so much, in part, because they last so long. The custom of prolonged campaigning originated at a time when much of our country was populated and a candidate had to travel by train or even on horseback for many months to communicate with the electorate. This tradition has been made obsolete by the jet airplane, television and other mass media. Yet our campaigns still drag on needlessly, consuming vast amounts of money and providing endless repetition.

I recall that after President Eisenhower once spoke in my state of Delaware, I complimented him on his speech. "Well, Senator," he replied, "the first time I made that speech I thought it was okay. The next ten times I made it, I thought it was okay. Now I've made it so many times I think it's all right!"

I doubt that there is a politician alive who has not felt that way or who could not tell that he could be tiring to the public. How long will he be known after a two or three months. Thus, I believe that Congress should fix a uniform, nationwide date for the primaries and nominating conventions to affect all federal offices. By commencing the primary campaigns in early August, and the general-election campaigns in early October, we would at once, I think, sharply lower the cost of politics. At the same time, we would improve the quality of political discourse and focus more public interest in it.

2. Grant free television time and mailing rights. Candidates in the seven Congressional districts in and around Detroit usually pay about $2000 for one minute of prime network television time. With costs in other metropolitan areas—New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Philadelphia—even higher, it is not surprising that candidates for federal posts had to spend $39 million for TV and $28 million for radio in 1972.

In urging free time for legitimate candidates, it is important to recognize that television and radio stations do make handsome profits because they have been given public property—namely, transmission facilities—of which the public is largely an alienated. And it seems to me only fair that the stations partially repay the public at election time by providing broadcast air time at the means of free communication of their political views. At the same time, the present law, which requires stations to give equal time to anyone claiming to be a candidate, whether he has any serious credentials or not, should be repealed.

And I think it is important to promulgate criteria by which state-election officials can certify bona-fide candidates for national office. It is perhaps customary the stations must allot to them. This free access to broadcast media would greatly diminish the operation of the largest item in a campaign budget.

The dependency of candidates on outside contributions could be further lessened by allowing them to mail one or two political statements to all voters free of charge. Presently prevailing printing and mailing costs are such that such actions are prohibitively expensive. A Senate candidate running in California would most likely need to spend at least $1.1 million to respond with a mail piece to every registered voter in the state. In Ohio, the total would be more than $500,000. In New Jersey, $400,000; in Georgia, $250,000. 473
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

Incumbent Congressmen and Senators are already permitted to make mass mailings of "non-political" material that promotes their political careers. By giving challenge candidates limited mailing privileges, we would level the political scales now tipped in favor of those with the greatest financial resources. The present law makes it illegal to exceed the legal limit of $50,000 in contributions--including both personal loans--by banks for political purposes, a ban that was reaffirmed by laws enacted in 1925 and 1971. Congress applied the same prohibition to unions in 1943 and 1947. But corporations and unions--as well as both major political parties--have flouted these laws.

3. Get Big Business and Big Labor out of political bankrolling. The law has long recognized, in theory at least, that it is wrong to allow corporations and unions to trade votes through political donations. As far back as 1907, Congress prohibited business contributions exceeding $100,000 to the Republicans in 1969. There have been cut hrytions to prominence the injurious in 1971. Since the 1960s, it has been difficult to influence Congress by legislation limiting these interests.

For the unions, many, by a variety of measures, extract "voluntary contributions" from those whose "fixed contributions," regularly deducted from each member's paycheck along with his dues, go into political campaigns by union bosses. In the 1968 and 1972 elections, millions of rank-and-file members disagreed with the political candidates to whom the dollars went. But they had no voice in the matter. Unions further aid favored candidates by financing "political education" and "voter registration" drives. Although nonprofits in non-campaign areas are actually ultra-partisan because they are conducted only in those areas and among these voters known to favor the union leaders' candidates. Author Theodore H. White notes in 1968 unions registered 4.4 million voters, distributed 113 million political leaflets, supplied 72,225 house-to-house canvassers, and on Election Day deployed 54,500 volunteers for political purposes.

4. Make small contributors the backbone of political financing. While reducing the costs of campaigns, we should endeavor to spread the legitimate costs that do remain among as many citizens as possible. Technically, present laws make it illegal for anyone to give more than $3000. However, a donor may contribute to unlimited numbers of local committees established solely to aid a candidate. Thus, big contributors continue to supply a disproportionate share of campaign funds.

Recognizing that candidates should not become fetters to a comparatively small donor, Congress is currently considering a proposal to have the federal government fund campaigns for national offices. Worthy as the aims of this proposal are, I think such a plan is both undesirable and impractical. First, the federal financing would make political parties unnecessary to the people. Guaranteed millions of dollars from the government treasury, a party could pursue extremist candidates year after year simply because it would not have to go to the people for financial support. In areas that are predominantly Democratic or Republican, candidates of the less-favored party would receive tax funds vastly disproportionate to their popular support.

The federal-financing proposal also seeks to impose a ceiling on overall campaign expenditures, thus limiting the amount a candidate may pay and by restricting individual campaign expenditures to $100. In reality, this subsidy scheme could easily lead to even costlier campaigns, with the candidates simply adding on another layer of money. While candidates themselves could not exceed specified limits, so-called "public interest" organizations from using their own money to promote politicians of their choice. Nor could a wealthy office seeker be kept from promoting himself before he officially became a candidate.

As an alternative to federal financing, I think we should adopt an idea first advocated by President Kennedy. Its objective is to stimulate myriad small contributions, which would leave candidates unobligated to a few big donors. Such stimulus could be provided by allowing taxpayers a 30-cent tax credit on donations up to $3000. Thus, if a man earning $10,000 and a man earning $100,000 a year contributed $200 each, they would be treated equally--each would receive a tax rebate of $60.

Similarly, to encourage large contributions, Congress should bar a candidate from receiving money through more than one committee and prohibit anyone from giving away more than $50,000--will stiff tax penalties and jail terms for those caught cheating. Candidates founded upon the spontaneous, truly voluntary support of many small contributors would be the most likely to produce the best political representation.

5. Enforce the campaign-funding laws To properly enforced, existing statutes are, by and large, adequate to deal with the individual instances of dishonesty that will always be with us. Thus, no new laws were necessary during the past two years to successfully prosecute former Vice President Spiro T. Agnew; Sen. Daniel Brewster of Maryland; Representatives Cornelius Gallagher of New Jersey and John Dowdy of Texas; and former Illinois Governor Otto Kerner. However, the often existing laws have not been enforced.

To provide for the reforms that inevitably will be enacted, Congress should establish a federal election commission composed of equally of Democrats and Republicans. The commission should assure that future scandals will not be covered up, no matter who is involved, will of itself help reduce public campaign expenditure.

Watergate has damaged the country, and it would be foolish to pretend otherwise. And beyond Watergate we see flaws, inadequacies and multiplying problems in many sectors of our society. But, for all its defects, our democracy is still worth preserving and improving. Thus, it is vital that the Congress begin now to clean our politics and thereby to revitalize our faith in the democratic process. Thus, in my present view, Congress does not act convincingly and effectively in the coming months, the public will not support us. November of all of us can exercise the old-fashioned American recourse of replacing them with men who will.
We have a clear choice, when the vote comes on this substitute, as to which way we wish to proceed.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

I ask unanimous consent that the name of the distinguished Senator from Colorado (Mr. Durbin) be added as a co-sponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOLE. The Senator from New Hampshire is allotted 5 minutes.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas to add my name as a co-sponsor of the amendment.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the Senator from New Hampshire be added as a co-sponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, I will try to crowd into 5 minutes a few comments on this bill. I felt it appropriate to do so when the substitute measure of the Senator from Kansas was before the Senate.

During the time I served in the State legislature of my State, we worked long and hard to devise a corrupt practices act that would be as effective and as upright as we could bring about in the matter of keeping campaigns clean and above board and in protecting the rights of those who are not heavily endowed with this world's goods to have an opportunity to run for office. During those years, I learned some practical lessons I have never forgotten.

There is no question whatever that we want to do anything that is practical and effective and in our power to satisfy the people of this country and to keep our elective process as clean as possible. But the matter of public financing of political campaigns, in the opinion of this Senator, who has completed 50 years of service—in the State legislature and various State offices, including 28 years of service in Congress—is a very impractical and ineffective approach; and it is a wasteful and dangerous approach. Despite the very obvious sincerity of others—and I respect the opinions of every Senator on this matter—I am steadfastly against it.

I commend the Rules Committee, under the leadership of the distinguished Senator from Nevada and the distinguished Senator from Kentucky and others, for a job well done, considering what they had to work with and what many Members of the Senate seem to be demanding. They have come up with as reasonable a bill as possible. However, in the last analysis, the only way to effectively purify and keep elections clean is exposure. It cannot be done effectively any other way, in the opinion of this Senator.

We are hearing on every side—and we are justly hearing on every side—about opening up so that the people may know. Everybody wants to teleview the proceedings on the floor of the Senate and in the various committees, and they want the people to know.

The way to achieve pure elections is to have the people know. That is provided in this substitute and I shall support the substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 5 minutes have expired.

Mr. COTTON. The 5 minutes I had went by quickly. May I have a little more time?

Mr. DOLE. I have a minute and a half. The Senator may have 1 minute of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rules, once cloture has been voted the Senator cannot yield his time to some other Senator.

Mr. COTTON. I have an hour of my own. I ask that it be taken out of that hour. I do not want to crowd anyone else in the debate.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to use 5 minutes out of my hour, beyond the time that was ordered by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I would permit that 5 minutes to be charged against any other Senator's time, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CANNON. What I am trying to do is save time. I do not want to charge against any other Senator's time 5 minutes out of that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would advise the Senator that the parliamentary situation is that although the Senator from Nevada has charge of 12.5 minutes on this amendment, that comes out of the Senator's 1 hour under the cloture rule. Five minutes of that 12.5 minutes could be transferred by unanimous consent to the Senator from New Hampshire and that additional 5 minutes would then be charged to the Senator from New Hampshire's 1 hour under cloture.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, is it not proper for me to ask unanimous consent for 5 minutes or even 1 minute from my own hour, and that it not be charged to the time allotted to this measure?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, it can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. COTTON. Then I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COTTON. Not more than 10 minutes to be taken out of my hour and not charged to either the Senator from Nevada or the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would ask: Does that mean an ad-contribution to taxpayer's money to finance political campaigns, because if we have strong laws that put an end to the taxpayer's money to finance political campaigns, because if we have strong laws that put an end to their own campaigns, maintaining the barrier against labor unions contributing and various other safeguards, there is no need to use single precious taxpayers' dollars. If we did not have these restrictions, so many crying human needs we must satisfy.

We will soon be working on the situation of people facing the tremendous cost of catastrophic illness of people who desperately need medical care and every dollar we take is taken from places where dollars are desperately needed. We can place limits from now to kingdom come, we can say that there shall not be a multiplicity of committees, and we can put all these restrictions in, but there is always a way around every one of them. It just drives campaigns underground. The keynotes today is exposure—let the public know. If they know—not after the election, but periodically—then they can know what is going on and they can take precautions to prevent certain happenings.

Those are the reasons why I shall support the substitute, even though I would like to go further than it goes. I think that even after the election there are the candidate for the Senate or the House of Representatives would force the candidate to have a full-time or almost full-time accountant to handle the work. My answer is that the events of recent years have been such that any man running as a candidate on a statewide basis or from any congressional district, must have the assurance of the public that he can be trusted and will have the constant assistance of an expert in accounting, and I would not want to run for office myself without such an accountant.

Another reason in favor of frequent accountings rather than limited on expenditures is that the accountings are the fairest and most effective method, since in some States television is an important and effective way of campaigning while in other States it is entirely impractical—sometimes because no station reaches the entire State—and consequently direct mailings or some other methods have to be resorted to by the candidate.

All measures that have been adopted in the last few years seems to have to present various new difficulties for some candidates in certain sections. But any way you slice it, artificial limitations encourage evasion of the law, while rigid requirements of disclosure are the people under penalty of being declared ineligible for office would, although not perfect, in my opinion be the best way, and I think the only way to accomplish our purpose.

Mr. President, I hope the substitute will be adopted, although I again commend the Rules Committee and the leadership of the Senator from Nevada for a constructive bill well done; but I cannot vote for the bill and I cannot vote to waste taxpayers' money in politics when it cannot be done effectively. That, in a mullah, is what I wanted to say on the whole bill. I thank both Senators for the cooperation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada has 121/2 minutes on this amendment; the Senator from Kansas has 1 1/2 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back my time.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, as modified. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. McELHINNEY), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. Fulbright), the Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. InOuye), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. Long), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. Mcgee), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Stennis) are necessarily absent.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the order limit the time placed on an amendment, going into the half-hour on the amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. If the Senate will withhold that, may I say the purpose is—

Mr. PASTORE. May we have order, please, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, the point is well taken. The Senate will come to order. Senators are entitled to hear this colloquy. Senators and staff members conversing will remove themselves from the Chamber.

The Senate from Montana may proceed.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The purpose in making this request at this time is that now we will proceed to the tornado disaster relief bill. There will be a number of amendments applied to that measure, and we will stay with it until it is concluded, even though there happens to be a time limit we will go back on the pending business.

Under the recess resolution, the Senate goes out at the conclusion of business on Friday. If any Senator would stick, but if it would be possible to get the Senate out on Thursday, I would appreciate it just as much as any other Member.

With that explanation, the Senator from Ohio may reserve his right to object.

Mr. TAFT. Thank the majority leader for his explanation. Do I understand correctly that, should this unanimous consent request be agreed to, each Senator would be limited to 15 minutes in discussing any amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is correct, but he would have the rest of his time under the cloture rule to discuss the amendment, and the amendment would not be voted upon until he has completed his time under the cloture rule. He may apply it to just the amendment.

Mr. TAFT. Well, when would the vote on the amendment occur? If the amendment is taken up, and the Senator talks for 15 minutes, and then desires to take his additional 45 minutes, would he be able to take his additional 45 minutes before the vote?

Mr. MANSFIELD. No, because in accordance with the agreement the time on the amendment would be limited.

Mr. TAFT. That is my understanding. I have an amendment pending on which I would like to have an hour reserved.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I would be willing to make an exception on the same basis as in the case of the Senator from New York, who is unavoidably absent.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I think that could be taken care of by the Senator discussing generally what he intends to do for the remainder of the 45 minutes, and then going into the half-hour on the amendment. He does not need to call it up, in other words, until the end of the 45 minutes.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator from Ohio does not believe that would be appropriate with regard to the procedures that might arise.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Then I would be willing to make an exception on behalf of the Senator from Ohio as well as the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. Buckley).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, the Senator from Montana is not saying that an exception is made to the 1 hour under the cloture rule?

Mr. MANSFIELD. No.

Mr. BROCK. If the Senator from Ohio wants to spend his entire 1 hour on one amendment, that would be his privilege, but that would be all.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is right. In his case that is true, yes.

Mr. BROCK. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered, that there be a 30 minutes time limitation on each amendment except for the amendments of the Senators from New York and the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PASTORE. I would assume that the quorum call would occur with some rapidity. I wonder if we could have a unanimous-consent agreement to confine the voting period to 10 minutes on each of these amendments. I think sometimes we just sit here for 5 minutes waiting for the 15-minute time to run out for the call of the roll.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, if the Senator will defer that request until we can get the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Packwood) to the floor, who has asked that he be present when such a request is made, I would have no objection.

I would like, if the majority leader will yield, to clarify something else. Am I correct that the time taken for the votes on amendments is not taken from the time of any Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. And upon any Senator noting the absence of a quorum, the right to object would come from the time of the Senator who makes the point of order, is that correct?

Mr. MANSFIELD. No, a quorum call under this circumstance, or a vote, would not be charged to any Senator.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Then it is understood that the quorum calls in no event are charged to any Senator; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no unanimous consent request pending at this time.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the order limit the time on a motion to recommit?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, the request was as to amendments only, and not as to motions to recommit.

Mr. MANSFIELD. But if there is a motion to recommit, I would ask that... there be a time limitation on the same basis.

Mr. STEVENSON. I would have to object to that limitation, and would hope an exception would be made if such a motion is time when the time to be equally divided between the mover and the sponsor of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SENATE RESOLUTION 308—RESOLUTION TO PERMIT SENATOR BELLMOND TO APPEAR AS A WITNESS IN U.S. DISTRICT COURT IN OKLAHOMA

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I sent to the desk a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration, notwithstanding the order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the resolution.

The assistant legislative clerk read the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 308) was considered and agreed to.

With its preamble, the resolution reads as follows:

Whereas, Honorable Henry L. Bellmong, a member of this body, has been served with a subpoena to appear as a witness before the United States District Court of the Western District of Oklahoma, to testify at 9:30 o'clock a.m. on the Sixteenth day of April, 1974, in the case of United States v. Leo Winters, et al; and

Whereas, under the Standing Rules of the Senate, no Senator may absent himself from the service of the Senate without leave of the Senate: Therefore, be it Resolved, that Honorable Henry L. Bellmong is granted leave to appear as a witness before the United States District Court of the Western District of Oklahoma; and that Senator Bellmong is not sitting in the Senate at the time this Senate is in session; and be it further resolved, that a copy of this Resolution be submitted to the Senate.

CORRECTION OF A VOTE

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, on April 9, 1974, I was present and voted "Yes" on an amendment offered by Senator Kennedy to an amendment of Senator Stevenson. It is vote number 129. The Record indicates that I was not present. I therefore ask that the Record be corrected to reflect my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SURDICK. Mr. President, the Disaster Relief Act Amendments of 1974 come before the Senate in the tragic shadow cast by the tornadoes that have left five states in the United States last week. The destruction and hardship that followed in the wake of these storms has aroused the sympathy of the Nation and I know that the hearts of each one of us go out to the people who have been so sorely tried. Indeed, the realization that the bill before us is of profound significance not simply in legal terms, but in human terms, must weigh...

certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CASE) is recognized to call upon an amendment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for 1 minute?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

MEDIA POLLS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I have been informed that at least one Senator—perhaps others—has been contacted by a media organization as to what his position would be if an event of extraordinary nature occurred in the Senate. That Senator raised some question about a procedure. I want to join that Senator and to express the hope that, although under the first amendment of the Constitution the media has that right, there would be no precedent, so that it would be as open-minded as possible and as free from pressures of this kind as necessary.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, will the distinguished majority leader yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I think it was nearly a year ago that I expressed much the same sentiment at a conference of members of my party. I would join in what the distinguished majority leader has said—that it is the request of the leadership, subject to a Senator's own right to say what he thinks on any subject. I request that they would defer expressing an opinion as to what they may or may not have in mind when, as, and if we might be confronted by those situations, and I would hope that they would respect poll seeking information, in their own interest as well as in the interest of the dignity of the Senate, because this is not a ball game; it is not a contest; it is not something on which ideas should be wagered. It is an extremely serious matter, and it is of a nature which would well be to avoid any challenge or question in the future based on what some Senator has said. Having said that, I realize that Senators may say what they wish, but I feel obliged to say what I said a year ago.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator is correct. The media can do what they wish under the first amendment, but the Senator's position if and when such situations arise should be as open-minded as possible and as free from pressures of this kind as necessary. So far, I am very proud of the way the Senate has conducted itself, and that includes each and every single Member of the Senate.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I am, too.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:30 A.M.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until the hour of 9:30 a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATORS TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order tomorrow, the following Senators be recognized, each for not more than 15 minutes and in the order stated: Senators BIDEN, ROTH, MUSKIE, HATHAWAY, CLARK, BIDEN AGAIN, STEVENS, NELSON, JAYTS, HARKER, EVIN, MONDALE, NICHOLSON, SENNIS, and ROBERT C. BYRD.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, the Senate apparently is on the brink of passing a campaign financing bill designed to fool the American people into thinking that it solves the major problems in our political system. Nothing could be further from the truth.

In addition to the many other shortcomings, this bill fails completely to advance any remedy for the illegal and undesirable activities of unions in the campaign process.

Unions make their greatest impact by providing services for their chosen candidates for office. These services are provided by union staff, union supplies, and union equipment paid for out of union dues.

The great concern we have heard in the debate over campaign reform involves the amount of money donated to candidates, and the money these candidates spend.

This money simply is used to purchase campaign services on behalf of the candidate.

If we are going to prevent people or organizations from donating money to candidates, then it follows that we must prevent the donation of services which are the equivalent of money.

Unions buy political short-circuit the system by providing campaign workers who are on union payrolls, union computers, union presses, union vehicles, union phones, and other such services. These services are the same as money to the candidate.

If it is illegal for someone to donate money to candidates to purchase these services, why then is it not illegal for anyone or any organization to donate equivalent services? We are talking about services that are worth tens and hundreds of thousands of dollars—even millions in some national campaigns.

Mr. President, I am deeply concerned about what is happening here. Union leaders are seeking a "veto-proof" Congress, and they are going to great lengths to accomplish this goal.

As a Republican, I have a vested interest in anything you would expect me to be concerned. What worries me is that most Democrats apparently fail to see the great danger here. We face the situation where neither the Democrats nor the Republicans will be in charge of the Congress—it will be a few union leaders who will be able to call all the shots if they are successful in winning the strong control of Congress we seek.

Our Government has functioned well over the decades and centuries because we have sought to provide a balance of all the interests in our society. Today we are in great danger of providing the unions—which represent only about 10 percent of the American people—a stranglehold on our Government. This legislation would aid them in gaining this stranglehold.

Mr. President, the union leaders have bragged that they have the most powerful political machine in the Nation, and I for one believe them. They are very powerful because they not only failed to restrain them, but seems to encourage them to exercise an influence far in excess what is good for the country. An article in today's Wall Street Journal demonstrates very clearly how far the unions are going.

We have heard arguments that when a candidate accepts $1,000 or $5,000 from a contributor there is a danger that he becomes indebted to that contributor and thus loses independence and objectivity once in office.

What then, happens when a candidate gets $37,000 or about 84 percent of his funds from a union, plus union services that probably are worth double or triple the cash? How objective can he be, if elected, when it comes to considering legislation which has his union's approval of COPE, AFL-CIO, or the like?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article from the Wall Street Journal be reprinted in the Record:

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

POLITICS AND LABOR—UNIONS MAKE BIG BID TO ELECT A CONGRESS THAT IS VETO-PROOF (By James C. Hynatt)

SAGINAW, MICH—Bob Traxler had only five minutes to make his pitch when he appeared before AFL-CIO political leaders this year to promote his bid for Congress. So he kept his message short.

"I told them I had come with a tin cup, a white cane and dark glasses," he recalls. "I said, 'Send money.'"

They have. Unions have provided over $37,000 so far. And lots of help besides. For years of previous service such as Mr. Traxler, labor's goal of electing a "veto-proof Congress" this year means getting generous amounts of money, manpower, organizational talent and the other aid that can make the difference in a close race.

Mr. Traxler does have to wrestle with many worries as he strives for victory in a special House election next Tuesday. For one thing, he is seeking to become the first Democrat elected from Michigan's Eighth Congressional District since the Depression. For another, he is running in a district that gave the last Congressman, Republican James Harvey, a 92% victory in 1972. But winning labor’s active help isn’t something he must worry about.

The list of unions whose political arms are supporting his campaign reads like a labor Who’s Who: the Machinists, the United Transportation Union, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the Retail Clerks, the National Education Association—chapters for Electrical Workers, the Firefighters, the Meatcutters and the Communication Workers.

The Members Pitch In

Individual union members are pitching in hard for the Democrat. Wallace Butch Warner, regional director of a Communications Workers local, has taken leave from his job in Saginaw to help coordinate labor’s efforts in the Traxler campaign; a telephone hot line from the political to the union headquarters speeds appeals for campaign manpower.

Jim Chaio, a tool and die maker, is assigned full-time by the Allied Industrial Workers to drum up Traxler support; he figures he has helped fly by union aid 20 to 26 plants” making his pitch. Several hundred UAW members have helped out, putting up yard signs, sending out thousands of leaflets and distributing literature.

Of the $1,600 contributed to the Traxler cause through last Thursday, about 44% came from labor groups. The largest single donation, $12,000, was made by the UAW, and one official of that union indicated that might cough up another $10,000 or so if necessary.

Labor’s activity here, however effective in the Traxler race, may be a springtime warm-up for the heavy politicking that unions are planning for next fall. Union strategy will figure that more than 70 House elections will be close enough for labor to influence the results. Already, labor’s war chests are bulging, and union men are hesitant on election “veto-proof” Democratic Congress.

Reaping Dividends

The unions’ intensive participation in three other special House elections this year has reaped dividends. Winning Democrats in Johnstown, Pa., Cincinnati and Grand Rapids are listed as heavy labor backers. Labor’s efforts have Republicans worried, and they are trying to turn union politicking to their own advantage.

President Nixon has scored a telling win by his successful presentation of rail grade crossing and school bus safety programs as “veto-proof” Democratic Congress.

The Watergate Weakness

Labor analysts believe that Mr. Nixon’s Watergate weakness gives them a real chance to concentrate on the “veto-proof” theme and make the next Congress “veto-proof.” Such a Congress, union men say, would override the President and enact bills closing many tax “loopholes” and imposing tighter controls on multinational corporations and energy-producing companies. Enactment of a labor program of national health insurance also is a top labor goal.

While Democrats would need to elect nine more Senators and 44 more House members to gain a two-thirds edge in Congress, labor isn’t setting its goal quite that high; it can usually count on some Republican support. To win one or two more “veto-proof” seats in the Senate, an AFL-CIO spokesman says. He adds that George Meany, the federation president, is “sure there’s one way we can think we can do.” (Most politicians believe that labor’s goal is achievable.) In the House, however, the belief is that Democrats probably will make a net gain of only three seats or so.)

Election “veto-proof” Congress, of course, doesn’t mean supporting Democrats only. Republican Sens. Richard Schweicker and Jacob Javits have labor’s backing, and so do several GOP House members, going a speech last week to a building-trades rally. AFL-CIO lobbyist Andrew Biemiller warned against “knocking off good friends of ours on the Republican side of the aisle.”

But Democrats are the big beneficiaries of labor’s aid, and the unions have a lot to gain by spreading around their spending. One union political action group had $5,032,896 on hand, reports Common Cause, the self-styled people’s lobbying group. This year’s campaign contributions. The sum is about equal to unions’ reported political spending in the presidential race.

This year’s early war chest includes $1 million amassed by several maritime unions—“We’re going to reward our friends and punish our enemies,” said Mr. Calhoun, president of the Marine Engineers’ Beneficial Association) and $717,000 gathered by the UAW.

And the push is on for more political cash. COPE, the AFL-CIO’s Committee on Political Education, the political action arm of the federation, has issued a “veto-proof” request for a $2 voluntary contribution from each union member. While the federation usually asks for “veto-proof” money, there are indications that COPE fund raising is more successful this year, one AFL-CIO official says.

The Machinists Union, which raised $266,297 last year, is planning a “special $2-per-member drive” to aid the objective of $300,000. Vice President Gerald Ford has attacked union outsiders for taking over Democrats’ campaigns and injecting huge sums of money into the special House campaigns. James Sparling, the GOP candidate here, charges: “The AFL-CIO is making use of the Eighth District seat. Cost is no object; money is no object.”

Without question, labor’s involvement is crucial if Mr. Traxler is to win a second election. And for all concerns, this is no ordinary political event.

President Nixon will appear in the Saginaw district today, a development that dismay some Republicans and delights many Democrats. Certainly the contest here will be watched as a referendum on the Nixon presidency, and the result will be seen as a harbinger of autumn election sentiment.

The Watergate Weakness

Labor analysts believe that Mr. Nixon’s Watergate weakness gives them a real chance to concentrate on the “veto-proof” theme and make the next Congress “veto-proof.” Such a Congress, union men say, would override the President and enact bills closing many tax “loopholes” and imposing tighter controls on multinational corporations and energy-producing companies. Enactment of a labor program of national health insurance also is a top labor goal.
"door-to-door blia"; several hundred volunteers came from outside the district to help.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, now that the Senate has invoked cloture on the campaign reform bill, S. 3044, and turned back repeated efforts to weaken its provisions, I am hopeful we can send a strong bill to the House of Representatives and provide the country with at least one constructive effort to remedy the disastrous effect of Watergate on our body politics.

In these brief remarks, I wish not only to urge support for the committee bill, but also to respond to several disturbing themes which I have heard during the past few weeks of debate.

It is not necessarily true that he who pays the political piper will always call the tune. Nevertheless, it is hardly reassuring to the average citizen to know that big donors at least have access to go to the White House, or were unrelated to the corruption of public confidence in their elected leaders.

During debate on this bill, a companion theme has emerged: "Let's stop wallowing in campaign reform" we are told, "and let's get on with the Nation's business."

Mr. President, I am confident that this will meet with as singular a lack of success in diverting the American people as has its predecessor. For the public understands well that the advancement of a representative Government—free from both the actual danger and the appearance of undue influence—is very much its business.

Sure, I can go to bed at night with a fair degree of confidence that my votes are sensitive to the issues of policy such as raising adequate resources.

But it is the single most constructive step we can take right now to minimize the pressures for illegal actions, to reduce the financing of campaign regulations which generate their own corrupting momentum, and to help restore the essential public confidence in Government.

As Senator MANSFIELD observed in his state of the Congress address:

"We shall not finally come to grips with the problems except as we are prepared to pay for the public business of elections with public funds."

Now let us look at the bill before us. Under the leadership of the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee (Mr. CANNON) and the chairman of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections (Mr. PELL), this committee has provided a comprehensive, fair yet far-reaching bill.

The committee report indicates great sensitivity to the issues of policy such as the impact of its proposal on our party system. S. 3044 incorporates the provisions for expensive campaigns.

S. 3044 incorporates the provisions for spending and contribution limits and a strong independent commission to enforce the Federal elections laws, all of which the Senate passed last summer as part of S. 372 which now awaits action in the House.

It provides for Federal assistance to qualified candidates, in primary elections for nomination in congressional and Presidential races. After receiving a threshold of funding, it would be eligible for Federal assistance on an escalating basis for every $100 per contributor.

In the general elections, once having received their party's nomination, all major party House, Senate, and Presidential candidates are entitled to Federal payments equal to their overall spending limit. However, they may take as much or little of this available fund as they desire. S. 3044 provides for non-incumbent candidates to share in campaign funds in allowable private contributions.

Minor party candidates would receive a proportionate share of the assistance available to major party candidates in general elections.

Without discussing all of the bill's provisions, I do wish to comment on four major criticisms which have been leveled against the committee bill. First, the questioning of why any public financing is necessary; second, the argument that private financing should play the dominant role; third, the opposition to including primaries in any financing scheme; and finally, questions about the proposal's constitutionality.

WILL THE BILL'S PROVISIONS EXPAND THE PUBLIC'S FINANCING?

The most fundamental objection to S. 3044 is the claim that low contribution limits will take care of the "corruption". It is the potential influence of large gifts that takes care of Watergate, the argument goes, so why get bogged down in the tricky problems of devising a fair, workable public financing scheme?

This is a myopic view of meaningful campaign reform. We should not deal with the Watergate horrors in a way which will perpetuate and intensify the problems and allow by incumbents in their bid for reelection.

In large states such as my own, California or New York, Senate campaigns are costly. The funds for an adequately informative, competitive race will be difficult to raise, even for a well-known incumbent, in the small amounts we seek to impose as contribution limits for any one donor.

If the substantial public financing, the great danger is that nonincumbent challengers will have even more difficulty raising adequate resources.

This crucial point has been obscured by the recent revelations of involvement of thousands of citizens contributing a few dollars from their cookie jar for the candidate of their choice. That is indeed an appealing image and of course I encourage and endorse the desirability of full citizen involvement in politics. But that does not mean that truly small contributions will be an adequate source of funds for large, expensive campaigns.

The committee report focused on this issue sharply, at page 5:

"The only way in which Congress can eliminate existing abuses on a large scale and still ensure adequate presentation to the electorate of opposing viewpoints of candidates is through comprehensive public financing."

Modern campaigns are increasingly expensive and the necessary fundraising is a major time and expense burden of the candidate. Low contribution limits alone will compound the problem. ... Drastically reducing the amounts which may be expended by the candidate would ease this burden, but at the cost of increasing the present advantage for nonincumbent challengers and endangering the potential process of political competition.

S. 3044 incorporates the provisions for expensive campaigns.
That, Mr. President, is why we must pass a bill with both contribution limits and comprehensive public financing for Federal elections.

PRIMARY RELIANCE ON PUBLIC MATCHING FUNDS

Some of my colleagues who favor a more modest public assistance to put the availability of full public funding. They argue that the availability of substantial public funds should turn on the candidate's ability to raise first an equally large amount of private donations.

At bottom, this reflects the view that if a candidate has less support at the outset of a campaign—perhaps because he is new or has less resources with which to campaign—I would prefer a fairer approach to competitive elections.

The danger of primary reliance on a matching fund approach is the self-perpetuating advantage for the candidate who is initially better known. He would usually be able to raise more private contributions of small denomination than could his opponent. This would bring larger sums of Federal matching funds, and he could then mount a more elaborate campaign than his challenger to raise even more private funds, which would then be matched with more Federal money, and so on.

The use of matching funds to provide an ongoing test of support may be a valid screening technique in the primaries. But once a major party has chosen a candidate, we are no longer concerned with screening frivolous candidates. Both candidates in the general election should have adequate resources to seek support from the voters during the campaign, including the support of those initially inclined to favor their opponent.

With primary reliance on matching small contributions, a less well-known challenger must bootstrap his campaign by winning additional support before he can get Federal assistance to mount a fully competitive campaign. The Federal Government would be imposing a pre-election popularity contest before the voters. We had an opportunity to hear a full debate of the issues. Instead, the voters choice should be tested in November at the end of the campaign, and not at its outset.

SHOULD PRIMARY ELECTIONS BE INCLUDED

Unfortunately, I am sure that the same intense pressure to eliminate primary elections from the public financing feature of S. 3044 exerted during the Senate's deliberation will also be felt in the House.

The logic in favor of including all elections is simple, but compelling. It is impossible to justify the expenditure of substantial public funds in order to help purify the process, if the primary candidates receiving that assistance must still raise the full costs of expensive primary campaigns from private contributors in order to win their party's nomination as the first place. Meaningful reform of campaign financing practices requires inclusion of primary as well as general election.

CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES RAISED REGARDING S. 3044

Finally, Mr. President, a few words are in order in response to the continued suggestions, although I think it would be found unconstitutional.

First, some suggest it is unconstitutional to limit the amount which a person can contribute to a party campaign, or to limit the total amount he can spend.

However, the Senate has already faced that issue twice, in 1971 and again last summer. Each time, we decisively found that the power to prevent the integrity of the electoral process as well as the underlying purpose of the first amendment to prevent oligopoly in the political marketplace by a powerful few, provides ample basis for reasonable regulation.

Next it was suggested that the threshold fund used to screen cut frivolous candidates in primary elections imposes an unconstitutional burden on political aspirants. But as the committee report notes, the Supreme Court has upheld the use of filing fees and other charges as a means of preventing a proliferation of candidates. Similarly, the Court has approved differential treatment of major and minor parties, based on past performance at the polls, if the difference is reasonably related to a state interest such as the desire to avoid splintering a coherent party system. See Bullock v. Carter 405 U.S. 134 (1971); Jenness v. Fortson 403 U.S. 421 (1971).

The committee bill would not freeze the status quo, and prevent any political party from getting its candidates on the ballot nor from organizing resources to support them.

As the Supreme Court recognized in the Jenness case:

> Sometimes the grossest discrimination could lie in treating things that are different as though they were exactly alike. 403 U.S. at 442.

Only a few weeks ago, the Supreme Court reaffirmed these principles in two decisions, Storer against Brown—March 26, 1974—and American Party against White—March 26, 1974.

On other cases dealing with the regulation of elections and the treatment of major, minor, and independent candidates, I am convinced the measure would be upheld as a reasonable, if and workable scheme to promote the integrity of elections, to insure the influence of many diverse points of view in the political marketplace, and to balance the goals against the other first amendment and equally protection interests which are involved.

To end where I began, Mr. President, this provision for public financing would not guarantee the election of wise and honest men and women. But it would remove the major cause of cynicism and distrust in our system. Now is the time to act to remove the distorting effect of reliance on private funding both from the campaign and from the operation of Government.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, with the consent of the distinguished Senator from Iowa (Mr. Clark), that his pending amendment, No. 1013, be temporarily laid aside in order that I may call up my amendment No. 988, and I do this with the understanding that the Senator from Iowa (Mr. Clark) not lose his right to the floor following disposition of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOMENICI). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, this is a very minor amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read amendment No. 988.

The legislative clerk read the amendment offered by Mr. Hug Scott for himself and Mr. Kennedy (No. 988) as follows:

On page 19, after the period in line 19, insert the following: "The Secretary of the Treasury may accept and credit to the fund money received in the form of a donation, gift, legacy, or bequest, or otherwise contributed to the fund."

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, this is a very minor matter which is proposed on behalf of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy) and myself. It has to do with the fact that under present law individuals may make non-deductible contributions to candidates.

The Presidential election campaign fund at the Treasury Department is financed solely from dollars checked off on the tax return, and therefore the Treasury Department advises us it will not accept small contributions earmarked for this fund.

Amendment No. 988 simply authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to receive private contributions and earmark them for the fund is so requested. These contributions would be tax deductible, as is the case under present law, with respect to direct contributions to candidates.

This has to do with a contribution of the Senator from Massachusetts and myself of $75 each, representing payment for two newspaper articles, which was accepted by the Treasury as a gift to the Treasury but which could not be earmarked. Therefore, the purpose of the amendment is to permit earmarking. It is no ex post facto.

Mr. President, I understand the amendment has been cleared with the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Cook) and with the manager of the bill on the majority side of the aisle, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

I would like to ask a question. The Senator said this amendment would permit earmarking for tax credit purposes. I do not understand any earmarking other than insofar as it's being deposited to go to this special account.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. That is right.

Mr. CANNON. So it could not be earmarked for any other purpose.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Oh, no, not for any purpose except being channeled to this fund instead of being channeled to the general Treasury, as it now is.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator also mentioned that a tax deduction could be taken. I do not think it could be taken without another change elsewhere in the law.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I am advised by the Treasury that a tax deduction can be taken, but only as a charitable contribution.

This may be a surprise to the Senator, but the U.S. Treasury is considered a charity in this regard.

Mr. CANNON. I did not think it was a charity, but a tax credit could be taken as a charitable contribution.

With that explanation, I am willing to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join the distinguished minority leader, Senator Hugh Scott, in proposing the pending amendment. By authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to accept tax-deductible gifts earmarked for the Federal election campaign fund, the amendment will establish a constructive supplement to the dollar checkoff under existing law.

As we know, the preliminary results under the dollar checkoff for the 1973 tax year are highly encouraging. Approximately 15 percent of the returns being filed are using the checkoff. At the present rate, the campaign fund in the Treasury will contain upwards of $50 million by 1976, or more than enough to cover the costs of the 1976 Presidential election in a historic first—paid for entirely out of public funds.

But more is necessary, especially if the dollar checkoff is to be adequate for financial needs in future elections out of public funds. My hope is that, as the checkoff becomes more familiar to taxpayers, its use will continue to increase, so that the Federal election campaign fund will be sufficient to pay for all Federal elections.

In the interim, the pending amendment is a useful method to supplement the dollar checkoff fund. Under current law, taxpayers are entitled to a charitable deduction for gifts made to the Treasury. However, unless there is a specific authorization in the law allowing gifts to be made for a specified program, the gifts simply go into the general fund of the Treasury. The pending amendment would enable taxpayers to earmark their gifts for the Federal election campaign fund, and I am pleased that the managers are willing to accept it.

Mr. CANNON. I yield back my time.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania for himself and the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), No. 988.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Senators BELLMON, CRAINSON, HART, SULLIVAN, and Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Schweiker, I call up my amendment No. 1013. I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment to make technical corrections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, what was the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator restate the request?

Mr. CLARK. I ask unanimous consent to make a technical correction in amendment No. 1013.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I ask the Senator to state the nature of the technical correction? I would like to know whether it is going to change primary run-offs, and special election campaigns related to a specific, special general election.

Mr. CLARK. It is my understanding it would not be enough to eliminate the $3,000 and $6,000 limitations on the dollar checkoff fund. Under current elections law, taxpayers are entitled to a charitable deduction of $3,000 for individuals and $6,000 for organizations, applied separately to primary, primary run-off, and general elections.

The amendment has one simple effect: it would eliminate the bill’s distinction between primary run-offs, and general elections, setting a true contribution limit of $3,000 for individuals and $6,000 for organizations, applied to a candidate’s entire campaign for public office.

Throughout the debate on S. 3044, many Senators have referred to the $3,000 contribution limitation in the bill. But, in fact, the limitation now in effect in S. 3044 is a much higher limit. In any given campaign, an individual might actually be able to contribute $5,000 altogether—$3,000 in the primary and $2,000 in the general election—or every $9,000 if they prefer a primary run-off. For organizations, the limit could be as much as $18,000.

The Rules Committee has incorporated the contribution limits set in S. 372 into this present bill. But S. 372 had no provisions for public financing—it was merely an attempt to limit campaign expenditures and private contributions.

However, with the comprehensive public financing bill now in the Senate, there is need to allow such excessive contributions—up to $9,000 for individuals and $18,000 for organizations. This amendment would put those limits at $3,000 and $6,000 respectively.

Three thousand dollars is a large chunk of money in any campaign. No individual contributed more than $3,000 to my campaign, and I am sure that many of my colleagues had the same experience. Clearly, a $3,000 limitation, with $6,000 for groups, is not going to cause any hardship for anyone, whether or not they decide to use public financing.

Even the $3,000 and $6,000 limitations on the amendment proposes are excessive—and I urge that the Senate stand in the course of debate on the dollar checkoff fund. Under current elections law, taxpayers are entitled to a charitable deduction of $3,000 for individuals and $6,000 for organizations. My hope is that, as the Nos. 1118 be a step in the right direction. And the American people would know it.

The Rules Committee bill represents a truly significant reform in the American political process. I think all of us have been continually impressed by Chairman CANNON’s skillful handling of the legislation, and by the commitment to meaningful campaign reform decisions by a majority of the Senate. I believe this amendment is fully consistent with the scope and intent of S. 3044, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

We have gone up the hill and down again on this particular issue. We have seen where we are, in the debate on the bill, amendments to change the limits on contributions. The Senator from Iowa has pointed out that the amounts ought to be in half from what we have in the bill now, but we are taking a small portion of public financing. But we do not authorize a candidate to go to public financing. If we were to adopt this amendment, it is quite likely we would force every candidate to go to public financing, whereas some of them if they were given reasonable enough limits, might desire to go the private financing route. But if they did, they would then be still more unduly restricted, as under S. 372, and much more unduly restricted than we have desired to restrict them.

I urge that the Senate stand fast on the provision. It has been by voting to reject this amendment.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, in answer to the distinguished Senator from Nevada, with my particular task it is still possible and very practical for a candidate to run a campaign on private financing and keep within the $3,000 or $6,000 limitation. I say that out of personal experience, because, as the Record will show, in the 1972 campaign I accepted no contributions in excess of $3,000.
$3,000. There are many Senators who have committed themselves to accept no more than that in the coming campaign of 1974. Some have a limitation as strict as $1,000; some as lenient as $3,000. They will not receive any public financing in the 1974 campaign. So although some restrictions are imposed, a candidate cannot take $18,000, in the case of groups, and he cannot take in excess of $3,000, in the case of individuals. He can take only $3,000. That is the intent of the amendment. It seems to me that when we talk about taking amounts such as $7,000, $8,000, $9,000, or $10,000, from individuals, we are talking about a very, very heavy influence on the person who receives such a large contribution.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CLARK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the Clark amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move to lay the amendment on the table, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) to lay the amendment of the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) on the table. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I would simply like to add to the statement of the distinguished Senator from Nevada by saying that he states the amendment very accurately and very exactly. That is the intent of the amendment, to prevent any individual from contributing more than $3,000 in that campaign—in other words, in the primary, in the runoff, and in the general. Otherwise, we do not have a $3,000 limitation but a $9,000 limitation from any individual, and $9,000 from that individual's spouse if they so desire; or an $18,000 limitation in the case of organizations.

That is the purpose of this amendment, to restrict it to $3,000 for individuals and $6,000 for groups.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back on this amendment, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

So Mr. Clark is the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment agreed to.

Mr. CHILES. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of amendment No. 1118 proposed by the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK).

The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 7, line 9, strike out "$10,000;" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,800.

On page 7, line 14, strike out "20 percent" and insert in lieu thereof "10 percent.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I offer this amendment on behalf of myself and Senators BEALL and MATTHEWS.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I would like to know the nature of the perfecting amendment first.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES. The modification will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

After line 4, insert the following:

and insert in lieu thereof "$85,000;"

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES. Is there objection to the modification? Without objection, the amendment is so modified.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, this amendment would reduce the threshold amount under the bill to qualify for matching public payments in congressional and senatorial primary elections. It cuts in half the levels set in the committee bill.

Although these limits are intended to prevent frivolous candidates from receiving public financing, the threshold amounts set by the committee are so high that they will almost certainly preclude public financing for many serious candidates as well.

Some of the opponents of S. 3044 have called the bill an "incumbency protection bill," charging that public financing will inevitably favor incumbent office holders. Chairman Cannon and the Rules Committee have very scrupulously maintained the rights of challengers in this legislation, and it should be done here as well.

But the primary threshold amounts—set as high as they are—represent an exception. Incumbents could reach the threshold easily—a single hundred-dollar-a-plate dinner might be enough. But for challengers, it would be an overwhelming task. As Senator Beall said during debate on March 27:

Sometimes there is a difference between demonstrating public support and collecting money. Sometimes one can get the votes but not the dollars to back up the votes.

It seems to me that by using this formula, a terrible burden is placed upon those people who might not be able to challenge an incumbent in a primary, and I do not think that is in keeping with the purpose of the legislation.

I started out by saying that I am not opposed to public financing combined with private financing. But I am opposed to public financing that discriminates against people who want to challenge their incumbent.

The best example I can offer of the dangers inherent in this section of the committee bill is the Democratic races for the House and Senate in Iowa in 1972. Altogether, there were nine Democrats competing for the nominations of the six House seats and one Senate seat.

Mr. President, not a single one of us would have qualified for public financing under the committee formula.

And I am about frivolous candidates. Of the seven who were nominated, not one candidate received less than 45 percent of the vote in the general election. Four of us were elected to the Committee of unopposed candidates, so we would have defeated incumbents in the process. But again, not a single one of us would have been able to get public financing in the primary under the committee bill.

It is also very interesting to examine the 1972 campaigns of the 13 freshman Senators.

According to reports filed 5 days before the primary, at least 7 of the 13 would not have qualified for public financing in the primary under the present statutory formula. Of the six others, of course, there were three incumbent Congressmen, an incumbent Governor, and an incumbent mayor of the State's largest city. The seven of us were not frivolous candidates—after all, we won. But under the committee's requirements we would not have been able to demonstrate sufficient public support to qualify for matching public funds.

Mr. President, we are not dealing with a threshold which must be raised to receive a flat subsidy. We are only talking about the 20 percent of the bill that the Government will match small contributions on a dollar for dollar basis. The Rules Committee correctly states in its report that one of our primary goals must be to encourage candidates not necessarily those who want to win for the sake of winning, but those who want to minimize the advantages of the incumbents, and they should have a reasonable chance to do so.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I do not have any strong feelings one way or the other about the amendment. For people who oppose public financing, this means it is easier to get public financing. It lowers the threshold amount in the case of Representatives from $10,000 to $5,000 and in the case of a candidate for the Senate from $25,000 to $12,500.

Now it was the feeling of the committee we should have some reasonable threshold amount so that a man had some sort of public appeal before he could go the public financing route.

As far as I am concerned, if the Senator wants to, it can take away all the threshold and just say everybody is eligible. We did not think it was a good idea.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEALL).

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa. As he pointed out, both Senator Matthews and I are cosponsors of the amendment. He also alluded to the colloquy I had on the first day of the debate, with the distinguished Chairman of the Rules Committee on this subject.

Mr. President, I think it is absurd to expect that someone can raise $54,000 in a primary when only 480,000 Republicans, but 1.5 million Democrats. We would not have qualified under the bill, because we have a voting-age population of 2.7 million, at the rate of 10 cents per voting age population, $270,000 in primary elections. If we take 20 percent of that, it comes to $54,000.

I think it is absurd to expect that someone can raise $54,000 in a primary when he is running against an incumbent, especially when he has only 480,000 voters registered in his party, but has a 1.5 million population and can have a limit on contributions, and it would be very, very difficult for anybody to challenge an incumbent.

I think if we are going to move in the direction of public financing, we should not allow the bill, because we had better make sure that we are not making the Congress of the United States a self-perpetuating body. It seems to me that is just what we are doing if we are creating the high thresholds where challengers will not be able to get the kind of money they need to participate in public funds.

I think it should go farther, but I think it is extremely reasonable to lower the threshold from 20 to 10 percent. Therefore, I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment to make it fair to those who are going to be involved in future primaries.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES. Who yields time?

Do Senators yield back their time?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back my remaining time on the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back my time.
The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 15, line 11, after the word "held," insert the following: "(Except that if the office sought is President or Senator the amount shall be 14 cents)."

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, this amendment proposes to restore, for the offices of President and Senator, the amount of 14 cents per voter instead of 12 cents which resulted from the Allen amendment, which was successful here by a vote of 46 to 43.

The reason for limiting it to President and Senator is this: First, not to reargue the Allen amendment, which would not be fair to Senator Allen nor to the Senate, I omit the Members of the House of Representatives, and second, because it really is not necessary to include the Members of the House of Representatives, as they have a limit of $90,000, which, considering the general population of congressional districts, which is under one-half million, is not out of line with: either the 12-cent figure or the 14-cent figure.

The amendment applies only to elections, not to primaries. I am not seeking to change the fact that in this, that is: this is a qualified amendment, and the reason I give the Senate this opportunity is the fact that really the amounts are getting own down to the point where, with any kind of big State and small States are even more affected, where a Senator like myself or any other Senator who has had considerable time in the Senate has gone to the trouble of the argument, it is simple, after all, to take a Senator apart when we vote here four or 500 times a year, and when votes are connected in philosophy or have a historical relationship, or if you have strategic or tactical situations that face you, you try to go around in a State with 15 million people, even 15 cents speciously.

I do not mind telling the Senate I ran, with the same committee, a campaign in 1968 that cost me, aside from the help they might give, $1,350,000. That same campaign would cost about $2,500,000 today, and if you subtract the State of New York or the State organizations now do not want to get involved with Federal law—you run into a campaign that may cost $2,500,000 to $3,000,000.

I cannot raise that. I cannot afford it. But if the committee thought 15 cents was a reasonable figure, I think we ought to have an opportunity to vote on a figure larger than that now set, which I consider too low.

All you have to do is deduct one-fifteenth from the column, 15 cents for the President, that results in roughly $18 million for the Presidency, rather than the figures which are set up here, $21 million—something for the 15-cent fund, and similarly down that column.

I simply lay this question before the Senate: Under these conditions, the only chance we have to somewhat raise the figures, for purposes of reargument with the other body, is in an amendment that is qualified. It is qualified.

I ask unanimous consent that the names of Senators Mondale and Dole be added as cosponsors of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.
they come to the right conclusion. Here we have a committee, and the manager of the bill says they did not come to the right conclusion, that he voted against it. So, since he voted against it, he has got to vote against it again.

I hope very much that will not be the feeling of the Senate. The committee came up with 15 cents. The Senate, by a majority of 46 to 43, reduced it to 12 cents. Here is an opportunity to again come close to the margins of the committee which deliberated, provided.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I think I have an hour, if I wanted to talk that long.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMINICK. I yield myself 2 minutes, in order to back up my distinguished friend from New York. I am sure everyone will say that if he and I are on the same side on this issue, one of us is right. But I want to find out how

I will say to the Senate as a whole that I think, to begin with, this whole bill is unconstitutional. I do not think you can do anything on the right of any individual to support in any legal way that he wants to support the candidate of his choice. I think that is what we have attempted to do. One three-Judge Federal court has already so ruled, in connection with the bill that is now part of the law. The rule has not been appealed. They ruled on that ground, that this is a violation of the first amendment, and I think that is exactly what it is.

Second, I think we have sought to do indirectly, by what my distinguished friend from Alabama did and as a matter of fact what this bill does, what we cannot do directly; namely, limit the amount you can spend and have it included whatever anyone expends, no matter whether they have any connection to the bill or not, as an overall limitation; thus we are denying them the right to support the candidates of their choice.

Third, As I think everyone has known from the beginning, I am and always have been totally opposed to public financing. I think it is a real rip-off of the taxpayer. That is not a part of this amendment, which would seem to me only sensible, that if we are going to have an unconstitutional bill, which I think is a disaster from beginning to end, and I think we are all acting as amateurs, if I may say so, to the detriment of the taxpayer, then we ought to have a limit which is high enough. So I am happy to support it and will support the amendment but I am going to vote against the whole bill no matter what happens.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 4 minutes.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. This amendment seeks, to go over issues that the Senate went over yesterday. It seeks, in effect, to reconsider the vote which was taken on yesterday, and one motion to reconsider has already been made and denied. So actually this is a method of doing indirectly what the Senator is prevented from doing under the rules directly; that is, reconsidering that vote and offering his own amendment. The second opportunity was yesterday. I think that adds to his argument.

Mr. President, I am here to ask that the Senate does not do what the Senate is doing here is to seek to reconsider. That action was sought to be taken yesterday and the Senate refused to reconsider it because the Senator did not favor it. The Senator is trying to do now is to do indirectly what the rules forbid him from doing directly, since the motion to reconsider has already been tabled and another motion is not in order.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I should like to support the amendment offered by the Senator from New York. To begin with, to place an arbitrary limit on campaign expenditures based on a per capita figure is foolish, because campaign costs vary from State to State.

The Senator of New York can reach a great many of his constituents, perhaps half of them, via the subway. But in my State, to get to the various major population centers, because of population density, I have to fly. I fly for two reasons because many cities in Texas are not served by the commercial airlines. Of course, no one is served by trains any more and the bus service is not all that good. So campaign costs vary from State to State.

To place an arbitrary limit on this is stupid and foolish. In my opinion, in the first place, because it takes none of these things into consideration. The reason why 50 sovereign States and different ways of exercising the police power in those States, is that situations, people, geography, and everything else, differ from various regions of the country to others.

But if we are going to place an arbitrary limit, let us err on the side of giving too much rather than too little, because it is unfair to the people who are campaigning to be expected to get by with 12 cents a voter. We cannot do it. The figure of 12 cents is unrealistic, as has been pointed out eloquently and ably and precisely by my friend from New York.

So I hope the Senate will follow his urgings, that we raise the limit to 14 cents.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute to ask a question of the distinguished chairman. I think I understand it, but do these limitations—I am addressing myself to the distinguished Senator from Alabama—if one is unopposed or at least one is certain he is unopposed, does he know it until filing deadline. What happens to the limitation so far as the primary is concerned?

Mr. CANNON. The provisions in the bill limit the amount spent to not more than 10 cents. If a person has no opposition in the primary that is in addition to the amount permitted in the general.

Mr. DOLE. That is the primary reason I am supporting the Senator from New York. Perhaps some of the one-party States do not have this problem and we are not worried about it. Perhaps the Senator from Alabama may be unopposed—he probably is—but it does not make much difference at this point whether it is 10 cents, 12 cents, 30 cents, or whatever. But in a two-party State, where we have a primary and a general election, it makes a great deal of difference.

It makes a great deal of difference whether the opponent may have a primary and you have no primary. He can spend altogether to the primary and to the general, even though the primary opponent may be a token opponent. Some are getting resourceful and they are talking about setting up a token opponent in a primary to bypass certain provisions of the law, which indicates the foolishness of this. So, to set up a strawman in the primary he can spend more money in the primary and get ready for the general election.

As the Senator from Texas has stated, perhaps on this question, where the committee initially recommended 15 cents per vote, the compromise should be set at 14 cents because those States are there and everything depends on our own situation from time to time. For instance, Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I move that the 14 cents be increased and I have been on the floor. Here it is and every vote, the compromise should be at 14 cents.

Mr. President, I have not discussed the amendments which we are getting about setting up a token opponent in a primary in order to bypass certain, but I think it was that if time could be cut down on amendments, then it might be that we could go until 7 or 7:30 this evening; or we could go over until tomorrow and finish tomorrow—whatever Senators prefer.

Mr. PACKWOOD. If we could reach a unanimous consent agreement to adjourn tonight at 7:30 and come back tomorrow I would have no objection to the limitation proposed.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I came to my office this morning at 8 o'clock. I believe it would be too early to have any conferences, I have gone to every meeting it was my responsibility to attend, and I have been on the floor. Here it is 5:30 and it looks as if these amendments are coming forth. We have had closure imposed.

I say there should be a sense of fairness in the Senate. When we get to the 8 o'clock, we should quit and come back tomorrow. We have not had notice that we were going to stay tonight. Most of us have family obligations. I think that should be taken into consideration. I think this matter has gotten completely out of hand and the time should come to put a stop to it.

If it becomes necessary to stay late tomorrow night we should have notice so that we can advise our families that we will not be home for dinner tomorrow evening.

We have been considering this bill since the latter part of March. I wonder what will happen to the Senate when it goes to the House, and here we are straining ourselves and keeping ourselves from our families, which I think is a great injustice. I think we can reach an agreement. Now there has been a request for aye and nay vote.

It takes 20 minutes. I have heard about 11 amendments, and then some other Senator came along and put up his fingers. I do not think it was the 'V' sign— it was two more amendments. That makes 13. That is 4 hours and 20 minutes alone on rollcall.

Now, when are we going to go home and when are we going to finish the bill? I say the time has come when we ought to have an agreement to quit at 6:30 tonight and come in tomorrow morning, at 9 o'clock. 8 o'clock, 5 o'clock.

Several Senators, Five o'clock.

Mr. PASTORE. Five o'clock, and finish the bill, but please do not let that dinner get cold tonight.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an interjection?

Mr. PASTORE. I will yield for anything.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for an interjection, I would like to note, for the Senator's scheduling table, that I believe there are about 15 Senators who are scheduled to

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time will be at Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Very well. We have 11 amendments remaining. Mr. President, I have not discussed this request with the leadership on the other side of the aisle nor have I discussed it with anyone on this side of the aisle.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time on any remaining amendment be limited to 15 minutes, with 5 minutes for debate on the bill and 10 minutes to the mover of the amendment.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, if I object, the PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Does the Senator have an amendment?

Mr. PASTORE. Yes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Would the Senator object if an exception were made for his amendment?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes, I would.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, would the Senator object if the requirements were modified to limit the time to 20 minutes on any amendment, to be equally divided?
Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. A motion to adjourn is not debatable.

Mr. President, I repeat my request that there be 15 minutes—

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, if we are including in that proposed agreement a vote at 3 o'clock tomorrow, can we have assurances of having a vote at 7 o'clock this evening instead of 10 o'clock?

Mr. PASTORE. I will buy 6:30.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Six-thirty line.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, perhaps this is inappropriate, and I seldom find myself on the opposite of an issue with my distinguished friend from Rhode Island, but, you know, Mr. President, we have been kicking this bill around for a long, long time. Some people have expressed strong reservations about it. I do not deny that every Senator has the parliamentary right to prolong the debate, but I will tell you, Mr. President, the people of Indiana would be glad to let Senators remain here so their supper will get cold. It would be a pretty good precedent if we stayed here until we needed this bill for campaign reform. We have debated it at length. Two-thirds of the Senate have exercised their will to limit debate on it, and now we ought not give up our conveniences and work until we finish action on the bill.

Mr. PASTORE. Come, come, come, Mr. BAYH. This is getting to be a little ridiculous. This Senator can sustain any inconvenience that is necessary to do his job. All I am saying is that it has been the custom and the habit of this body that when we are going to stay here beyond 7 o'clock, we receive notice of it the day before.

I do not know the obligations of the Senator from Indiana. He has been here all day and he has not seen anyone capture their attention in that way.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. TOWER. If the consent agreement is not to be agreed to, that would mean we could stay here tonight and Senators could bring up their amendments, and have votes on them, unless there were a motion to adjourn, which would be debatable.

Mr. PASTORE. No, there is no debate on such a motion.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. A motion to adjourn is not debatable.

Mr. President, I repeat my request that there be 15 minutes—

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, if we are including in that proposed agreement a vote at 3 o'clock tomorrow, can we have assurances of having a vote at 7 o'clock this evening instead of 10 o'clock?

Mr. PASTORE. No, there is no debate on such a motion.
understand his remarks. Is the time on these amendments from this point forward to be limited to 15 minutes, 10 minutes for amendments and 5 minutes for the manager of the bill?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The time allotted under the cloture rule would be vitiated.

Mr. BAKER. That is what I wanted to bring up. Is the Senator asking that the cloture vote be vitiated?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. No. I would ask only that the time limit under the cloture rule be vitiated, because otherwise the 15 minute agreement on any amendment would be worthless.

Mr. BAKER. Do I understand that we are going to run for any very long time tonight?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. No. I did not say that. I would have to leave that up to the Senate.

Mr. BAKER. I am perfectly agreeable to any time limitation. I was wondering what the leadership had in mind.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. With the number of amendments that have been adopted, and with the number of Senators who wish to speak tomorrow morning, it would be necessary to go for a while tonight.

Mr. BAKER. Well, would the Senator say 7 or 7:30?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes, in order to come tomorrow at 3 o'clock, but even then. Senators may be shut off from debate on their amendments at 3 p.m.

Mr. BAKER. My final concern is with reference to the statement by my friend from Rhode Island (Mr. Pastore), that we would receive notice the day before if we were going to run beyond 7 o'clock. If that is so, I should like to be put on that list.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I know of no such list.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that time on any amendment be limited to 15 minutes, to be divided 10 minutes to the mover of the amendment and 5 minutes to the manager of the bill, with time on any amendment to an amendment, motion, or appeal limited to 10 minutes, to be divided in accordance with the usual form, with section 3 of rule XVI being waived, with time under the cloture rule being vitiated, and that the vote on final passage of the bill occur at no later than 10 o'clock tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PACKWOOD and several other Senators objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I will make a final effort. I renew my request that time on any amendment be limited to 15 minutes, to be divided 10 minutes to the mover of the amendment and 5 minutes to the manager of the bill, with 10 minutes on any rollcall votes for the remainder of the time. If the warning bells are sounded after 2 1/2 minutes, I shall make no further request.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, how long will we be speaking tonight?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I am not going to attempt to answer that question. When Senators are ready to quit, I shall be glad to move to adjourn. As long as Senators want to stay, I will stay.

Mr. PASTORE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask that the time that has been utilized be charged to me under the rule and that no time be charged to the able Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON).

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, under section 3 of rule XVI to whom is the debate that is taking place being charged?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been assigned to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute. I have used only 1 minute, so the parliamentarian has advised me; and I certainly do intend to use the whole hour.

I believe there is only one way out of the situation, and that is to move to table the bill. I move that the bill be laid on the table, and I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senator from California had the floor before yielding to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Alabama to make his motion?

Mr. CRANSTON. No, I do not.

Mr. ALLEN. I thought the Chair had recognized the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has the floor. The Senator from California did yield to the Senator from West Virginia for an unanimous-consent request.

AMENDMENT NO. 1177

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1177 and ask that it be stated.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, my congratulations to the Senator from California for his leadership in amending this bill.

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. President, this is mainly a technical amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CRANSTON. I yield.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, as I understand, there is no time limitation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an existing agreement of a half-hour on each amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is superimposed on the 1 hour that each Senator has under the cloture rule.

The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows: S. 3044.

On page 5, line 19, following the word 'office', insert the words 'and if, in a State which registers voters by party, that said party's registration in said State or district is equal to or greater than one-tenth of the total voter registration in said State or district'.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, this is largely a technical amendment which will, I believe, improve on the committee's intent in section 501(b) of S. 3044.

As written, the bill provides that if only one political party qualifies as a major party entitled to full funding, a political party whose candidate received in the last election less than 25 percent of the total votes cast in that election but more than 15 percent would qualify as a major party. I believe that that provision was included because of concern expressed by several Senators, including myself, that occasionally in a two-party State in which an incumbent may be sufficiently popular as to receive more than 75 percent of the vote in a given election. I support section 501(b) of the bill, but I wish to suggest that it be modified to take into account the following situation which has arisen this year in California.

There are five incumbent Democratic Congressmen who are facing no Republican opponents this fall. However, in two of these districts there are candidates... seeking the nomination of the Peace and Freedom Party and of the American Independent Party. It therefore appears likely that on the November ballot these two Democratic Congressmen will find themselves opposed by nominees of these minor parties. It is entirely possible that Republicans or Democrats wishing to vote against the Democratic incumbent for whatever reason would vote for a minor party candidate. Thus, a minor party candidate will become the recipient of such protest votes and could conceivably receive 15 percent of the total vote cast. As a result no political party under the provision of the bill as it is before us, either of the minor parties might be entitled to receive full funding as a major party. The fact is that in neither district does either party have as much as 1 percent of the total voter registration in the district.

Therefore, Mr. President, I would like to suggest that in addition to the receiving 15 percent of the votes cast in the primary election, a party, in order to qualify as a major party, should also have voters in the district equal to at least 15 percent of the total registered. That is the basis upon which any amendment would do. It adds the language: and if, in a State which registers voters by party, that party's registration in such a State or district is equal to 15 percent or more of the total vote registration in said State or district.

This would prevent the unjust enrichment of the political coffers of minor parties who have no basis for being treated as such a party or parties.

Mr. CANNON, Mr. President, I yield myself 20 seconds. The eloquence of the Senator from California has convinced me of the merits of his amendment, and I am prepared to accept it. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CRANSTON, I yield back the remainder of my time.

SPEAKING OFFICER. All remaining time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1177) of the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRANSTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1125

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I call up my Amendment No. 1125, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The Assistant Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. CRANSTON's amendment (No. 1125) is as follows:

On page 15, line 18, strike the words "provision or."

On page 15, line 20, strike the words "primary or minor."

On page 16, line 21, strike the words "of."

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, this amendment, incidentally, is cosponsored by the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE).

As presently written, S. 3044 provides that a candidate unopposed in a primary or general election can spend only 10 percent of what he would be able to spend if he actually opposed. I have no objection to this restricted spending limit for a candidate unopposed in a general election. The primary, however, is a totally different matter.

Let me give two examples of what might happen if the bill is enacted in its present form:

The most likely situation would involve an incumbent unopposed in his own primary, while two—or more—individuals seek the nomination of the other party. The two challengers might well decide that the best way to win their party's nomination is to campaign against the incumbent—with each challenger ignoring the other. Thus the incumbent would be subject for a period of several weeks or months to a campaign by his two opponents, both of whom would be permitted to outspend him 10 to 1.

A second example involves a primary election where the incumbent has nominal opposition and the person seeking the nomination of the other major party is unopposed. The incumbent would ignore the opponent within his own party and campaign against his two opponents, both of whom would be permitted to outspend him in the primary by 10 to 1.

Both situations are obviously inequitable and unfair.

Let me point out the situation which I face this year, and what might happen under a public financing system with this limitation on primary spending. As it happens, I have two virtually unknown opponents in my own Democratic primary in June. Neither man is conducting a visible campaign, and to the best of my knowledge. It is for all practical purposes, then, that I am unopposed, and it could well have been that neither man filed and thus I would have been unopposed.

There are four highly visible, active candidates seeking the Republican nomination for the U.S. Senate. All four are raising money and all four have to be classified as serious candidates for the Republican nomination.

As the bill is written, these four candidates would be entitled to spend $4 1/2 million campaigning against me during a period of almost 5 months, while I would be able to spend only a hundred thousand dollars defending myself against their attacks. Now it is true, under the bill the situation would be equalized under the general, with each candidate able to spend the same amount. But the huge disadvantage of being outspent beyond 40 to 1 in the primary would create an insurmountable disadvantage from which a candidate could not recover.

There has been some suggestion that the 10-percent figure might be changed, allowing an unopposed candidate in a primary to spend 20 percent. At 20 percent, I would be able to spend only 5 percent of what my opponents could spend. At 50 percent I would be able to spend only 12 1/2 percent of what my opponents could spend.

Even if my amendment is accepted, with four opponents all of whom may be conducting their primary campaigns by running against me, I would be outspent 4 to 1. But at least no one candidate would be able to spend more than I would be permitted to spend.

There is an additional disadvantage for an unopposed candidate of such a limitation in the primary. Much of the ground work for the general election must be laid in the primary. The candidate's campaign organization must be put together, for if the candidate waits until the general election, he will find that both staff and workers have been preempted by other candidates and campaigns. He must travel, he must speak, he must make public appearances—even though he may decide not to put on a substantial media campaign. All of these activities cost money.

Finally, he may wish to begin his direct mailing solicitation of small contributions during the primary—the cost of which, in a State like California, could quickly eat up the total amount a candidate would be allowed to spend.

I reject—and with a very serious objection, I believe, to the present language of the bill—that it the bill is enacted in its present form, no candidate of either party would ever allow himself to be unchallenged by serious candidates of either party—or by the parties themselves—to assure that the serious candidate receives full funding.

If such a situation would be unhealthy, unwisely, and might well lead to a greater need for Federal funding than would be the case if an unopposed primary candidate were allowed to spend as much as an opposed primary candidate—and if he chose to. Under a matching system, I doubt that an unopposed primary candidate would, under normal circumstances, raise or spend as much as a candidate with opposition.

My amendment, No. 1125, would simply strike any reference to the primary from section 504(c) of the large Senators to support the amendment.

I am delighted to yield to my distinguished cosponsor of the amendment, the Senator from Kansas (Mr. Dole), on his time.

Mr. DOLE. I will use my time, but I would like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOLE. What does the Senator mean, on his time?

Mr. DOLE. I have 48 minutes left, or 49.

Mr. CANNON. Well, there are 30 minutes on an amendment. Is the Senator utilizing time on the amendment, or on his hour?

Mr. DOLE. Both.

Mr. CANNON. All right. That makes sense.

Mr. DOLE. As I understand it, the Senator from California would strike section 504(c)?

Mr. CRANSTON. We would strike the provision that makes it impossible to spend more than 10 percent in a primary.

Mr. DOLE. All right. As a cosponsor of the amendment, I should know what it does, but I wanted to make certain.

I agree with the Senator from California. At the time, I reported that in 1971 we were making preparations for a primary, if I recall, and I am pleased to cosponsor it with the Senator from California.

I also raise the question. How do we know when we are going to be opposed in a primary? In Kansas, the filing deadline is June 20. I started campaigning a year ago. In the process, I have spent a great deal of money—for a small State like Kansas—making preparations for a primary, if I have to have one, and if not, then for the general election.

I may yet have a primary because we have several months before June 20. Seems to me that the restriction remains. I support the amendment and am pleased to cosponsor it with the Senator from California.

Mr. CRANSTON. I think the Senator from Kansas very much.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Kansas has made a very good point about the fact that a person may be campaigning long before he finds out that they are not going to have a primary and he might well have spent more than 10 percent of the limit which he is going to have in the bill. It is a valid point and I am willing to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, during the course of the past 2 weeks we have examined and debated many facets of S. 3044. Many of us have questioned specific provisions of the legislation on conceptual and practical grounds. We have questioned the effectiveness of certain campaign spending limits on our two-party system, on challengers seeking to unseat incumbent officeholders and on the fact of the American people in their elected leaders.

In addition, several Senators have questioned the wisdom of spending millions of tax dollars to pay for political campaigns. Others have introduced amendments designed to tamper with the mechanics of the legislation; to raise this limit or lower that spending ceiling.

I have supported many of these amendments and I have joined in raising practical questions concerning the wisdom of this approach to campaign reform. The voting on the various amendments we have considered convinces me that there is a majority in this body willing to go along with S. 3044 regardless of the consequences.

It is clear that the pressure for reform is enough to force members of Congress to go along with a proposal, that might easily create more problems than it will ever solve. The argument has been cast in a way that favors those in favor of S. 3044 to appear as heroes in the press while those of us who oppose it are made to look like the villains of the piece.

In fact, however, the legislation under discussion is far too important and far too complicated to be decided on the basis of slogans and lobbyist pressure. We have an obligation to look at the facts, to analyze the specifics of the legislation before us and at least to guess at the consequences that might follow its passage.

That, in my view, is what those who question the wisdom of the bill have been trying to do for some time now. It would be unfortunate if we were to move to a vote on this legislation without a thorough discussion of the constitutional implications of some of its provisions. As I indicated when I introduced my amendment No. 1140, I hoped thereby to stimulate a discussion of these implications.

Briefly, my amendment would eliminate the expenditure ceilings imposed by section 504 of S. 3044 in Federal campaigns, retaining the ceilings on the maximum amount of Federal money a candidate might receive. Thus while every major candidate would be assured of adequate funds to wage a campaign, there would be no overall ceiling on campaign expenditures on behalf of a given candidate.

I have introduced the amendment in this form because most constitutional experts who have analyzed campaign reform proposals of the kind we are debating today have concluded that limits on total campaign expenditures are most serious constitutional questions and that is their belief that such limits are necessarily violative of the first amendment and would be found unconstitutional if a proper test were brought before the Supreme Court.¹

In a moment, I will analyze the reasoning that leads so many scholars to this conclusion. At this point, however, I would simply like to note that some who are supporting overall limits today were not at all sure of their constitutionality when we were debating the 1971 Federal Election Campaign Act.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) for example, who now seems so certain that S. 3044 deserves our support, evidently felt at the time of our earlier debate of this issue that a limit on total expenditures would raise grave constitutional questions.

He said at that time that a ceiling on total expenditures "is a step that cannot be justified, in the most stringent circumstances, in accord with the standard of 'clear and present danger,' established long ago by the Supreme Court as the test by which denials of free speech under the first amendment must be measured. To me, no ceiling on total campaign spending in present circumstances can meet this test."²

As we get into the discussion on this question, I hope the Massachusetts and others who like to consider themselves civil libertarians will try to square their views on the first amendment with the support of this legislation. It is my fear that they might not be able to do so because I am convinced that S. 3044 directly infringes on the freedom of speech and association guaranteed to all Americans by that amendment.

I realize that there has been popular pressure for reform in the wake of Watergate and believe that most of those who are sure that S. 3044 is doing so because they want to respond to the perceived need for some sort of reform, and because they have not really thought about the constitutional questions that troubled the Senator from Massachusetts only 3 years ago.

But good intentions are not enough; good intentions alone will neither guarantee good laws nor assure us that we do not pass from a stringent, critical examination by the courts. This is especially true when we pass legislation that limits freedom of speech—and that is exactly what we are going to be doing if we pass S. 3044 as presently written.

Thus, as Prof. Martin Redish pointed out in a New York University Law Review article,³ to argue that campaign spending limitations... may violate the First Amendments is in no way to contend that the problems with which these measures deal are not serious difficulties, nor, for that matter, that they would be ineffective in solving them. But the courts have not compelled to invalidate laws intended to foster legitimate societal interests because of their conflict with the First Amendment in many situations.²

Redish's point is, of course, precisely the point that I have made: The fact that S. 3044 was drawn up by well-meaning men to solve a problem they perceived as important will not get it past a court interested in defending the right of free speech as defined by the first amendment.

Thus in 1971, with the best of intentions, we passed the Federal Election Campaign Act, portions of which have already been struck down as unconstitutional by a three-judge panel here in the District of Columbia.

Just last fall, Judge Barenson ruled for the panel that title II of that act is unconstitutional. In the case of ACLU against Jennings, the Court avoided a general decision on spending limits per se, but did conclude that our attempt to close spending loopholes violated free speech guarantees.

And in an amicus brief, filed in that case, the New York Times described our effort to "shot through with constitutional defendant's cases and proceeded with basic first amendment freedoms." If we do not examine the constitutional problems inherent in the legislation now before us we are liable to have our handiwork described in even harsher terms by higher courts in the future.

It is at least possible that the limited discussion of the constitutional problems inherent in the bill is a direct result of Common Cause’s attempt to assure would-be supporters of the legislation that it does not present a constitutional problem. To this end, Common Cause lobbyists have circulated a legal memorandum that discounts the constitutional questions. I have referred this memorandum to Prof. Ralph Winter of the Yale Law School, for his analysis. Based on his views, Prof. Winter tells me, the Common Cause memorandum may be characterized as slovenly, professionally incompetent, and in its use or misuse of citations, grossly misleading. I ask unanimous consent to have printed at the conclusion of my remarks his analysis of some of the more obvious flaws in this memorandum.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, we should realize that in spite of Mr. Gardner’s assurances to the contrary, constitutional experts feel spending limits do raise serious and probably fatal constitutional questions. Thus, the authors of constitutional scholars have argued that the first amendment has as a primary objective the encouraging of the dissemination of information to voters so as to aid them in the performance of their electoral functions.

The Supreme Court gave voice to this aspect of the first amendment in New York Times against Sullivan. In that decision the Court gave firm support to the view that self-government requires that the public be able to be exposed to a full range of opinion about matters of public concern. The Court itself did not invalidate the resolution, but it did involve an elected official about whom allegedly libelous statements had been published. The Court held that the first amendment precluded an action of defamation in the sense of a malice showing of "actual malice."

The Court’s reluctance to countenance actions that might limit the public’s right of access to political information was also a deciding factor in Mills against Alabama, a case involving a law passed for admirable purposes by well-meaning men. The Mills case impresses me as interesting in that it dealt with an Alabama law prohibiting the solicitation of votes on election day. The legislature enacted the law as a campaign reform measure to prevent emotional or5 slanted last-minute appeals to which an opposition candidate could not reply. The case arose when the publisher of the Birmingham Post-Herald was convicted of running an election day ad that urged voters to vote in a certain way.

In overturning the publisher’s conviction, Mr. Justice Black wrote:

Whatever difficulties may exist about In terpretation of the First Amendment, there is practically universal agreement that a major purpose of that Amendment was to protect the discussion of governmental affairs. Thus, when cases discuss the constitutionality of candidates, structures and forms of government, the manner in which government is operated or should be operated, and all such matters related to the political processes.

In commenting on the Mills decision, Professor Redish observes that:

Once it is recognized that a significant purpose of the First Amendment is to insure that the public will be provided with information necessary to the performance of its self-governing function, it follows that information dissemination is a public right and that laws having the effect of curtailing speech and political discussion must stand or fall by the criterion that the public right to know is involved.

A thorough reading of these cases demonstrates rather clearly that the Court views with suspicion any regulation of the First Amendment in the course of an election campaign.

One no denies that Congress has the right to regulate Federal elections, but this does not automatically mean that laws designed to accomplish this will not be struck down if in conflict with the first amendment.

The problem has been summarized clearly in a 1972 article by the editors of the Columbia Journal of Law and Social Problems:

Any limit on a candidate’s right to purchase the use of communications media limits his ability to speak effectively to his fellow citizens, and may limit their right to be informed of his identity and positions on political issues.

It goes without saying that the same reasoning extends to public or even greater force to any citizen not a candidate who is prevented from publishing his views of a candidate by virtue of limitations on spending.

The question then is whether the restrictions on free speech contemplated by the authors of this legislation can be justified constitutionally. Though the majority of the Court has generally rejected the argument that might be termed the absolutist view of the first amendment championed by the late Justice Black, it has nevertheless been extremely reluctant to allow laws that limit freedom of speech to stand.

Thus, as the Court stated in King sberg against State Bar in 1961, valid restrictions on freedom of speech must fall within one of two categories. On the one hand, certain forms of speech, or speech in certain contexts, have been considered outside the scope of constitutional protection . . . . On the other hand, general regulatory statutes not intended to control the content of speech, but incidentally limiting its unfettered exercise, have not been regarded as the type of law the First . . . Amendment forbade Congress . . . to pass, when they have been found justified by a valid government interest, a prerequisite to constitutionality which has necessarily involved a weighing of the government interest against the interests of the public at large.

The first category here includes cases involving advocacy of overthrow of the government, obscenity, and other cases where the speech itself is offensive to the public safety or to morals. I do not know of any examples of cases where the kind of campaign rhetoric resulting from present spending levels falls within this category.

The second category includes a number of cases involving situations in which the government while in pursuit of some legitimate goal, restricts or curtails freedom of speech as a means of achieving that goal. To validate a law in this category the Court conducts a sort of "balancing test" of the kind alluded to in the King sberg language I quoted a moment ago.

Some experts, such as Prof. Ralph Winter and Alexander Bickel, also of the Yale Law School, take the position that the balancing test would be inapplicable in a case involving campaign spending limits. As Winter has testified before the Senate Commerce Committee:

There is no countervailing interest . . . to "balance" against a campaign restriction on speech inasmuch as the restriction is imposed not to preserve some other legitimate interest of society but solely for the sake of restricting the speech itself . . . .

Thus, Professor Winter would find his in agreement with Mr. Justice Black’s opinion in Barenblatt against United States:

There are, of course, cases suggesting that a law which primarily regulates conduct but which might also indirectly affect speech can be upheld if the effect on speech is minor in relation to the need for control of the conduct. But these cases are . . . (they did not) even remotely suggest that a law directed at curtailing speech and political persuasion should be saved through a balancing process.

The question then is whether a limit on political spending is, in fact, a law "directly aimed at curtailing speech."

Winter’s position on the question seems most in line with recent constitutional thought, though I recognize that some would disagree. The Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) quoted Prof. Archibald Cox on the floor of the Senate a few days ago to the effect that limitations on spending are not really limitations on speech because they are limitations "once removed."

I have great respect for Professor Cox and for his opinions, but I am afraid this contention strikes me as a bit far-fetched.

Prof. Joel Fleishman of Duke University considered this question in a 1971 study of campaign reform legislation that is worth reading.

It is exceedingly unlikely that the Court would create a new category of unprotected speech particularly for political speech and politics. Instead, the Court would continue to insist that a campaign speech or campaign writing, instead of the traditional categories of obscenity, libel, "fighting words," and "speech plus," with the possible exception of the last, those categories would
The supporters of limits of the kind included in S. 3044 evidently believe they can meet this test by arguing that only by imposing restrictions on political expenditures can we assure a purity of our electoral process. By turning the concept of free speech on its head, they are forced to argue that the imposition of restrictions on political expenditures is the effect of expanding rather than contracting First Amendment rights.

Mr. President, I find this second argument novel and worthy of examination. But first I must point out that many experts disagree with the first argument. Indeed, after an examination of the evidence, the majority of those who have written on campaign reform in general have rejected spending limitations as unwise, unneeded and probably unconstitutions. Given this fact, the authors and supporters of S. 3044 will undoubtedly have an extremely difficult time demonstrating the "indispensable public advantage" the courts would be looking for as evidence that such a law should be sustained.

But let me return now to the argument that by limiting speech we would be expanding it. This argument was summarized in the 1972 issue of Harvard Civil Rights-Civil Liberties Law Review which stated that such a law would prevent "either side from flooding the media with a single point of view ... (and) prevent one candidate from distorting, by sheer volume rather than by repetition of information in political advertising presented by opposing candidates." 31

This is an interesting view, but one that Professor Fleishman notes:

Assumes this Amendment Congress—knows how much information is the right amount and reflects a basic distrust in the capacity of individual citizens to discount the greater volume of political advertising in reaching their decisions. 32

Professor Redish also rejects this rather novel argument saying that while:

It is generally argued that a wealthy candidate should be permitted to "buy his election" with his financial and that legislated limits on campaign spending are therefore necessary. The reasoning in this argument seems to be that when one candidate's financial resources are limited, the only equitable way to ensure the wealthier candidate to reduce his spending to a level approximating that of his opponent. In other words, if a portion of the voting public is to be generally unfamiliar with one candidate's view and records because of his financial inability to become well known, it is only fair that the public be almost as uninformed about the other candidate. Such reasoning presents a very clear cut case conflict with the First Amendment right of free speech. If there is a serious possibility of encouraging as much communication in the political realm as possible. 33

I state that if my amendment is adopted we will retain Federal financing at the same levels, thereby assuring all candidates of adequate money with which to bring their own platforms into the view of public without venturing into the unconstitutional realm of retorting that no other legislative limits may be spent.

I have to agree with Redish, Winter, and Fleishman on these points. It seems to me beyond question that: spending limitations of the kind under consideration are in violation of the first amendment.

I recognize that the Supreme Court has never faced a case involving these limitations, but in analogous cases a majority of the Court has been willing to accept the argument that if applied to expenditures limitations would force a finding of unconstitutionality.

The fact is not forget that portions of the 1971 Act have already been declared unconstitutional and that we have an affirmative obligation to square our actions with the dictates of the Founding Fathers. There is no way we can do that and still support S. 3044 as written.

Before I conclude, I would like to turn to the statement by the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) 3 years ago. I have read the memorandum the Common Cause has prepared supporting the constitutionality of spending limits and I have read as much of the literature on the subject as time has permitted.

The fact that strikes me is that to argue in support of the constitutionality of these limits requires one to accept a theory of the First Amendment that civil libertarians have uniformly rejected and that is antithetical to the concept of free speech in a democratic society. 34

I only hope that those who, like the Senator from Massachusetts, have reversed field and have either accepted or argued that such limits on political discourse can be justified or are ignoring the question, realize that they are proposing for the Constitution that might prove dangerous to the very concept of a free society.

It is a view that I, for one, cannot accept and I, therefore, urge the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record the footnotes referred to in my prepared text.

There being no objection, the footnotes were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

22 The contribution of money allows citizens to participate in the political process. Persons without much time have few al-
23 persons. Campaign contributions are also vehicles of expression for donors seeking to persuade other citizens on public issues. Contributing to a candidate allows individuals to pool their resources and voice their message far more effectively than if each spoke singly. This is criticism of campaign financing is that it permits companies and trade associations to contribute to politicians and to join a potesta organization and propagate their views beyond their voting districts. Persons who do not wish to purchase the sympathy of the Supreme Court, for example, can demonstrate their convictions by contributing to the campaigns of syndi-
24 Nor is there anything inherently wrong with contributing to candidates who agree with one's views on social and economic poli-
25 to the donor himself, directly. This is a characteristic of a free political system. Those who seek to regulate that kind of contribution can stand with those who would deny the vote to welfare recipients to prevent that vote from being "purchased" by political contributions. So long as we accept the beneficent of economic favor as a proper function of government, potential recipients will tend to exchange their vote for monetary benefits.
26 Contributions of this sort may represent broad interests that might otherwise be underrepresented. apple's, land owners, real estate developers consider small but significant contributions to the financing of a campaign against proposals to restrict the use of large undeveloped areas. Certainly they represent their own economic interest, but they also indirectly represent potential purchasers, an "interested" group that would otherwise go unnoticed. These contributions may themselves future purchasers at the critical moment.
27 These functions of campaign contributions are often ignored because critics of the present system mistake cause and effect. A senator may support union causes because he receives large union contributions but in individual contributions because he supports the cause.
28 Contributions also serve as a barometer of the intensity of voter feeling. In a majoritarian system, voters who feel exceptionally strongly about particular issues may be more apt to reflect that feeling adequately in periodic votes. As members of the anti-war movement often pointed out, the values regarded as most important to them are the only ones worthy of inclusion in periodic elections where the stance of the available candidates does not permit a clear signal to be given.
29 This function might be discounted if large contributions reflected only intense but idiosyncratic views. For the most part, however, intense feelings will not generate substantial funds unless large numbers of citizens feel that they are impelled to voice their concerns. People who feel strongly about United States support for a war are free to contribute to voice their conviction with greater effect through carefully directed campaign donations than in periodic elections in which the stance of the available candidates does not permit a clear signal to be given.
30 Candidates seeking change, moreover, may have far greater need for, and make better use of, campaign money than those with established images or those defending the existing system. 39 The challenge to the arguments that priargued that wealth nevertheless is skewing the process. This argument rests on the assumption that by reducing the personal political power of the large contributor, political influence will be spread more evenly through the electorate. Any argument seems almost surely wrong, for limitations on the use of money may aggravate rather than diminish any distortion. It is not clear how the political underprivileged are to benefit from such a move. Use of money for political purposes may be even more unevenly distributed than wealth.

For example, the so-called "issue" campaigns and campaign financing may well enhance the power of those who control the media, particularly if public access is reduced and thus increase candidate dependence on the goodwill of the media. Limitations on the use of money must also increase the relative resource of the wealthy, and this in turn will allow them to spend more money and influence decision makers. In any event, a ban on contributions by the wealthy will not allay the fears of the poor. The political power of the people on the one hand and a disadvantage to their candidates on the other political viewpoint.

This argument rests on the assumption that unions favor a ban on contributions because their own power would be relatively increased as a result of the host of "indirect contributors" who are now left free. What emerges is the likelihood that restrictions on private campaign financing will not increase the public money; it is not clear generally but will further concentrate it in already powerful segments of the community. Ironically, the increment will largely fall to various groups that do not now receive direct resources useful for political purposes (free time, control of the media, ability to influence candidates) and, of course, will affect campaign financing in short in fact by reducing the political power and expanding the range of discourse.

The call for regulation of campaign financing can be extended to other kinds of resources and could only become more of a call for free time and the ability to attract public attention. Finally, groups with the ability to take their money "underground" and operate independent "issue" (rather than "political") campaigns will have their power increased. It has been reported, for example, that unions favor a ban on contributions because their own power would be relatively increased as a result of the host of "indirect contributors" who are now left free. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. President, are we under a time limitation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 15 minutes on each side. The Senator has 15 minutes plus the time remaining from his 1 hour.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I call up the amendment and ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with. It reads like gobbledygook, but its effect is to remove the ceiling on overall expenditures. In other words, all those portions of the bill that would place a total limit on campaign expenditures would be excised. As I explained earlier, however, it would preserve the federal financing aspects of the bill.

Mr. President, I would also like to send to the desk a modification of my amendment and ask unanimous consent that it be accepted.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I would like to direct a moment's attention to the legislation that we will all live to regret; legislation that will most assuredly be found to be unconstitutional once its key provisions are tested. It is for these reasons that I have offered my amendment. I understand it may be an exercise in futility; yet I think the effort must be made.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BUCKLEY. I yield.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I understand the Senator's constitutional question, and I think he has performed a real service in bringing it out in clear fashion. I would like to ask, however, what his amendment does.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Its effect is to eliminate limitations on total expenditures by on behalf of a candidate. It does not affect the public financing aspects of this bill. It assures that, within the limitations set, all candidates for Federal office will be provided with public campaign funds. My intent is as I indicated in my formal remarks to raise the important constitutional questions that I feel should be answered before we vote on final passage of S. 19. Mr. NUNN. But it would eliminate the overall limitation on what a candidate could spend in a campaign?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Yes, and on what may be contributed, though not on the limits on what an individual could legally contribute.

Mr. NUNN. It simply affects what a candidate could spend.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Yes.

Mr. NUNN. Does it affect the subceilings on advertising and media expenses?

Mr. BUCKLEY. No, my concern is with the problems raised by a ceiling on total spending.

Mr. NUNN. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

I certainly would like to support the amendment of the distinguished Senator from New York, but without taking a position on that or having a vote on it, I would like to direct a motion to the bill as a whole, and if that fails, then the Senator's amendment would still be in order.

Mr. President, I move that the bill and pending amendment be now laid on the table, and I ask for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. Church), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. Inouye), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. Long), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGee), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. Proxmire), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Metzenbaum), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Stennis), are necessarily absent.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. Fong), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. Goldwater), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Percy), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. Young), are necessarily absent.

Mr. MAJORS. I announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. William L. Scott), is absent on official business.

So the motion to table the bill (S. 3044) was rejected.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield briefly to me?

Mr. BUCKLEY. I yield to the majority leader.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on the pending amendment where I understand is divided into two parts—and I understand that if need be he intends to ask for a rollcall vote on both—there will be a limitation of 10 minutes. This meets with the distinguished Senator's approval and that of the leadership and the managers of the bill on each of the two parts, if there is a rollcall, the time to be equally divided between the Senator from New York (Mr. Buckley) and the manager of the bill, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Cannon), and that the votes on each, if any, be limited in duration such that if any would include, may I say, before the final judgment is made, a motion to table as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, as the distinguished majority leader has stated, my amendment is divided into two parts. I shall ask for the yeas and nays on the first part.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will be in order. The Senator will suspend until order is restored.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me on my time?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Gladly.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, the second part of the division of the amendment of the Senator from New York relating to judicial review is acceptable to me, and I would like to propose, if he wishes to do so, to accept that part of the division. That is, as I understand, agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I am delighted. I had hoped that the managers would accept it.

Mr. BUCKLEY. The Senator will, then, ask for the yeas and nays on the first part.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Therefore, I ask for the yeas and nays only on the first part. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McFadden). The question is on agreeing to the second part of the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York may proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will be in order.

The Senator from Nevada may proceed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will be in order.

The Senator from Nevada may proceed.

Mr. CANNON. For the benefit of my colleagues who were not here during the discussion, the distinguished Senator from New York raised the constitutional question as to a limitation on contributions and expenditures. Basically, that is what this amendment does. It just removes a limitation on contributions and expenditures. Accordingly, I am opposed to the amendment, and I hope it will be defeated.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I just want to clarify one point. My amendment does not affect limits on individual contributions. It is limited to the amounts in the bill remain. What my amendment does do is lift the ceilings on total expenditures.

In other words, as I understand it, at a certain time the total contributions received by a candidate reach the statutory limit now written into this bill, and then no one can come along and choose to express his support of that candidate by contributing additional money to him.

In my remarks, I cited the opinion of any number of constitutional lawyers to the effect that such a limitation is clearly violative of first amendment freedom of speech and association.

Mr. President, if the distinguished Senator from Nevada has yielded back his time, I yield back the remainder of mine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All remaining time has been yielded back.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. COKK. I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McFadden). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. Pastore) to lay on the table part 1 of the amendment of the Senator from New York (Mr. Buckley). On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.
Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senate from Texas consider a reduction of the time on his amendment from 30 to 20 minutes?

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, perhaps it could be done within 15 minutes, if I may have 10 minutes and the manager of the bill. (Laughter.)

Mr. MANSFIELD. The manager of the bill says that will be fine with him. So, Mr. President, I move unanimous consent that there be a time limitation on the Tower amendment now pending of 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, there will be no further votes tonight. This will conclude the consideration of the pending business at the moment.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, is there something which precludes me from speaking for 5 minutes tonight?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Well, we wanted to start it tomorrow. Too many Senators are tired right now.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 744, S. 3231, a bill to provide payments to poultry and egg producers and processors be limited to not exceed 1 hour when it is called up tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that there are three amendments at the desk.

Mr. MANSFIELD. All right. Within that, I ask unanimous consent that there be 10 minutes on each amendment, to be equally divided and controlled between the manager of the bill and the sponsor of the amendment.

Mr. GRIPPIN, Mr. President, reserving the right to object—assuming that the amendments are germane to the bill?

Mr. MANSFIELD. They have to be germane to the bill.

Mr. GRIPPIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I am a cosponsor of one of the amendments. How much time was allocated to the amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. 10 minutes.

Mr. JAVITS. That is only 5 minutes to a side. Will you give us 10 minutes on the amendment we are interested in?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Not to exceed—well, the one that Senator Javits is interested in, let that time limitation be 20 minutes, with 10 minutes to a side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, now there are some nominations which were reported from the Foreign Relations Committee today unanimously, relative to appointments in the United Nations.

Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session to consider those nominations, which were reported earlier today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

CALENDAR CALL

Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider the concurrent resolutions (S. Con. Res. 81) relating to unaccounted-for personnel captured, killed, or missing during the Indochina conflict, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at this time that the technical amendments be considered on the floor and approved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 81), as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.
Mr. GRIFFIN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The presiding was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, as amended, with the presiding, reads as follows:

Whereas the Agreement on Ending the War and Respecting Refugees, signed in Paris on January 27, 1973, the joint communiqué of the parties thereto, such agreement, signed in Paris on June 13, 1973, provide that such parties shall:

(1) repatriate all captured military and civilian personnel,

(2) seize each other in obtaining information regarding missing personnel and the location of the burial sites of deceased personnel,

(3) facilitate the exhumation and repatriation of the remains of deceased personnel.

(4) take such other steps as may be necessary to determine the fate of personnel still considered to be missing in action; and

Whereas the Government of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam, under the leadership of the Provisional Revolutionary Government, of Vietnam have failed to comply with the obligations and objects of the agreement and joint communiqué, especially the provisions concerning an accounting of the missing in action; and

Whereas the Lao Patriotic Front has failed to supply information regarding captured and missing personnel or the burial sites of personnel killed in action, as provided in the Lao agreement of February 2, 1973, and the protocol of September 14, 1973; and

Whereas it has not been possible to obtain information from the Viet Cong and Cambodian authorities opposed to the Government of the Khmer Republic concerning Americans and international journalists missing in that country; Now, Therefore, It is resolved Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Senate that similar steps should be made by the Government of the United States through appropriate diplomatic and international channels to persuade the Government of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam, the Provisional Revolutionary Government of Vietnam, and the Lao Patriotic Front to comply with their obligations and respect to personnel captured or killed during the Vietnam conflict and with respect to repatriating missing personnel: that every effort be made to obtain the cooperation of the various parties to the conflict in providing information with respect to personnel missing in Cambodia; and that further efforts be made to obtain necessary cooperation for search teams to inspect each site and other locations where personnel may have been lost.

Sec. 2. The Government of the United States should use every effort to bring about such reciprocal actions by the parties to the peace agreement, including the Government of the Republic of Vietnam and the Royal Lao Government, as will be most likely to bring about the adherence of the Government of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam, the Provisional Revolutionary Government of Vietnam and the Lao Patriotic Front to their obligations as contained in the Agreement on Ending the War and Respecting Refugees.

Sec. 3. The Congress expresses its support and sympathy for the families and loved ones of the American prisoners of war and remembers those who have suffered such deep anguish for so long due to the undiscover- ing in action.

Sec. 4. Upon agreement to the resolution by both Houses of the Congress, the Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of such resolution to the President of the United States.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay the motion on the table was agreed to.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
SENATE FLOOR DEBATES ON
APRIL 11, 1974
Organized labor has much money to pur- sue its political goals. In the 1972 presidential election, an estimated $110 million went to labor as a direct contribution and $191,295 to members of the House Judiciary Committee alone. Of that total, $49,295 went to the Chair, $24,100 to the Ranks, and the rest was paid to others in the labor movement. The AFL-CIO already has some scales hanging on its belt, but the 12th District of Pennsylvania had to support the winner, Rep. John Murtha, labor forces also claim credit for the election of Rep. Richard V. Hendrickson in Michigan.

Finally, the last source of confidence among labor leaders is that they are on their way to having a vote-proof Congress. The American people are no longer interested in public financing of campaigns and strict limitations on campaign spending. If the contributions to those whose labor politics are re- duced in the United States, non-financial con- tributions will be all the more effective.

If Congress has a goal of assuring fair elec- tions, then they must not place a dollar value on indirect assistance by such groups as COPE so that all candidates at least have equal campaign handshakes.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS
Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, is there any further morning business? The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HATHAWAY). Is there any further morning business? If not, morning business is concluded.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974
The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HATHAWAY). Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume the consideration of the unfinished business, S. 3044, which the clerk will state.

The legislative clerk read as follows: Amendment to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER), No. 1153, with the time thereon to be divided 12 minutes to the Senator from Texas and 5 minutes to the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON).

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. President, this amendment provides that on or before July 1 of each year, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation shall obtain from the Internal Revenue Service all returns of income filed by each Member of Congress for the previous 5 years. After receipt, the committee shall submit these returns to an intensive inspection and audit for the purpose of determining the President's income tax liability. The report of the committee shall be forwarded to each Member and to the Internal Revenue Service.

It does not take long to realize that this is the procedure which was followed in the income tax returns of President and Mrs. Nixon.

The question posed in this amendment is simple: will Congress vote to bring Members of Congress to the President's income tax returns, if one of those Members is President Nixon? Today's vote will provide the answer.

When I offered the amendment, the presi- dient's income tax returns were leaked to the media some months ago, President Nixon stepped forward and offered the joint committee the opportunity to review his return. The committee did so and found the President owing. But, much to his credit, the President denied himself the appeals procedure available to every other American citizen.

I believe it is only right that the Congress take the same steps to insure that our quest for fiscal integrity not only extends to the executive branch, but to the legislative as well. If some members of Congress who were so eager to see the President's tax returns gone over with a fine-tooth comb would vote "yes" today, we would have passage with very few dissenters.

In this day of distrust for public officeholders, I think it is imperative that members of Congress—both from the Democratic and Republican parties—come together and act in a non-partisan manner. It is not enough to say that the President opposes it. If Congress has a goal of assuring fair elections, then they must not place a dollar value on indirect assistance by such groups as COPE so that all candidates at least have equal campaign handshakes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Amendment to amend No. 1153, on page one, line six, after "Congress" insert "each employee or official of the Executive, Judicial, and legislative branches whose gross income for the most recent year exceeds $20,000,"

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, my intention is to ask for the yeas and nays on this, but first I ask unanimous consent to strike out the distinguished Senator from Montana (Mr. TOWER), No. 1153, with the time thereon to be divided 12 minutes to the Senator from Montana (Mr. MANSFIELD) and 5 minutes to the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. Robert C. Byrd) be added as a cosponsor of the amendment, as well as the distinguished Senator from Kan- sas (Mr. Dole).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I would assume that as the sponsor of the original amendment, I have additional time to argue against the amendment of the Senator from Montana (Mr. MANSFIELD)?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me briefly, on my time, I would ask that the name of the distinguished Senator from Florida (Mr. Curtis) also be added as a co- sponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I think that the amendment of the Senator from Montana would impose too great a burden on the joint committee and its staff because it would involve thousands of people. They are not elected public officials. My purpose with my amendment was to have the elected Members of Congress, the coordinate branch with the executive branch, submit to the same kind of scrutiny that the President of the United States would be subjected to. He and the Vice President are the only two elected members of the executive branch.

Therefore I think that the scope of the amendment should be confined at this time to elected Members of Congress.
I do not argue against the merits of what my distinguished friend from Montana seeks to do. It would seem to me that some other mechanism might be used for that purpose, such as the Comptroller General of the United States.

For that reason, I would not want to accept nor will I vote for the amendment of the Senator from Montana in its present form.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas will state it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. This amendment, if adopted, will it be subject to further amendment or adoption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator asking whether or not he can offer an amendment to this amendment? Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes. After this amendment has been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator cannot do so without unanimous consent, unless this is an amendment that has been printed and is at the desk, and the Senator offered before cloture has been invoked.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I would have to have unanimous consent. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may offer an amendment after this amendment has been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, what is the time remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now on the amendment of the Senator from Montana. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The Senator from Nevada has 2 minutes remaining. The Senator from Texas has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I would simply like to ask the distinguished Senator from Montana if he would alter his amendment to give this responsibility to the General Accounting Office rather than the joint committee, because I think the joint committee should focus on the returns of the Members of Congress and that that attention should not be diluted by their having also to pay attention to all these other matters.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator is proposing that the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana, which applies to the executive branch and the judicial branch, be under the supervision of the Comptroller General rather than the joint committee.

Mr. TOWER. That is my suggestion, because I think the joint committee staff would have to be beefed up just to handle the returns of Members of Congress. If we go into all the myriad of bureaucracy, it will be a formidable task.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I would be delighted to agree to that, because I want to assert the principle that many of us have been trying for more than a decade to assert, and that is to treat the three equal branches of government on an equal basis. If we are going to ask Senators to lay out their tax returns, then I think that members of the judicial branch and members of the executive branch earning $20,000 a year or more should accept the same responsibility. I am prepared to do it. I would be willing to.

I have been trying to do so for more than 10 years. I would gladly taste to modify the amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be modified along the lines of the suggestion made by the distinguished Senator from Texas, Mr. CANNON. What is it?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It places it in the Comptroller General.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I had an amendment for that purpose.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the Senator join me in that change?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes.

I do not think the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue and Taxation should see our returns if we are not going to see theirs. I believe that this agency of Congress, the Comptroller General’s Office, has the ability to do it.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I think I can clean up this matter.

If the Senator from Montana would temporarily withdraw his amendment, I will ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment to bring the entire matter under the jurisdiction of the Comptroller General, and then I think that would make it a little more simple for the Senate.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I must respectfully decline to do so. I am interested in a principle I have been trying to achieve for more than a decade. I would not object to the distinguished Senator from Texas changing it from the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue and Taxation, which would have supervision, to the Comptroller General. But the principle I am trying to achieve has to stay in, so far as I am concerned; and it is the principle that the Senator from Arkansas, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, is trying to achieve, insofar as the supervisory factor is concerned.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If we are going to do this, then the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue and Taxation is not the body to examine the Senator’s returns and mine. They are Members of the body. Who would audit their returns? It ought to go to the Comptroller General.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I seek unanimous consent that, in one way or another, this joint committee having the supervisory responsibility, that function be transferred in the amendment now pending to the Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. TOWER. I think the Senator from Montana misunderstood me. I was going to modify my amendment, which would make it easier for his amendment to be attached. That, then, would not require any modification of the part of his amendment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That would be fine.

If the Senator will ask unanimous consent to make that substitution as to what and who the supervisory agency would be, I have no objection. I am trying to retain in there the principle I have been trying to achieve.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order that I propound the unanimous-consent agreement to amend my amendment as follows—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is so modified.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment as modified will be printed in the Record.

The amendment as modified is as follows:

On page 1, line 4, strike “Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation” and insert “Comptroller General of the United States.”

On page 1, line 7, strike “committee staff” and insert “Comptroller General of the United States.”

On page 2, lines 3 and 4 strike “Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation” and insert “Comptroller General of the United States.”

On page 2, line 6 through “and to” line 7.

On page 2, line 10, after “proper,” insert “Comptroller General of the United States shall deliver a copy of such report and results of such audit and inspection to the Members or candidate concerned.”

Section 2. The Internal Revenue Service shall assist the Comptroller General of the United States as necessary in administering the provisions of this title.”

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. What is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. TOWER. Provided the unanimous-consent agreement I propounded is not objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent agreement has not been objected to, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWER. So that now the amendment of the Senator from Montana is in order. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TOWER. The Senator yield back their time on the amendment of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CANNON. I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. President, I would simply point out that this is exactly what we have required, in substance, elsewhere in the bill.

On page 79, we adopted heretofore, in S. 372 — and it is in this bill—a provision, the Cannon amendment, in section 401.
The other day is between the amount of $20,000 and $25,000. In the bill as it now stands, it reads:
Who is compensated at a rate in excess of $25,000 per annum.

So the amendment of the Senator from Montana is in per annum more restrictive. But this requires a full and complete disclosure by every member of the executive, the legislative, and the judicial branch who is compensated in excess of that amount, and candidates for congressional seats, and the President and the Vice President, to make a full disclosure in accordance with the terms and provisions hereof; and it requires submission in Ohio that is required on an income tax return.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I submit that disclosure and audit are not the same thing: that the Senator from Montana has an amendment more restrictive. But this requires a full and complete disclosure by every member of the executive, the legislative, and the judicial branch who is compensated in excess of that amount, and candidates for congressional seats, and the President and the Vice President, to make a full disclosure in accordance with the terms and provisions hereof; and it requires submission in Ohio that is required on an income tax return.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce

The PRESIDING OFFICIAL. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULLBRIGHT), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. BULGER), and the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. MANSFIELD), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Montana (Mr. MITTEN), Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH), are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH), would vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOK), and the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. SCOTT), are absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT), is absent on official business.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Comptroller General audit them. I am satisfied with the amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN and Mr. TOWER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICIAL. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas. The yeas and nays have been ordered. All time has expired.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I am supposed to have some more time, because the time assigned to the Senator from Montana?

The PRESIDING OFFICIAL. No.

Mr. TOWER. That came out of my time?

The PRESIDING OFFICIAL. No.

Mr. TOWER. That is the intent of the Senator from Texas, so I want that understood as a part of the legislative history.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, when I voted for the Mansfield amendment to the Tower amendment earlier today but the amendment I intended to offer was amended as I wanted to make it clear I have not the slightest objection to having my own tax returns audited. Even though I am sympathetic with Senator Mansfield's concern for equality of treatment for Members of Congress, I voted against the Mansfield amendment as I feel it is wrong to simply single out the tax returns for the past 5 years of all legislative, executive and judicial branch employees making over $20,000 a year to be audited.

What is the manpower required by GAO to do this kind of work? How many employees would this involve? No one could tell me before the vote, but it was assumed the number probably in the hundreds of thousands.

How many millions of dollars a year will this cost? No one can tell me.

On a cost-effective basis, could this be an unnecessary waste of Federal Government funds. I am hopeful this amendment, if never be given amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICIAL. The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. McCLELLAN) is recognized.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator's yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, due to the very strong possibility of a number of votes amending one another, there be a time limitation of 15 minutes on roll calls from here on out.

The PRESIDING OFFICIAL. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICIAL. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I believe I have unanimous consent to offer an amendment at this time. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICIAL. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, the amendment which I intended to offer, and which I will now not offer, is the same modification that the distinguished Senator from Texas made to his original amendment. That modification corrects one of the flaws I observed in the original amendment. I did not want it; I did not think it was wise to have the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation auditing the Senator's return or my return. I did not know who was going to audit their's. I thought it was better to ator from Hawaii (Mr. I'IONG), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), and the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) are necessarily absent.

I further announced that, if present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) would vote "yea.

So Mr. TOWER'S amendment (No. 1153), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1131 and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 76, between lines 18 and 19, insert the following:

"(3) For purposes of this section, with respect to a political committee which establishes, administers, and solicits contributions to a separate segregated fund provided by payments from a corporate or labor organization, as permitted under section 610, the term "contribution" includes the fair market value of services which an individual who is an employee or member of such corporation or labor organization, respectively, provides to such a committee for, or for the benefit of, a candidate, or which such an individual provides to, or for the benefit of, a candidate at the direction of such a committee."

On page 76, line 19, strike out "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(4)".

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a limit-are often overshadowed by various services provided free of charge to favored candidates under the guise of “political education” for union members. Indirect aid includes some of labor’s most potent political weapons: assignment of paid staff members to candidates’ campaigns, use of union computerized mobilization of get-out-the-vote drives.

TRIPS AND BENEFITS

Dues have been used, the documents indicate, to supply IAM-backed candidates with poll and printing services and to finance “nonpartisan” registration drives, trips by union representatives to烟宽容 candidates, and dinners benefiting office seekers endorsed by the machinists. Machinist-backed candidates are almost invariably Democrats.

An important question is whether these dues-financings do not violate federal laws that for decades have barred unions and corporations from using their treasury funds to contribute “anything of value” to candidates for federal office. The primary thrust of such direct contributions by unions must come from voluntary donations coaxed out of the members. The IAM now discloses that the Wyoming Democrat Sen. Gale McGee’s unsuccessful campaign treasurer, a Democrat, directly released $15,200 into his campaign. That $500 went to Sen. Albert Gore, Democrat from Tennessee, during his losing reelection effort.

The political activities of the machinists’ union are, indeed, aimed at the union’s members and are therefore proper, says William Wolfe, chairman of the union’s political arm, the Machinists Non-Partisan Political League.

DRAWING THE LINE

Even labor’s critics concede that it is sometimes hard to draw the line between activities designed to sell a candidate to a union’s membership and those intended to sway voters in general. A member of the machinists as- signed to promote a candidate among other machinists may inevitably find himself wooing other voters as well.

Still, the machinists’ documents suggest that the union has often sought to provide members as candidates to write off dues money as contributed expenses for such direct contributions by unions must come from voluntary donations coaxed out of the members. “Appreciation dinners” for Senators and Representatives often serve as a conduit for “soft money,” that is, donations that have not been counted as campaign contributions. The intention of controlling such donations was drafted with the intent of controlling the activities of individual union members or officers of a corporation, and it was not being done for or under the direction of the political committee or organization.

Mr. MAGNUSON. But it in no way acts to prohibit an individual—

Mr. TOWER. No, I made that very clear, that there was no intent not at all against the activities of individuals under any direction of the organization. It could, of course, be a matter for adjudication.

Mr. MAGNUSON. What would happen if a group of individuals got together on their own?—

Mr. TOWER. That would be illegal if they were not working under the direction of a political action committee.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOWER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. In the event that an individual of that group was or several were inspired by a union, then what would be the effect?

Mr. TOWER. I think this would have to be a matter of adjudication, probably, to determine it. If there was a complaint that someone was working at the direction of the union, it could, of course, be a matter for adjudication.

Mr. THURMOND. In other words, if the individual or the group, of their own free will and accord, without any direction, suggestion or inspiration from the union, go out and works, that is all right?

Mr. TOWER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. THURMOND. But if they do so under direction, suggestion or inspiration from them, that would violate this section?

Mr. TOWER. That is right.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOWER. I yield.

Mr. BIDEN. If the union endorses a candidate, and it so happens that an employee working for that candidate on his own, is it assumed that he is working for that union?

Mr. TOWER. No. It is not, and this would not be charged against any legal contribution that was made to the candidate by the organization endorsing him, as long as he is a self-starter, working on his own initiative and not under the direction of the contributing organization.

Mr. BIDEN. How is the direction determined?

Mr. TOWER. Well, if, for example, the union says, “All right, tomorrow morning you and you and you report to somebody’s campaign headquarters and get to work and work 4 hours during the day,” then you have to figure the fair market value of that 4 hours of labor as a part of the contribution. But if the individual union member, regardless of the fact that his union has endorsed a candidate, hired you and you volunteers to work, that is his own business.

Mr. BIDEN. It sounds like a fairly equitable thing, but will it not turn out to be a sham? Will it not be understood that this is pulling another fraud on the American people?

Mr. TOWER. I think it depends on how the law is enforced. The whole act could be shammed, all known.

Mr. BIDEN. How could anyone legitimately enforce it, when there is no tighter determination as to what constitutes whether or not someone is working without any direction of the political committee? Suppose the union leader just says, “I think, Senator, I like that guy. I-Biden. Were I you, I would not be out supporting the amendment and that ends it.” Then you come to a judgment.

Mr. TOWER. If I had been coerced against my will—

Mr. BIDEN. You would not do that, would you?

Mr. TOWER. I would file a complaint.

Mr. BIDEN. I am not worried about coercion. I am worried about who determines whether you are chargeable to me. Mr. TOWER. The court would make a determination of that, or a situation like that. The election commission—the organization set up in the bill.

This point I am trying to make is if someone were directing a person to work in a campaign on the organization’s time, someone who is an employee of that organization—

Mr. CANNON. That would be a direct violation of section 610. Mr. BIDEN. That would be a violation of existing law.

Mr. TOWER. No, no—in a political committee.

Mr. CANNON. It is a violation for a union or a corporation to direct someone—

Mr. TOWER. That is not my understanding.

Mr. CANNON. To work in a campaign.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I was not intending to comment on the question of the distinguished chairman. If it is really a violation, there would be no objection—

Mr. TOWER. That is right.

Mr. GRIFFIN. To accept the Senator’s amendment. But I should like to ask a question on a different point, for purposes of trying to determine what the amendment does and would mean.

In 1970, in the election in Michigan for Governor, as I recall, there were allegations that the UAW gave members who were not UAW members a $100 check as a gift at that time, so as not to affect the union’s power. Would the Senator from Texas have some comment on what impact his amendment would have on that?

Mr. TOWER. It would be prohibited under the provisions of the amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Senator from Texas.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Stafford). Who yields time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I simply point out that under section 610 of the Corrupt Practices Act at the present time, it is unlawful for any corporation, whatever, or any labor organization, to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election, and so forth. Certainly, if a corporation or a labor union pays the salary of an individual and puts that person out to work for a candidate, that is unlawful. It is unlawful under existing law. I should like Mr. TOWER's amendment to go beyond that.

In section 610 as modified—we have amended 610 to clarify the definitions, and the words used in the section, the phrase "contributions or expenditures"—then it goes on to define them as follows:

But shall not include communications by a corporation to its stockholders and their families by a labor organization to its members and their families on any subject; nonpartisan registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns by a corporation aimed at its stockholders and their families, or by a labor organization aimed at its members and their families; the establishment, administration, and solicitation of contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes by a corporation or labor organization . . . .

Is it the Senator's intention to change any part of that existing law that I have just referred to?

Mr. TOWER. It is the intention of the Senator from Texas. The language of the section reads this way:

For purposes of this section, with respect to a political committee which establishes, administers, and solicits contributions to a separate segregated fund supported by payments from a corporation or labor organization, as permitted under section 610 . . .

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Nevada has expired. Does the Senator yield himself additional time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I am not yielding to him on my time. He is using his own time. I cannot yield my time, so I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator yielded to the Senator from Texas for a question of his 2 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, under the rule on cloture, a Senator cannot yield his own time. I would ask the Parliamentarian if that is correct. I yield the recognition but the answer has to come on the time of the person who is answering.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state that the time does not come out of the other side.

Mr. CANNON. For answering a question? I am not answering a question. I am still listening. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Stafford). Who yields time?

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, most of this talk has been about labor organizations but the same kind of abuse can be practiced by a corporation as well. As I pointed out in my remarks, if this amendment is not passed, then corporations might be encouraged to contribute time and effort which is not measured in monetary terms.

The unions are solidly against this amendment. There is no room for argument. If the Corrupt Practices Act at the present amendment is not passed, then corporations intend to go beyond that.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. CANNON. It would appear that what the Senator is attempting to do is to prohibit any volunteers who are in a separate organization, on a voluntary basis, from working, without charging this, in the primary, that would apply to the young Republicans, to the young Democrats, or to any other organization.

Mr. TOWER. No. It applies only to sections. The specific reference is made to section 610.

Mr. CANNON. It certainly reaches into the "separate segregated funds" in which we have already determined—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 1 minute of the Senator has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself another minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized for 1 additional minute.

Mr. CANNON. We have already tried to encourage the use of voluntary organizations and to encourage the establishment of "separate segregated funds"—both in union organizations and in management organizations so that they can participate on a voluntary basis in the election process.

Mr. President, I submit that this is just an attempt to reverse the position that Congress has already taken and is well established.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Stafford). Who yields time?

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on this amendment has now been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas (No. 1131).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. JENKINS), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. MITZENBAUM), and the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) would vote "nay."

Mr. CANNON. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), and the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WILLIAM L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) would vote "yea."

Mr. TOWER's amendment (No. 1131) was rejected.

Mr. TUNNEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me briefly?

Mr. TUNNEY. I yield.

OUTER CONTINENTAL SHELF LEASES

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, yesterday I was notified that the Department of the Interior had accepted 91 bids for their Outer Continental Shelf oil and gas drilling rights off the coast of Louis-
The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

AMENDMENT NO. 1136

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1136.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 9, line 24, strike out all through page 10, line 2, and substitute in lieu thereof the following:

Sec. 503. (a) (1) Every eligible candidate is entitled to a contribution in connection with his primary election campaign in an amount which is equal to the amount of contributions received by that candidate or his authorized committees, except that no contribution received as a subscription, loan, advance, or deposit, or as a contribution of products or services, shall be taken into account.

Mr. MANSFIELD. N. R. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNEY. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent there be a 10 minute limitation on the pending amendment, 5 minutes to be allotted to the manager of the bill, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) and 10 minutes to the manager of the amendment, the Senator from California (Mr. TUNNEY).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, this amendment relates only to primary campaigns and it specifies that only monetary contributions will be eligible for reimbursement from Federal funds. The contributions to political committees and loans would not be eligible for matching once the threshold has been reached that will then trigger the contribution of Federal funds. The way the bill reads that is as it relates to the contribution of services, products and loans. These products, services, and loans cannot be used for the purpose of reaching the threshold of contribution which will then trigger the use of Federal funds.

Once the threshold is met, the language of the bill is silent as it relates to loans and contributions of products and services.

What could happen is that a person after he reached the threshold and is eligible for Federal contributions, would have a fund-raising dinner at a hundred dollars a plate, but the notice sent out would read that the money contributor would only be a loan. Then, when the candidate received from the Federal Government on a matching basis the contribution as specified by the legislation, that $100 loan would be returned to the invitee. I think it would start a new rage in political dinners. I can foresee situations where many people would turn out to the dinner with the idea that their $100 was only going to be used on a loan basis and that they were going to get the money back. This would provide a greater contribution by the Federal Government to the primary campaigns than is envisioned in the law as written, because it is supposed to be on a 50-50 basis once the threshold is reached.

This amendment would close this loophole and make the donations conform to the language prior to the time the threshold is reached.

I hope the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

I do not share any skepticism of the reliability of people who are candidates for public office, nor do I assume a person who have time to go cut for a $100 a plate fundraising dinner to pledge the people that their money would be returned after the candidate received matching funds from the Federal Government, it would be completely illegal under the present act.

However, I see no difficulty in providing that language and I would be happy to accept the language if it made the Senator feel better.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. I yield back my time on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.
Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, this amendment, of course, already has been debated and voted on. With respect to exempting the congressional and senatorial campaign committees from any contribution limitations, it is exactly the same amendment that was repealed in this body on Monday by a vote of 44 to 36.

The only thing that is changed about the amendment is one letter, which was just agreed to. Indeed, if there had been an objection to that change, the amendment would not have been in order.

It seems to me we are simply wasting a lot of the Senate's time by voting on substantially the same amendment we have already repeated. The Senate has expressed its will very clearly on this issue, and I, therefore, move to lay the amendment on the table, and ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to table. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), and the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) would vote "yea."

Mr. LOTTIN. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG) and the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia (Mr. W. L. SCOTT) is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 40, as follows:

Not Voting—11
Church........... Holings........... Metzenbaum
Fong.............. Inouye.............. Randolph
Fulbright......... McGee.............. Scott
Goldwater........ McClellan........... William L.

So Mr. CLARK's motion to lay on the table Mr. BROCK's amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, I have another amendment; but before I address it, I should like to express my regret at the way the previous vote was brought to the floor. I think that the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK), as a matter of honest conviction, thought that the amendment I had offered was the same amendment as had been debated previously; certainly, in error. I have to assume that he did not know that. But the fact is that when we get into that kind of situation, when time is left on an amendment and a statement is made that could be rebutted, a motion to table prejudices the opportunity for rebuttal. I regret very much that we did not have a chance to explain the amendment to the Senate.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROCK. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Iowa consulted the Parliamentary yesterday after the close of the Senate from Tennessee had been offered, and got an opinion from the Parliamentarian that the amendment was not in order as it was written. That was the basis of my statement. I think that the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) has given the amendment by one letter, the amendment was in order.

As the amendment was printed, it was not in order, according to the advice of the Parliamentarian, Dr. Riddick. That was the basis of my statement.

Mr. BROCK. The statement is to the effect that the amendment was not changed by one word, not one phrase, not one fact.

I would say to the Senator from Iowa that perhaps he did not read the amendment, or perhaps he saw the wrong version, because the amendment, even as originally submitted at the desk, was not altered in a substantial way from that which was originally offered, from which we eliminated sections which resulted in the thousand dollar ceiling. We eliminated the first paragraph in its entirety. That paragraph related to section 614, on page 75.

We changed the language in the second paragraph to be specific in terms of the removal of exemption in terms of money.

But I would hope that Senators did not vote out of an erroneous impression. I am perfectly willing and prepared to lose a vote on the merits. I understand that, I hope that is the case in this particular instance. I wish we had had an opportunity to explain it. I would feel more comfortable if I had lost after I had had a chance to present a point of view different from that of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROCK. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. There is a very easy way to test the validity of that argument, because the Senator from Tennessee offered two amendments, Nos. 1176 and 1181, both of which are identical in every respect. Amendment No. 1181 is still available. If that amendment is in order, it could be called up at this time, and the Parliamentarian could rule on its validity.

Mr. BROCK. I think that even I would object to that, because it is identical to the original language in every jot and tittle. Perhaps that is how the Senator became confused in saying that they were the same, verbatim. They were not.

I shall not pursue that particular matter. I do not think that enough Senators are in the Chamber to change the outcome. I am not certain that the outcome is not pretty well predictable. We have set great deal of self-restraint legislation that simply cannot be enacted. We have decided to exercise our privilege to amend the bill to the point where it is a disaster. I hope that my colleagues are in the Chamber to do this, or I would feel very strongly about another amendment; but before I address it, I should like to express my regret at the way the previous vote was brought to the floor. I think that the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK), as a matter of honest conviction, thought that the amendment I had offered was the same amendment as had been debated previously; certainly, in error. I have to assume that he did not know that. But the fact is that when we get into that kind of situation, when time is left on an amendment and a statement is made that could be rebutted, a motion to table prejudices the opportunity for rebuttal. I regret very much that we did not have a chance to explain the amendment to the Senate. I wish we had had an opportunity to explain it. I would feel more comfortable if I had lost after I had had a chance to present a point of view different from that of the Senator from Iowa.
election laws. I realized when we virtually insisted that the committee report out a bill by a certain date this spring that we were not giving them time enough to write a really good bill.

As it happens, it is quite obvious that no bill at all will become law which resembles this one as it now stands.

I appreciate the fact that the Senate has not made the right to offer these amendments, the four which I have left, even though they were not printed. But at this time I feel that I would like to simply offer them, with a short recitation of each, for printing in the Record.

They are four good amendments, which would have made a better bill of this measure, but with the way the bill has been handled and treated up to now, the amendments which have been defeated and the amendments which have been approved, it is worse than no bill at all, and it is my firm belief that if this bill had been accepted by the Senate, there would be no strengthening of the election laws this year at all.

It could be possible to strengthen these laws if the bill were re-committed and then re-reported to both chambers to profit by the examples of the past 2 weeks. But I am not going to make the motion to recommit. If it is to be re-committed, that will have to be moved by those who have been strongly in favor of the bill. As it is now, I ask unanimous consent that my four proposed amendments and a resumé of each be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the resumés and amendments were ordered to be printed in the Record as follows:

RESUMÉ No. 1

Mr. President, one way to cut down campaign costs is to cut down campaign costs, and one way to do this is to shorten the time for campaigning.

It will cut down the time for spending. There is no sense why we spend so much time campaigning.

The British and the Canadians accomplish a campaign report in far a shorter time and for a fraction of our costs.

My amendment follows the intent, although not the language, of S. 343 which is pending before the House Elections Subcommittee.

This should be part of S. 3044. This amendment requires that primary elections for Federal office be held during a period that extends from the Tuesday after the first Monday in June until general election date.

This will change our present situation which has primaries among the States scattered throughout the calendar year from the Winter to Fall, but it still gives the States wide latitude in picking or choosing a time for their primaries to suit their specific requirements.

Presidential preference primaries would also be held anytime after the first Tuesday after the first Monday in June until convention time. Party conventions would be held beginning the 3rd Monday in August.

This amendment falls in line with the objectives of S. 343 which seeks to reform our election laws.

This amendment is a step towards cutting down our election costs and expenditures.

On page 86, line 17, insert the following:

AMENDMENT

CONGRESSIONAL PRIMARIES

SEC. 601. (a) If, under the law of any State, the candidate of a political party for election to the Senate or the House of Representatives is determined by a primary election or by a convention conducted by that party, the primary or convention shall be held on or after the first Tuesday after the first Monday in June. If a subsequent, additional primary election is necessary to determine the nominee for a State, that additional election shall be held within thirty days after the date of the first such primary election.

(b) For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "State" means each of the several States of the United States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Territory of Guam, and the Territory of the Virgin Islands; and the District of Columbia.

(c) If a subsequent primary election is necessary to determine the nominee for a State, subsection (b).

(2) a candidate, for election as Resident Commissioner to the United States, in the case of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or as Representative, in the case of the Territory of Guam or the Territory of the Virgin Islands, shall be deemed to be elected for election to the House of Representatives.

PRESIDENTIAL PREFERENCE PRIMARY ELECTIONS

SEC. 602. (a) No State which conducts a presidential preference primary election shall conduct that election before the first Tuesday after the first Monday in June during any year in which the election of the President and Vice-President is to be held.

(b) For purposes of this section, the term—

(1) "presidential preference primary election" means an election conducted by a State, in whole or in part, for the purpose of—

(A) permitting the vote of that State to express their preferences for the nomination of candidates by political parties for election to the office of President, or

(B) choosing delegates to the national nominating conventions held by political parties for the purpose of nominating such candidates; and

(2) "State" means each of the several States of the United States, and the District of Columbia.

NATIONAL NOMINATING CONVENTIONS

SEC. 603. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the Presidential preference primary election as described in subsection (b)(1); and the conventions held by national political parties for the purpose of nominating candidates for the office of President and Vice-President constitute an integral part of the process by which such officers are chosen by the people of the United States.

(2) by limiting the length of time during which the general election campaign for election to such offices occur, the integrity of the electoral process is better served; and

(3) in order to protect the integrity of the Presidential preference primary election and the conventions held by political parties for the purpose of nominating candidates for the office of President and Vice-President, the Congress, in the case of the nomination of candidates for the office of President by prescribing the time during which such elections and conventions shall be held.

(b) Any political party which nominates its candidate for election to the Office of President by national nominating conventions shall begin its activities on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in August of the year in which the elections of the President and Vice-President are to be held.

(c) The district court of the United States shall have jurisdiction, upon application made by the Attorney General, to enjoin the members of a political party from conducting a national nominating convention for the purpose of nominating the candidate of that party for election to the Office of President in violation of the provisions of this subsection (b).

RESUMÉ No. 2

Mr. President, the amendment I am offering would prohibit the short campaign advertising spot of ten, fifteen, or thirty seconds or up to five minutes unless it is a live or videocast presentation by the candidate, speaking on his own behalf and without any props, backdrops or sound effects.

In other words, a candidate under this amendment can purchase short television advertising spots for his campaign only if it is of his speaking directly to the electorate.

This is really what a campaign is about—to get one's positions and ideas to the voter to persuade the voter that these positions and ideas would best serve him.

Many campaigns have made much of a Madison Avenue image and candidates are packaged as a commodity to be bought and sold.

And they are sold like many of our products on the market today—by the short spot which develops an image, but tells us very little about the product itself or the ingredients which make up this product.

A candidate can speak for himself. Madison Avenue isn't needed.

Our campaigns are expensive and costs are increasing rather than being cut down.

And television advertising is a prime expense.

If adopted, this amendment will encourage dispersion of specific issues, for it is under the obligation of a personal appearance by a candidate photographed in a broadcasting studio without photographic, musical, or other embellishment, whether for simultaneous transmission or through the use of videotape, during which the candidate speaks for the duration of the broadcast.

On page 26, between lines 17 and 18, insert the following:

(d) Section 315 of such Act (47 U.S.C. 315) is amended by redesignating subsections (d), (e), (f), and (g) as (e), (f), (g), and (h), respectively, and by inserting after subsection (e) the following new subsection:

"(d) No television broadcasting station may, for any other purpose than a broadcast time in segments of less than five minutes duration for use by or on behalf of a legally qualified candidate in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal elective office. The preceding sentence does not apply in the case of a personal appearance by a candidate photographed in a broadcasting studio without photographic, musical, or other embellishment, whether for simultaneous transmission or through the use of videotape, during which the candidate speaks for the duration of the broadcast."

On page 27, line 14, strike out "(e) and insert in lieu thereof "(f)"."
Mr. President, this amendment would prohibit corporations or labor unions from setting up a special, segregated fund for the purpose of making contributions or expenditures by physical force, job discrimination, financial reprisals, or the threat thereof, or by requiring any person to make a contribution or expenditure as a condition of membership in a labor organization.

On page 74, line 21, after the semicolon insert "party;" and insert insert in lieu thereof the following:

PROHIBITION OF THE ESTABLISHMENT OF SEPARATE SEGREGATED POLITICAL FUNDS BY CORPORATIONS AND LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.

Sec. 303, Section 610 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out the last paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"It is unlawful for any national bank, corporation organized by authority of any Law of Congress, or any corporation, organization to establish, administer, or solicit contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes, or to encourage any person to make a contribution or expenditure by physical force, job discrimination, financial reprisals, or the threat thereof, or by requiring any person to make a contribution or expenditure as a condition of membership in a labor organization."

On page 74, line 21, after the semicolon insert "party;" and insert in lieu thereof "party;"

Resumed No. 4

Mr. President, if we want to control campaign contributions and expenditures. This amendment aims to cover one area pretty much left untouched by previous amendments. When it comes to monetary contributions, the Committee is specific.

An individual can contribute no more than $30,000 to any candidate and to no more than $25,000 in total political contributions during a calendar year.

Contributions of $100 or more must be by written instrument.

There is nothing to prevent my offering one candidate for purposes of the general election campaign.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to substitute a perfecting amendment changing the language of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. TAFT's amendment (No. 115, as modified) is as follows:

On page 52, line 8, change the period to a comma and insert thereafter the following:

"except that a political committee described in section 301(d)(2) may be designated as the central campaign committee of more than one candidate for purposes of the general election campaign."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, this amendment returns to the situation prior to 1971 Federal Election Campaign Act when Congressional sanction was given for corporations and labor unions to establish and administer, segregated funds for political purposes.

It would lessen to some extent the influence of money in our campaigns and give the individual citizen a greater role in our elections, which election reformers say is needed.

That is what they are arguing: eliminate the force of the vested interests and give the man-in-the-street a more dominant influence in our elections.

One start in that direction is to eliminate the source of influence that can be exerted by one organization-business or otherwise—and by the political money pots these organizations can muster up.

AMENDMENT

On page 28, line 7, after the semicolon insert "or";

and on page 28, line 11, strike out the semicolon and insert in lieu thereof a comma, closing quotation marks, and another semicolon.

On page 28, strike out lines 12 through 16.

On page 29, beginning with line 1 strike out through "organization" in line 5.

On page 30, beginning with line 19, strike out through line 2 on page 31 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"in the value of services rendered by individuals who volunteer to work without compensation on behalf of a candidate or campaign, without including the services of a professional campaign consultant, a professional telephone solicitor, a professional campaign worker, or a professional political consultant."

On page 65, line 22, after the semicolon insert "and".

On page 66, strike out "party;" and insert in lieu thereof "party;"

On page 66, strike out lines 3 through 5.

On page 71, strike lines 1 through 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

PROHIBITION OF THE ESTABLISHMENT OF SEPARATE SEGREGATED POLITICAL FUNDS BY CORPORATIONS AND LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.

Sec. 303, Section 610 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out the last paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"It is unlawful for any national bank, corporation organized by authority of any Law of Congress, or any corporation, organization to establish, administer, or solicit contributions to a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes, or to encourage any person to make a contribution or expenditure by physical force, job discrimination, financial reprisals, or the threat thereof, or by requiring any person to make a contribution or expenditure as a condition of membership in a labor organization."

Resumed No. 4

Mr. President, if we want to control campaign contributions and expenditures. This amendment aims to cover one area pretty much left untouched by previous amendments. When it comes to monetary contributions, the Committee is specific.

An individual can contribute no more than $30,000 to any candidate and to no more than $25,000 in total political contributions during a calendar year.

Contributions of $100 or more must be by written instrument.

There is nothing to prevent my offering one candidate for purposes of the general election campaign.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to substitute a perfecting amendment changing the language of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. TAFT's amendment (No. 115, as modified) is as follows:

On page 52, line 8, change the period to a comma and insert thereafter the following:

"except that a political committee described in section 301(d)(2) may be designated as the central campaign committee of more than one candidate for purposes of the general election campaign."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, this amendment returns to the situation prior to 1971 Federal Election Campaign Act when Congressional sanction was given for corporations and labor unions to establish and administer, segregated funds for political purposes.

It would lessen to some extent the influence of money in our campaigns and give the individual citizen a greater role in our elections, which election reformers say is needed.

That is what they are arguing: eliminate the force of the vested interests and give the man-in-the-street a more dominant influence in our elections.

One start in that direction is to eliminate the source of influence that can be exerted by one organization-business or otherwise—and by the political money pots these organizations can muster up.

Contributions of $100 or more must be by written instrument.

There is nothing to prevent my offering one candidate for purposes of the general election campaign.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1151, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant clerk proceeded to read the amendment, which is as follows:

On page 52, line 8, change the period to a comma and insert thereafter the following:

"except that a political committee described in section 301(d)(2) may be designated as the central campaign committee of more than one candidate for purposes of the general election campaign."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to substitute a perfecting amendment changing the language of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. TAFT's amendment (No. 115, as modified) is as follows:

On page 52, line 8, change the period to a comma and insert thereafter the following:

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, this amendment would exempt national and State political party organizations from the restriction that a "political committee can serve as the "central campaign committee," or financial administrator, for only one political candidate's general election campaign. Its purpose and effect would be to allow the national and State party organizations to perform this bookkeeping function for as many candidates as desired. The amendment does not change the accounting and disclosure requirements which the bill imposes on each candidate's campaign operations, nor does it change the amount of contributions and expenditures allowable either for any single candidate or for the political parties acting as independent entities.

I believe that this amendment is necessary so that the political parties will be able to administer financial operations for any candidate who agrees that this approach is desirable, as the parties do now in some cases. As the Vice President emphasized in Chicago last Saturday, if the Republican National Committee had been required for financial administration of the 1972 Presidential campaign, the chances of a Watergate occurring might have been eliminated. By permitting total party financial supervision of general election campaigns at the State and national levels, my amendment should provide an alternative that in some cases would foster better supervised and more professional campaign operations.

Specifically, it would eliminate the problem that has been pointed out so vividly with regard to CREEP. With this amendment we would still enjoy the practical purposes we have institutionalized CREEP. We make it absolutely necessary and required by law that the national, and in the case of State elections the State, campaign committees could not act as the central campaign committee for financial or other purposes of the candidates who are nominated.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1058 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Helms). The amendment will be stated.

April 11, 1974

sections (b), (c), (d), (e), and (f), respectively.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, this amendment is offered on behalf of myself and the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Packwood) and the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Domenici).

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, this amendment would repeal the lowest unit cost provisions of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended. It is entirely consistent with the pending legislation which repeals broadcast advertising spending limits in favor of overall expenditure limitations.

Three years ago when the Senate considered the question of lowering the costs of broadcast advertising, there was little expectation that we would later consider such comprehensive public financing of both Presidential and congressional campaigns. In fact, we probably would not have considered such an unprecedented approach to campaign financing had it not been for the events of the past 2 years. As we debate this measure, it is important to remember the circumstances surrounding the enactment of the lowest unit cost requirement 3 years ago.

At that time, we were trying to grapple with the problem of limiting expenditures on broadcast advertising while making the cost for that advertising reasonable from the vantage of the least knowledgeable voter. However, we were not considering that question in the context of providing Government subsidies for up to 80 percent of the candidate's total campaign expenses. Thus, it would now seem reasonable to reconsider the question of whether the lowest unit cost provisions of the Communications Act are necessary. I firmly believe they are not.

Under this pending legislation, there is no limit on the amount of money that can be spent on broadcast advertising. There is, of course, the overall expenditure limitation, but there is no specific limit on the advertising which is an aspect of a particular campaign. That is consistent with the committee's objective of allowing the candidate the maximum degree of flexibility with regard to how his or her campaign funds are spent. At the same time, however, we are encouraging the excessive use of broadcast advertising by not only subsidizing a substantial portion of the candidate's campaign, but also by requiring that radio and TV time be offered at as much as 50 percent below the prevailing advertising rates. Moreover, we are perpetuating what I consider to be an essentially unfair practice as it relates to both the individual broadcaster and the commercial advertiser.

That practice consists of affording political commercial discounts which it takes other advertisers 13 weeks to earn. Obviously, candidates for public office are different from other advertisers in a number of ways, including their purpose for advertising and their ability to pay. However, substantial public financing of campaigns would clearly diminish the latter consideration and make qualified candidates more than able to afford the required amount of radio and TV advertising time. Thus, why require the stations to offer time at a substantially reduced rate?

We do not require it of newspapers, so why should we continue to require it of broadcasters? When candidates for Federal office indicate that many radio and TV stations chose to refuse to sell political advertising time to any candidate rather than be forced to sell time to all candidates at a reduced cost.

They did so because they still had the right to refuse a particular type of advertising as long as they refused it across the board. That does not necessarily mean that they neglected their responsibility to cover campaigns for public office, but rather that they would rather not accept any payment for political advertisements than to have to accept the lowest unit cost provision which would dislocate among their regular advertisers.

Granted there is ample precedent for the Federal Government regulating radio and TV advertising. There is no longer any reason to impose similar limitations on the printed media for very good reasons: and I submit that there is no longer any reason to impose advertising sharing requirements on the broadcast media.

Title 47, section 312, subsection (a) (7) states that the Federal Communications Commission may revoke any station license or modify the rates at which it sells time for willful or repeated failure to allow reasonable access to or to permit purchase of reasonable amounts of time for the use of a broadcasting station by a legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office on behalf of his candidacy.

What that means is that every station has a statutory obligation to give reasonable coverage, either through advertising, or by use of its facilities, to a legally qualified candidate for Federal office. However, if we continue to require stations to charge the lowest unit cost, an increasing number will decide against permitting political advertising in favor of providing a reasonable amount of another form of coverage, thereby reducing the flexibility of the candidate to choose how to run his own campaign.

This is not the intent of S. 3044, as I understand it, and I would urge that as long as candidates are financially able to afford broadcast advertising at the prevailing rates, that we no longer discriminate against them by requiring them to charge the lowest unit cost.

Now, Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Oregon (Mr. Packwood) has to do with the wishes to make at this time, and I now yield to him such time as he may require.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, in 1971 when this body considered the lowest unit rate provision of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, I was highly skeptical that enactment of this provision would indeed end in an equitable situation for all parties concerned—the candidate, the broadcaster and the voter. If anything, inequities have been underscored in the intervening period. A bad situation has developed which undercuts more than one-half of our candidates for Federal elective office, it has created a serious financial dilemma for broadcasters, and the resultant confusion has ill-served the voters of our Nation. I supported in 1971 an amendment which would have struck the lowest unit rate provision from the bill which was then debating. The amendment failed, and today, 3 years later, my past skepticism has been more than substantiated.

I am cosponsoring the Senator from Oregon's (Mr. Boren) amendment which would repeal this unfair provision.

Three years ago, arguments heard in this Chamber professed that everyone would benefit from enactment of the lowest unit rate billing. More time, because advertising would be at its cheapest, would be available to the candidates. More candidate time on radio and television could only bode well for an informed vote in the primary or general election. And the broadcasters, well, their revenues would increase because of the surge in political advertising during this period.

However well-intentioned this amendment might have been, it has not created a fair and equal access to the public for all candidates. Some broadcasters have taken the option of refusing broadcast time to political candidates altogether. I do not blame them, Mr. President, they, in order to respect business contracts of many years, refuse political advertising. But the consequences or our inane rule are regrettable and I do place blame on our decision 3 years ago that forced some broadcasters into this position. The serious ramification of this must face is that we, as incumbents, along with our public recognition, place nonincumbents at a terrific disadvantage without the availability of radio and television to publicize their positions and beliefs. Time and time again, it has been proven the nonincumbent's greatest weapon is an effective media campaign. Thus, and perhaps more, we fail to recognize it, selfishly we are the winners of the continuity of the lowest unit rate. But we are a small minority, for the challenger loses however right or wrong, the broadcaster loses, and in the end the public loses.

I believe we can do better. I believe the lowest unit rate should be repealed. Although it may increase advertising costs for us, it will open up radio access to the public by all the candidates on an even basis. If one purpose of this bill, S. 3044, is to prevent campaign abuse, then surely we have a great opportunity, now, to eliminate an unfair advantage of incumbency by insuring access to all broadcast media.

I urge my colleagues' support for this amendment, and ask unanimous consent that the letter I received from Mr. Alan H. Davidson, sales manager for KNND Radio in Cottage Grove, Ore., illustrating many of these very concerns, be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Mr. PASTORE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator have such time as he may need out of his hour.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I asked permission of the lowest rate. As I feared that it would be impossible to buy any radio and television time, I voted aye. The PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. PASTORE. Can I take time out of my own time?

The PRESIDENT. The Senator can do so by unanimous consent.

Mr. PASTORE. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator have such time as he may need out of his hour.

Mr. PASTORE. Out of my hour, because I am hitting high gear. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT. OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PASTORE. I yield.

Mr. STEVENS. I have worked with the Senator from Rhode Island on this matter, he will recall.

It is the lowest unit charge for the same class and for the amount of time, for the same period, with the same conditions, the same class and the amount of time for the same period, we are not getting any benefit from any other rate. A little station survives under one of the heaviest onsluards they ever had from candidates in the last election.

This is a fair provision as it stands, and if we took it off, the rates for television and radio time would go sky high.
I am grateful to the Senator from Rhode Island for having accepted the limitation, but I cannot understand the comments of the Senator from Oregon in view of the limitations of section 315 (b) with regard to the same class of time. The Senate of time—time—that is, whether or not it is prime time—and for the same period of time, which is for the 45 days preceding the election.

Mr. BAKER, Mr. President, I reserve the right to object. There has not yet been a ruling on the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Rhode Island.

If we are going to extend the time for debate into the Senator's hour under rule XXII, it seems only fair that in the same unanimous request we extend the time on the other side.

I now ask unanimous consent that I be given the same time out of my hour that he has out of his hour.

Mr. PASTORE. That is all right. I will yield only 2 minutes.

Mr. BAKER. So long as we have equal time.

Mr. PASTORE. I make this point very strongly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled that the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Rhode Island is granted. It is granted for 2 minutes.

The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. BAKER, Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BAKER. Do I correctly understand that I have similar treatment on this side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. PASTORE. The point I am making, and I hope I can make it as emphatically as is the case, is that this is not the time, this is not the place, this is not the bill in which to repeal something that has been thoroughly investigated, thoroughly studied, and passed almost unanimously by the committee of Congress. I hope that at this juncture we will not disturb something that is as fundamental as the principle that is involved in the discussion we are having today.

When the time has expired, I am going to move to table the amendment.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have the distinction of serving as the senior Republican on the Subcommittee on Communications, on which the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island is the chairman. He and I have a good bit and this and a few other issues from time to time. We are familiar with each other's arguments. There is no point in my trying to belabor those issues with him, because he has heard them before. He heard my opposition at this hearing when it was considered by the subcommittee, when it was considered by the full committee, and when it was considered by the Senate, and he has heard my opposition to this provision at every opportunity I have had to express it for the last 3 years.

I was opposed to it at the time we first took it up, I am still opposed to it, and I am trying to repeal it. I think it is wrong, because by this section, we politicians have legislated to ourselves a subsidy out of the hides of everybody else who advertises on radio and television. We say that, because Proctor & Gamble or General Motors, or whoever it is, earns a unit rate that is lower than a one-time or a five-time rate, we have to get the same unit rate. We do not do that to manufacturers who advertise to magazines. We do it, because we have the authority to regulate radio and television stations and we have the right to lift their licenses. We pass a law that says, "Give us the lowest cost you give to everybody else at the same time on the networks, with the same quality of service, because we regulate you and we have the life-and-death power to give you a license or take it away."

That is not fair play, in my book.

If we are going to do it for radio and television stations, we ought to do it for newspapers, magazines, billboards, the people who stick bumper stickers and fingernail files with campaign slogans on them, and for whatever other paraphernalia we use. We say, "Give us the low rate you charge your regular customers, and despite the fact that we order one-hundredth the amount of time that they order." It seems to me that we single out the industry that we regulate and make them give us a rate we have not earned, when they would normally charge according to the quality and frequency of service acquired.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, let me elaborate further on the situation.

Take the city of Portland, Oreg., with a number of television stations. Six Democratic candidates, as I recall, vied for the nomination for Congress. Each of them is entitled, if they can get the time, to buy time on television at the lowest rate, at the same price paid by the Chevrolet dealer who advertises on television during the course of the campaign, or the networks, with the same quality of service, because they pay a higher rate in the Senator's hour.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to my colleague from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I have a brief comment from the perspective of one who has operated under this law as a broadcaster and one who has operated under this law as a candidate. The bill as written is essential and we can talk about the problems it presents for broadcasters and certain others who would like the full rate. We can mention all of the other media that are not covered, but they do not utilize a public facility and they do not operate in the public interest as broadcasting stations.

This is little enough to require of an industry that gets to enjoy free the airways of this country. One big danger and one when we talk about election reform and the limitation on candidates and the money they spend and who can support them is that we deny the citizens of this country the opportunity to hear the candidates and to know their views. This is one way we can help facilitate that opportunity so that candidates can get on the air and let citizens know what they stand for.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I take the last minute to congratulate my colleague from Kentucky and to say if, in effect, stations are saying, "We are not going to take any of them, because we cannot get the three times the lowest rate," I do not want to help incumbents and as a matter of fact they are saying they want to help incumbents and are bumping everyone off television, we better take a close look at it in committee, because the fact is that the law now provides that we pay them for the time we are using at the lowest cost at that time and not on the overall lowest cost of the station.

As bad as political speeches may be some nights, they cannot be any worse than some of the things we have to watch on television during the course of the week in prime time.

Mr. President, I shall support the Senator from Rhode Island in his motion to table the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired on the amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask for yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays are ordered.

ORDERS OF BUSINESS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me briefly?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, April 11, 1974, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on the second day after their respective Members are notified in accordance with section 2 of this resolution, whenever event first occurs.

Sec. 2. The Speaker of the House of Representatives shall notify the Members of the House to reassemble whenever in his opinion the public interest shall warrant it, or whenever the majority leader of the House, acting jointly, or the minority leader of the House, acting jointly, file a written request with the Clerk of the House for the House to reassemble for the consideration of legislation.
Senator is sworn in. Thereafter, it is a very hard row to hoe. That is the reason for the amendment.

I understand that the manager of the bill will be interested in accepting it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 30 seconds.

The Senator from New York has correctly described the amendment. It does create some added burdens, but it does, I think, provide a better, more timely disclosure date after a general election, when it is too late to do anything about the violation. The amendment provides us with a more timely reporting provision than we have in the bill. I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank the Senator from New York.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from New York. I think he has submitted a worthwhile, important amendment. I am delighted that the manager of the bill has accepted it.

Senators may remember that I offered an amendment which required reporting before an election, but that amendment was defeated. I think this is a material improvement over the provision that requires reporting in January. I wish to congratulate the Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, may I say that the idea of the amendment is that of Charles Warren, my legislative aide. He is typical of the brilliant young men who work in all our offices. I am delighted to make this statement.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, for the record, my amendment met with the very violent objection of my staff.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes on the bill. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1113

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I send to the desk a printed amendment, No. 1113. It has been slightly modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the modification? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is so modified. The amendment will be stated. The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

This is an amendment that I have discussed with the distinguished floor manager of the bill. I understand that he agrees that the amendment is acceptable.

On reflection, after having stopped the clerk from a further reading of it, I think it is time to think, to reflect, and to sit down, there would be adequate explanation. So I shall read it.

At the appropriate place insert the following new section:

SEC. 3. Whoever, being a candidate for Federal office, as defined herein, or an employee or agent of such a candidate—

(a) fraudulently misrepresents himself or any committee or organization under his control as speaking or writing or otherwise acting for or on behalf of any other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof on a matter which is damaging to such other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof; or

(b) willfully and knowingly participates in a scheme, or design to violate paragraph (a) hereof, shall, for each such offense, be fined not more than $50,000 or imprisoned not more than five years or both.

Mr. BAYH. The purpose of the amendment, Mr. President, is to direct the Senate's attention in the context of the pending bill, which is to be our principal legislative response to the past 18 months of Watergate revelations, to a particular and specific problem which would appear to require a statutory remedy. This is the problem of "dirty tricks." My amendment is designed to address the existing law somewhat more precisely in this area and to increase the penalties for its violation.

It has come to the Senate's attention through the hearings conducted by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN) and his select committee that during the 1972 campaign there occurred at least two incidents in which an employee or agent of the Committee to Re-Elect the President distributed documents bearing the letterhead of Senator Muskie's campaign which falsely accused Senator Muskie and Jackson of the most bizarre type of personal conduct. It is this type of activity with which my amendment is designed to deal.

Under current law, as found in section 612 of title 18, United States Code, is a misdemeanor offense for anyone who is a candidate or agent thereof to distribute, through the mails or in interstate commerce, materials which fail to identify the candidate involved or a committee acting on his behalf. This is the statute to which Donald Segretti pleaded guilty for his activities in the Florida primary to which I have referred. My amendment would modify section 612 in two respects. First, it would remove the jurisdictional restrictions of the old statute which limited its application to use of the U.S. mails or transportation in interstate commerce. Many of our older statutes have such limitations which were thought at the time to be constitutionally required, but which are clearly not necessary today as applied to candidates for office on the Federal level.

Second, my amendment would make such campaign offenses felonies rather than misdemeanors in those few cases where not only does the candidate or his agent know that statements about another candidate are false but that they are, in fact, damaging to him.

In short, Mr. President, I believe that this amendment will be helpful in dealing with the specific campaign abuses which have been brought to our attention because of the 1972 campaign, without posing the formidable problems that a broader criminal libel statute would present in terms of first amendment guarantees.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I have discussed the amendment with the distinguished Senator from Indiana, the sponsor, and also with the minority representative. We are willing to accept the amendment.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BAYH. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask for the immediate consideration. I ask unanimous consent to proceed with the reading of the amendment. It is the usual technical, perfecting amendment to correct minor defects in various provisions, to conform to the usual practice. I ask for the approval of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

AMENDMENT NO 1180

MR. ALLEN. Mr. President, I call up my amendment: No. 1180 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 57, line 23, strike out "exceeds $8,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000".

On page 57, between lines 23 and 24, Insert the following:

(1) in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President, $2,000; and

(2) in the case of any other candidate, $1,500.

On page 76, line 2, strike out "exceeds $3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "exceeds $1,500".

On page 76 between lines 2 and 3, Insert the following:

(A) in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President, $2,000; and

(B) in the case of any other candidate, $1,500.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Throughout the debate on the bill, it has been the effort of the Senator from Alabama not only to kill all elections of the bill having to do with the public subsidy of candidates for Federal elections, but also to reduce the overall amount that candidates for Federal offices may spend in elections—that is, candidates for the House and for the Senate in primaries and in general elections, and candidates for the Presidency in primaries before the conventions and in general elections.

Already there have been turned back by the Senate amendments that would cut the amounts individual contributions to $250 in Presidential races and $100 in House and Senatorial races; and another amendment that would have limited contributions to $2,000 in Presidential races and to $1,000 in House and Senatorial races. Those amendments have been turned back. That has caused the Senator from Alabama to feel that many of those who advocate Federal subsidies in elections want the best of both worlds. They want, in the primary races, to have campaign reform: everything that they can get from providing contributions at the $3,000 level, which is a very high level in the view of the Senator from Alabama, and at the same time having primary elections.

So I would hope that the Senate would go along with a reduction in the amount of the overall contributions in Presidential races to $2,000 and for the House and Senate to $1,500. I call attention to the fact that the Senate has voted—voted twice, as a matter of fact—to cut the amount of overall expenses of candidates, and I would not reduce the amount that could be spent in general elections from 15 cents to 12 cents, and from 10 cents to 8 cents in primary elections. There should be no reason why we should not reduce the amount of individual contributions.

So I am hopeful that the Senate in its desire to have campaign reform, and not simply use campaign reform as a shibboleth to cover raiding the Federal Treasury and turn the bill over to the taxpayers, will be in favor of cutting the amount of individual contributions as suggested in the amendment to $2,000 in Presidential races and in congressional races, and to $1,500 for House and Senate races in primary and general elections.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.
Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I have had an opportunity to talk with the floor manager of the bill, and also the minority manager of the bill, and I believe that the amendment may be acceptable to them.

The purpose of the amendment is to add a definition of "State committee" parallel to the definition of "national committee" already contained in the bill. The amendment is useful because it identifies the State committees that will be entitled to take advantage of the special "2 cents a voter" spending authority in the bill. Under this authority, a State committee is entitled to receive private contributions and make expenditures in a general election, above and beyond the expenditure ceiling of the party's candidate himself. In this way, S. 3044 provides a substantial additional role for the political parties at both the State and National level.

Mr. President, the amendment is a minor addition to the bill, and I hope that it may be accepted.

Mr. CANON. Mr. President, I yield myself 30 seconds.

I have discussed this proposal with the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) and the manager of the bill.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) have further time on the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY's amendment (No. 1093) is as follows:

On page 10, strike out line 24 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "election campaign in an amount equal to the greater of:

(a) an amount which bears the same ratio".

On page 11, line 6, strike out "election," and insert in lieu thereof "election; or"

On page 11, between lines 6 and 7, insert the following:

"(b) an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of payments to which a candidate of a major party for the same office is entitled under this subsection as the total number of votes received by that eligible candidate as a candidate for that office (other than votes he received as a candidate of a major party or that office) in the preceding election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidates of major parties for that office in the preceding general election."

Mr. KENNEDY. This amendment is introduced in behalf of myself and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Hovis Scott). I have had a chance, again, to discuss with the floor manager of the bill and also the minority manager, and I understand that it is acceptable to them.

The purpose of the amendment is to allow minor party candidates to qualify for public funds on the basis of the total number of votes they received in the preceding election, whether as the candidate of a single minor party or as the candidate of more than one minor party.

Under the present bill, a minor party candidate's proportion of public funds is based on the showing in the preceding election of the minor party that nominated that candidate. In those cases, this provision might work unfairly to the disadvantage of a minor party candidate who was on the ballot in the previous election under more than one minor party label.

For example, in the 1968 Presidential election, George Wallace ran under nine separate minor party labels. Although he won a total of 13.5 percent of the votes and the election campaign fund under a single minor party label was 5.08 percent, as the candidate of the American Party.

Under the pending bill, if its provisions had been in effect for the 1972 election, Governor Wallace would have qualified for proportional public funds based on his 1968 track record as a minor party candidate based on his 5.08 percent showing as the candidate of the American party, rather than his 13.5 percent overall showing. Clearly, he should be entitled to use the higher figure, and the pending amendment would accomplish that goal.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the effect of the pending amendment is to restore the operation of the formula in the existing dollar checkoff law, enacted in 1971, which now allows minor party candidates to accumulate their votes in the preceding election. I believe that this is the intent of the formula in S. 3044, and I hope the Senate will accept the amendment Senator Hovis Scott and I are offering.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROCK.) All rising time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1093) of the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOMINO of Florida, in response, has often expressed his deep concern about the crisis of confidence in our leadership and the deep sense of frustration and distrust toward our entire Government which has pervaded the mail I have received from Coloradans over the past year.

No government can survive without the confidence and support of the people. Ours has survived because each American has believed elections presented an opportunity for all citizens, candidates and parties to present their ideas fairly and honestly, and have their views udged by the public.

Recent events have raised serious doubts in the minds of many Americans that this principle is being respected. The resulting crisis of confidence, therefore, goes to the core—the very survival—of our system of government. Out of this concern that we must take whatever action is necessary to restore the confidence of the American people in its leadership and government, last July the Senate passed—and I voted for—the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1973, which provided for numerous needed reforms of election campaigns.

This act of 1973 represented a comprehensive campaign reform bill which required full identification of contributions, accounted for Federal campaign subsides in primary and general elections open by Federal subsidization and provided for numerous needed reforms of election campaigns.

During consideration of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1973, proponents of Federal subsidization—so-called public financing—failed in their efforts to insert Federal subsidization provisions in the Act. In December they failed to attach such provisions to the bill raising the debt limit, but did extract a promise from the Senate Rules Committee that it would report a bill on Federal subsidization. This bill is before us now; Title I contains provisions for Federal campaign subsides in primary and general election campaigns for Federal offices. The other sections of this bill are similar to the provisions of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1973 as it passed the Senate.

I support reform and have consistently voted for it. I am against—irrevocably against—efforts to establish a Federal financing system as proposed in title II of this bill.

I believe Federal subsidization represents a step backward in our efforts to restore the confidence of the American people in their Government. Giving taxpayers' money to politicians to run for election can only reduce further whatever confidence Americans re-enact unnecessary and dangerous legislation on so-called "public financing." The resultant loss of individual freedom and rights, and the extension of the dead hand of Federal bureaucracy and regulation would serve only to throttle further the confidence of American citizens in the responsiveness and integrity of our system of government. To adopt "public financing" would be the ultimate evil legacy of the Watergate era.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, apparently there are no further amendments to be offered. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. MANSFIELD. As far as we know, until third reading is achieved, we do not know.

Mr. ALLEN. Since all the amendments have been offered that Senator plan to offer, and since this matter has been under serious discussion under efforts to amend the bill—some of which have been very helpful, some not so helpful—since there was a high degree of ambiguity about just what the bill does provide; since there is a body of opinion in the Senate that a big mistake is being made, though I do not subscribe to that view, in not opening the general elections up to matching as well—there was an amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENS), the distinguished Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI), the distinguished Senator from Ohio (Mr. TaFT), the distinguished Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), and the distinguished Senator from Maryland (Mr. BEAL), that would have set up a formula that would have permitted and, in fact, get the full amount available could very well have required matching in general elections; I believe they had a formula of 25 per cent, is matching for House and Senate races, and then 50-50 the rest of the way, and in Presidential elections a 40 per cent advance Federal subsidy, and then 50-50 the rest of the way and since there are a number of other items in the bill that can be improved upon if this bill were to have further consideration by the Rules Committee; and in view of the fact that there are already bills over in the House that they have not yet digested. I am just wondering if we would serve the part of wisdom to send them another bill, which, by the way, is 10 per cent different from the bill we sent them in July, that being S. 372, which does not provide for any Federal subsidies whatsoever.

So I wonder if it might not be well to send this bill back to committee for a little more of the baking process.

Mr. GRiFFIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for an inquiry?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. GRiFFIN. In the light of the experience made by the distinguished Senator from Alabama that one of these amendments that would have required matching in the general election has been adopted, then, of course, the bill as it now is about to be voted on provides for full Federal taxpayer financing in the general election; is that the Senator's understanding?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, that is true, except that there is available the option to participate in the Federal subsidy or not. If the candidate raises 100 percent Federal subsidy, he can get it. If he wants to get a little bit from the private sector, that comes off his public subsidy and, obviously, would be up to him.

Mr. GRiFFIN. In view of the rejection of that effort by Senator STEVENSON and others, and in view of the rejection of the amendment offered by Senator DOLE, the other day, Mr. President, do I agree with me that it is going to be a rather strange situation, if this bill should become law, because the requirements we now have under present law say that when a TV advertisement goes on the air promoting the candidacy of a particular campaign, there must be, in prominent letters and sound, what they call a disclaimer, a word for by the Committee on Rules and Administration. Would it not be false and fraudulent advertising if all of that money was actually coming out of the U.S. Treasury? Would there be some regulation of action that the private citizen consumer groups, and so forth, or someone else could take to the FCC, because here, on the one hand, they would be saying the cost was paid for by the committee of candidate Jones, but really it was all being paid for by the taxpayers. Is that the situation we would have?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I see the point of the distinguished Senator from Michigan and I agree with it. I would assume, however, that the public subsidy would go to the candidate or his committee and, in a sense, would be laundered by the committee.

Mr. GRiFFIN. Laundered?

Mr. ALLEN. So it probably would be a correct statement that the money, which is public money, having been laundered by the committee, would be used by the committee. I see, then, that it would be an accurate statement to say it was paid for by the committee.

Mr. GRiFFIN. Does the Senator suppose that the laundering will then be described in some segment of the media as being campaign reform?

Mr. ALLEN. This is campaign reform.

Mr. GRiFFIN. I thank the Senator. I will certainly join him in supporting his motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, it is the intention of the Senator from Alabama to make a motion to recommit. Since that motion is debatable, the Senator from Alabama will, at this time, move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Rules and Administration for further study.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, may I just ask a question. In the laundering of this money by the Senate Committee, does the Senator from Alabama believe that a lot of soap would be used?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, soft soap. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CANNON, Mr. President, I yield back whatever time I have.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Babcock). All time has now been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. AIKEN) to recommence the bill, S. 3044, to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. PULBRIGHT), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUE), the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Metzenbaum), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGEE), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Metzenbaum), and the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) are necessarily absent. There being no further announcements, the Senator from Alabama (Mr. SPARKMAN) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) would vote "nay."

Mr. GRiFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FENG) and the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDFOOD) are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 53, as follows: [No. 145 Leg.]

So the motion of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) to recommence the bill (S. 3044) to the Committee on Rules and Administration was rejected.
Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I think it would be outrageous to subject the taxpayers of this country with the price tag of financing the campaigns of Members of Congress. The public campaign financing bill now before the Senate would provide up to $600 out of the public treasury for any candidate for the House of Representatives in the general election and as high as $2 million for primary candidates for the U.S. Senate in the general election.

At a time when so much money is needed to wage the war on cancer, at a time when many persons in this country cannot afford the high cost of medical care, and when I think of people who are dying in this country because they cannot get a kidney dialysis, it is obvious to me that we should not dig into the taxpayers' money to finance the elections of those of us who run for the House and Senate. I do not think the taxpayers ought to have to pay this price tag, and I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, as chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections and as the sponsor of the bill which formed the basis of our discussion on public financing, I am delighted with its passage by the Senate.

The bill's basic and significant provisions have survived over strong opposition. We have expressed the will of our people weary at election abuses and frustrated by the scandalous influence of special interests. We have given back to the individual voter his rightful authority, and we have strengthened our democracy.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, for more than a decade, in and out of public office, I have worked for campaign finance reform. It is, therefore, with reluctance that I express my reasons for voting against this bill.

Most of the provisions in the bill have already been approved by the Senate and sent, in one form or another, to the House. They include limits on individual and committee contributions to campaigns, a $25,000 limit on contributions of an individual to Federal campaigns, ceilings on amounts which can be expended in Federal campaigns, a limit on cash contributions and independent enforcement of campaign finance laws. Among the provisions of the bill as passed by the Senate were many that I either coauthored in bills or sounded the death knell for any public financing, but that I either coauthored in bills or CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE but it would also cut the people out—and that is terrible. There is nothing inherently wrong about a 3 cents, $3, $300, or, for that matter, a $3,000 contribution. This bill says the citizen can contribute nothing to the candidate of his choice—or, for him, yes, spend up to $100 an advertising of his own buying, yes—but to give him $5 or $1,000, no—because to do so, this bill implies, might corrupt a candidate for President of the United States or the Congress.

On the face of it that makes no sense.

It is downright wrong.

This bill not only eliminates a meaningful form of participation by people in their government, it also drives up the costs to the Treasury and the taxpayer.

It is more than most people will tolerate. They are willing to pay the necessary price for the elimination of the big contributions—but no more. This bill will be perceived as yet another transgression by the politician. After the American public has risked the entire 100-per cent public financing when 60 or 70 percent would eliminate the large contributions by the rich and the powerful and preserve the ignorant of participation by small contributors. They might understand the revision I feel as a candidate at the prospect of waiting to receive a check from the U.S. Treasury for $900,000. I do not need anywhere near that much public money to wage a successful campaign if I can continue to accept small private contributions.

The goal of reform, as I see it, is the removal of influence which can corrupt public office to the benefit of the people and the innocence of participation by small contributors. They might understand the revulsion I feel as a candidate at the prospect of waiting to receive a check from the U.S. Treasury for $900,000. I do not need anywhere near that much public money to wage a successful campaign if I can continue to accept small private contributions.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to make such technical and clerical corrections in the print of S. 3044 as may be necessary, including changes in the designation of titles, sections, and subsections and cross-references thereto, as may be necessary to reflect any changes in the bill made by amendments adopted by the Senate. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER TO PRINT S. 3044 AS PASSED
Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 3044, a bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, be printed as passed. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, the Senate has demonstrated a genuine interest in true election reform by the adoption of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1974. Not only has the Senate agreed to set reasonable limitations on contributions by individuals and committees, but also it has voted to restrict the number of candidates in primary and general elections. Further, the Senate has agreed to provide Federal funds in primary elections on a matching grant basis and with full funding incentives. Candidates have the option under the bill S. 3044 to raise private funds for each election or to accept public funds in whole or in part.

With a strong and independent Federal Election Commission; with central campaign committees; with campaign depositories and timely and full disclosure of all receipts and expenditures, we have attempted to eliminate all weaknesses in the bill and the citizens of the United States will be encouraged to restore their confidence in the elective process.

Mr. President, I wish to commend my colleagues for their support in gaining passage of this bill. And I wish to thank all of the staff members who worked with the Committee and the Senate in bringing about final passage:

Jim Duffy, Joe O'Leary, and Jim Medill, of the Committee on Rules and Administration.
Lloyd Aitor and Bob Cassidy legislative counsel.

Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. PASTORE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Judgement which is subject to the provisions of this section by any person who is not an officer or employee of the agency shall be made such as to the public record of such case.

This subsection shall not apply to communications to any officer, employee, or agent of the United States of America or to any member, officer, employee, or agent of a State or local government or to any person who is an officer or employee of the United States Government or of any State or local government.

The purpose of public financing is to eliminate the large and potentially corrupting contributions of big money from our politics. This amendment would have failed that purpose but it would not have eliminated the innocent, small contributions which are a healthy form of participation in our political system.

This amendment would have limited the campaign contributions of individuals to $20,000 in primaries and $3,000 in general election campaigns. In that respect, it did not alter the provisions of the bill reported by the Rules Committee.

It would also have limited the contributions of committees to $4,000, which could be spent between a public campaign and a primary election campaign as the committee sees fit.

It established a system of partial public financing as opposed to the 100 percent public financing, congressional candidates would have received a front-end subsidy of the expense limit applicable to congressional campaigns. In addition, private contributions of $100 or less would have been matched with public funds on a dollar-for-dollar basis.

When I was thinking about running for the Senate, I discovered I was not going to be able to raise a large war chest to finance my campaign. So, I had to run a public campaign that was less expensive than the conventional way. During my walk through Florida, I talked with thousands of people who were encouraged by this kind of campaign.

I felt that public funding should be sent to the House for their consideration.

To vote against this legislation would be a signal that I am against public funding of Presidential elections. I feel this part of the legislation is absolutely necessary and vital. I hope that the House will favorably consider plans for public funding of Presidential elections and different kinds of reform legislation should be sent to the House for their consideration.

TRIBUTE TO SENATORS ON PASSAGE OF CAMPAIGN REFORM

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I wish to pay well-deserved tribute to the many Senators who were responsible for this magnificent achievement—one of the most significant reform proposals that in my judgment has passed the Senate. What it says fundamentally is that public officials will answer first and last to the public and not to this or that special interest group. It is an essential step that must be taken to restore public faith and confidence in the institutions of Government. I am proud, indeed, of the Senate's great initiative on this issue.

Senator CRANSTON of California, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules, deserves the highest commendation for his leadership and devotion. So, too, does Senator COX. They joined in cooperative efforts to handle this most important proposal and they assumed the task with the greatest skill and ability.

The Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON) deserves praise for his many outstanding efforts to assure this success. His work in behalf of public election reform indeed was indispensable. The same may be said of the efforts of Senator ALAN CRANSTON of California, and the many others whose initiative started this process some time ago.

I was particularly impressed with the leadership of the able Republican leader (Mr. HUGH SCOTT) whose efforts a measure as effective as this could not have been possible. And to Senator BROKAW, Senator CLARK, Senator STEVENSON, Senator MYER, Senator ALAN CRANSTON, and the many others who joined with statements, amendments, and with viewpoints, we are especially indebted for providing a debate and discussion of the highest order.

In all, all the Senators may take great pride in this achievement.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the final passage, achieved today, of the legislation for campaign reform and public financing of elections is one of the finest hours of the Senate in this or any other Congress.

Most, if not all, of the things that are wrong with government today are responsible for our continuing campaign for public office. The corrosive influence of private money on public life is the primary cause of the lack of responsiveness of government to the people.

Now, through public financing, we can change all that. Once public financing is signed into law, it will have an immensely salutary effect on every dimension of government, as it sends ripples through every issue with which Congress and the administration have to deal.

At least, the stranglehold of wealthy campaign contributors and special interest groups on the election process will be broken, and democracy will be the winner. Only when all the people pay for elections will all the people be truly represented by their Government.

No one believes that public financing is a panacea to all our social ills. What we do believe is that it is the nation's preeminent reform, the reform that must lead all the rest if we are serious about bringing government back to government and giving fair, honest, and clean elections to the people.

Long before Watergate, we knew about the problem. Now, because of Watergate, we have gained the strength to solve it. By voting for President Ford, we are telling the Nation that the day of the dollar in public financing is over, that elective office is no longer for sale to the highest bidder.

Rarely has the Senate sent so clear a message to every citizen. I praise Mike MANSFIELD, HUGH SCOTT, ROBERT BYRD, HOWARD CANNON, ALAN CRANSTON, and all the other Senators and public interest groups who urged the passage of the Center for Public Financing, who did so much to bring this legislation to the Senate floor, to win the fight for cloture, and to make this victory possible.

Finally, Mr. President, I do not think we should close this particular chapter of the campaign financing effort of the Senate without recognition of the special contributions by many Members of this body who worked so hard in this important area.

As one who has been interested in this issue for some time, I wish to express great admiration for the efforts not only of the manager of the bill, the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) and his able staff. He has been on the floor almost every day of the past two weeks, available for discussion and debate on the extremely complex and difficult issues posed in this legislation. I think he has done a brilliant job. All the members of the Committee on Rules and Finance are to be commended, and the staff is also to be commended for their extraordinary efforts.

I also praise the especially important role played by the Senate leadership. The distinguished majority leader (Mr. MANSFIELD), the distinguished Republican leader (Mr. HUGH SCOTT), and the distinguished Democratic whip (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD) were the keys to the successful struggle for cloture this week. Without their effort, we could not have won. We could not have obtained Senate passage of this legislation if we had not had the very strong leadership that the three of them provided, not only in rounding up the votes, but also in presenting to our colleagues the significance and importance of action by the Senate at the present time. Their contributions were immense, and all of us are in their debt.

Many other Senators also played a key role. The Senator from Idaho (Mr. PELL) was chairman of the subcommittee that held extensive hearings on this issue, hearings that laid a solid foundation for our present action, and he should be commended.

When we consider public financing, we have to recognize as well that this legislation really builds on the genius of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), who initially presented the $1 checkoff for Presidential elections in 1966 and who helped to lead the successful effort to get the checkoff into law in 1971. Many of the most important aspects of this legislation build on the work of Senator LONG, the chairman of the Committee on Finance.

Another very important part of the debate was the distinguished senior Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), who also helped to lead the effort for the enactment of the $1 checkoff measure in 1971, and who has always been such an eloquent spokesman for campaign reform.

Then when we consider the history of the present movement, I would single out the Senator from Michigan (Mr. HAAS) for special praise. He was the first Senator to introduce legislation for comprehensive public financing of all Federal elections and primary elections. In a very real sense, he started the ball rolling in this Congress, and he never let the momentum fade.

Senator ALAN CRANSTON of California, who was so deeply involved in his efforts not only in preparing the legislation itself, but also in rounding up the votes. Although the latter work is not a role which is generally acclaimed or understood outside the halls of Congress, no one here is unaware of his effective work on the Senate floor. I doubt that we could have won today without his careful and successful daily attention to the bill.

Senators MAISEL and SCHWEIKER were also real leaders in developing the concept of public financing, especially the concept of matching grants for primaries. Their early efforts led to a strengthening of the legislation and a new awareness that it would be possible to include primary elections in the bill for public financing.

Senator Clausen of Iowa was another pillar of the Senate effort, both in the early stages of the legislation and in the floor debate, and I congratulate him on the leadership he has displayed.

Senator Mansfield, Senator Stennis, and Senator Hatfield also worked closely in these early efforts, and were particularly instrumental in giving this bill the broad bipartisan support it had to have if final passage was to be achieved.

Finally, I would like to commend the public interest groups, led by Common Cause and the Center for Public Financing of Elections. I do not think the public financing program is better served than by the joint efforts of those in and out of Congress with whom they worked.

These two groups, and others with whom they worked, were extremely successful in making these issues plain and clear to the Members of this body and to the country, and I am hopeful that they will be as successful with the House of Representatives.

I think the action that has been taken by the Senate shows the American people that the Senate can act, and that it can act effectively in the important and sensitive area of election reform.

I have demonstrated quite clearly that the Senate is aroused by the crisis over Watergate, and that we have responded in the most effective legislative way we could in assuring that future elections of Members of the Senate and the House and for the Presidency will be free of the corrosive and corruptive power of large campaign contributions.

I think that history will record that one of the finest efforts for reform I have ever seen in this body. Public financing of elections will rank with the great reforms of the political process in our history, and I think that this is an achievement of which every Member of this body should be proud.

I think the American people can be reassured that the Senate is alive and well in the long tradition that in what we achieved today, we acted in the best interests of all the people of this Nation. Public financing can be one of democracy's most important lessons. This political issue will do as well as it navigates its difficult course through the House of Representatives and to the President for his signature.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. CRANSTON. I want to echo and endorse the praise the Senator from Massachusetts has given to Senator Cannon, the leadership, and many others who have worked so hard on this measure, which is fully as important as the Senator from Massachusetts has stated. I think the Senator for his kind words on my behalf.

I want to add that if we had not had the imaginative and successful and bold effort of the Massachusetts Senators, we would not have achieved the result that has been achieved in recent days and on the floor of the Senate today. The Senator from Massachusetts initially, in joining with the Senator from Pennsylvania, provided the impetus which gave great strength to this effort. At every point when his strength was required, the Senator from Massachusetts was there. It was necessary and effective, and with great imagination, and we all owe him a great debt of gratitude.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS TO THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 745, S. 3292, a bill to authorize appropriations to the Atomic Energy Commission. It is my understanding that this measure will not take long, that there is agreement, and it is not anticipated there will be a rollcall vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The second assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3292) to authorize appropriations to the Atomic Energy Commission in accordance with section 261 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeds to consider the bill.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, the bill now under consideration, S. 3292, would authorize appropriation totaling $3,676,853,000 for both "operating expenses" and "plant and capital equipment" for the coming year. That amount is approximately 2 percent more than the amount requested by the Commission. Approximately 42 percent of the Commission's fiscal year 1976 estimated program costs will be for military applications and the balance for civilian applications. Last year's portion for the military program was about 46 percent. This indicates a continued shift of the fraction of work away from military programs. The proposed authorization also emphasizes energy R & D programs.

The energy R & D programs in this authorization bill are 32 percent greater than last year. The civilian applications portion is 32.2 million in operating costs for the high energy physics program for which the AEC acts as principal funding agent for the entire Federal Government.

OPERATION FUNDS

Turning to the bill itself, the individual sections are explained in the section-by-section analysis beginning at page 46 of the committee report. Very briefly, section 101(a) would authorize $2,935,000 for operating expenses and this total figure consists of the programs listed in the table on page 3 of the committee report with a detailed discussion of each portion. The bill would provide $7 million for the construction program. You will note from the table on page 3 that the committee has recommended several adjustments to the Administration's requested authorization, the net total of which is an increase of $82,110,000.

I would like to highlight some of the significant areas affected by the committee's recommendations. Recognizing the Nation's need for increasing amounts of clean energy, the committee recommended an increase of $9.2 million for the light water breeder reactors, $8.9 million for new nuclear power plants, and $9 million for controlled fusion energy research. We have also recommended an increase of $12.7 million in the Commission's licensing and regulation programs to prevent any reduction in the licensing time for powerplants.

The committee also is recommending a $15 million increase in the nuclear weapons program. Although the increase is only about 1.5 percent above the Commission's request, it is for a very critical area in our nuclear weapons program which is the testing program. We have looked carefully into this matter, and we are convinced that if this work is not strengthened, there is a high probability that our nuclear weapons technology would be frozen.

With regard to the plant and capital equipment portion of the budget, contained in section 101(b) of the bill, a total of $1,125,590,000 is recommended with an increase of $1.6 million over the amount requested by the AEC. The bill authorizes $273,300,000 for new construction projects, $236,650,000 for capital equipment, $81,300,000 for construction and a $649,150,000 increase in authorization for previously authorized projects.

The major changes recommended in this area are a $26.3 million reduction for two reactor development facilities and an increase of $7.1 million for improving our uranium enrichment plants.

Sections 102, 103, and 106 of the bill set forth certain limitations regarding the application of the funds authorized by this bill. These are similar to provisions incorporated in previous authorization acts. Sections 201 and 155 authorize the Commission to retain certain receipts and to transfer operating funds to other Federal agencies for the performance of specific items of work. These sections were previously included in appropriations acts.

Section 107 provides required legislation concerning the Commission's high priority research development program which is the liquid breeder fast breeder program. This section concerns indemnification and ownership of the first LMFR demonstration plant which is...
It is intended that the projects under this authorization be continued as in previous years. The analysis to the cost of the proposed bills submitted by the AEC and other background and explanatory material furnished by the AEC to the Commission in justification of the AEC's fiscal year 1975 authorization bill. The bill is intended to prevent technical and engineering charges which are considered necessary by the Commission consistent with the scope and purpose of the project concerned.

Pursuant to section 101(b), all appropriations are authorized for capital equipment not related to construction in the amount of $260,833,000. This equipment is for plant, equipment, and auxiliary equipment at AEC installations. Additional equipment is required to meet the needs of expanding programs and changing technology. Examples of typical equipment include micrometers, computers, and office equipment. The Committee expects to receive a report from the Commission at least semiannually on obligations incurred pursuant to this authorization.

Section 102 of the bill provides limitations similar to those in prior authorizations. Subsection (a) provides that the Commission may authorize expenditures for projects set forth in certain subparts of section 101(b) only if the amount estimated cost of the project does not exceed 10 percent of the estimated cost for that project set forth in the bill.

Subsection (b) provides similar limitations for projects in other subparts of section 101(b), except that the increase may not exceed 10 percent of the estimated cost shown in the bill. Subsection (c) provides limitations on the total for all those plant projects set forth in section 101(b) only if the amount estimated cost set forth in subsection 101(b) (9) by more than 10 percent.

Under arrangements previously agreed to by the Commission and the Joint Committee, and adopted by the Appropriations Committee after the close of each fiscal year concerning the use of general plant project for which the proposed new authority has been utilized.

Subsection (d) compels subsection (a) and provides that the Commission is not authorized to incur obligations in excess of 125 percent of the estimated cost set forth in subsection 101(b), unless and until additional Appropriations are authorized under section 301 of the Atomic Energy Act, as amended. If the estimated cost set forth in the act were $10 million, the Commission would not be able to incur obligations in excess of $12,500,000; first obtaining an additional authorization for appropriations. This limitation does not apply to any project with an estimated cost less than $5 million.

Subsection (e) complements subsections (b) and (c) and imposes a similar limitation on the AEC and other agencies of the Government for plant projects. The limitation is that the total for all those plant projects shall not exceed 10 percent of the total for the fiscal year 1975.

The bill provides for a transfer of amounts between the "Operating expenses" and the "Plant and equipment acquisitions" as provided in the Appropriations Acts. This transfer may exceed 5 percent of the Appropriations Acts. The AEC appropriations for "Operating expenses" and capital equipment acquisitions may not exceed the amount set forth in section 102 of the bill, and the amount shall be reduced by more than 5 percent by any such transfer. It is understood that any such transfer shall be reported promptly to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

The bill amends prior-year authorization acts as follows:

(a) Section 101 of Public Law 89-428, as amended, is further added to subsection (b) by the figure $2,913,000, by inserting the following after the figure $420,000, as amended:

(c) Public Law 91-273, as amended, is further added to subsection (b) by the figure $2,913,000, by inserting the following after the figure $420,000, as amended:

(c) The Commission hereby authorized this new authority to AEC and other agencies of the Government to take the necessary action in cooperation with the Air Force, the Department of Defense, the Department of the Interior, Department of Energy, and the appropriate agencies of the Government to authorize an estimated cost less than $5 million.

"SEC. 9036. CERTIFICATION BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL."

"(a) INITIAL CERTIFICATIONS.—Not later than 10 days after a candidate establishes his eligibility under section 9033 to receive payments under section 9037, the Comptroller General shall certify to the Secretary for payment to such candidate under section 9037 payment in full of amounts to which such candidate is entitled under section 9034.

"(b) FINALITY OF DETERMINATIONS.—Initial certifications by the Comptroller General under subsection (a), and all determinations made by him under this chapter, are final and conclusive, except to the extent that they are subject to examination and audit by the Comptroller General under section 9038 and judicial review under section 9041.

"SEC. 9037. PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES."

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF ACCOUNT.—The Secretary shall maintain in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund established by section 9006 (a), in addition to any account which he maintains under such section, a separate account to be known as the Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account. The Secretary shall deposit into the matching payment account, for use by the candidate of any political party who is eligible to receive payments under section 9033, the amount available after the Secretary determines that amounts for payments under section 9006 (c) and for payments under section 9007 (b) (3) are available for such payments.

"(b) Payments From the Matching Payment Account.—Upon receipt of a certification from the Comptroller General under section 9036, but not before the beginning of the matching payment period, the Secretary or his delegate shall promptly transfer the amount certified by the Comptroller General from the matching payment account to the candidate. In making such transfers to candidates of the same political party, the Secretary or his delegate shall seek to achieve an equitable distribution of funds available under subsection (a), and the Secretary or his delegate shall take into account, in seeking to achieve an equitable distribution, the sequence in which such certifications are received. Transfers to candidates of the same political party may not exceed an amount which is equal to 45 percent of the total amount available in the matching payment account, and transfers to any candidate may not exceed an amount which is equal to 25 percent of the total amount available in the matching payment account.

"SEC. 9038. EXAMINATIONS AND AUDITS; REPAYMENTS.

"(a) Examinations and Audits.—After each matching payment period, the Comptroller General shall conduct a thorough examination and audit of the qualified campaign expenses of every candidate and his authorized committee who received payments under section 9037.

"(b) Repayments.—

"(1) If the Comptroller General determines that any portion of the payments made to a candidate from the matching payment account was in excess of the aggregate amount of payments to which such candidate was entitled under section 9034, he shall notify the candidate, and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary or his delegate an amount equal to the amount of excess payments.

"(2) If the Comptroller General determines that any amount of any payment made to a candidate from the matching payment account was used for any purpose other than—

"(A) to defray the qualified campaign expenses with respect to which such payment was made, or

"(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses which were received and expended) which were used, to defray qualified campaign expenses, he shall notify such candidate of the amount so used, and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary or his delegate an amount equal to such amount.

"(3) Amounts received by a candidate from the matching payment account may be retained for the liquidation of all obligations to pay qualified campaign expenses incurred for a period not exceeding 6 months after the end of the matching payment period. After all obligations have been liquidated, that portion of any unexpended balance remaining in the candidate's accounts which bears the same ratio to the total unexpended balance as the total amount received from the matching payment account bears to the total of all deposits made into the candidate's accounts shall be promptly repaid to the matching payment account.

"(c) Notification.—No notification shall be made by the Comptroller General under subsection (b) with respect to a matching payment period more than 3 years after the end of such period.

“(d) Deposit of Repayments.—All payments received by the Secretary or his delegate under subsection (b) shall be deposited by him in the matching payment account.

“SEC. 9039. REPORTS TO CONGRESS; REGULATIONS.

“(a) Reports.—The Comptroller General shall, as soon as practicable after each matching payment period, submit a full report to the Senate and House of Representatives setting forth—

“(1) the qualified campaign expenses (shown in such detail as the Comptroller General determines necessary) incurred by the candidates of each political party and their authorized committees,

“(2) the amounts certified by him under section 9036 for payment to each eligible candidate, and

“(3) the amount of payments, if any, required from candidates under section 9038, and the reasons for each payment required.

Each report submitted pursuant to this section shall be printed as a Senate document.

“(b) Regulations, etc.—The Comptroller General is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c), to conduct examinations and audits (in addition to the examinations and audits required by section 9038 (a) ), to conduct investigations, and to require the keeping and submission of any books, records, and information, which he determines to be necessary to carry out his responsibilities under this chapter.

"(c) Review of Regulations.—

"(1) The Comptroller General, before prescribing any rule or regulation under subsection (b), shall transmit a statement with respect to such rule or regulation to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate and to the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection. Such statement shall set forth the proposed rule or regulation and shall contain a detailed explanation and justification of such rule or regulation.

"(2) If either such committee does not, through appropriate action, disapprove the proposed rule or regulation set forth in such statement no later than 30 legislative days after receipt of such statement, then the Comptroller General may prescribe such rule or regulation. The Comptroller General may not prescribe any rule or regulation which is disapproved by either such committee under this paragraph.
“(3) For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘legislative days’ does not include any calendar day on which both Houses of the Congress are not in session.

"SEC. 9040. PARTICIPATION BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

“(a) Appearance by Counsel.—The Comptroller General is authorized to appear in and defend against any action instituted under this section, either by attorneys employed in his office or by counsel whom he may appoint without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and whose compensation he may fix without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title.

“(b) Recovery of Certain Payments.—The Comptroller General is authorized, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to institute actions in the district courts of the United States to seek recovery of any amounts determined to be payable to the Secretary or his delegate as a result of an examination and audit made pursuant to section 9038.

“(c) Injunctive Relief.—The Comptroller General is authorized, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to petition the courts of the United States for injunctive relief as is appropriate to implement any provision of this chapter.

“(d) APPEAL.—The Comptroller General is author-he appears pursuant to the authority provided in this section.

“SEC. 9041. JUDICIAL REVIEW.

by the Comptroller General for which review is sought.

“(b) REVIEW PROCEDURES.—The provisions of chapter
7 of title 5, United States Code, apply to judicial review

"(b) UNLAWFUL USE OF PAYMENTS.—

"(1) It is unlawful for any person who receives any payment under section 9037, or to whom any portion of any such payment is transferred, knowingly and willfully to use, or authorize the use of, such payment or such portion for any purpose other than—

"(A) to defray qualified campaign expenses, or

"(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses which were received and expended) which were used, to defray qualified campaign expenses.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(c) FALSE STATEMENTS, ETC.—

"(A) to furnish any false, fictitious, or fraudulent evidence, books, or information to the Comptroller General under this chapter, or to include in any evidence, books, or information so furnished any misrepresentation of a material fact, or to falsify or conceal any evidence, books, or information relevant to a certification by the Comptroller General or an examination and audit by the Comptroller General under this chapter, or
"(B) to fail to furnish to the Comptroller Gen-paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(3) In addition to the penalty provided by para-

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

JULY 30, 1974.—Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed

Mr. HAYS, from the Committee on House Administration, submitted the following REPORT

Together with minority views, separate views, supplemental views, and additional views

[To accompany H.R. 16090]

The Committee on House Administration, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 16090) to impose overall limitations on campaign expenditures and political contributions; to provide that each candidate for Federal office shall designate a principal campaign committee; to provide for a single reporting responsibility with respect to receipts and expenditures by certain political committees; to change the times for the filing of reports regarding campaign expenditures and political contributions; to provide for public financing of Presidential nominating conventions and Presidential primary elections; and for other purposes, having considered the same, reports favorably thereon without amendment and recommends that the bill do pass.

PURPOSE OF THE BILL

The purpose of the bill is fourfold:

(1) To place limitations on campaign contributions and expenditures;
(2) To facilitate the reporting and disclosure of the sources and disposition of campaign funds by centralizing campaign expenditure and contribution reporting;
(3) To establish a Board of Supervisory Officers to oversee enforcement of and compliance with Federal campaign laws; and
(4) To strengthen the law for public financing of Presidential general elections, and to authorize the use of the dollar checkoff fund for financing Presidential Nominating Conventions and campaigns for nomination to the office of President.
COMMITTEE ACTION

H.R. 16090 was introduced and considered against a background of dissatisfaction with the recently enacted Federal law regulating campaign financing in elections for Federal office.

The Subcommittee on Elections of the Committee on House Administration held public hearings on election amendments on October 2, 10, 16, 25, November 14 and 29, 1973. The full committee marked up the bill in public sessions held on March 26, 27, April 2, 10, 23 25, 30, May 16, 22, June 5, 11, 12, 13, 18, 19, 20, 25, 26, 27, 28 and July 1.

Chairman Hays and Mr. Thompson of New Jersey, Mr. Dent, Mr. Nedzi, Mr. Brademas, Mr. Gray, Mr. Hawkins, Mr. Gettys, Mr. Annunzio, Mr. Gaydos, Mr. Mollohan, Mr. Koch, Mr. Cleveland, Mr. Ware and Mr. Froehlich introduced H.R. 16090 on July 24, 1974.

The full committee on July 24, 1974, by a vote of 21 to 2, ordered the bill reported to the House without amendment.

BACKGROUND

Existing Federal law regulating campaign financing is embodied primarily in the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, chapter 29 of title 18 of the U.S. Code, and the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act. Although most of these campaign finance laws have been recently enacted, some substantive and administrative shortcomings already have become apparent.

Testimony before the Elections Subcommittee generally supported the position that the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as approved by the 92d Congress, was a good law and a step in the right direction. Since its enactment, most campaign expenditures and contributions have been publicly disclosed and there have been no major scandals or serious violations involving Congressional elections. However, some problems in connection with the administration of the new laws and some problems not dealt with by the new laws remain. The most serious problems involved campaign financing of Presidential elections.

One of the problems with the existing law is that it, in effect, requires a multiplicity of campaign disclosure reports. Since existing law permits the proliferation of political committees which support candidates for Federal office, and since each candidate, as well as each committee supporting each candidate, must file reports, supervisory officers have been overwhelmed by the sheer number of the reports filed. Thus, in order to determine the source and disposition of funds spent in a specific campaign a large number of reports must be examined, especially with respect to Presidential candidates.

Aggravating the problem created by the sheer number of required reports is the schedule of reporting dates which impairs the effectiveness of the disclosure provisions. Under existing law, reports must be filed on the fifteenth day before an election, again on the fifth day before an election, and at various other times during the year. Since the major expenses are contracted well in advance of the election, the second pre-election report serves little purpose. Because the second pre-election report is due so close to the date of the election, there is practically no opportunity for the news media to examine, evaluate, and report the significant items disclosed in these reports.

A further deficiency in the existing law concerns the issuance of regulations interpreting statutory provisions. Under existing law, each of the three supervisory officers issues regulations separately: the Clerk of the House of Representatives for candidates for Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner; the Secretary of the Senate for candidates for Senator; and the Comptroller General for candidates for President or Vice President. The Comptroller General issues all regulations with respect to provisions of the Campaign Communications Reform Act, Title I, of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. Finally, certain regulations concerning the extension of unsecured credit to candidates for Federal office are issued by the Civil Aeronautics Board, the Federal Communications Commission, and the Interstate Commerce Commission. This absence of centralized authority results in a lack of uniformity in the regulations issued.

Finally, as pointed out by Chairman Hays, some of the regulations already issued have actually changed the substance of the existing statutory requirements. For example, regulations were issued providing that reports due on the fifteenth and fifth days before an election must be completed as of the twenty-second and twelfth days before an election. The original intent behind the requirement for a final pre-election report due five days before the election was to require disclosure of last minute contributions and expenditures. Yet, under the existing regulations, any last minute transactions (except contributions over $5,000.00) occurring less than twelve days before the election need not be disclosed prior to the election.

Existing law does limit a candidate’s use of personal and family funds in connection with his campaign for Federal office. However, the absence of any limits on contributions means that candidates with wealthy or special interest supporters have a decided advantage in Federal elections.

While existing law limits expenditures for campaign use of the communications media, the absence of any limits on overall expenditures has contributed to the alarming rise in the cost of campaigning for Federal office.

The unchecked rise in campaign expenditures, coupled with the absence of limitations on contributions and expenditures, has increased the dependence of candidates on special interest groups and large contributors. Under the present law the impression persists that a candidate can buy an election by simply spending large sums in a campaign.

In view of the disclosure of serious abuses of each contribution in the last Presidential campaign, the prohibition in the bill against cash contributions over $100 is viewed by the committee as a major advance in campaign finance.

Such a system is not only unfair to candidates, in general, but even more so to the electorate. The electorate is entitled to base its judgment on a straightforward presentation of a candidate’s qualifications for public office and his programs for the Nation rather than on a sophisticated advertising program which is encouraged by the infusion of vast amounts of money.
The Committee on House Administration is of the opinion that there is a definite need for effective and comprehensive legislation in this area to restore and strengthen public confidence in the integrity of the political process.

WHAT THE BILL DOES

H.R. 16090 incorporates four main titles covering criminal code amendments, disclosure of Federal campaign funds, general provisions, and amendments to other laws and effective dates.

Definitions

The committee bill amends the definitions of "expenditure" and "contribution" in the criminal code and in the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971 (hereinafter referred to as the "Act"). The principal effect of the amendments to the definitions of contributions and expenditure in the criminal code in title I of the bill is to exempt certain limited activities from the contribution and spending limits imposed by that title. The principal effect of the amendment to the Act in title II is to exempt similar activities described in the amendments from the reporting requirements of the Act.

Section 102(c) of the bill amends section 591(f) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of expenditure, by adding a new subparagraph (4) to exempt similar activities from the spending limits. Clauses (A), (B), and (C) of subparagraph (4) underscore and reaffirm the principles stated in the amendment to section 610 of title 18, United States Code, proposed by Representative Orval Hansen, and passed by the Congress as part of the Act. Those clauses make it plain that it is not the intent of the Congress in the present legislation to limit or burden in any way the first amendment freedoms of the press and of association. Thus, clause (A) assures the unfettered right of the newspapers, TV networks, and other media to cover and comment on political campaigns. Clause (B) assures the unfettered right of organizations to engage in non-partisan registration drives. (See 117 Cong. Rec. 43380-43381 (Mr. Hansen) for the meaning of "non-partisan" in this context.) And clause (C) assures the unfettered right of certain membership organizations or corporations to communicate with their members or stockholders with regard to political matters.

Sections 102(b) and 102(c) would also exempt from the definition of contribution and expenditure the cost of printed slate cards and sample ballots by State and local political party organizations. The exemption would include the cost of printing such slate cards or sample ballots in newspapers, but would not include costs with respect to expenditures on broadcasting stations, magazines, or other similar types of general public political advertising.

Sections 206(c) and 206(d) of the committee bill include identical amendments to the Act, relating to the definition of contribution and expenditure.

Section 102(c), which amends the definition of expenditure in the criminal code, exempts from the expenditure limits fundraising costs of candidates and their principal campaign committees up to 25% of the candidates' spending limit. It also exempts the fundraising costs of multi-candidate committees, except for fundraising expenditures of these committees for broadcasting stations, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertising facilities, and other similar types of general public political advertising. Since these amendments affect only the definitions of expenditure in the Criminal Code, existing law would continue to govern the reporting requirements of these fundraising costs.

The remaining clauses relating to the definition of contribution and expenditure in both the Criminal Code and the Act have the effect of exempting certain limited in-kind contributions and expenditures from the spending and contribution limits and from the disclosure requirements.

TITLE I—CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENTS

Contribution limits

The bill places strict limits on contributions to candidates for Federal office. Contributions by individuals to candidates are limited in the aggregate to $1,000 per election. Further, an individual is limited to an aggregate of $25,000 in contributions within any calendar year.

Contributions by State political party organizations and so-called “multi-candidate committees” to candidates are limited in the aggregate to $5,000 per election. These committees include organizations that have been registered under the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971 for at least six months, have received contributions from 50 or more persons, and have made contributions to five or more candidates for Federal office.

The bill prohibits contributions in the name of another and provides that, for the purposes of limitations and reporting requirements, any contribution by a person which is earmarked or directed through an intermediary or conduit to a candidate shall be treated as a contribution from such person to that candidate.

The limits apply separately to each campaign for nominations for election, or election to Federal office, except that the various Presidential primary elections shall be considered as one election for purpose of the contribution limits.

Finally, the bill prohibits contributions by foreign nationals and prohibits any contributions in cash in excess of $100.

A question was raised in the committee regarding the possibility of circumventing the limit on contributions by political committees where a national committee of a political organization may contribute the maximum allowable amount to a candidate and a State or local sub-unit or subsidiary of that committee may also contribute to the same candidate. It is the intent of the committee to allow the maximum contribution from each level of the organization if the decision or judgment to make such contributions is independently exercised within the separate levels of the organization. However, if the subsidiary or sub-unit organizations are under the control or direction of the parent organization with respect to their contributions to specific candidates, then the organizations acting in concert would constitute one political committee for the purpose of the contribution limits included in this bill.
Expenditure limits

In response to the problem of spiraling campaign costs and increasing campaign expenditures, the committee has adopted specific limits on the amount a candidate and the committees that support his candidacy may spend for primary, or primary run-off elections, and for special and general elections.

With respect to a Presidential election, candidates would be able to spend $20,000,000 for election to the office of President; candidates for nomination to the office of President would be able to spend $10,000,000.

In the case of campaigns for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of Senator, the limitation is 5 cents times the population of the State, or $75,000, whichever is greater. The expenditure limitation on campaigns for the offices of Representative, Delegate from the District of Columbia, or Resident Commissioner is $75,000, and, in the case of a candidate for the office of Delegate from Guam or the Virgin Islands, the limitation is $15,000.

The limitations on congressional campaigns apply separately to each campaign for nomination for election, or election, to those offices. And for the purpose of these limitations, any expenditures made by a principal campaign committee designated by the candidate under the provisions of the bill shall be deemed to have been made by the candidate.

To assure that expenditure limits will be updated annually to account for increased costs as a result of inflation, the bill provides for yearly adjustment of the limitations based upon comparison of the price index for the preceding calendar year and the price index for the base period of 1973.

Independent expenditures

As noted, the bill places strict limitations on contributions to, and expenditures by, candidates for Federal office and their campaign organizations. The committee recognizes that, if these limitations are to be meaningful, campaign-related spending by individuals and groups independent of a candidate must be limited as well.

Persons acting independently have in the past publicized support of, or opposition to, particular candidates by means of general media exposure, the publication of "honor rolls" relative to legislative issues, and the like. If these costs are incurred without the request or consent of a candidate or his agent, they would not be properly chargeable to that candidate's spending limits. A contrary result would accord a candidate's supporters undue influence over the direction of the campaign or, conversely, invite Constitutional "prior restraint" problems in requiring the candidate's advance approval of independent spending in his behalf. While independent expenditures may occur quite apart from the official campaign effort, they can and often do have a substantial impact on the outcome. Absent a limitation on this activity, well-heeled groups and individuals could spend substantial sums and thus severely compromise the limitations on spending by the supported candidate himself.

The committee is mindful that an absolute proscription of independent campaign-related spending may well offend the guarantees of the First Amendment and would be poor public policy in inhibiting the free expression of views on vital issues. However, it is believed that a reasonable limitation on such spending, in the context of an overall effort to maintain the integrity of the electoral process, is feasible and Constitutionally permissible.

Accordingly, the bill would permit independent expenditures advocating the election or defeat of a "clearly identified candidate" of up to an aggregate of $1,000 in any calendar year. The candidate would be so identified by name, likeness, or other unambiguous reference. In the case of advertisements referring to more than one candidate, costs would be allocated for purposes of the limitation. Of course, expenditures for the communication of views not advocating the election or defeat of a candidate would be counted neither as independent expenditures nor as direct contributions to any candidate. Nor would any communication by a nonpolitical membership organization or corporation to its members or stockholders, and any news story, commentary or editorial distributed through the facilities of all media outlets other than those controlled by a political organization or candidate be counted as an "independent expenditure" or as a political expenditure, generally, since these activities are exempted from the definition of "expenditure" in the bill.

The committee is convinced that this approach makes possible the adequate presentation of candidate-related views by independent groups and at the same time safeguards the integrity of the candidate spending limits. In this way, the bill effectively reconciles the interests of Congress in promoting both free speech and the effective regulation of Federal election campaigns.

Title II—Disclosure of Federal Campaign Funds

The committee bill would revise and centralize the reporting and disclosure requirements of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to facilitate the recording and publicity of the sources and disposition of campaign funds.

Principal campaign committee

First, the bill would require that each candidate designate a principal campaign committee to make expenditures on behalf of the candidate and to file with the appropriate supervisory officer consolidated reports and statements which include the activities of all the committees which support the candidate.

Under the bill, with the exception of the "independent expenditure" limitation of $1,000 discussed above, all committee expenditures on behalf of a candidate must be made by the principal campaign committee. All reports and statements of political committees which are not principal campaign committees but which are established to accept contributions on behalf of a candidate would be required to file their statements and reports with the principal campaign committee rather than the supervisory officer.

The bill would facilitate the disclosure of campaign expenditures and contributions by amending existing law with regard to the filing of reports by political committees and candidates, by deleting the requirement of reports 5 or 15 days prior to an election and requiring instead a single report to be filed ten days before an election. However, a report mailed by registered or certified mail postmarked no later than the 12th day before an election would be deemed to meet the filing requirements.

The bill would also require a report to be filed within 30 days after an election. It would continue to require quarterly reports but waive such a quarterly report if it falls within 10 days of any pre- or post-election report. Nor is a committee or candidate required to file a quarterly report, other than a report for the last quarter in a non-election year, if contributions or expenditures by the committee or candidate do not exceed $1,000 during that quarter.

Enforcement entity

The committee bill provides for independent and efficient supervision of election laws by establishing a seven-member Board of Supervisory Officers (hereinafter referred to as the “Board”), composed of the Secretary of the Senate, the Clerk of the House, the Comptroller General, and four public members—two appointed by the President of the Senate from recommendations of the majority and minority leaders of the Senate and two appointed by the Speaker of the House from recommendations of the majority and minority leaders of the House. The Speaker and the President of the Senate shall appoint individuals of different political parties. None of the public appointees may be employees in the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the government (including elected and appointed officials).

The Board shall be responsible for supervising the actions of the individual supervisory officers, reviewing the development of rules and regulations, and preparing forms to assure they are uniform to the extent practicable.

The individual supervisory officers are required to refer all apparent violations to the Board. The Board is authorized to investigate complaints of possible violations, hold hearings, and subpoena witnesses and evidence. Persons accused of possible violations shall be given a full opportunity to participate in the investigation and may request a hearing. The Board is authorized to encourage voluntary compliance through informal means and refer appropriate apparent violations to the Justice Department for civil or criminal action.

To assure expeditious enforcement by the Justice Department, the bill requires the Attorney General to report regularly to the Board on the status of referrals—60 days after the referral and at the close of every 30 day period thereafter.

Advisory opinions

The bill provides for the rendering of written advisory opinions by the Board of Supervisory Officers relative to the conformity of contemplated actions to title I or III of the bill, or to section 608, 610, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code. Such opinions would be rendered within a reasonable time subsequent to the written request of any Federal officeholder, any candidate for Federal office, or any political committee. Any person to whom such opinion is rendered would be presumed to be in compliance with the appropriate statute if such person acted in good faith in reliance upon such opinion.

All such requests and advisory opinions shall be made public. Before rendering advisory opinions, the Board would be required to provide interested parties with ample opportunity to transmit comments on such requests.

The presumption of compliance for those who rely in good faith on advisory opinions stops short of an outright immunization against civil or criminal penalties. Instead, the bill provides for a presumption of compliance; this presumption would be rebuttable and, therefore, legal action would not be foreclosed.

The overriding purpose of Federal election campaign legislation is to effect full and prompt compliance with its strictures and it is wholly appropriate that all persons affected by that legislation be given every opportunity to so comply. While it may be presumed that all candidates and political committees desire to comply fully with the law, the necessarily complex nature of the legislation may make compliance most difficult even with the most conscientious effort in this regard. Accordingly, it is desirable that those having doubts as to their legal obligations be afforded the means of having these doubts resolved. The public nature of this process will insure that advisory opinions are rendered in an appropriate, even-handed manner.

Congressional review of regulations

To assure that regulations issued by the supervisory officers conform to the campaign finance laws, the bill requires that all regulations be submitted to congressional committees for review.

The committee acknowledges that no legislation purporting to regulate election campaign activities can be drawn to fully anticipate every contingency. Each campaign is in some sense unique and differces may be accentuated by regional and local factors as well. Accordingly, the supervisory officers must be entrusted with the task of promulgating regulations implementing the legislation. It is essential of course that such implementation be fully consistent with the intent of the Congress. In view of allegations that the supervisory officers, in implementing the 1971 Federal Election Campaign Act, have departed in some instances from Congressional intent, it was deemed desirable to provide in the bill a mechanism for improved Congressional monitoring of regulations proposed by the supervisory officers in this area.

The bill provides that, before issuing a regulation, the supervisory officer would transmit the text thereof, together with a detailed explanation, to either the Committee on House Administration (where the supervisory officer is the Clerk of the House of Representatives) or to the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration (where the supervisory officer is the Secretary of the Senate). Where the supervisory officer is the Comptroller General, such regulation would be submitted to both Committees.

Upon submission, the committee involved would have thirty legislative days to disapprove such proposed regulation; “legislative days” would include only those days in which the appropriate House is in session. In the event the Committee (or, in the case of the Comptroller General, either Committee) disapproves a proposed regulation, the supervisory officer would be prohibited from prescribing the regulation in question.

The Committee is of the view that, given the expected large number of non-controversial regulations to be proposed by the supervisory officers, it is unnecessary for the Committees to take affirmative action on each; it is sufficient that the Committees disapprove proposed regulations where the circumstances so warrant. At the same time, the Committee believes that a timely resolution of these matters proceeds consideration by the whole House and Senate and that such consideration is unnecessary in view of the significant expertise of both Committees in the area of campaign legislation.

The establishment of the Board of Supervisory Officers is expected to improve the already substantial cooperation and consultation among these individuals. It is therefore felt that differences between House, Senate, and Presidential campaign-related regulations will be at a minimum level.

Title III—General Provisions

Preemption of State Laws

It is the intent of the Committee to preempt all state and local laws. The committee bill contains two separate provisions relating to the preemption of State laws. One is contained in title III of the bill and amends section 403 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide that the provisions of that Act, as amended by this legislation, supersede and preempt any provision of State law with respect to election to Federal office. It is the intent of the committee to make certain that the Federal law is construed to occupy the field with respect to elections to Federal office and that the Federal law will be the sole authority under which such elections will be regulated. Under the 1971 Act, provision was made for filing Federal reports with State officials and the supervisory officers were required to cooperate with, and to encourage, State officials to accept Federal reports in satisfaction of State reporting requirements. The provision requiring filing of Federal reports with State officials is retained, but the provision relating to encouraging State officials to accept Federal reports to satisfy State reporting requirements is deleted. Under this legislation, Federal reporting requirements will be the only reporting requirements and copies of the Federal reports must be filed with appropriate State officials. The committee also feels that there can be no question with respect to preemption of local laws. Since the committee has provided that the Federal law supersede and preempt any law enacted by a State, the Federal law will also supersede and preempt any law enacted by a political subdivision of a State.

The other preemption provision was added to title I of the bill, relating to amendments to the criminal code. This was done to make it clear that the Federal law is intended to be the sole source of criminal sanctions for offenses involving political activities in connection with Federal elections. The committee wants to avoid even the possibility of an argument that the preemption provision contained in the 1971 Act referring to "provisions of this Act" does not include the provisions of title 18 amended by the 1971 Act and by this legislation. This clarification is most important because all of the actual limitations on contributions and expenditures, together with the sanctions for violation of such limitations, are included in the criminal code provisions of title 18 amended by this legislation.

Title IV—Amendments to Other Laws; Effective Dates

Political activities by State and local officers and employees

Section 401 is intended to repeal those restrictions on the voluntary partisan political activities of state and local employees contained in Chapter 15, Title 5, U.S.C.

The amendments made by section 401 to chapter 15 of title 5, United States Code, relating to political activity by State and local employees, would remove from Federal law the prohibition against voluntary partisan political activity by State and local employees employed in programs funded in whole or in part from Federal loans or grants. Activities such as driving voters to the polls or attending a political convention as a delegate would no longer be prohibited by Federal law. The regulation of political activities of State and local employees would be left largely to the States. Federal law would, however, continue to prohibit a State or local officer or employee from using his official authority or influence to interfere with or affect the result of an election and prohibit him from coercing, commanding, or advising another State or local officer or employee to pay, lend, or contribute anything of value to any person for political purposes. Nothing in existing law or in the amendment made by this section prevents a State or local officer or employee from making a voluntary political contribution.

Public Financing of Presidential Elections

Public financing for general elections to the office of President, beginning with the elections in 1976, was authorized in a law passed by the 92d Congress (P.L. 92–178). This law, as amended in the 93d Congress (P.L. 93–53), allows individuals to designate on their annual tax return that a dollar be paid to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund, or the so-called Dollar Check-off Fund. The total amount available to be transferred to eligible candidates is limited to the amount designated by individual taxpayers and may be transferred only after being appropriated by Congress.

The current law limits the amount of public funds for candidates of major parties to 15¢ times the voting age population and proportionately smaller amounts for minor party candidates.

The committee bill strengthens the Dollar Check-off Law and amend it to authorize the use of the Fund for financing presidential nominating conventions and campaigns for the nomination to the office of President. As with the existing law, public financing would be strictly voluntary and would come from the Dollar Check-off Fund only.
General elections

To conform the amount of public funds a presidential candidate may receive to the spending limit imposed in title I of the bill, the bill amends the Dollar Check-off Law so that candidates may receive up to $20 million in check-off funds for general elections to the office of President. The committee bill strengthens the existing Dollar Check-off Law by making payments from the Presidential Election Campaign Fund automatic to assure that public funds may be used without requiring separate congressional action each year.

Nominating conventions

Since 1968, Section 276(c) of the Internal Revenue Code has permitted tax deductions for amounts paid for advertising in the convention program of a political party distributed in connection with its presidential nominating convention. The majority of the funds raised by the major political parties to defray the costs of their 1968 and 1972 presidential nominating conventions was derived from these sources.

Section 406 of the committee bill repeals Section 276(c) of the Internal Revenue Code and authorizes instead up to $2 million from the Dollar Check-off Fund for each major political party to defray convention expenses. Minor parties are entitled to a proportionately smaller amount, based on the ratio of the average of their popular votes in the previous presidential election to the average popular vote of the major parties at such election.

Funds can be used to defray the expenses of the presidential nominating convention (including the payment of deposits) or to repay loans the proceeds of which were used to defray such expenses. Public funds may not be used, however, to defray expenses of any candidate or delegate participating in the convention.

Payments to political parties shall be subject to examination and audits by the Comptroller General, and funds not expended by any party will be transferred to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund.

Political parties would not be required to use public funds. However, neither major nor minor political parties will, under ordinary circumstances, be allowed to expend more than a total of $2 million for all convention expenses from public and private sources. In case of emergencies arising from extraordinary and unforeseen circumstances, the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Advisory Board may permit a party to expend its own funds in excess of the $2 million limit.

Presidential primary elections

The committee bill provides for limited public financing of primary elections by authorizing matching federal payments for small contributions from the Dollar Check-off Fund.

Matching payments would come from the surplus of the Dollar Check-off Fund only after adequate funds have been set aside to meet the estimated obligations of public financing of presidential nominating conventions and presidential general elections.

Primary candidates would receive matching payments for their first $250 or less received from each individual contributor. Under the bill, matchable contributions would not include loans. The maximum amount of such funds a candidate could receive is one-half the overall expenditure limit for presidential primary candidates. Thus, under the limits provided in the committee bill, no candidate could receive more than $5 million.

Candidates could begin collecting contributions eligible for matching payments as early as January of the year preceding the year in which the primaries are held; however, Federal matching payments could not be made until January of the election year.

Matching payments may be used for legitimate campaign expenses during the pre-nomination period, and stiff criminal penalties are provided for unlawful use of payments, false statements to the Comptroller General, and kickbacks and illegal payments.

To eliminate frivolous candidates, the committee bill requires candidates to accumulate at least $5,000 in matchable contributions in each of 20 states.

The committee believed this modest threshold requirement is the most reasonable and best practicable test to assure that public funds are provided to serious candidates. By matching only small contributions the threshold provides a means of testing public support of a candidate and encourages a candidate to involve large numbers of voters in his fundraising efforts.

The committee does not believe this requirement bars legitimate aspirants for public office for it does not affect the right of an individual to become a candidate, qualify for a position on the ballot, or campaign for office.

The Supreme Court has recognized that "a State has an interest, if not a duty to protect the integrity of its political processes from frivolous or fraudulent candidacies." Bullock v. Carter 405 U.S. 134, 145 (1972). See also Jenness v. Fortson 403 U.S. 431, 442 (1971). It has also recently recognized the legitimacy of ensuring that public funds are spent wisely in the political process. In American Party of Texas v. White, 42 U.S.L.W. 4453 (U.S. March 26, 1974) the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of a law that provided public financing from state revenue for primaries by major political parties but not for conventions or petition drives of minor parties. In ruling on the challenge, the Court concluded:

["W"]e cannot agree that the State, simply because it defrays the expenses of party primary elections, must also finance the efforts of every nascent political group seeking to organize itself and unsuccessfully attempting to win a place on the general election ballot. Id., at 4461.

Requiring candidates to raise a reasonable threshold amount in small contributions is neutral vis-a-vis particular candidates and therefore a legitimate requirement to be imposed on those seeking public funds to finance their campaigns.

Public financing limited to presidential elections

The committee bill limits public financing to all phases of elections to the office of President. The committee believed the greatest potential for abuses by special interest groups and big money is in connection with campaigns to the office of President. The unhappy experiences of the 1972 presidential campaign served to underscore the dangers of spiraling campaign expenditures and the influence of excessive private political contributions.
The committee bill limits expenditures and private contributions and limits the potential abuse of big money in presidential elections by allowing for full public financing of presidential general elections and presidential nominating conventions and for public financing on a matching basis for presidential primaries.

Although many of the campaign finance abuses have occurred in connection with presidential general elections, the influence or potential influence of big money is as great in all phases of presidential elections.

For example, major political parties have come to rely heavily on large corporations and labor unions to pay for advertisements in convention programs to meet the expenses of nominating conventions. Primary elections are a critical stage in the candidate selection process, and the potential for influence and abuse of big money in the primary elections is as great as in the general elections. Further, with public financing of presidential elections big money in all likelihood would be shifted to presidential primary candidates.

The committee was aware that there may be some problems in administering the public finance laws, but because presidential elections are so visible, public financing should be relatively easy to administer.

During consideration of the bill, the committee considered and rejected a proposal to provide full public financing of congressional elections. In addition to the considerations noted above, some concern was expressed that the experience in foreign countries which have adopted public financing of political campaigns suggests that special interest groups representing money have been supplanted by those based on regional, religious, or occupational factors. The proliferation of candidates supported by these groups in such countries has meant that fewer votes are needed to achieve plurality and thus the largest minority faction in a particular constituency becomes firmly entrenched in power. Furthermore, the proliferation of political parties has promoted instability in the affairs of national governments, since a coalition of parties sufficient to support one national program may dissolve when confronted by another program where the interests of the parties are differently aligned. Since the object of the committee is to eliminate the influence of special interests, rather than to substitute one special interest for another, the concept of generalized government financing of political campaigns has not been accepted.

CONCLUSION

It is the opinion of the committee that the bill, H.R. 16090 corrects the deficiencies in the Federal election laws.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY OF THE BILL

SHORT TITLE

The first section provides that this legislation may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974".
TITLE I—CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENTS

LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

Section 101(a) amends section 608 of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures, by adding a new subsection (b) through subsection (e).

Contribution limitations

The new subsection (b) (1) provides that, except as otherwise provided by the new subsection (b), no person may make contributions exceeding $1,000 to any candidate for Federal office in any election.

The new subsection (b) (2) provides that no political committee (other than the principal campaign committee of a candidate) may make contributions exceeding $5,000 to any candidate for Federal office in any election.

Subsection (b) (2) also defines the term “political committee” to mean, for purposes of subsection (b) (2), an organization registered as a political committee under section 303 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (hereinafter in this summary referred to as the “Act”) for at least 6 months which has received contributions from more than 50 persons and has made contributions to at least 5 candidates for Federal office. Subsection (b) (2) also provides that State political party organizations shall not be required to make contributions to at least 5 candidates for Federal office in order to be considered political committees for purposes of subsection (b) (2).

The new subsection (b) (3) provides that no individual may make contributions exceeding $25,000 in any calendar year.

The new subsection (b) (4) provides that, for purposes of subsection (b), the following rules shall apply: (1) if a contribution is made to a political committee authorized in writing by a candidate to accept contributions on his behalf, then such contribution shall be considered to be a contribution to such candidate; and (2) any contribution to the candidate of a political party for the office of Vice President shall be considered to be a contribution to the candidate of such party for the office of President.

The new subsection (b) (5) provides that limitations imposed by subsection (b) (1) and subsection (b) (2) shall apply separately to each election.

The new subsection (b) (6) provides that all contributions from a person to a particular candidate shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate, even if such contributions are made indirectly, are earmarked, or are directed through any intermediary or conduit. It should be noted that the provisions of subsection (b) (6) are not intended to apply to contributions from separate segregated funds maintained by corporations or labor organizations, because donors to such funds must relinquish control of their donation to the corporation or labor organization and such donors may not earmark or direct such donations to any specific candidate or political committee.

Subsection (b) (6) requires any person acting as an intermediary or conduit to report to the appropriate supervisory officer the source of the contribution and the intended recipient of the contribution. Such person also shall report such contribution to the intended recipient.

It is the understanding of the committee that the following rule will apply with respect to the application of the contribution limitations established by subsection (b): if a person exercises any direct or indirect control over the making of a contribution, then such contribution shall count toward the limitation imposed with respect to such person under subsection (b), but it will not count toward such a person's contribution limitation when it is demonstrated that such person exercised no direct or indirect control over the making of the contribution involved.

Candidates' expenditure limitations
The new subsection (c) establishes the following expenditure limitations: (1) a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may not make expenditures exceeding $10,000,000; (2) a candidate for election to the office of President may not make expenditures exceeding $20,000,000; (3) a candidate for the office of Senator may not make expenditures which exceed the greater of (A) 5 cents multiplied by the population of the State involved; or (B) $75,000; (4) a candidate for the office of Representative, Delegate from the District of Columbia, or Resident Commissioner, may not make expenditures exceeding $75,000; and (5) a candidate for the office of Delegate from Guam or the Virgin Islands may not make expenditures exceeding $15,000.

Subsection (c) also provides that, for purposes of such subsection, the following rules shall apply: (1) any expenditure made by the candidate of a political party for the office of Vice President shall be considered to be an expenditure made by the candidate of such party for the office of President; (2) any expenditure made on behalf of a candidate by his principal campaign committee shall be deemed to have been made by such candidate; and (3) the population of a geographical area shall be the population according to the most recent decennial census.

Subsection (c) also provides that the expenditure limitations applied by subsection (c) to candidates for the office of Senator, Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, shall apply separately to each election. It also provides that, for purposes of the $10 million expenditure limit on candidates for nomination to the office of President, all Presidential primary elections are considered one election.

Cost-of-living adjustments
The new subsection (d) provides that, at the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1975), the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Comptroller General the percentage difference between the price index for the most recent calendar year and the price index for the base period. Subsection (d) provides that the expenditure limitations established by subsection (c) shall be increased by such percentage difference.

Subsection (d) also contains definitions of terms used in such subsection. The term “price index” is defined to mean the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index. The term "base period" is defined to mean the calendar year 1973.

Other expenditure limitations

The new subsection (e) provides that no person may make expenditures (other than expenditures made by or on behalf of a candidate under the new subsection (c)) relative to a clearly identified candidate exceeding $1,000 in any calendar year.

Subsection (e) also defines the term "clearly identified" to mean (1) the appearance of the name of the candidate; (2) the appearance of a photograph or drawing of the candidate; or (3) an unambiguous reference which establishes the identity of the candidate.

Under this provision any person can make such expenditures up to $1,000 in any calendar year. Such expenditures would not count against a candidate's expenditure limitation nor against the contribution limitation applicable to the person making the expenditure, but it would be a reportable expenditure under section 305 of the disclosure provisions if the aggregate of such expenditures exceeded $100 in the calendar year.

Expenditures from personal funds

Section 101 (b) amends section 608(a) (1) of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures, to provide that a candidate may not make expenditures from his personal funds or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with any election for Federal office, exceeding $25,000. Section 608(a) (2) of title 18 defines "immediate family" as the candidate's spouse, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate and the spouses of any of them.

Discharge of certain campaign debts

Section 101 (c) provides that, notwithstanding section 608(a) (1) of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on expenditures from personal funds, an individual may discharge (from his personal funds or the personal funds of his immediate family) any debt outstanding on the date of the enactment of this legislation which was incurred in connection with any campaign for election to Federal office ending before the close of December 31, 1972.

Section 101 (c) also contains definitions of terms used in such subsection. The terms "election", "Federal office", and "political committee" are given the meanings given them by section 591 of title 1, United States Code. The term "immediate family" has the same meaning referred to above under the explanation of section 101 (b), relating to expenditures from the personal funds of a candidate.

Section 101 (d) amends section 613 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions by agents of foreign principals, to make the restrictions established by such section apply directly to foreign nationals.

Section 101 (d) also adds a new paragraph at the end of section 613 which defines the term "foreign national" to mean (1) a foreign principal (as such term is defined by section 1(b) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938), except that the term "foreign national" does not include any individual who is a citizen of the United States; or (2) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted into the United States for permanent residence.

Amount of criminal fines

Section 101(e) (1) amends section 608 of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures, to increase the criminal fine which may be imposed under such section from $1,000 to $25,000.

Section 101(e) (2) amends section 610 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions or expenditures by national banks, corporations, or labor organizations, to (1) increase the criminal fine which may be imposed under such section against corporations or labor organizations from $5,000 to $25,000; and (2) increase the criminal fine which may be imposed under such section against officers or directors committing willful violations from $10,000 to $50,000. It should be noted that it is the desire of the committee that the increased penalties of section 610, together with the existing prison penalties of such section, shall be enforced rigorously against officers and directors of corporations and labor organizations to the extent such officers and directors are responsible for violations of such section.

Section 101(e) (3) amends section 611 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions by firms or individuals contracting with the United States, to increase the criminal fine which may be imposed under such section from $5,000 to $25,000.

Section 101(e) (4) amends section 613 of title 18, United States Code (as amended by section 101(d)), relating to contributions by foreign nationals, to increase the criminal fine which may be imposed under such section from $5,000 to $25,000.

Contribution restrictions; honorariums

Section 101(f) amends chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, relating to elections and political activities, by adding at the end thereof a new section 614 through section 616.

The new section 614, relating to prohibition of contributions in name of another, is the same as section 310 of the Act (which is deleted by section 101(f) (4)), except that the criminal fine is increased from $1,000 to $25,000. Section 614 provides that no person may make a contribution in the name of another person, and no person may knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

The new section 615, relating to limitation on contributions of currency, provides that no person may make contributions of currency exceeding $100 to any candidate for Federal office in any election. A violation of section 615 is punishable by a fine of $25,000 or one year of imprisonment, or both.

The new section 616, relating to acceptance of excessive honorariums, provides that any elected or appointed officer or employee of any branch of the Federal Government who accepts any single honorarium exceeding $1,000, or who accepts honorariums exceeding $10,000 in a calendar year, shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000.
Applicability of definitions

Section 101(f) also amends section 591 of title 18, United States Code, relating to definitions, to clarify that the manner in which terms are defined in such section applies to the use of such terms in such section, as well as to the use of such terms in sections 597, 599, 600, 602, 608, 610, 611, 614, and 615 of such title.

Definitions of Political Committee, Contribution, Expenditure, and Principal Campaign Committee

Political committee

Section 102(a) amends section 591(d) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of political committee, to provide that such term shall be extended to include any individual, committee, association, or organization which commits act for the purpose of influencing the outcome of any election for Federal office, except that such acts shall not include certain communications which are excluded from the definition of expenditure under section 591(f), discussed below. Such communications include news stories and editorials distributed through the public media facilities (unless such facilities are owned or controlled by a political party or committee, or by a candidate), communications by a membership organization to its members (unless it is organized primarily for the purpose of influencing an election to Federal office), and any other communication which is not made for the purpose of influencing an election to Federal office.

Contribution

Section 102(b) amends section 591(e) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of contribution, to provide that the following activities shall not be considered to be contributions: (1) the use of property by an individual who owns or leases such property with respect to the rendering of voluntary services by such individual to a candidate, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual’s premises for candidate-related activities, to the extent that the cumulative value of such use does not exceed $500; (2) the sale of food or beverage by a vendor to a candidate at a reduced charge if such charge is at least equal to the cost of such food or beverage to the vendor; (3) the travel expenses of an individual rendering voluntary services to a candidate, to the extent that the cumulative total of such expenses does not exceed $500; and (4) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation or distribution of any printed slate card or other printed listing of three or more candidates for public office who are candidates in the State in which such committee is located, but this exclusion does not apply to payment of costs for the display of any such printed listing through public media facilities (other than newspapers) or on outdoor advertising facilities such as billboards.

Expenditure

Section 102(c) amends section 591(f) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of expenditure, to provide that the following activities shall not be considered to be expenditures: (1) any news story, commentary, or editorial of any broadcasting station, newspaper, or other periodical publication, unless such facilities are owned or controlled by a political party, political committee, or candidate; (2) non-partisan get-out-the-vote activity; (3) communications by a membership organization or corporation to its members or stockholders, if such membership organization or corporation is not organized primarily to influence the outcome of elections for Federal office; (4) the use of property by an individual who owns or leases such property with respect to the rendering of voluntary services by such individual to a candidate, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual's premises for candidate-related activities, to the extent that the cumulative value of such use does not exceed $500; (5) the travel expenses of an individual rendering voluntary services to a candidate, to the extent that the cumulative total of such expenses does not exceed $500; (6) communications which are not made to influence the outcome of elections for Federal office; (7) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation or distribution of any printed slate card or other printed listing of three or more candidates for public office who are candidates in the State in which such committee is located, but this exclusion does not apply to payment of costs for the display of any such printed listing through public media facilities (other than newspapers) or on outdoor advertising facilities such as billboards; (8) the costs of a candidate (including his principal campaign committee) with respect to his solicitation of contributions, except that this exception does not apply to costs which exceed 25 percent of the expenditure limitation applicable to such candidate under section 608(c) of title 18; and (9) any costs incurred by a multicandidate committee which has been registered under the Act as a political committee for at least 6 months, has received contributions from at least 50 persons, and (except for State political party organizations) has made contributions to at least 5 candidates, in connection with soliciting contributions to itself or to a general political fund controlled by it, but this exclusion does not exempt costs of soliciting contributions through any public media facilities.

Principal campaign committee

Section 102(d) amends section 591 of title 18, United States Code, relating to definitions, by adding a new paragraph (i) which defines the term "principal campaign committee". The term is defined to mean the principal campaign committee designated by a candidate under section 302(f)(1) of the Act.

POLITICAL FUNDS OF CORPORATIONS OR LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

Section 103 amends section 611 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions by firms or individuals contracting with the United States, to provide that such section shall not prohibit the establishment or maintenance of a separate segregated campaign fund by a corporation or a labor organization unless such establishment or maintenance is prohibited under section 610 of title 18, relating to contributions or expenditures by national banks, corporations, or labor organizations.

A question was raised in the committee during the consideration of the amendment to section 611 as to whether doctors receiving payments under the so-called Medicare and Medicaid programs are prohibited from making political contributions as Government contractors. The committee is of the opinion that nothing in the existing section 611, nor in the amendment thereto included in the reported bill, would prohibit a doctor from making a political contribution solely because he was receiving payments for medical services rendered to patients under either the Medicare or Medicaid program. Under the Medicare program the basic contractual relationship is between the Federal Government and the individual receiving the medical services. The individual receiving the medical services may be reimbursed directly by the Federal Government for amounts paid for such services, or he may assign his claim against the Federal Government to the doctor who rendered the services, but in the latter case the doctor merely stands in the shoes of the claimant for payment. This relationship is not altered by the fact that a Federal agency may retain a right to audit the accounts of a medical practitioner to protect the Federal Government against fraudulent claims for medical services.

Under so-called Medicaid programs, it is true that doctors may have specific contractual agreements to render medical services, but such agreements are with State agencies and not with the Federal Government. Medicaid programs are administered by State agencies using Federal funds. The committee does not believe that section 611 prohibiting political contributions by Government contractors has any application to doctors rendering medical services pursuant to a contract with a State agency.

A separate question was raised in the committee concerning the application of section 610 of title 18, relating to prohibitions against political contributions by corporations, banks, and labor organizations, as to whether a professional corporation composed of doctors, lawyers, architects, engineers, etc., would be prohibited from making political contributions. Whether or not a professional association is a corporation is a matter determined under State law. If, under State law, such an association is a corporation, it would be prohibited from making a political contribution as a corporation. However, nothing in existing law, nor in the amendments contained in the reported bill, prohibit an individual member of any corporation from making a political contribution as an individual. Existing law also permits corporations to establish a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes so long as contributions to such fund are voluntary and not secured by force or job discrimination or financial reprisals, or threat thereof, or by money obtained in any commercial transaction.

Effect on State Law

Section 104 provides that chapter 29 of title 18 of the United States Code, relating to criminal sanctions for political activities in connection with Federal elections, supersedes and preempts provisions of State law.

Title II—Disclosure of Federal Campaign Funds

Principal Campaign Committee

Section 201 amends section 302 of the Act, relating to organization of political committees, by striking out subsection (f), relating to notices with respect to fund solicitation and annual reports by supervisory officers, and by inserting in lieu thereof a new subsection (f), relating to principal campaign committees.

Designation of principal campaign committee

Subsection (f) (1) requires that candidates for Federal office (other than candidates for the office of Vice President) designate a political committee as their principal campaign committee. Subsection (f) (1) also provides that no political committee may be designated as the principal campaign committee of more than one candidate, except that the Presidential candidate of a political party may, after he is nominated, designate the national committee of his political party as his principal campaign committee.

Expenditures on behalf of candidate

Subsection (f) (2) provides that, except in the case of expenditures which may be made under section 608(e) of title 18, United States Code, relating to expenditures of not more than $1,000 in a calendar year made with respect to a clearly identified candidate, only the principal campaign committee of a candidate may make expenditures on behalf of such candidate.

Reports to principal campaign committee

Subsection (f) (3) provides that political committees receiving contributions on behalf of a candidate shall report such contributions to the principal campaign committee of such candidate, instead of to the appropriate supervisory officer.

Principal campaign committee reports

Subsection (f) (4) provides that the principal campaign committee shall compile and file reports which such committee receives from other political committees supporting the candidate involved, together with its own reports and statements, with the appropriate supervisory officer.

Definition of political committee

Subsection (f) (5) provides that, for purposes of subsection (f) (1) and subsection (f) (3), the term “political committee” does not include political committees supporting more than one candidate, except for the national committee of a political party designated by a Presidential candidate. Therefore, a candidate may not designate a multi-candidate political committee as his principal campaign committee and multicandidate political committees shall continue to report directly to the appropriate supervisory officer under applicable provisions of the Act.

REGISTRATION OF POLITICAL COMMITTEES; STATEMENTS

Section 202 amends section 303 of the Act, relating to registration of political committees and statements, by adding at the end thereof a new subsection (e) which provides that reports and notifications of political committees (other than principal campaign committees and multi-candidate political committees) required to be filed under section 303 shall be filed with the appropriate principal campaign committee.
REPORTS BY POLITICAL COMMITTEES AND CANDIDATES

Filing dates

Section 203(a) amends section 304(a) of the Act, relating to filing dates for reports of receipts and expenditures by political committees and candidates, to provide for the following new filing requirements:

1. In a calendar year in which an individual is a candidate for Federal office and an election is held for the particular Federal office which such individual is seeking, reports of receipts and expenditures must be filed 10 days before such election. Such reports shall be complete as of the fifteenth day before such election. Reports filed by registered or certified mail must be postmarked by the twelfth day before such election. In addition, such reports must be filed 30 days after the date of such election and be complete as of the twentieth day after the date of such election.

2. In other calendar years, reports of receipts and expenditures must be filed after the close of the calendar year and no later than January 31 of the following calendar year, and must be complete as of the close of the calendar year for which filed.

3. In addition to reports required to be filed in an election year or in any other calendar year, reports of receipts and expenditures must be filed for any calendar quarter in which the candidate or committee reporting received contributions exceeding $1,000 or made expenditures exceeding $1,000. In any case in which such a quarterly report would coincide with the annual report which is required for nonelection years, the amendment made by section 203 provides that the quarterly report be filed in accordance with provisions governing the filing of annual reports.

The amendment made by section 203(a) also provides that when the last day for filing a quarterly report occurs within 10 days of an election, then the quarterly report requirement shall be waived and superseded by the required election report. Such amendment also provides that any contribution exceeding $1,000 which is received after the fifteenth day before an election but more than 48 hours before an election, shall be reported no later than 48 hours after its receipt.

Such amendment also provides that treasurers of political committees which are not principal campaign committees or multicandidate committees shall file reports required by section 304 of the Act with the appropriate principal campaign committee, instead of with the appropriate supervisory officer.

Additional information required

Section 203(b) amends section 304(b) of the Act, relating to information required to be reported, to provide that, in addition to reporting total receipts and total expenditures, each report must show total receipts less transfers between political committees which support the same candidate and do not support any other candidate and total expenditures less such transfers. In some cases the total receipts and expenditures reported have presented a distorted picture because, under the Act, transfers of funds between committees are counted as contributions and expenditures. This amendment provides that where such transfers occur between single candidate committees supporting the same candidate the report must also show total receipts less such transfers and total expenditures less such transfers.

FORMAL REQUIREMENTS FOR REPORTS AND STATEMENTS

Section 204 amends sections 306 of the Act, relating to formal requirements respecting reports and statements, by adding at the end thereof a new subsection (e) which provides that if a report or statement required to be filed by a candidate or committee relating to contributions or expenditures or registration of a committee is delivered by registered or certified mail, then the United States postmark stamped on the envelope containing such report shall be deemed to be the date of filing.

DUTIES OF THE SUPERVISORY OFFICER

Changes in duties

Section 205(a) amends section 308(a) of the Act in order to eliminate the following duties of the supervisory officer: (1) the duty to compile and maintain a current list of statements relating to each candidate; (2) the duty to prepare and publish an annual report regarding contributions to and expenditures by candidates and political committees; (3) the duty to prepare special reports comparing totals and categories of contributions and expenditures; (4) the duty to prepare such other reports as the supervisory officer may deem appropriate, and (5) the duty to assure wide dissemination of statistics, summaries, and reports prepared under the Act.

Section 205(a) also amends section 308(a) of the Act in order to establish the following new duties of the supervisory officer: (1) the compilation and maintenance of a cumulative index of reports and statements filed with the supervisory officer; and (2) the preparation of special reports listing candidates for whom reports were filed as required by title III of the Act and candidates for whom such reports were not filed as so required.

Section 205(a) also provides that the annual report which the supervisory officer is required to file under section 308(a)(7) of the Act (which is eliminated by the amendment made by section 205(a)) shall not be filed with respect to any calendar year beginning after December 31, 1972.

Section 205(b) amends section 308 of the Act by striking out subsection (b), which required the supervisory officer to develop procedures in cooperation with State election officials to permit filing of Federal reports to comply with State requirements, and subsection (c), which required the Comptroller General to serve as a national clearinghouse for information regarding the administration of elections.

Section 205(b) also amends section 308 of the Act by adding a new subsection (b), which requires the supervisory officer, before he prescribes any rule or regulation under section 308, to transmit a statement regarding such rule or regulation to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate or the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives, as the case may be. The new subsection
(b) provides that such statement shall explain and justify the proposed rule or regulation.

Subsection (b) also provides that if the supervisory officer involved is the Clerk of the House of Representatives, he shall transmit such statement to the Committee on House Administration. If the supervisory officer involved is the Secretary of the Senate, he shall transmit such statement to the Committee on Rules and Administration. If the supervisory officer involved is the Comptroller General, he shall transmit such statement to both such committees. If either committee which receives a statement from the supervisory officer involved disapproves the proposed rule or regulation within 30 legislative days after it is received, then the supervisory officer may not prescribe such rule or regulation. In the case of the Comptroller General, if only one of the two committees disapproves the proposed rule or regulation, such disapproval by one committee is sufficient to prevent prescription of the rule or regulation.

Subsection (b) also defines the term “legislative days”. With respect to statements transmitted to the Committee on Rules and Administration, such term does not include any calendar day on which the Senate is not in session. With respect to statements transmitted to the Committee on House Administration, such term does not include any calendar day on which the House of Representatives is not in session. With respect to statements transmitted to both committees, such term does not include any calendar day on which both Houses of the Congress are not in session.

It should be noted that it is the intent of the members of the committee that the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate and the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives, in reviewing proposed rules and regulations under section 308(b) of the Act and under sections 9009(c) and 9039(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, shall strive to achieve uniformity in such rules and regulations.

DEFINITIONS OF POLITICAL COMMITTEE, CONTRIBUTION, EXPENDITURE, AND SUPERVISORY OFFICER

Technical amendments

Paragraph (1) of section 206(a) makes a technical amendment to section 301 of the Act, relating to definitions, to provide that the terms defined for purposes of the disclosure provisions of title III of the Act will have the same meanings for purposes of title IV of the Act, relating to general provisions. Under this amendment it will not be necessary to add or retain a specific reference to a definition in section 301 of the Act in order to make clear that terms such as “election”, “Federal office”, and “State” have the same meaning when used in title IV of the Act as when used in title III.

Paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 206(a) remove from title IV of the Act references to definitions in section 301 of the Act to conform with the amendment discussed above under paragraph (1) of this section.

Political committee

Section 206(b) amends section 301(d) of the Act, relating to the definition of political committee, in the same manner that section 102
(a) amends section 591(d) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of political committee. This amendment extends the definition of political committee to include any individual, committee, association, or organization which commits any act for the purpose of influencing the outcome of any election for Federal office, except that communications which are excluded from the definition of expenditure under section 301(f)(4), discussed below, are excluded. Such communications included news stories and editorials distributed through the public media facilities (unless such facilities are owned or controlled by a political party or committee, or by a candidate), communications by a membership organization to its members (unless it is organized primarily for the purpose of influencing an election to Federal office), and any other communication which is not made for the purpose of influencing an election to Federal office.

Contribution

Section 206(b) amends section 301(e)(5) of the Act, relating to an exception to the definition of contribution, in the same manner that section 102(b) amends section 591(e)(5) of title 18, United States Code, relating to an exception to the definition of contributions. Under this amendment, the following activities are not considered contributions: (1) the use of property by an individual who owns or leases such property with respect to the rendering of voluntary services by such individual to a candidate, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual’s premises for candidate-related activities, to the extent that the cumulative value of such use does not exceed $500; (2) the sale of food or beverages by a vendor to a candidate at a reduced charge if such charge is at least equal to the cost of such food or beverage to the vendor; (3) the travel expenses of an individual rendering voluntary services to a candidate, to the extent that the cumulative total of such expenses does not exceed $500; and (4) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation or distribution of any printed slate card or other printed listing of three or more candidates for public office who are candidates in the State in which such committee is located, but this exclusion does not apply to payment of costs for the display of any such printed listing through public media facilities (other than newspapers) or on outdoor advertising facilities such as billboards.

Expenditure

Section 206(c) amends section 301(f) of the Act, relating to the definition of expenditure, in the same manner that section 102(c) amends section 591(f) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of expenditure, except that the amendment made by this section does not establish an exception for costs incurred by a candidate or political committee with respect to the solicitation of contributions by the candidate or political committee. Under this amendment, the following activities are not considered expenditures: (1) any news story, commentary, or editorial distributed through the facilities of any broadcasting station, newspaper, or periodical publication (unless such facilities are owned or controlled by a political party or committee, or by a candidate); (2) nonpartisan get-out-the-vote activity; (3) communications by a membership organization to its members (unless it is organized primarily for the purpose of influencing an election to Federal office); (4) the use of property by an individual who owns or leases such property with respect to the rendering of voluntary services by such individual to a candidate, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual's premises for candidate-related activities, to the extent that the cumulative value of such use does not exceed $500; (5) the travel expenses of an individual rendering voluntary services to a candidate, to the extent that the cumulative total of such expenses does not exceed $500; (6) communications which are not made to influence the outcome of elections for Federal office; (7) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation or distribution of any printed slate card or other printed listing of 3 or more candidates for public office who are candidates in the State in which such committee is located, but this exclusion does not apply to payment of costs for the display of any such printed listing through public media facilities (other than newspapers) or on outdoor advertising facilities such as billboards; (8) the costs of a candidate (including his principal campaign committee) with respect to his solicitation of contributions, except that this exception does not apply to costs which exceed 25 percent of the expenditure limitation applicable to such candidate under section 608(c) of title 18; and (9) any costs incurred by a multicandidate committee which has been registered under the Act as a political committee for at least 6 months, has received contributions from at least 50 persons, and (except for State political party organizations) has made contributions to at least 5 candidates, in connection with soliciting contributions to itself or to a general political fund controlled by it, but this exclusion does not exempt costs of soliciting contributions through any public media facilities.

Supervisory officer

Section 206(d) amends section 301(g) of the Act, relating to the definition of supervisory officer, in order to make clear that the Comptroller General is the supervisory officer only with respect to candidates for President and Vice President, and committees supporting such candidates.

New definitions

Section 206(f) adds two new definitions to section 301 of the Act. The term "principal campaign committee" is defined to mean the principal campaign committee designated by a candidate as provided in this legislation. The term "Board" is defined to mean the Board of Supervisory Officers established by this legislation.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORY OFFICERS

Section 207(a) amends title III of the Act by adding a new section 308 through section 310, which establishes and defines the duties and powers of the Board of Supervisory Officers (hereinafter in this summary referred to as the "Board").

Establishment of Board; composition

The new section 308 establishes the Board and provides that it shall be composed of seven members as follows: (1) the Secretary of the Senate; (2) the Clerk of the House of Representatives; (3) the Comp-controller General; (4) two individuals appointed by the President of the Senate upon recommendations made by the majority and minority leaders of the Senate, one from each of the two major political parties; and (5) two individuals appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives upon recommendations made by the majority and minority leaders of the House, one from each of the two major political parties.

The appointed members are required to be chosen, on the basis of their maturity, experience, integrity, impartiality, and good judgment, from among individuals who are not officers or employees in the executive, legislative, or judicial branch of the Federal Government (including elected and appointed officials). They serve for terms of 4 years, except that one of the members first appointed by the President of the Senate will be appointed for a term of 1 year and one will be appointed for a term of 3 years, and one of the members first appointed by the Speaker of the House will be appointed for a term of 2 years. The appointed members will receive compensation equivalent to level IV of the Federal Executive Salary Schedule (currently $38,000), pro rated on a daily basis for each day spent in the work of the Board, and, in addition, will receive actual travel expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence when away from their usual places of residence.

Section 308 also provides that the Board shall supervise administration of, seek to obtain compliance with, and formulate overall policy concerning title I of the Act, title III of the Act, and sections 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, and 616 of title 18, United States Code. Members of the Board shall alternate in serving as Chairman. Decisions of the Board shall be made by majority vote and no member of the Board may delegate to any person his vote or any decisionmaking authority or duty. Section 308 provides that the Board shall meet once per month and at the call of any member of the Board.

Staff Director; General Counsel

Section 308 also provides that the Board shall appoint a Staff Director (whose rate of pay shall be the rate for level IV of the Executive Schedule, currently $38,000) and a General Counsel (whose rate of pay shall be the rate for level V of the Executive Schedule, currently $36,000). The Staff Director, with the approval of the Board, may appoint and fix the pay of additional personnel. At least 30 percent of such personnel shall be selected as follows: (1) one-half recommended by the minority leader of the Senate; and (2) one-half recommended by the minority leader of the House of Representatives. The Staff Director, with the approval of the Board, also may obtain temporary and intermittent services as provided by section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code.

Powers of the Board

The new section 309 provides that the Board shall have the power: (1) to formulate general policy and review actions of supervisory officers regarding the administration of title I of the Act, title III of the Act, and sections 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, and 616 of title 18, United States Code; (2) to oversee the development of prescribed forms required under title III of the Act; (3) to review rules and regulations prescribed under title I of the Act or title III of the Act, to assure that such rules and regulations are consistent with the appropriate statutory provisions and that such rules and regulations are sufficiently uniform; (4) to render advisory opinions under the new section 313 of the Act; (5) to carry out investigations and hearings, to encourage voluntary compliance with Federal election law provisions, and to report apparent violations to the appropriate law enforcement authorities; (6) to administer oaths or affirmations; (7) to issue subpoenas, signed by the Chairman of the Board, to require the testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence relevant to any investigation or hearing conducted by the Board; and (8) to pay the same witness fees and mileage expenses paid by U.S. courts.

Section 309 also provides that appropriate district courts of the United States shall have the power to issue orders enforcing subpoenas issued by the Board.

Reports

The new section 310 provides that the Board shall transmit annual reports to the President and each House of the Congress, which shall describe the activities of the Board and recommend any legislative or other action the Board considers appropriate.

Investigations and hearings

Section 207(b)(1) amends section 311(a)(9) of the Act (as so redesignated by sections 205 and 207(a)(1)) to provide that the Board of Supervisory Officers will have the duty to report apparent violations to the appropriate law enforcement authorities. This duty is transferred from the supervisory officers to the Board to conform with the amendments concerning the powers and duties of the Board.

Section 207(b)(2) amends section 311(c) of the Act (as so redesignated by section 207(a)(1)), relating to duties of the supervisory officer, by striking out paragraph (1) and inserting a new paragraph (1). The new paragraph (1) provides that if any person who believes a violation of title I of the Act, title III of the Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, has occurred may file a complaint with the Board. If a supervisory officer has reason to believe that any such violation has occurred, then he shall refer such apparent violation to the Board.

The new paragraph (1) also provides that if the Board receives a complaint or referral, or if the Board has reason to believe that any person has committed a violation, then the Board shall notify the person involved and shall either report the apparent violation to the Attorney General of the United States or make an investigation of the apparent violation. If the complainant involved is a candidate for Federal office, then any investigation conducted by the Board shall include an investigation of reports and statements filed by the complainant. The Board may not disclose any notification or investigation unless it receives written permission to do so by the person notified or under investigation. Such person also may request the Board to conduct a hearing regarding the apparent violation.

The new paragraph (1) also provides that the Board seek to correct apparent violations through informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and that the Board must refer apparent violations to law enforcement authorities if the Board considers it appropriate or if the Board fails to correct the violations.

The new paragraph (1) also provides that if the Board concludes, after affording notice and opportunity for a hearing, that a person has committed or is about to commit any violation of title I of the Act, title III of the Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, then the Attorney General shall bring a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order.

Reports by Attorney General

Section 207(b)(3) amends section 311 of the Act (as so redesignated by section 207(a)(1)), relating to duties of the supervisory officer, by adding a new subsection (d) which requires the Attorney General to report to the Board regarding apparent violations referred to the Attorney General by the Board. The reports are required to be made no later than two months after referral and on a monthly basis thereafter until there is a final disposition of the apparent violation. The new subsection (d) also provides that the Board may publish reports on the status of referrals made by the Board to the Attorney General.

Judicial review; funding

Section 207(c) amends title III of the Act to add a new section 315 and section 316. The new section 315 authorizes the Board, the supervisory officers, the national committee of any political party, and any individual eligible to vote in any election for the office of President of the United States, to bring any appropriate action in the appropriate district court of the United States to implement or construe any provision of title I of the Act, title III of the Act, or sections 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code. The district court is required to certify all questions of constitutionality regarding any such provision to the United States court of appeals for the circuit involved, which is required to hear the matter sitting en banc.

The new section 315 also provides that any decision on a matter certified to a circuit court shall be reviewable by appeal directly to the Supreme Court of the United States. This appeal must be brought within 20 days after the decision of the court of appeals. Section 315 also provides that the court of appeals and the Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of any matter certified to the circuit court.

The new section 316 provides that, notwithstanding any other provision of law, such sums as may be necessary may be appropriated to each supervisory officer and to the Board to enable each such supervisory officer and the Board to carry out their duties under title I of the Act and title III of the Act.

ADVISORY OPINIONS

Section 208 amends title III of the Act by inserting a new section 313, which provides for the rendering of advisory opinions by the Board. The new section 313 provides that if an individual holding Federal office, a candidate, or a political committee, makes a written request to the Board, then the Board shall render a written advisory opinion regarding whether any activity of the individual, candidate, or political committee would constitute a violation of title I of the Act, title III of the Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 or title 18, United States Code.

The new section 313 also provides that if a person acts in good faith in compliance with an advisory opinion rendered at his request, then the person shall be presumed to be in compliance with the statutory provision regarding which the advisory opinion is rendered. Section 313 also provides that any request for an advisory opinion shall be made public by the Board. The Board is required to provide interested parties with an opportunity to furnish written comments to the Board concerning any request before the Board renders an advisory opinion regarding the request.

EFFECT ON STATE LAW

Section 301 amends section 403 of the Act, relating to effect on State law, to provide that the provisions of the Act, and rules prescribed under the Act, supersede and preempt any provision of State law.

PERIOD OF LIMITATIONS; ENFORCEMENT

Section 302 amends title IV of the Act, relating to general provisions, by adding a new section 406 and section 407.

Period of limitations

The new section 406 provides that no criminal action may be brought against a person for violation of title I of the Act, title III of the Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, unless such action is brought before the expiration of 3 years after the date of such violation. Under existing law the period of limitations is 5 years.

Enforcement

The new section 407 provides that if the Board finds, after notice and opportunity for a hearing on the record, that a candidate failed to file a report required by title III of the Act, then the candidate shall be disqualified from becoming a candidate in any future Federal election for a period beginning on the date of the finding and ending one year after the expiration of the term of the Federal office for which the person was a candidate. Any such finding would be reviewable by the courts under chapter 7 of title 5, United State Code, in the same manner as in the case of any other final agency action under the administrative procedure provisions of title 5 of the United States Code.

It is the intent of the members of the committee that the enforcement mechanism of section 407 shall not be applied in any case in which the candidate involved demonstrates that he did not receive timely notice from the Board advising him of an approaching filing date regarding reports he is required to file under title III of the Act.
TITLE IV—AMENDMENTS TO OTHER LAWS; EFFECTIVE DATES

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES BY STATE AND LOCAL OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

Section 401 amends section 1509 of title 5, United States Code (relating to influencing elections, taking part in political campaigns, prohibitions, exceptions) to provide that State and local officers and employees may take an active part in political management and in political campaigns, except that they may not be candidates for elective office.

REPEAL OF COMMUNICATIONS MEDIA EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS

Section 402 amends title I of the Act, relating to campaign communications, by striking out section 104, relating to limitations of expenditures for use of communications media.

Under the amendment made by this section, a candidate is no longer restricted with respect to expenditures for use of communications media. The committee bill, however, establishes overall limitations on campaign expenditures, but leaves the candidate free to decide the purpose for which such expenditures will be made. The committee also noted that, on November 14, 1973, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia decided, in the case of American Civil Liberties Union v. Jennings (366 F. 2d 1041), that the requirement of section 104(b) of the Act that a candidate certify that certain media advertising (newspapers, magazines, and billboards) did not violate the expenditure limitations repealed by this section was an unconstitutional prior restraint upon publication in violation of First Amendment rights. As noted below, this section also repeals the provisions added to the Communications Act of 1934 by section 104(c) of the Act to eliminate a similar requirement with respect to broadcast media.

Section 402 also amends section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 (relating to candidates for public office, facilities, rules) by striking out subsections (c), (d), and (e). The effect of the amendment is to eliminate the requirement that licensees of broadcasting stations obtain certification from a candidate that his purchase of air time on the station involved does not exceed his expenditure limitations under title I of the Act or under any provision of State law.

AUTOMATIC TRANSFERS TO CAMPAIGN FUND

Section 403 amends section 9006(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (hereinafter in this summary referred to as the “Code”), relating to establishment of campaign fund, to provide that the Secretary of the Treasury (hereinafter in this summary referred to as the “Secretary”) shall automatically transfer to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund, out of amounts in the general fund of the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to amounts designated under section 6096 of the Code, relating to designation of income tax payments to the presidential election campaign fund.
ENTITLEMENTS OF ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES TO PAYMENTS FROM PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN FUND

Section 404 amends section 9004(a)(1) of the Code, relating to entitlement of eligible candidates to payments, to provide that eligible candidates of each major party in a presidential election shall be entitled to equal payments in an amount not to exceed $20,000,000. The amendment eliminates the formula under which candidates of a major party would receive 15 cents multiplied by the number of residents of the United States who are 18 years of age or older.

Section 404(c) amends section 9002(1) of the Code, relating to the definition of "authorized committee", to provide that such term means, with respect to candidates for President or Vice President, the political committee designated under section 302(f)(1) of the Act, by the candidate for President as his principal campaign committee. Section 404(c) also contains technical conforming amendments to various sections of the Code made necessary by the change made to the definition of "authorized committee".

CERTIFICATION FOR PAYMENT BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL

Section 405 amends section 9005(a) of the Code, relating to initial certifications for eligibility for payments, to provide that, not later than 10 days after candidates of a political party have established their eligibility to receive payments, the Comptroller General shall certify to the Secretary payment in full of the candidates' entitlement. The amendment, together with the amendment made by section 406(a), eliminates the procedure under which candidates were required to submit records of expenses and proposed expenses in order to obtain certification from the Comptroller General for payments.

FINANCING OF PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATING CONVENTIONS

Section 406(a) amends chapter 95 of subtitle H of the Code, relating to the presidential election campaign fund, by striking out section 9008, relating to information on proposed expenses, and inserting in lieu thereof a new section 9008, relating to payments for presidential nominating conventions.

Establishment of accounts

Section 9008(a) provides that the Secretary shall maintain in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund a separate account for the national committee of a major political party or a minor political party. The Secretary shall deposit in each account each national committee's entitlement under section 9008. These deposits shall be drawn from amounts designated under section 6096 of the Code, relating to designation of income tax payments to the presidential election campaign fund, and the deposits shall be made before any transfer of funds to the account of any eligible candidate under section 9006(a) of the Code, relating to establishment of campaign fund.

Entitlement to payments

Section 9008(b) provides that the national committee of a major party is entitled to payments not to exceed $2,000,000. The national committee of a minor party is entitled to payments not to exceed an amount which bears the same ratio to the entitlement of the national committee of a major party as the number of votes received by the candidate for President of the minor party in the preceding presidential election bears to the average number of votes received by candidates for President of the major parties in the election. The national committee of a minor party could use additional private funds in the operation of a presidential nominating convention, but only to the extent that the total expenditure (counting both public and private funds) does not exceed $2 million. A major party electing to receive its $2 million entitlement could not use any additional private funds. The only exception to the $2 million limitation would be an instance in which the Presidential Election Campaign Advisory Board permitted the expenditure of private funds under section 9008(d).

Use of funds

Section 9008(c) provides that no part of payments made under section 9008 may be used to defray expenses of any candidate or delegate participating in any presidential nominating convention. The payments are to be used only to (1) defray expenses incurred with respect to a presidential nominating convention (including payment of deposits) by the national committee; or (2) repay loans which were used to defray such expenses.

Limitation of expenditures

Section 9008(d) provides that the national committee of a major party or a minor party may not make expenditures which exceed the amount of the entitlement of the national committee of a major party under section 9008. Notwithstanding this limitation, the national committee of a major party or minor party may make expenditures from private sources in excess of this limitation if such expenditures are authorized by the Presidential Election Campaign Advisory Board. Before making any authorization, such Board shall determine that extraordinary and unforeseen circumstances have made necessary such expenditures to assure effective operation of the presidential nominating convention. It is the intent of the committee that such Board shall make authorizations only in cases in which events of a catastrophic nature overwhelmingly imperil the operation of a presidential nominating convention.

Other provisions

1. Payments to the national committee of major parties and minor parties under section 9008 may be made beginning on July 1 of the calendar year before the calendar year in which the presidential nominating convention is held.

2. If, after each national committee has been paid the amount to which it is entitled, there are moneys remaining in national committee accounts, then such moneys shall be transferred to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund.

3. In order to qualify for payments, any major party or minor party may file a statement with the Comptroller General designating the national committee of the party. After the Comptroller General verifies the statement he shall certify to the Secretary payment in full of the entitlement of the national committee. Payments shall be subject to examination and audit, which the Comptroller General shall conduct before the close of the calendar year in which the nominating convention is held.

4. The Comptroller General may require repayments from the national committee of a major party or minor party in the same manner as he may require repayments from candidates under section 9007(b) of the Code, relating to repayments.

Conforming amendments

Section 406(b) amends section 9009(a) of the Code, relating to reports, to require that reports of the Comptroller General include the following information: (1) expenses incurred by the national committee of a major party or minor party with respect to a presidential nominating convention; (2) amounts certified by the Comptroller General for payment to such national committees; and (3) the amount of repayments required from such national committees, and the reason for any repayments.

Section 406(b) also amends section 9012(a)(1) of the Code, relating to excess campaign expenses, to make it unlawful for the national committee of a major party or minor party to incur convention expenses in excess of the applicable expenditure limitation, unless such expenses are authorized by the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Advisory Board.

Section 406(b) also amends section 9012(c) of the Code, relating to unlawful use of payments, to make it unlawful for the national committee of a major party or minor party to use payments for any purpose which is not authorized by section 9008(c), relating to use of funds.

Section 406(b) also amends section 9012(e)(1) of the Code, relating to kickbacks and illegal payments, to make it unlawful for the national committee of a major party or minor party to give or accept any kickback or other illegal payment in connection with any convention expense incurred by such national committee.

Advertising in convention programs

Section 406(d) amends section 276 of the Code, relating to certain indirect contributions to political parties, by striking out subsection (e), relating to advertising in a convention program of a national political convention. The effect of the amendment is to eliminate any income tax deduction for any amount paid for advertising in a convention program.

TAX RETURNS BY POLITICAL COMMITTEES

Section 407 amends section 6012(a) of the Code, relating to persons required to make returns of income, to provide that any political committee which has no gross income for a taxable year shall be exempt from the requirement of making a return for such taxable year.

PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY MATCHING PAYMENT ACCOUNT

Section 408 amends subtitle H of the Code, relating to financing of presidential election campaigns, by adding at the end thereof a new chapter 97, relating to presidential primary matching payment account.
Short title

Section 9031 of the new chapter 97 provides that the chapter may be cited as the “Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account Act”.

Definitions

Section 9032 contains the following definitions:

1. The term “authorized committee” is defined to mean the political committee designated under section 302(f)(1) of the Act by the candiprincipal campaign committee.

2. The term “candidate” is defined to mean an individual who seeks nomination for election to the office of President of the United States.
An individual shall be considered to be seeking the nomination if he
(A) takes actions necessary under State law to qualify for nomination;
(B) receives contributions or incurs qualified campaign expenses;
or (C) gives his consent for any other person to receive contributions or incur qualified campaign expenses on his behalf.

3. The term “Comptroller General” is defined to mean the Comtroller General of the United States.

4. The term “contribution” is defined to mean (A) a gift, subscrip-ment is made on or after the beginning of the calendar year preceding the calendar year of the presidential election with respect to which such primary election is held; (B) a contract, promise, or agreement to make a contribution; (C) a transfer of funds between political committees; or (D) payment by any person, other than a candidate or his authorized committee, of compensation for personal services of another person which are rendered to the candidate or committee with-Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account established under section 9037(a), relating to establishment of account.

United States.

8. The term “political committee” is defined to mean any individual, committee, association, or organization which accepts contributions or incurs qualified campaign expenses for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election of one or more individuals to be President of the United States.
9. The term "qualified campaign expense" is defined to mean a purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or of anything of value incurred by a candidate or his authorized committee in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, neither the incurring nor payment of which violates any Federal or State law.

10. The term "State" is defined to mean each State of the United States and the District of Columbia.

Eligibility for payments

Section 9033 (a) requires that a candidate seeking to become eligible for payments shall in writing (1) furnish to the Comptroller General evidence of qualified campaign expenses; (2) agree to keep and furnish to the Comptroller General records, books, and other information; and (3) agree to an audit and examination by the Comptroller General, and agree to make repayments required under section 9038 (relating to examinations and audits, repayments).

Section 9033 (b) requires that a candidate seeking to become eligible for payments shall certify to the Comptroller General that (1) the candidate and his authorized committee will not incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the limit imposed by section 9035, relating to qualified campaign expense limitation; (2) the candidate is seeking nomination by a political party for election to the office of President of the United States; (3) the candidate and his authorized committee have received contributions which exceed $5,000 from residents of each of at least 20 States; and (4) the aggregate of contributions received from any one such resident does not exceed $250.

Section 9034 (a) provides that every eligible candidate is entitled to payments in an amount equal to contributions received by the candidate and his authorized committee on or after the beginning of the calendar year before the calendar year of the presidential election with respect to which the candidate is seeking nomination. Contributions from any one person will qualify for matching only to the extent that such contributions do not aggregate more than $250.

For purposes of section 9033 (b) and section 9034 (a), the term "contribution" is defined to mean a gift of money made by a written instrument which identifies the person making the contribution. Such term does not include a subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything described in section 9032 (4) (B), (C), or (D).

Section 9034 (b) provides that payments under section 9034 (a) may not exceed 50 percent of the expenditure limitation for presidential primaries established by section 608 (c) (1) (A) of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures.

Qualified campaign expense limitation

Section 9035 prohibits any candidate from incurring qualified campaign expenses in excess of the expenditure limitation for presidential primaries established by section 608 (c) (1) (A) of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures.
Certification by Comptroller General

Section 9036(a) provides that, not later than 10 days after a candidate establishes his eligibility for payments, the Comptroller General shall certify to the Secretary payment in full to the candidate of amounts to which he is entitled.

Section 9036(b) provides that this certification is final and conclusive, except that it is subject to examination and audit by the Comptroller General, and to judicial review.

Payments to eligible candidates

Section 9037(a) requires the Secretary to establish in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund a separate account to be known as the Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account (hereinafter in this summary referred to as the “matching payment account”). The Secretary is required to deposit into the matching payment account, for use by eligible candidates, amounts available after the Secretary determines that amounts for payments to candidates in the general election for the office of President of the United States and amounts for payments to national committees of major parties and minor parties for presidential nominating conventions, are available for such payments.

Section 9037(b) requires the Secretary to transfer certified amounts to candidates during the matching payment period. In making transfers to candidates of the same political party, the Secretary is required to seek an equitable distribution of funds, taking into account the sequence in which certifications are received. Transfers to candidates of the same political party may not exceed 45 percent of the total amount available in the matching payment account, and transfers to any candidate may not exceed 25 percent of the total amount available in the matching payment account.

Examinations and audits; repayments

Section 9038(a) requires the Comptroller General to conduct an examination and audit of the qualified campaign expenses of every candidate and authorized committee after each matching payment period.

Section 9038(b) provides that if the Comptroller General determines that a candidate received payments in excess of his entitlement, then the candidate shall be required to repay the excess amount. Section 9038(b) also provides that if the Comptroller General determines that a candidate has used payments for any purpose other than to defray qualified campaign expenses or to repay loans or restore funds which were used to defray qualified campaign expenses, then the candidate shall be required to repay the amount involved.

Section 9038(b) also provides that payments to a candidate from the matching payment account may be retained to pay qualified campaign expenses for a period not exceeding 6 months after the close of the matching payment period. After a candidate has liquidated all obligations, that portion of any balance remaining in his account which bears the same ratio to the total balance as the total amount received from the matching payment account bears to the total of all deposits made into the candidate’s account, shall be repaid by the candidate to the matching payment account.
Section 9038(c) provides that the Comptroller General may not make a notification of a required repayment with respect to any matching payment period more than 3 years after the end of the period.

Section 9038(d) requires the Secretary to deposit repayments received by him under section 9038 in the matching payment account.

Reports to Congress; regulations

Section 9039(a) requires the Comptroller General to transmit a report to each House of the Congress, after each matching payment period, which sets forth (1) qualified campaign expenses of every candidate and authorized committee; (2) the amount of payments certified by the Comptroller General; and (3) the amount of repayments required from every candidate, and the reason for any repayments.

Section 9039(b) authorizes the Comptroller General to (1) prescribe rules and regulations; (2) conduct examinations and audits, in addition to examinations and audits required by section 9038(a); (3) conduct investigations; and (4) require the keeping and submission of books, records, and information.

Section 9039(c) provides that the Comptroller General, before prescribing any rule or regulation, shall transmit the proposed rule or regulation, together with a detailed explanation and justification, to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate and the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives. If either committee does not disapprove the proposed rule or regulation no later than 30 legislative days after receipt of the proposed rule or regulation, then the Comptroller General is authorized to prescribe such rule or regulation. Section 9039(c) prohibits the prescription of any rule or regulation which is disapproved by either committee.

Section 9039(c) also provides that the term “legislative days” does not include any calendar day on which both Houses of the Congress are not in session.

Judicial proceedings

Section 9040(a) authorizes the Comptroller General to appear in and defend against any action brought under section 9040 of the Code.

Section 9040(b) authorizes the Comptroller General to bring actions in the district courts of the United States for recovery of repayments required as a result of examinations and audits conducted by the Comptroller General.

Section 9040(c) authorizes the Comptroller General to petition the courts of the United States for injunctive relief to implement the provisions of chapter 97 of the Code.

Section 9040(d) authorizes the Comptroller General to appeal any action in which he appears.

Judicial review

Section 9041(a) provides that any agency action of the Comptroller General under chapter 97 of the Code is subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed no later than 30 days after the agency action involved.

Section 9041(b) provides that chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, relating to judicial review, shall apply to any agency action by the Comptroller General. The term “agency action” is given the same meaning given it by section 551(13) of title 5, United States Code.

Criminal penalties

Section 9042(a) provides that any person who incurs qualified campaign expenses in excess of the expenditure limitation for presidential primaries established by section 608(c)(1) of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures, shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both. Section 9042(a) also provides that any officer or member of a political committee who knowingly consents to an expenditure which violates such limitation shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

Section 9042(b) makes it unlawful for any person who receives a payment from the matching payment account, or to whom a portion of such payment is transferred, to use such payment for any purpose other than to defray qualified campaign expenses or to repay loans or restore funds which were used to defray qualified campaign expenses. Any person who violates this provision shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

Section 9042(c) makes it unlawful for any person to refuse to furnish information which may be required under chapter 97 of the Code or to furnish false information. Any person who violates this provision shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

Section 9042(d) makes it unlawful for any person to give or accept any kickback or other illegal payment in connection with any qualified campaign expense of a candidate or authorized committee. Any person who violates this provision shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both. Section 9042(d) also provides that any person who accepts any kickback or other illegal payment shall pay to the Secretary for deposit in the matching payment account an amount equal to 125 percent of the kickback or other illegal payment received.

Section 409 amends section 9009 of the Code (relating to reports to Congress, regulations) to establish a procedure for the review of regulations by Congressional committees identical to the procedures established by the new section 9039(c) of the Code, relating to review of regulations (which is added by the amendment made by section 408).

EFFECTIVE DATES

General effective date

Section 410(a) provides that the provisions of this legislation (other than amendments to the Code) shall take effect 30 days after the date of the enactment of this legislation.

Internal Revenue Code amendments

Section 410(b) provides that amendments to the Internal Revenue Code made by sections 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, and 311 shall apply with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

Except as otherwise specifically provided, when used in this section and in sections 597, 599, 600, 602, 608, 610, 611, 614, and 615 of this title—preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, and (5) the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States;

(e) “contribution” means—

(1) a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value (except a loan of money by a national or State bank made in accordance with the applicable banking laws and regulations and in the ordinary course of business) made for the purpose of influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office, for the purpose of influencing the results of a primary held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party or for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President, or for the purpose of influencing the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States;

For purposes of this subsection a primary runoff election shall be treated as a separate primary election.

(3)(A) No person who is a candidate for presidential nomination may spend—

(ii) for the use in a State of broadcast stations, on behalf of his candidacy for presidential nomination a total amount in excess of the amounts which would have been determined under paragraph (1) (A) or (B), respectively, had he been a candidate for election for the office of Senator from such State (or for the office of Delegate or Resident Commissioner in the case of the District of Columbia or the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico).

(B) For purposes of this paragraph (3), a person is a candidate for presidential nomination if he makes (or any other person makes on his behalf) an expenditure for the use of any communications medium on behalf of his candidacy for any political party's nomination for election to the office of President. He shall be considered to be such a candidate during the period—

(i) beginning on the date on which he (or such other person) first makes such an expenditure (or, if later, January 1 of the year in which the election for the office of President is held), and

(ii) ending on the date on which such political party nominates a candidate for the office of President.

For purposes of this title and of section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934, a candidate for presidential nomination shall be considered a legally qualified candidate for public office.

(C) The Comptroller General shall prescribe regulations under which any expenditure by a candidate for presidential nomination for the use in two or more States of a communications medium shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the number of persons in such State who can reasonably be expected to be reached by such communications medium.

Amounts spent for the use of communications media by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to have been

(B) any expenditure for the use of any communications medium by or on behalf of the candidacy of a candidate for Federal elective office (or nomination thereto) shall be charged against the expenditure limitation under this subsection applicable to the election in which such medium is used.

(b) No person may make any charge for the use by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office (or for nomination to such office) of any newspaper, magazine, or outdoor advertising facility, unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies in writing to the person making such charge that the payment of such charge will not violate paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of subsection (a), whichever is applicable.

(d) If a State by law and expressly—

"(1) has provided that a primary or other election for any office of such State or of a political subdivision thereof is subject to this subsection,

"(2) has specified a limitation upon total expenditures for the use of broadcasting stations on behalf of the candidacy of each legally qualified candidate in such election,

"(3) has provided in any such law an unequivocal expression of intent to be bound by the provisions of this subsection, and

"(4) has stipulated that the amount of such limitation shall not exceed the amount which would be determined for such election under section 104(a)(1)(B) or 104(a)(2)(B) (whichever is applicable) of the Campaign Communications Reform Act had such election been an election for a Federal elective office or nomination thereto;

then no station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate in such election unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate such State limitation.
(e) Whoever willfully and knowingly violates the provisions of subsection (c) or (d) of this section shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $5,000 or imprisonment for a period not to exceed five years, or both. AND LOCAL EMPLOYEES

United States;
(2) "State or local agency" means the executive branch of a State, municipality, or other political subdivision of a State, or an agency or department thereof;
(3) "Federal agency" means an Executive agency or other agency of the United States, but does not include a member bank of the Federal Reserve System; and
(4) "State or local officer or employee" means an individually employed by a State or local agency whose principal employment is in connection with an activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or a Federal agency, but does not include—
(A) an individual who exercises no functions in connection with that activity; or
(B) an individual employed by an educational or research institution, establishment, agency, or system which is supported in whole or in part by a State or political subdivision thereof, or by a recognized religious, philanthropic, or cultural organization.

§ 1502. Influencing elections; taking part in political campaigns;
prohibitions; exceptions
(a) A State or local officer or employee may not—
(1) use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interferring with or affecting the result of an election or a nomination for office;
(2) directly or indirectly coerce, attempt to coerce, command, or advise a State or local officer or employee to pay, lend, or contribute anything of value to a party, committee, organization, agency, or person for political purposes; or
(3) take an active part in political management or in political campaigns.

(3) be a candidate for elective office.

(b) A State or local officer or employee retains the right to vote as he chooses and to express his opinions on political subjects and candidates.

c) Subsection (a)(3) of this section does not apply to—

(1) the Governor or Lieutenant Governor of a State or an individual authorized by law to act as Governor;

(2) the mayor of a city;

(3) a duly elected head of an executive department of a State or municipality who is not classified under a State or municipal merit or civil service system; or

(4) an individual holding elective office.

Section 1502(a)(3) of this title does not prohibit political activity in connection with—

(1) an election and the preceding campaign if none of the candidates is to be nominated or elected at that election as representing a party any of whose candidates for presidential elector received votes in the last preceding election at which presidential electors were selected; or

(2) a question which is not specifically identified with a National or State political party.

For the purpose of this section, questions relating to constitutional amendments, referendums, approval of municipal ordinances, and others of a similar character, are deemed not specifically identified with a National or State political party.

§ 1503. Nonpartisan candidacies permitted

Section 1502(a)(3) of this title does not prohibit any State or local officer or employee from being a candidate in any election if none of the candidates is to be nominated or elected at such election as representing a party any of whose candidates for Presidential elector received votes in the last preceding election at which Presidential electors were selected.

§ 1504. Investigations; notice of hearing

When a Federal agency charged with the duty of making a loan or grant of funds of the United States for use in an activity by a State or local officer or employee has reason to believe that the officer or employee has violated section 1502 of this title, it shall report the matter to the Civil Service Commission. On receipt of the report, or on receipt of other information which seems to the Commission to warrant an investigation, the Commission shall—

(1) fix a time and place for a hearing; and

(2) send, by registered or certified mail, to the officer or employee charged with the violation and to the State or local agency employing him a notice setting forth a summary of the alleged violation and giving the time and place of the hearing.

The hearing may not be held earlier than 10 days after the mailing of the notice.
§ 1505. Hearings; adjudications; notice of determinations Either the State or local officer or employee or the State or local agency employing him, or both, are entitled to appear with counsel at the hearing under section 1504 of this title, and be heard. After this hearing, the Civil Service Commission shall—

(1) determine whether a violation of section 1502 of this title has occurred;

(2) determine whether the violation warrants the removal of the officer or employee from his office or employment; and

(3) notify the officer or employee and the agency of the determination by registered or certified mail.

§ 1506. Orders; withholding loans or grants; limitations

(a) When the Civil Service Commission finds—

(1) that a State or local officer or employee has not been removed from his office or employment within 30 days after notice of a determination by the Commission that he has violated section 1502 of this title and that the violation warrants removal; or

(2) that the State or local officer or employee has been removed and has been appointed within 18 months after his removal to an office or employment in the same State in a State or local agency which does not receive loans or grants from a Federal agency; the Commission shall make and certify to the appropriate Federal agency an order requiring that agency to withhold from its loans or grants to the State or local agency to which notice was given an amount equal to 2 years' pay at the rate the officer or employee was receiving at the time of the violation. When the State or local agency to which appointment within 18 months after removal has been made is one that receives loans or grants from a Federal agency, the Commission order shall direct that the withholding be made from that State or local agency.

(b) Notice of the order shall be sent by registered or certified mail to the State or local agency from which the amount is ordered to be withheld. After the order becomes final, the Federal agency to which the order is certified shall withhold the amount in accordance with the terms of the order. Except as provided by section 1508 of this title, a determination or order of the Commission becomes final at the end of 30 days after mailing the notice of the determination or order.

(c) The Commission may not require an amount to be withheld from a loan or grant pledged by a State or local agency as security for its bonds or notes if the withholding of that amount would jeopardize the payment of the principal or interest on the bonds or notes.

§ 1507. Subpoenas and depositions

(a) The Civil Service Commission may require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence relating to any matter before it as a result of this chapter. Any member of the Commission may sign subpoenas, and members of the Commission and its examiners when authorized by the Commission may administer oaths, examine witnesses, and receive evidence. The attendance of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States at the designated place of hearing. In case of disobedience to a subpoena the Commission may invoke the aid of a court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence. In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to a person, the United States District Court within whose jurisdiction the inquiry is carried on may issue an order requiring him to appear before the Commission, or to produce documentary evidence if so ordered, or to give evidence concerning the matter in question; and any failure to obey the order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

(b) The Commission may order testimony to be taken by deposition at any stage of a proceeding or investigation before it as a result of this chapter. Depositions may be taken before an individual designated by the Commission and having the power to administer oaths. Testimony shall be reduced to writing by the individual taking the deposition, or under his direction, and shall be subscribed by the deponent. Any person may be compelled to appear and depose and to produce documentary evidence before the Commission as provided by this section.

(c) A person may not be excused from attending and testifying or from producing documentary evidence or in obedience to a subpoena on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter or thing concerning which he is compelled to testify, or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before the Commission in obedience to a subpoena issued by it. A person so testifying is not exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

§ 1508. Judicial review
A party aggrieved by a determination or order of the Civil Service Commission under section 1504, 1505, or 1506 of this title may, within 30 days after the mailing of notice of the determination or order, institute proceedings for review thereof by filing a petition in the United States District Court for the district in which the State or local officer or employee resides. The institution of the proceedings does not operate as a stay of the determination or order unless—

(1) the court specifically orders a stay; and

(2) the officer or employee is suspended from his office or employment while the proceedings are pending.

A copy of the petition shall immediately be served on the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record on which the determination or order was made. The court shall review the entire record including questions of fact and questions of law. If application is made to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that the additional evidence may materially affect the result of the proceedings and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce this evidence in the hearing before the Commission, the court may direct that the additional evidence be taken before the Commission in the manner and on the terms and conditions fixed by the court. The Commission may modify its findings of fact or its determination or order in view of the additional evidence and shall file with the court the modified findings, determination, or order; and the modified findings of fact, if supported by substantial evidence, are conclusive. The court shall affirm the determination or order, or the modified determination or order, if the court determines that it is in accordance with law. If the court determines that the determination or order, or the modified determination or order, is not in accordance with law, the court shall remand the proceeding to the Commission with directions either to make a determination or order determined by the court to be lawful or to take such further proceedings as, in the opinion of the court, the law requires. The judgment and decree of the court are final, subject to review by the appropriate United States Court of Appeals as in other cases, and the judgment and decree of the court of appeals are final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States on certiorari or certification as provided by section 1254 of title 28. If a provision of this section is held to be invalid as applied to a party by a determination or order of the Commission, the determination or order becomes final and effective as to that party as if the provision had not been enacted.

In the case of eligible candidates entitled to payments under paragraph (2), the amount allowable under this paragraph shall be limited to the amount, if any, by which the entitlement under the preceding sentence exceeds the amount of the entitlement under paragraph (2).

Amounts withheld by reason of the preceding sentence shall be paid when the Secretary or his delegate determines that there are sufficient moneys in the fund to pay such amounts, or portions thereof, to all eligible candidates from whom amounts have been withheld, but, if there are not sufficient moneys in the fund to satisfy the full entitlement of the eligible candidates of all political parties, the amounts so withheld shall be paid in such manner that the eligible candidates of each political party receive their pro rata share of their full entitlement.

(A) incurred by a candidate, or by his authorized committee, in connection with his campaign for nomination, and

(B) neither the incurring nor payment of which constitutes a violation of any law of the United States or of the State in which the expense is incurred or paid.

For purposes of this paragraph, an expense is incurred by a candidate or by an authorized committee if it is incurred by a person specifically authorized in writing by the candidate or committee, as the case may be, to incur such expense on behalf of the candidate or the committee.

(10) The term "State" means each State of the United States and the District of Columbia.

SEC. 9033. ELIGIBILITY FOR PAYMENTS.

(a) Conditions.—To be eligible to receive payments under section 9037, a candidate shall, in writing—

(1) agree to obtain and furnish to the Comptroller General any evidence he may request of qualified campaign expenses,

(2) agree to keep and furnish to the Comptroller General any records, books, and other information he may request, and

(3) agree to an audit and examination by the Comptroller General under section 9038 and to pay any amounts required to be paid under such section.

(b) Expense Limitation; Declaration of Intent; Minimum Contributions.—To be eligible to receive payments under section 9037, a candidate shall certify to the Comptroller General that—

(1) the candidate and his authorized committee will not incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the limitation on such expenses under section 9035,

(2) the candidate is seeking nomination by a political party for election to the office of President of the United States,

(3) the candidate has received contributions which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000 in contributions from residents of each of at least 20 States, and

(4) the aggregate of contributions received from any person under paragraph (3) does not exceed $250.

SEC. 9034. ENTITLEMENT OF ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES TO PAYMENTS.

(a) In General.—Every candidate who is eligible to receive payments under section 9033 is entitled to payments under section 9037 in an amount equal to the amount of each contribution received by such candidate on or after the beginning of the calendar year immediately preceding the calendar year of the presidential election with respect to which such candidate is seeking nomination, or by his authorized committee, disregarding any amount of contributions from any person to the extent that the total of the amounts contributed by such person on or after the beginning of such preceding calendar year exceeds $250. For purposes of this subsection and section 9033(b), the term "contribution" means a gift of money made by a written instrument which identifies the person making the contribution by full name and mailing address, but does not include a subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything described in subparagraph (B), (C), or (D) of section 9032(4).

(b) Limitations.—The total amount of payments to which a can-date is entitled under subsection (a) shall not exceed 50 percent of the expenditure limitation established by section 608(c)(1)(A) of title 18, United States Code.

SEC. 9035. QUALIFIED CAMPAIGN EXPENSE LIMITATION.

No candidate shall knowingly incur qualified campaign expenses in excess of the expenditure limitation established by section 608(c)(1)(A) of title 18, United States Code.

SEC. 9036. CERTIFICATION BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL.

(a) Initial Certifications.—Not later than 10 days after a can-date establishes his eligibility under section 9033 to receive payments under section 9037, the Comptroller General shall certify to the Secretary for payment to the candidate under section 9037 payment in full of amounts to which such candidate is entitled under section 9034.

(b) Finality of Determinations.—Initial certifications by the Comptroller General under subsection (a), and all determinations made by him under this chapter, are final and conclusive, except to the extent that they are subject to examination and audit by the Comptroller General under section 9038 and judicial review under section 9041.

SEC. 9037. PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES.

(a) Establishment of Account.—The Secretary shall maintain in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund established by section 9006(a), in addition to any account which he maintains under such section, a separate account to be known as the Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account. The Secretary shall deposit into the matching payment account, for use by the candidate of any political party who is eligible to receive payments under section 9033, the amount available after the Secretary determines that amounts for payments under section 9006(c) and for payments under section 9007(b)(3) are available for such payments.

(b) Payments from the Matching Payment Account.—Upon receipt of a certification from the Comptroller General under section 9036, but not before the beginning of the matching payment period, the Secretary or his delegate shall promptly transfer the amount certified by the Comptroller General from the matching payment account to the candidate. In making such transfers to candidates of the same political party, the Secretary or his delegate shall seek to achieve an equitable distribution of funds available under subsection (a), and the Secretary or his delegate shall take into account, in seeking to achieve an equitable distribution, the sequence in which such certifications are received.
Transfers to candidates of the same political party may not exceed an amount which is equal to 45 percent of the total amount available in the matching payment account, and transfers to any candidate may not exceed an amount which is equal to 25 percent of the total amount available in the matching payment account.

SEC. 9038. EXAMINATIONS AND AUDITS; REPAYMENTS.

(a) Examinations and Audits.—After each matching payment period, the Comptroller General shall conduct a thorough examination and audit of the qualified campaign expenses of every candidate and his authorized committee who received payments under section 9037.

(b) Repayments.—

(1) If the Comptroller General determines that any portion of the payments made to a candidate from the matching payment account was in excess of the aggregate amount of payments to which such candidate was entitled under section 9034, he shall notify the candidate, and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary or his delegate an amount equal to the amount of excess payments.

(2) If the Comptroller General determines that any amount of any payment made to a candidate from the matching payment account was used for any purpose other than—

(A) to defray the qualified campaign expenses with respect to which such payment was made, or

(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses which were received and expended) which were used, to defray qualified campaign expenses, he shall notify such candidate of the amount so used, and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary or his delegate an amount equal to such amount.

(3) Amounts received by a candidate from the matching payment account may be retained for the liquidation of all obligations to pay qualified campaign expenses incurred for a period not exceeding 6 months after the end of the matching payment period. After all obligations have been liquidated, that portion of any unexpended balance remaining in the candidate's accounts which bears the same ratio to the total unexpended balance as the total amount received from the matching payment account bears to the total of all deposits made into the candidate's accounts shall be promptly repaid to the matching payment account.

(c) Notification.—No notification shall be made by the Comptroller General under subsection (b) with respect to a matching payment period more than 3 years after the end of such period.

(d) Deposit of Repayments.—All payments received by the Secretary or his delegate under subsection (b) shall be deposited by him in the matching payment account.

SEC. 9039. REPORTS TO CONGRESS; REGULATIONS.

(a) Reports.—The Comptroller General shall, as soon as practicable after each matching payment period, submit a full report to the Senate and House of Representatives setting forth—

(1) the qualified campaign expenses (shown in such detail as the Comptroller General determines necessary) incurred by the candidates of each political party and their authorized committees,

(2) the amounts certified by him under section 9036 for payment to each eligible candidate, and
(3) the amount of payments, if any, required from candidates under section 9038, and the reasons for each payment required.

Each report submitted pursuant to this section shall be printed as a Senate document.

(b) REGULATIONS, Etc.—The Comptroller General is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c), to conduct examinations and audits (in addition to the examinations and audits required by section 9038 (a)), to conduct investigations, and to require the keeping and submission of any books, records, and information, which he determines to be necessary to carry out his responsibilities under this chapter.

(c) Review of Regulations.—

(1) The Comptroller General, before prescribing any rule or regulation under subsection (b), shall transmit a statement with respect to such rule or regulation to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate and to the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection. Such statement shall set forth the proposed rule or regulation and shall contain a detailed explanation and justification of such rule or regulation.

(2) If either such committee does not, through appropriate action, disapprove the proposed rule or regulation set forth in such statement no later than 30 legislative days after receipt of such statement, then the Comptroller General may prescribe such rule or regulation. The Comptroller General may not prescribe any rule or regulation which is disapproved by either such committee under this paragraph.

(3) For purposes of this subsection, the term "legislative days" does not include any calendar day on which both Houses of the Congress are not in session.

(b) Recovery of Certain Payments.—The Comptroller General is authorized, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to institute actions in the district courts of the United States to seek recovery of any amounts determined to be payable to the Secretary or his delegate as a result of an examination and audit made pursuant to section 9038.

(c) Injunctive Relief.—The Comptroller General is authorized, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to petition the courts of the United States for injunctive relief as is appropriate to implement any provision of this chapter.

(d) Appeal.—The Comptroller General is authorized on behalf of the United States to appeal from, and to petition the Supreme Court for certiorari to review, judgments, or decrees entered with respect to actions in which he appears pursuant to the authority provided in this section.
SEC. 9041. JUDICIAL REVIEW.

(a) Review of Agency Action by the Comptroller General.—Any agency action by the Comptroller General made under the provisions of this chapter shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed in such court within 30 days after the agency action by the Comptroller General for which review is sought.

(b) Review Procedures.—The provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, apply to judicial review of any agency action, as defined in section 551(13) of title 5, United States Code, by the Comptroller General.

SEC. 9042. CRIMINAL PENALTIES.

(1) It is unlawful for any person who receives any payment under section 9037, or to whom any portion of any such payment is transferred, knowingly and willfully to use, or authorize the use of, such payment or such portion for any purpose other than—

(A) to defray qualified campaign expenses, or

(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses which were received and expended) which were used, to defray qualified campaign expenses.

(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

(c) False Statements, Etc.—

(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully—

(A) to furnish any false, fictitious, or fraudulent evidence, books, or information to the Comptroller General under this chapter, or to include in any evidence, books, or information so furnished any misrepresentation of a material fact, or to falsify or conceal any evidence, books, or information relevant to a certification by the Comptroller General or an examination and audit by the Comptroller General under this chapter, or

(B) to fail to furnish to the Comptroller General any records, books, or information requested by him for purposes of this chapter.

(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

(d) Kickbacks and Illegal Payments.—

(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully to give or accept any kickback or any illegal payment in connection with any qualified campaign expense of a candidate, or his authorized committee, who receives payments under section 9037.

(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

(8) In addition to the penalty provided by paragraph (2), any person who accepts any kickback or illegal payment in connection with any qualified campaign expense of a candidate or his authorized committee shall pay to the Secretary for deposit in the matching payment account, an amount equal to 125 percent of the kickback or payment received.

COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934

TITLE III—PROVISIONS RELATING TO RADIO

FACILITIES FOR CANDIDATES FOR PUBLIC OFFICE

Sec. 315. (a) If any licensee shall permit any person who is a legally qualified candidate for any public office to use a broadcasting station, he shall afford equal opportunities to all other such candidates for that office in the use of such broadcasting station: Provided, That such licensee shall have no power of censorship over the material broadcast under the provisions of this section. No obligation is imposed under this subsection upon any licensee to allow the use of its station by any such candidate. Appearance by a legally qualified candidate on any—

(1) bona fide newscast,
(2) bona fide news interview,
(3) bona fide news documentary (if the appearance of the candidate is incidental to the presentation of the subject or subjects covered by the news documentary), or
(4) on-the-spot coverage of bona fide news events (including but not limited to political conventions and activities incidental thereto), shall not be deemed to be use of a broadcasting station within the meaning of this subsection. Nothing in the foregoing sentence shall be construed as relieving broadcasters, in connection with the presentation of newscasts, news interviews, news documentaries, and on-the-spot coverage of news events, from the obligation imposed upon them under this chapter to operate in the public interest and to afford reasonable opportunity for the discussion of conflicting views on issues of public importance.

(b) The charges made for the use of any broadcasting station by any person who is a legally qualified candidate for any public office in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to such office shall not exceed—

(1) during the forty-five days preceding the date of a primary or primary runoff election and during the sixty days preceding the date of a general or special election in which such person is a candidate, the lowest unit charge of the station for the same class and amount of time for the same period; and
(2) at any other time, the charges made for comparable use of such station by other users thereof.

(c) No station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office (or for nomination to such office) unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate any limitation specified in paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of section 104(a) of the Campaign Communications Reform Act, whether paragraph is applicable.

(d) If a State by law and expressly—
(1) has provided that a primary or other election for any office of such State or of a political subdivision thereof is subject to this subsection,
(2) has specified a limitation upon total expenditures for the use of broadcasting stations on behalf of the candidacy of each legally qualified candidate in such election,
(3) has provided in any such law an unequivocal expression of intent to be bound by the provisions of this subsection, and
(4) has stipulated that the amount of such limitation shall not exceed the amount which would be determined for such election under section 104(a)(1)(B) or 104(a)(2)(B) (whichever is applicable) of the Campaign Communications Reform Act had such election been an election for a Federal elective office or nomination thereto;
then no station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate in such election unless such candidate (or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so) certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate such State limitation.

(e) Whoever willfully and knowingly violates the provisions of subsection (c) or (d) of this section shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $5,000 or imprisonment for a period not to exceed five years, or both. The provisions of sections 501 through 503 of this Act shall not apply to violations of either such subsection.

(f) (1) For the purposes of this section:
(A) The term "broadcasting station" includes a community antenna television system.
(B) The terms "licensee" and "station licensee" when used with respect to a community antenna television system, means the operator of such system.
(C) The term "Federal elective office" means the office of President of the United States, or of Senator or Representative in, or Resident Commissioner or Delegate to, the Congress of the United States.
(2) For purposes of subsections (c) and (d), the term "legally qualified candidate" means any person who (A) meets the qualifications prescribed by the applicable laws to hold the office for which he is a candidate and (B) is eligible under applicable State law to be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors.]

(c) For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "broadcasting station" includes a community antenna television system; and

(2) the terms "licensee" and "station licensee" when used with respect to a community antenna television system, mean the operator of such system.

(g) (d) The Commission shall prescribe appropriate rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this section.
MINORITY VIEWS

The House Administration Committee has labored at length to reform the present system of campaign financing. Committee members worked hard to pass a bill that would answer what some consider to be a public clamor for election reform.

While the Committee bill probably is too late to apply to the 1974 elections, it should provide a basis for reform in the 1976 and future elections. A bill could have been passed in time to be effective for the 1974 elections; the Committee can be justifiably criticized for failing to expeditiously bring a bill to the floor by commencing mark up sessions too late.

POSITIVE FEATURES

While the Committee bill does have loopholes and a few glaring defects, it accomplishes some good. The bill limits contributions to $1,000 per person and $5,000 for broad-based political committees. Individuals can contribute no more than $25,000 to all candidates and committees in a calendar year.

This provision may be the most significant reform in the Committee bill. Contribution limitations should restore public confidence by eliminating or reducing public suspicion that candidates are being “bought” or influenced by large campaign contributions. While these limitations may pose constitutional questions and could be difficult to enforce, they would prevent any individual or group from having a disproportionate impact on any campaign and would encourage candidates to raise more small contributions.

The Committee bill wisely prohibits the laundering and secretive earmarking of funds. Unlike the 1972 campaign, in future years the original source of all earmarked funds will have to be disclosed. Full disclosure of all earmarking will make it much easier to enforce contribution limitations.

Limits are placed on the amount of expenditures a candidate may make: $10 million for nomination for President, $20 million in a general election for President, 5¢ times the population of the geographical area or $75,000 for the Senate (whichever is greater) and $75,000 for House races. A cost of living escalator clause is included so that these limitations will not become outdated. In order to alleviate the constitutional problems posed by spending limitations, the Committee bill allows independent expenditures by individuals and political committees of up to $1,000. Under the 1971 Act, expenditures of this type of over $100 have to be disclosed. While Minority members disagree as to what level spending limits should be set there is basic agreement that some sort of limit must be set to rectify some of the abuses that became apparent in the 1972 campaign.

Several other important changes were made in the criminal code section: contributions by foreign nationals are prohibited, monetary penalties are increased, cash contributions over $100 are banned, contributions made in the name of another are prohibited, honorariums in excess of $1,000 per engagement or $10,000 per year are prohibited.

The Committee bill requires all candidates to designate a principal or central campaign committee. The reports of all other committees supporting that candidate must be filed with the principal committee, which in turn compiles these reports and sends them to the appropriate supervisory officer. All expenditures made on behalf of a candidate must be made through the principal campaign committee.

A principal campaign committee would increase accountability; a series of local committees all financially accountable to a centralized single committee focuses responsibility by having a single point of control. Reporting procedures would be simplified.

A bill requires reports to be filed 10 days before the election, thirty days after the election, on January 31, quarterly in an election year, and quarterly in a non-election year if contributions or expenditures of $1,000 or more are made. By reducing the number of reports, the Committee bill should help reduce the burden on candidates, while actually furthering the goals of disclosure. The large number of reports that are presently filed make it most difficult for public interest groups, the press and other monitoring agencies to fully inform the public of the sources of funds. The sheer volume of reports impedes the goal of full disclosure. With fewer, more timely reports, the public should actually know more about candidates’ sources of funds.

In addition, the Committee bill, by requiring the supervisory officers to publish a list of those who did file and those who did not file, should help foster compliance with the law.

By preempting state law, the Committee bill will alleviate candidates from the requirements that they comply with several sets of rules and regulations. This provision should streamline election law and assure greater compliance with federal law.

The bill opens the political process by allowing state and local employees to participate in political campaigns. Greater citizen participation in the political process will be encouraged.

The Committee bill repeals the media limitations in the 1971 law, thereby allowing the candidate to decide how he will apportion his funds within the overall spending limitations.

DEFICIENCIES

The bill has several important shortcomings:

Parties

Instead of strengthening the role of the parties in the political process, the Committee bill, by treating political parties the same as all other political committees, would significantly weaken and contribute to the demise of the two party system.

Section 101(b)(2) of the bill places a limitation of $5,000 on the contributions of political committees to candidates for Federal office.
The definition of political committee clearly encompasses the national and state committees of the major parties, thus limiting them to $5,000 in contributions. It would also apply to both direct cash transfers and services provided to or for the benefit of candidates, many of which are presently performed without the candidates’ full knowledge.

The minority strongly believes that the national and state committees of the major parties should be excluded from the definition of political committee for the purposes of contribution limitation. The national and state committees have been traditionally the policy-making bodies of the major parties and are cornerstones of our political system. The definition in the bill presently treats these important committees equally with all other committees, even small special interest committees. The national and state committees must be permitted the ability to assist candidates as the need arises so that a strong and dynamic party system can be maintained.

The governments of many countries throughout the world are going through a period of extreme instability. The United States can best avoid this phenomenon by furthering the development of a strong party system. If major parties are weakened or destroyed by a series of legislative shackles placed on them in the name of reform, our constitutional form of government will be seriously undermined.

In their haste to reform the funding of political campaigns, the Committee has severely limited the function of the parties. If the national and state committees have no control over their candidates, there will be little, if any, reason for candidates to adhere to the policy decisions of the party and the inevitable splintering of the two-party system will have begun. To prevent this from occurring, national and state parties must be exempted from the same limitations on contributions by political committees.

Financing of Conventions

The Minority is also opposed to the public financing of political conventions. Conventions are uniquely a party function and as such should not be supported by the overburdened public treasury. Nor should the party be entangled in the bureaucratic regulatory web which is envisioned by the present language of the bill.

The party must have the ability to determine the size and form of its convention; this can only be accomplished if the party retains control of its purse strings. Furthermore, the vitality of the party is enhanced by the participation of its members, while public financing of conventions will undercut individual initiative and participation.

The ever increasing encroachment of the federal bureaucracy into the private lives of our citizens is taking another large step with the enactment of convention financing. The two party system, free from bureaucratic tampering, has been a fourth branch in our constitutional form of government and will only remain a strong force if it is kept in the hands of the people.

Administration and Enforcement

Administration and enforcement of election law should be independent and avoid the appearance of conflict of interest. Any agency charged with responsibility of election law should not raise public suspicions about the fairness and effectiveness of enforcement. Public confidence in public officials should not be further lowered by an administration-enforcement system that fosters public cynicism. The Committee bill is not fully adequate in this regard. Hopefully, a better mechanism (such as an independent Federal Elections Commission) can be found, either by amendment on the floor or in the conference with the Senate.

Special Interest Groups

By placing a $5,000 limitation on how much special interest committees can give to candidates, the Committee bill took an important step towards reducing the influence that special interests gain through political contributions. More importantly, this limitation will help reduce public suspicions that public officials are "bought" by the large political contributions of special interest groups.

However, the Committee bill did not go nearly far enough. Clearly, the Congress must end the suspicion created among the public by the special interest contribution. The Minority has prepared and plans to offer five amendments on the floor that would eliminate or drastically curtail the ability of special interest groups to make contributions to federal candidates.

1. Ideally, it would probably be best to prohibit all contributions by special interest groups. In committee, Rep. Harold Froehlich offered an amendment to outlaw contributions by other than individuals and political party organizations. In offering this amendment, he astutely noted:

   If campaign contributions have ever been used for leverage in the political system, then surely the political action funds of special interest groups top the list for influencing political officials. If we are truly to reform the political system, then special interest campaign money should be outlawed.

This amendment was defeated by 15-7 on an almost straight party vote, with Republicans supporting it and Democrats opposed.

2. Since it can be argued that a band on giving by political committees is unconstitutional, the Minority strongly favors another approach which would drastically curtail the capabilities of special interests to gain influence through campaign contributions. This amendment, authored by Rep. Clarence Brown of Ohio, would prohibit the pooling of funds by any groups and require all contributions to be identified as to the original donor. Special interest groups would only be allowed to act as the agents of individual contributors, thereby reducing considerably special interest influence gained via political contributions. This amendment, as offered by Rep. Caldwell Butler, was also defeated in the Committee on a vote of 14 to 12 on an almost straight party vote.

3. The Committee bill allows special interest groups to give up to $5,000 per election. This limit is too high: Special interest groups should not be allowed to contribute five times as much as individuals.
A more appropriate limitation would be $2,500, $3,000 or even perhaps $1,000. The Minority will support efforts to lower this limit.

4. A fourth amendment that the Minority plans to offer is one that would prohibit contributions “in-kind” and require that contributions be made in cash or its equivalent. Presently, special interest groups are often able to get undue influence through providing “in-kind” services and goods such as cars, planes, storefronts, food, invaluable personal services, etc. Not only did the Committee bill fail to deal effectively with such abuses, it opened loopholes, in the form of exceptions to the definition of contribution and expenditure, that would exempt many of these activities from both the limitations and disclosure! Instead of curbing such abuses, the Committee bill would encourage them. Special interests would be especially well-equipped to use these loopholes to the hilt.

5. In the past, special interest groups have avoided full disclosure or the gift tax by proliferating the number of their political committees. This same activity could be used to circumvent contribution limitations. Several special interest groups have already set up ten, fifteen or twenty political committees to channel funds to candidates in anticipation of the passage of low contribution limitations. While the Committee report does contain language prohibiting this activity and it is obviously the intent of the bill to prohibit such activity, the Minority feels that an amendment banning the proliferation of political committees to circumvent the limitation is in order to ensure that the courts and administrators of the law have absolutely no latitude in interpreting the law.

In committee, when the opportunity for severely limiting or eliminating special interest money was presented, Republicans generally supported it, but Democrats were opposed. Democrats claim that special interest groups would severely limit the effectiveness of labor unions and liberal groups. But these amendments also apply in the same fashion to business, farm, conservative and corporate groups as well. The Minority intends to offer these amendments on the floor so that the American public will know how each Member and each party stands on the issue of special interest money. The public has a right to know who is more dependent on special interest contributions.

Minority Role

The Committee bill would have been far superior if the minority had been given a greater role in shaping the Committee’s final product. Unfortunately, the Committee was run in a highly partisan fashion, to the detriment of both the bill and the general public. Out of the over 100 amendments offered in committee, about 60 were offered by the majority and slightly over 40 by the minority (about 30 of these were substantive). Only a couple of the Minority’s amendments were accepted, while over a couple of dozen Majority amendments were accepted.

In particular, towards the end of the mark-up sessions, some minority amendments were rejected almost out of hand. As a result, several important amendments were rejected. For example, Rep. Caldwell Butler offered an amendment to close a major loophole in the contribution limitation section, but was defeated on an almost straight party vote. This amendment would have required that the endorser or guarantor of a bank loan count the loan as a contribution for the purposes of disclosure and the limitation. Under the Committee bill, wealthy individuals and special interest groups could guarantee loans worth thousands or tens of thousands of dollars without being subject to the contribution limitation. If the loans are defaulted, they would be in violation of the law no matter what they did. Further, the candidate would feel a strong obligation to the wealthy individual or special interest group. Hopefully, when the bill comes to the floor, this amendment and other important ones that were so abruptly treated in the committee will receive more thoughtful consideration. Their adoption will make the bill a much stronger one.

Dirty Tricks
In committee, Rep. Bill Frenzel offered an amendment to prohibit certain types of “dirty tricks”, but unfortunately, the committee chose not to adopt it. The main argument against the amendment was that hearings had not been held to determine the best manner in which to deal with the problem. However, the abuses of Watergate have received ample attention in both the press and congressional hearings.
On the floor, the minority plans to offer amendments patterned after the recommendations of the Senate Watergate Committee to prohibit “dirty tricks”. These recommendations are the product of months of public hearings and considerable deliberation and debate and should be promptly accepted by the House.

Citizen Participation
A final concern of the Minority is that the sheer length and complexity of this bill will discourage citizen participation and involvement perhaps even driving many people right out of politics.
Many people, when confronted with the complexity of this legislation, may become overwhelmed and give up politics in disgust. There will be ample potential for unintentional violations of the law. Many people may worry about going to jail or being fined for an inadvertent violation.

Many well-qualified individuals may view the burdensome reporting requirements and complicated regulations as an insurmountable obstacle and choose not to run. In addition to understanding the lengthy complicated disclosure forms, candidates may have to familiarize themselves with hundreds of pages of regulations promulgated to insure fair administration and enforcement of the limitations. The complexity of this law may limit candidacies only to lawyers or to those who can afford to pay lawyers for their time.

Spontaneous, grassroots action and people who are political novices or independent of regular political channels should not be discouraged.
The loss of such activities and candidacies would be a major blow to our political process.
The Minority urges the administrators and enforcers of the law to take every action possible to simplify reporting procedures and to make regulations easy to understand and intelligible to those not well versed in the law. In addition, services should be provided to candidates who do not understand the law or who are unable to understand the legal jargon used in the law and regulations so that they will not be found in violation of the law.

It would be ironic indeed, if, in the name of reforming our present system of campaign financing, we fail to drive out the special interests and only succeed in driving honest, concerned citizens from participation in the political process.

The undersigned recognize that honest elections are essential to the survival of our form of Government and that there is a constant and ongoing need for legislation in this field. However, this legislation, to be effective must be fair and workable. It is with this last thought in mind that the undersigned oppose this bill.

The undersigned regard the following aspects of the bill as particularly unrealistic for the reasons given:

1. Financing of Presidential Primaries.—The provisions for public financing of Presidential Primaries will inject the Federal Treasury into what many times amounts to a popularity contest under a formula that will probably work unfairly to the candidates involved.

The prospect of a Federal subsidy to run for office may very well result in a proliferation of candidates. Access to such subsidies would be an incentive to everyone with a desire for publicity to become a candidate; primaries may then become an anarchic jungle with policy issues largely obscured. The subsidy might also be a temptation for those who anticipate financial gain from running for office.

The use of private money we are told has weakened public confidence in the democratic process. But is this confidence likely to be restored when tax payers pay for campaigns they regard as frivolous, wasteful and in some cases, abhorrent?

Finally, we are told that subsidies will reduce the pressures on candidates for dependence on large campaign contributions from private sources. Where indeed will our democratic process be when the candidates’ principal constituent is the Federal Establishment.

2. Financing of Conventions.—The undersigned oppose the public financing of political conventions. Conventions are uniquely a party function and as such should not be supported by the overburdened public treasury. Nor should the party be entangled in the bureaucratic regulatory web which is envisioned by the present language of the bill. The party must have the ability to determine the size and form of its convention; this can only be accomplished if the party retains control of its purse strings. Furthermore, the vitality of the party is enhanced by the participation of its members, while public financing of conventions will undercut individual initiative and participation.

The ever increasing encroachment of the federal bureaucracy into the private lives of our citizens is taking another large step with the enactment of convention financing. The two party system, free from bureaucratic tampering, has been a fourth branch in our constitutional form of government and will only remain a strong force if it is kept in the hands of the people.

3. Political Parties.—Instead of strengthening the role of political parties in the political process, the Committee bill, by treating political parties the same as all other political committees, would significantly weaken and contribute to the demise of the two party system.

Section 101(b)(2) of the bill places a limitation of $5,000 on the contributions of political committees to candidates for Federal office. The definition of political committee clearly encompasses the national and state committees of the major parties, thus limiting them to $5,000 in contributions. It would also apply to both direct cash transfers and services provided to or for the benefit of candidates, many of which presently performed without the candidates’ full knowledge.

The undersigned strongly believe that the national and state committees of the major parties should be excluded from the definition of political committee for the purpose of contribution limitations. The national and state committees have been traditionally the policy making bodies of the major parties and are cornerstones of our political system. The definition in the bill presently treats these important committees equally with all other committees, even small special interest committees. The national and state committees must be permitted the ability to assist candidates as the need arises so that a strong and dynamic party system can be maintained.

The governments of many countries throughout the world are going through a period of extreme instability. The United States can best avoid this phenomenon by furthering the development of a strong party system. If major parties are weakened or destroyed by a series of legislative shackles placed on them in the name of reform, our constitutional form of government will be seriously undermined.

In their haste to reform the funding of political campaigns, the Committee has severely limited the function of the parties. If the national and state committees have no control over their candidates, there will be little, if any, reason for candidates to adhere to the policy decisions of the party and the inevitable splintering of the two-party system will have begun. To prevent this from occurring, national and state parties must be exempted from the same limitations on contributions by political committees.

4. Citizens participation.—A final concern of the undersigned is that the sheer length and complexity of this bill will discourage citizen participation and involvement perhaps even driving many people right out of politics.

Many people, when confronted with the complexity of this legislation, may become overwhelmed and give up politics in disgust. There will be ample potential for unintentional violations of the law. Many people may worry about going to jail or being fined for an inadvertent violation. Indeed, it is inevitable unless the administration and enforcement is done with tolerance and understanding of the complexities and problems involved.

Many well-qualified individuals may view the burdensome reporting requirements and complicated regulations as an insurmountable obstacle and choose not to run. In addition to understanding the lengthy complicated disclosure forms, candidates may have to familiarize themselves with hundreds of pages of regulations promulgated to insure fair administration and enforcement of the limitations.
Spontaneous, grassroots action and people who are political novices or independent of regular political channels should not be discouraged. The loss of such activities and candidacies would be a major blow to our political process.

The undersigned urge the administrators and enforcers of the law to take every action possible to simplify reporting procedures and to make regulations easy to understand and intelligible to those not well versed in the law. In addition, services should be provided to candidates who do not understand the law or who are unable to understand the legal jargon used in the law and regulations so that they will not be found in violation of the law.

It would be ironic indeed if, in the name of reforming our present system of campaign financing, we fail to drive out the special interests and only succeed in driving honest, concerned citizens from participation in the political process.

The campaign Reform Bill represents several months of hard work by members of the House Administration Committee and I believe it does correct several deficiencies in our election laws. On balance, however, I believe the bill as reported has a number of grave faults which is why I opposed it in Committee.

First of all, although the members wisely defeated suggestions for public financing of Congressional races, the bill does open the door to the concept of public financing by making it possible (if funds are available after presidential elections are financed) for candidates in presidential primaries to obtain public funds for their campaigns on a matching basis.

Let me briefly summarize why I believe public financing is undesirable. If election campaigns are financed wholly or in large part from Washington, this will greatly increase the potential power of the federal government. Public financing would also tend to decrease popular participation in campaigns. People would say “The government is paying for it with my tax money anyway, why should I contribute twice?” There would also be an increase in candidates with very little popular support who would be encouraged to run in order to obtain federal financing. The cost to the taxpayer will not be negligible. If Congressional candidates are eventually funded by the public (as several amendments urge) the taxpayers could be presented with an eventual bill in the area of $100 million per election.

There are also very serious constitutional questions. Taxpayer subsidy of political campaigns would be a form of compulsory political activity which limits the freedom of those who would prefer to refrain as well as those who chose to participate. If a citizen is forced to contribute to a political party whose views he may be indifferent to or opposed to, it may fairly be said that his freedom of conscience is being restricted. When this forced payment is combined with limitations on the amount he may contribute to those candidates he does believe in, freedom of expression is drastically curtailed. Most of those who now support subsidies for political parties would unequivocally condemn subsidies to religious groups, which would clearly be unconstitutional. It is a very real question whether the underlying issue—freedom of conscience and belief—is not, however, the same. What would happen if a religious-oriented party were formed, such as the Christian Democrats in many western nations? If this is thought unlikely, we only have to ask what would happen if the Democratic Party of Virginia, for instance, were to endorse the Sunday closing laws in that commonwealth, while the Republican Party were to decide to campaign against them.

In reality there is simply no effective way that campaign contributions can be limited without reducing freedom of speech and, in fact, without introducing a police state. Our efforts should be directed to full and complete disclosure of all contributions so that the voters will be able to judge for themselves if their representative is representing the majority of the people or some particular interest which gave a large sum to his campaign.

To maintain otherwise is to fly in the face of reality and to deceive our constituents. For instance, in a congressional election, you may have Candidate Alpha who favors a Right-to-Work Law and Candidate Beta who supports National Health Insurance. It is inevitable (and a necessary and healthy part of our democracy) that COPE and other trade union organizations are going to publicize their view that the Right-to-Work laws are undesirable, and they will do this with pamphlets, advertisements in the media and by door-to-door canvassing. The American Medical Association will doubtless exercise its constitutional right to explain to voters why it believes National Health Insurance should not be enacted.

Any realistic accounting of campaign funds would have to consider the manpower and money devoted by COPE to Right-to-Work laws in that district as expenditures assisting the campaign efforts of Candidate Beta. Similarly, there is no doubt that the expressed opinions and paid advertisements of the AMA would aid in the campaign of Candidate Alpha.

The limitations on spending in the present bill en so far as they are enforceable will merely increase the advantage of incumbents. Since 1954, less than 10% of all Members of the House who have run for re-election have been defeated. The only way a private citizen running for Congress can equalize the advantage in voter recognition and free publicity held by the sitting Member is by spending money to get his message across to the people. If he is limited to spending only as much as the incumbent his chances of defeating a well-known and entrenched Congressman are greatly reduced.

This bill, as reported, is permeated with loopholes—I will try to point out just a few of the most outstanding. The campaign spending limit (even granting that it can be realistically enforced) allows up to 25% of the spending limit to be spent on the solicitation of funds without being counted toward that limit. That is, candidates, in reality, will be allowed to spend their limit plus 25%.

The most glaring loopholes, however, are in the so-called limitations on labor union and corporate campaign spending. Although the present law states that “anything of value” contributed by a union or corporation must be reported, this law has rarely been enforced. If our aim is to have full disclosure of campaign contributions then we will be derelict in our duty if we overlook the fact that “in-kind” contributions from unions in presidential campaigns run as high as $100 million a year. This represents the salaries of union officials delegated to work in campaigns, the costs of printing, telephones, motel rooms, automobiles, office space, etc. This is a “loophole” wide enough to drive not a truck but a heavily loaded train through.
A recent book by attorney Douglas Caddy, The Hundred Million Dollar Payoff, documents these facts rigorously. I understand in fact that this book together with increasing complaints from all over the country has impelled the Justice Department to step up an investigation of union violations of the campaign laws. The thrust of Caddy's charges is directed at the real muscle behind labor's political influence—its in-kind contributions to candidates, i.e., mailings, voter registration and get-out-the-vote drives, printing, computerized lists, equipment, and a host of other services often provided under the guise of "political education" for its members. But the facts, as they are scrupulously outlined in this book, indicate that tens of millions of dollars in such union campaign services reach far beyond labor union membership and thus are in flagrant violation of the 1971 Federal Election Campaign Act. Surely this cannot be called a "Campaign Reform Bill" if it studiously avoids the single greatest loophole in our present campaign law.

This bill would have a far greater claim to fairness if it were amended to insure that union dues (which workers in most instances must pay to keep their jobs) could not be used for political purposes any more than corporate funds can be legally used for political activities now. It is a well-known fact that union officials (whose salaries are paid with union dues) often devote a considerable part of their time in union offices campaigning. Although the campaign contributions which are voluntarily collected from union members are maintained in segregated funds (such as COPE) the overhead expenses of collecting these contributions are often paid for by union dues; these are so-called "in-kind" contributions.

I intend to offer amendments on the floor which would ban the use of corporate funds or union dues for political purposes, including supposedly "non-partisan" registration drives. Since many union members do not approve of the candidates their involuntarily collected dues are supporting, it is grossly unjust to these citizens to coerce them into funding points of view with which they themselves disagree.

I would also hope that our colleagues will give support to the amendment of my colleague from Wisconsin (Mr. Froehlich) which would ban political committees (except agents of political parties) from collecting funds without having the donor designate to which candidates these funds are to be directed. Citizen participation in politics will be heightened if people give funds to individual candidates whose views reflect their own rather than to committees who are free to disburse these funds at their own discretion rather than the donor's.

Although well-intentioned, I regret to say that this bill if adopted in its present form will have a detrimental effect on our political life. It is simply too complicated and too involved to be readily understood by citizens not trained in the complexities of election law. An 80-page bill like this will provide the means for entrenched political machines (who can afford to employ dozens of specialist lawyers) to eliminate their challengers from the ballot if they unwittingly violate some obscure provision of this complicated legislation. Rather than encouraging more citizen participation this bill is bound to discourage non-professionals from entering politics. The threat of a huge fine or jail sentence for committing an innocent violation is almost certain to deter at least a sizeable number of qualified men and women, especially the young and inexperienced, from entering the political arena. Our aim should be to get more people involved in politics not fewer.

Unless we pass a law to repeal Original Sin within the boundaries of the United States we will always have some corruption in politics. This will be true whether we have total public or total private financing of campaigns. We will eliminate corruption by encouraging public-spirited citizens to run for office not by driving them away with threats of jail sentences and 80-page campaign laws.

The fundamental reason why there are people who wish to corrupt our political processes is because government has so much power in so many areas. If government influence were to be reduced, if the number of privileges government has in its power to bestow were to be reduced, there would be far less incentive for the unscrupulous to use big government for their own advantage. The most useful steps we can take toward restoring a sense of honor and decency to our public life would be to begin to lessen the tremendous power government holds over our lives.

I should like to conclude this statement with what I believe is a very appropriate comment made in a recent graduation address by the Chancellor of the University of Rochester, W. Allen Wallis:

"It is a striking paradox that the more people distrust the government, the more powers and responsibilities they heap upon it, many of the new powers being designed to counterbalance other powers that the government already has. . . .

The appropriate remedy for excessive governmental powers, for abuses of governmental powers, for ruthlessness and corruption in gaining control of governmental powers is not to create new governmental powers but to dismantle those that now exist."

PHILIP M. CRANE.
Since March 26, the House Administration Committee has met twenty times to consider 95 amendments to the Committee's original bill. While the Committee's bill and its tardiness in beginning work on it are subject to strong and legitimate criticism, the committee process, once mark-up was started, was full and open.

Since the Committee report analyzes the bill in the order that each section appears, these remarks cover the seven major subject areas in the following sequence: 1. administration and enforcement, 2. disclosure, 3. contribution limitations, 4. expenditure limitations, 5. other criminal code amendments, 6. public financing, 7. miscellaneous.

ADMINISTRATION AND ENFORCEMENT

In the aftermath of Watergate, the establishment of an effective administration and enforcement mechanism has been widely acclaimed by groups as diverse as the Nixon Administration, the Republican National Committee, the Senate Watergate Committee, the New York Times, and the Washington Post as the single most important change needed in existing election law. Yet, despite this widespread consensus that administration and enforcement of election law should be stronger and more independent, the House Administration Committee bill actually weakens the current system because of three major provisions that might make administration and enforcement less effective and independent.

1. It places four appointees of Congress and three employees of Congress in charge of the administration and enforcement of election law. The Committee bill also requires and forces this seven member board to conduct much of its business in secrecy.

2. It grants these seven people the power to interpret the law and grant presumed immunity from prosecution by issuing advisory opinions.

3. It gives two committees of Congress veto power over the rules and regulations promulgated to administer and implement campaign finance legislation, thereby giving these two committees the power to control all regulations drawn under this law. Clearly, the Congress has a stranglehold on enforcement and supervision of its own elections.
Not only is the fox in charge of the chicken coop, he is living in the farm house and managing the farm.

Board of Supervisory Officers

Section 207 of the Committee bill establishes a seven member Board of Supervisory Officers composed of the Secretary of the Senate, Clerk of the House, Comptroller General, and one appointee each by the minority and majority parties in both the Senate and the House. The four appointees are not subject to either executive review or congressional confirmation. Thirty percent of the staff is supposed to be composed of persons recommended by the minority. The Board supervises the administration of, seeks to obtain voluntary compliance with, and formulates overall policy with respect to the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 and certain provisions of the criminal code relating to elections.

The Board reviews rules and regulations and renders advisory opinions. It has the power to conduct investigations and hearings and subpoena witnesses. Interested parties may file complaints with the Board. The Board may refer the violation to the appropriate law enforcement authorities or the Attorney General. After such referral, the Attorney General must state within 60 days what action he has taken; and respond every thirty days thereafter until final disposition.

However, the creation of the Board fails to confront many of the basic problems inherent in the present administration and enforcement mechanism. Instead of eliminating the present conflict of interest situation, the Board maintains it. Not only will employees of the Congress be administering and enforcing election laws that affect their employers, but also direct appointees of Congress will be administering and enforcing these laws. The full-time supervisors will dominate the part-time appointees. This situation is clearly unacceptable.

Even with the most conscientious, diligent Board, public skepticism is certain to run high and there will be widespread doubt about the zeal and fairness of the Board’s enforcement efforts.

The Clerk of the House, Secretary of the Senate and the Comptroller General administered the law in 1972. Despite a late start, the agencies labored heroically. The administration was not particularly bad, but it was not uniform.

The Clerk of the House generally performed well. Nevertheless, he did take several actions that did not seem to conform to the spirit of the 1971 law. Originally, he charged outside groups and individuals $1 per page to xerox reports, thereby thwarting the disclosure provisions of the 1971 Act. In addition, the Clerk, along with the Secretary of the Senate, wrote regulations that allowed contributors to secretly earmark and “wash” campaign funds. These practices were stopped in court.

According to the Justice Department, the Clerk did not promptly report some of the violations of title 18. The Clerk feels he is not required to report violations of title 18, even though the GAO has assumed this responsibility. Consequently, corporate contributions were in some cases not cited as violations of the law. The Justice Department became aware of this failure only because a court in the State of New York sent an inquiry asking whether or not a particular candidate had not been prosecuted for accepting corporate contributions.

The Clerk of the House waited until after the election to forward many of the violations to the Justice Department. The Clerk reported 5,000 unprocessed violations (most of them trivial or minor). The Clerk did not actively search for and investigate incomplete filings. Thus, some candidates may have been able to circumvent the law by simply not reporting all of their contributions and expenditures. Since the Clerk apparently did not conduct any field investigations, the Justice Department was forced to re-examine and re-investigate many of the complaints reported by the Clerk. Further, the Clerk declined to make public the violations it referred to the Justice Department, so the public still does not know who did or did not allegedly violate the 1971 Act in the 1972 election.

The Secretary of the Senate also could have done a much better job. The Secretary did not refer failures-to-file and late filings to the Justice Department until after the election. It was not until April, five months after the general election, that the Secretary's office undertook to identify the more significant types of violations. Even then, the Secretary only reported violations which he thought were "willful."

Between June 1972 and February 1974, the General Accounting Office did report and follow up many violations, some of which were prosecuted. The GAO probably did the best job of the supervisory and enforcement agents. The GAO was also the agency which was the least politically encumbered and the most free from conflicts of interest. With the institution of the supervisory board, the GAO would have much less independence.

Under the committee bill, any notification of a violation or investigation made by the Board cannot be made public by the Board or any other person without the written consent of the person who is involved in the violation or investigation. Those who are in violation of the law will be able to determine if and when their transgressions are to be made public. The public's right-to-know will be thwarted.

The creation of a Supervisory Board would further exacerbate the crisis of confidence in Congress and the Federal government. With the general public already doubting the effectiveness and fairness of election laws, increasing and intensifying the present conflicts of interest will only serve to further reduce and perhaps irreparably harm the public's confidence in the political process.

Advisory opinion

Section 208 of the bill adds a new section to the 1971 Act to allow a candidate or political committee to request an "advisory opinion" from the supervisory board. If the supervisory board, after having made the request public and having given interested parties opportunity for comment, rules that the action does not violate the Act or criminal code amendments relating to campaign practices, any person who makes a good faith and reasonable effort to comply with the opinion shall be presumed not to be in violation of the law.

This provision would allow the Board to grant presumed immunity from prosecution to candidates and political committees. The Board, composed of employees and direct appointees of Congress, would have the potential power to revise the intent of the law.

Veto of regulations

Sections 205(b), 408 and 409 give the House Administration Committee and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration veto power over the rules and regulations of not only the Clerk of the House and Secretary of the Senate, respectively, but also over the rules and regulations of the GAO. The alleged purpose of this provision is to prevent the bureaucrats from changing the intent of the law, but this reasoning works both ways. If bureaucrats can change the intent of the law via promulgation of regulations, then so can a committee of Congress. The veto power robs the supervisory agencies of even the appearance of independence.

Summary

The House Administration Committee bill actually decreases the independence of the administrators and enforcers of the law in three ways: 1. Direct appointees and employees of Congress are given responsibility for administering and enforcing the law. 2. These same appointees and employees can issue advisory opinions which will grant presumed immunity from prosecution to candidates and committees. 3. Congressional committees will have veto power over the rules and regulations.

The committee's proposal does not affirmatively answer the most important question of all in the eyes of the public: will it reverse the long history of non-enforcement? If Congress's response to Watergate is to increase its control over Federal elections, then it will be hard to blame the public for becoming even more cynical and alienated.

Failure to file

The committee did pass a good amendment (section 205(a)(1)) that would require the supervisory officers to prepare and publish a list of those candidates who did file and those candidates who did not file reports. This has apparently been done by the Secretary of State of Pennsylvania with great success in increasing the percentage of those who comply with the law.

Disqualification of candidates

Section 302 of the bill provides that any candidate who fails to file will be disqualified from running for that office in the next election. Any decision by the Board of Supervisory Officers to disqualify a candidate for failure to file is subject to judicial review.

This penalty appears to be excessive, especially if the failure to file is inadvertent or accidental. More importantly, this provision is probably unconstitutional. Article I, section 2, clause 2 of the Constitution sets forth the sole qualifications for Representatives, and Article I, section 3, clause 3 sets forth the sole qualifications for Members of the United States Senate. Congress has no power to add to those qualifications. As was stated by the Supreme Court in Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486, 522, and 547 (1969), "the Constitution leaves the House (or the Senate) without authority to exclude any person, duly elected by his constituents, who meets all the requirements for membership expressly prescribed in the Constitution" and "the House is without power to exclude any member-elect who meets the Constitution's requirements for membership."

It is true that under the provisions of Article I, section 5, clause 1 of the Constitution that each House is the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its Members. This does not mean, however, that either House or the Congress as a whole has authority to add to the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution for the office of Representative or Senator, or to prevent a successful candidate from being seated who has qualifications. Yet, this is the effect of section 302.

The Court, in Powell v. McCormack, took note of the fact that a House of Congress has, in the past, excluded a candidate for other reasons than failure to meet constitutional qualifications. The Court rejected such instances as precedent by saying "that an unconstitutional action has been taken before surely does not render that same action any less unconstitutional at a later date... we are not inclined to give its precedents controlling weight. And, what evidence we have of Congress' early understanding confirms our conclusion that the House is without power to exclude any member-elect who meets the Constitution's requirements for membership." (395 U.S. 546, 547)

Proponents of this provision claim that the Ohio courts have upheld a similar disqualification provision in the Ohio law. In particular, the courts ruled that Donald E. Lukens could not file for governor of Ohio in February 1973, because he failed to file a statement covering campaign receipts and expenditures as a successful candidate for the Ohio State Senate in 1972. However, this case is not comparable, because the office of governor of Ohio was not created by the United States Constitution, as was the Congress. The courts seemed to express the reservation that, if applied to Members of Congress, the law would be unconstitutional because of the Powell v. McCormack decision.

Statute of limitations

Any candidate or person who violates any campaign finance law must be prosecuted, tried or punished for such violation within three years after the commission of the violation. This provision, contained in section 302, also applies retroactively to the 1971 Act.

GAO Clearinghouse

The committee, by 16 to 2, voted to abolish the elections clearinghouse in the General Accounting Office. The clearinghouse was instituted by the Keating amendment to the 1971 Act and is the only good thing the Federal government does to aid State and local officials in administering Federal elections. Presently, the Federal government dumps the administration of Federal elections into the laps of these State and local officials who are in turn at the mercy of Federal rules and regulations. Since its inception, the clearinghouse has drawn up and conducted studies using the first list of all State and local election boards, and has conducted and is conducting, a wide range of studies on fraud, election administration and voter registration. It publishes a monthly summary of election case law and changes in Federal and State election law which is invaluable to many State officials and some congressional officers. The clearinghouse has also facilitated the dissemination of information between State and local election boards. In the next few years, it will probably save these boards millions of dollars by showing State and local officials more effective means of administering elections, helping them to avoid the purchase of faulty and excessively expensive voting machines and encouraging the computerization and modernization of registration systems.
Penalties

Section 101(e) increases the monetary penalties for violation of sections 608, 610, 611 and 613 of title 18. Similar high monetary penalties are called for under sections 614 and 615. Prison penalties are left unchanged. This increase in penalties should help make enforcement of the law more effective. Big contributors and corporations will no longer be able to circumvent the law by making huge contributions and then face only a $1,000 fine. They will be forced to pay considerably more for any violation of the law.

Increasing the difficulty of enforcement.

Sections 102 and 206 make certain exemptions to the definitions of contributions and expenditure, thereby rendering ineffective certain disclosure provisions of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 and the contribution and expenditure limitations under title 18. These exemptions make effective enforcement more difficult.

For example, presently, candidates who do not fully disclose their expenditures and contributions can be caught fairly easily, because if they spend or receive something which they have not reported, then there is clearly a violation of the law. However, if certain exemptions are made under the disclosure provisions, then a candidate might claim that a contribution or expenditure that he failed to report was not covered, because it was exempted under the exceptions to the definition of contribution and expenditure. Except for the more flagrant abuses, enforcement of the 1971 disclosure provisions will be more difficult.

Similarly, without full disclosure, it will be difficult to ascertain whether or not a candidate or other person has violated a contribution or expenditure limitation.

ALTERNATIVE: THE FEDERAL ELECTIONS COMMISSION

Instead of maintaining or possibly weakening the present administration and enforcement provisions, the committee could have strengthened them by adopting an amendment, which will be offered on the floor by myself and Rep. Dante Fascell, as follows:

The Frenzel-Fascell amendment is a compromise between those who would like to see full criminal prosecution powers in a Commission and those who wish to maintain the present unsatisfactory administration-enforcement system. The Commission will become the supervisory officer for all Federal elections, replacing the GAO, Clerk of the House and Secretary of the Senate.

The Commission is designed to protect the rights of Members of Congress and other candidates, as well as the rights of the general public. Safeguards are provided which do not exist under the present law to prevent the filing of false complaints and unfair prosecutions. They are as follows:

1. If the Commission becomes aware of any violation, it must immediately inform all persons involved. If the Commission determines that the persons involved had been making and continue to make a good faith and reasonable effort to comply with the law and take immediate steps to bring about compliance, no further legal proceedings can be taken.
2. The Commission must, upon request, issue an advisory opinion on the legality of any transaction or activity under its jurisdiction. Any person who makes a good faith and reasonable effort to comply with an advisory opinion shall be presumed not to be in violation of the law.

3. The Executive Director and employees are strictly prohibited from making regulations and using the enforcement and subpoena powers of the Commission. These powers remain solely in the hands of the full-time members of the Commission.

4. Any person who knowingly and willingly files a false complaint or makes false statements to the Commission can be fined and imprisoned.

5. If a candidate is cleared of false charges by an independent Commission, the public will more than likely have confidence in and respect the Commission's finding. On the other hand, if a candidate, especially an incumbent, is cleared of false charges by the Board of Supervisory Officers, the public may believe the Board's decision smacks of cronyism or is the result of a special favor or deal.

All six members of the Commission are selected from lists submitted by Congress. The congressional leadership nominates and the President appoints only from these lists.

Since the Commissioners are full-time members and the Commission is an independent establishment of the executive branch, no Members of Congress may serve on the Commission.

Considerable controversy has arisen over the advisability of allowing Commission appointments to be made by the Watergate White House. Our Commission would only allow the President to choose from among names submitted by Congress. We gave the President this limited discretion mainly because Presidential appointment is absolutely necessary if the Commission is to be given any authority to enforce campaign finance laws in the courts. The Supervisory Board in the committee bill is not presidentially appointed and, hence has no enforcement powers and cannot be given these powers.

The Commission would be similar in structure to the independent agencies of the executive branch. Such independent agencies have been found to have the constitutional authority to enforce the laws under their jurisdiction. See e.g. National Harness Manufacturer's Assoc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 268 F. 705 (6th Cir. 1920); United States v. Morton Salt, 338 U.S. 632 (1950); Texas and Pacific Railroad Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U.S. 197 (1896).

The manner in which officers of independent agencies are appointed is controlled by Article II, section 2, clause 2 of the United States Constitution which states:

(The President) shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, Judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law. But the Congress may, by law, vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.
Whether the members of a Federal Elections Commission qualify as “officers of the United States” or as “inferior officers,” it is clear from the Constitution that ultimate authority to appoint such members rests either with the President alone or with the courts of law or heads of departments, as Congress may designate by law.

Congressional appointment would be a usurpation of executive powers. In Springer v. Phillipine Islands, 277 U.S. 189 (1928), the Court stated:

> Legislative power, as distinguished from executive power, is authority to make laws, but not to enforce them or appoint the agents charged with the duty of such enforcement. The latter are executive functions. It is unnecessary to enlarge further upon the general subject, since it has so recently received the full consideration of this court... (in) Myers v. United States.

Although Congress does not have the authority itself to appoint the heads of independent agencies of other officers of the United States, it does have the power to circumscribe the President’s power to nominate such officers. The contrary assertion that the mere grant of executive power confers upon the President the unfettered power of appointment is clearly inconsistent with statutes which restrict the exercise by the President of the power of nomination of officers of the United States.

Many of these statutes impose limitations upon Presidential appointments to Federal agencies. See e.g. Interstate Commerce Commission, 41 Stat. 456, 497 (February 28, 1929); Federal Trade Commission, 38 Stat. 717 (September 26, 1914); United States Tariff Commission, 39 Stat. 756, 795 (September 8, 1916). Of particular significance are those statutes which provide that the President may be restricted in his appointment to certain named individuals. See United States v. Myers, 272 U.S. 52.

In conclusion, it is constitutionally required under Article II that the President appoint the members of the Commission. However, it has been established by the courts and legislative practice that his power may be limited by Congress through designation of a list of individuals from which to choose.

To assure the Commission’s independence, the members are chosen as follows: one from among individuals recommended by the Speaker and majority leader of the House, one from among individuals recommended by the majority leader of the Senate, one jointly by these three congressional leaders of the majority party, one by the minority leader of the House, one by the minority leader of the Senate and one jointly by the two congressional leaders of the minority party.

A Federal Elections Advisory Board, composed of members of Congress and appointees of the major political parties, is established to assure that Congress and the national parties have maximum input into the workings of the Commission.

The powers of the Commission are almost identical to those given the Board of Elections of the District of Columbia in the D.C. Campaign Finance Reform Act which passed the House by a 384–17 vote.
All criminal prosecution is left with the Justice Department. The Commission can conduct hearings and investigations on alleged or apparent violations. It can also petition the courts for declaratory or injunctive relief to bring about civil compliance with the law.

Since November 1972, sixteen States have enacted (Alaska, California, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Iowa, Kansas, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Washington and Wisconsin) and three States have greatly strengthened (Kentucky, North Carolina and Rhode Island) independent agencies to enforce State campaign finance laws. The Federal Elections Commission builds on that experience.

ADVANTAGES OF COMPROMISE INDEPENDENT FEDERAL ELECTIONS COMMISSION

1. Restore public confidence

By judiciously enforcing campaign finance reform legislation, a Commission could increase public confidence in the effectiveness and fairness of election laws, and indirectly, in public officials themselves. Attainment of a coordinated, fair and equitable enforcement-administration agent without the present appearance of conflicts of interest would help restore public confidence.

2. Prevent unfair prosecutions

Under the present system, the Justice Department has the power to prosecute even the most minor violations of the law. In 1972, the Clerk of the House referred 5,000 violations to the Justice Department. If Justice wanted to, it could prosecute most of the candidates (including most of the incumbents) that ran in the 1972 election. In the aftermath of Watergate, the Justice Department could seriously embarrass and end the political careers of many candidates and incumbents by simply prosecuting them for minor violations. The Commission would have the power and authority to prevent such unfair prosecutions.

The Commission is designed to provide for the protection of the rights of Members of Congress and other candidates as well as the rights of the general public. Several safeguards, already listed above, are provided which do not exist under existing law.

3. Eliminate conflicts of interest

Currently, a conflict of interest situation exists in which employees of the House and Senate are charged with identifying and reporting possible violations of the law committed by their employers. Even with the most conscientious and well-intentioned Clerk of the House and Secretary of the Senate, the public is certain to be skeptical and question the objectivity and zeal of their enforcement efforts against persons to whom they owe their jobs.

The House Administration Committee bill establishes a Board of Supervisory Officers which would place four direct appointees of Congress and three employees of Congress in charge of the administration and enforcement of election law. Instead of eliminating the present conflict of interest situation, the Board would maintain it by allowing employees and direct appointees of Congress to police elections.
4. Reversing the past history of nonenforcement

Historically, campaign finance reform legislation has been a failure because of the lack of effective enforcement. The Corrupt Practices Act was almost never effective in its 50 year life. The failure of the Justice Department to prosecute in 1972 is widely known. No administration or enforcement agency that is in any manner politically encumbered has ever done an adequate, consistent job in administering and enforcing election law.

5. Reduce bureaucracy

One criticism of the Commission has been that it would add still another bureaucracy to the growing proliferation of Federal agencies. To the contrary, the Commission would combine the present work of three agencies (Clerk of the House, Secretary of the Senate and GAO) into a single entity.

Although it was argued in 1971 that the present arrangement would prevent the need for creating additional bureaucracy, the fact is that the Clerk assigned over 20 employees to this function, the Secretary and the GAO. The creation of a single Commission would combine these duties and should reduce the total number of employees needed to carry out the same functions.

6. Increase coordination

At present, four separate agencies—the Clerk of the House, Secretary of the Senate, Comptroller General, and Justice Department—are charged with enforcing the 1971 law. This makes it difficult to achieve fair, consistent and coordinated supervision and enforcement of the law. Such matters as preparation of reporting forms or interpretations of the law may be treated differently by each entity or may require burdensome and extensive consultation to achieve consistency. A single Commission would eliminate many of these problems.

7. Visibility

The Commission would have much greater visibility than an office or agency buried within the Clerk, Secretary, GAO or Justice Department. The press, the public, elected officials, the parties and political committees could carefully scrutinize the Commission's actions and lay the blame for any failure squarely with the Commission. With a highly visible Commission, the public would expect and have confidence in nonpartisan, vigorous enforcement of the law.

8. Assure expeditious enforcement

Any administration and enforcement mechanism must provide for continuous, smooth coordination between the administrators and enforcers of the law. Without it, many serious violations that could be disclosed before the election (when enforcement is most effective) will not be made public until long after the election is over.

With spending and contribution limitations, enforcement before the election may be all-important. A Commission would be able to take almost instantaneous action to curb illegal activities and protect the rights of honest candidates while exposing the violators.
II. DISCLOSURE AND EXEMPTIONS

Section 206 of the Committee bill makes certain exceptions to the definitions of contribution and expenditure for the purpose of disclosure under title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. Section 102 makes these exemptions applicable to contribution and expenditure limitations under title 18.

These exemptions, which were proposed in good faith to deal with legitimate problems have several negative, potentially disastrous effects. Since some types of donations and disbursements formerly defined as contributions and expenditures are no longer included in that definition, candidates will no longer have to make full and complete disclosure of contributions and expenditures.

Secondly, as was previously noted, enforcement of both the disclosure provisions and of contribution and expenditure limitations may be much more difficult.

Thirdly, these exemptions may be used as loopholes by special interests and wealthy individuals to circumvent limitations and to channel funds, goods and services into Federal campaigns from hidden, subterranean and suspicious sources.

Fourthly, these loopholes make ambiguous the prohibitions on contributions in the name of another and contributions by unions, corporations and foreign nationals. Since the exemptions apply to these sections as well, if the Committee bill passes with the loopholes intact, the courts may decide that certain types of donations by unions, corporations and foreign nationals are permissible.

Originally, the loopholes in the Committee bill were substantial. After tentative approval by the Committee, however, they were cleaned up and tightened up to a large extent. Nevertheless, these exemptions are still loopholes and may have disastrous effects on election law if the courts interpret them literally.

Food, travel, and personal property

Two exceptions are exempt up to $500 from both the definition of contribution and expenditure for the purpose of disclosure and contributions and expenditure limitations. Without full disclosure of these exemptions, it may be difficult to determine whether an individual or political committee has spent $500 or more under either of these exemptions. Through these loopholes, contributors can legally breach the $1,000 maximum contribution limit. These exemptions are as follows:

1. the use of real or personal property by any individual who is the owner of the property with respect to the rendering of voluntary services to any candidate or political committee, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages provided on the individual's premises. This amendment was originally intended to cover only a person's home or a volunteer's van or car and was also created to allow friends of a candidate to have small receptions in their homes without becoming subject to the provisions of Federal election law. But this exemption's applicability is much wider. It would allow an individual or political committee to donate a computer, storefront, fleet of cars, printing factory, perhaps even a television or radio station. It would also allow “fat cats” to stage large, fancy receptions, cocktail parties and dinners in their homes. The candidate would not have to disclose the first $500 of such use as a contribution or expenditure and would not have to credit the first $500 to spending and contribution limitations.

2. Any unreimbursed travel expense with respect to the rendering of volunteer services. The original intent of this exemption was to prevent candidates from being prosecuted for not reporting the travel expenses of volunteers or friends working in their campaign. However, the legislative language of this loophole is much greater than that. Candidates might not have to report their rides on privately owned jets, yachts etc. during a campaign. Costs of transportation of voters to polls could also be exempt.

These two loopholes could be reduced in scope and still preserve the intent of their advocates, but there is no real need for either of them.
If the activities exempted by these loopholes are not part of the can-didate’s formal, organized campaign, they may be classified as an independent expenditure. Any person can make independent expenditures advocating the election or defeat of a candidate that do not exceed $1,000 without the candidate’s knowledge or authorization. If such activities are part of a candidate’s formal, organized campaign, then they should be reported and counted against his contribution and expenditure limitations.

Slatecards

The so-called slatecard amendment exempts from the definition of contribution and expenditure for the purposes of disclosure and contribution and expenditure limitations any payment by a State or local party committee for the costs of preparation, display, mailing or other distribution of a listing of three or more candidates for any public office. This exemption does not apply to costs incurred with respect to broadcasting stations, magazines and other similar types of general public political advertising (other than newspapers). There is no ceiling or limitation placed on such activity.

The original intent of the slatecard amendment was to allow parties to print slatecards, sample ballots etc. to educate voters and encourage straight party voting without being subject to the disclosure provisions and contribution and expenditure limitations in Federal law. The slatecard amendment would eliminate the difficult problem of trying to prorate the costs of these items to each candidate’s campaign so that they can be reported and credited to a candidate’s contribution and expenditure limitation. It would also prevent candidates from being prosecuted for party activities they do not have any knowledge of.
This provision would be especially helpful in senatorial and presidential campaigns where a candidate may have no idea what a local party in a remote region of the State or country may be doing in his behalf.

Unfortunately, this amendment also opens up a loophole. State and local parties could send out numerous mass mailings, buy huge quantities of sample ballots and pay for dozens of advertisements in newspapers. As long as the candidate appeared or was involved with two other candidates, the expenditure and source of the money would not have to be disclosed. Further, this might include mailings and newspaper advertisements that just incidentally mention two other candidates. Since State and local party committee is not defined, this provision could be widely abused. Special interests and wealthy individuals might set up dummy party committees and pump in thousands of dollars for a candidate's mailings or advertisements and would not have to disclose these donations as contributions.

This exemption is not needed. Both State and local and national parties could be allowed to spend funds independently of a candidate without that candidate's being forced to credit these expenditures to his limitations. The recently passed Senate bill (S. 3044) contained such a provision. State and local and national parties were each allowed to spend up to $10,000 in a House race and $20,000 or 2 cents per voter in any other race for Federal office.

The 1971 law already gives the supervisory officers discretion and flexibility in allowing State and local party committees to avoid disclosing and prorating expenses on behalf of specific Federal candidates. Under section 306(c), the supervisory officers may relieve any category of political committees of the obligation to comply with reporting requirements if the committee primarily supports persons seeking State or local office, does not substantially support any Federal candidate and does not operate in more than one State or on a statewide basis. A similar provision would be written into title 18 to cover contribution and expenditure limitations.

Fund raising

Any costs incurred by a candidate for fund raising purposes, provided that they do not exceed 1/4 of the candidate's total spending limit, will be exempted from the definition of expenditure for the purposes of the expenditure limitations. This exemption does not apply to fund raising efforts made through broadcasting stations, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertising facilities and other similar types of general public political advertising. This provision is another loophole, but is one that is actually needed.

A major goal of campaign finance reform is to encourage the solicitation and raising of small contributions. Yet, it generally costs considerably more to raise funds in small amounts. If candidates and political committees are forced to credit to their limitations all fund raising costs, then there will be a huge incentive to raise money in large chunks, thus defeating one of the major purposes of reform. By exempting fund raising costs from contribution and expenditure limitations, the Committee bill encourages candidates to raise sums in small amounts. Further, since these costs must be disclosed, the basic integrity of the 1971 Act is maintained.

The Committee bill also exempts fund raising costs by broad-based political committees. These costs cannot be incurred with respect to broadcasting stations, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertising facilities and other similar types of general public political advertising. There is no limitation on such activities.

This provision is not really needed since it is unlikely that fund raising costs by broad-based political committees that give to many candidates will actually be prorated and credited to the candidates' own limitations. To assure that these costs aren't prorated and credited, legislative history can be made on the floor specifically exempting these costs.

A loophole is opened by this exemption. Five or more candidates, especially in large metropolitan, may get together and set up dummy fund raising committees. These committees would spend considerable sums on mass mailings and other similar fund raising techniques. They would give $5,000 to each candidate, but would actually spend much more in their behalf by using fund raising techniques to increase the candidates' name recognition and popularity. Such activities would not be credited to the candidates' contribution and expenditure limitations.

Vendors

The sale of food or beverage by a vendor for use in a candidate's campaign at a charge less than the normal charge, but at a charge at least equal to the cost of food or beverage is exempted from the definition of contribution for both the purposes of disclosure and of contribution limitations. This exemption may not be needed, since food and beverage purchases are largely exempt under another exception. Nevertheless, this provision does allow friends to give the candidate large amounts of food at a discount price without disclosure.

Since corporations and labor unions may be included as vendors, they may be able to make indirect contributions by selling candidates food and beverages at extremely cheap prices without even having to disclose such activities. It is also reasonable to assume that incumbents will have better luck in receiving these unreported gifts from whiskey merchants, provisioners, and innkeepers than their challengers.

Communications to membership organizations

The committee bill exempts from both the disclosure provisions and expenditure limitations any communication by any membership organization to its members, as long as the group is not organized primarily for the purpose of influencing Federal elections. Thus, any special interest group whose primary purpose is not to influence Federal elections could engage in campaign efforts which might parallel those being conducted by the candidate's organization.

Miscellaneous

There are three other exemptions in the committee bill, all of which appear to be non-controversial.

1. Any news story, commentary or editorial distributed through the facilities of any broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine or other periodical publication is exempted from the definition of expenditure, unless such facilities are owned or controlled by any political party, political committee or candidate. This provision is basically in conformity with the law already, although it may exempt some special interest publications which may be extremely useful and effective to certain candidates during a campaign.

2. Nonpartisan registration activity designed to encourage individuals to register to vote or to vote is exempted from the definition of expenditure. This activity is exempt anyhow.
3. Finally, any communication which is not made for the purpose of influencing an election is also exempted from the definition of expenditure. This seems to ratify existing law, but may be aimed at exempting an incumbent's newsletter and other similar publications (which are exempted anyhow).

Almost all of these exemptions are not needed. The Committee's problem is that its spending limits are too low. These exemptions acknowledge a need for candidates to spend in excess of $75,000. Raising the limit would accomplish the same purpose and assure full disclosure.

Common Cause amendment

Section 206(a) attempts to bring under the disclosure provisions of the 1971 Act groups such as Common Cause and the Environmental Policy Center (which attempt to influence the public by publishing information about incumbents and their records) by extending the definition of political committees to include those that commit any act for the purpose of influencing, directly or indirectly, the election of any person to Federal office. This section, however, will probably not force groups such as Common Cause to report because the phrase "act for the purpose" would require the Government to prove intent. This will be extremely difficult to prove in a court of law.

Section 205(a) eliminates the provisions of the 1971 Act that require the supervisory officers to publish an annual compilation of total contributions and expenditures made by candidates in the preceding year. It also eliminates the preparation of special reports and analyses of campaign financing trends and patterns. Finally, it eliminates the requirements that the supervisory officers assure wide dissemination of statistics, summaries and reports.

Thus, private individuals and public interest groups will be the public's only source of concise information about the disclosure information filed by candidates. The provision that eliminates the requirement that the supervisory officers consolidate data and publish summary reports may help to frustrate and reduce the usefulness of disclosure. Without these summaries, the public may find itself confronted only by a maze of reports and forms. The main purpose of disclosure—the dissemination to the public of information about candidates' sources of funds and disbursements—will be thwarted. Also, without the section encouraging wide dissemination, the Clerk and the Secretary might read the intent of the law as being that the reports remain locked up in their offices or be available to the public for only limited time periods.

Section 205(a) also adds a provision that requires the supervisory officers to publish a cumulative index of reports and statements in the Federal Register at regular intervals and to make the index available for purchase for a reasonable price. This would be a welcome addition to the present system.
Central or principal campaign committee

Sections 201 and 202 provide that every candidate for Federal office must designate a principal or central campaign committee and that all reports of other committees established to support that candidate must be funneled through the central committee. The purpose of these sections is to assure accountability and stop efforts to circumvent disclosure via the proliferation of committees. In addition, only the central committee may make expenditures on behalf of a candidate. Since the Committee’s loophole definition of expenditure applies to these sections, this provision is not as effective as it could be. Candidates can simply use the exemptions to circumvent the law and spend money through other committees.

These two sections have two other good provisions. They delete the current requirements that a political committee include a notice on the face of all literature that a copy of its reports is available from the Superintendent of Documents, and the requirement that the Public Printer publish annual reports on the contributions and expenditures of every registered candidate or political committee. These provisions will lessen the burden on candidates, save the taxpayers millions of dollars, while at the same time not weakening the disclosure provisions of the 1971 Act.

Sections 201 and 202 could be further strengthened by adoption of the Cook amendment requiring that all expenditures made on behalf of a candidate who has received the nomination of his political party for president be specifically approved by the chairman of the political party or his designated representative.

Reports

Section 203 reduces the number of reports a candidate must file, thereby reducing the administrative burden on candidates, while at the same time assuring that the disclosure provisions are in no way weakened. Instead of a 5 day and 15 day report, there is a single 10 day report which is complete as of the fifteenth day before the election. Reports are also filed on the thirtieth day after the election and must be complete as of the twentieth day after the election. In any year in which an individual is a candidate, a report must be filed between December 31 of that year and January 31 of the following year. Reports must also be filed quarterly. If, however, a candidate or political committee both receives contributions and makes expenditures of less than $1,000 during a quarter in a non-election year, then no quarterly report is required. When the last day for filing a quarterly report occurs within ten days of an election, the quarterly report is waived. Finally, any contribution of $1,000 or more received after the final pre-election report must be reported within forty-eight hours after its receipt. The national acknowledgement on all reports should be eliminated and the candidate and his committee should report on the same form.

Transfers

Section 203 also requires that when a candidate files a report, he shall include not only the total sum of contributions and expenditures, but also contributions and expenditures less transfers between committees. This provision will alleviate the problem whereby it appears a candidate has spent $100,000, when actually he spent only $50,000, because half of the expenditures (or contributions) were transfers between his own committees.

Date of filing

Section 204 allows quarterly and post-election reports to be delivered by registered or certified mail and provides that the United States postmark stamped on the cover of the envelope shall be deemed the date of filing.

III. CONTRIBUTION LIMITATIONS

The committee bill limits contributions by political committees to candidates for Federal office to $5,000 per election. For the purposes of this limitation, a political committee is a committee which has existed for a period of not less than 6 months which has received contributions from more than 50 persons and has made contributions to 5 or more candidates for Federal office. State committees of a political party are not required to contribute to 5 or more candidates in order to qualify.

All other persons may contribute $1,000 per election to any candidate for Federal office.

A candidate for Federal office may contribute up to $25,000 from his own personal funds or the funds of his immediate family.

A candidate may pay off from his own funds or the funds of his immediate family, any campaign debt incurred before December 31, 1972.

The contribution limitations contained in the Committee bill will be somewhat ineffective and difficult to enforce, because of the exemptions the bill makes to the definition of contribution for the purposes of disclosure and the limitations.

Even if the exemptions are eliminated, there are several other problems with the way the contribution section is worded and drafted.

1. Endorsed or guaranteed loan loophole

The underlying rationale behind contribution limitations is that a person who provides large amounts of money to a campaign gains, or appears to gain, undue influence over the recipient candidate.

However, the definition of contribution contained in the committee bill does not specifically exempt loans from State or national banks. Originally, this exemption was necessary in order that such loans not be considered a contribution by the bank. Such loans are extremely useful in the early phases of campaigns before fund-raising efforts begin to show a return.

It is common practice for such loans, especially loans to political committees, to be endorsed by one or more individuals of sufficient means to repay the loan in case the recipient should fail to do so. Such endorsements must be reported by the recipient, but there is no mention of them in the definition of contribution in the contribution limitation section.

With the adoption of contribution limitations, these endorsements emerge as a major problem. They represent a gaping loophole through which individuals can still make large amounts of money available to a campaign. The contribution limitation cannot prevent anyone from endorsing loans in amounts as large as a bank will approve. Even if the loan is repaid, the endorser has demonstrated his ability to make large amounts of money available to a campaign, and would almost certainly acquire whatever undue influence accrued to individuals who formerly were able to make large contributions.

Moreover, this practice would enable wealthy candidates to endorse loans to their own campaigns in excess of the present limitation of $25,000 on expenditures from personal funds, an advantage which candidates of modest means would not enjoy.

If the recipient of the loan is unable to repay it, further complications arise. If the endorsed loans exceed $1,000, the endorser has either violated the law in the course of fulfilling a legal obligation openly and legitimately assumed, or the contribution limitation is essentially meaningless.

An amendment to repair this section was offered to require endorsements of bank loans to be treated as actual loans by the endorser for the purposes of reporting and the limitations. Under the terms of the amendment, no person would have been able to make contributions, loans, or endorsements of loans to any candidate or committee which total more than $1,000. This seemed to be a reasonable way of dealing with a major loophole, but the committee saw fit to reject it.

2. Separate elections

The contribution limitation applies separately to each election, but the bill does not state what qualifies as an election. Under the definition of election, a candidate could conceivably receive from one individual: $1,000 for a party convention, $1,000 for a primary, $1,000 for a primary run-off and $1,000 for the general election, or a total of $4,000. Similarly, special interest committees could conceivably give up to $20,000. Since the enforcers of the 1971 Act have had considerable trouble interpreting the meaning of election, language should be drafted to alleviate this problem.

3. Further contribution loopholes

Even if such language is added, an individual could still contribute up to $4,000 ($1,000 for the nomination + $1,000 for the general election + $100 for each of the two exemptions or $1,000 + $1,000 in independent expenditures). He could also funnel money into the state and local parties that could be used for slatecards, sample ballots and newspaper advertisements which feature the candidate with two or more other candidates briefly mentioned. A political committee could contribute $12,000 plus donate money to state and local party committees for slatecards, newspaper advertisements, etc.

4. Special interest contributions

A recent Common Cause survey found that special interests groups have a total of $17.4 million in funds available for the 1974 congressional races; almost twice as much as the same groups reported spending on behalf of candidates in the 1972 congressional elections. Further, the prime fund raising season has not even started. Obviously, special interest groups have not learned much from Watergate. Public confidence will only be further undermined by the unleashing of this mammoth war chest. If public confidence is to be bolstered, then special interest money must be stringently regulated.

While it is the intent of the committee that wealthy individual and special interest groups be prohibited from proliferating their committees to circumvent the contribution limitations, there is no specific legislative language which prevents proliferation. Some special interest groups presently have ten, fifteen or twenty committees. These special interests could conceivably give up to almost a quarter of a million dollars (\(12,000 \times 20\)) to a candidate. While the committee's legislative history may be sufficient to prohibit such proliferation, a safer way would be to write legislative language into the bill.

Under the committee bill, an individual can give up to $25,000 to a political party or special interest committee supporting more than one candidate. However, the earmarking language in the bill prevents an individual from channeling funds to a particular candidate through these political parties and political committees. Nonetheless, an individual could give several thousand dollars to a particular party or special interest committee, knowing full well that a substantial part of that money would end up in the hands of a particular candidate. In addition, special interest committees can give unlimited amounts of funds to political parties and political committees supporting more than one candidate. Some limits might be placed on such giving.

The committee's $5,000 limit on special interest committees should be reduced to $3,000, $2,500 or perhaps even $1,000. A major purpose of this legislation is to discourage special interest influence, yet special interest groups are allowed to give five times as much as an individual.

Ideally, these problems could be eliminated by prohibiting the use of special interest money. Because this might be unconstitutional, all contributions should at least be identified as to the original donor. Special interest groups would only be allowed to act as the agents of individual contributors. This provision would reduce considerably special interest influence gained via political contributions. It would stimulate individual interest and participation and would prevent a few "bosses" from dictating political decisions to the many people in the organization. Such an amendment, offered by Rep. Caldwell Butler, was defeated by a vote of 14 to 12 in the committee.

5. Contributions "in-kind"

The committee left unchanged the status of "in-kind" contributions. The committee defeated a needed amendment to prohibit such contributions. Under the present disclosure language, "in-kind" contributions must be reported as contributions, but the law should be more specific as far as limitations are concerned.

6. Authorized committee loophole

The bill, as drafted, states that if a contribution is given to a political committee authorized by the candidate in writing to accept contributions for that candidate, then that contribution is treated as a contribution to the candidate. This language leaves a major loophole. It allows a candidate to receive contributions in excess of the limits simply by having the contributions go to a political committee of the candidate which is not authorized in writing to accept contributions for the candidate. This loophole is best closed by describing the limit in terms of a contribution made “to or for the benefit of a candidate” rather than just “to a candidate” and/or requiring that any political committee which is raising money for a specific candidate has to be authorized in writing by that candidate in order to raise money for him.

7. Campaign trips by the President and Vice President

The President and Vice President are often required either by law or the Secret Service to fly an official plane to political events. The cost of such a trip often runs into the tens of thousands of dollars. Would this count as a contribution? Certainly, it should not. If it does, the President or Vice President might unavoidably or inadvertently violate the contribution limitations. Also, the candidate might exceed his expenditure limitation. For the purposes of the limitations, the cost of such trips must be considered what it would normally cost a person to travel by commercial airline.

8. Aggregate limits

The bill limits the aggregate amount an individual can contribute in one year to all candidates to $25,000. However, the exemptions under the definition of contribution apply to this section, so an individual can in reality give more than this amount.

IV. EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS

The committee bill sets expenditure limitations of $10 million for candidates for nomination for President; $20 million for the general election for President; 5¢ times the population of the geographical area or $75,000 for nomination for election, or election, to the Senate (whichever is greater); $75,000 for nomination for election, or election, to the House of Representatives, Delegate from the District of Columbia, or Resident Commissioner; and $15,000 for nomination for election, or election, for delegate from Guam or the Virgin Islands.

The bill also allows any person to make independent expenditures advocating the election or defeat of a candidate not to exceed $1,000.

The bill repeals the media limitations in the 1971 Act so that candidates will have greater flexibility in how they use their campaign funds.

To assure that these limitations do not become outdated, the bill contains a cost of living escalator clause.

The exemptions under the definition of expenditure for the purposes of disclosure make the limitations ineffective and most difficult to enforce. Without full disclosure, it is impossible to know how much a candidate is spending. Further, the fund raising exemption specifically allows candidates to spend up to $18,750 in additional funds in a House race.

If an expenditure limitation is to be enacted, it should be straightforward and not fraught with loopholes. Public confidence will not be helped by a low limitation that can be easily circumvented through loopholes.

The spending limits in the bill could conceivably have a salutary effect. However, there is simply not enough information available on the cost of campaigns on which to attempt to establish realistic spending limitations. Higher limits should be established until we have better data.

States and congressional districts differ greatly geographically and in economic, social communications, and other factors. Campaign conditions, requirements and costs vary greatly in different parts of the country. There is no formula which can be used to gauge what is the proper amount to spend on a campaign. Placing the same limitation on total spending for all areas is bound to be discriminatory unless the limit is set high enough to account for the varying conditions.

The spending limits in the bill have a pro-incumbent bias. Low limits like those in the bill would tend to limit a challenger's ability to compete effectively. A $90,000 or $100,000 limitation for a congressional campaign may sound generous to reformers or to incumbents who re-election does not require spending of amounts anywhere near that figure. However, for the challenger a limitation of $75,000 imposes nearly impossible problems. With today's costs there is no way a challenger can make himself known over a well-known incumbent under stringent circumstances. In 1972, incumbents won well over 95% of the time, and the 12 challengers that did beat incumbents averaged expenditures of $125,000.

Incumbents have a formidable array of weaponry available to them. They have staff allowances. Legitimate staff legislative work frequently overlaps the political function. They have the franking privilege. Legitimate use of the frank can be extremely helpful politically, and the use of postal patron mailings is commonly thought to be a powerful political device as well as a necessary and legitimate means of communicating with constituents. Incumbents also have name and face recognition because they have ready access to the media. Since most political expense is directed toward name recognition, the incumbent need not spend nearly as much as a challenger even though he can raise funds more easily.

Higher spending limits will not mean excessively high spending. While political spending is increasing at a rapid rate, political spending in the United States is still not excessively high. While total spending for all political campaigns was $400 million in 1972, this figure was still less than the combined advertising budget for Proctor and Gamble, Ford and General Motors for the same year. Four times as much is spent on advertising for drugs and cosmetics. In 1972, advertising for all U.S. companies totaled $22.5 billion. Is this a rational allocation of national priorities? Should the cost of the debate on which type of soap suds or car to buy exceed by fifty times the cost of the debate on the important political issues of our time?

Furthermore, the costs of campaigning in the United States are not significantly higher than the corresponding costs in some nations and are actually lower than in many other countries. An index of political expenditures compared to the economic development of a country found a range of from 27¢ for Australia to $21.20 for Israel. The United States, at $1.12, was clustered near India and Japan at the lower range of the index.
While the amount of expenditures in a campaign is not the only variable affecting the number of people who vote, a reduction in expenditures would lead to a reduction in advertising and campaigning which might very well further reduce citizen interest and participation. Low limitations tend to reduce opportunities for voters to learn about candidates, but even more significantly, low ceilings reduce the opportunities for voters to learn more about politics.

In setting strict limitations on the common person’s ability to get himself or herself elected to Congress, the committee’s bill would fail to do anything about the problem of the man who brings not money but other resources to the election. The celebrity, sports figure, the movie star and other famous individuals all have had their advertising done for them as a result of their occupations. They don’t need to spend money on their political campaigns. Financial restrictions imposed on their opponents simply insure an unequal contest and deny the common man a chance to serve in Congress.

Low, stringent, sweeping overall expenditure limitations may invite violations of the law because such violations may be extremely difficult to document or prove. It gets progressively harder to keep track of what a candidate or his supporters are spending on such easily manufactured items as bumper stickers or other types of printed materials. Extreme limitations would increase incentives for circumvention of the law.

The belief that the committee’s spending limits are too low is bolstered by a careful, voluminous study of the 33 Senate races in 1972 by a group of political scientists at Harvard. The study argues that the purpose of a political campaign is not just to elect the candidate, but also to inform the candidates, educate the electorate and encourage wider political participation.

Watergate and related events tend to place the issue in the context of preventing excessive spending and controlling “corruption”. The idea is that the less money spent, the less needs to be raised, and thus the purer the process. Completely neglected in this statement of the issue is the need for campaigns to serve the broader public purposes and currently proposed spending limits just wouldn’t permit this to be done.

Even though 24 of the 67 candidates would have violated a limit of 25¢ per adult, and 47 would have violated a 10¢ limit, few candidates or campaign managers felt they had adequately carried out the broad goals of education and involvement. “If campaigns are to fulfill any of the functions listed above . . . the present level of spending is much too low, if anything” the Harvard study contends. It suggests that 50¢ per adult might be a sufficient figure—a total of $77 million in Senate general election campaigns, over three times the $24 million reported in the 1972 races.

Tight spending limits also substantially favor incumbents, according to the survey. Of the 25 incumbent Senators running for reelection in 1972, only six were outspent by challengers and three of them lost. Of the 20 Senate candidates spending below 10¢ per adult, the only four to win were all incumbents who ran against challengers who spent even less than they did. The only incumbent to spend more than 25¢ per adult and lose was Caleb Boggs of Delaware who was outspent by challenger Joseph Biden. Present proposals, it continues, are “far too low to achieve any conceivable purpose other than to maintain incumbents in office.” The independent expenditure limitation in the committee bill would allow an individual to spend $1,000 on dozens, perhaps even a hundred candidates. To assure there are no abuses of this exemption, an aggregate limit of $5,000 should be set on independent expenditures.

V. OTHER CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENTS

Contributions by government contractors

Section 103 allows government contractors to set up separate, segregated funds. This eliminates the present ambiguity whereby corporations and labor unions who have government contracts may or may not be able to set up such funds for their members or employees to contribute to while those without contracts can.

Formerly, government contractors were prohibited from making and soliciting contributions, except possibly through separate, segregated funds. The committee's loopholes will now apply to government contractors as well as to individuals. Since these contributions will also be exempt from disclosure provisions, they will be difficult to monitor and will be subject to considerable abuse.

Contributions by foreign nationals

Section 101(d) prohibits contributions by foreign nationals. Since the definitions under section 591 do not apply to section 613, the meaning of contribution is not clear. If the definitions for this title are made to apply, foreign nationals will be able to use the exemptions or loopholes to circumvent the law. They will be able to give real and personal property, etc., as long as their donations under the exemptions do not exceed $500. Again, since these donations are also exempt from disclosure provisions, they will be extremely difficult to monitor and enforce.

Contributions in the name of another

Section 101(f) prohibits contributions in the name of another.

Cash contributions

Section 101(f) prohibits cash contributions in excess of $100.

Excessive honorariums

Section 101(f) limits the amount of honorariums an officer or employee of any branch of the Federal government can accept to $1,000 per appearance, speech, or article and to an aggregate of $10,000 in any calendar year. This provision is aimed particularly at those who enjoy full-time, relatively good paying government jobs, but who earn large fees for speechmaking. Some Members of Congress earn more than their salary each year by speaking to groups who will be limited as to how much they can give in campaign contributions, but not in honorarium contributions.
VI. PUBLIC FINANCING

General

Section 403 makes appropriations to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund automatic.

Section 404 limits the amount a candidate can receive from the Presidential Election Campaign Fund to $20 million in a general election.

Section 405 makes payments from the Fund payable upon initial certification of eligibility, not upon certification of each expense.

Party conventions

Section 406 of the committee bill provides for $2 million of taxpayers' funds for each major party's convention. Minor parties receive an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount the national committee of a major party is entitled to receive as the number of popular votes received by the candidate for President of the minor party in the preceding presidential election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidates for President of the major parties.

National parties may not make expenditures over and above the $2 million limit, unless the supervisory board determines that there are extraordinary or unforeseen circumstances.

Presidential primaries

Matching taxpayer financing is provided in presidential primaries. The funds for the presidential primaries are supplied by the Presidential Election Campaign Fund. In order to qualify for funds, a candidate must raise contributions of $250 or less totaling $5,000 in each of 20 States. Once he reaches the threshold, all aggregate contributions of $250 or less will be matched on a one for one basis. A candidate can receive up to $5 million in public funds.

Payments to candidates of the same political party cannot exceed 45% of the total amount available, while payments to any one candidate cannot exceed 25%. Candidates are subject to the same basic provisions as they would be under the Presidential Election Campaign Fund. The House Administration Committee and Senate Committee on Rules and Administration can veto any rules and regulations promulgated to administer the presidential primary fund.

Pros and cons of public financing

The pros and cons of public financing are well-known. I personally feel that any advantages that might possibly accrue under a system of public financing are outweighed by the potential negative effects it would have on the electoral process. In particular:

1. There is nothing inherent in public financing that will magically and instantly purify the elections process. Even with full public financing, special interest influence will not necessarily be reduced and the law and its spirit will still be broken, innocently and willfully.

2. Incumbents will be protected and challengers discouraged. A challenger has much less name recognition. In order to compensate for the many legitimate advantages of an incumbent (franking privileges, access to media, large personal staff, seniority, free office space and services), a challenger must commence campaigning early and spend considerably more. While in 1972 the typical challenger who beat an incumbent spent $125,000, almost all public financing bills will provide all candidates with only a small fraction of this amount.

3. Subsidizing campaigns from the Federal treasury will discourage citizen interest and participation, and make candidates less responsive to the demands, needs and concerns of the people. This reduction in interest, participation and responsiveness might further depress voter turnout and foster alienation and cynicism among the general public.

4. Public financing forces the taxpayer to support candidates who are in opposition to their own political views. Public financing denies the taxpayer the right to designate where his or her contribution will go. Worse, there is no personal contribution under the check-off. The check-off is a delusion, because it only allows a taxpayer to apportion some one else's money.

5. Full public financing is an infringement of freedom of speech. Public financing would deprive individuals of the long-enjoyed right of giving money to support candidates of one's choice. Any such prohibition or stringent limitation on giving is probably unconstitutional.

6. Public financing will weaken the party structure. With public financing, parties would have less reason to be responsive to their constituencies. Also, elected officials who receive their campaign funds directly from the Federal government will feel no obligation to their parties.

7. Public financing will unfairly discourage the formulation and operation of serious third or new parties. In so doing, it will dry up important sources of ideas and outlets for dissent and permanently enshrine the present two weak political parties (which in turn it further weakens).

8. Public financing is discriminatory in that it allows one individual to contribute thousands of dollars worth of time and labor, while another individual—perhaps handicapped or ill—cannot make a similar contribution in money.

9. Public financing will take control of the elections from the people and put it into the Federal bureaucracy. The people have little enough left in this country. We should not take their elections away too.

VII. MISCELLANEOUS

Preemption of State law

Sections 104 and 301 preempt State law. This is a welcome change which will insure that election laws are consistent and uniform and that candidates for Federal office do not bear the burden of complying with several different sets of laws and regulations.

Political activities by State and local employees

This bill allows State and local government employees to participate in political campaign activities. This needed change will open up the political process to greater numbers of people. These employees are still prohibited from running in partisan elections.
Taxes

Presently, candidates must pay income taxes on the funds left-over from the last campaign. The committee bill exempts candidates and political committees from this requirement.

Political parties

If this bill passes in its present form, national political party committees, including congressional and senatorial campaign committees, may be forced, for all practical purposes, to go out of business. State and local party committees will not be much better off. The committee bill limits contributions by political committees to $5,000. The definition of political committee clearly includes and encompasses national and State and local political party committees. The definition of contribution clearly includes “in-kind” goods and services.

The national committees and Democratic and Republican Senatorial and Congressional Campaign Committees currently provide invaluable services to both incumbents and challengers. They have large staffs with considerable expertise in public relations, campaign financing and campaign organization. They provide television and radio services (including recording studios) and myriad other services. All of these staff expenses and public relations services will have to be credited and prorated to individual candidates’ contribution and expenditure limitations. Both the national committees and Senate and Congressional committees would probably spend up to their $5,000 contribution limit per candidate before the election. Candidates would then be forced to provide these services on their own. These political party committees would then be unable to give any funds directly to candidates’ campaigns. The $5,000 limitation would be especially absurd in presidential races and in senatorial races in large States.

This limit becomes even more restrictive when, as is presently the case, most of the action is centered in 50 House races and 10 Senate races. Currently, much of the parties’ efforts are channeled into these races. Party involvement in these competitive races would be drastically curtailed under the committee’s bill.

While overall, in the short run, Republican party organizations will probably be hurt the most, Democratic organizations will also suffer greatly, because they concentrate such a large portion of their resources in a few key races.

This limitation also lends an even greater pro-incumbent bias to the committee’s bill. The political parties are frequently most instrumental in defeating incumbents. They are the organizations best able to channel into a particular area the large amounts of resources and funds needed to beat well-known incumbents. Yet, the Committee bill would essentially prohibit these activities and further insulate incumbents.

State and local political parties might fare little better. For example, the Democratic State Central Committee of Iowa spent over $177,000 in the 1972 election, but might be limited to about $40,000 under the committee bill. The Republican Party of Wisconsin spent over $680,000, but would be limited to around $50,000 under the committee’s limits. While it is true that these State committees could be divested of their fund raising efforts on behalf of candidates, such an action would greatly weaken these organizations. Powerful Republican suburban organizations and big city Democratic organizations would face similar problems.

A possibility would be that parties would begin spending large amounts in party primaries, thereby increasing intra-party conflict, creating considerable bitterness and further weakening the party system.

Political parties are the most broadly based groups in the political process and have a great potential for revitalizing our society. Strengthening the role of the parties in the political process may be as important a reform as changing the present system of campaign financing.

In many other democratic nations, the political parties provide a strong focus and rallying point for the consumer or public interest. In the United States, the weak political party system provides no match for the powerful special and vested interests. Yet, somewhat paradoxically, the committee bill further weakens political parties, thereby reducing the potential for harnessing and regulating the powerful special interests.

In its haste to reform our present system of campaign financing, the committee has weakened the party's control over candidates. There will be less and less reason for candidates to work together to formulate party policy and to adhere to party policy decisions. The party system may become hopelessly splintered and could even disintegrate. Given the political instability in European countries with fragmented party systems, such a change may undermine the very foundations of our political system.

National, State and local party committees should be exempted from the contribution limitations. Reformers assert that this will create a gaping loophole. To the contrary, a stronger party system is perhaps the most significant reform needed in the present political system. Further, if a $5,000 limitation is placed on how much a party organization can accept from an individual or committee, wealthy individuals will not be able to gain excessive influence. Also remember that since secretive earmarking and laundering are prohibited under the committee bill, no individual will be able to earmark more than $1,000 to any particular candidate. A political party exemption would not create a loophole and would be an invaluable addition to the Committee's bill.

If a straight-out party exemption is unacceptable, the House should consider an alternative proposal that was adopted by the Senate. Both national and State and local party committees should be able to make expenditures on behalf of a candidate totaling $10,000 in a House race and $20,000 or 2¢ per voter (whichever is greater) in both Senatorial and Presidential races. Such a provision would allow the parties to play a strong role in the electoral process, while at the same time assuring that limitations are placed on their activities.

AMENDMENTS

Campaign finance reform directly affects the lives and livelihood of every member of this body. Each member should have the opportunity to make his contribution to this piece of legislation. I am already aware of many amendments that may be offered. Other members I have not spoken with will undoubtedly have their own amendments. I will offer a number of major amendments to improve the bill, including amendments to establish an independent Federal Elections Commission, delete the loopholes, increase the spending limits and allow the parties a greater role in candidates’ campaigns. I may also offer about ten amendments based on the recommendations of the Senate Watergate Committee. While it is conceivable that an “amateur night” might ensue if all of these amendments are offered, I have sufficient confidence in the Members of this body to believe that open, fully democratic proceedings are the way to obtain the best bill possible.

SUMMARY

After a late start, the Committee has worked diligently to produce an elections bill. Despite its deficiencies, it should be promptly brought to the floor for the necessary repairs. After amendment, it should be passed. The American public has waited long enough for a positive, straightforward response to Watergate. We should not pass just any bill, but one that will, as much as possible, be free of loopholes and one that will restore public confidence in the integrity of the electoral process. The sooner we pass this bill, get it into and out of conference and on to the President’s desk for signing, the better off everyone will be.

BILL FRENZEL.
I was disappointed that the committee did not see fit to adopt amendments to deal with several problem areas of the bill. I offered three amendments which I felt would have improved the bill, and I still believe there is a need for action in these areas. A brief explanation of the problem and proposed solution follows:

1. POOLED CONTRIBUTIONS

It is my considered opinion that the use of political action committees as conduits for political contributions of particular special interest groups is one of the great evils of American politics today. Lobbying groups which also handle contributions have placed themselves in a position where they cannot serve their proper function, which is to educate and assist their representatives, without the suggestion of impropriety arising from past or potential financial contributions to the representative's campaign.

I offered an amendment which would have prohibited the pooling of contributions by special interest groups, requiring that all contributions to a candidate or party committee be identified as to the original donor, and that the donor designate the candidate or party committee which is to receive his contribution. This approach avoids the possible Constitutional challenge which might accompany an effort to prohibit outright contributions from other than individuals.

2. ENDORSEMENTS OF BANK LOANS

Under the existing law, loans are considered contributions to political candidates or committees. There is an exception for loans made by banks.

I proposed to amend the law to provide that, for the purposes of defining a political contribution only, endorsers of bank loans to political candidates are to be considered lenders in the amount of the unpaid balance of the loan. This balance would be divided equally among the endorsers if there are more than one.

This will, of course, bring such endorsements within the contributions limitations proposed in the bill. There will be no change in existing reporting requirements, as the Clerk now requires that all bank loans and their endorsers be reported on a single form, and their repayment on a different form.

My purpose is to insure that no one is able to use endorsements of bank loans as a means of circumventing the contributions limitation.

3. VOLUNTARY LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

There are many who contend that statutory limitations on contributions and expenditures for political campaigns are unconstitutional.
I propose to provide that any agreement between all the candidates for any single federal office to abide by the spending and contributions limitations set forth in this legislation would be valid and binding on the parties to the agreement, even if the courts ruled a portion of the law with reference thereto unconstitutional.

Such agreements would be filed with the appropriate supervisory officer on forms to be approved or supplied by him. There would be no criminal penalties for violation of such an agreement, with the parties to each agreement being left to existing civil remedies for enforcement.

This would be a reasonable solution to what could become a major problem.

HOUSE FLOOR DEBATES
ON H.R. 16090
WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 7, 1974

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Ar-lington, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. R. 1129. An act to continue until the close of June 30, 1975, the suspension of duties on certain forms of copper.

We pray especially for our President, our Speaker, and every Member of Congress. Make them equal to their high tasks, just in the exercise of power, generous in judgment, and always loyal to the royal within themselves.

In the spirit of Christ we pray. Amen.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Marks, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 9440. An act to provide for access to all duly licensed clinical psychologists and optometrists without prior referral in the Federal employee health benefits program.
H.R. 1129. An act to amend the Anadromous Fish Conservation Act in order to extend the authorization for appropriations to carry out such act, and for other purposes; and

(MR. VANIK addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

PERSONAL STATEMENT

(MR. VANIK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

MR. HANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to announce that my vote in favor of the Giambo amendments to reduce funding for the Safeguard ABM system was incorrectly recorded.

I have consistently supported funding for the Safeguard system. I have every intention of continuing to do so.

I believe that continuation of this program is essential to our Nation's efforts to develop a more advanced system such as site defense. The practical experience gained in the operation of Safeguard would prove invaluable in the development of site defense.

To support the emasculation of Safeguard now, after nearly 20 years of ABM research and $4.9 billion expended would seem to me to be the height of fiscal folly.

CONGRESSMEN'S STATEMENTS ON WATERGATE INAPPROPRIATE

(MR. RUTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

MR. RUTH. Mr. Speaker, there has been some interest in my response to the many questions we have all received concerning the impeachment inquiry. For the record I insert my response at this point.

STATEMENT OF EARL B. RUTH—AUGUST 6, 1974

During the entire Watergate investigation, my feeling has been that statements by Congressmen were not inappropriate. Primarily, I have felt that as one sitting on the impeachment jury an open mind is a prerequisite for fairness.

Those who have made premature statements have convinced me that my position is correct. Many of their statements have been influenced by either what they hoped to be or what they suggested is fact.

As evidence unfolds, I feel that if and when a Representative is called upon to cast a vote the issue will be more clear-cut, which in fairness is the purpose of the investigation. I realize that the current flurry of comment is due to the President's latest statement and it is very tempting to try interpreting these recent developments. However, with things happening so fast, just as yesterday's statement can have no relevance to events of today, so today's statement should be outmoded tomorrow.

SECTION 8—COORDINATION OF PROCUREMENT REFORM

The conference substitute incorporates substantially identical language found in the Senate bill (subsection 7(b)) and the House amendment (section 6) providing for coordination of the OFPP with other agencies to establish a uniform approach to procurement policies, personnel, and processes (section 5). The conference substitute also provides for coordination of the OFPP with other agencies, including the secretaries of the military departments, to establish uniform policies, regulations, and procedures for the effective and efficient administration of the OFPP (section 5).

Subsection 6(c)
The conference substitute adopts a combination of language in the Senate bill (subsection 6(c)) and the House amendment (subsection 6(c)) regarding the OFPP's authority to designate other agencies, including the Federal Property Management Board, to perform duties and functions assigned to the OFPP by the President. The conference substitute also provides for the conferee's authority to designate other agencies to perform duties and functions assigned to the OFPP by the President.
PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 16090, FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. Young) is recognized for 1 hour.

(Mr. YOUNG of Texas asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. Martin), for the purposes of debate only, pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 1292 provides for a modified open rule with 2 hours of general debate on H.R. 16090, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974.

House Resolution 1292 provides that all points of order against title IV of the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 4, rule XXXI—prohibiting appropriation in a legislative measure—are waived.

House Resolution 1292 also provides no amendment, including any amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill, shall be in order except the following:

First, germane amendments to subsection 101(a) proposing to change the money amounts regarding contribution and expenditure limits contained in that subsection, providing that the amendments have been printed in the Congressional Record at least 1 calendar day before being offered; and second, the text of the amendment to be offered in the composition of the Board of Supervisory Officers and also deleting the authority of congressional committees to review campaign regulations. In title IV: First, germane amendments which have been printed in the Congressional Record at least 1 calendar day before they are offered, except that sections 401, 402, 407, 409, and 410—pertaining to public financing for Presidential campaigns—shall not be subject to amendment; and second, the text of the amendment printed in the Congressional Record of August 2, 1974, relating to a change in the composition of the Board of Supervisory Officers and also deleting the authority of congressional committees to review campaign regulations.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of House Resolution 1292 in order that we may discuss, debate, and pass H.R. 16090.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 4 minutes.

(Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 1292, as the gentleman from Texas (Mr. Young) has explained, provides for 2 hours of debate on this very important piece of legislation.

Unfortunately, however, this resolution provides practically for a closed rule on the amendment that I shall offer this body this afternoon. The Members can carefully go through the rule and the bill itself and they will find that really only three amendments are in order.

First, in making the amount of money which a candidate may expend or the amount of money which may be contributed to a candidate's campaign.

Second, an amendment may be offered in substitution of the amendment of the Board of Supervisory Officers, which amendment will be offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. Frenzen).

And then the third amendment will be in order in regard to endorsers of loans from banks to political campaigns. This is another loophole in this present bill.

Those in essence are the only 3 amendments to be allowed to the bill itself.

Mr. Speaker, without going into all of the details of the bill, I would like to point out some of the loopholes that we are confronted with in this piece of legislation. The American people are demanding that Congress enact tough legislation to tighten the laws in regard to campaign receipts and campaign expenditures in the conduct of campaigns. Those that I have pointed out do not meet the criteria that the American people are demanding today.

Let me point out further some of the loopholes in this legislation. First, we have the so-called slatecard expenditures which provides that a candidate or an organization may expend any amount that it wishes in regard to candidates in a situation where there are three or more candidates included in the advertising without being reported or counted in the total expenditures of that candidate from his receipts.

This is restricted somewhat, but newspaper ads can be taken out by labor unions, manufacturers, the chamber of commerce, or other groups if three or more candidates are advertised through this means. This is a wide loophole which disregards the total contributions as set forth in this law.

Mass mailings may be made by these organizations. Sample ballots may be distributed, and, as I said, newspaper ads may be placed.

Then we have another loophole in this bill which allows a $500 limit of personal property, so-called. This would allow fat cats or friendly people to stage receptions, cocktail parties, in their homes for the purpose of promoting the candidacy of a particular Member running for Federal office. This also is not included in the total expenditures reports.

Rides on private jets or airplanes or donated travel, such as hauling a candidate around his district in an automobile, and so forth, is not reported. This is another loophole.

A fourth loophole concerns vendors, in regard to the sale of food or beverages at reduced prices for receptions or diners to people friendly to a particular candidate.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, there are exemptions also for organizations in communications to their members where these organizations are not organized primarily for the purpose of influencing political elections.

Mr. Speaker, again I point out there are far too many loopholes in this legislation and there is no chance, and I repeat, no chance at all, to offer amendments to change these provisions. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we propose, on the title of the bill, to make an attempt— and I hope it will be successful—to vote down the previous question, and I urge the Members to vote "no" on the previous question. I intend then to offer a resolution which provides for an open rule, not excluding that the amendments to be offered be published in the Congressional Record 1 calendar day previous. Also, that the bill shall be read by title rather than by section. I urge the Members to vote "yes" on the previous question.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS).

Mr. HAYS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I was a little surprised to see the gentleman from Nebraska riding in here on a white horse and see the gentleman from Nebraska mounted in my time here of being such a champion in carrying out election reforms.

I just want to take a minute or two to clear the air a little bit about the loopholes the gentleman talks about. We do provide in the bill—and I think it is a sensible provision—that if some woman gives a coffee party in her home and invites 30 or 40 of her neighbors in that she does not have to report to the Federal Elections Commission, which is set up in this bill, that she made a contribution to a candidate, and the candidate, who may not know about it and failed to report it, could be subject to legal sanctions if he did not report it. If that is a great big loophole, then I will argue this with you all afternoon. There is a limit on it.

We have a couple of committee amendments that were adopted in the committee this morning, and which will be offered to further tighten it up. The gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. Fausz) was concerned about them, and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Anderson) had confirmed that these amendments we will offer will make it workable. It was not the intention of the committee to create great big loopholes. It was the intention of the committee not to have anyone who did not want to engage in a little neighborhood politics subject to indictment, fine, and imprisonment, because they did not know if they spent $20 for cookies and cake they had sold to make a report to the Federal Elections Commission.

What we tried to do is put a tight limit with some sensible—and I emphasize the word sensible—exemptions.

Mr. Speaker, the travel amendment? We are saying—and I am paraphrasing some language—we further tightened that up with a committee amendment that the gentleman from Ohio voluntarily, on his own, comes into the gentleman's district to help him, then his expenses which he pays for up to $500 shall not be considered a contribution. That is all.

We are saying, furthermore, that the big loopholes the gentleman is talking about, that if one gives a reception on his own as a fund raiser and he has a friend who has a motel, or any other place he has got a list of names and people to a reception in, and he sells the person the food and beverage at wholesale price, that the difference between the wholesale price and the retail price is not considered a contribution. We are saying, too, that if these amendments were put in, it would make a report to the Federal Elections Commission.

I support the motion and I support the rule on H.R. 16090.

This is a very complex bill which the House Administration Committee has spent many long hours writing and rewriting. In size alone, H. Numbers 70 pages, more than double the length of the committee print we started with last March.

I think that all of us on the committee learned last bit during the hearing and markup process. There is a tendency to think that we are all experts on political campaigns and on election law. And that may be true in our own districts. But this bill is bigger than the Seventeenth Congressional District of Tennessee. It is being proposed as a new law to govern the conduct of all candidates for Federal office anywhere in the country.

We have produced a good bill. It took a long time to get it right. It was not easy. It is not a perfect bill; there are still points of controversy. But under this rule, amendments will be offered to answer every doubt a Member may have about this bill.

Public financing of elections is one of the controversial points. H.R. 16090 provides for a complete package of public financing for the 1976 Presidential election. I favor that, but I have no intention to preclude others from being involved in the campaigns of any candidate for Federal office anywhere in the country.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Anderson).

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, it is certainly not an overstatement to say that this bill is a bill for which the country has been waiting, and one in which every one of the 435 Members of this body is very, very much interested. The only question before the House is the kind of rule under which we are to debate this bill.

I am asking the Members to vote down the previous question. I want a rule. I want a rule, but I suggest that it is a take-over on the legislative process and an insult to every one of the 435 Members of this House to tell us that we should be limited by the kind of rule that is proposed in this case.

let the sunshine in if they support this closed rule. If we adopted the kind of modified closed rule that is being sought, and there are at least 10 areas of 10 areas, we were called to report as a member of the Committee on Rules in which perfectly legitimate amendments are sought to be offered on the floor of this House, and to suggest that in matters as fundamentally as important as the electoral process, how we solicit campaign funds, how we are elected to office, is not of equal interest to every Member of this chamber, I appreciate the gentleman’s expertise, I appreciate the 21 markups sessions that it took to produce a bill and I am glad he is here today.

Some of the provisions, perhaps most of them, I will support, gladly support, but I would suggest that to deny us who are interested in other areas of the bill what is our legitimate right to write a piece of legislation of this interest and of this import on the floor is to deny us the right we ought to have as Members of this body.

Mr. Speaker, the letters follow:

COMMON CAUSE

Dear Representative Anderson: We deplore the failure of the House Rules Committee to fully open up the contribution and spending limits of HR 16090 to germane amendments in an inappropriate action. Legislation of the dimensions of HR 16090 needs to receive full consideration on the floor of the House. The failure to project major areas of legitimate controversy from being considered by all members of the House of Representatives.

The House, in considering the rule on HR 16090 (H. Res. 1292), should vote to defeat the previous question and should adopt an open rule making all germane amendments in an appropriate action. Legislation of the dimensions of HR 16090 needs to receive full consideration on the floor of the House. The failure to project major areas of legitimate controversy from being considered by all members of the House of Representatives.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

HA 7797

Mr. DENNIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. DENNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend my congratulations to the gentleman from Illinois for what he said, and I associate myself with his remarks.

I would like to say that as long as this Congress tries to start election reform by adopting a gag rule, it cannot expect to be any better thought of by the public than it unfortunately is.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct. There is the utmost irony in a situation where we find that we are legislating reform under the kind of rule that it proposed legislation under.

Vote down the previous question; let the gentleman from Nebraska offer an open rule so that we can work our will on this vital piece of legislation and get on with this kind of reform that the country is waiting for.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

(Mr. Young of Florida asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the previous question on House Resolution 1292, the rule for consideration of H.R. 16090, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974.

H.R. 16090 is one of the most important legislative items on our calendar this year; it provides for long overdue reforms in Federal election laws. The American people have been calling for these reforms ever since the revelations of widespread abuses by many candidates and campaign organizations of both parties during the 1972 elections. It is unfortunate that this bill has been subjected to a substantial delay in getting a bill before the House, and that we must consider it at a time of domestic upheaval which diverts our energies and attention.

I am a long time supporter of campaign reform, both in the Florida State Senate and here in the House. I agree with millions of Americans that there are glaring defects in existing Federal law, and I have introduced my own campaign reform bill, H.R. 11735, to correct these defects. My bill is much tougher in many respects than H.R. 16090, and I had therefore looked forward to offering amendments to the committee bill to make it tougher.

However, the Rules Committee has unfortunately decided that H.R. 16090 will be considered under what is essentially a "gag rule." Whole crucial sections of the bill will, under House Resolution 1292, be totally exempt from amendment. We will not be able to toughen up the provisions of H.R. 16090, nor will we be able to close some very glaring loopholes in the bill.

As I noted previously, campaign reform is one of the most pressing issues of our time. I am reluctant to vote against the rule for consideration of such an important bill, because I feel that...
H.R. 16090 should be debated and passed, with certain amendments. But the rule which we have before us today is totally unsatisfactory for consideration of this measure because it does not allow the House to work its will in the open and responsive manner, Mr. Speaker. I am going to join other Members in voting against the previous question on House Resolution 1292 so that we may bring H.R. 16090 to the floor under a completely open rule.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. CLEVELAND).

(Mr. CLEVELAND asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on House Administration which produced this bill, I rise in opposition to its consideration under what amounts to a closed rule. It would be an effort to gain space for the House to act on the critical issue of political campaign reforms while denying Members meaningful opportunity to improve it by amendment.

The record will show that this legislation was finally reported, more than 2 years after the Watergate break-in, by a committee dominated—like the rest of the House—by the majority party. Many amendments offered in committee were rejected by party-line vote. Some amendments such as the Brademas proposal to use check-off funds for matching of small contributions to candidates in presidential primaries were adopted with bipartisan support, including my own. Yet the bill with all its deficiencies is essentially a Democratic product.

It is significant to me that many of the amendments barred from consideration by this rule deal with special-interest contributions, the problem of pooling of funds so as to prevent identification of original donors, and in-kind contributions.

The afflity of organized labor for the majority party makes all too evident the basis for resistance to this type of reform. Furthermore, the tactics of majority party efforts to tighten up this legislation. Because the majority does operate from a privileged sanctuary, the media and election reform advocates will probably remain respectfully and benignly silent.

The spectacle of a sharply limited rule is all the more abhorrent in view of the impeachment proceedings now in process of being accelerated. Granted, the fixing of relative responsibility for Watergate is the principal priority response to Watergate. But a close second is election reform. To do only half the job now would be manifestly a return to business as usual, and I will have no part in it.

Incidentally, a third priority is further progress in congressional reform, from which this rule represents a giant step backward. It would be absolutely absurd to abandon our progress toward a more open and responsive Congress in enacting a legislative response to the closed-door horrors of Watergate. I, for one, tend to view this as being of a piece with the tactics of the Democratic Caucus in bottling up the latest congressional reform proposal.

One might argue that the debate would last longer, that the bill might be extensively altered. That is no excuse for preventing the House from working its will. I reject the suggestion that Members cannot act constructively and responsibly. Indeed, we have an obligation to assure that they are confronted with the opportunity and the responsibility to vote on these pending amendments up or down, on the record.

I insist that the bill take the time. The body has recently scheduled an entire 2 weeks of debate on impeachment. It now appears that 1 week will suffice. There is no way the House could spend its time more in the public interest than to take an entire week, if need be, to do the job that must be done on this bill.

Mr. CRONIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CRONIN).

(Mr. CRONIN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CRONIN. Mr. Speaker, Congress has spent the past year and a half attempting to enact a meaningful campaign reform bill to tighten up this legislation. Because I foresaw the opportunity to transform all of our efforts into reality.

Although I do not believe the bill as reported is strong enough to prevent campaign financing abuses, it is a good base from which to initiate an effective reform. Through the adoption on the floor of many strengthening amendments—several of which I am sponsoring—I believe that the House could pass a meaningful reform bill which could be further strengthened in a House-Senate conference.

Now, the procedural tactic of a modified closed rule, we are prohibited from even offering these amendments which I feel are necessary if we are to claim, with any integrity, that we have enacted a reform measure. If this rule is adopted, many of the major areas of controversy of campaign financing will never be considered by the 93d Congress.

Instead of ignoring these issues, I feel it is the responsibility of every Member of Congress to take a public stand on each of them, so that their constituents will know exactly how their Congressman has voted on legislation to change the law which governs his reelection efforts. I believe the full House should have the opportunity to consider each of these amendments and to determine its merit.

Although I am certain my vote on the previous question to this rule could be misconstrued by some of my constituents as "antireform," I am equally confident that my constituents will not be deceived by attempts to limit true campaign reform. Openness is a basic ingredient if any democratic system is to work; openness is what reform is all about. If we are truly concerned about reform with this bill on campaign financing and campaign practices, then it is imperative that we have an open rule. Therefore, I will vote no on the previous question, and I urge my colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS), the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I would yield to the gentleman from Illinois, who refused to yield to me, but that is beside the point.

I just want to make a few observations. The history of campaign reform with this bill on campaign financing abuses, it is a good base from which to initiate an effective reform. Through the adoption on the floor of many strengthening amendments—several of which I am sponsoring—I believe that the House could pass a meaningful reform bill which could be further strengthened in a House-Senate conference.

Now, the procedural tactic of a modified closed rule, we are prohibited from even offering these amendments which I feel are necessary if we are to claim, with any integrity, that we have enacted a reform measure. If we are truly concerned about reform with this bill on campaign financing and campaign practices, then it is imperative that we have an open rule. Therefore, I will vote no on the previous question, and I urge my colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, during the past 2 years, the American public has been forced to witness the depressing spectacle of massive violations of our campaign laws under a coverup atmosphere. Do we now dare to subject the American people to the irony or perhaps the outrage of considering the campaign finance reform bill under a closed rule?

The confidence of the American people in their Government is too low for us to embark on such a risky undertaking. With public cynicism so rampant, a campaign reform bill that is considered under a closed rule will be short on credibility.

The rationale for the closed rule is that the House cannot be trusted to deal with one of the most important issues it will consider all year. If our own leadership does not have confidence in us, then how can we expect the American people to have any confidence in us?

I think we can be trusted to handle the people's business. I think that is what we were elected for. If the public is to regain confidence in the Congress, then we have to show confidence in ourselves. I think the best way to display that confidence is for all Members to commit themselves to the principal that open proceedings are the way to obtain the best bill possible.

The closed rule will both stifle debate and discussion and drastically limit the amendments that can be offered. Only about half a dozen amendments will be in order. Proponents claim that, under
The House will take weeks if it were not tragic. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Armstrong), who has worked long and hard on this issue, in which there has been a major public interest, has underscored so vividly the reasons of principle and conscience why this rule must be defeated. He has pointed out, and I think we all know, the moral implications of bringing this bill to the House floor for consideration under an antireform rule.

The very idea of bringing an election reform bill to the floor of the Congress of the United States under a closed rule is absurd, and it would be laughable if it were not tragic.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word about some needed amendments which I believe we should not make to defeat the rule, but to adopt it.

Mr. Speaker, this bill as it is now written gives to candidates for public office a veto power over the rights of publication and speech of other persons. The very idea of bringing an election reform bill to the floor of the Congress of the United States under a closed rule is absurd, and it would be laughable if it were not tragic.

The public is not going to believe that the United States under a closed rule reform legislation written by the Congress of the United States.

What a dreadful irony it will be to the American people to see their government under a closed rule. It is an electoral process under a procedure which violates the first amendment amendments that may be frivolous and, and that kind of thing. In my judgment, these are far more in need of legislative attention than other aspects of the bill that comes before us.

Let me say to the Members of the House that worthwhile amendments will be proposed; let them be considered and vote them up or down on their merits. I urge my colleagues to vote against the previous questions so that the Members of this body can exercise their prerogatives and have free and open debate on the bill and its amendments.

The speaker, Mr. Thompson of New Jersey, has indicated a willingness not of the Constitution. nature that would some of us be more equal than the rest? We used an open rule in 1971, and we all survived. Mr. Speaker, the case for an open rule is overwhelming.

We are not going to bring sunshine into the electoral process by considering the campaign reform bill in the dark.

We cannot expect the public to have confidence in the process when we doubt their willingness to allow Members to work their will freely on one of the most important issues of the year—an issue on which each of us has expressed our concern. What a dreadful irony it will be to handle a bill designed to open up the political processes under a procedure that is not open.

I urge Members to vote down the previous question so that we can consider the open rule.

Mr. Thompson of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, with due respect to the feelings of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. Frenzel), who has worked long and hard on this issue, in which there has been a major public interest and will be open.

Further, our distinguished committee chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hays), has indicated a willingness not to object to amendments which have not been printed in the Record if they are germane. What could be more open than that?

It has not been my habit to vote for closed rules, but I really honestly do not consider this to be closed since the very vital elements of it are open.

Mr. Speaker, only this morning in committee that were adopted and agreed to by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. Frenzel) and by other members, including myself, five committee amendments which go a long, long way toward satisfying the desires of those who really want meaningful election reform. Certainly the American people want it and demand it, and they are going to get it. We are going to get a very splendid piece of legislation as a result of this process.
I would say to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle that we are in a position today where the House can continue in the path which the Committee on the Judiciary followed. Certainly, it is a tough vote to vote down the previous question and provide an open rule when the head of the Democratic Campaign Committee wants a modified closed rule. But your position is not nearly as tough as the position that many of us have been in and had to wrestle with. There is only one fair way to approach this issue. That is to vote with the president on and open up this rule and give us a real chance at reform. It is something that we want; it is something that this country needs. This country will not tolerate a double standard of conduct; one for the impeachment of the President, the other for the Democratic Party and the Congress. It is time in the House for fairness, not partisan action. The vote will tell the story more than any words.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on House Administration, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS), a question. The gentleman has stated that he would not object to amendments being offered on the floor regardless of whether they have been published in the Congressional Record 1 calendar day previous to today.

I would ask the gentleman from Ohio, does the gentleman state in his statement by the Committee that the entire bill be open to amendment, and that the gentleman does not object to amendments to other sections?

Mr. HAYS. Of course not. I said anything that the rule does make in order.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I rise in objection to the rule, adopted House Resolution 1332, a "modified closed" rule. In my opinion, the full rule permits only a few, specific portions of the bill.

Mr. Young of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Dent).

Mr. DENT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I take this moment just to say that I endorse the rule and the previous question on it, because I started this little bill on its way with the hearings in our subcommittee over a long period of time. Most of the closed parts of the bill are matters that in my honest opinion have caused little of them are kinds of regulations and criteria that have to be put into legislation for guidelines.

The real heart of the legislation that all of us are interested in is the matter of solicitation of funds, the spending of funds, limitations or no limitations. I am going to support the rule. But I say to the House that ever since I started working on this bill I have put it up to the full committee. Mr. Hays took all of the hard work and all of the blame and abuse on the legislation because some persons do not believe one has to have time to work, and he had to have time. The Members may think this is an argument on a rule. Can they imagine what we have gone through for over 2 years in the committee?

I intend to offer two amendments. I will offer one myself and the other will be offered by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Marlin) dealing with the limits of spending, dealing with the total amounts, dealing with how much one can contribute and how much one can accept. That is what the people call reform. That is what the people are interested in.

When we get to the floor and action on the bill, I hope some of us will stay around and let me give them the facts after 2 years of intense work on this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I rise in objection to the distinguished gentleman from Arizona (Mr. Ruszo).

Mr. RUSZOE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I rise in objection to the rule, adopted House Resolution 1332, a "modified closed" rule. In my opinion, the full rule permits only a few, specific portions of the bill.

On such a vital issue, where real reform is essential, it is unconscionable that the majority party would impose a gag rule.

As set forth in the statement by the Republican Policy Committee, H.R. 16090 contains many areas of serious concern. For that reason the House should have every opportunity to work its will and consider not just the provisions adopted by the Committee on House Administration but the substantive amendments proposed by other Members of the House.

I think it is strange, Mr. Speaker, of those sections which are eligible for amendment under this rule the section which have to be amended in order to shut off the "soft money" type of contribution is not one. In other words there are no amendments which can be made to the bill which would stop that kind of contribution which certainly is unconscionable, if not illegal. I do not know why it would be that any campaign reform bill worthy of the name would not shut off the largest hemorrhage that we have in the whole country.

It has been said that this bill does not deal with all of the things which caused Watergate. That is undoubtedly true, but I think it is even more serious that it does not even deal with the type of opening in the artery of the political system, which causes the hemorrhage which the "soft money" causes.

I do not believe that the gentleman from Ohio really is getting his hats mixed up, and that is he is wearing his hat as the chairman of the Democratic Campaign Committee with much more pride as he wears the hat of the chairman of the House Administration Committee. I just think it is at least suspect that this "soft money" phase of the bill is not covered adequately, as it deals with both parties.

Mr. Young of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished ma-

August 7, 1974
Mr. Speaker, the rule is openly fair. We cannot delay action. I urge all my colleagues to vote "aye" on the previous question.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. PRITCHARD).

(Mr. PRITCHARD asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. Speaker, the very credibility of this Congress reform spirit depends upon adoption of an open rule for this Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments bill so that a number of crucial perfecting amendments can be considered. Without these amendments, this Congress, under the facade of reform, will be passing laws that in reality are incentives and loopholes to limit the amount of campaign spending and thereby to begin to counter the incumbency advantage. The solution may be a lower spending limit for the incumbent. I urge adoption of the Anderson-Udall campaign reform throughout my vantage. The solution may be a lower spending limit for the incumbent.

Numerous crucial amendments have been written into this fund raising campaign reform bill. But many of these cannot even be considered because of this modified closed rule that we have been given by the Rules Committee. How can we make the worst possible legislation for Federal election campaign reform if we are unwilling to subject the entire bill to proper scrutiny? Does this Congress fear consideration of all these amendments? Is this true reform?

This bill in its present form is not the true campaign reform legislation we so urgently need and I cannot accept it until certain basic and crucial revisions are affected.

Halfway measures designed to appease the electorate without satisfying the hunger for campaign reform are little better than no pretense at reform.

This bill fails to provide for any Federal funding in congressional elections, but requires comprehensive public financing of Presidential election campaigns. I urge adoption of the Anderson-Udall amendments to eliminate this double standard and extend clean election standards to Presidential races. The Anderson-Udall campaign financing legislation provides for limited public funds to match small private contributions to congressional campaigns. I urge adoption of the Prentice-Fascell amendment to create an independent body to enforce compliance with these clean election laws and require full congressional accountability.

This bill before us, H.R. 16090, limits campaign expenditures to $75,000. It sounds good to the lay ear. But surely we are all aware that such an across-the-board spending limitation gives a nearly insurmountable advantage to the incumbent.

As incumbents with the franking privilege, high profiles in our district media, and full time to devote to being Congressmen, we naturally have a tremendous advantage over any challenger. I have heard some of my colleagues estimate that to be one of as much as $80,000.

A challenger limited to spending $75,000 must attempt to overcome a Congressman also spending in addition to his huge incumbency benefits. Is this limitation equitable when we know that a challenger must spend so much more than the incumbent just to be in the race?

Common Cause prefers a $90,000 spending limitation: $75,000 seems quite low for major congressional campaigns. The point is that with the present format of the legislation, any lowering of the limitation level would only exacerbate the disadvantage of the nonincumbent. Clearly we need to develop a mechanism to create greater equality in campaigns by placing a greater challenge to the incumbent to begin to counter the incumbency advantage. The solution may be a lower spending limitation for the incumbent. I urge adoption of the Anderson-Udall electoral campaign reform throughout my vantage. The solution may be a lower spending limit for the incumbent, which will become law next year with Congress heavily controlled by the Democratic majority. Such a bias to the advantage of the incumbent will undermine the objective to develop a mechanism to create greater equality in campaigns by placing a greater challenge to the incumbent to begin to counter the incumbency advantage. The solution may be a lower spending limit for the incumbent. I urge adoption of the Anderson-Udall electoral campaign reform throughout my vantage. The solution may be a lower spending limit for the incumbent.
weakenesses in the bill that can only be corrected by amendment.

Unfortunately, we will not be allowed to offer those amendments on the House floor. The chair, in consultation with the Administration Committee, saw to that when he went before the Rules Committee. The result is a rule allowing only the five amendments he approved. Others will not be allowed because, by his own admission before the committee, they would not benefit Democrats.

In my opinion, this is an irresponsible answer to the Nation's plea for open election processes. The bill that should accomplish that goal has become itself a closed partisan issue. As it now stands, there can be no amendment to restrict the "in-kind" contributions Democrats enjoy from big labor. Instead, the limitation has actually been increased from $100 provided in present law to $500 per individual. Nor can any amendment even be considered to restrict contributions by organizations other than big labor or big business, which deny the individual's right to decide which candidates receive his contribution.

According to the present bill, incumbents still have too great an advantage over those seeking to overturn them. In congressional races, I also question whether or not the American people want to finance Presidential nominating conventions of political parties with their tax dollars.

We need responsible nonpartisan campaign reform to guarantee fair competition in our election processes, not a package that simply carries the title of "reform" but in fact is designed to ensure that either they lose big labor or big business, which deny the individual's right to decide which candidate receives his contribution.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. CONABLE).

(Mr. CONABLE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Speaker, the majority leader apparently feels that Republican Members are throwing obstacles in the way of election reform. Nothing could be further from the truth. Our situation typifies the dilemma of the minority. For too long we have been working and calling upon the majority for progress in Federal campaign legislation. Having committed ourselves in many ways to the concept of reform, we are now presented with a reform package, credible in appearance, but inclusive of some loopholes. What do we do to "throw obstacles in the way of reform"? We ask for the right of amendment, to protect our party procedures and our view of what is appropriate. To criticize the inappropriateness of certain provisions, for we have no further remedy; and so we must take our chances that the public will interpret a vote against a restrictive rule, as indicating the majority's interest in any issue within the control of the majority. I regret that the majority in this case has not dealt with this vital subject on a level above traditional politics.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. MAYNE).

(Mr. MAYNE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the attempt by moving the previous question to prevent debate and amendment of House Resolution 1292, the resolution providing for consideration of H.R. 16390, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974. The resolution provides for a closed rule allowing only amendments of five special types to be considered. The Members of the House, as well as the Nation, have long awaited this legislation, one of the most important bills to come before the House in this Congress. It is completely inappropriate to hold that before considering this House through a closed rule so that it can not even consider the several very important amendments that would be offered to the bill. In order to strengthen its provisions, improve its enforceability and feasibility, fill the loopholes, and correct the several defects evident in the bill as reported.

H.R. 16390 as reported by the House Administration Committee constitutes a substantial improvement over the present law regarding campaign financing and disclosure, and I commend the chairman and members of the Administration Committee for their work and efforts in preparing it and bringing it before the House. However, it is sadly deficient in several major instances.

The Senate Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities—the Watergate Committee—in its recent report stated that an independent Federal Election Commission is the single most important change needed in existing law. Early in May, 1973, I cosponsored an introduction with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Anderson) of H.R. 7901, the Commission Act, which would have established such a Commission. The House Republican task force on election reform under the able chairmanship of our colleague from Minnesota (Mr. Frenzen) in July, 1973, publicly recommended enactment of such a reform.

I am gratified that the Chamber of Commerce, the White House, and such public-interest groups as Common Cause and Congress Watch have joined in urging enactment of this absolutely essential reform. I share their disappointment that the House Administration Committee bill instead provides for an inadequate, Congress-dominated, nonindependent mechanism to administer this act. I strongly urge my colleagues to vote against the motion for the previous question so that the Frenzen amendment establishing a more independent administration and enforcement agency may be given the consideration it deserves. I am a cosponsor of the Frenzen amendment and shall give it my strong support.

The Anderson-Udall Clean Elections Act introduced in May of last year with my full support also proposed public financing through limited matching of private contributions for congressional candidates. I cannot understand the present bill's failure to incorporate similar provisions as a protection against candidates being tempted to rely on "fat-cats" and special interest groups for campaign financing in the future. I am an early co-patron of the amendment the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Anderson), which would establish a system of matching grants for congressional candidates and matching payments for private contributions of $50 or less, and I am pleased that public interest groups including the League of Women Voters, the Center for Public Financing, Common Cause and Congress Watch all agree that adoption of this amendment is essential if we are to obtain true campaign financing reform.

The bill contains still other deficiencies. I express it concern that the floor amendments, amendments which will not be allowed unless the proposed closed rule is amended into an open rule. For example, the bill as reported exempts certain gifts and contributions from reporting and disclosure, such as up to $500 of unreimbursed travel expenses. Furthermore, the bill does not require the disclosure of a bank loan whose endorsing party repays after an election be counted as part of his total allowable contribution. The bill's limitations on special interest group contributions to campaigns are woefully inadequate. I intend to support amendments to correct these deficiencies if the closed rule is amended to permit such amendments to be offered—but we must first defeat any attempt to move the previous question and thereby prevent amendment of the rule.

Ladies and gentlemen of the House, I respectfully urge all to join in defeating this effort to gag the House and prevent it from working its will, and respectfully urge all to join in defeating this effort to gag the House and prevent it from working its will, and to amend the rule so that we may adopt these desperately needed amendments to campaign reform legislation of which this House can truly be proud. It is indeed time for this House to agree to effective campaign reform as a straightforward response to the so-called Watergate abuses and a step toward restoring public confidence in Government and especially in this Congress.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. HURNUT).

(Mr. HURNUT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HURNUT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, as an original cosponsor of the Anderson-Udall bill, on Monday, August 5 I submitted a statement before the House Rules Committee asking them to adopt an open rule on H.R. 16090 that would permit the offering of amendments during debate on the House floor. I am deeply interested in to require complete financial disclosure of everyone in public life above the $32,000 level of income, which might
Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the previous question.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Brown).

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I happen to be one of those Members not fortunate enough to serve on the House Administration Committee and who, therefore, will be foreclosed from an opportunity to present an amendment to this legislation, unless we get an open rule. I, frankly, oppose this amendment, and I think it was said in the Committee on Rules that there were no experts on campaign reform. I would submit there are 435 experts in this House on campaign reform, and that we all have some opinion to work our will on this legislation.

Now, we had an open rule the last time we had campaign reform legislation in 1972 and we did not get all good legislation out of it; at least we got legislation that is substantially better than what we had been operating under previously. That is not the case with this proposed legislation.

We admire and respect the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hayes). He is one of the clearest and funniest speakers in this House and he is a man of considerable power in this body; but this bill is merely an exercise in that power, unless we can get an open rule.

This bill is also an example of his cleverness. While it is called reform legislation, it strengthens the hand of the majority party and those groups which generally support that party. But it is bipartisan to the extent that it benefits in equal measure both parties.

The funny thing about this bill is that it comes to the floor under a gag rule passed by the Rules Committee on a straight party-line vote. The argument that reform of campaigns should be passed under gag rule—that we cannot amend a bill to give the public a fairer share in how their campaign contributions are to be collected, spent, and reported.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that this has become such a partisan bill, but perhaps the times make the circumstances.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Michel).

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I take the well with less than wholehearted support for broad campaign reform legislation. I am really speaking only as an individual, for I would say the majority of my party would not probably not hold to that particular position.

Frankly, I would be content with something providing for full disclosure of contributions in limited amounts, both cash, and in kind, closely monitored and with stiff penalties for violations.

The bill we passed is for all practical purposes an incumbent protection act. All of us here today are incumbents. As a practical matter, none of us are about to give our challengers an advantage; but I think just simple equity dictates that at least we debate this overall question.

I can appreciate the chairman's concern over opening up the rules and having amendments being offered here and people demagoguing all over the place. I should like to be the first one down here in the well to help fight those kind of things.

I must say, Mr. Speaker that I do resent being so restricted, as we can be under this rule. I feel strongly, as do several other Members with responsible amendments, that our legitimate rights in this House are being submerged simply by sheer weight of political numbers. For that reason, I take this time to ask that we vote down the previous question and then up to the rule so we may have an opportunity to offer our constructive amendments and have them stand or fall on their merit after reasonable debate.

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, again I urge the Members of the House to vote down the previous question so that we can have open debate on this matter for a very important piece of legislation, and the Members of the House can be able to work their will in the forming of the election process.

The present resolution we have before us precludes amendments to about 95 percent of the bill and the Members will not be allowed to offer amendments to most of the sections of the legislation because of the type of resolution we are currently considering.

Again I urge a no vote on the previous question, so that we may have an open debate on this bill and the Members can work their will. The people of the United States expect no less from their Congress.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield the 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. Udall) for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. UDALL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, sometimes we cannot have everything we want. I want debates under open rules whenever possible, but the other choice is to do something in a national system of election laws that have brought disgrace and shame to this country.

We have today an historic opportunity to begin to mend our system of laws, and I see the thing possibly going down the drain, and I do not like it. I would have preferred to have debated this bill a year ago. I think we should have done so. I think we have probably 5 or 6 days to debate it. But the clock is running and we are confronted with a condition where we are going to adjourn for a recess in a week or 2 weeks or 3 weeks. The Senate is probably going to start an all day program on the impeachment trial, and we have some tough choices.

One choice is to conform to procedural purity and probably lose a bill which I think has 95 percent of what I want and what I think the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Anderson) wants and those who have supported this long bipartisan effort want. The other choice is to do something we do not like to do and support—not a closed rule—this is a modified open rule—which takes two pages in the rule to list the kinds of things, parts of the bill that are open only going to start an all day program on the impeachment trial, and we have some tough choices.

So, let me make a couple of things clear. Most of the points in dispute; most of the points mentioned are either in the law, the kind of things the gentleman from Colorado talked about such as spying, dirty tricks, those kinds of things are in the law and people have gone to jail for violating them; or they are in the bill; or they are made open for debate and amendments to lose a bill. So we can stand on procedural purity on one side and lose an historic opportunity. I reluctantly decline to be a party to such a destructive choice.

for. I do not think we ought to do that. I think we ought to support this most sensible, modified, open rule in this case. Before this day is out we will have sent on to conference with the Senate a darn good bill. In that conference, many of the other things my friends are concerned about can be corrected.

Mr. WAGGONNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UDALL. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. WAGGONNER. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Arizona for yielding to me.

I have the same problem with open rules as the gentleman has expressed having himself, but I am convinced of the mood of the House, having listened to this debate and having followed the media reporting of this matter and rule, the mood that prevails in this House today is one of few of the media and that with a completely open rule, there are going to be totally unworkable and unrealistic amendments offered which this Congress will have the courage to resist. Emotions and fear of being against reform with prevail.

We will have an unworkable bill which will guarantee each of us 4-year terms—2 years every 3 years in jail, because nobody can comply with what I think we will be faced with. Let us use some common sense for a change.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UDALL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

For the record, I would like to address myself to the gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the committee, who remarked on the amendment I offered to the 1971 Campaign Finance Act was responsible for Watergate.

The hearings on that act began in June 1971; it was reported to the House in October 1971; it was not sent to the floor until December 1971; it was stalled in conference until mid-January 1972; so that we did not get an effective date for enactment until April 1972.

The record shows who is responsible for the fact that we have Watergate.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UDALL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am in agreement with the gentleman from Arizona as he has said. This is a much stronger bill than the Senate bill, and a far stronger bill than the cynics thought this Congress would adopt.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCCELL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Arizona.

I want to join in his comments. I support this rule because every major issue has been considered or is reachable by amendment. There are obviously many other amendments which could be offered but in the interest of passing in this session of Congress the important reforms contained in this bill and leave it for later additional improvements.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

All time has expired.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the closed rule, House Resolution 1232, which would provide for consideration of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974. While the House Administration Committee has worked for some time on this measure, and has reported a bill to the floor of the House which will provide for significant reform, I would agree with many of my colleagues that it is inappropriate to consider a bill this important with a closed rule. It is clear that at a time when both the country and the Congress are attempting to remove the excessive campaign practice of past elections, all Members of the House of Representatives should have the opportunity to offer amendments which they sincerely believe will correct certain deficiencies in this measure as reported by the committee.

One major provision of the bill as reported by the committee which should be corrected would place a limitation of $5,000 on the contributions of committees to candidates for Federal office. The definition of a political committee clearly includes the National and State committees of both major parties, and the action in the House would significantly weaken the two-party system as we know it in this country. I would support those Members of the House who feel that such a limitation would be excluded from the definition of political committee for the purposes of contribution limitations.

Throughout the history of this Republic political parties have been important institutions in our political process and have provided a measure of stability in our political system. If the opportunity for contributions which would be allowed under the bill is not to be limited would be a major contribution to the integrity of our national and State parties so that they may assist candidates as the need arises, and to provide for the continuation of the two-party system in this country. This is just illustrative of many other areas of this legislation which should be strengthened by the adoption of constructive floor amendments, including those sections dealing with special interest groups, and the inability of the committees to deal effectively with the problems associated with abuse of campaign contributions.

I would hope that my colleagues will realize that the people of this country will be watching what we do in Congress do in the area of campaign reform legislation, and it should be incumbent upon us to provide for a thorough and complete discussion of this bill and of all amendments which would strengthen the provisions of the legislation. I hope that my colleagues will vote to oppose the adoption of this rule and will vote to provide for an open rule instead. To do any less is political cynicism disguised as "reform."

Mr. DON H. CLAUSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the debate of the campaign reform bill under the restrictive procedures proposed by the House Rules Committee.

I do so because I am deeply disturbed that this legislation and the debate of the campaign reform bill under the restrictive procedures proposed by the House Administration Committee does not include the provisions of my own Election Campaign Espionage Act which would outlaw political spying in election campaigns.

This bill, which I introduced last year, is designed to prohibit individuals from interfering in the political campaign of any other candidate. It would prohibit the use of contributions for the commission of any illegal act such as wiretapping, electronic surveillance, burglary, or other such activities.

And it makes it a felony to cover up any violation of Federal election laws.

It is of my type of repugnant political activity that we must be seeking to end and I believe we should go ahead and do so directly rather than indirectly through other controls.

I believe very strongly in the concept embodied by my bill because the type of behavior known as "Watergate" has its place in the American election process and is completely contrary to our system of free and open elections.

Bill Stodart, my administrative assistant who passed away last month, who was quite closely involved in the process of developing this proposal.

He did the basic research needed to perfect the language and achieve the goal we both sought to reach.

It was his keen sense of the need for morality to retain and improve America's participatory democracy that helped to come up with the idea for this legislation and get it into its final form.

I am deeply disturbed that this legislation and the debate of the campaign reform bill under the restrictive procedures proposed by the House Administration Committee does not include the provisions of my own Election Campaign Espionage Act which would outlaw political spying in election campaigns.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend remarks on the subject of House Resolution 1232.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.
The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER.

The SPEAKER. Before the Chair goes into the question, he desires to state that the monitor on the Republican side is not in order. The Chair has tried to see if we could set up a substitute monitor but apparently there is not sufficient time.

While the Chair could order the vote by rollcall, the Chair thinks that both sides can use the Democratic monitor and can alternate in the use of the monitor and save that much time. Therefore, the Chair will ask the Democratic operator and monitor to alternate with the Republican operator and monitor.

For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. WYDLER. I just want to make it clear to the Chair that in coming onto the House floor at 12 o'clock, I informed the clerks of the House that the Republican monitor was not working. That was within a few minutes after noon today.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not informed about that until 2 minutes ago. The Chair is the proper person to be advised of things of this sort.

The Chair is going to order that the vote on the previous question be taken by electronic device.

Without objection, a recorded vote was ordered on the motion for the previous question.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 219, noes 190, not voting 25, as follows:

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON RULES TO HAVE UNTIL MIDNIGHT THURSDAY, AUGUST 8, 1974, TO FILE CERTAIN PRIVILEGED REPORTS

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules have until midnight tomorrow, Thursday, August 8, 1974, to file certain privileged reports.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON HR. 15405, DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION APPROPRIATIONS, 1975

Mr. McCALL, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers may have until midnight tomorrow to file a conference report on the bill (H.R. 15405), making appropriations to the Department of Transportation and related agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes.

There was no objection.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 16900) to impose overall limitations on campaign expenditures and political contributions; to provide that each candidate for Federal office shall designate a principal campaign committee; to provide for a single reporting responsibility with respect to receipts and expenditures by certain political committees; to change the times for the filing of reports regarding campaign expenditures and political contributions; to provide for public financing of Presidential nominating conventions and Presidential primary elections; and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hays) will be recognized for 1 hour, and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. Frenzel) will be recognized for 1 hour.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hays).

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I propose to take as little time in general debate as possible. There is usually not a very heavy attendance, and I think we will get down to the crux of the disagreements, if any, under the 5-minute rule.

I want to quickly run through the general provisions of the bill.

There are questions that Members have, and I will yield myself more time in an attempt to answer them.

In title I, the Criminal Code amendments, we have these limits of $1,000 per election on contributions to any political party, political committee, or “person,” of course, is a broad term under the law. There is a $5,000 limit per election on contributions to candidates for Federal office from multicandidate committees. That would be the Federal Campaign Committee, the Republican Campaign Committee, et cetera.

There is a $25,000 limit on the amount one individual may contribute to all candidates. In other words, if a man wanted to contribute $1,000 to 25 candidates, he could do it, and then the ball game is over for him.

This gets away from the type of $2.5 million contributions and $1 million contributions that were had on both sides the last time, and of course, if the bill stays as it is, there will be no contributions in Federal elections that we propose to fund them out of the income tax checkoff.

The expenditure limits are set overall in this way: The President for general election, $20 million; for the primary election, $10 million; for the Senate, $75,000 or 5 cents times the population of the State, whichever is larger; in the House, $75,000 in each primary and general election.

Expenditure limitations would be increased by the cost of living escalation.

There is a prohibition against a candidate spending more than $25,000 of his own funds in an election. That, of course, includes the candidate, his wife, and members of his immediate family.

We allow an exemption for slotcards and sample ballots being exempted from the reporting requirement. The reason for that is that in very, very many geographical areas of this country there are counties with a population of 20,000, 30,000, and 40,000 where the parties in the county on both sides put out a sample ballot. I will use, for example, one county in my district in Ohio which has a population of 18,000 people. You can buy 18,000 sample ballots, even at today’s prices, for less than $300 if you buy them from the people who print the ballots.

In Ohio the law requires anything labeled “sample ballots” to have the names of every candidate for both parties on it.

Mr. Chairman, under the old law, if that party spent $300 in this year's election for sample ballots, which would be one for every household in the district, the candidate is forced, under the penalty of one and imprisonment, whether they knew it or not, to report to the Federal Election Commission that they had spent $20 on my behalf, for instance, because there are 15 candidates this year in my district on the ballot.

That is the kind of little thing that is one of the technical violations, of which there are any number, but it is that, that we are trying to eliminate by what seems to me to be a rather sensible exemption.

Under the Disclosure Act we simplify the reporting requirements. We provide for a single 10-day pre-election report instead of the 5-day and 15-day report that the present law provides. The reason we did that is simply because the 5-day provision was not realistic. By the time you get your books closed, get your report made, and get it down here and the clerk put it on his computer and it was recorded, it was difficult to get copies in by election day.

So we did away with this. We now make one report mandatory 10 days before election and another 30 days after election.

I think the Members are also going to be delighted to know that we have eliminated these reports which had to come quarterly, most of which said, zero, zero, zero, but which had to be notarized and sent in. So any quarter in any year in which you do not spend $1,000 in that quarter, you do not make a report until the end of the year, when you make a cumulative report. If you spent over $1,000 in a quarter, you have to file a report.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hays) has expired.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, we waive quarterly reports if they fall within the 10 days of a pre- or post-election report. In other words, if you make a quarterly report within 10 days or 30 days after election, you just combine them and make one report.

We require each candidate to have a principal campaign committee. I am going to take a little time to explain that. If you have nine counties in the district or nine wards in the city and you want to have a committee in each ward, that is all right, but you have got to designate one committee as your principal committee. All of those county or ward committees have to report whatever they spend in your name to the principal committee, and the principal committee is responsible and must make the report to the reporting authority.

Mr. Chairman, we have agreed, by a committee amendment, with the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. Frasca) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. Patricia), as well as other Members—the committee agreed to it this morning—that the committee will offer an amendment on the composition of the board, which will follow: The board will be composed of six people, four voting members and two nonvoting members. The four voting members will be appointed, two by the Speaker of the House and two by the Vice President of the United States.

I wish to tell the Members that we included the Vice President of the United States in an effort to be eminently fair to the minority side, because normally these appointments are made by the Speaker of the House and the President pro tempore of the Senate, and they are both Democrats. However, we stipulate that those appointments must be, one from each party, with cases, and that to are added the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate as nonvoting members of the Board, for the purpose of being there in on the provision of rules and regulations and being available for Members to consult as to what are the proper procedures so that one can make out his report and have some real feeling that he is within the law.

We also have compromised another thing in the bill which will be offered as a committee amendment. Under the Old bill we give to the committee the power to together and made rules and regulations and they changed the law. It was 5 days and 15 days, but by regulation they changed it to 22 days and 12 days. We do not want to have that. We have eliminated in there that any rules or regulations they made could be vetoed by either committee, but we decided that raised a constitutional question. So, by committee amendment, we will make it so that so that anything they promulgate can be vetoed within 30 days by a vote of either House of the Congress.

In other words, it would probably be referred to the committee. If they thought it worthwhile, they would bring it to the House for a vote.

In title II we amend the Hatch Act so as to allow State and local government employees to participate on a voluntary basis in certain partisan political activities.

We strengthen and expand the existing dollar checkpoint committee by requiring financial reports on congressional elections. The gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Brademas) will explain this later in detail. We make the dollar checkpoint self-perpetuating to assure that the money may be used with in the election, and we set aside $20 million for each major political party. We define major political parties and minor political parties, and something will be available for them, with political parties.

The definition of a minor political party is one that got 5 percent of the vote in the last election. As I say, there is $20 million for each major party in the State, and they may not raise any money privately, and they may not spend more than $20 million, which must be spent again through a designated single committee, which may be the national committee or it may be another, but it must be one single committee, and they will not be out running all over the country, raising money.

Finally, we put in the law that political committees with no gross income for the taxable year shall not be required to file income tax returns for that year. The IRS rules that whether you made a nickel or not you had to file a return.

Well, I was chairman around here many years ago when the Committee on Excess Government Paperwork was formed, and I think this was excess government paperwork. Anybody who does not have any income does not have to file a report. A political committee which has no income be forced to file a return? We just wiped it out. That is one of the reasons of the waiver on points of order in the rule. Mr. Chairman, I have touched on the high points, and other Members will explain in greater detail other sections. The members of the committee will be available to answer any questions that other Members may have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. MICHELS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MICHELS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio serves as the chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, and the gentleman and I are friendly adversaries in the sense that one of my responsibilities as chairman of the Republican Campaign Committee I have one question. The gentleman stated that there is a $5,000 limitation on contribution to candidates for Ped- dled committees other than one's "principal" campaign committees, and the gentleman from Ohio I think in the course of his general debate a moment ago likened the congressional campaign committees to some of the better known recognized special interest groups. What was the rationale in the treatment of those kinds of committees as though they are on a par with the respective congressional campaign committees we chair?

I would like to think our respective national committees, senatorial and congressional committees, could be looked upon in a special way—even in this bill. Why could we not have been excluded from this limitation?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute in order to answer the question posed by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Michael),

Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman from Illinois—and I understand that this is a complicated matter—that the rationale was in trying to make a distinction between the different candidates' committees—and it was not my contention, and I want to make a little legislative history here, and I do not think it was the intention of the committee, to include whatever services we give to any candidate as far as the $5,000 is concerned.

In other words, if you furnish a candidate with a voting record, or if you furnish a candidate with the gentleman's, that is not included. We were talking about the way I understood it, and I believe that is the intent—a cash contribution to the candidate's campaign.
Mr. MICHEL. Strictly a financial contribution under an information and educational allowance, or whatever we might call it; but the inherent kind of contributions that our respective committees have been accustomed to making candidates or to incumbents would be excluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

It is my belief that they are not included—just the cash contributions.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield to the gentleman from Hawaii.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

As the gentleman knows, when he appeared before the Rules Committee, I raised a question relative to the definition of the term “any election” as used in section 101. I raise the question for the reason that, while setting the limitation on the amount any person may contribute, the term “any election” is used, in setting the maximum for expenditures that any candidate may make, the term “any campaign for nomination for election, or for election” is used.

Mr. HAYS. May I say to the gentleman, I do not have the section at my fingertips, but there is a section in there defining the election, and in the definition of election as the term is used, it means any primary, any runoff, and any general election.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. That is fine. For the purpose of establishing legislative history, I thought I should raise the question.

Mr. HAYS. It is also in the bill in the definition.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I will remind the gentleman that the definition merely refers to existing law, which is not printed in the bill itself.

Mr. HAYS. But in the Ramseyer report it is there, and it is defined that way.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CONyers. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONyers. I appreciate the chairman’s yielding to me.

I should like to have him explain, if he would, the question I raised with him before that apparently requires new political parties to have accumulated 5 percent of the vote, which means that it would have to go from 0 percent to in excess of 5 percent. I know that it is in existing legislation, and is continued in the bill.

Mr. HAYS. Let me say that there is defined in there—and one of the other Members is going into it in depth—major party and minor party—and a minor party is one which accumulated 5 percent—and new parties. A minor party, to be qualified as a minor party and to be eligible, must have gotten the 5 percent in the last election, but that is subject to amendment. That is in one of the sections that is open, and it could be amended.

Mr. CONyers. The gentleman from Ohio perceives, then, the problem I am raising?

Mr. HAYS. I do.

Mr. CONyers. We are precluding new parties from getting started. Both of the major parties in the United States price themselves from splinter groups or from different political formations and entities. What we are now requiring is that these new parties, to get the benefit of public financing for public and vital purposes as it is—we are now in effect requiring to grow to at least 5 percent or die. I think that is a very serious situation that ought to be gone into very carefully by the Committee and the Members.

Mr. HAYS. Let me say to the gentleman that I respect his position. He and I may have a fundamental philosophical disagreement about this without affecting our basic agreement that we would like to do anything I can to protect the two-party system, because I am too familiar with too many European countries that have multiparty systems that have degenerated into almost anarchy. There will be provisions for debate on this under the 5-minute rule. There will be provision for amendment, and I do not want to do it more time because I have promised a vote, and I will be glad to discuss it further with the gentleman under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. CONyers. Before we get into the 5-minute rule, the 5-minute rule, as I see it practiced on the floor, last after we start the 5-minute rule, a great number of Members will decide that we ought to cut off the 5-minute rule—and I am referring to the 5 million Department of Defense bill that was just considered yesterday.

Mr. HAYS. I will assure the gentleman that he will have 5 minutes if I have to go back to $75,000.

Mr. CONyers. I am not only concerned about getting the 5 minutes but I am equally concerned about the provisions that limit new and small parties which ought to be considered in passing this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman’s yielding. I wanted to ask my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan, did he vote for the closed rule?

Mr. CONyers. I think that is an irrelevant question.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I do not think so. As a matter of fact, it is a most relevant question because an open rule would have guaranteed the gentleman from Michigan more adequate time for appropriate amendments.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. Matsunaga), the ranking minority member of the Committee on House Administration.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, let me say at the beginning that I want to compliment the chairman of the committee (Mr. Hays) and the membership of our committee for the conscientious hard work that they have put forth in bringing forward this bill. We had 21 different sessions on markup. We charged up the bill many times and charged back down again, and we charged up on the bill again. There are many things in this bill that are good, that are salutary, that are needed.

There are many things in this bill that I object to that I would like very much to see removed from the bill. For instance, I favor some of the spending limitations, but on the question of campaign financing reform, I do not think that the amount is appropriate. We voted not to know how many different times on different figures and they ranged anywhere from $150,000 per primary to $300,000 or even less. We finally settled on the figure of $60,000 per election. We tried to take into account the differences in rural areas and metropolitan areas or industrial areas and farm areas in trying to work some equity because we realized the situation is different from Manhattan, say, to the rural areas of my 13 counties, and it costs more in some areas.

I felt that $60,000 was the most equitable figure we could have settle on. After we voted on it, it came up again and then we voted on $75,000. I think that the $75,000, if it is an amendment that I will vote to go back to $60,000, because this means $50,000 per election, which means every time we vote.

It means that if there is a primary that is $75,000. Then if there is a runoff, a month later, that is $75,000, or a total of $150,000, which we will have spent there. It is not a pass through and it is not cumulative, but we $60,000 or $75,000 per election there or $150,000 total for the primary and runoff, and then if there is a general election, that is another $75,000, and if there is a runoff, another $75,000, and if it is up to $300,000 for a seat in Congress, which I think is too high.

Mr. MATHIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MATHIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment in the committee which reduced the amount of expenditure per election to $42,500. The gentleman supported that, and I would appreciate the gentleman’s support in this instance as on that date.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I think it might be appropriate to make the observation that in the last election the challengers who defeated incumbents spent on the average, $120,000 to defeat the incumbents. I subscribe to the gentleman’s personal view of how this could keep campaign expenditures down to a minimum in each one of our districts, but the facts of life prove that the only way you can possibly unseat those of us who are incumbents with our built-in advantages, and this was particularly true In 1973, is to spend considerable sums of money. So the $42,500, while good talk for the folks back home, is one of those kinds of amendments I referred to during the consideration of the rule as rather ridiculous. So it will put the Members unfairly to the mast on the floor when we get under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. DICKINSON. I thank the gentleman for his observation.

Mr. Chairman, moving right along now, there are other features of the bill I find most repugnant and objectionable. For instance, on the financing of national conventions out of the public till, there is $2 million set aside here to finance the national conventions.

This is bad for many reasons. They say, "If you do not want it, we will make it optional." Taxpayers protest, "We want it. You don't have to take it if you don't want it."

We can find going through the whole thread of this bill that, while I suppose which is part of this ball game; to jail or not if they are a candidate or contributor, they turned it all into his name of reform we do not drive out and the organization had contributed his name. The Democrats say, "We scare people away good dedicated honest without preserving that 24 hours for the candidates in turn would say they do not know if they are going to jail or not if they are a candidate or even helping a candidate."

I did serve on the special subcommittee that was set up to monitor elections by the House. It was certified over 5,000 violations of the last election law of the House of Representatives alone, over 5,000 violations to the Justice Department for investigation and/or prosecution, the gentleman is to see the Clerk.

I am very fearful if we are not careful in setting up whatever authority is to control this, if we do not get somebody knowledgeable and sympathetic and with some commission that is going to be headhunters, we are all going to be in danger of what the gentleman from Louisiana said earlier. We will be serving two sentences, one for 1974 and when the Federal Government rives alone, over 5,000 violations to the receipt of the money from the American Federation of Teachers and I that was credited with. I only received $250.

Mr. DENT. The only advice I can give the gentleman is to go see the Clerk.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 11 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADENAS). Mr. BRADENAS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. BRADENAS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 16090, the Federal Elections Campaign Amendments of 1974.

I would like to take this opportunity to pay special tribute to the distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS). Mr. HAYS worked diligently day after day in the markup sessions on the bill and in major campaign reform legislation is passed by Congress this year much of the credit will be due to WAYNE HAYS.

Because the gentleman from Ohio has been subjected to considerable criticism on this matter, I believe it only fair to make the point I have just made.

Mr. Chairman, members of the House Administration Committee have worked long and hard on this bill. We considered almost 100 amendments, offered by both Republicans and Democrats, and we have reported to the House what I believe to be a very sound campaign reform bill—one which will significantly improve and strengthen current law.

To quote from a letter to me of July 25, 1974, from the able codirectors of the Center for Public Financing of Elections, Susan B. King and Neal Gregory, following the action of the House Administration Committee in reporting H.R. 16090:

We would like to commend you and your colleagues on the House Administration for the months of work which resulted in yesterday's reporting out of the Campaign Reform Bill.

Your action in moving to clean up the way in which we finance Federal elections...
Mr. Chairman, the existing campaign finance laws include the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act, and certain regulations of the United States Criminal Code. The most significant of these is, of course, the Federal Election Campaign Act, which calls for the disclosure of campaign expenditures and contributions.

Although the Federal Election Campaign Act has only been in effect for little over 2 years, it has become apparent that certain provisions of the law need to be strengthened. Further, the law failed to reach one of the most serious campaign finance problems—the excessive influence of big money in political campaigns.

Mr. Chairman, the committee bill meets these problems by improving the disclosure requirements of the Federal Election Campaign Act and by providing for a Supervisory Officers to strengthen enforcement of campaign finance laws. To meet the problem of spiraling campaign expenditures and the excessive influence of big money, the bill sets strict limits on campaign expenditures and contributions.

And to limit the influence of big money in the area which, I believe, offers the greatest potential for abuse—all phases of election to the office of President—the committee bill strengthens the existing dollar check-off law with respect to the Presidential general elections and authorizes the use of checkoff funds for presidential nominating conventions and Presidential primary elections.

Mr. Chairman, although I would like briefly to summarize the major provisions of the bill, I would like to focus my remarks on two important features of the bill—the Board of Supervisory Officers and the sections dealing with public financing of Presidential elections.

EXPERIMENT LIMITS

Mr. Chairman, the committee bill permits contributions to candidates by persons to $1,000 per election—primary, runoff, special election, and general election.

The bill permits committees which have: first, been registered for 6 months pursuant to the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971; second, which have received contributions from more than 50 persons; and third, which have contributed to at least 5 candidates for Federal office to contribute to candidates up to $5,000 per election. This limit on contributions by so-called multicandidate committees applies equally to the Republican and Democratic Congressional Campaign Committees and to the National, State, and local committees of the political parties as well as to broad-based citizens groups which support candidates for Federal office.

By providing higher limits on contributions by multicandidate committees, our committee recognized the important role of broad-based citizens interest groups—whether conservative, such as the Americans for Constitutional Action, or liberal, such as the National Committee for an Effective Congress.

To curtail the influence of excessive political contributions, the bill establishes a $525,000 limit on the amount any individual can give to all candidates for Federal office in a single year.

Mr. Chairman, these limits were subject to lengthy debate in the committee and I believe we have provided for limits which are low enough to bar excessive contributions, yet not so low so that it would be impossible for candidates to raise adequate campaign funds without incurring exorbitant fundraising costs.

EXPENDITURE LIMITS

Mr. Chairman, the bill would curb spiraling campaign expenditures by setting strict limits on what candidates could spend: the limits would be $20 million. Candidacies provided by the Senate Campaign Act of 1974 to spend only $20 million; candidates supported by individual contributions by any single person; an overall limit of $1,000 per contribution.

Candidates to the office of President would be able to spend only $20 million; candidates for the nomination to the office of President could spend a total of $10 million.

Senate candidates would be able to spend the higher of either $75,000 or 5 cents per year of the population in the candidate’s State, whichever is the greater. And general elections. And House candidates would be able to spend $75,000 in each of the primary and general elections.

In addition to these general expenditure limits, the committee bill allows candidates to spend up to 25 percent above the limits to meet the costs of fund raising. This provision is particularly important in view of the cost of raising campaign funds through small contributions.

Mr. Chairman, these expenditure limits were adopted after extensive and thorough debate in our committee, and I believe the limits we have recommended are low enough to prevent excessive campaign expenditures, yet high enough to allow candidates to mount meaningful campaigns without hindering and challenging candidates to communicate their positions on campaign issues to the voters.

PRINCIPAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEES AND DISCLOSURE REPORTS

To simplify reporting requirements and facilitate the dissemination of campaign information, the bill eliminates unnecessary disclosure reports and provides for the designation of principal campaign committees to make all committee expenditures on behalf of a candidate and to file a consolidated report of all such expenditures and all contributions of committees which support the candidate.

Mr. Chairman, the committee bill eliminates the 15- and 5-day precampaign reports, requires expenditures by any single contributor exceeding law and requires instead a single precampaign report 10 days before each election. In addition, the bill requires a report 30 days after each election. Quarterly reports would still be required, but a candidate would not have to file a quarterly report if it falls within 10 days of the pre-election or post-election report or if in that quarter neither contributions or expenditures exceed $1,000.

The bill requires the Attorney General to report to the Board on the status of referrals—60 days after the referral and at the close of every 30 day period thereafter.

Mr. Chairman, I would like here to note that I have not yet received the committee amendment to this section of the bill which will modify the composition of the Board. Very briefly, the amendment will provide for a six-member Board composed of four public members who are to be appointed by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate, on a bipartisan basis, and the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate, both of whom will serve as nonvoting members.

The amendment will also amend the "review of regulations" provision in the committee bill to provide that all rules and regulations be submitted to the Senate.
ate and the House for review, rather than to the House Administration Committee or the Committee on Rules and Administration Committee.

I will provide a more complete explanation when the amendment is considered, but I would like to observe that this amendment received the full support of the House Administration Committee and will, I believe, strengthen the enforcement of campaign finance laws.

PUBLIC FINANCING OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS

And finally, Mr. Chairman, the bill provides for a full package for public financing of Presidential elections.

First, the bill strengthens existing law with additional public financing of Presidential general elections. As you are aware, the dollar checkoff law, first passed in the 92d Congress and amended last year, allows individuals to designate a portion of their income tax refund on their annual tax return to be paid to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund, or the so-called dollar checkoff fund. The amount of money available for Presidential general elections is the amount voluntarily designated by individual taxpayers that candidates may use public funds, or they may continue to finance their campaigns through private resources.

The committee bill amends current law to provide that the amount of public money available from the checkoff fund conforms to the spending limit for Presidential general elections—$200 million and to provide that the dollar checkoff fund be self-appropriating to assure that the dollars checked off by individual taxpayers are actually available.

It authorizes the use of dollar checkoff funds for Presidential nominating conventions.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is important to note that the current system of convention advertising and public financing scheme. The national nominating conventions are now paid for principally by corporate and union advertising and public financing. The bipartisan convention program is financed by the dollar checkoff fund.

This section of the bill is based on a recommendation of the bipartisan House Special Committee On Convention Public Financing, composed of top officials of both the Republican and Democratic national committees. It repeals the provision authorizing tax deductions for convention advertising and provides up to $2 million for major parties and proportionately smaller amounts for minor parties to defray the costs of conducting Presidential nominating conventions. The bill specifically prohibits, however, the use of public funds for direct cash payments to delegates and candidates.

The amendment would be voluntary and any political party that wishes to continue to finance its convention with private resources could continue to do so. However, overall expenditures from both public and private sources would, under ordinary circumstances, be limited to $2 million.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the bill provides for limited public financing of Presidential primary elections by authorizing matching payments from the dollar checkoff fund for small contributions.

Candidates would receive matching payments for the first $250 or less received from each contribution. The maximum amount of public money a candidate could receive would be one-half the expenditure limit for Presidential primaries. Under this bill, that means each candidate could receive up to $5 million.

To provide for the cost of the additional candidates, the bill would require a candidate to accumulate at least $6,000 in matchable contributions in each of 20 States.

All public funds would come from the surplus in the dollar checkoff fund after funds have been set aside to meet the estimated obligations of Presidential general elections and nominating conventions. The dollar checkoff fund will contain approximately $64 million by 1976 and that some $46 million would be used for general elections and conventions, approximately $15 million should be available for primary elections.

Mr. Chairman, this Presidential public financing package is one of the most important provisions of the bill. Clearly, the potential for the abuse of big money is the greatest in the area of Presidential elections, and public financing would, in my view drastically reduce this potential.

Mr. Chairman, as a solid piece of campaign reform legislation, one which if passed, will prove to be a major advance in the financing of campaigns for Federal office.

Some critics have charged that the bill is loophole ridden and that it fails to provide an effective enforcement mechanism. These critics allege that the enforcement entity in the bill builds on a system of self-enforcement by the Clerk of the House and the other supervisory officers, and they infer that these deficiencies can never be corrected under the present approach. To support their case, they cite a whole litany of alleged shortcomings of the Clerk and the other supervisory officers.

Mr. Chairman, I have gone to some trouble to review the criticisms of this bill and to determine if there is any validity to these charges. And I must say that after investigation, there is no basis for these allegations.

Take, for example, the charge that the Clerk of the House was forced to reexamine and reinvestigate many of the complaints reported by the Justice Department.

The Clerk has regularly conducted numerous field investigations and hearings on complaints. Some of these investigations and hearings were held jointly with the bipartisan House Special Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures. During the 1972 elections, the Clerk of the House has been the only supervisory officer to hold field investigations and hearings on election campaign complaints. All of these hearings have been open to the public.

In fact, a review of the record of the Clerk of the House and the other supervisory officers shows that overall they demonstrated effective enforcement capabilities: fairly and efficiently. And the enforcement entity in the bill builds on this experience by creating a Board of public members and the scrutiny of the Board by the public will remove any taint of an apparent conflict of interest.

Mr. Chairman, the House Administration Committee has labored long and hard on this measure, and has developed a comprehensive bipartisan piece of campaign finance legislation, and I would urge all my colleagues to give it their full support.

Mr. Chairman, I want to add just one word to what was observed by the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. Udall), who has contributed so significantly to the shaping of the climate for the kind of legislation we are today considering. Time is running out. There is scheduled to come... before the House in a few days, a very major piece of business which will preoccupy us all and, presumably, the other body as well, and then there will be a brief recess.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it would be tragic if we were to fail in our obligation to the American people to produce a campaign reform bill in 1974 that can respond otherwise of which we are all now painfully aware.

H.R. 16090, with the committee amendments to which I have already alluded and with certain other committee amendments to which the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. Thompson) and other Members will address themselves, represents a solid, substantial campaign reform bill around which Members of the House, both Democrats and Republicans, of every point of view, can rally.

The time to act is now, 1974, not 1975. So I urge adoption of H.R. 16090, I hope with overwhelming support from both sides of the aisle.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, will be gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. BRADEMAS).

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a question of the gentleman. It is a technical one, but I think perhaps the gentleman knows the answer, and I want to make a little legislative history on the floor.

Let us take an off election year. And I might say this happened in California a year or so ago. It was an off year, and a candidate who had not declared himself to be a candidate, but he goes around the State. He makes airplane trips. He has dinners and meetings, and so forth. And this runs up to a considerable amount of expense, and it is a time when he is not a candidate because it was an off election year, and he was not a declared candidate. He may spend over $25,000.

My question is: Would that $25,000 be considered for his election if he was not at that time himself an announced candidate for office, and it was an off election year?

Mr. BRADEMAS. In response to the gentleman's inquiry, I would say that he must declare himself a candidate to be a candidate.

Mr. BELL. But the gentleman from Indiana knows there have been a number of candidates for statewide office who have made speeches and made public appearances who have not announced as to whether they were or were not candidates.

Mr. BRADEMAS. I understand. But if we were to take California, if I were to cite an example...

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield an additional minute?

Mr. DENT. I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BRADEMAS. I thank the gentleman.

And I believe I can respond to his question more fully, and simply, by referring him to page 42 of the committee report on H.R. 16090, and the definition of "candidate" in section 591(b) of title 18, United States Code, which reads as follows:

(b) "candidate" means an individual who nominates himself for election, or election to Federal office, whether or not such individual is elected, and, for purposes of this paragraph, an individual shall be deemed to seek nomination for election to Federal office, whether or not such individual is elected, and, for purposes of this paragraph, an individual shall be deemed to seek nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, if he has (1) taken the action necessary under the law of a State to qualify himself for nomination for election, for election, or (2) received contributions or made expenditures, or has given his consent for any other person to receive contributions or make expenditures, with a view to bringing about his nomination for election, or election, to such office;

Mr. BELL. So that the $25,000, or even above that, could be spent without the being run or apparently not running publicly, at least?

Mr. BRADEMAS. I believe that the definition of "candidate" I have just cited will answer the gentleman's question.

I hope I have responded satisfactorily to the gentleman's question.

Mr. BELL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself to the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, in response to the inquiry made by the gentleman from California (Mr. BELL) I might state that the law says a candidate is a candidate whenever he or she raises or expends money in behalf of a candidacy, or when a committee does so for them. In addition, of course, if he or she is a declared candidate, or a candidate under the particular State law at that time, he or she is also a candidate under our law.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BELL. What the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMAS) said, was that so long as they are not a declared candidate, or even so long as they are not being run, they can spend money;

Mr. FRENZEL. If it was not a goodwill trip, yes, but if the expenditure one made was for a sign that said "Voted for Jones for Congress," then they would be under the definition.

Mr. BELL. In other words, if words were mentioned that he or she were a candidate.

Mr. FRENZEL. Exactly; then he or she would be a candidate under the law.

Mr. BELL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE), a member of the Committee on House Administration, and amendments are not allowed under the closed rule.

(Mr. CRANE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I thank my distinguished colleague from Minnesota for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, for openers, I would like to extend my congratulations to my colleagues on the Committee on House Administration for the work they have put into preparing this rather torpid campaign reform "bill." I put the word "reform" into quotation marks, Mr. Chairman, because, unfortunately, my colleagues, like the leaders of the House and Senate, have not put any energy or boldness into this process this afternoon under our vote on the rule to prohibit me from introducing some amendments which I had anticipated I might have the opportunity to present. If we pass an amendment, a very small amendment, to represent the real substance of campaign reform, much of which has been contained in the proposed legislation I do not view as reform at all. On the contrary, I think it is a step in the wrong direction.

One of the areas of concern that many people have touched upon in the past several months in connection with the revelations accompanying Watergate and related matters is influence peddling in politics. We are all too familiar with the role of the milk lobby, the question of whether or not contributions from the milk lobby had any impact on decisionmaking in the White House.

In this connection we had an amendment introduced before our committee by the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. Iso). It was an amendment to the House of Representatives. It was a salutary amendment. It was defeated in the Senate and in the House.

Let me take this opportunity, Mr. Chairman, to state that I believe the time has come for the district of Columbia to go ahead with a referendum on whether or not it should become the 51st State of the Union, and let us avoid this constitutional constitutional imbroglio by a simple vote of the citizens of the district.

Mr. BELL. I think the gentleman has made an important point.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, in response to the inquiry made by the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. FRAUHLOCH) which would have dealt with this question of influence peddling by special-interest groups, and which would remove any doubt in anyone's mind as to whether any vested-interest group was exercising undue influence on the decisionmaking of a Member. This amendment that the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. FRAUHLOCH) introduced before our committee, which would have prohibited contributions from political committees to candidates except for contributions from the respective congressional campaign committees of the Democratic and Republican Parties, and the Senate campaign committees.

As the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. FRAUHLOCH) very capably explained to the committee at the time he introduced this amendment, this would have had the effect of removing any area of doubt as to whether the realtors through REAIPAC, or business and industry through BIPAC, or the American Medical Association through AMPAC, or for that matter, even the American Conservative Union through its Conservative Victory Fund.

Also the Political Education Committees of the AFL-CIO—was exercising undue influence over Members through campaign contributions. That, in my estimation, was a salutary amendment. It was one that I think should have been accepted by the committee and incorporated into this bill.

Mr. Chairman, second amendment I intended to offer deals with contributions in kind. This has been an area where we are all too aware of a number of abuses—and they are not confined exclusively to unions. When corporations provide, for example, unreported aircraft travel, that
It surely is an abuse as much as when unions engage in the providing of services of a similar nature. Such contributions should have an appropriate fair market value placed upon them and classified and reported as in-kind contributions. That was the second amendment that I had hoped to bring up before this committee.

Third is one that I introduced first before the committee at the time we had our Reporting Act legislation 2 years ago. This would have prevented the use of involuntarily raised union money for political campaigns, whether those were voter registration drives or get-out-the-vote drives. I do not think there is any question in anyone's mind that these have distinctly partisan overtones.

I can understand so long as silence in the law permits this injustice to continue, that those people who are so inclined will exploit this deficiency in the law to hear it. The essential cynicism of the American Civil Liberties Union to get involved in the fight on behalf of the civil liberties of these people whose involuntarily raised union moneys, which must be paid to the union as a condition of employment, are being used to subsidize political objectives contrary to their own. Mr. DENNIS, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CRANE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. DENNIS. I thank both of the gentlemen for yielding.

I simply want to say that in my judgment the gentleman from Illinois in the well is making a very important contribution to this debate, although unfortunately there are very few people here to hear it. The essential cynicism of the process we are going through this afternoon is illustrated by the consideration of this so-called reform bill, which is being considered under a rule where the chairman's amendment mentioned by the gentleman, indeed, essential amendments for any real campaign reform, to anyone who knows anything about the subject realistically cannot even be considered by this body, cannot even be voted upon. The essential cynicism of this situation is a sad commentary on our whole operation here, and I am glad the gentleman at least is still allowed to point out the need, even though in this body we are not allowed to have a vote.

Mr. CRANE. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

In conclusion I would like to add this one final note. In connection with the abuses we have thought about and heard reported in the media over the past year, I added to the report, as I actually works, a part of the earnings of some men and it turns it over to others, and who directory group of the funds that we receive from the political, economic and ideological goals of these whose most often from them under authority of law.

That situation has not changed. The use of compulsory union dues for political purposes seriously jeopardizes our system of representative government. It dilutes every citizen's political freedom and outrageously violates the basic rights of workers whose money is being misused. Mr. Chairman, I have had the belief that there may be no meaningful campaign reform legislation unless it contains provisions which will put a stop to these political spending abuses.

A recent public opinion study by Opinion Research Corp. showed that 78 percent of all union members—and a greater majority of the general public—favor union dues for political campaigns. Can we deny them and still claim to be representatives of the people?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, we have reported this bill at great length in the Recess, and in committee report which of course, will stand for itself. Like the chairman of the committee, I hope we do not use all of our time in the schedule debate and then try to proceed on a prompt basis to the amendments allowed.

Our job has been rendered a great deal easier by the passage of the closed rule, which we on this side disaffection with. By the same token, the voices against us we must proceed as that restrictive rule directs.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before us is a mixed bag. The committee labored diligently, and produced a good vehicle, but an imperfect one. The bill has been considerably strengthened within the last 24 hours due to the hard work on the part of the chairman of the committee in constructing what I think are important compromises to be reflected in the committee amendments. These will do a great deal to shore up what I think are some of the weak spots in the bill that is before us.

There are many strengths in the bill and the committee is to be commended for those strengths. For instance, the limitations on contributions and expenditures, which all agree with, the various levels, have got to be something that is necessary and something the people want.

The single committee, the limitation on cash, the preemptions of State rules, the restoration of reasonable rights under chapter 611 for Government contractors the removal of State and local employees from unreasonable Hatch Act restrictions, the redefinition of restrictions on foreign nationals, the restrictions on honorariums are all important features of this bill. All of us will undoubtedly agree to the merits of these features even if we might have had complaints with some of the particular numbers involved.

I am particularly pleased with the committee amendment which will relate to the board of supervisory officers because I think it answers a number of the complaints I had about the committee bill. I am pleased that the compromise has been able to worked out.

What has not been worked out is the subject of public financing of elections which in my judgment is destructive to our election processes and will reduce...
Individual participation and reduce party strength in this country.

The bill itself is restrictive to political party activities because it equates a broad-based national political party with any organization with 50 persons. Each is able to contribute 5,000 to any campaign, and in my judgment this particular facet of the bill makes a special interest, a single tiny special interest, a part of a political party. It renders violence to the concept that political parties are important and necessary to our system of government.

It is also my regret that the clearinghouse function, which was previously provided by the General Accounting Office, has been dispensed with in this particular bill. It may be possible to resurrect it now that we have a new board of supervisory officers. It is the one element in the Federal Government that renders some good to State governments.

We seem to have plenty of interest in telling the American people a good story, but no interest in helping them with the elections. The clearinghouse served in that function and it is my hope that will be restored to the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I hope we adopt some of these amendments, but certainly not the Anderson-Udall amendment, and that we move this bill along and produce for the American people a good election reform bill at a time when confidence in our Government is threatened.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

(Mr. GAYDOS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on House Administration has spent many hours in marking up this bill and, at this time, I want to congratulate both the Chairman of the Subcommittee as well as my colleagues on the committee for their diligent efforts in drafting the legislation, which is now before the House. It was evident to all the members of the committee that there was no easy answer to the many problems that were raised. I do think, however, that the bill before us is a good one. It reflects an attempt to meet the problems arising out of the 1972 elections and to provide a means of preventing their repetition in future elections.

We must bear in mind the fact that many of the abuses of the 1972 elections which have been exposed, were brought to light only because of the disclosure requirements of the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971. Furthermore, we must not lose sight of the fact that many of those responsible for these rampant laws have been and are still being prosecuted under existing law.

So I submit that we do have existing law that has been beneficial.

I. LIMITATIONS ON EXPENDITURES AND CONTRIBUTIONS

The purpose of the bill before us is to add to the 1971 act by providing additional restrictions on campaign activities. The 1971 act established limitations on the amount that a candidate could spend on "communication media." The substantial sums spent in the 1972 Presidential campaign, namely $54 million by Mr. Nixon and $28 million by Senator McGovern, as well as some House campaign expenditures, led to the investigation of individual candidates in excess of $100,000, and even a few in excess of $200,000 have demonstrated that a limitation on only a portion of the total campaign expenditures is inadequate.

Accordingly, the bill before us would place an overall ceiling on campaign expenditures. For Presidential campaigns this would be $3.0 million in the preconvention period, $3.0 million in the general election. When compared with the expenditures on the 1972 election, it is abundantly clear that it is the intent of the bill that the title must be reversed and allowable Presidential campaign expenses must be substantially reduced.

With respect to senatorial campaigns the limits are 5 cents multiplied by the population of the State—but in no case less than $1,000 for each election: primary, primary and general.

For House campaigns the limits are $75,000 for each election; primary and general.

What house campaign expenditures exist for Presidential campaigns are not to exceed 25 percent of the limitation—for the costs entailed in fundraising. These provisions apply to all Federal elections.

Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate both the Members of the House and the Senate on the work that has been done. It is a far cry from what we have been used to in the past. It is a real attempt to meet more than one problem; it is a real attempt to meet the problems of a big money campaign and the small money campaign. It is a real attempt to meet the problem of the very large contributor to a campaign, to the national campaign, to the state campaign, to the district campaign, to the local campaign, to the special interest, to the individual candidate.

The bill does contain two provisions that could affect these elections. One provision allows an increase in the ceiling based on the increase in the price index from the base period of 1973 and the year preceding the election. The second provision does allow a candidate to exclude from the limitation any expenses—not to exceed 25 percent of the limitation—for the costs entailed in fundraising. These provisions apply to all Federal elections.

Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate both the Members of the House and the Senate on the work that has been done. It is a real attempt to meet more than one problem; it is a real attempt to meet the problems of a big money campaign and the small money campaign. It is a real attempt to meet the problem of the very large contributor to a campaign, to the national campaign, to the state campaign, to the district campaign, to the local campaign, to the special interest, to the individual candidate.

The bill contains provisions which would have a radical change from the present private system of financing Presidential elections. It expands on the dollar checkoff procedure by providing each major party with funds up to $2 million to cover the expenses of the party's nominating convention. Minor parties would be eligible for less sum based on their past vote or to be reimbursed on the basis of their present vote in the general election. Payment for convention expenses would be the first claim on the funds available from the checkoff procedure.

The major parties would be eligible to receive up to $30 million to cover expenses incurred in the general election. A less sum would be eligible to a lesser amount. If a party chooses to use this method and funds available from the dollar checkoff are insufficient to cover the entire $30 million then the parties would be allowed to raise the difference from private sources.

With respect to presidential nominating activities, the bill provides for funds from the dollar checkoff to be available on a matching basis. This is to assure that a candidate for nomination has sufficient national support and is not a frivolous candidate.

The use of funds from the dollar checkoff are limited only to the Presidential elections. Experience to date indicates that the overwhelming number of federal election campaign abuses involved the recent Presidential campaign.

I am not presently convinced that the use of the checkoff system is going to be a solution to this problem, but I do support this approach with the hope it will be a viable solution.

On the other hand, I am not convinced at this time that the dollar checkoff system should be applied to other Federal elections. There is a substantial difference both in the magnitude and the process of Presidential elections as compared to elections to congressional office which make the former more appropriate for the use of public rather than private funds. The problem of frivolous candidates alone is one that could be a nightmare in the case of public funding of congressional elections.

Furthermore, I am quite optimistic that the limitations on contributions and expenditures for Presidential campaign expenses combined with the disclosure provisions of the 1971 act as amended by the bill before us will eliminate the opportunity for campaign abuses. The Supreme Court said there ought to be a limit which would be similar for independent expenditures. The constitutionality may be doubtful, but if so, then the individual limitation is also doubtful.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

But let me make it clear my concern is not to try to draw attention of the Members to the fact that we are tampering in a very unfortunate way with free-speech rights, not of candidates or their supporters, but other citizens, persons who may be entirely unrelated to the candidates, who may be citizens' groups, as was the committee in the New York decision—American Civil Liberties Union against Jennings.

May I now ask whether or not this $1,000 limitation would apply to advertisement or advocacy of the pros and cons of issues which may be clearly identified with candidates, even though the candidates are not clearly identified within the meaning of the definition which follows this paragraph?

For example, if we have two candidates clearly defined on an emotional issue such as busing, inflation or amnesty, can citizens go out and advocate one side or the other of the issue and not mention candidates and escape limitation?

Mr. FRENZEL. In my judgment, they cannot. This particular amendment was proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. Nessen). The gentleman will find in our committee records that gentleman's explanation. I think he intended to cover by the words 'clear and unambiguous' reference to a candidate the kind of thing the gentleman is discussing. One cannot by subterfuge or indirect escape that description if in fact the candidate, opposed or proposed, is apparent.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Let me suggest that while such issues as busing or amnesty may be clear cut, other issues are less sharply defined. I feel that we will find ourselves in a quagmire of litigation as committees try to determine where this line is.

May I seek a further related question of the gentleman? Supposing a committee seeks to advocate the election of ten candidates and buys a $10,000 ad. Is it then to be prorated among the 10 of the same kind of thing the gentleman is discussing, a terrible mistake which will ultimately be invalidated by the courts, but I am not convinced that this $1,000 limitation was the cornerstone of the operation of our Government. We chose $1,000.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, in the catalog of abuses, compulsory political donations by union members rank right up there with the worst.

Absolutely no one argues against union officials' right to assist their political friends. It is precisely the same right enjoyed by business groups. The trouble begins when unions take dues money to finance that assistance.

How do they do this? Mostly through the services they perform for pronoun candidates. Union political front organizations, notably the Committee on Political Education, COPE, conduct get-out-the-vote drives in neighborhoods likely to go for right-thinking candidates; they turn over buildings, trucks, telephones, and dollars to friends of the union viewpoint.

Now if the dues-paying union man happens to like the candidate his union is helping, he may not worry much about where his dues are going. But what if he hates the fellow, cannot stomach his views for a minute? It is too bad, but there is no help for him: Like it or not, in the hands of each one of them. The views for a minute? It is too bad, but there is no help for him: Like it or not, in the hands of each one of them.

In 1973 the unions spent some $50 million on their political friends, only about 10 percent of which, according to labor columnist Victor Riesel, came from voluntary giving.

Accordingly, I would have been supporting the proposed amendments to curb "in kind" as well as directed donations. As the Dallas Morning News wrote in a recent editorial, we can—"Take it from George Meany: "Existing laws aren't nearly strong enough to prevent the use of union dues for political purposes.""

The ban, as the AFL-CIO chieftain puts it, is "honored as far as I am concerned by everybody in the breach."

I do not know how I can vote for this discriminatory legislation since the prohibiting amendments have been adopted.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois Mr. Michel.

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I would like first to commend the committee for the item that is being discussed in the legislation, namely, the establishment of one central campaign committee through which we would do all of our reporting. I think that is certainly needed. The fact that it establishes an independent election commission or board, I think, is good and sound and, as the Chairman pointed out, the simplifying of the election reporting requirements surely deserves our approval.

Then, too, the $100 limitation on cash contributions, in view of the shocking abuses that we have read and heard about within the last 18 months or so, one item that has not been touched upon up to this point, and that is the limitation of $1,000 on honoraria with a total of $10,000 in total for any Federal official.

And while this may in some respects be aimed at some of the Members of this body, I think in the main it is aimed at the members of the other body who have so plausibly proclaiming from time to time that Members of Congress do not need any pay raises, while all the time making as much and more in honorariums as their salary as Senators. I commend the committee for facing up to this thing and laying it out here for everybody to see for what it is worth.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to inform the gentleman that that particular amendment happens to be my amendment, and he is absolutely right.

Mr. MICHEL. I did not know that, but I would expect that the gentleman from Illinois, from conversing in the past, would be the one inclined to offer that kind of an amendment. Obviously he had enough support to persuade his fellow committee members to write that into the legislation brought before us here today.

I do have some reservation, however, about the $1,000 contribution limitation. I do not need it in my own case. I think my maximum contribution is $250 in this particular campaign. But we do have some big, significant races here in this body on both sides of the aisle, and I think on a practical point of view, when one runs for the U.S. Senate, that may very well be a low limitation. I believe the limitation in the Senate-passed bill is $3,000. Of course, that could very well be compromised.

I have some other serious reservations with respect to the $5,000 limit on election on contributions to candidates by our recognized national party organizations, as I engaged the chairman of that committee in a colloquy during his presentation. I think that limitation on some of the special interest groups is very much in order, but I would surely prefer that each of our national committees and our congressional and senatorial campaign committees would have been excluded from that $5,000 limitation. I want to see from both of the principal national parties enhanced.

In my own case, I would hope that we would not spend more than $25,000 or $30,000 in a race in which I am running, but as an 18-year incumbent, I would expect that all of the good will that I have built up over the period of many years would not require more than $30,000 or $50,000. A race in which I am running, but as an 18-year incumbent, I would expect that all of the good will that I have built up over the period of many years would not require more than $30,000 or $50,000.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Amore).

Mr. ANNUNZIO. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I would like to point out that I was responsible for the $75,000 amendment.

Mr. WARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 4 additional minutes.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield again to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Amore).

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, as I pointed out to my friend, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Amore), I was also the sponsor of the $75,000 limitation which was a compromise in the committee. We had several figures. But I want to point out that we can add $19,000 more to that, because we provide in the committee report 25 percent more than the $75,000, but in the end, in reality it amounts to $94,000.

Mr. MICHEL. On that point I might ask the gentleman a question. As I read it, we provided for a 25-percent amount over the $75,000, but would be that limited to the expenditures involved in raising the money, in raising the funds initially?

Mr. ANNUNZIO. It could be limited. I would call it the meat-and-potato amendment. If one has a banquet for example the cost of the meat and the potatoes would come out of that, out of the moneys one would raise.

Mr. MICHEL. Or if there was a direct mail expenditure, that would be included?

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Yes.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman.

Then, one final point I would like to make in transgressing upon the Member's time in general debate here is what I see is left out of the bill and which I would like to have been offered in the form of an amendment to appropriately treat the in-kind services and goods, for the special interest groups often make substantial contributions by providing in-kind services, such as telephones, cars, airplanes, computer time, staff "volunteers," and the like.

The committee bill would exempt these contributions from both the limitation and in some cases the disclosure requirements.

To prevent this type of campaign abuse, the amendment I had intended to offer before adoption of the closed rule, and it would have provided such in-kind contributions in excess of $100. I might say that in the four particular special elections for seats in the House of Representatives that were held earlier this year, I have heard the necessity of doing the job with pretty good justification, and I will insert with my remarks, when I have asked for permission to revise and extend, some documents that will lead us to believe in just the four special elections the in-kind services provided actually approached or exceeded the amount of hard contributions.

Current law defines the word "contribution" to exclude "services provided without compensation by individuals volunteering a portion or all of their time on behalf of a candidate or political committee," and the committee bill further exempts other limited personal services, so my amendment would have had no effect on truly voluntary efforts by individuals on behalf of a candidate.

The amendment I have asked about, however, have curbed the type of "in-kind" contributions of special interest groups that have resulted in millions of dollars worth of what are, in effect, unreported campaign contributions.

Such contributions have been extensively documented in past campaigns, and represent a serious violation of the spirit, if not the actual letter, of our campaign law.

While several legislative methods of dealing with this problem have been suggested, a flat prohibition of "in-kind" contributions in excess of $100 is by far the most effective, or, however it would eliminate, beyond the $100 level, the inevitable questions that arise over the worth or dollar value of such services to a candidate.

It seems to me if we hope to maintain any measure of credibility in our efforts at campaign reform, we must certainly take the steps necessary to curb abuses such as this.

Mr. Chairman, I am inserting in the Record the letters referred to earlier.

The documented record of the race between Democrat John Murtha and Republican Harry Fox reveals that literally tens of thousands of union dollars were poured into the campaign by Murtha for former Representative John Eyer's (R-Pa) seat in the 12th District.

Contributions were of two types:

1. "Hard" contributions in the form of cash donations, from thirty-two different union political action committees in the amount of $25,450.00 that were made to the Citizens for Murtha.

2. "Soft" contributions, in the form of full time union staff personnel from national COPE, AFL-CIO and various other unions, the mailing by unions in behalf of Murtha, organizations active at Murtha's urging that was supervised from the front and supervised by a union "volunteer," last minute get-out-the-vote activities, polls conducted by state AFL-CIO, and others such "soft" contributions. The amount identified in this area—by no means a full tally since the record for most of these hidden contributions remain in the hands of private organizations—comes to over $40,000—or nearly double the amount of hard contributions made by union officials.
SUMMARY

By category, identifiable soft contributions by unions to the Murtha campaign are as follows:

- Staff time, salaries and expenses: $8,220.00
- Printing and postage for mailings: $3,288.00
- Student activities: $369.63
- Other: $12,000.00
- Costs at the Sheraton: $14,000.00

Subtotal: $43,078.63

When one includes the "hard" (reported) contributions of $38,450.00, it can be seen that the value of the total union effort in the district is at least $95,428.04, or nearly as much as Murtha reported for his entire campaign.

OHIO'S FIRST DISTRICT

There is very little doubt that, both in and off the record, union officials and their political organizations had a tremendous impact on the race between the Democrat, Tom Luken, and the Republican, Bill Gradison, on March 5th.

Direct contributions by union political organizations to the Luken for Congress Committee were made by thirty-three separate union organizations in the amount of $30,675.00.

The scope and significance of the indirect contributions by union officials is captured in the February 28th edition of the Chronicle, a bimonthly publication of the Cincinnati AFL-CIO Labor Council, which is distributed to 4000 union officials in the Cincinnati area.

In it, an announcement is made of the "most important business meeting for all union stewards and committeemen geared to their vital part in labor's effort to insure the election of Tom Luken to Congress."

It goes on to note that "materials will be furnished and definite assignments outlined for the action required to build a Luken victory . . . (emphasis supplied)"

The cost of the space devoted in the Chronicle to Luken over the January 8-May 28 period represents an indirect cost of $366.00 alone.

In addition, William Sheehan, head of the National Labor Relations Board if the nation, and various local leaders were in for the election—or as George Meany put it on "Face the Nation" on March 5th concerning the race, "We're in the cockpit—voting out outsiders. Some of our colleagues have been voting out outsiders."

Among those in Cincinnati were Ray Alvarez, Area Director of COPE ($2,085.46 contribution in salary and expenses under previous formula); Ruth Colombo, COPE ($1,977.10 pro rated salary and expenses for one month); Jane Adams Ely, Ohio State AFL-CIO (salary unknown); W. C. Young, National Field Director, COPE ($907.50 expenses $8,659.84). Ely and Young were in for an undisclosed period of time, but the base minimum for expenses for a one day's stay could reasonably be put at $500.00.

Thus, identifiable staff time and expenses for union officials came to $4,592.63.

Moreover, Alvarez stated in an interview that at least $4,000 telephone calls were made from the headquarters call bank to the Central Labor Council to union members in the District. If the cost of those calls were projected to the area, and the assumptions made, that in Michigan, that would place their value at $3,760.00.

As in other districts, there were many mailings to union members:

- At least two—one dated February 18, 1974 and another February 28, 1974 were sent to the Third District, United Steel Workers of America.
- Another mailer dated February 28, 1974 was sent to all members of Local 980, UAW, and a third mailer dated February 18, 1974 was sent to members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

There was discussion of local incorporation plans to promote the candidate's Luken for Congress.

In all at least $8,342.55 in paid staff time and telephone costs on a projected basis were pumped into the Luken campaign.

MICHIGAN'S EIGHTH DISTRICT

As in the case with other special, off-year elections, the race between the Democrat, Traxler and Republican Jim Sparling was significantly influenced by the infusion of "hard" and "soft" contributions by union officials to the Traxler campaign.

Hard contributions amounted to nearly $29,000.00 with the United Auto Workers—an independent union based in the state—contributing nearly half the "hard" labor money, as reported by the Traxler for Congress Volunteer Committee.

Some 22 labor political action groups contributed $25,880 in "hard" money to the campaign, in a figure that, even "curious research shows does not realistically measure the contribution on the part of the union hierarchy in behalf of the Traxler campaign.

STAFF

A minimum of eight national, state, and local union officials contributed their paid staff time (plus expenses) to the project of getting Traxler elected.

Those officials were:

- James George, United Auto Workers (UAW), Detroit, annual salary $17,093.80, expenses $4,285.06
- Sam Fishman, UAW, salary $23,088.10, expenses $19,468
- Ray Alvarez, Area Director, AFL-CIO COPE, salary $14,752.00, expenses $6,886.17
- Ruth Colombo, Assistant Area Director, Workers' Activities Program (COPE), salary $29,300.50, expenses $3,305.90
- Ruth Colombo, "Mrs. Butch" Warner, 2756 N. Orr Rd., Hemlock, Michigan, was off his job (unpaid) from January 14, 1974 to April 30, 1974 to work as coordinator on the campaign for the "Traxler for Congress Labor Coordinator."

An employee of Michigan Bell and a paid staffer, President of the Michigan Workers of American Local No. 4108, Warner's worth to the campaign (he is a cable splicer per week costs $525 per week plus some of the union contract come to $3,392.50).

 Warner disclosed in an interview that he had invested worked with COPE and UAW personnel, identifying Sam Fishman as having been on the scene for at least one week, W. C. Young for 10 days, Ruth Colombo as having supervised the pay phones at the Traxler bank to used contact the 3,000 active TAW members, 5,000 retirees and 25,000 AFL-CIO members in the district.

For various reasons, as an unlisted number, personnel moving, etc.—some 50% of the 72,000 union members, according to Warner, were not contacted. Total some 43,800 calls were made, many of them twice, once they were identified as in the Traxler camp. Assuming 1/2 of those contacted were in the category, and the approximately 35,200 phone calls to members alone at the rate of 4½ cents per call (as billed in Miller) for a net cost of $2,225.

In terms of paid staff time, we must weigh in the appropriate pro rata share of Ray Alvarez' salary and expenses. Alvarez candidates he was assigned to work in three congressional districts (Ohio 1, Michigan...
gan 5 and Michigan 8 from January 3 through April 18, 1974, of his annual terms. Thus, in all three races, his “in-kind” contribution was $6,356.40, a third of which ($2,185.40) is allocated to the race in Michigan 8.

Applying the same pro rata formula, the “in-kind” contributions for other COPE and UAW operatives are as follows: W. C. Young had salary of $738.00 and expenses of $309 which totals $1,047.

Colombo had salary of $780.00 and expenses of $309 which totals $1,047.

Sam Fishman had salary of $444.00 and expenses of $306.00.

In summary, a cursory glance will establish at least $7,946.96 in “soft” contributions of paid staff time to the Traxler campaign.

In addition to the identifiable staff time and expenses involved, a substantial “soft” contribution come in the form of four separate mailings, three of which were sent to “All UAW members in Michigan’s 8th Congressional District.” Copies of those mailings are as follows:

Two different mailing permits were used at the non-profit organization rate, with permit #5355, which belongs to American Mailers and Printers of Detroit, on two mailings, and the UAW’s own permit #23005 being used for the third.

First in cost, as estimated by the Michigan printer, here is what each of the mailings would cost:

Mailing of March 30, 1974 to 45,000 UAW members:
Printing at $30.80/m, $1,398.40; postage at 1.7c, $373.10; and postage, $124.70 totals $1,954.20.

Mailing of April 2, 1974 to 45,000 UAW members: (It is noteworthy that this mailing is not under permit #5355, contained as an insert a six panel brochure allegedly paid for by the Traxler for Congress Volunteer Committee.)
Printing a two page letter at $38.30/m, $1,698.40; postage at 1.7c, $373.10; and postage at 2.3c, $214.70 totals $2,286.20.

Mailing of April 6, 1974 to 45,000 UAW members:
Printing, $1,698.40; postage at 1.7c, $373.10; and postage at 2.9c, $124.70 totals $2,266.20.

Mailing of “8th Congressional District Special Election Edition” of Michigan AFL-CIO News (Vol. 35, No. 37, April 1974) to UAW members in the 8th District.

(In this 8 page tabloid, five pages are devoted primarily to promoting the candidacy of Traxler, taking 50% of the costs, the “in-kind” contribution is shown below.)
Printing, $2,750.00; and postage, $300.00. A total of $3,050.00.

Thus, total soft printing costs contributed by the UAW and Michigan State AFL-CIO to the candidacy of Traxler came to a total of $8,118.60.

SUMMARY
It is therefore reasonable to state that many thouesd of “soft” contributions were tunnelled into the Michigan 6 race by the unions and union officials.

The telephone tabloid is shown as follows: “Hard” contributions from labor sources, $28,880.

“Soft” contributions:
Printing expenses and expenses $7,946.96.
Telephone costs $2,922.00.
Total $10,868.96.

This “investment” is over and above the reported money, for a grand total union contribution of $47,808.00.

And the influence officials were identified as being on the scene, whether as paid or unpaid is not clear. The three were: James George, UW, Detroit (annual salary of $17,093.80); Ernest Dillard, UW, Detroit (annual salary of $18,394.64); and John Dewan, UW, Madison Heights (annual salary $10,493.80).

MICHIGAN’S EIGHTH DISTRICT
The race for Vice President Gerald Ford’s former seat in Congress was somewhat different from the other three special elections, in that a Democratic candidate (Mr. John Martill) took over direction and management of the Vander Veen campaign.

Nevertheless, the influence directing the campaign was exercised in both a direct and indirect fashion, much as it was in all other special elections.

1. Direct contributions as filed by the treasurer of the Vander Veen for Congress Committee lists some 3 separate union political action committee groups contributed a total of $18,711.00 to the Vander Veen campaign—or approximately 36% of the total direct reported contributions of $49,588.70.

2. Indirect contributions. Perhaps because a professional consulting firm was retained to direct the Vander Veen campaign, the "high profile" maintained by union officials while working in other special elections was not as strong. Ray Alvarez, area Director of the AFL-CIO’s Committee on Political Education (COPE) admitted to having been in Michigan’s 8th District. Under the same formula developed for the Michigan’s eighth District some $3,085.46 of Alvarez’s annual salary and expenses of $306.00 is considered an indirect campaign contribution.

The printing area was one that afforded a good “soft” support for the Democrat. Curiously, the same format, type face, halftones, paper, three of the pages are exactly the same that appeared in a tabloid-type mailer that went out under both the permit number of the candidate ($2552) and the permit of the Western American mailers (21), with the place in behalf of Region 1-D, United Auto Workers, Box B, Grand Rapids, Mich.

In terms of specific mailings and costs, the following were sent during the course of the campaign:

Two page letter, enclosing a razored “fact sheet” on Vander Veen plus a postage return card under Permit #4731 addressed to Region 1-D, UAW, soliciting workers for the Vander Veen campaign—no mailing costs.

Printing, $1,151.70; postage at 1.7c, $374.00; and postage at 2.9c, $383.00, a total $1,909.70.

This tabloid was also sent to all UAW members in the district.

Printing, $2,373.00; postage at 1.7c, $374.00; and postage at 2.9c, $383.00, a total $3,030.00.

In addition, another tabloid mailer was also prepared that is once again, similar & identical in places to the other two tabloids. The difference is that this is printed on offset stock instead of newsprint and in all likelihood mailed at an estimated cost of $3,315.00 to all UAW members in the district.

Thus total “in kind” printing and contributions to the Vander Veen campaign came to $8,665.70; combined with the salary for just one tabloid staff, Ray Alvarez, the total in kind contributions in their questlet of the districts comes to at least $10,000.

Obviously, not all “soft” contributions are covered in the report on this district—telephone, expenses, or profits maintained by union officials during the race makes them almost impossible to detect.

Mr. HAYS, Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO).

Mr. ANNUNZIO asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 16090. I want to particularly congratulate the chairman of the full committee for the patient manner that he has handled the past 6 months while the committee was deliberating all of the amendments that have been offered in committee to this legislation. As a co-sponsor of this legislation, I would also like to add my tribute to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. DRIESEN), the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BRADSHAW), the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. DELL), the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEN) and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. COMMITTO) that in fact, all the members of the full committee on House Administration for the manner in which they attended all the meetings in order to come out with a bill that deals with limitations, that deals with disclosure and deals with an idea whose time has come. I refer to public financing.

I would like to remind the Members of this House that in 1966 we passed in this body a bill a $1 contribution, the contribution the taxpayer would designate to which political party his contribution would go. In the public finance section this legislation we have $24 million that has already been rejected by the Internal Revenue Service checked off by the citizens as a voluntary contribution. It is estimated that by 1976 we are going to have $60 million in this fund.

I want to also remind the Members of this House that I am totally against any moneys being taken out of the general revenue fund for purposes of financing an election; but I do strongly favor the fact that the American people checked off and have mandated the Members of Congress to act. “We have given you voluntary $60 million. We expect you to use this money so that we can have the kind of elections in America that we can feel comfortable with, and especially to the Members of Congress and the President of the United States.”

This is the reason we included in the bill a limitation of $20 million for candidates in a presidential level, $20 million for the Republicans, and $2 million for each party convention.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAYS, Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, there is $2 million for each party convention and with the Presidential primaries to be financed, as fully explained by my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. JOHN BRADSHAW, that we would have to collect $230 in small contributions, at $200 in 29 States, a total of $100,000 to be eligible to qualify.

I believe in congressional public financing and the checkoff plan. If the money is there and if the committee can work its will this afternoon, I would like to see both the Democratic Congressional Committee and the Republican Congressional Committee do the same from Illinois (Mr. MICHET), that those committees be used as a vehicle to distribute that public money that has been designated by the taxpayers to be used for public financing of congressional elections.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Dent), the chairman of the Election Committee.

Mr. DENT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. DENT, Mr. Chairman, with all of the talk about the close rule and not allowing certain sections of the bill to be open for amendment, I can say to the Members that for the number of years—not only months—that our committee have heard hearings so forth, and the committee itself under the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hays), with its meetings and markups for 22 sessions, the major point of discussion in all of these days and hours has been the question of money—m-o-n-e-y—the root of all evil and the source of much good.

Money is the name of the game in politics, and until we admit that and stand up and face it all of the reforms that we may yap about and talk about and try to get our attention about are just so much talk.

As long as one candidate can spend $204,000 in a general election against a candidate who spends $2,775, it is a farce and a fraud upon the body politic; as long as the total number of candidates in the entire primary and general last year, who were candidates in the primaries and won and went on to the general election, 834 candidates spending a total of $40 million less $8,000.

We are proposing in this legislation to increase that spending allowance, almost by mandate in this law, to $240 million for 835 candidates. Who on God's earth is going to say that this is a reform when we are proposing to spend $7,395,000 for an election for Members of Congress here is what happens because of this (By Byron E. Calame)

Los Angeles—Like the President himself, some of Richard Nixon's foes in the West are proposing to spend $7,395,000 for an election for Members of Congress.

Here is what happens because of this: How DOUGH IS SOFT

BYRON E. CALAME

Dues have also been used, the documents indicate, to supply IAM-backed candidates with poll and printing services and to finance important union get-out-the-vote campaigns. You can do that sort of thing, by congressional incumbents back home during campaigns, and dinners benefiting office by bedtime if by chance he cannot sleep, when he dies, the deceased Member receives automatically an extra year's salary to help him out with his own final arrangements."

Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to put the plan up for the American people to see. I believe it is almost incredible, however, that this long and detailed bill makes absolutely no mention of what is probably the largest single abuse of our present campaign laws, the millions spent under the guise of "political education" for union members. The indirect aid includes some of labor's most potent political weapons, assignments of paid staff members to candidates' campaigns, use of union computers, mobilization of get-out-the-vote drives. "

Mr. DENT. I do not want to read the whole thing, but I just want to tell the Members what he counts as an expenditure, as a general 'educational' cost. He says: "The Library of Congress provides him with free reading matter..."
... machinists' computer for the Senator's use in the Brown office. The minutes of the Machinists Non-Partisan Political League executive committee show that Mr. Ellinger recommended that the funds be used to finance "general-fund money" (the league's separate kitty composed of voluntary donations and which could be used for campaign contributions toward the Gale McGee campaign.)

Despite the warning, internal reports show that in April and May, $1,500 in IOU form were paid out of the league's political-education fund, built from dues money. Computing & Securities Journal, Minneapolis Mining & Manufacturing Co. received $414, and $4,191.90 went to reimburse the IAM treasury for cards it provided.

Doubling the payment of the machinists' union, and indeed, aimed at the union's members and their families, on the theory that if a union is allowed to pay for direct contributions, the money used for this activity is called "education money," or "soft money."

For the benefit of those who have never seen the value of the machinists' union are, indeed, aimed at the union's members and are therefore proper, says William Holayter, director of the Machinists Non-Partisan Political League.

The federal statutes do permit money "or "soft money." IAM treasurer John Tinnney's campaign shows that the Wyoming Printing is another campaign expenditure and it would have to be refunded. The federal statutes do permit money "or "soft money."

The amount of union funds now distributed at a county fair. Representa-... form, and I intend to vote for portions of this legislation.

I think it is, however, that campaign reform, whether it involves financing or whether it involves special interest groups or whatever, is not genuine reform until we start to face the basic question of personal financial disclosure. It seems to me that the greatest doubt, the greatest amount of suspicion in the minds of the American people, has to do with the decisions that we in this House make, or whatever, in the executive branch and in the judicial branch that affect the public interest, those decisions that are made by all of us, whether elected or appointed.

The decisions are decisions that affect defense contracts and affect mineral leases and all these things, as well as other potential conflicts of interest which we in this body and these other two branches of Government might have.

Mr. Chairman, many of us have voluntarily disclosed not only our statement of assets and liabilities but also our private income tax returns.

However, it is not enough to have voluntary disclosure. The standards which we have to abide by now provided in the code of ethics, Section 18 and Section 23 are minimal. They do not get to our sources of income; they do not get to our assets and liabilities except as it applies to debts and transactions above a certain amount. It just seems to me that the field of personal financial disclosure is the major uncharted area as far as campaign reform is concerned.

Mr. FREY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEELMAN. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FREY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to commend the gentleman for his own personal work in this area. I have also been involved in this matter for several years.

I think, to a certain extent this does constitute an invasion of privacy of each and every Member. Yet under the circumstances we face today I think we must take that extra step and make an extra amount of effort to win back the confidence of the people in this country in ourselves and in all those who are in politics.

As distasteful as it is personally to me—and it frankly is—I think it is the price we have to pay. It is the price we have to pay, because of the loss in confidence that we have experienced.

Mr. Chairman, it is a shame that we are not able under these procedures, to bring this matter up and to get this meaningful reform enacted.

Mr. STEELMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman makes a good point.

That the rule that has been adopted, we will not be able to offer this amendment. I wish to say that I intend to remain active in this field, and I know that the cosponsors of this amendment also intend to remain active in this area of personal financial disclosure, not because of the wrongdoing it may uncover or the wrongdoing it may prevent, but because of the contribution it will make toward restoring public trust. It seems to me that is the lacking commodity right now.

Mr. STEELMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FREY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I resent the inference cast by the gentleman from Washington. I did not mislead anybody, and I did not try to mislead anybody. I said, in response to a question that the gentleman asked about publishing his amendment 24 hours before in the Congressional Record, I also said that that was a requirement, I said I would not object, and hoped that no one else would object to an amendment which would have the effect of the rule being offered to the House just because it was not published in the Record. And that is all I said.

If the gentleman from Washington was misled, then the gentleman was misled because the gentleman either was not listening or was not here, or did not understand what I said.

Mr. STEELMAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman yields further, I desire to state once again that this is a gag rule that we are working under. I believe that this is serious election reform that the gentleman in the well is working for. This is what I believe that we should open up the financial affairs of we Members of the Congress. We are not ordinary citizens—and I repeat, we are not ordinary citizens—we are public servants. If we are going to have election reform that is meaningful, we are going to have to have this included before the public will have some real confidence in the Members of the Congress.
August 7, 1974

Congressional Record — House H 7823

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. MATHIS).

(Mr. MATHIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MATHIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I, too, would like to join in with my colleagues on both sides of this body today in offering my congratulations to the members of the committee for the time the gentleman has spent in bringing before the House this legislation, which I believe goes a long way toward restoring the confidence of the faith of the American people in our democratic institutions, and hopefully in our public servants, we politicians, if you will.

There is one thing that I would like to point out in this bill that has not been pointed out before, and that is we have removed the limitation on the media expenditures. The House in its wisdom, has adapted to this legislation fixing a ceiling of $50,000 that could be expended on media. We have repealed that section, and we leave it to the candidate's own judgment as to where he wants to spend that $50,000 where he can get the best results for his dollar in his campaign.

The one big fault that I find in the bill is that it simply allows too much time to be spent on elections. We come in here, and we talk about campaign reform. We talk about restoring the faith of the people in the processes of our Government, and yet we are allowing $270,000 plus to be spent by a candidate for Congress in any given year. I want to suggest once again to all of you who feel as I do that this figure is too high; that I will offer at the proper time an amendment that will reduce the amount of money that can be spent in any one election to $42,500.

It makes no sense at all to me to allow a candidate for Congress to spend $270,000 for a job that pays $42,500.

I do not think there is any way we are going to restore the confidence of the American people in this Congress as an institution unless and until we adopt some kind of a realistic spending figure.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. MIZELL).

(Mr. MIZELL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MIZELL addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. KOCH).

(Mr. KOCH asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KOCH. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Ohio for yielding me this time.

This bill has three provisions in it which everyone concerned about campaign reform wanted, and they have been accomplished, limitation of expenditures, complete disclosure, and public financing. The latter bill, with the committee amendments is a good one.

I know that there are those who will seek to lessen the amount that can be spent by a candidate for Congress in the bill now before Mr. Chairman in addition to the actual cost of raising the money.

There will be some who are going to say they are going to outreform the reformers by reducing that amount. I would not serve the American public because to give a nonincumbent a reasonable chance of winning requires a reasonable sum for campaigning.

While I thought there should have been a higher limit, for example, $60,000, the amount in the bill is a reasonable amount, and I would hope that it will not be changed.

I also want at this moment to pay my respects to the distinguished chairman of the committee, Mr. HAYES. The chairman of our committee has been the subject of a great deal of what I consider to be unfair attacks. On the ground that he was stopping the reform bill from coming to the floor. It is just the other way. The fact it, it was primarily through his efforts that the bill was placed the point where we could bring it to the floor. I know that the chairman gives at least as good as he gets in debate, so I do not think he was as upset about the attacks as those of us who believe in our committee and were aware of what was taking place.

Mr. BADILLO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOCH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BADILLO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to compliment the gentleman from New York for his work on the committee.

(Mr. BADILLO asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BADILLO. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that we have the opportunity today to improve and expand upon the reform of our political process which we began with passage of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. We have had ample time over the past 3 years to observe the loopholes and inadequacies of that particular measure, and the bill before us today, H.R. 16090, will remedy some of the deficiencies of our earlier effort.

The Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 will for the first time set absolute ceilings on expenditures for campaigns for all Federal offices. It sets much-needed limits on individual contributions to any single candidate and aggregate contributions for all Federal offices in any year. It places limits on cash contributions and restricts a candidate's personal financing of his own campaign. Most importantly, H.R. 16090 authorizes and uses public funds for Presidential elections and establishes qualifications for raising donations in small amounts to receive Federal matching funds for primary elections.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that H.R. 16090 provides us a vehicle to enact a meaningful campaign reform bill in this Congress. The provisions of this bill are important and they set new standards for campaign practices. However, the measure needs considerable amplification if we are not to be accused of being nothing more than an extension of our campaign reform. The events of the 1972 election, in all their sordid detail, cry out for a response from us, and I am convinced that the American people will not continue to support comprehensive legislation to eliminate once and for all the pervasive influence of private wealth in the election of candidates for Federal offices.

True campaign reform entails much more than setting limits on contributions and expenditures. I support the establishment of such ceilings as a necessary beginning, and though nobody man, is the omission from H.R. 16990 of public financing for House and Senate elections. I cannot understand how the committee could endorse the removal of private money from Presidential races and not concede that the public interest lies in the same treatment of congressional races. Consequently, I am joining the movement to amend this bill to provide Federal matching funds for congressional general elections. This particular amendment will not pass public financing for partisanship. Passage of a strong campaign reform bill is our mandate from the people, and I hope that we will meet that high expectation in this Chamber today.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON).

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. Thompson) and extend my personal commendation to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on House Administration. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) is really in many, many respects a member of this Committee. His basically kind and generous nature is not understood universally. Very importantly, his commitment to make the House a responsive instrument to resolve the public policy issues confronting this country is known by all who watch him and work with him.

I think that the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. Thompson) should be commended; the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Brademas); the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Dent); the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Annunzio); the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Gaydos); the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. Jones); the gentleman from New York (Mr. Koch); the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. P. Goode); the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. Gurry); and the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Matsui); and the whole committee on our side, have brought to the floor a most worthy product. More importantly, they have permitted all of those amendments that had meaningful support to be the subject of the House working its will.

I would also like to note, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. Frenzel) who has played a very constructive role in the developing of this legislation. While we are at it—the gentleman from Florida (Mr. Fasell), the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. Udall), the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Anderson), the gentleman from Washington (Mr. Foley), and the gentleman from New York (Mr. Connelly), have all contributed to the important public dialog on the nature of the legislation the House should write.

I freely predict when the sound and fury is behind us, just as did our Committee on the Judiciary reflect great credit on this institution by its conduct in recent weeks, similarly the Committee on House Administration and the House itself will find the part of a meaningful, responsible, and effective campaign reform bill that will come to grips with most of the urgently pressing campaign financing problems.

So, Mr. Chairman, again I want to commend the committee and say I am sure within the next 2 days we are going to write legislation every single man and woman in this House can be most proud of.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, this is an historic day in the life of our political institutions. The bill presently before us gives us the opportunity to get politics out of the gutter and back onto a platform of public respect envisioned by those who drafted the Constitution.

This clearly is one of the most important bills which will come before us this year. In my opinion, as I shall point out in these remarks, it does not go quite far enough nor perform the total cleanup that I would like to see it perform.

But what it does do is in every respect salutary. It is, on balance, an exceptionally good bill and a much stronger bill than cynics had thought this Congress would adopt.

We owe it to all those who want to believe in the basic goodness and decency of the American system to pass this bill by an overwhelming and resounding majority.

One of the saddest byproducts of the Watergate scandals has been the general impression that politics and our historic and cherished system of electing public officials is by its very nature corrupt—that is, always will be, and that there is no use trying to make it otherwise.

This is tragic for two reasons. First, it is not the American system of public elections worthy of public confidence.

Ridiculed in public print, satirized by cartoonist and comedian, butt of the street corner humorist and self-righteous politician, there is absolutely no necessity to the functioning of our society as water is to the flow of a river. It does not have to be filthy and corrupted—and neither does the river—for man has the wisdom, and the will, to keep them both clean.

Politics—the process of elections—is the lifeblood of democracy, the fuel that propels the engines of a free society. To profess love for the democratic form of government but disdain for politics is to pretend to honor the product while despising the process that creates it.

There have been abuses of the system. There is no denying it. We should not close our eyes to those abuses. We should correct them. We must devise laws that prevent their recurrence.

The face of American life has cried out more loudly for reform than any other aspect of political campaign financing. It has cast a strengthening shadow over all else we do in our public institutions.

More than 6 years ago—in April 1967—I wrote an article for Harper's magazine calling for reform of the campaign financing laws. For years their cynical made a mockery of our elective system. Under leave to extend my remarks, I am inserting a copy of that artiicle for printing in the Record at the end of the statement.

Three years ago, Congress finally acted. It passed in 1971 the most sweeping campaign reform law since the Corrupt Practices Act of 1925. Although the public was largely unaware of this law, it was a long step in the right direction. The bill we are considering today would build and improve upon it.

The 1971 law strictly limited total campaign expenditures in communications media. It makes candidates themselves responsible for reporting all moneys spent in their behalf during a campaign, puts an end to the devious practice of hiding behind phony "committees" whose expenditures the candidate pretended to know nothing about.

Under the 1971 law, full public disclosure must be made of every contribution in excess of $100 including the name and address of the contributor. Now, in light of the mammoth contributions revealed by the Watergate hearings, contributions in the range of $50,000 and upward, some from corporations and thus clearly illegal under even the old 1925 law, which slipped in just days before the new law took effect and went otherwise unnoticed—we now are considering an absolute limit of $1,000 that any one individual may lawfully give to any Federal political campaign. I support this provision.

Enactment of this proposed limit will go a long way to reduce the shameful reliance upon a few enormous contributors who more and more have held the keys to access to public service, particularly in the larger States—California, New York, Texas, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Ohio—where it now can take $2 million or more to conduct a winning statewide campaign.

The bill presently before us would limit total expenditures in most congressional campaigns to no more than $75,000. Such a limit, unless we merely wanted to turn Congress into an exclusive playground of the wealthy and put its seats up for auction to the highest bidder, like seats on the New York Stock Exchange, I think we well could do with a lower ceiling.

Another extremely useful reform which went into effect in 1972 seeks to broaden the base of political fund-raising and give more plain citizens a piece of the action. It permits a tax deduction for any individual American contributing up to $50 to the candidate or party of his choice—or up to $100 on a joint husband and wife income tax return.

Unfortunately, this law has been little publicized. When it becomes generally known, it should provide encouragement for many small and moderate contributors to take up the slack heretofore filled by contributions in the multithousand-dollar range.

Personally, I would support an even stronger inducement, such as a tax credit rather than just a deduction, for any individual contribution up to $25.

Along the same line, Congress has tried to freshen the springs of Presidential campaign financing by permitting every taxpayer to check a square on his income tax report authorizing exactly $1 of his tax to go to the national Presidential campaign. This particular law was administratively emasculated in 1973 by the IRS in the tax return form, the IRS required any citizen desiring to avail himself of it to take the initiative, ask for and fill out an entirely separate form. Most citizens did not know to do so. Most did not even know of the law.

Under outraged pressure from Members of Congress, the IRS supported that reform, IRS was forced this year to carry out the intent of the law. The box now appears on the form 1040 itself, and a lot of good Americans fill the box and authorize the $1 deduction. I predict that, as it becomes better understood in subsequent years, more and more Americans will avail themselves of this popularizing of political contributions and expunge money for Presidential campaigns.

Some now are suggesting public financing of all political campaigns, including congressional elections. In other words, they want to pay campaign expenses out of the public treasury. Without doubt the one thing that has done more than any other to poison the political process, to disenchant decent Americans with political life and keep good men out of it, is the nauseating prevalence of slander and personal abuse in political campaigns.

For this reason, I feel that the bill presently before us, as good as it is, does not go far enough. I would like to see the legal and illegal bundling of contributions and the penalties which it applies against misrepresenting campaign gifts and expenditures equally applicable against: First, publication of any false statement and arbitrarily turn it over to the Department of Justice; second, reproducing any bogus telegram or communication falsely purporting to bear the signature of any other person; third, using trick photography to cast an opponent in an unfavorable light.

I was prepared to offer such an amendment to this bill, but as I understand the rule, an amendment of that type would not be in order. I urge the committee to keep it in mind for future legislation.

If democracy and our form of elective government are sacred, then the political processes that create them should be equally sacred. Those processes can be kept clean. It is up to all of us to insist that they are.

Enactment of this bill today will be one long stride in that direction.

Although something short of a total answer to all of our Nation's electoral problems, the bill deserves to be considered on the basis of the affirmative reforms it makes.

On this basis, it clearly deserves our support.

WASHINGTON INSIGHT: CLEAN MONEY FOR CONGRESS

By Jim Wright

No facet of American life cries out more loudly for reform than the dingy gray area of political campaign financing, which casts a lengthening shadow across all else we do in our elective public institutions.
As a veteran of seven successful campaigns for the U.S. House of Representatives and one losing race for the Senate, I've experienced the skyrocketing cost of politics. It is now, in fact, nearly impossible in most states for men of modest means to seek high public office unless they are willing wards of the wealthy.

The price of campaigning has risen so high that it imperils the independence of our political institutions. Big contributors more and more hold the keys to the gates of public service. This is choking off the well-springs of new thought and new effort in politics. For, limiting the field of choice available to the public, I am convinced, more than ever, that the intelligence of the people would be更好 than the most energetic political campaigns is deteriorating as a result.

One curious by-product of big money in politics is that, as the Corrupt Practices Act approach with its nauseating emphasis on "image" at the expense of substance. In the arena where Lincoln Douglas once debated great issues, advertising agencies last year hawked candidates like soap flakes.

Nineteen sixty-six was the year of the political singing commercial. The public is now so saturated with this garbage that it's difficult to get them to listen to the candidates, let alone vote for them.

But today our capacity for indignation seems to have withered. We take for granted that big money is evil. In the 1883 Corrupt Practices Act, we expected that public officials would play by the rules. Now we see them evading those rules.

Consider the case of Senator Tom Dodd of Connecticut, who paid off his campaign debts by use of proceedings of testimonial dinners at each of which the senator was a speaker. And a Vice President (Lyndon Johnson for the second), two of a species in Sen Dodd's constituents bought tickets to one or more of these gala affairs, which jointly netted the Senator $75,000.

For a public official, debt is debilitating. It can plague his conscience and divide his energies. It can sorely test his integrity, or sap his courage at the very time he needs it most. Ultimately, if he remains single-minded in his devotion to the public well and keeps his back royally turned, big money can drive him, despairs, out of public life. Sometimes its shadow towers over him for years after he has left office. For example, Senator Johnson.

I know this at first hand. In 1961, I made an unsuccessful race in a special election for the U.S. Senate. After it was over, we discovered that we had lavished $400,000 on this campaign. That's a lot of money. But what kind of a debt in 1961, with interest, would have been enough then, would have been enough in 1962. Obviously, it hadn't been enough. But I ended up owing $68,000, mostly for debts which I was personally authorized. It took me two and a half years to retire this note.

Consider another case of Democrat Leonard Weeks, who served in Congress for fourteen years in the House. He came to Congress in January 1959 owing $80,000 in campaign debts and business expenses. He was able to pay off all of these debts by 1961. He was defeated in 1962 when Nixon carried Iowa for the Republicans. Today, six years after leaving office, Wolf has finally paid off most of the $80,000. When friends urged him to run again in 1966, he understandably said, "No, thanks!"

But even this financial disaster seems minor compared with the experience of James E. Torrance, who conducted an unsuccessful campaign for Lieutenant Governor of Texas in 1942. He came close, the run-off, but lost in the second primary. For almost five years, he has been making regular monthly payments from his savings to pay off the $25,000 he owed his campaign debt. And he calculates that, on this schedule, he will not be in the clear until 1961. It will take him seven years to pay for one near-miss at the polls!

Perhaps you're thinking, "That's too bad, but it's his tough luck. A fellow who can't afford it shouldn't take on a campaign of that kind." And perhaps you're right. But where does that leave any able young American who genuinely wants to contribute his time and talent to the political life of his country? Unless he has inherited great wealth or the patronage of large contributors, who will expect him in one way or another to serve their interest in Congress?

"TEN MILLION HANDS TO SHAKE"

So far as my own case goes, I've been luckier than most politicians. When I made my first run for Congress I had enough money to pick up the tab personally for half (about $6,000) of the campaign cost. Since the beginning, I've made it an unswerving determination never more than a $10 contribution from any individual. The average over the years has been around $10. This policy is an important part of my personal obligation. I wouldn't want it otherwise. A Congressman can get by this way if he forgoes the $10, as many have in having a very understanding constituency.

So far as my own case goes, I've been luckier than most politicians. When I made my first run for Congress I had enough money to pick up the tab personally for half (about $6,000) of the campaign cost. Since the beginning, I've made it an unswerving determination never more than a $10 contribution from any individual. The average over the years has been around $10. This policy is an important part of my personal obligation. I wouldn't want it otherwise. A Congressman can get by this way if he forgoes the $10, as many have in having a very understanding constituency.
But this formula is impossible for a state-wide contest, as I discovered in my 1961 try for the Senate, in which I had to meet candidates on the 27,000 mile odyssey that race, two hundred and twenty-one of whom had an equal chance of winning. In truth, as I have said before, the only thing that I could do was to try to make the race as dramatic and exciting as I could. This was done by a series of well-planned tours, each consisting of a series of town meetings in different parts of the state, each meeting consisting of a speech by me and a question-and-answer period. It was this formula that I used to win the Senate race in 1961, and it is the one that I intend to use in 1966 to win the Senate race again.

In the ensuing four months, I traveled 27,000 miles, made 678 speeches, spent an average of four-and-a-half hours a night and worked off eighteen pounds. During one week, I averaged eleven speeches a day in as many different localities. But it was like trying to phony off the Gulf of Mexico with an eyeproper. For there were then ten million people in Texas; if I worked hard enough to be talking to the same people again, I would have taken me some eighty-eight years to talk for one minute with every citizen in the state.

The upshot was that I came close, but not close enough. Out of the seventy-eight contests I entered, I won twenty-one. Had I won even one of these twenty-one contests, I would have put me in the runoff, with John Tower, the sole Republican. Tower subsequently won over airline executive Bill Blakley who had lost me out of the number two position. Each of these two men had spent on television, newspaper, and radio advertising $300,000 or more, the average per-dollar-bought cost having been about $1.00. And the amount I'd been able to put together.

I planned to make the race again in 1966 with the President's Tower would be up for re-election. But, as the time drew near, the problem of money again loomed large. I could not bring myself to initiate alliances with those who could provide the wherewithal in big chunks. This is, alas, the accepted way in Texas, and probably in most states. Nor, with a son in college and a daughter almost ready to enter, could I mortgage their futures on another underdog campaign. At this juncture, I lost my $100,000 or more and a job.

In a last-ditch effort to find a broad base of support, I hired a public relations man to handle the advertising for me. I received nearl... aside the rotten boroughs of maladjusted districts, and outlawed the poll tax. But of what real value is it if we are unable to recruit our elected officials from all levels of our society? Or what value is "one man, one vote" if it allows candidates in the pockets of the few who provide the money for political campaigns? What real choice does the voter have when only a limited few can afford to get their names on the ballot?

This year Congress will once again consider bills designed to restore decency and sense to political campaigning. Let us hope that this will be a year of action.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, at long last we have before us an election reform measure for consideration. While imperfect, this measure will nevertheless, lay the groundwork for providing substantial changes in our election law, changes which should help to tighten the controls of campaign contributions and expenditures of candidates for Federal offices, provided that we adopt an open rule to the bill before us, H.R. 16090, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments.

Mr. Chairman, the American people have clearly expressed their staunch support for election reform. Having witnessed the debacles of the past 2 years, resulting in instituting proceedings for the impeachment of our President and the result of undesirable, illegal campaign practices, the American public, to whom we are all responsible, has recognized the necessity for campaign reform making its views known to each of us. We now have the responsibility of bringing about such reform of our election laws.

The committee bill we are considering offers several recommendations worthy of consideration, including: a $100 limitation on cash contributions; limiting individual contributions to $1,000 and substantially increasing the penalties for violations of election laws.

However, the committee did not go far enough with its recommendations. In the event that we are successful in adopting this measure, I intend to support several important amendments.

In September of 1973, I joined in co-sponsoring the Clean Elections Act of 1973. During consideration of the bill before me, Senator Anderson, intends to offer an amendment which, if adopted, will add to the committee bill a major portion of the Clean Elections Act, a system of partial public financing of congressional campaigns by matching small contributions with funds appropriated from the "dollar check-off" fund now present in our tax return forms. This amendment will not impose any additional burden on the taxpayer, nor will it force any individual to designate a dollar of his tax monies for campaign financing. Only those funds which are specifically earmarked by individual citizens in their tax returns will be used to finance, in matching payments, congressional campaigns.

Another questionable provision in the committee bill relates to the enforcement of election laws. While the committee bill establishes a supervisory board for enforcing election laws, the committee proposes that the membership of this board include the Clerk of the House, the Secretary of the Senate, the Comptroller General, with additional members appointed by the House of Representatives leadership. Such a proposed board is not sufficiently independent of congressional control to permit a free hand in administering and enforcing the election laws. Accordingly, I intend to offer a substitute to be offered by my colleague from Minnesota, Mr. Frazee, which provides for a separate and totally independent supervisory board with civil enforcement powers to act as a truly responsive watchdog over election laws.

The adoption of these two amendments would bring us much closer to the American people today recognizing the necessity for campaign safeguards for our electoral system.

Mr. Chairman, if ever there was a time for a stringent, strict bill regulating campaigning for all Federal elections, this is the time. I heartily endorse at the time I believed the Clean Elections Act . . . a system of partial public financing of congressional bill. But I believe the chairman of the committee bill is a good step; limits on campaign expenses of $5,000 per election, which I warmly endorsed at the time I believe are crucial if the campaign finance reform bill is to be truly a reform minister the law, toward which the independent Elections Commission to adopt a half-hearted measure will be in our constitutional responsibilities, abdicating the trust our constituencies have placed in us.

Accordingly, Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues not only to adopt an open rule on this measure to enable us to fully debate the amendments offered today, but also to adopt a strong campaign reform measure so that we can help restore the faith and confidence of the American people in our democratic form of government.

Mr. MatsuNaga. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 16090, the proposed Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974.

There is no other measure which the American people today recognize the need for than this one, Mr. Chairman. The events of the last few days have become a discordant reprise of a sad song: Mr. Chairman, if ever there was a measure for consideration. While imperfect, this measure will not impose any additional burden on the taxpayer, nor will it exceed $25,000. No candidate could spend more than $25,000 of his own money for that of his family for any election.

Mr. Chairman, I am gratified to note that H.R. 16090 contains many provisions which I have been advocating for years, and which I feel would be effective through legislation of my own. My most recent bill, H.R. 12268 of this Congress, calls for full public financing of Presidential elections. My amendment provides for a public check-off, a principle virtually assured by the committee bill; establishment of an independent Elections Commission to administer the law, toward which the committee bill is a good step; limits on both expenditures and contributions; prohibitions of large cash transactions of any kind; and strengthened reporting requirements.

Of course, a number of amendments are in order under the rule reported by the Rules Committee, and I would like briefly to note the major provisions of H.R. 16090:

CONTRIBUTION LIMITS

Contributions by a person to a candidate for Federal office would be limited to $1,000 per election, applied separately to primary and general elections. Contributions by multi-candidate committees would be limited to $5,000 per election. Contributions by any individual in any year to all candidates for Federal office could not exceed $25,000. Contributions not made in currency or cash would not be allowed in excess of $100.

EXPENDITURE LIMITS

Candidates for Federal office would be limited to $10 million in campaign expenditures for primary elections and $20 million for general elections. Senatorial candidates would spend up to $75,000 or 5 cents per voting age population, whichever is greater, in each of the primary and the general elections. House candidates would be limited to $75,000 per election. In all instances, candidates could spend up to 25 percent over and above these limits to meet fund-raising expenses. No cash expenditure could exceed $100. No candidate could spend more than $25,000 of his own money for that of his family for any election.

DISCLOSURE

A single 10-day pre-election report would be required, instead of the 15-day and 20-day reports now required. The postelection report would be due 30 days after the election, rather than January 31 of the following year, as in present law. All receipts and expenditures would have to be reviewed by a central committee, to avoid fragmenting information and making public scrutiny more difficult.

INDEPENDENT ENFORCEMENT ENTITY

To supervise Federal election laws, the bill would create an independent Board of Supervisory Officers. I was greatly pleased to learn that a compromise amendment will be offered and accepted by the committee to change the composition of the Board so as to ensure its independence from congressional control. Enforcement would remain with the Justice Department, but a new Assistant Attorney General would be created to deal with this area of the law.

Mr. Chairman, I am gratified to note that H.R. 16090 contains many provisions which I have been advocating for years, and which I feel would be effective through legislation of my own. My most recent bill, H.R. 12268 of this Congress, calls for full public financing of Presidential elections. My amendment provides for a public check-off, a principle virtually assured by the committee bill; establishment of an independent Elections Commission to administer the law, toward which the committee bill is a good step; limits on both expenditures and contributions; prohibitions of large cash transactions of any kind; and strengthened reporting requirements.

Of course, a number of amendments are in order under the rule reported by the Rules Committee, and I would like briefly to note the major provisions of H.R. 16090:

CONTRIBUTION LIMITS

Contributions by a person to a candidate for Federal office would be limited to $1,000 per election, applied separately to primary and general elections. Contributions by multi-candidate committees would be limited to $5,000 per election. Contributions by any individual in any year to all candidates for Federal office could not exceed $25,000. Contributions not made in currency or cash would not be allowed in excess of $100.

difficulty, Mr. Chairman, is that of limitations on expenditures. Although care must be taken that the limit is not so high as to permit anyone to buy an election, even more care must be taken to avoid setting the limit so low that challengers cannot overcome the name identification advantage and high visibility of incumbents. I understand fully that I am addressing a Chamber full of candidates, and a handful of whom are challengers. But each House Member serves a relatively short time, as these things are measured, and I know that my colleagues will be guided as they consider this matter by their respective views of what is best for the Republic.

Mr. Chairman, a glance at the timetable facing us makes it clear why it is imperative that we act on this legislation without any delay. The awesome task of impeachments lies only days ahead in this House; it may occupy all of September or October, or both, in the other body. Other legislation—mass transit, foreign aid, housing, veterans’ benefits—all wait final action. Adjournment will follow not long after, and then we must await the 94th Congress. The closer we come to an election, the more does the current system of election as just 2 years hence, the greater the resistance to changes that might affect one party more than the other.

So the time to act is now, Mr. Chairman. And the proper action is passage of H.R. 16090. I urge my colleagues to do just that, by an overwhelming margin.

Mr. McKay. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the present legislation. There are strong concerns that an individual or a group may make to a candidate for Federal office. It also limits the amount of money that may be spent by a Presidential or Congressional candidates. And, it places limits on the amount that a candidate may spend from his own pocket. The bill provides public financing from the dollar check-off fund for Presidential general elections and primaries and for national party conventions. There are also provisions for improving reporting requirements.

Mr. Chairman, it is critical that the 93rd Congress take action to reform campaign practices. I am in substantial agreement with provisions of this bill. However, I feel that in certain instances it does not go far enough in reforming campaign procedures. There are several amendments before us today which will correct inadequacies in the bill and strengthen it.

I support an amendment before us to provide some public financing of congressional races. This amendment will provide a system of financing in congressional elections that enhances the importance of the small contributor, while lessening the influence of the special interests. The amendment provides safeguards to insure that frivolous candidates do not receive public funds. I see no justification for reforming the Presidential election process while turning our backs on congressional races.

I also support an amendment to lower the ceiling on allowable group contributions under the current law. A political action committee may contribute $5,000 per election, per candidate. Thus, a candidate could receive $5,000 in the primary election, $5,000 in the secondary interest group, and another $5,000 for the general election campaign in October, from the same group. A system that allows group contributions of $10,000 to a single candidate will retain the undue influence of special interests in our political process. This ceiling is too high. I support the amendment to reduce the contribution limit for groups to $2,500 per candidate, per election.

I support an amendment to create an independent Board of Supervisory Officers. It is appropriate that the Clerk of the House, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Postmaster General, as well as the employees of Congress, should have authority only on the Board of Supervisors. The amendment before us expresses the desire of the House Administration Committee and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration. Only an independent enforcement committee can administer this law with fairness and impartiality. I urge support of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we have here an opportunity to give new direction and life to American politics by correcting abuses and bringing a new light into the political process. I urge my colleagues to support the bill before us, with these amendments.

Mr. Brown of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the general provisions and thrust of H.R. 16090, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974. I also wish to state that I will support two important amendments to this legislation. First, I would like to see public financing of primary elections, and the second to revise the Board of Supervisors provision to further regulate the regulations from the regulator.

I do not think it is necessary for me to elaborate on the provisions of this bill, or to explain my reasons for supporting particular provisions, except in a general sense. Others have done an excellent job of explaining the reasons for and the meaning of these proposals.

I would like to explain some of the background that led to my current philosophy, but I have had no other campaign, or any other interest in American politics. I am interested in the unique experience of conducting a statewide campaign for the U.S. Senate in the most populous State in the Union, and I have conducted five campaigns for the House of Representatives, and I am in the middle of my sixth campaign. Due to circumstances beyond my control, I have had to concentrate on the campaigns of the nonincumbent. The first time was in 1962 when the total election costs were about $80,000, and the last time was in 1972 when the election costs were about $175,000. Mr. Chairman, I submit on the part of the American people that the independence of their elected officials has... been undermined by large political contributions from either powerful individuals or special interest groups.

It is this lack of confidence and growing skepticism which led to the legislation we are now considering. The bill before us, by placing a limit of $1,000 on individual contributions to a political candidate, is designed to limit contributions to a candidate by special interest committees, represents an import step toward reducing the influence gained by special interests through political contributions.

Unfortunately, the bill does not go far enough toward reducing the influence which special interests can have via campaign contributions. The amendment I had hoped to offer—the contributors rights amendment—sought to go one step further. It would have provided that a candidate—or a political committee acting on his behalf—could accept contributions from individuals, with the sole exception being a contribution of a political party organization. Other organizations would have been able to act as an individual contributor, but the individual would have been permitted to designate to whom the contribution would be given and the agent would have been required to identify the original donor.

It is apparent in Washington that a small number of business, labor, and professional organizations exert influence on the Federal Government far out of proportion to the constituency which they serve.

As of May 31, 1974, according to a widely published survey, political action committees representing business, agriculture, health, labor, and other interest groups held cash on hand of $147.4 million. This is in addition to $2.7 million already given on behalf of 1974 congressional candidates in the 1974 congressional district to influence political races this year. The total of $17.4 million in special interest group funds which is available for congressional candidates in 1974 is almost twice the $9.7 million reported as available for the 1972 congressional elections. And the fund raising for this year is far from over.

The way in which these special interest groups are able to exert such a disproportionate influence is through the accumulation of relatively small and anonymous donations from their members. Then, by zeroing in with large campaign contributions on key races in the House and Senate or other marginal elections where the outcome is in doubt at the time of the donation, the power brokers of these special interest groups are able to keep "friendly ears" in Washington and elsewhere for their special interests. While in theory there is nothing essentially wrong with the expression of limited responsibility, Congress must make a legal effort to close a major gap in present law by blocking individual efforts to avoid disclosure and circumvent the law.

By adopting this amendment, Congress would have met its obligation to strengthen the voice of the individual citizen in his government by protecting the sanctity and underpinning the importance of his individual financial contribution to a political candidate or campaign. The individual would have been able to control where his political donation would be spent. As long as he remains able to know who would be spending it. This amendment would have served to tighten the group's accountability to its members and the public's accountability to the individuals who are the ultimate supporter of his election.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Chairman, today is a welcome day for the membership of this body. Almost 3 years after the most corrupt national political campaign in our history, we are provided the opportunity of making substantial repairs on our battered and abused electoral process. The hour is late—but we must act now to restore a measure of integrity to American politics.

The fact that we are even considering a comprehensive measure as the Federal Election Act amendments is testimony to our neglect over the years of one of our basic freedoms—the right to vote. We have allowed our electoral process to be perverted by monied interests seeking special favors. No one needs to be reminded of the litany of sordid events which together have brought to us the bright and shining subversion of the American political system. As public servants, we have no more important task to perform than to restore the basic freedom and faith of our citizens in the vitality, strength, and fairness of our political institutions.

I believe that each individual must make his or her own commitment to restore the integrity of this process. It is the opportunity that lies before us today.

Mr. Chairman, I support the thrust of this legislation. Nonetheless, gaps must be filled. Most important is the need to establish an impartial board to supervise the administration of the Federal Election Act. In devising a procedure for the selection of the membership of this board, Congress must take extreme caution. After two years of endless stories of dirty political deals, the American people have had their faith shattered. It will not be an easy task to rebuild this faith. For this reason, we must go out of our way to insure that the membership of the Supervisory Board is above reproach. The Supervisory Board will function as the watch's eyes and ears—if we are careless in choosing its members, the credibility of our efforts here today will be destroyed.

I intend to support an amendment to strengthen the independence of the Board of Supervisors and its committee bill.

The second major area of weakness in the committee bill is the legislation in general of the financing of congressional candidates in general election campaigns. This omission strikes to the heart of the integrity of our reform efforts itself. We must be willing to subject ourselves to the same constraints we establish for Presidential candidates, then we have cast a long shadow over our own intentions in drafting this legislation.

The events of the last few months have inexorably thrust the Congress into a more dominant role in the conduct of our national affairs. To assume this responsibility, Congress must have the faith and confidence of the electorate. Without this support, the effectiveness of our leadership will quickly erode.

We must recognize that we are entering a new era of congressional leadership. In preparation, we should take steps now to include congressional campaigns under the financing requirements of this legislation. Specifically, I will support the effort to extend matching payments from the checkoff fund for congressional candidates in general elections.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation—with with the most conscientious and well-intentioned Clerk of the House and Secretary of the Senate, the public is certain to be skeptical and question the objectivity and zeal of their enforcement efforts in those persons to whom they owe their jobs.

An independent commission would eliminate the present conflicts of interest, reverse the long history of non-enforcement, and foster proper integration of the administrative and enforcement mechanisms of the law. Most importantly, a Commission would foster much needed public confidence in the enforcement of campaign laws as well as in the aspirants for public office.

Finally, it must be remembered that we face a broader issue than "Watergate." The corruption that we have seen during the last 2 years is a manifestation of a more serious problem.

The U.S. Constitution lists few eligibility requirements for public office. However, the unwritten requirements are staggering. Under present conditions, there are clear handicaps for a person to run for public office in this country. A person is not wealthy or is willing to seek the help of people or organizations of wealth. Watergate happened in part because a small group of unprincipled men had large sums of money—some of it laundered money, secreted in safe deposit boxes. Nothing is more corrupting than unlimited money. If absolute power corrupts absolutely, controlled money corrupts uncontrollably.

In 1972, candidates across the country spent $400 million. Significantly, incumbents were able to raise and spend twice as much as their challengers. More than two-thirds of this money was raised, not from a broad range of concerned citizens contributing small amounts of money, but from a very small number of individuals and groups.

One quality should not be pertinent to a candidate's qualification to hold public office, and yet this quality has often been used to his advantage. More than his chances of success—that is, the amount of wealth he can command. The democratic quality of choice is inherently diminished where a public election must depend in significant part upon one's ability to raise money.

There is a desperate need to equalize the political influence of all citizens in the United States. We must act to insure that the inequality in the amount of money one has or can command does not disproportionately affect the extent of his political influence.

Carefully designed public subsidization of elections constitutes an attempt to insure that the rights guaranteed by the First Amendment are shared equally among the people. The United States... clearly the pressing need for a far more thorough overhaul of our election laws. The abuses of the old system are very simply traceable in large respect to money.

I am a co-sponsor of the original Anderson-Udall bill, H.R. 16090, which first brought the House and Senate before the Federal Election Supervisors and public financing of Presidential elections.

There were no spending limits at the time of Watergate. There was, as a result, no problem in establishing the slush funds that financed the break-in at the Democratic National Committee offices.

There were no contribution limits either. Thus, it was no problem for officials of the Committee to Re-Elect the President to acquire funds for their various covert and illegal activities.

The cumbersome reporting requirements which each candidate must file, under current law, were not yet in effect when Richard Nixon and other Presidential fund-raisers collected millions in cash and unreported contributions.

Even today, it would be difficult for a citizen, with limited senatorial, and before it is too late to determine how much indeed had been contributed to a candidate—and from whom.

One reason for this is that there is no limitation on the number of political committees that a candidate can form—or cause to be formed in support of his candidacy.

During the 1972 Presidential campaign, there were thousands of political campaigns formed. Some of those committees—Democratic and Republican—have yet to straighten out their tangled affairs.

The prospect of a similar state of confusion is imminent with the 1974 congressional races just ahead.

Lastly, the present law does not limit the cash amount of a contribution. It sought to be painfully obvious to anyone who has kept up with the far-flung and marvelous enterprises associated with Watergate that cash offers too facile a medium for unethical and illegal activities.

Its untraceability and easy transferability obviously played a great role in tempting those who originally set up the network of espionage and sabotage in the Nixon campaign apparatus.

I will not say that H.R. 16090 offers a perfect solution to the evils that have beset the campaign process despite the 1971 law. Yet, something has to be done in short order to shore up the gaps which have opened in the wall we had sought to build around the improper influences that can act on candidates and their selection.

The new law that we now consider would take several basic steps toward restraining and greatly reducing the influence of big money and special interest groups.

Five essential reforms have been proposed: Individual and organizational contribution limits, expenditure ceilings for senatorial and congressional races, simplified reporting and expenditures for candidates centered in a single, principal campaign committee, independent supervision of the new law by the Federal Election Supervisors and public financing of Presidential elections.

In the area of limits for individual political contributions, maximum amounts of, say, $1,000 per individual are allowed for both primary and general elections. An aggregate contribution to all candidates cannot exceed $25,000 per year. There would be no aggregate contributions for primary elections. The election use of middlemen to disguise or evade attribution in contributing funds is also prohibited. No cash contributions in excess of $100 are to be allowed. In addition, no contributions from a foreign national can be accepted by a candidate or his committee.

Expenditure limits in Presidential races on a per candidate basis are $10 million for primaries and $9 million for the general election. Senate candidates would be allowed to spend $75,000 per election or $.05 per State resident, whichever is greater. Individual candidates can spend $75,000 in both the primary and general elections. In addition, up to 25 percent more of a candidate's total allowance in senatorial and congressional races can be spent in exempted fund-raising efforts. These figures may in the future be raised in concert with rises in the price index from year to year by virtue of an escalation clause in the bill.

A last point centers on the independent expenditure by an individual or individuals in support of a candidate.

If unconnected to campaign spending by the candidate or a political committee, these expenses can total an aggregate of $1,000 per individual.

An extremely important feature of the bill is the new recommendation it has for campaign funding disclosure. The number of reports are reduced, but most significantly, all filings must now be made by a principal campaign committee for the candidate.

This committee is responsible for collecting and collating all the receipts and expenditures of other committees supporting the candidate. This measure not only reduces the mass of paperwork required under present law, it also makes an understandable and comprehensive picture of a candidate's campaign funding possible for the first time.

This reform, alone, is worth the long fight that has finally brought this measure to the floor.

The Board of Supervisors, which would oversee and administer the law, will consist of seven members, the three existing supervisory officers of campaign laws—the Comptroller General, Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House—plus four additional members appointed by the House and Senate, on the recommendations of the majority and minority leadership of those bodies.

The Board will supervise the actions of the independent campaign committees, help insure compliance with the election laws, and formulate overall policy with respect to campaign laws.

It will also give advisory opinions, conduct investigations, and report on an annual basis to the Congress. The Board will, in conducting its investigations, hold hearings which may result in its referring violations to the District of Columbia and other Federal courts.

The Board will make all reports on a public basis and publicly investigate all violations. It can declare candidates who fail to file their reports ineligible to run again for the office they seek.

The final innovation of the bill before us is its revolutionary one. Public financing of Presidential elections. A public financing of Federal elections.

Utilizing funds from the dollar check-off fund, funding in order of priority will be provided to pay: Up to $2 million in legitimate political campaign expenses for each party, the entire $25 million limit per Presidential nominee in the general election and Federal matching funds for up to one-half of the overall per candidate limit.

In the last situation, each candidate will have to raise a threshold amount of at least $100,000, of which $5,000 must be spent in 20 States in $500 denominated or less.

As I have said, this bill offers broad and necessary changes in our election campaign laws.

I will support it for the great strides that it takes toward the restoration of strong positive public confidence in the election process.

In particular, the use of the dollar check-off fund to finance Presidential campaign activity offers us a method whereby those citizens who wish to can contribute their tax dollars at no expense to the nation at large from the influence of big money and special interest.

In this vein, I also wish to go on record in wholehearted support of several amendments which will be offered to this bill.

The first and most important amendment, which I have co-sponsored, will be introduced by Representatives Anderson, Udall, Conable, and Foley. It also will make use of the dollar check-off fund, but for the financing of congressional and senatorial general elections.

The method employed in providing the funding for these elections involves—like that for Presidential primaries—a mixture of public and private financing. But, unlike the Presidential financing measures, the funds provided from the checks-off fund will match only very small private contributions, $50 or less.

In addition, no candidate would be eligible for Federal contributions in excess of one-third of the candidates spending limit.

Use of the funds is further limited to certain specified media and other uses which are best calculated to reach the broadest segment of the voters.

Frivolous candidates will be unable to profit by the provisions of the amendment because each candidate must raise at least 10 percent of his spending limit in contributions of $50 or less before he is eligible for matching Federal funds.

This amendment has given the great advantage to any mind, of costing the American public no more than they are themselves willing to contribute to Federal matching funds.
Since, in either case, citizens pay no extra or any less tax, their convictions are their guiding light.

Of course, the dollar check-off fund is growing by large percentages each year. There will be, I am convinced, ample funds available for this matching fund program. In congressional races, in other words, there can be no doubt that a great many people will have to give before any check-off funds are available to the candidate. That is a sort of populist insurance that I feel is pretty hard to beat.

In addition to this amendment, I support two others. One will reduce the per election maximum contribution any group can make to a candidate—and that to be offered by Congressmen Fas- czki and Fasczki, to beef up and fully insure the independence of the Board of Supervisors that will administer this law. The other will make it clear that before us today offers some unique but highly workable answers to the questions in everyone's mind that were created by Watergate. Watergate is with us still--everyone's mind that Were created by Watergate. Watergate is with us still--

Much to his credit, Boland parts company on the issue with those House incumbents who are surrendering their place in Congress to contribute to campaigns in other words. I believe that would be unconstitutional.

Perhaps it is time for us to go back to some fundamental principles on the use of tax dollars. Many of us have a strong conviction that tax dollars should be used only for essential public services. Mr. Chairman, bumper stickers, signs, balloons, advertisements, caterers for political rallies, and various gimmicks are not public services by any stretch of the wildest imagination. The provisions for public financing of Presidential campaigns are also blatantly discriminatory against the vast majority of us who may not be in a position to express our convictions if it is not the way of the party, and indeed could be said to prevent the rise of any third party. I have the gravest doubts as to the constitutionality of that discriminatory provision.

Mr. Chairman, many of us wanted to have an open rule for this bill so that it could be amended to effect a true reform without violating the constitutional rights of our citizens. The alternative is to vote against this legislation.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Chairman, I would like to share with my colleagues some thoughts, not of my constituents, on the very important subject of televising the impeachment proceedings of the full House.

A great help to me in deciding how to vote on the resolution came from a special poll I conducted in the 12th Congressional District. The poll results gave me not only statistical evidence on public sentiment, but also an outlet for the expression of individual opinions that helped to clarify the issues in my own mind and convince me of the proper decision.

I support the motion to teleview the House debate. Before that debate actually begins, though, I believe it is important for the Representatives, the public, and television personnel to reflect on the significance of the House vote.

Impeachment represents the single most important decision this Congress was granted by the framers of the Constitution. The entire process has been compared to a trial of a public official from grand jury through verdict; and it is basically a trial. But we must remember it is not only a trial of the person charged, but also represents a test of the Congress, and of the strength of the Constitution itself.

It seems vital to me that the people be able to every curb of the congressional process, the evidence presented, the full debate, and the final decision. It seems to me the way to ensure such a comparison is to make available the entire procedure—unedited, uninterrupted, and uninterpreted—to the American people.

I have no doubt that given the full
Third, some individuals in the poll added that they were tired of the entire "Waltergate" problem and did not want it spread across their televisions for the next few months. I can understand the desire for Government to get on with other critical problems such as the economy.

The fact is, though, that we have been working on many problems including the economy. Outside the glare of front-page attention in the last few weeks we have conducted normal, straightforward legislation, and have passed 11 of the 13 regular appropriation bills. Just this week we passed the defense appropriations bill 3 1/2 months earlier than last year. We are all anxious to bring this impeachment inquiry to conclusion, and I am sure the House will proceed with all deliberate speed. Impeachment is only a part of our concern, though, and we must not lose sight of the other vital areas. Moreover, I believe in the long run the impeachment process—once concluded in whatever manner—will help preserve our nation and strengthen our country and restoring public trust in our institutions and constitutional form of government.

Also, Mr. Chairman, I would like to address a few remarks to the television networks. As we all know, there has been considerable private and public criticism of the news media over the past few years. I believe they agree that there is nothing more critical to a democracy, than a free, responsible press. The next few months provide the news media—and particularly television—with an opportunity to show their maturity, responsibility, and commitment to democracy by covering the impeachment process with the respect, decency, balance, fairness, and comprehensiveness that this most important story deserves.

A century ago Americans knew little of the daily developments in the presidential campaign then being conducted. This year, Americans have an opportunity to look in on history. The news media faces the burden of being the people's daily eyes and ears. They must present the information in the spirit of the free flow of ideas that is fundamental to a democracy. I believe the media are capable of this task. I urge them to perform it with their coverage.

Mr. FINZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Under the rule, the bill is considered as having been read for amendment.

The bill is as follows:

H 7834

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — HOUSE

August 7, 1974

As is enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this bill may be cited as the "Impeachment Campaign Act Amendments of 1974."

TITLE I — CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENTS

SECTION 101. (a) Section 608 of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures, is amended by inserting immediately after subsection (a) the following new subsections:

(1) Except as otherwise provided by paragraphs (2) and (3), no person shall make contributions to any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $10,000.

(2) No political committee (other than a principal campaign committee) shall make contributions to any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000. Contributions by the national committee or the national committee of any political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of President of the United States shall not exceed the limitation imposed by the preceding sentence with respect to any other candidate for Federal office. For purposes of this paragraph, the term "political party" means an organization registered as a political committee under section 306 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 for a period of not less than 6 months which has received contributions from more than 50 persons and, except for any State political party organization, has made contributions to 5 or more candidates for Federal office.

(b) No individual shall make contributions aggregating more than $25,000 in any calendar year.

(c) For purposes of this subsection—

(1) contributions to a named candidate made to any political committee authorized by such candidate, in writing, to accept contributions on his behalf shall be considered to be contributions made to such candidate; and

(2) contributions made to or for the benefit of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of President of the United States shall be considered to be contributions made to such candidate; and

(3) contributions made to or for the benefit of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of President of the United States shall be considered to be contributions made to or for the benefit of such candidate for such party for election to the office of President of the United States.

(4) The limitations imposed by paragraph (3) of this subsection shall apply separately with respect to each such candidate.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer three committee amendments to title I of the bill and I ask unanimous consent that they be considered on the motion to recommit.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments:

On page 13, beginning in line 12, strike out "(B)" and all that follows down to and including "(C)" in line 15, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "(D) any unreimbursed payment for travel expenses made by an individual who on his own behalf volunteers his personal services to a candidate."

On page 15, beginning in line 9, strike out "(B)" and all that follows down to and including "(C)" in line 16, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "(C) any unreimbursed payment for travel expenses made by an individual who on his own behalf volunteers his personal services to a candidate."

Committee amendments agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to title I?

Amendment offered by Mr. DU PONT

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to title I.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DU PONT: Page 2, line 16, strike $4,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500."

(Mr. DU PONT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Amendment offered by Mr. DU PONT. Mr. Chairman, as required by the rule adopted by the House today, my amendment was published at pages E5306 and E5307 of yesterday's Record.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple amendment. It proposes to reduce from $5,000 to $2,500 the amount of money that a special interest committee can contribute to a candidate.

It is my personal opinion that special interest committees should not be allowed to contribute anything to candidates, but very plainly that is not a viable option. I further realize that at least we can do is limit the special interest group limit somewhat more in line with the other features of the bill.

The bill as reported by the committee has a $1,000 limit, per election, on contributions by any individual, and then it goes on to set a $5,000 limit for committees. It seems to me that these two figures are simply wildly out of balance; that is the individual, who wants to be encouraged, is the individual we ought to be looking to in order to finance our political campaigns.

I think the reason we have gotten into trouble in our election process, as we have recently seen from the Watergate problem, is that we have had special interest groups—giving large amounts of money to political candidates. I think if we get the special interest groups out of politics, we would be a lot better off.

Therefore, I am attempting to prevent the evil of large amounts of money coming in, not from people—and people are the ones who should be supporting the candidates—but from special interest groups. I think that my amendment goes a long way toward ending this evil.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DU PONT. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, for a point of clarification, does the gentleman's amendment include the respective political party committees, or is it restricted solely to outside groups?

Mr. DU PONT. I would say to the gentleman that my amendment simply changes the figure on line 16 of page 2 from $5,000 to $2,500. Therefore, it affects all committees covered by that subsection. It is my understanding that the subsection does cover political committees.

So, let me stress again the fact that what we ought to be talking about is people, and not organizations.

It is possible to raise a substantial amount of money—more, in fact, than the $75,000 limit imposed by the Federal Election Campaign Act—by using permitted loans of a limit of $100 per person. I know that is the fact because I have done it. In my campaign in Delaware this year, we had 6,000 contributors. We set a limit of $100, and we raised $600,000.

So, I do not believe we need the special interest groups at all to finance political campaigns. I urge adoption of my amendment.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DU PONT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I have not read the text of the gentleman's amendment, but would he tell me if the [Republican] Congressional Campaign Committee and the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, for example, would be included as special interest groups under the terms and language of his amendment?

Mr. DU PONT. Those are not the terms of my amendment, I would say to the gentleman from Illinois. Those are the terms of the bill. My amendment simply changes the figure in the bill; but, yes, they would be included. I would much prefer that political committees, where I do not see any particular problem, were defined differently and were left alone. But, if we have to lower the limit on political committees in order to get the special interest groups out of politics, I would be in favor of it.

Mr. MICHEL. The gentleman may very well have heard me in which I complained about that $5,000 limitation affecting our nationally recognized political committees, so on those grounds I think I would have to oppose the amendment.

Mr. DU PONT. I am certainly sympathetic with the gentleman's problem, and I would only say that we have to attack his problem because of the way we have devised the bill, and he is an unintentioned casualty of a very good amendment.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman. I rise in opposition to the amendment.
Mr. Chairman, I would start out by saying to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Michel) that this does apply to the committee of which he is chairman. There is no question about that. The gentleman from Delaware was very candid, and I don’t think it did apply.

I am not particularly surprised—well, I am a little surprised—that of all people, the gentleman from Delaware would bring up an amendment. The gentleman from Delaware has access to funds that most other Members in this body would not have access to, and I am not very impressed by the fact that he is limiting the amount of contributions in Delaware, because if one gets anywhere by the name of Du Pont or who is related to the Du Ponts contributing $100 bucks, he can raise $1 million. Therefore, this puts a limitation on us poor boys, a pretty severe restriction.

I do not think that this amendment needs much debate. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Vondra) made a pretty eloquent plea about it. He thinks $5,000 is too low for the committees, and there will be an amendment offered later which will help that situation. If he sees fit to support that amendment up to him. Personally, however, I think the committees ought to have the right to contribute whatever funds they can legitimately and honestly get their hands on because I am a great believer in the two-party system.

If we continue to offer amendments and to restrict the rule of the parties and the committees, then we may well find ourselves in the same situation that some of our friends in Europe are in.

I think it is kind of significant to note that there is not a majority government in Western Europe today. The reason many of the European countries are in the trouble they are in is because of the multiparty system and the fact that every government over there is a coalition government. When the people go to the polls and know whom to vote for, they do not know whom to vote against because they do not know who really in the government makes the decisions.

That is one of the strengths of our system. I oppose the gentleman’s amendment basically on the philosophical grounds that it does weaken the two-party system, and I stand for the defeat of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. vu Poxz). The amendment was rejected.

Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The amendment reads as follows: Amendment offered by Mr. Mathis of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk reads as follows: Amendment offered by Mr. Mathis of Georgia: Page 4, line 2, strike out "$75,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$45,000.

Mr. MATHIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MATHIS of Georgia, Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple amendment. It reduces the amount of money that can be spent in any primary, any primary runover, or any general election from $75,000 down to $45,000.

I offered this amendment in committee. It was defeated by the members of the committee who felt that it was a lower figure than they were willing to accept. I said at that time that I would offer it on the floor in order that all the Members of this House would have an opportunity to express themselves on what I considered to be a very vital issue.

I might point out, as the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Brademas) said earlier in his statement, that in addition to having the $75,000 spending ceiling, we allow an additional $17,000 to be spent by a candidate or his committee under the guise of fund raising, which makes a grand total of $92,000. If we multiply that by three, which is the primary, the primary runover, and the general election that we have in most States, then we are up to about $280,000 that can be spent by a candidate or his committee in any year.

As I said earlier during general debate, I think it is a farce for us to come in and talk about campaign reform and leave this kind of expenditure ceiling in this bill.

It is a matter of record that in 1972, in all congressional elections, 57 percent of all the candidates who were running— and that was $34—spent less than $45,500, which is the amount in my amendment.

The average amount spent per candidate is, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Perls) said, $47,001. We would reduce that by $5,000 by my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have here a list of the top big money spenders in the 1972 election. I have laid it here on the table, and if the Members want to see some gian tic, stupendous sums that were spent in attempting to win a job that pays $42,500 a year, they can walk by this table and say we are going to spend 2½ times our gross salary to win the office.

For example, a fellow named Brown who ran out of Arizona as a Democrat spent $274,000 in 1972; and the list goes on and on. I think it is utterly ridiculous for us to talk about campaign reform and then leave an expenditure ceiling of $280,000 in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the Members to support my amendment and let us do something that will truly restore the confidence of the people in the democratic institution of this country, and particularly in this House.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I feel duty bound to defend this bill, which was the consensus of a majority of the members of the committee.

I will say to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Mathis) very candidly that never in all the times I have run for Congress have I spent $42,500 in any single primary or election. So I have some sympathy for the gentleman’s point of view.

However, this matter was discussed among the Members and forth in the committee. There were many Members who wanted it lower than this figure. The committee started out with a $60,000 limit. That was debated. We went back and forth and up and down the street and finally came up with the $75,000 figure. I think every Member was conscientious about it, and I have no objection obviously to every Member voting his conscience on this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, what the committee tried to do in the aggregate was to balance off the charge that the lower amount would be an incumbent’s figure against an unmanageable amount of a quarter of a million dollars or $150,000, both of which I would consider unmanageable amounts of money.

So while $75,000 may not be the most ideal figure in the world, it is the one that the majority of the Members of the committee supported. I felt it was the best judgment we could come up with.

Therefore, I am going to support the committee position. I do not have any intention of ever spending that much money.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, anc_ I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Georgia for introducing this amendment. I offered it myself and it was defeated in the committee, and now another attempt is made by the gentleman to introduce it here.

I believe any reasonable person will admit that if we establish a base of spending which is equal to one total salary for 2 years, we are spending about all we should be allowed to spend. This is the only job in the whole world where we can shamelessly face the people and say we are going to spend 2½ times our gross salary to win the office.

Somewhere there must be a question in the mind of somebody: What is the come-on? What is the little gift that you might receive for winning an office that costs you 2½ times more than what you are going to get paid?

I know Members of this Congress—I know them intimately and personally—who actually live on the salaries that they receive in Congress. Can we imagine that, living on the salary that we receive in Congress?

Anybody can take that person on in an election under the limitations we put in here, and defeat him, because he does not have either the money in his own right, or the kind of money that will raise that kind of money.

I know Members in this Congress who move from a district they cannot win into a district where this type of a candidate lives, and they have won, and are sitting in this Congress today.

I do not believe that anyone can honestly say that $85,000, twice our total salary, is too little to spend for the office that they seek.

I have an amendment that I will offer at a later time, although I doubt whether it will be allowed, but in any event I would like the opportunity at that time to explain it. That amendment will not cure
Mr. GUDE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I rise in opposition to the amendment. I do feel this is an antiincumbent amendment and we should vote it down. I believe that the committee has struck a good balance in providing a limitation which gives incumbents and challengers equal opportunities for success as far as campaign financing is concerned.

(Mr. GUDE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. Chairman, the committee has done its best to find a middle ground in candidate expenditures. Like the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Micausk), I really think there should be a greater expenditure allowed, because I found that in the very few incumbent races in 1972 where about a dozen challengers beat incumbents, the average expenditure of incumbent was $90,000.

The average expenditure of all candidates for Congress in the general elections is much, of course—between $50,000 and $40,000. Most of those races are in the factory pro-incumbent states. Judged by the basis of the other democracies in the world, the United States ranks in the middle or lower third in expenditures per capita for its election processes. Its average expenses are well below those of the average parliamentary democracies.

It makes no sense to relate our expenditures to our salaries, since most of us do not contribute to our own campaigns. Anyway, under this law we are now passing, the contribution limit will be restricted to $1,000, so there will be no undue influence from any individual or group of individuals.

Mr. Chairman, I think it would be a dreadful mistake if we mess up the delicate balance of this bill by accepting the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I wish to associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota and point out just a couple of other things.

The reason why some candidates spend a great deal more money than the salary allowed by the law is that people are willing to put that kind of money and contributions into a race is because the Congress disposes of, not just $24,500 a year per Member, but hundreds of millions of dollars per year per Member. That is why this is an important thing to a great many people who are interested in what happens to their taxes and to the affairs of this country.
We just cannot afford to put ourselves into the position of protecting the incumbent and locking out the challenger. My campaign committee spent twice $42,500 in my first race, and if they had not, I probably would not be here. It took a large amount of media coverage just to acquaint the voters with the fact that I existed and, with the media as I saw them, I was an unknown running against a 20-year incumbent whose name was a household word. The possibility of effective challenge helps keep the system open and keep us on our toes.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman.

I assure him that some of my best friends are incumbents and I would even let my daughter marry one.

Basically, while the incumbents are good people and deserve to be reelected, let us not let ourselves open to criticism by making it impossible for a challenger to unseat.

Mr. SEIBERLING. If the gentleman will yield further, I would like to point out one other thing, and a crucial thing, which is that under our system of money that can be spent by a candidate from his own pocket and the amounts that can be given by a single contributor are limited. That will keep the spending down, and avoids putting an arbitrary ceiling on total expenditures.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. If the gentleman did support the limitation of in kind contributions I would be more sympathetic.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the subcommittee (Mr. DENT).

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, all the talk I hear is of incumbents, as if spending people speaking for it are almost constitutionally entitled to do so.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I would say if a man has been in office for some time, everybody knows who he is. But if they do not know his opponent, John Smith, John Smith has to spend a certain minimum to acquaint the electorate with the simple fact that he exists.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say, I am just trying to defend the committee amendment, but some of the people speaking for it are almost convincing me not to defend it any more.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I would say if a man has been in office for some time, everybody knows who he is. But if they do not know his opponent, John Smith, John Smith has to spend a certain minimum to acquaint the electorate with the simple fact that he exists.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say, I am just trying to defend the committee amendment, but some of the people speaking for it are almost convincing me not to defend it any more.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) said he spent $42,500, if he had not, he would not be here.

I thought the gentleman had such a sterling mandate that he would be here if he spent one-third of that amount. If he could spend $15,000 and get elected, would the gentleman say the other fellow would have to spend $175,000 to best him?

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I would say if a man has been in office for some time, everybody knows who he is. But if they do not know his opponent, John Smith, John Smith has to spend a certain minimum to acquaint the electorate with the simple fact that he exists.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say, I am just trying to defend the committee amendment, but some of the people speaking for it are almost convincing me not to defend it any more.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) said he spent that amount and that is how he got here. He would have got here if he had stayed home in bed, because his incumbent opponent was not able to serve the district, and the district knew it.

The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) had one other advantage. He had a well-known name. I remember when I was a kid in Ohio there was a sign with a little boy in pajamas holding a candle and it said, "Time to retire. Get a Seiberling." Mr. SEIBERLING. I have to correct the gentleman. It said, "Time to retire. Get a Fish."

Mr. HAYS. Anyway, it was a well-known name in Akron.

I might say that one time in my career I had an opponent who said he spent a quarter of a million dollars. That is the year I spent $42,000.

I am going to defend the committee amendment; but just let me say that incumbency is no sure way to stay in office, unless at the same time, unless we continue to serve the needs of our districts and in the case I was in for $3.95, and if we do not, we could not stay in for $395,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to state a problem, so that the Members will understand the dilemma of the Chair correctly.

The Chair is supposed to recognize Members, taking into account three factors: First, membership on the committee; second, alternation between the two sides of the issue; and, third, alternation between the two sides of the aisle.

The Chair, therefore, is going to inquire of each Member to make it obvious to the Chair, for what purpose does the gentleman rise, so that the Chair will be aided in being fair in presiding over the debate.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GAYDOS) for approximately one-half minute.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the Chair.

As a concluding observation for the consideration of my colleagues, since we must have a limitation, I pose the question, what is wrong with the salary pertaining to the office of the Chair?

Mr. DENT. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KOCH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, on a number of occasions in the course of this debate Members have risen in some way or other to correlate the congressional salary of $42,500 with what they think appropriate spending for office, and I say that there were anybody in this Chamber who believed that they should run for this office and pay all the expenses of the campaign themselves. I don't believe the person who has done that or would advocate it. Indeed, in our legislation we limit what any one of us can pay toward his own campaign, to prevent the rich man from buying the election.

Would anyone suggest that a Member of the other body running for office, who also gets $42,500 should spend $42,500 to run for that office, or that the President of the Senate $200,000 should run on a campaign budget of $200,000? That simply would make no sense.

Now, what the committee tried to do was to fit some kind of limitation so that someone who has not run for office to run and not feel that that person had been shut out simply by virtue of not being able to spend the reasonable sums necessary for the media, for the mailings, for the radio, or for television in that particular district necessary to acquaint voters with his or her positions on issues.

In my own district, on each occasion that I have run, my opponent spent either one and a half, twice as much, and in one case, three times that which I spent. I am proud of the fact that I won without these large expenditures, but that does not affect the basic issue.

The basic issue was and is this, especially in my second and third terms: The people in my district knew me. The people, second, alternation having to have the mailings and radio and television that my opponents thought were necessary for them to become known. I would feel, if I deprived my opponent of spending a reasonable sum—and I am not now talking about the sums the chairman of the subcommittee referred to when he talked about $150,000, $200,000 and more, sums that are not in this bill. I am talking of a reasonable sum, which is $75,000 is. I am not willing to spend $75,000 to be spent. Another non sequitur has been introduced that someone referred to $75,000 above the $75,000, was referred to. Do they Members know what that money is? I will tell you. When a Member has a dinner and the cost of the meat and potatoes and stamps for mailing for that dinner comes to a number of dollars, a maximum of whatever the Member has raised may be deducted for expenses. Does that make sense? I think it does.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOCH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding to me. I want to associate myself with his remarks.

As the Members know, in the committee I was the sponsor of the $70,000 amendment and would like to point out to the members of the committee that we have 435 districts in the United States. There were many figures put forth: $100,000, $125,000, $150,000. I studied all of these figures and thought that I came out with a reasonable figure.

The size of districts are different. Some are concentrated in cities and some have 20 and 40 counties. There is nothing in this law that says a candidate must spend $75,000. If he does not need $75,000 to get elected, he may spend $50,000 or less, but let us not take this on a personal basis per district.

Each Member knows what the needs of his district are. We are trying to cover all of the districts. We are not saying that a candidate must spend $75,000. But we are trying to establish that this is not an incumbency bill, and we are saying to the people who are our opponents, that they can raise $75,000 to spend $75,000. Mr. Chairman, I think that the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Mathis, would support a bill that provided for the reduction of money spent in elections.

Mr. KOCH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

nizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MICHEL).

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. MATTHIS) may very well play well in Albany as it would play well in Peoria, my hometown.

However, I think we can take that parochial a view concerning an amendment of this kind. We must look at the affect it would have throughout the country.

Frankly, if the gentleman would couple his proposal here with one to make fully accountable and reportable every kind of contribution, then he would be making a real valuable contribution, because in four of the five special elections we held earlier this year there were over $50,000 worth of kind unaccountable, unaccountable expenditures.

I wish the amendment signed by my friend, Sam Young, who is running against our former colleague, Ab Mikva, up in the suburban district of Chicago challenged Ab in his campaign to $100,000. Ab turned him down. Incidentally, there is also another challenge: "Let us not take money from out of State." And Ab turned down this challenge.

The point I am making here, as my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois, has said, is this: It is different in Peoria than it is in the Suburban districts of Chicago, New York, or any of the other metropolitan areas of this country.

I personally said at the outset of the debate that I was less than enthusiastic about doing anything with respect to broad, sweeping reform since it is such a difficult job to write this legislation and apply it nationally under different kinds of conditions which do exist throughout this country.

Mr. Chairman, I think the committee is to be commended for taking all of these factors into account and coming up with the figure in this bill, which I personally think is too low, even though I hope that much money in my own case. However, I feel I must take a national view, as I think all of us on both sides of the aisle should.

I urge defeat of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MATTHIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MATTHIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I say to the gentleman that in-kind contributions are covered in this legislation, and the gentleman from Georgia supported those amendments in committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM).

(Mr. BINGHAM asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I think the point has been well made that what we are dealing with here is a national problem. Many of the Members who have spoken in favor of this amendment reflect their own personal experiences. This is natural. But there are other Members with very different personal experiences. We have to provide a ceiling that is reasonable, that allows all types of districts throughout the country to make a realistic challenge. That is why this is a national problem, and that is why the committee has proposed a higher figure than that has been agreed upon by the committee when this subcommittee considered the last campaign spending regulation bill. The figure reflects a realistic estimate under current circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. LENT).

(Mr. LENT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. MATTHIS). In the past 2 years, we have seen how big money can corrupt our electoral process. And while some of my colleagues might feel that the spending limit proposed in the amendment is too low, I believe that strong medicine is needed to ensure that the events of the past 2 years are not repeated.

Significantly lower spending limits will have several positive effects. First, they will make candidates conduct campaigns which will put them in constant personal contact with the people. In addition, they will remove the financial barriers which currently stand in the way of the average citizen's ability to run for political office. Most importantly, they will reduce the necessity to accept or become dependent upon money from special interest groups and wealthy contributors.

The average citizen has a great deal of difficulty understanding how candidates can spend $100,000 in 3 months in quest of an office that pays a salary of $42,500 per year. Indeed, it sometimes appears that high political office is for sale, and we must prove to the American people that it is not the case. In 1972, congressional candidates on Long Island spent an average of $45,000 each. For the most part they proved that campaigns can be run on reasonable budgets, and I believe that other candidates throughout the country will find that they, too, can conduct successful campaigns given the same financial restrictions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. THONE).

(By unanimous consent, Mr. THONE yielded his time to Mr. Frazee.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. UDALL).

(Mr. UDALL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Chairman, the supporters of this amendment seem to assume that we have spent the $75,000. I have never spent much more than $40,000, nor have my opponents, but there are 435 districts in our country, and they all vary.

We have kicked around a lot of different values, some of them indefensible, some of them far too low. I heard in the cloakroom about a colleague running for a statewide office, and he was joking. He lost, and he said that his colleague and he conducted a campaign, and I asked him what that was, and he said that his opponent had gone all throughout the State referring to him a "Congressman So-and-So."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMAS).

(Mr. BRADEMAS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, there are 435 different congressional districts in the United States, and as we have already observed during the debate, the circumstances under which a campaign is conducted are different in each district.

In my own district, for example, television is very important, because we have three television stations, and is used by most candidates for the House of Representatives. In Cook County, however, it is not used because the cost is prohibitive. That is an example.

The committee has tried to come up with a reasonable and fair amount and I hope the amendment is rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. REGULA asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the propositions that our Federal election laws are in need of strengthening and what is popularly called reform.

The other body acted early in this Congress on election reform passing a measure in November of last year.

Both that proposal and the proposal we are considering here on the House floor recognize the need for reform but they answer that need by injecting Treasury of the Federal Government into the breach, though in differing degrees.

I have no quarrel with laudable proposals which recognize that moderate Federal support in addition to contributions from the private sector can provide an important and healthy avenue for citizens to participate in the electoral process.

Indeed, a candidate's right to public funds ought to be measured by his ability to raise grass roots support—that includes support from small contributors.

In 1973, I polled the constituents of my district and 1 of the 10 questions I asked was "Should Federal tax dollars be used to finance election campaigns?"

The response that I received was 71.4 percent in the negative. Again, in June of this year, I asked the same question. The response was overwhelmingly in the negative, 63.1 percent responding "No."

In August, 1973, I introduced my own version of election campaign reform legislation. My bill contains many of the provisions contained in this bill we are now considering. My approach to increasing contributions, however, designed to make it more attractive to small contributors to participate in the election process. Rather than Federal subsidies, which seem to come from the taxpayer and must be distributed by an additional layer of Federal bureaucracy with all its attendant expense, I prefer amendments that will be offered by my colleagues, Messrs. Brown, Butler, duPont, Michel, Anderson, and Frenzen that would prohibit the pooling of funds and require that contributions be identified as to original donors and that would limit the proliferation of political committees which are designed to circumvent the contribution limitations contained in the bill.

I believe it should be unlawful for any person, other than a candidate, an official national party committee or any official congressional or Senate Campaign Committee to make directly or indirectly contributions or expenditures on behalf of any candidate in any calendar year. One and only one committee should be authorized by a candidate to act for him and in his behalf and that committee should be held accountable along with the candidate to the independent administration and enforcement agency envisioned by the supporters of the amendment that will be offered.

Because we have experienced flagrant violations of the intent and even the letter of our existing election campaign laws is no reason, to change the good, our time honored system of campaigning for grassroots support, while trying to insure adherence to reasonable standards of decency and integrity. I shall therefore oppose amendments providing for Federal subsidies to congressional candidates.

I commend to my colleagues attention the editorial views of The Christian Science Monitor contained in Tuesday's edition.

One key question to be debated is that of public financing itself. Its supporters (including Common Cause) see it as an effort to reduce the pressure of the pocketbook on candidates, with all the attendant potential for abuse of the opposition (including majority of the Senate Watergate committee itself) argue that, in Jefferson's words, "to compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves and abhors, is sinful and tyrannical." They predict excessive Federal bureaucracy and control in conflict with the First Amendment right of free political expression.

This question deserves the fullest debate. If public financing is accepted, it should apply to all Federal candidates. But it should be recognized that public financing of itself does not necessarily promote political reform. In some European and Asian countries with public financing, there have been problems of unstable coalition governments and influence by special-interest groups representing religious or occupations, for example, rather than money. With or without public financing, campaign reform must extend to party and electoral reform— as well as to individual integrity without which any legislation must fail short.

(Mr. FRENZEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEN. Mr. Chairman, the statement that was made by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Answozwo) really sums up my feelings on this matter. The committee looked into high numbers and looked into low numbers. We tried to accommodate the different circumstances existing in the different districts. In one district it is better to campaign through the mails; in another through television; another in other ways; some direct; some more expensive and some cheaper.

What we tried to do was pick a figure that would not provide our opponents, our challenger, with the right to criticize us for unfairly protecting ourselves.

I think we have found a reasonable figure. In fact, I would like it higher. I think it would be a terrible mistake if we accepted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Mathias).

Do not confuse preventing your opponent from having an honest chance with reform. There is no reform in squashing your opposition before he starts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hays) to close debate.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Mathias).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. MATHIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and the ayes—187, noes—222, not voting, 24, as follows: [Roll No. 490]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

TELEVISION AND RADIO BROADCAST OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 802 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

H. Res. 802

Whereas clause 33 of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives provides for coverage by television and radio broadcast of committee hearings which are open to the public:

Whereas there is no provision in said rules for coverage by television and radio broadcast of the House Chamber, except that such coverage is prohibited by the ruling of previous Speakers of the House:

Whereas it is probable that there will be brought to the floor of the House for its consideration the question of the impeachment of the President of the United States:

Whereas the question of the impeachment of the President is of such historic and national importance as to command the keen interest of every American throughout the Nation:

Whereas television and radio facilities are available to broadcast throughout the Nation the historic proceedings in the Chamber of the House on the question of the impeachment of the President:

Whereas it is in the national interest that the historic proceedings in the Chamber of the House on the question of the impeachment of the President be broadcast by radio and television facilities throughout the Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That notwithstanding any ruling or custom to the contrary, the proceedings in the Chamber of the House of Representatives on any resolution to impeach the President of the United States may be broadcast by radio and television facilities.

Sec. 2. The Speaker of the House of Representatives is authorized to appoint a committee of five members, including the majority and minority leaders, to provide such arrangements as may be necessary in connection with such broadcast.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That, notwithstanding any rule, custom, or order to the contrary, the proceedings in the Chamber of the House of Representatives on any resolution to impeach the President of the United States may be broadcast by radio and television and may be open to photographic coverage, subject to the provisions of this resolution.

Sec. 2. A special committee of four members, composed of the majority and minority leaders of both parties, and the majority and minority whips of both parties, is hereby authorized to arrange for the coverage made in order by this resolution and to establish such regulations as may be necessary and appropriate with respect to such broadcast or photographic coverage: Provided, however, that any such arrangements or regulations shall be subject to the final approval of the Speaker; and if the Speaker shall determine that the actual coverage is not in conformity with such arrangements and regulations, the Speaker is authorized and directed to terminate or limit such coverage in such manner as may protect the interests of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such limited time, in response to the request of the gentleman from Utah (Mr. Owns), the resolution of Richard Nixon, President of the United States, may be broadcast by radio and television and may be open to photographic coverage. House Resolution 802 provides for a Committee of Four Members, the majority and minority leaders of the House of Representatives and the majority and minority whips of the House of Representatives, to arrange for the radio and photographic coverage. Their arrangements shall be subject to the final approval of the Speaker of the House. If the special committee or the Speaker shall determine that the actual coverage is not in conformity with the promulgated arrangements and regulations, the Speaker is authorized to terminate the coverage in whole or in part. If the interests of the House of Representatives are jeopardized.

On July 22 the Committee on Rules recommended and the House approved, House Resolution 1107, introduced by the Speaker, providing for a change in the Rules of the House of Representatives to allow broadcasting of committee meetings. The Committee on the Judiciary’s proceedings relating to the impeachment of Richard Nixon were broadcast and the people of the United States were given an opportunity to view the proceedings in their entirety.

It is now appropriate that under the terms of House Resolution 802 the American people be allowed to observe the House of Representatives consideration of articles of impeachment against Richard Nixon, President of the United States. The praiseworthy manner in which the Committee on the Judiciary conducted its meetings on impeachment is one of the strongest arguments that can be advanced for broadcasting the House debate on impeachment.

The American public and the Members of this body owe a debt of gratitude to the gentleman from Hawaii (Mr. Young), the author of House Resolution 802 and who for the last 6 months has shared his views on this matter of vital importance to the Members of Congress, the media, and the public. He is to be commended for perseverance, persistence, diligence, and good judgment.

Mr. Speaker, broadcasting of the House of Representatives’ proceedings will present to the American people the factual charges and arguments in a more complete and total.
different perspectives than from the printed media. Broadcasting and photography will complement the coverage by the printed media. The electronic media are part of today's life. It must be allowed to broadcast in its entirety the most important parts of our talk—namely, the debate in the Chamber of the House of Representatives concerning the articles of impeachment against Richard Nixon, President of the United States. I respectfully urge the adoption of House Resolution 809.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. LATTA asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I will inform my good friend, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. MARRIN), that I agree with every word he said about this resolution. I support it.

Just let me commend my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois, for his foresight and his good judgment and also his perseverance in seeking to it that this resolution was brought before the Committee on Ways and Means before the House for its consideration.

I would just like to mention that the resolution provides for a very good committee composed of four members, the majority leader, the minority leader, the majority whip, and the minority whip.

The regulations shall subject to the final approval of the Speaker, and I am sure that the Speaker will see to it that if and when these proceedings are televised, we will have gavel-to-gavel coverage.

We will have no commentary, and we will have no commercials. I think this is most important.

I, for one, from all reports that we have had on the coverage of the Committee on Judiciary, I would like to commend the networks for their coverage of those proceedings. I think we have received nothing but praise for the way they have handled the coverage.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Is it clearly understood that the arrangements and the regulations promulgated by the special committee of four Members will deal exclusively and only with the television and radio coverage of the House proceedings?

Mr. LATTA. It also takes care of photographic coverage. There is some provision for still cameras, as I understand it, and that is the reason the language appears on page 2, lines 10 and 17: "and may be open to photographic coverage."

Mr. GROSS. Well, it is clearly understood that these arrangements and regulations will apply only to photographic coverage and to television and radio coverage and will not go to regulations governing the Members of the House of Representatives?

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, that is my understanding.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MILFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MILFORD. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Do I understand the gentleman to say that there will be a prohibition against commercials during the broadcasting of these proceedings?

Mr. LATTA. That is correct.

Mr. VAN DEERLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I will be happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VAN DEERLIN. Speaker, in addition to the ban on commercials, I understand the gentleman from Ohio to say that there would be a ban on commentaries.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman from California that that was also of the highest importance. The gentleman has cited radio and television coverage of the Committee on the Judiciary as an example of what we seek to achieve. I judge then, that the gentleman would not seek to impose a gag rule against any explanatory efforts by network personnel, in the same manner as was done at the committee hearings.

Mr. LATTA. That is matter that will be taken up by the committee, and will have the final approval of the Speaker. I am sure that whatever regulations they come up with will meet the approval of the House.

Mr. VAN DEERLIN. The gentleman from Ohio is the only one who said there was going to be a ban on commentaries.

Mr. LATTA. May I just suggest to the gentleman from California that I had reference to the time prior to the Committee on the Judiciary hearings being held. At that time we said we did not want nobody saying that this was Mr. Such-and-So, or this is Mr. So-and-So, and he going to say such and such, and that we rather interpret his remarks as such and such.

I think—and I am expressing my own personal opinion—that every Member of this House knows what he is attempting to say in the well of the House without somebody telling the American people what he is saying.

Mr. VAN DEERLIN. If the gentleman will yield still further, the gentleman is sure, can recognize that in radio coverage and television there is no possibility for visual identification or for any announcement on the screen, it is necessary for a radio and for one to identify the person who is speaking when a Member's voice comes in.

The gentleman would not want to reduce that kind of coverage, would he?

Mr. LATTA. Absolutely not.

Mr. VAN DEERLIN. I just think it is important while we are taking this step, to make certain that we are not establishing, as the sense of Congress, that we wish to impose any restrictions over camera coverage, or voice coverage of these proceedings that were not present in the Judiciary Committee broadcasts.

Mr. LATTA. Let me just mention to the gentleman from California that there will be some restrictions on the camera coverage. As I understand, there will be only three cameras, and they will be focused on the tables here, on the well, and on the Chair.

Mr. VAN DEERLIN. Does the gentleman mean that this has been decided upon already?

Mr. LATTA. It was pointed out before the Committee on Rules that that was the understanding. They are not going to be panning the entire Chamber, and they will not be panning the galleries. They will be focused on these tables here, in the well, and on the Chair.

Mr. VAN DEERLIN. Will the gentleman yield still further?

Mr. LATTA. I will be happy to.

Mr. VAN DEERLIN. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman from Ohio that that is not set forth in the resolution.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I am telling the gentleman that the understanding is that, while the Committee on the Judiciary has cited radio and television coverage of the Committee on the Judiciary as an example of what we seek to achieve, I judge then, that the gentleman would not seek to impose a gag rule against any explanatory efforts by network personnel, in the same manner as was done at the committee hearings.

Mr. VAN DEERLIN. The question arose at the time of the hearings before the Committee on the Judiciary, as to whether or not the lights would be on high for them or on dim. If you want to appear in color, you will have to have bright lights.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, does the gentleman know whether we will have these floodlights on for some 24 hours a day?

Mr. LATTA. The question arose at the time of the hearings before the Committee on the Judiciary as to whether or not the lights would be on high for them or on dim. If you want to appear in color, you will have to have bright lights.

Mr. GROSS. I do not care to appear in living color.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, with respect to the question that was raised by the gentleman from California, I spoke to the Speaker a few moments ago, and the regulations respecting the televising will be worked out between the broadcasting companies and the committee that is to be appointed under this resolution.

The primary coverage as pointed out by the gentleman from Ohio will be in the well and on the committee table. But the Speaker has indicated that will not be the total coverage. In order to have the same kind of coverage that we had during the Committee on the Judiciary proceedings, it left the Speaker...

ing that Congress would have an opportunity to review the matter before the new authorization expired in 1977. By then, we will have almost 3 years of experience with the new direction being charted for OPIC and can determine whether to reaffirm or alter our judgment.

The reinsurance formula adopted by the conference is from the House bill. It provides that private insurers accept specified portions of liability "to the maximum extent possible." The Senate formula was more rigid, in that it would have required private insurers to accept protection equal to 50 percent of the largest amount of insurance they had outstanding in the country at the largest exposure, before OPIC could pay any reinsurance. The fact is that OPIC is now negotiating arrangements that would reduce its own involvement below the level sought by the Senate, but which technically would not comply with the Senate formula. The House formula is preferred by the Senate.)

On other significant issues, the House conferees retained from the House provision specifically directing OPIC to stop any new commitments with governments that were not friendly to the United States. Both provisions would receive a qualified "yes" in the Senate.

Both bills provided that OPIC could seek appropriations from Congress only when its insurance reserve falls below $25 million. At present, OPIC has reserves substantially in excess of that figure, so the House conferees receded from delaying this limitation until after the appropriations for fiscal 1975.

The Senate conferees objected to giving OPIC enlarged responsibilities at a time when Congress was reviewing the entire program. The House conferees agreed, and it is now contemplated that the program will be shifted to AID where there will be room for the desired expansion.

The conference accepted the House provision barring OPIC from granting coverage to "runaway" plants—that whose establishment would significantly diminish the number of U.S. jobs provided by the investor.

The conference also resolved conflicting guidance contained in committee reports of the two bodies with respect to future OPIC operations in Indochina. The Senate declared intent of the conference that OPIC consult with the House Foreign Affairs Committee and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and that OPIC's investment plans be formulated and as those plans evolve. Further, it is our expressed view that OPIC should not insure any large U.S. private investments in Indochina unless it is clear that private insurance participation is obtained or until specific instructions are received from both Houses of Congress. These restraints are designed to permit carefully planned operations in Indochina that will not produce added political engagement by the U.S. Government in that troubled part of the world.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the conference report.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULVER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

(Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Speaker, this conference report represents agreement on an extension of the statutory authority for the Overseas Private Investment Corporation. I am pleased to express my strong support for this report which, in my opinion, represents a good compromise with the Senate position. I would like to emphasize that the House conference sustained the House position on the major issues in conference.

On the single most important issue—the reinsurance formula—the Senate accepted the House position, which requires private insurance companies to accept specified portions of liability "to the maximum extent possible,"' rather than the Senate's version.

The conference also accepted the House position on extension of authority, agreeing to the 3-year extension granted in the House bill rather than the 2-year period in the Senate bill.

This legislation will enable OPIC to move ahead with plans to phase out its responsibilities as a primary insurer of overseas investment risks, with this function being taken over by private insurance companies while OPIC serves as a reinsurer. The conference agreed that OPIC's role as a primary insurer should end on December 31, 1978, for expirations and convertibility risks. Its role as a primary insurer for war risks would end a year later. However, I would point out that since this legislation provides a 2-year authorization, the Congress will have an opportunity in 1977 to evaluate its decision regarding OPIC's future role.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that OPIC's directions for the next 3 years have been successfully resolved by the conference, and I urge approval of the conference report.

Mr. CULVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered. The conference report was agreed to. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. CULVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report. It was so agreed to.

The SPEAKER. There is no objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 16027, INTERIOR DEPARTMENT AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS, 1975

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill, H.R. 16027, making appropriations for the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mrs. HANSEN of Washington and Messrs. YATES, McKay, Long of Maryland, Evans of Colorado, MAHON, McDade, Wyatt, Valley, and Crenshaw.

EIGHTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF PRESIDENT ON TRADE AGREEMENTS PROGRAM—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 89- 232)

The SPEAKER. The President delivers the following message: To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with section 402(a) of the Trade Expansion Act of 1974 (TEA), I transmit herewith the Eighteenth Annual Report of the President on the Trade Agreements Program. This report covers developments in the year ending December 31, 1974.

Last year was a particularly important one for United States and world trade, as this report demonstrates in detail. The round of multilateral trade negotiations that took place last September in Tokyo, when the ministers of 50 sovereign nations joined to declare their support for a new round of multilateral trade negotiations, was the first since the Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) was signed in 1947. This round represents a major initiative of the United States, along with initiatives in the international monetary field, begun in the fall of 1971. The purpose of these negotiations, as embodied in the Declaration of Tokyo, is the most ambitious yet.

The purpose of these talks is no less than to modernize the world trading system which, though it has well served the world's peoples and brought about the many benefits of a burst of expansion of trade, is no longer capable of responding to the needs and realities of a rapidly changing and increasingly interdependent world economy.

The purpose these talks are aimed at is no less than to achieve a major breakthrough in the efforts to liberalize trade both within the United States and among nations seeking to liberalize trade also. This breakthrough must be achieved through a new round of multilateral trade negotiations, the first in 13 years. The purpose of the talks is to accomplish this breakthrough by reducing barriers to trade and investment barriers to trade.

The talks are aimed not only at the continuing need to facilitate trade by lowering tariffs, but at reducing today's pervasive and restrictive export barriers, often disguised as 'social trade barriers (NTBs). Unless these can be effectively dealt with, no major exporting nation—especially the United States—can hope to remain competitive in-day's and tomorrow's world markets. And loss of competitiveness abroad can threaten the viability of firms and lead to loss of markets at home.

Second, the inflationary pressure of increased costs has become a major international problem which must be dealt with multilaterally if we are to adequately deal with inflation domestically.

Third, the need to maintain access to vital raw materials, energy, and food requires negotiated assurances for such access to supplies as well as to markets.

Fourth, economic issues should be managed and negotiated in parallel with political and security issues, in order to make progress on all three fronts.

Finally, I urge our Congress to encourage sovereign governments to work within an acceptable international framework to deal with such problems as import safeguards and export subsidies. At the same time we must have the means to act fast to safeguard legitimate national interests and manage domestic concerns in the context of an up-to-date, responsive and responsible international system.

None of these objectives can be accomplished without the appropriate legislative authorization. This authority—carefully balanced with provisions for the most effective Congressional and public participation in our trade making and negotiating--since GATT was formed—is represented in the Trade Reform Act, which I submitted to the Congress in April. This legislation was passed by a margin of nearly two-to-one last December and is now pending in the Senate, is still urgently needed.

Time is of the essence with regard to the trade bill. Our trading partners have demonstrated their willingness to use and improve multilateral channels for trade negotiation. Just this spring, the Europe and the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), ministers of member countries have joined with the U.S. in renouncing trade restrictive measures as balance-of-payments corrections, at least until the basic problems caused by oil price increases can be addressed through improvements in the monetary system. Developing countries, particularly our partners in Latin America, have indicated their willingness to work with us toward trade expansion and reform. As I have noted before, our new approach to the socialist countries, especially in the USSR and the People's Republic of China, hinges in large measure upon our ability to open up peaceful avenues of trade with them. Again, I have expressed my willingness to work with the Congress to find an acceptable formulation for this authority. In Geneva, the GATT Trade Negotiations Committee has announced a program of work for the fall to further prepare for the actual bargaining.

In short, the rest of the world is waiting for us at the trade negotiating table.

The alternative is an indefinite period in which nations, including ours, will be forced to deal with increasingly complex and interdependent trade problems on an ad hoc basis. Experience has shown that this could lead to a proliferation of those problems and disputes over the best ways to resolve them. The adverse fallout from the resulting uncertainties and temptations to shortsighted unilateral actions could also seriously jeopardize gains we have made in the diplomatic and security fields.

For all these reasons, I take this occasion once again to urge prompt and final action on the Trade Reform Act. It is essential that we move ahead to reinitialize the global trading system through multilateral negotiations.

RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONTINUITY OF U.S. FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. FASCILL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. FASCILL. Mr. Speaker, in view of the exceptional circumstances facing the U.S. Government at the present time, I am today introducing a House resolution expressing the determination of the House that despite domestic difficulties we are united in support of a foreign policy designed to build a structure of peace in the world.

At a time when the Presidency may appear weakened and some may be tempted to take advantage of the United States, I believe it is urgent that we make totally clear to those abroad that our governmental difficulties stop at the water's edge. On the important issues of peace and war, and the fulfillment of our international obligations there should be no doubt that the Congress and the executive branch are prepared to continue to work together.

We are indeed fortunate to have such an able Secretary of State at the present time. He enjoys virtually unparalleled support in Congress and I believe that a swift passage of a resolution of this kind will strengthen his hand just at the time when some abroad may seek to take advantage of a President for the crisis of a nation.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 16090) to impose overall limitations on campaign expenditures and political contributions; to provide that each candidate participating in a Federal campaign shall designate a principal campaign committee; to provide for a single reporting responsibility with respect to receipts and expenditures by certain political committees; to change the times for the filing of reports regarding campaign expenditures and political contributions; to provide for public financing of Presidential nominating conventions and Presidential primary elections; and for other purposes.

The Speaker. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hays).

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 16090), with Mr. Boullion in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on yesterday, it was considering eligible amendments to title I of the bill, under the provisions of the rule adopted on yesterday. I now take the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion made by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hays).

The motion was agreed to.
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — HOUSE

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BUTLER
Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk reads as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Butler: Page 13, line 10, insert the following:

(b) Section 601 (e) (1) of Title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of a contributor, is amended by inserting, after the word “business” the following: “, which shall be considered a loan by each endorser, in that proportion of the unpaid balance thereof that will be considered a loan by each endorser (to the total number of endorsers)”. And renumber the following sections accordingly.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, under the proposed legislation limitations are placed on the amount of contributions to political campaigns. The word, “contribution,” is defined under existing law.

Under that definition a loan is considered a contribution. An exception is made for loans by banks.

The proposed amendment would make loans by banks loans by the endorsers thereof a loan contribution. The amount of the endorsement is charged as a contribution, a loan or a contribution, and it would be in the proportion of the total number of the endorsers on the loan. The amount of the contribution and loan would be the unpaid balance thereof.

Mr. Chairman, I am led to believe that this has the blessing of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hayes), and I will yield to him if he wishes to comment.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, as I understand the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. Butler) that he has no objection to my amendment the gentleman has offered. I would comment that the $25,000 limitation applies to the candidate and his family and, in my judgment, the $1,000 contribution limitation to see properly apply to the candidate himself.

Mr. BUTLER. That would be correct.

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, pursuing the line of questioning for the purpose of the Recess, that the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Young) pursued, am I correct in my understanding that in the case of a hypothetical $10,000 loan that there would be more endorsers so as to limit the individual contribution apportioned to each endorser to a sum less than the $1,000 statutory individual limitation?

Mr. BUTLER. That would be correct.

Mr. PARRIS. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. Butler).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HANRAHAN

Mr. HANRAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk reads as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Hanrahan: Page 11, line 10, strike out “which, in the aggregate,” and all that follows down through line 13, and insert in lieu thereof: “for Federal elections”.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to inform the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Hanrahan) that the gentleman’s amendment is offered to page 11, which is not open for amendment under the provisions which govern the consideration of this bill.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk, and I request that the Chair look into the amendment to see if it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will examine the amendment.

Mr. DENT. I believe it is, but I will await the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there are two amendments to title I offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DENT. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Both of them are not in order under the rule.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

(Mr. DENT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I accept, of course, the decision of the Chair, although I was informed by our legal rights that it was in order.

However, it is not that important. What is important is that the record be made on this particular amendment. It is not so much whether the figures are right; it is not so much whether it is the thing that we can do today; but it is something we should be thinking about. So I offered the amendment more to get before the House the proposition that ought to be considered very seriously in the near future.

I have taken a very long, hard look at the problems surrounding campaign financing for many, many years, loyally, conscientiously. Statutorily.

I have said here on the floor that the time has come when we must consider that we have to provide some means of providing the sufficient capital to fund a campaign, one an amount that will not be prohibitive, that will not set aside thousands of Americans who want to run for Congress and have every right to run for Congress, but under no conditions that could they raise anywhere near the amount of money that we have established as a ceiling in this particular bill and in others.

I propose that some day this Congress will have the courage, and those who make up Congress—what wisdom to increase the salary of Members of Congress to a point and to a sum which will allow a reasonable, reachable limit of spending of, say, one year’s salary, $42,500 a year, in an election year to be spent. That could be added to the Member’s salary in a two-year period, which would give an increase of $21,250, and a Member would be allowed to deduct from his taxes, like any other business cost or promotional cost, that amount up to $21,250 that he spends for his campaign.

A challenger who has his own funds would be permitted to do the same by subtracting from his income tax an equal amount if he spends it. A challenger who has not the funds but has the capability and the desire and the right to run for office and be permitted to go out and solicit public funds. Those who contribute to that particular candidate would be able and allowed to deduct from their personal income taxes amounts up to $1,090 contributed to the limit allowed by law.

Right at this moment I know there is no climate for this. First of all, we have a group in this Congress that believes that the only essential required in a campaign in money. Character and all of the other attributes we have long held to be part of public office are no longer of consequence to many Members of this Congress.

I read yesterday, and I will not put it in the Recess, that the 26 top spenders in the Congress made a difference between setting a figure of $42,500 and a figure of $83,750.

ability to go out and shake the apple tree.

I am saying to the Members that until this or some similar amendment is added, I am opposed to the proposition in these terms and others, I am not wedded to figures; but I am wedded to the philosophy that we must make this particular job clean, above board, or we are going to lose it—not as individuals; we are going to lose it as an institution. We are not going to be able to take many more of the situations that have occurred of recent date and still not yield.

I say to the Members of this Congress I will not be here when it is done, but I warn the Members that either they make it so that Members of Congress will have clean hands in an election because the job will pay enough to make it possible to campaign reasonably with-out going out with a cup in his hand for whatever kind of favors he has to pay for to be elected.

REPRESENTATIVE INQUIRY

Mr. HANRAHAN. Mr. Chairman, may I have an explanation as to why my amendment was out of order, because it pertains to eliminating cash contributions and that is under section 101(a).

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee will permit, the Chair will restate his statement on page 1:

In title I: German amendments to subsection 2 to: solely to change the money contained in said subsection, providing they have been printed in the Congressional Record at least 1 calendar day before being offered.

That follows the general statement which says:

Under the rule, the bill is considered as having been read for amendment. No amendments, including amendments in the nature of a substitute for the bill, are in order under the rule except the following:

The language that I read previously follows that language. Section 101(a) of the bill ends after line 10 on page 7, and the gentleman is in order to a further provision on page 11 which is not covered by the exception.

Mr. HANRAHAN. Mr. Chairman, but would like to ask that this is covered under section 101(a) per se under title I?

The CHAIRMAN. No, it is to a different section, to 101(f).

Mr. HANRAHAN. I thank the Chair.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. OBEY

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk reads as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OBEY: Page 5, line 2, strike out "; or" and insert in lieu thereof "Except that in any state in which there is an overall spending limit (enacted after the close of December 31, 1970) lower than the $75,000 limit in this section, the spending limit imposed by state law shall apply, notwithstanding any other provision of the law."

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment. I would like to have a point of order pending an explanation of the amendment by the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado reserves a point of order against the amendment.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY).

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that when this gentleman from Ohio has a further review this amendment he will withdraw his reservation, for this reason. First of all, let me explain what the amendment is really trying to do. All this amendment does is that the $75,000 limitation imposed by the House races in this bill will hold except in the case of those States which after December 30, 1970, have adopted spending limitations which are among States, which $187,000 per election placed in this bill.

The reason I think this ought to be ruled germane is this. The rule provides that only amendments which solely change the dollar amounts should be allowed, but let me point out that the only effect of this amendment, the sole effect of this amendment is merely to change the four States as of today—which are provided for under this bill.

Why do I think we ought to allow the States to set lower limits? Let me tell the Members that I represented Wisconsin in the House of Representatives has ever been recognized. This one was selected from N

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Chairman, I am not wedded to figures; but I am wedded to the philosophy that we must make this particular job clean, above board, or we are going to lose it not as individuals; we are going to lose it as an institution. We are not going to be able to take many more of the situations that have occurred of recent date and still not yield.

I say to the Members of this Congress I will not be here when it is done, but I warn the Members that either they make it so that Members of Congress will have clean hands in an election because the job will pay enough to make it possible to campaign reasonably without going out with a cup in his hand for whatever kind of favors he has to pay for to be elected.

REPRESENTATIVE INQUIRY

Mr. HANRAHAN. Mr. Chairman, may I have an explanation as to why my amendment was out of order, because it pertains to eliminating cash contributions and that is under section 101(a).

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee will permit, the Chair will restate his statement on page 1:

In title I: German amendments to subsection 2 to: solely to change the money contained in said subsection, providing they have been printed in the Congressional Record at least 1 calendar day before being offered.

That follows the general statement which says:

Under the rule, the bill is considered as having been read for amendment. No amendments, including amendments in the nature of a substitute for the bill, are in order under the bill except the following:

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. OBEY

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk reads as follows:

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment. I would like to have a point of order pending an explanation of the amendment by the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado reserves a point of order against the amendment.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY).

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that when this gentleman from Ohio has a further review this amendment he will withdraw his reservation, for this reason. First of all, let me explain what the amendment is really trying to do. All this amendment does is that the $75,000 limitation imposed by the House races in this bill will hold except in the case of those States which after December 30, 1970, have adopted spending limitations which are among States, which $187,000 per election placed in this bill.

Why do I think we ought to allow the States to set lower limits? Let me tell the Members that I represented Wisconsin in the House of Representatives has ever been recognized. This one was selected from N

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Chairman, I am not wedded to figures; but I am wedded to the philosophy that we must make this particular job clean, above board, or we are going to lose it not as individuals; we are going to lose it as an institution. We are not going to be able to take many more of the situations that have occurred of recent date and still not yield.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I appreciate the gentleman’s explanation, but I must make a point of order against it. I think it is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman specify the point of order?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes, Mr. Chairman, under the language which appears on page 2 of the rule:

No amendment, including any amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill, shall be in order to the bill except the following:

Then there are listed a number of exceptions, none of which in my judgment applies to the amendment which is proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. OBEY. Yes, Mr. Chairman. I suggest the amendment is in order, because while the language of the rule specifies that there are in order only if they change the dollar amounts, this amendment solely changes the dollar amounts. It is just that. It contains no formula, it contains no special provision, it contains no special arrangement. The net effect merely is to change the dollar amounts allowed to be spent under the bill.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that the rule does preclude this amendment, because it offers a new regulatory scheme and gives to the States certain discretion not contemplated by the original bill. The drafters of the bill went to considerable trouble to preempt the States, and this does not simply change the dollar amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The Chair is familiar with the rule, and has examined the amendment. He finds that the effect of the amendment is, in fact, only to limit the amounts. There is no additional discretionary authority affirmatively conferred on the States by the terms of the amendment.

Therefore, it is not subject to the point of order last discussed by the gentleman from Colorado.

Therefore, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have discussed the amendment at some length with the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I am reluctant to oppose it, but I think if we are going to preempt State laws—and if there was any one thing that nearly every Member of this body asked us to do, that was to preempt State laws so that all candidates would know where the money was, and live under one set of regulations and have one set of laws to go by. I can understand the gentleman’s desire to get away from preemption on this particular, but I am sure that if a Member offered an amendment saying that if a certain State had a higher limit than $75,000, then we would have a number of people who would be against that because that would be saying that we could buy elections, and they would be right.

So, on the subject of preemption, it seems to me that it is a little bit like pregnancy—you either are or you are not; you cannot be part way. I just think that if we are going to preempt State laws—and I think it is vital that we do some order kind of procedure—that we have one set of standards for all the States all the way through for Federal elections.

What is to prevent some State legislature hereafter which wants to be mischievous about it, coming in and saying that one cannot spend more than $10,000 or $5,000 or $2,000 in a congressional election? I think we have not to have one set of standards for all 50 States.

On that basis, I am constrained to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin. There is always the possibility that it a State has lower limits, that the candidates themselves can agree to abide by them. Certainly, if I were in a State that had lower limits, I would endeavor to get my opponent to abide by them. That can be a voluntary thing.

However, my feeling is that when we start to trifl with preemption, we open the door wider than what we have now. It differs widely in 50 separate States, and 50 different State laws. Therefore, that is why I oppose the amendment.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am delighted with the Chairmen ruling; in fact, I am not only delighted with his ruling, I am pleasantly surprised by his ruling. I had a similar amendment which was placed in the record. My amendment took a slight different approach from the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, but it was drafted to accomplish precisely what you are doing.

After reading the complicated rule, I took a copy of my amendment and gave it to the counsel for the minority, and who also gave the counsel for the majority, and I was advised that it would probably not be germane under the complicated rule.

They checked with the Parliamentarian, and my amendment did not meet his approval. So I am delighted that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin has been ruled in order by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BOLLING). I commend him for his ruling and for his fairness.

Mr. Chairman, why do I rise in support of this amendment? Mr. Chairman, for the amends that every Member of this body would like of the almost endless hearings of the subcommittee and again the open markups sessions conducted by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYs) of the full Committee of jurisdiction, there is absolutely no question that it is the shrewdest folly for the U.S. Congress to attempt to set a national standard for the amounts that can be spent in a congressional district.

My own State, for example, New Hampshire, has a limit of $32,500 for the primary and again the same amount for the general election, a total of $65,000. This has never been exceeded, and there has never been any need to exceed it. I have had strong opposition and well-financed opposition.

I think it is unfair to place a Congressman from a State such as New Hampshire in a position of legislating at a level of $42,500 or $60,000 or $90,000 or more in a limit.

There is an answer to this problem, and the answer to this problem is to let lower limits be set by those States that want to have the lower limits.

The chairman of the committee (Mr. HAYS) has echoed the old refrain that someone in the State capital will get mischievous and pass a much lower limit, a ridiculous one. This could happen, but there is no evidence that it will happen.

I find it very strange that reform organizations such as Common Cause and the League of Women Voters turn their backs on this kind of approach. They will not even listen to us when we make this kind of proposal. They applaud campaign reform efforts by California but they come to Washington and by insisting on total Federal for congressional elections, prove themselves hypocrites. How many more mistakes must we make, before the lesson is learned, that the return of some power and decisionmakings to the States is imperative; if we are to survive as a Nation?

I find it specially strange because they insist on giving me the importance of a home rule, which is dear to their heart, for the District and to save a community from something like a refinery?

Why cannot the people of New Hampshire set, if they want, a limit of $32,500? Why cannot the people of Wisconsin set a lower limit than that which we could create here in Washington?

The whole question is, whether it is $90,000, $60,000, or $40,000 or what some people say should be no national limit, that whole area of strife and argument reflects the impossibility of our legislating here to the intelligent standard for all of the several States.

We have 50 separate States, and these 50 separate States have different requirements and different geographies. There are different types of elections which are permitted. I submit that if we set different standards for expenditure, we may run into this problem of having amounts set such as $75,000, which is in the bill now, which some people tell me is not enough for the city, but I tell the Members that it is appalling for its size for a State like New Hampshire.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the gentleman’s amendment. I thank the Chair for his ruling.

I urge that this gentleman’s amendment pass.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, after the surprising ruling which made this amendment, despite its language, which limits to support the chairman of the committee in stating that the amendment does not fit the spirit of the bill. It comes to us in the guise of a States' rights amendment, but it is a one-way street for the States.

A State, for instance, cannot raise the amount that a person can spend, that a candidate can spend.

When the committee sat down and worked out the preemption of State law, it was considering the most important single matter that the greatest number of Members of Congress brought to our attention.

They said: "For heaven's sake, get us out of this mess of 51 laws. Get us out of all these reports that sometimes conflict with one another. Please preempt State laws."

We did that. We responded to the requests of Members of Congress in this respect. We put in a preemption section and now comes an amendment which says, "We want to have our cake and eat it too."

In effect the amendment is saying this:

"We want you to preempt all the laws a certain way, but change it only one way to satisfy my State or my condition. Do not let my State put any extra reporting requirements on me, and do not let my State allow me to spend more money, but let my State lower my spending allowance."

Mr. Chairman, we have not decided whether we want preemption, whether the Federal Government is in charge of Federal elections or whether the States are. If we want preemption of reports, we certainly ought to have the preemption of the whole election process.

There is nothing in this bill, I can assure the maker of this amendment, that forces him to spend one dime for election. He can spend as little as he wants or, under the terms of the bill, unless it is amended, up to $75,000.

The amendment, Mr. Chairman, should be defeated.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I would like to associate myself with these remarks, I do so with some regret.

The fact is that implicit in this amendment is potential disaster. For instance, we may have a legislature controlled by one party, with a majority of its delegation in the House of Representatives belonging to the other party. There may be all sorts of possibilities.

The preemption item, as the gentleman says, is probably the most desired section of this bill, as far as our colleague is concerned.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. BADILLO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment, and I ask my colleagues from New York and from the urban centers not only to support this amendment but to work to see that the limitations are lowered in every State throughout the Union if the amendment is approved.

For I see that many of my colleagues voted against lowering the amounts to be spent for House races because of the support of such a position by Common Cause and the League of Women Voters and other campaign reform groups. But the fact is that we must keep in mind that the way in which people begin to run for office generally is as political unknowns and even in the urban centers who the unknowns are not able to get the kind of money that is necessary to put up a decent campaign.

I remember in my own case 13 years ago when in the city, I was running against then Congressman Santangelo and I could not raise $2,000 to run. I can raise money now, but that is because I have become known since that time.

I remember campaigning with my colleague who spoke yesterday, the gentleman from New York (Mr. Koss), years ago in Chelsea, when he was running for the city council, and he could not in those days raise the funds which he can raise now.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps the most dramatic example of what I mean involved what was happening today and what happened in 1972. The 14th Congressional District of Brooklyn, the seat that is now held by the gentleman from New York (Mr. Rockey). When the gentleman from New York, Mr. Lowenstein, ran against the gentleman from New York (Mr. Rockey) 2 years ago, he was able to raise $306,000, which was more than any other Congressman or congressional candidate in the country was able to raise. Maybe the people from Common Cause and the League of Women Voters have the example of Mr. Lowenstein in mind.

But the example I have in mind is what is happening today in that same district, where Cesar Perales is running and he cannot raise $4,000 to run for that office and that is a district where the district court has said that a Puerto Rican should be running for office.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BADILLO. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I am listening to the gentleman's every word with great interest, because I just wish the gentleman had been around making this speech when Common Cause was assailing me and beating me over the head and when the editors of the New York Times, the Washington Post, and the Cleveland Plain Dealer were assailing me because I wanted lower limits. They said all I wanted to do was to freeze out everybody from running and protect the incumbents.

I was making the same argument then that the gentleman is making now, but it was a damned lonely post I was on, because nobody was saying anything to the contrary then.

I oppose it now on the preemption item alone, but I would say the gentleman had the chance yesterday. I had to defend the bill which came out of the committee. The gentleman had a chance to lower the amount.

All I am saying to the gentleman is if you are going to lower it, it should be done nationally and not piecemeal. I know that the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) is a distinguished colleague and good friend, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr.
who talked in terms of preemption. As I view it, we should be, first of all, large and small, and not in the same way. A voluntary system of public financing is of the State, particularly in the case of States known as it is in a highly urban area.

In a State like Oregon, our State legislature is of the opinion that the matter has reached a point where the sums spent to get elected to that office would be higher than it would be in a State like mine, in Oregon. I do not seek to move against a total spending limitation, but I think we have got to do something.

When we talk in terms of $75,000 as a limitation in this bill, in effect it is a $150,000 limitation on an election contest, particularly where the time between the primary and the general election is very short.

In a State like Oregon, our State legislature has said they think that is too high a figure to be permissible for this kind of spending. All we are asking for is a declaration by the Congress today, that in a State like Oregon or Hawaii, or Iowa or Wisconsin, or Maine, and perhaps other States in the future, where there is a feeling by the local decisionmakers and State legislators, that the figure should be lower, that that should be a permissible action within that particular State. We are not seeking to lower the figure for any other State which feels that a higher figure is necessary, but in the interest of decisionmaking we urge that this amendment be adopted, and that States which feel there should be a lower limitation have the right to set that lower limitation.

I thank the gentleman for his remarks.

Mr. HAYS. I thank the gentleman for his remarks.

Mr. CHAIRMAN, I would like to see whether we can get some reasonable unanimous-consent agreement about debate on this amendment. Many Members have spoken to me about having reservations and needing to leave at a reasonable hour this afternoon. While I do not want to preclude anybody from speaking or conducting a lot of debate, I wonder if 30 minutes from now would be a reasonable time to conclude debate on this.

If nobody feels strongly, I would ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close at 1:30.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? There was no objection.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. Anderson).

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment which would permit a State to impose spending limits lower than those proposed in the bill.

Under the bill, no candidate for Congress can spend more than $60,000 toward that election, and no candidate for the Senate can spend more than $175,000 or $75,000 which ever is greater. Of course, in some States this limitation is adequate. But, in others, that limitation is too high, and the State legislators have acted to impose lower spending ceilings.

For example, five States—Hawaii, Iowa, Oregon, Wisconsin, and Maine—have campaign expenditure limitations which are lower than those proposed in this bill, and I do not believe that the Federal law should preempt the State law which is more restrictive, and better suited to the situation in that particular State.

I think it is particularly unfair to require Members of Congress from those five States to vote either against their State legislation or against adopting spending limits lower than those proposed by the Federal Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. Brown).

(Mr. Brown of California asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Chairman, I merely wanted to say a word about the concept of preemption. I think Federal preemption of State law have some merit in certain kinds of legislation, but not in this particular situation. We are dealing with the establishment of minimum standards of campaign practices in the conduct of Federal elections, and from that standpoint I think it is perfectly proper to allow the States, if they desire to do so, to go further than the Federal law in achieving the most desirable campaign practices. I can give positive examples of this. In my State candidates in some circumstances, are permitted to enclose biographical and related information with the sample ballots mailed at public expense to every registered voter. We would not want Federal legislation to preclude this, even though it is practical to equate it with a per cent of a salient of several thousand dollars in free postage to the candidates. Nor would we wish to preclude State laws requiring that public agencies which own and operate radio stations or television stations offer free time to candidates. If State law provides methods for achieving an informed electorate without the need for massive private expenditures, those methods should be encouraged, not prohibited. If the States wish to finance from public funds, all, or part, of campaign costs, it should be permitted, not prohibited. Our purpose is to enable the States to adapt their State laws that improve campaign practices, but instead to provide a solid foundation on which the States can build. For this reason I support the Obey amendment, and urge its adoption.

(By unanimous consent, Messrs. Studds and Boland yielded their time to Mr. Giaimo.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. Giaimo).

Mr. GIAIMO. Mr. Chairman, I rise neither in support nor in opposition to the amendment. I am concerned about it and I would like to ask some questions of the gentleman from Wisconsin, one of the principle authors.

I have no objection to having a State reduce the amount, but I come from a State, Connecticut, where we have had a difficult time because our State laws for years have disagreed with the Federal law. One of the key things I like about the amendment is that it permits State law. Yet here I begin to see the potential mischief that may be done.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIAIMO. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, let me assure the gentleman if this bill is passed, the States will be preempted on absolutely everything except overall spending limits.

Mr. GIAIMO. But it is the exception.

Mr. OBEY. Let me point out to the gentleman right now there is very little preemption. This bill if it is passed with my amendment will greatly broaden the preemption which exists right now. I am in the same situation the gentleman is in with regard to my several unrealistic requirements of State law. One section of the amendment contains filing requirements so complicated the gentleman would not believe them.

It makes the bill we passed here 2 years ago look simple by comparison. Let me assure the gentleman that the only item for which no preemption is made to preemption is the item of total overall spending limits. In that respect States are limited only to actions which they may take to lower the total spending amounts. That is the only exception.

Mr. GIAIMO. This an exception to the requirement in amendment (1) that we make it clear and hope it is the intention here that we are not going to encourage the States to make other exceptions.

Mr. OBEY. I could not agree more with those themes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington (Mr. McCormack).

Mr. MCCORMACK asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I think one of the most important facets of this bill is the preemption section. I do not think we should be tampering with it, and taking a chance with future court decisions which may go against us if we amend it as is proposed. While preempting State law, we are now asked to resubmit ourselves to the possibility of unnecessary State reporting regulations, which is one of the things we are trying to correct. I think this amendment can be achieved voluntarily by any candidate.

I think this is an invitation to malicious mischief that may occur in some State legislatures. We have seen this happen before, and I don't think we want to take a chance on having such things happen again.

I suggest that we defeat the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. Koch).

(Mr. Koch asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KOCII. Mr. Chairman, I, too, am opposed to the amendment on the ground that preemption is essential. We are all national legislators. We get the same salary. We have the same number of people on our staff. We have the same duties and obligations and the legislation we are passing today should apply equally to everyone. To do otherwise will put this legislation and the fight for reform back into the hands of 50 different State legislatures. I urge defeat of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. Kastenmeier).

(Mr. Kastenmeier asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, this measure becomes an anti-reform bill for those who are affected, such as those of us from Wisconsin. What it does, in effect, is to raise the spending limitations set at $85,000 in Wisconsin to $187,000, including fundraising. This, therefore, becomes antireform.

If we talk to the man in the street and we ask him, "Do you think in Wisconsin or elsewhere in this country, do you think that candidates for Congress ought to be spending more in elections for that office?" The answer will be a resounding "No!" I ask a yes vote on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recogizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY).

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, let me make one point in closing. The only item this amendment touches is the dollar limit. The gentleman from Washington said this would open up to different reporting requirements in different States. That is absolutely not true.

The only thing which this deals with is total spending amounts. All it does is allow States to lower the total spending amount that it does. I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin. I will debate Common Cause in any city in my district about whether the public wants less or more spending in congressional campaigns. This will help us spend less in those States that chose to spend less. I urge its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. MATHIS).

[Mr. MATHIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to revise and extend remarks.]

Mr. MATHIS of Georgia addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMAES).

[Mr. BRADEMAES asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.]

Mr. BRADEMAES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. It seems to me that it is an invitation to a crazy quilt of State laws. One can see very quickly how under this amendment, spending limits could change from one year to another year in 50 different States, depending upon the changes of political composition of the State legislatures. If one were to be fair, one would have to say, why not allow a State to assign a higher limit than the spending limits of Federal law?

But the gentleman's amendment does not do this. It runs in only one direction.

This is the opening wedge against preemption, and I hope the amendment is rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENGEL).
Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I rise in support of the legislation.

(Mr. BROYHILL of Virginia asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROYHILL of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, because of my deep concern over the obvious need for corrective legislation with regard to our Federal election laws, I introduced what I consider to be a strong bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. I am pleased that the House Administration Committee, during their deliberations and drafting of the bill before us today, H.R. 16090, included some of the same provisions contained in the legislation I introduced on this subject. I intend, Mr. Chairman, to support this committee bill.

However, in reviewing H.R. 16090, I notice several omissions which I believe are absolutely essential to strong reform in this area. First, I find no mention that organizations with tax exempt status, such as Common Cause and many others, be denied this status if political candidates refused or opposed by them for contributions publicly or with open or covert campaign contributions. Second, I find no provision which will make mandatory the audit of income tax returns each year for all federally elected officials. I have held strong views on these two points, and thus I have offered these specific proposals as amendments to the tax reform package before the Ways and Means Committee and they have been accepted.

Further, I am unalterably opposed to the provisions in H.R. 16090 for financing political campaigns with public money. It is the old story of trying to cure everything with public funds when the track record is long and obvious that we cure nothing by rushing to the public till at every crisis. The cure for "Fat-cat" contributions, as they are called, is not by discouraging more contributors to political campaigns, but inviting more in, by giving them an incentive to participate.

The legislation I offered does so, and in doing so, eliminates the vacuum in the process that is a willing if false funnel to business, labor, or organizations which have no mandate from their members to pick and choose political candidates endorsed by their leadership. To that end the legislation I proposed would limit individual campaign contributions in Federal elections to $1,000 to any individual candidate for Federal public office. However, a political action committee would be allowed to make a contribution to a specified candidate not in excess of $6,000. I sought to encourage individuals to contribute to specified candidates by allowing for an increase in deductions for political contributions from gross income from $50 to $100 on individual Federal income tax returns and from $100 to $200 on joint returns. I also forego the need for a first glimpse of realistic expenditures, based on the voting population in a State or political district. The formula would cover both primary and general elections and if proves inadequate after a thorough test, it can be altered.

I was encouraged to note that the provisions in my bill which retain the establishment of a seven-member Federal Election Commission to receive reports, investigate and fully investigate violations of Federal elections was also contained in H.R. 16090. I was pleased to note the committee agreed with my proposal that the Commission be given a separate prosecutor to try offenders but instead the Commission is directed to present its case to the Justice Department for trial and in doing so, should the Justice Department decide not to prosecute the case, the reason for not trying violators must be reported and can be made public by the Commission.

While limiting big contributions, H.R. 16090 does not curb big labor contributions. This is accomplished in my bill by curbing the practice of contributions in kind. Mass mailings and phone banks set up by political action committees which were found to be made for under $1,000 to any individual candidate for Federal public office. This in no way prohibits the individual from making contributions, but when he does so, eliminates the vacuum in the process that is a willing if false funnel of contributions in kind—the donation of storefronts, of goods and services, of personnel coming in from out of State, are not permitted in my bill.

This legislation introduces public financing of nominating conventions, a procedure which is no reform but is nothing more nor less than a raid on the public treasury.

Finally, we all know—and I think most of us know in our hearts—that this is a sweet-heart incumbent bill. This is a bill which does not permit the defeat of an incumbent-proven fact. It sets the kind of limits that makes it almost impossible for an unknown to become known and thereby heighten existing advantages which incumbents enjoy.

In view of the overall poor record of the Congress of the United States, it seems to me that the last thing we need to do is to pass further reform for the incumbent Members of Congress. Let us defeat this bill and get on to some true reform which is so badly needed.

Mr. TREVEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Chairman, I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Louisiana. Mr. TREVEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman in the well and associate myself with his remarks, particularly his position that this bill, with its $75,000 spending limit, is an incumbent-protection bill. There has been a lot of talk on the floor today, and there was yesterday, about a Member's record and that one on his record; but I know that in districts in Louisiana and elsewhere in this country, if one is going to defeat an incumbent, he has got to expose the incumbent's record.

That means we have got to go to mass medium of free speech and publication, a matter which was discussed at some length in yesterday's Race at pages 17890 and 17818.

Moreover, the provisions of this bill, particularly those on page 6, are vague and are going to be subject to endless litigation.

Further, this bill introduces new loopholes. It is not enough that it fails to come to grips with existing loopholes in the law; this bill creates new loopholes. This bill ignores serious abuses which have been discovered during the Watergate Investigation. It does not do anything about the Watergate type of abuses, espionage and so-called dirty tricks.

Mr. Chairman, this bill purports to cut back on contributions, but it only limits and calls for the reporting of one kind of contribution, dollar contribution. The more important, usually decisive, contributions in kind—the donation of storefronts, of goods and services, of personnel coming in from out of State, are not permitted in this bill.

This legislation introduces public financing of nominating conventions, a procedure which is no reform but is nothing more nor less than a raid on the public treasury.
erage to talk about that record. He cannot do that on the spending limits we have in this bill. So I join with the gentleman. I am going to vote against this bill, not because I do not think we need reform—we certainly do—but this bill with its $75,000 limit is definitely a bill that is going to protect the incumbents, and that is what is wrong.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

(Mr. ARMSTRONG asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, there are two things we can do about a speech like we just heard, which is about 90 percent baloney. We can ignore it or we can set the Record straight. I do not want to take too much of the time of the committee but I think it might be well to set the Record straight, and if the gentleman wants to vote against this and go home and try to tell his constituents that he voted against it because it is not a gag rule and he can sell that bill of goods, that is all right, but I do not think he can. From the reports I get from his district, I think he is going to be lucky if he can sell them anything. However, that is neither here nor there.

The gentlemen on the other side are a little bit sensitive over there. I do not know if it is the events of the last 3 or 4 days which make those Members that way or what is wrong, but I can tell the Members this.

The gentleman made a big harangue— and the Members on the other side are asking for it so I am going to give it to them. The gentleman made a big harangue about this bill did not do anything about dirty tricks. I do not want to read the rollcall to the Members, nor do they want me to, of all the people who are either in jail or who have pleaded guilty or who have been sentenced to jail or who are in the way to jail or who have served their time and are on their way out for the dirty tricks and associated events.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. Not right now. The gentleman had his time and I did not ask him to yield, but just sit down and get a little castor oil, it will be good for the gentleman.

I just want to tell the gentleman this is already in the law. These fellows did not go to jail—Segretti, for example—because they did not like the color of their hair. Segretti went to jail because he violated a law and he pleaded guilty to it.

If it would be a little redundant it seems to me to put in a bill a great deal of language which is already in the law. These things are against the law. These things were perpetrated on the American people by their operators have either paid or are in the process of paying or will pay the penalty.

I just want to tell the Members who get up light about this, that this has been the most trying task for this committee to write this bill. I do not claim this bill is perfect. I am the last one to do that.

I just say it is better than what we have now. The Members have had chances to raise the limit, to lower the limit, and we have had rollcals and votes on it. We are going to have a chance to have the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ARMSTRONG) or the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FREY) present their plan for public financing for Members of the House and the Senate, and we are going to have a rollcall on that, and they are going to get defeated on it. We do not have the votes for public financing for the Presidents. If the Members do not like that, they can offer an amendment to take it out. That is perfectly in order.

But the gentleman can stand up and talk about a gag rule until he is blue in the face and the only person who ultimately is going to gag is the gentleman because this is not a gag rule.

(Mr. FREY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FREY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, certainly when the gentleman from Ohio speaks about baloney, I know of no one in the House who is more qualified to address himself to that.

I compliment the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. ARMSTRONG) on his remarks and his sincere desire to address the House. I am regretting that we all are worried about. He is an outstanding Member of Congress and has been a prime mover in election reform.

I do not understand, frankly, we are going to get defeated on it. My amendment reduces the expenditure level from $75,000 to $42,500. I believe, that we are allowed for mon-

Then under the other provisions of this bill there is a percentage, 25 percent of no one in the House $60,000 figure. We are speaking about just the $60,000. We are speaking about what in reality would be a good deal closer to $150,000.

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLEVELAND. I yield to the gentle-

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, like the gentleman in the well, I supported the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Max) and the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. An drews).

I would like to ask a clarifying question. I hear about the $75,000 limit in this bill. It is my understanding it would be possible under this legislation, if there were a runoff election, for a person to legally spend up to $250,000 or $275,000 in 1 election year: $75,000 for the primary, $75,000 for the general election and if there is a runoff another $60,000; that would raise it to $225,000 in an election year.

Then there is another provision, as I understand it, which allows one to spend one-fifth of the total to raise the funds of each of three possible elections; so we are talking about $225,000, plus 25 percent of a possible $225,000 so that in 1 year's time either an incumbent or a challenger, could spend up to $275,000 legally under this legislation. Is that the understanding of the gentleman?

Mr. CLEVELAND. I am not sure if the gentleman has her figures exactly correct. There is a difference between the primary and general and for the run-

Mr. CLEVELAND. Twenty-five percent of the limit for raising money.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CLEVELAND. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS. The figure, I would say to the gentlewoman, would apply to each election, 25 percent of $75,000. If, if the gentleman's amendment prevailed, 25 percent of $60,000.

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me. A ceiling of $275,000 in an election year for one candidate does not seem to me much of a campaign reform. Let us, at a minimum, approve the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire and impose a ceiling on each primary—each general—and this run-off election on $100,000, rejected what I started out with, $60,000, and had settled on $75,000.

We can go here all day today and all day tomorrow if we want to about what the gentleman's amendment is, and I do not know that we will ever have a meeting of the minds. So, I would just ask for an up or down vote on this.

I do support the compromise, which is $75,000.

Mr. BRADEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BRADEN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman for yielding to me. I simply want to associate myself with his position on this matter and reiterate that I am opposed to this amendment. It is enormously difficult to develop a figure that is fair clear across the board.

Mr. Chairman, if I understand the gentleman on this matter, and the figure of $75,000, to which can be added 25 percent in order to provide for the cost of raising funds, was arrived at.

With a dinner—for example, the food, it seems to me to be the fairest position we can develop, and I hope the gentleman's amendment is rejected.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, let me just say about that, 25 percent which seems to get everybody excited, that it never occurred to anyone, I think, that if I gave a dinner for which I sold tickets at $10, which some people do, in my district it is common—and I paid the PTA $5 and wound up with a $3,000 profit. I hope the gentleman offers one for consideration of $90,000, rejected another amendment of $100,000, rejected what I started out with, $60,000, and had settled on $75,000.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLEVELAND. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me. A ceiling of $275,000 in an election year for one candidate does not seem to me much of a campaign reform. Let us, at a minimum, approve the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire and impose a ceiling on each primary—each general—and this run-off election on $100,000. That still allows $225,000 in a single election year.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLEVELAND. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me. A ceiling of $275,000 in an election year for one candidate does not seem to me much of a campaign reform. Let us, at a minimum, approve the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire and impose a ceiling on each primary—each general—and this run-off election on $100,000. Mr. CLEVELAND. Under my amendment, $60,000; $60,000 plus $60,000, would be $180,000. That is still not correct?

Mr. CLEVELAND. Right. That would have to be expended to raise the money.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman from New Hampshire, a member of the committee, was eminently fair and correct. He stated the position of the committee as accurately as possible, as I remember.

The question before us is very simple, handled. It misleads the voters into two or two. I am standing behind the motion and believe, as chairman of the committee, I have that obligation. We did, as I said yesterday, go up and down the road on the amounts, and we can have a lot more amendments. Some Member can offer an amendment for $30,000 or $40,000 or $41,200; any figure he picks, so long as it has not been offered before.

I thought we settled this yesterday on the basis that the committee had rejected one for consideration of $90,000, rejected another, for $100,000, rejected what I started out with, $60,000, and had settled on $75,000.

We can go here all day today and all day tomorrow if we want to about what the gentleman's amendment is, and I do not know that we will ever have a meeting of the minds. So, I would just ask for an up or down vote on this.

I do support the compromise, which is $75,000.

Mr. BRADEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BRADEN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman for yielding to me. I simply want to associate myself with his position on this matter and reiterate that I am opposed to this amendment. It is enormously difficult to develop a figure that is fair clear across the board.

So the Board ruled that was an expenditure. So the limit 25 percent long was an expenditure, and this is simply an attempt to bring a little bit of sense into it. Whatever the limitation is, it ought to be a limit for campaign expenditures.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact, on the forms we have been using the money would appear both as an increase in campaign contribution and as a campaign expenditure, and therefore it has been very misleading. It is just like the way loans have been handled. It misleads the voters into thinking that a person got more money than he did and spent more.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. The point is that under present law we still have to list that as part of the contribution. I am glad to see the 25 percent amendment in the amendment of how we finally come on the ceiling.

We should understand that when we talk about absolute ceiling under the gentleman's amendment, it is higher than $30,000.

Mr. HAYS. That is correct.

Mr. MATHIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. I shall not take 5 minutes, but I would like, in addition to the statement made by my distinguished chairman, to point out to the Members of the House that not only car this 25 percent be applied to meat and potatoes, as we have referred to it, but it can also be applied to such campaign efforts as direct mail. Furthermore, there is nothing in this bill that prohibits erecting a billboard and at the bottom of that billboard asking for campaign contributions, even if it is one line which says at the bottom of the billboard, "Send a buck to Mathis," as the chairman might say.

The amendment that the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. CLEVELAND) has offered would, in fact, make $75,000 the absolute ceiling. For that reason, I support it.

I do not think there is any need for us to carry debate out as far as we did yesterday.

I think most people's minds are set, but it do urge support of the amendment.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MATHIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to express agreement with the gentleman from Georgia. I do not know about other people, but I would prefer we keep things in this country so that we run for office not buy the office.

The gentleman from Indiana indicated that there are 435 districts across this country, and they are all different. I wish the gentleman had recognized this on the vote on the amendment I just offered.

There are 435 districts in the country, but I think it is 26 of them last year did candidates spend over $150,000. We should not make the abnormal the rule.

I think this amendment is eminently sensible. I think we ought to support it. Some people have told me, "I could not have gotten here if I could not have spent more than what is allowed in the bill."

I am sorry. I have great respect for every Member of this House, but I do not think any man or woman here is worth $100,000 in campaign spending.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. CLEVELAND).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. CLEVELAND. I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 240, noes 175.
Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman's amendment would do just the opposite of what she thinks it would do. The argument has been made, and I have been editorialized against for a year and a half, that we are trying to keep new people from coming in by putting on low limits that incumbents can raise and nonincumbents cannot. One of the things we tried to do in the bill was to lower the amount that people could give so that the nonincumbent would have an opportunity to get to people who give smaller amounts, whereas the incumbent might have, because of his incumhoney, made friends with people who could give larger sums of money.

What this boils down to is: Do the Members want the limit that people can contribute to a campaign to be $1,000 or $2,500? What is it to do? There is nothing earth shaking about it. It is a decision for the House.

Let me say this. The committee started on the previous amendment with $60,000. As I said a few times before, we walked up and down the road.

I just want to tell the Members that when we go to conference with the Senate that I do not intend to try to compromise the House. I mean, I voted for the $75,000. I am on record, that the House spoke rather decisively about fort to drive big money and special interests. And let us give the Members better support of the House, because I am a great believer in majority rule. I do not think the other body ought to be pushing us around on a matter that was settled by a democratic vote and by a majority of 65 votes.

I did not feel any personal pain about that amendment passing. I did defend the bill. I did think the other figure was perhaps a better figure, but the House has spoken.

I will be willing to submit this amendment to the judgment of the House. The only thing I want us all to know is that there has been an awful lot of criticism in the country about rich people pouring their money into favored candidates. I do not have a single contributor in my district who has given me $1,000, so whether it is $1,000 or $2,500 I voted for going to affect me that much; but I think we ought to stick with the limit in the bill. I think it is a reasonable limit. Since the amount has been lowered to $60,000 for every body, if that in unfair to non-incumbents, I cannot help that; but certainly if the argument is that a non-incumbent needs more money, he ought to be able to raise it easier than he would some other figure.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

(Mr. STEELE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from New York, which would increase the amount an individual could contribute to a candidate for Federal office.

I oppose the amendment because I believe that the key to driving big money and special interests out of politics is to limit the amount of money an individual or organization can contribute to a candidate to the lowest practical amount.

This is precisely what I am trying to do in my own campaign for Governor in Connecticut. I am demonstrating that a political candidate can run an effective campaign and raise adequate campaign funds even on a statewide level without accepting big contributions.

Specifically, I am not accepting any contribution from any person or organization in excess of $100; I am publicly reporting and filing with the secretary of the State the names of all my contributors and the amount of their contributions every 30 days; and I am channeling all campaign contributions through a single campaign committee.

My small-dollar fundraising drive has already topped the $80,000 mark and attracted almost 3,000 individual contributors, a large number of whom have never contributed to a political campaign before.

In essence, we are showing in Connecticut that it is possible to eliminate big money from politics and still wage an effective campaign; that large numbers of people will respond to an honest effort to drive big money and special interests out of the political system; and that it is possible to attract new workers and contributors to participate in a political campaign despite the great cynicism toward politics which exists in this Watergate year.

With the $100 limit working so well in Connecticut, the only way we can accept the gentlewoman’s argument that the $1,000 contribution limit contained in the committee bill is too low.

If anything, it is much too high and should be reduced still further, however, that this body is not prepared to lower the limit at this time, let us at least not weaken the bill further by increasing the limit to $2,500. Such an increase would simply allow big contributors and special interests to play that much larger a role in financing campaigns across the country. Indeed, under the amendment, there is nothing to prevent large contributors from financing the entire Congressional campaign. Our goal should be to increase the number of small contributors to a political campaign, not to reduce the number, as the amendment would serve to do.

In sum, the amendment would significantly weaken the basic reform we are trying to accomplish here today, and I urge the House to reject it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentlewoman has raised a very good question. What she seeks to obtain is equity between individuals and special interest groups, and that effort is, indeed, laudable.

The problem is that, with the limitations we have now set, the gentlewoman’s amendment would permit 24 people to finance a total election for any one candidate. That is just too few to be allowed to get into our law.

What drives her into that problem is that individuals are allowed to contribute much less than special interest groups. A better attack on the problem would be to reduce what the special interest groups can give. But, because the committee erred in combining political parties with special-interest groups, we felt compelled to hold the level at $5,000.

The whole thing tells us we have been better off with an open rule to give the Members better flexibility on this important committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. HOLTMAN). The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there additional amendments to title II? The Chair hears none.

Are there eligible amendments to title III?

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer three committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments offered by Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey: Page 29, beginning in line 1, strike out "(B)" and all that follows down to but not including "(C)" in line 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(B) the use of real or personal property and the cost of invitations, food and beverages, voluntarily provided by an individual to a candidate in rendering voluntary personal services on the individual’s residential premises for candidate-related activities." Page 31, beginning in line 7, strike out "(D)" and all that follows thereon, including "(E)" in line 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(B) the use of real or personal property and the cost of invitations, food and beverages, voluntarily provided by an individual to a candidate in rendering voluntary personal services on the individual’s residential premises for candidate-related activities." Page 30, line 8, insert "(C)," immediately after "(B)."

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, these committee amendments are simply technical and conforming in nature. I ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc and be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I refer the reader to page 7844 of the Record of yesterday, where the committee adopted the technical committee amendments. These amendments are simply to have in title II the identical changes as appear and were accepted in title I.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, these are all the committee amendments which yesterday we approved for the expenditure and contribution limitations. They are identical today, and we are applying them to the disclosure section of the law.

They were adopted unanimously in the committee. They tighten loopholes which previously existed, and I hope they are agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendments offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. THOMPSON).
The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BRADENAS, Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. Brasenial, August 8, 1974, strike out line 24, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(1) The supervisory officer shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title, including such rules and regulations as may be necessary to require:

Mr. BRADENAS, Mr. Chairman, the amendment I am here offering is a committee amendment. It was unanimously accepted in the committee. It is an amendment concerning the Board of Supervisory Officers, and I shall explain the amendment very briefly.

The amendment would provide for a six-member Board composed of four public members who will be appointed, two by the Speaker of the House and two by the President—two by the Speaker of the House, and two by the President—two by the President, and two by the President, and two by the President. This Board would be appointed to a biennial term. There will also be sitting on the Board, but on a nonvoting basis, the Clerk of the House and the Clerk of the Senate. The amendment also modifies the "review of regulations" section in the committee bill to provide that all rules and regulations be submitted, not to the House Committees and not to the Senate Rules and Administration Committee, but rather to the Senate and the House for review. Regulations regarding procedures would be submitted to the House, and regulations regarding Senate elections to the Senate, and regulations regarding presidential elections to both the Senate and the House. The appropriate body of Congress would have 30 days within which to disapprove the proposed rule or regulation. If the regulations are submitted to both Houses, as in the case of the presidential election, the other House would have the power to disapprove.

In addition, the amendment would vest all supervisory responsibilities of the Comptroller General in the Board of Supervisory Officers. Most of the supervisory responsibilities of the Clerk of the House and Secretary of the Senate would be vested in the Board except that the Secretary of the Senate would continue to act as custodian for the Board with respect to reports filed by candidates to the House and Senate, and the Board would be required to make such reports and statements available for public inspection and copying.

Mr. Chairman, I would make these observations in conclusion: We have tried in this committee amendment to respond to criticism of the language in the committee bill wherein Congesional employees were seated on the Board. Moreover, the committee earlier removed a provision whereby Members of the House and Senate were sitting on the Board.

Second, under this committee amendment, the chief responsibility for supervision and enforcement of the campaign laws is placed in a Board that is clearly independent.

Finally, as I have already indicated, the amendment removes the veto power from congressional committees. To reiterate, the amendment was agreed to unanimously.

Mr. FRENZEL, Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BRADENAS, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL, Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment..."
that, at one point, the gentleman from Florida had given notice to the House that we would put in the Executive.

This is a variation of the original Fascell-Frenzel amendment which the committee has accepted and which now appears before me in the form of this committee amendment. It does represent a significant compromise. It makes the Clerk and the Secretary nonvoting members of the Supervisory Board and gives the Board, in my opinion, sufficient independence and authority so that we can expect uniform fair enforcement of our election law.

We do not touch the duties or the powers of the Board of Supervisory Officers at all. Instead of a veto of regulations by the committees of the House and Senate, that veto is reserved for the whole bodies of either House.

Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, this is a fine compromise. I congratulate the Chairman for having engineered that compromise, and the gentleman from Indiana for his help and effort, and I would like to express particular thanks to the Chairman of the Joint Committee, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Hays.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADEMAS. I will be glad to yield to the chairman, the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman say that he is going to ask for a recorded vote because he thinks we are conceding some powers to the Senate?

Mr. FRENZEL. I say that because the Senate has more authority for its independent commission, I felt it wise that this body go on record indicating that these are the total powers we would like the Board to have.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to express my appreciation to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) and to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCHEL) for their cooperation in working this out.

Mr. FASCHEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADEMAS. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCHEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I intend to take a little bit of time in order to express my feelings on this subject.

I thank the gentleman from Indiana for his help and effort, and I would like to express particular thanks to the chairman of the Joint Committee, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Hays.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. FASCHEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

When the gentleman from Minnesota and I started working on this amendment, there was a wide gap between our views and the committee bill as it first came out of the committee. However, with his leadership, a compromise was arrived at, and I pay tribute to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) for his perseverance and dedication on this matter. It became necessary for us to discuss the full measure of the committee full, and that the gentleman from the Senate bill has been amended because I think that it has been a fine compromise. I congratulate the committee on this. I am grateful for that. I think that is the spirit and the way legislation should be arrived at here in this House.

All I would say is that despite our feelings on the subject, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) has been responsive to a large group of people in this House, some 60 or more, who felt that this issue was a very vital issue. He has cooperated to the extent that now the gentleman from Minnesota and I and the committee have reached a position that the committee has accepted this as a committee amendment. I am grateful for that. I think that is the spirit and the way legislation should be arrived at here today as a committee amendment.

Let me also say that it has been a pleasure to work with the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) on this matter on behalf of the some 60 or so sponsors who believed the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is essential. This amendment gives the primary responsibility for supervision and enforcement to this of our campaign reform laws to this independent enforcement commission.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, under section 315 and other sections of this bill, the elections commission besides having the primary power of supervision and enforcement authority, is given full independent authority to seek enforcement through civil action in court by way of injunctive or other appropriate relief, without the necessity of submitting the matter to the Attorney General first. This independent enforcement capability is the heart and crux of campaign reform.

So, Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 and certain amendments. This is one of the most important pieces of legislation to be considered by the House of Representatives during this Congress. The credibility of the Congress is at stake, and it is essential that we in the House of Representatives go on record in resounding support of the strongest measure possible.

The escalating cost of Federal election campaigns in recent years, and the growing reliance by candidates on large contributions from a few sources, have made it imperative that reasonable restrictions be enacted on total expenditures by candidates and on individual contributions.

Under the present law, there is no limitation on individual contributions to candidates for Federal office. As a result, as costs for Federal election campaigns have been unchecked, from an estimated $90 million in 1952 to an estimated $400 million in 1972, the need and the inclination to solicit and accept increasingly large contributions from individual contributors has grown proportionately.

Understandably, speculation and charges of undue influence and of "buying" candidates have gone hand in hand with the growing contribution of individual contributions. It is indeed difficult to make a convincing case that the contributor who gave $50,000 or $100,000 or even $1 million has not or cannot wield undue influence at some point with an elected official.

And the Watergate related scandals—the milk fund contributions, sizable cash contributions, the laundering of cash contributions, the granting of access to secret information—have substantiated the charges and convinced the American people that their suspicions were warranted.

To restore public confidence in our elected officials and in the Federal election process, and to make absolutely sure that the massive campaign financing abuses we have recently witnessed do not recur, we will need a realistic limits on total campaign expenditures, on individual contributions, on cash contributions, and on committee contributions; and we must insure that these restrictions are vigorously enforced by an independent body.

Unless we make adequate provision for the independent and vigorous enforcement of the limitations we enact, we will remain open to charges of conflict of interest and public distrust will continue. I have intended, therefore, to offer an amendment with my colleague, Congressmen BILL FRENZEL, and a strong bipartisan group of more than 50 Members of the House to make changes in the composition of the Board of Supervisory Officers and to eliminate congressional committee veto of certain regulations so that its independence is assured.

Those joining in sponsoring the amendment include:

Mr. MATHIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I am in support of the amendment, and certainly agree with the gentleman that the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the representative of the Senate should have a vote if they are to be on the Commission, otherwise I see no useful purpose in it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MATHIS of Georgia. I agree fully with my friend, the gentleman from New Jersey, that it is in fact a better provision than exists in the Senate bill. I would certainly hold out no hope we could defeat this amendment, and I have no intention to do so. I have simply taken this time to point out to the Members of the House the dangers we see as sitting Members of this body, and would say that the Members had better watch their heads once the Commission is established.

Mr. HAYS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I would just say to the Members of the House that the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL) has been very kind in praising me for the ability to compromise, and I think I do have that ability. But when we go to conference this will be the board or there "ain't" going to be any bill, and I will not give in to the Senate version on this one, and I know the other conferences will not, either.

Mr. MATHIS of Georgia. I appreciate the statement and the assurance of my chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Indians (Mr. BRADSEMA).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORD VOTE

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—aes 391, noes 25, not voting 18, as follows:
Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the chairman. The CHAIRMAN. Are there additional eligible amendments to title II? Are there committee amendments to title II? Are there eligible amendments to title II?

COMMITTEE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HAYS

Mr. HAYS Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment. The Clerk reads as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. HAYS: Page 70, line 14, insert "(1)" immediately after "(b)", Page 70, line 15, strike out "407", Page 76, immediately after line 16, insert "408". The amendment made by section 407 shall apply with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1971.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, this is a clarifying amendment to an amendment we had in the bill on the tax return, where there is no income. All this does is make it apply to any taxable year after the calendar year 1971, which is this taxable year. Therefore, it is just to wipe out the slate totally which we intended to wipe out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS). The committee amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FRENZEL

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk reads as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENZEL: Page 60, strike line 17 and all that follows through page 61, line 4, Page 61, line 6, strike out "407" and insert "406", Page 61, line 15, strike out "408" and insert "407", Page 78, line 5, strike out "409" and insert "408", Page 79, line 11, strike out "410" and insert "409", Page 79, line 15, strike out "409" and "408" and insert: lieu thereof and "408".

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with and that it be printed in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is very simple in intent. It strikes from the bill the provision that coterminal savings for Federal funding of national party nominating conventions. The bill, as it is before us, provides that the party conventions will be financed out of the public Treasury in the amount of $2 million for each of the major parties. In addition, it provides that each party may spend in excess of the $2 million which they receive from the tax-payers.

Mr. Chairman, it is my strongly held belief that the Federal Government has no business controlling national party nominating conventions; that it should hand over the issue to the各个 parties and let each of them determine how much they can spend, if they want; it should give them any amount of money to spend. Financing can only lead to control, and we do not need Government control of either of our two fine parties. Mr. Chairman, this is a fundamental philosophical point. The parties belong to the people. The parties have been free of the Government. Here, unless we adopt my amendment, we are now taken, step by step, into the bureaucracy. We would be making them a part of the official Government establishment.

We would be, in fact, nationalizing the political parties of the country, controlling them, and we would be weakening them, I believe, that it is absolutely essential that this portion be stricken from the bill.

I hope the Committee will support my amendment. Mr. BRADEMANN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we all know that Presidential nominating conventions, and as our friend of Illinois, our two primary elections, are an essential part of the process of electing an American President, as important in their own way as is the general election in the fall.

We point out, in a spirit of rejecting this amendment, that we already have public financing of national Presidential nominating conventions in this country because most of the money that finances those conventions comes from tax deductions for advertising, deductions that are taken by various business and labor groups for advertisements published in the convention programs that are distributed at the convention. So the present system is one whereby all of the taxpayers in the country involuntarily pay, through the tax deduction route, for the holding of conventions.

However, under the language in the committee bill, only those taxpayers who voluntarily participate in the dollar check-off participate in supporting the public financing of our two national nominating conventions.

A second point I would like to make, Mr. Chairman, is that the provision in the committee bill for the public financing of national nominating conventions is the recommendation of the Bipartisan Commission on Convention Financing. This is not a partisan matter.

The third point I would like to make, Mr. Chairman, is that utilization of public financing is voluntary on the part of the political parties. A political party is not mandated to receive public funds from the dollar check-off system, and if it elects not to do so, it can use $2 million in private funds to finance its own election.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if we retain the language in the committee bill, both with respect to Presidential nominating conventions and Presidential primaries, we shall be filling out the initiative that Congress undertook in 1972 in providing that, beginning in 1976, we shall have public financing of Presidential general elections.

Surely, the events which are plaguing and afflicting all of the people of the United States now, Democrats and Republicans and Independents, in respect of the events associated with the 1972 election ought not to return to plague and afflict us once more.

Let us vote down this amendment.

Mr. ANUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADEMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. Chairman, I want to associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana and to compliment him for the work and time and effort that he was devoted in the committee on the peculiar public financing section of the bill.

Public financing—and we all are acquainted with the term—is an idea whose time has come. We must recognize it.

We are not spending money out of the public treasuries. As I pointed out yesterday, over $60 millions will be checked off by the American taxpayers. They are saying to the Members of the Congress, "We are checking this money off because we want to spend this money so that we can have the type of election and the type of conventions in America that will reduce the pressure of the big-money interests in this country."

Mr. Chairman, I therefore urge the defeat of the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota, because the American people have said to us, in giving us this responsibility: "Give us public financing of our conventions that will insure elections in a free and in a democratic system."

Mr. BRADEMANN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Illinois for his contribution.

I will conclude by saying that, as we all know, Mr. Chairman, we are in the midst of a week which is probably historic for the future of our country in respect of the Presidency of the United States. Let us take advantage of that historic situation and make a change for the better in the financing of our Presidential elections.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment is rejected.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

I wish to make this brief statement: The reason I feel this amendment is most important is because national political conventions have been in the past clearly outside the realm of government and should be. To believe for one moment that by this kind of public financing we are being fair to the small political party or the so-called potential poor-boy Presidential candidate, I think, is a joke. My belief is that because this is a highly discriminatory amendment to the present bill H.R. 18090 in favor of the major parties of this country, this approach is wholly unfair to small minority parties. To use public funds to give total advantage to the two major parties to have convention extravaganzas is, I think, a major disgrace to the concept of civil rights.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I wish to point out, in response to a previous speaker who indicated that this money was somehow blessed because it was checked off a tax form, that there is no money that anyone has given because of the checkoff.

The checkoff simply means that that particular person thinks that we should spend the money on something. That person does not give $1 extra of his own money, and that person is cut numbered by those people who did not check off.

There is no fund. There is simply a paper amount of money. We have not reserved anything; we have drawn funds directly from the Federal Treasury.

In effect, what someone who is participating in the checkoff is saying is: "I want to use somebody else's money to finance political conventions."

Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his comments, and I hope my colleagues will be persuaded that this is a highly discriminatory and should be stricken, as the gentleman from Minnesota is trying to do, I think, very persuasively. I urge a vote for the Frenzel amendment.

Mr. HUNNUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I would be glad to yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HUNNUT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to associate myself with the comments of the gentleman from California.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with this debate on the wisdom of deleting section 9008 of H.R. 18090—page 83—regarding payments for Presidential nominating conventions, I am pleased to rise in support of the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague from Minnesota, and would like, in this connection, to share with my colleagues the remarks of Indiana's Republican National Commit- tee chairman, the Hon. Butch Balar, made before the Republican National Committee on April 26, 1974. They are as follows:

Remarks by L. Keith Bolen

If there ever was a critical time in the history of our party when the responsibilities of our party stewardship should weigh heavily upon our conscience and our deliberations, it would be here and now April 26, 1974.

For the highest elected national leadership of a party that advocates decentralization of the Federal Government, the Free enterprise system, self reliance, and individual citizen responsibility; to consider turning their party conventions over to the Federal Government to finance and direct seems to me incredible.

The seriousness of the present circumstances has compelled me to say that I should have said long ago and that which I know to be right.

In spite of the affection and high regard in which I hold each and every one of you, particularly our national chairman, George Bush, and his three predecessors under whom I have been privileged to serve, the past six years of my personal participation on the R.N.C. and the executive committee has been, in the most flattering and depressing years of my adult life.

When I say I feel compelled to speak, I mean it in the literal sense. My self respect and individual worth have been sorely tested all too long, and I need and solicit your indulgence for my own self therapy. I have not wished to part with our party convention be preserved and strengthened, not diluted or overtaken.

We wish to keep part of selling our birthright or party heritage. Our Hoosier Republican workers often virtually risk their very lives in a battle against Republican dissidents in some of our best districts by every means and every available tool.

Some leaders, in a most unexampled fashion, have felt a strong commitment to serve meaningfully in accomplishing what I prytually hoped was our Nation’s destiny which I required, in my heart and mind, a strong, effective, and ongoing Republican National party in fact, rather than one of paper or fiction.

One, encompassing and embracing hundreds of thousands of selfless, well motivated Americans from all walks of life sharing the toll and unheralded self satisfaction that comes from providing good responsive Government and confidence that you have done your part in achieving such a lofty pursuit. My seal was almost evangelical, as I had to take highest of callings and the vehicle by which I might be the most service to my fellow man.

Unfortunately, my service on the committee has not fulfilled my desire to serve, and I have in fact caused me considerable remorse by reason of what, in my opinion, has been a lack of effectiveness that almost approaches failure and in contravention of the trust and confidence you have reposed in me by my constituents in Indiana who do believe better treatment.

Not only have I failed by inaction and silence to be a force to strengthen our party nationally, but I despair that I have unwittingly, by such nonformance, been responsible for not meeting the challenge that was ours. In candor, I am uncertain but that our party is now worse off than it was, and that I will not have let it better for my endeavors, which is a self-imposed requirement necessary to justify my very existence.

At this particular juncture, which to many seems almost as a dream that is fast becoming a nightmare, I now find myself participating in the debate—can there certainly be the death knell for the two party system in this country. Such an aberration is absurdly true.

To turn my party and its primary function over to a Democrat Congress or any Congress at all is not a use that I know of any single issue in my political recollection about which I feel so strongly. Federal campaign financing is indeed repugnant to my sense of a free and independent elective process, but for the R.N.C. to now seriously consider federal financing of our primary party obligation, knowing the invariable restriction and dictation that invariably flow therefrom, is, in my judgment, a complete renunciation of our responsibilities to preserve and strengthen the national party.

Certainly my State of Indiana has no stomach for such subordination of party responsibility and has unanimously, as a State central committee, expressed its worth have been complete opposition to such a fatal course of action. Indiana, as an alternative, suggests a constitutional convention from which we can afford, and/or we urge a further exploration of the possibility of private foundation grants, or individual or local tax credit or deduction consideration for convention contributors, and/or media related facilities be housed by the media, and/or of sale of reserved seating, dal, and in any event, Indiana offers to bear its share of any convention assessment, but respectfully demands the integrity of the leadership of our party convention be preserved and strengthened, not diluted or overruled.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENZEL: Page 61, strike line 14 and all that follows through page 78, line 3.

Page 78, line 5, strike "400" and insert in lieu thereof "4000".

Page 79, line 11, strike "410" and insert in lieu thereof "4000".

Page 79, line 15, strike out "408", and insert in lieu thereof "408".

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, by the adoption of the last amendment this House has saved the taxpayers $4 million.

This amendment which I am now proposing will enable us to save many times that sum. This amendment strikes from the bill the provisions that provide for matching public funds for Presidential primaries. That is all it does. I think all of us know the arguments for and against public financing. I am prepared to make them more so perhaps than the rest of the Members, but I would rather concentrate on one particular aspect of this amendment.

The primaries, I believe, should be open to any candidate who wishes to become the President of the United States; but they need not become, because of the concentration of media attention, the exclusive province of Members of the other body of this Congress. So every 4 years we witness the quadrennal ritual of Senators absenting themselves from their duties to campaign for 6 months for the Presidency while the Congress is in session. If we supply public funds to encourage this kind of activity, we are simply giving the Senators a paid vacation, instead of one which they should have to pay for themselves.

Now, in addition to doing this for the other body, if we agree to the Presidential public financing, we are contributing to the destruction of the political parties, for with public money, who needs party discipline and who needs public alliance?

We will have more candidates for more dollar spending for elections, and the party system will deteriorate. At the same time, we discourage third parties because there is a very high entry threshold. Candidates must raise a great deal of money before they can qualify for the matching fund. Therefore, a new party, or third party, is best before it starts, and we are again left with the usual line up of candidates and who are they? Members of the other body, of course.

More than this, however, as I pointed out when the House wisely adopted the last amendment, by adopting this amendment we can bring back to the people some control over their election processes.

Every ounce of Federal financing means another step forward toward giving control of elections to the bureaucracy. Every bit of Federal financing takes the elections a little farther from the people and a little more tightly under the control of the bureaucracy.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be labor this point. I only want to thank the Members for their enlightened vote on the last amendment and urge a vote for this amendment, which will eliminate the matching Presidential primary aid on the public purse to support the candidacy of people seeking our Presidency in future years.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

(Mr. BRADEMAS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, let us consider where we are this afternoon.

We are on the floor of the House of Representatives, waiting to go to our televisions sets a little later tonight for an election that will be one that will have great significance for the people of this country and indeed, all of the people of the world.

We are all anticipating the probable resignation of the President of the United States. And why? Because we have witnessed over the last several months, month after month, revelations of the most spectacular lawlessness and corruption in the 200 years of the history of this country.

And what have we just witnessed in respect of the second stage of an effort begun by Congress in 1972 with the adoption of legislation providing for the public financing of Presidential general elections?

What have we just witnessed in respect of an opportunity that this Congress now has to clean up the kind of Presidential election revelations about which we have brought the downfall of a man who was elected President 2 years ago?

Mr. Chairman, I will tell you. We have just witnessed the spectacle of his party voting by 177 to 7 to keep the same old system by which we have been financing Presidential elections in this country.

So, Mr. Chairman, I hope that we will reject this effort to strike from the bill the provision for public financing of Presidential primary elections.

This provision does not aid the Treasury of the United States. The moneys come from the funds freely, voluntarily designated by the taxpayer to go into the dollar checkoff fund.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest, in the most direct way possible, to my friends on the minority side of the aisle that if they vote on this amendment as they did on the last amendment, the American people will reject them at the polls in November even as the American people are rejecting the present President of the United States.

The time has come to reduce the influence of big money in our Presidential elections—and this means primaries and national conventions as well as the general elections.

I urge the defeat of the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADEMAS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I rather thoroughly agree with the gentleman's remarks. I might remind those who think that the taxpayer is not saved money by the passage of the last amendment are wrong. The conventions in the future, as in the past, will be financed by advertisements which are deductible, which are the people's money.

I really am bitterly disappointed, and certainly hope that the current amendment will be defeated.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. Fush).

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I do resent the remarks of the previous speaker in the well reference to TT and think that we have the standing in this House to do so.

Both our national parties will be holding conventions in 1976 and I do not expect the Democratic Party, the gentleman's party, will be involved in any TT business in that next general election.

I think another answer might be that we all might well consider the frivolousness in many cases, and the large expenditures that go into national party conventions. Perhaps there is a better way of choosing our national candidates in this country.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, and members of the committee, I, too, join my friend, the gentleman from New York, in deeply regretting the kind of admonitory remarks the gentleman from Indiana, the distinguished deputy majority whip, has seen fit moments ago to deliver from the well of this House. And I think that we have had history of our country, assuming, as we all do, the events that will take place later this evening.

There is no one in this House, on either side of the aisle, who does not deplorably and regret the events that took place in the last Presidential campaign and the considerable responsibility for what we contemplate today.

However, I am not going to stand before this House and apologize to some people and apologize for the vote that I just made in defeating the effort to finance conventions through the checkoff, without any matching requirement.

I think that the gentleman from Indiana and many on this side of the aisle know that I have labored ceaselessly for many months now to inject a certain measure of public financing into the political process. I sought to do that along with the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. Udall), the gentleman from Washington (Mr. Fowler), the gentleman from New York (Mr. Cram) and many others, 40 in all, who have cosponsored an amendment that we hope yet to offer this afternoon that would provide, with respect to small contributions of $50 or less, that there could be a matching payment out of the Federal Treasury, out of the checkoff fund, not directly out of general funds, but out of the checkoff funds that have previously been established.

To suggest, however, that there is some shame that should be associated with our vote in saying that we did not want to inject public financing into the financing of national conventions is to confuse the issue entirely.

I talked to the distinguished national chairman of my party, a former colleague of ours, about this. I am proud, Mr. George Bush. His objection to total public financing of these national conventions was simply on the ground that he felt that it might lead to Federal regulations; if they were totally financed from Federal funds, it might lead to regulation that would extend even to the matter of delegate apportionment.

We now have a very important case that is pending in the Federal courts where we seek to adjudicate that issue. Therefore, I want to make it clear that there are two of us on my side of the aisle who in a very few minutes are going to support a matching amendment. We are all for encouraging small contributions of under $50 to eliminate big money and special-interest money from the financing of Congressional and Senatorial campaigns.

I hope the gentleman from Indiana will join me in supporting that amendment. I hope a majority of those on his side of the aisle will join us in supporting that amendment. But please do not leave the record in the shape in which it stands now, that somehow by voting against the amendment or voting for the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. Franks), we have subscribed to the abuses that did mar the 1972 campaign.

Mr. BRADEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Since I have mentioned the gentleman's name, I will yield to him.

Mr. BRADEN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman. The gentleman knows the high respect I have for him.

Earlier in the debate I referred to his outstanding contributions to shaping the climate for a worthwhile campaign reform bill.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BRADEN. But I want to say to my friend the gentleman from Illinois, that I have here a letter which I did not mention in the debate on the last amendment. I do now think it appropriate, however. So allow the letter, in view of the citation by the gentleman from Illinois of the views of the distinguished Republican National Chairman, a former colleague of ours in this body, who said, in a letter of January 29, 1974:

Bob Strauss and I appointed a bipartisan committee to look into new ways of financing the national conventions.

One of the thoughts that came out of the first meeting was that the checkoff for political contributions should be amended so that the first $2 million go to the financing of the conventions.

Mr. Bush goes on:

Frankly, it has an awful lot of merit to me. Much of the cost of the conventions has been financed through selling convention ads to corporations . . .

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Anderson) has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, respecting the right to object—and I do not intend to object—there are a lot of Members who have made commitments for this evening, and I am going to object to any further extension of time after this in the interest of trying to get this finished.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, before I yield, I would appreciate it if the gentleman would then leave me 1 minute, because I have something in addition to cover.

Mr. BRADEN. Of course.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BRADEN. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to repeat and I will spell this out further in the revision of my remarks—Chairman Bush endorsed this idea earlier. I was advised of that endorsement by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. Franks), who has subscribed to the abuses that did mar the 1972 campaign.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, let me reply to the gentleman's statement.

I do not challenge his good faith in offering the amendment, but let me make it clear that in the conversation I had with the distinguished national chairman of my party as recently as a week ago, it was explained to me at the time this proposition was originally offered he did not take into consideration the impact that the adoption of such an amendment might have on the court case that is pending with respect to the apportionment of delegates during the 1976 conventions. He does not want to jeopardize the decision in that case and in another possible Federal control of our national conventions.

That ought to be of as much concern on this side of the aisle as it is on my side of the aisle. That is the reason why we took the position we did on the Brezel amendment, not because we were subscribing to anything in the way of illicit or unsavory practices with regard to the financing of national conventions or campaigns.

Mr. DENNIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, we always play politics for the future. My colleague from Indiana, I suppose it is about par for the course that my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Brademas), succeeded in bringing this debate down to a low ballyhoo of alleged statesmanship in which it has been wandering to the ordinary partisan level which one might normally expect from the other side of the aisle.

But since he has done so, and hoping to retreat to a slightly more statesmanlike stance, let me point out a couple of things which, in my sincere opinion, is the real problem here, problems which we have not bothered to face and which, I may say to the gentleman on the other side of the aisle, they have not had the guts to face and have not had any intention to face.

We are taking into consideration a reform bill here, as I had occasion to note yesterday, as did some other Members, under a lousy gag rule where one cannot even put in an amendment to the bill.

What amendments can we not put in? Well, we cannot put in an amendment which will reach the fact, for instance, that as all half of the Members here are here thanks to involuntary union dues collected from people who have to pay them in order to work, and then they channel them into political action committees and use them to elect Members of Congress.

Where do we get around to the point in this bill of offering an amendment on that subject, I would like to ask the Members?

Mr. BRADEN. Mr. Chairman, will my friend, the gentleman from Indiana, yield?

Mr. DENNIS. No, Mr. Chairman, I will not yield right now. I have something else I want to say.

The trouble with this country and the reason we have special interest money running it, both from business—and we do—and from milk funds, as well as from labor and from everybody else, is that we have made the Government too big and too powerful, and every single person in this country who has two nickels, or a business or a farm, has to come down here and beg for permission to live. And naturally they try to pay the bureaucrats and the politicians off. Who did that? The party on the other side of the aisle, for the last 30 years, did that.

Now, the President of our party who, unfortunately, perhaps—learned your lessons too well, is about to pay for your sins. And you get up here and make fun and gloat about it in this hour and the hour of the Union. I am sorry to see it done.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am delighted that the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Denham) is able to get this debate on such a high plane, and I want to stay right on that high plane without the gentleman from Indiana drawing me down and furthering his argument.

I noticed he used the word “retract,” and I would say that he has had some good experience in retracting lately. I am only sorry that he did not get to retract on TV, like he made his defense on TV.

But, Mr. Chairman, somehow or other I have been getting the impression all day—and maybe we got a preview of it here from the gentleman from Indiana. I have been getting the impression that we are going to hear a speech at 9 o’clock tonight which is somehow or other going to be blamed on the Democrats for the present President is in. And that is what the gentleman from Indiana said.

I have personally felt very sorry for Mr. Nixon, and I still do. I would not be any party to any hounding him after he retired from office. But I hope that those folks over there do not think for one minute that we are going to let you get away with blustering somehow for all of the people that are in the penitentiary today and who are going to the penitentiary.

I have counseled with candidates for Congress on our side not to talk about Watergate because there are plenty of other issues. But if the gentleman from Indiana wants to make that the issue, well, I suppose we can rise to that high plane. I am a free-for-all. I am going to talk about Watergate and debate it with him. I would just as soon that we did not. I do not really think it has any place here.

We are going to decide whether or not we have public financing for primaries. We are going to decide whether we have public financing for the Presidential race. And the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Awans) who is against it on the one hand, is for it on the other, and we will have an amendment from him and the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. Udall) to extend it to Members of the House and the Senate. I am going to fight them as hard as I know how.

I have abided by the will of the House, and I will stand by the will of the House in that amendment.

The House decided it wanted a $60,000 limitation, and I am going to stand by that. The House decided it did not want the conventions financed, which I think was a mistake. My God, if you gave them an opportunity to look at either one of them in November you might wish the Federal Government did regulate them. I guess the reason most people on our side voted against it was they were afraid that the same kind of people who took over the Miami convention would do it again, and they did not want to have any of their money in it. I guess that was the general motivating factor and, vote our conscience, and abide by it.

I do not really mind a little rough debate now and then. And as I go back and read the debate in the time of An sonra and the time of Thomas Jefferson, and in the time of the Adamses and then look at the statement now, I can see the difference.

If you are saying something if you think someone in this House is an idiot, you cannot say you think that because that is not gentlemanly conduct. They used to say a lot worse things than that about the people in the old days, and the Republic has survived. I am not saying I think there is anyone who is that in the House, but there would be a way to get around it if one wanted to.

But what I am saying and what I finally want to say is, let us leave the partisanship out of it, and let us vote on the merits.

As chairman of the committee and as one of the conferees, I am going to try to uphold whatever the majority of this House wants. I hope that this experiment—and it is an experiment—in public financing and debating the deck that is on a pendulum on the primary and on the Presidential election, will stand. I am not willing to go any further than that until we see how it works out in that instance.

Mr. CONLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words. (Mr. CONLAN asked, and was given a fair shuffle.

Mr. CONLAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not often speak on the floor here, but I have been listening to the comments on both sides these last few minutes and I am moved to speak. I cannot help but think as a newcomer to this body that maybe the happenings of the last weeks and the last days might bring some sober re-thinking on the part of each of you who have been here for years to know the tremendous accumulation of power that has been created in the Central Government here in Washington.

The gentleman from Indiana spoke of the special interests and the favoritism that seeks to come into campaign financing; but the other gentleman from Indiana put it more aptly when he said, “Why does that money come in?” It comes in because this Congress has created within its will and its authority, a bureaucracy that has the power to give special treatment to Members or to remove bureaucratic heavy-handedness, so that private individuals can have fair treatment from that bureaucracy.

I have listened to some of the old Members of this House for years and some of you middle-aged Members who say, “10 years ago we had time for reflection on major issues. We had time to sit down, and we could read a book, and we could think about world affairs. We could have real input into decisionmaking.” We could think about the foreign policy and the domestic directions of this country.” But now they say in private conversations, “We have become ombudsmen; we have become paper shufflers; we are on a treadmill.” You spend so much time answering your mail and seeking Federal handouts for your constituents because of the tremendous increase in power that the Federal Government has gained over so many people's lives. People can hardly go to the toilet today without getting a Federal permit.

And so the public comes to you to infer and infer the bureaucracy and them. Does one wonder why the unethical money is coming in? Does one wonder why people try to buy in? Does one wonder why Congressmen are bribed and have to say no? Sometimes the temptations take hold, history has shown.

I think it is time for this body to begin thinking that maybe it has created over the years, as the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Denham), has said, a situation which invites the corruption that we have seen too much of. And maybe the time is here to correct that problem by redirecting power down to the States and the communities where the people can interface with a local bureaucracy, with their own resources, rural and urban communities that we have here in Washington where the money is being dissipated through a tremendous overhead, and where the citizens get only 60 cents on the dollar back. Then to get back from under control of Federal controls and then to get a fair break, they have to try to buy in somewhere to get a fair shuffle.

That type of situation, Mr. Chairman, makes us need to rethink. I believe if the happenings of the last 18 months have brought us a better awareness of what has caused corruption and dishonesty, then we can rise above the pedestrian problems we are getting into, and be a Congress that can think through the critical areas of national concern, and leave some of the regulation and financing of the political parties.

Then the public will have more respect for their institutions; they will have more respect for the Congress; the temptations here will be less for you, and maybe the level of nobility and morality of this country might rise once again to the high level the public expects of it, and where it should be.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I am as sorry as the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Brademas) that we adopted the most recent amendment offered by the gentlemen from Arizona and New Mexico. I think the Committee had attempted in good faith to reduce the rather shameful reliance that both parties—both parties—have had upon a little handful of big contributors to the national campaigns in the Federal conventions and to the maintenance of the national parties.

In 1967 I wrote an article for Harper's Magazine, in the research for which I did a study of the financing of the national conventions of both parties in the preceding election, in the year 1964. A substantial part of the money raised for those national conventions in that year
All I am trying to say is that, see, if we are serious about reducing the reliance upon these big contributors who more and more hold the keys to the gates of political opportunity, if we are serious about saying a candidate for President should not have or be a willing ward of the wealthy, then I think we ought to give a fair trial to this provision which the committee has devised.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentle- man yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. I yield to the gentle- man from Texas.

(Mr. PICKLE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his re- marks.)

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, I join the gentle- man in opposing the amend- ment of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. Frantz). I think the time has come for us to see if we can finance President- ial elections by the public finance method.

I think we ought to give it a try and see how it works.

Now, in supporting this provision, that is, Presidential election financing, I do not oppose the amendment, but I think it is important we ought to give this a try.

I rise in opposition to the motion to strike the portions of title IV mandating _

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words. I oppose in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

I want to join the gentlemen from Texas. When we talk about limitations, we all know the answer is fundamental, and an election do not have a limitation that it automatically expires at the end of 8 years or something like that.

Mr. WRIGHT. The gentleman would be free to offer such an amendment. But first we certainly should vote down the penciling amendment and give this plan a chance.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Postal System we now have and the one I would go back to, which was the old-fashioned Pony Express. It got the mail there faster.

Further than that, I think I can raise my money in 20 States quicker than the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. Udall) will contest it on that.

So I want all of us to know if they support this amendment and the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. Udall) is a candidate, he is getting me, too.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues in the House to reject the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota and to support the committee position. It is an idea again, I emphasize, whose time has come.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. Udall).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the nays appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 163, noes 253, not voting 18, as follows:

[Roll No. 466] AYES—163

the national or popular vote to be eligible for public funds. What the amendment does is to go through all of the places in 15 parts of this bill, which I support, and eliminates the 5 percent requirement.

I would like to explain why I think it is eminently correct and desirable that this body go on record in correcting what perhaps might have been a poor mistake, or an issue not clearly considered by the committee.

First of all, I think we must realize that although we now have a two-party system, we should not presume that all the parties there are ever going to be here for all time.

There is a very important and I think dramatic political history of this Nation in which parties have emerged and, like people, have lived, matured and passed on.

I think that at a time when politics enjoys such little public confidence we must not be put in a position of discouraging the growth and the healthy competition that would accrue from this conforming amendment.

May I point out, under the provisions of my amendment, that all the six new or minority parties in the 1972 election totaled only four-tenths of 1 percent of the total votes cast for the Presidency of the United States and there would have been only $70,000 expended by the six parties because minor or new parties only receive that portion of $20 million equal to their proportion of the total Presidential vote.

So it seems to me eminently sound, quite fair and democratic, that we here recognize that the fairest way to encourage all citizens to participate is to allow to those who may support any party as long as it conforms to the legal and statutory requirements in the jurisdiction in which it was created. Also, it seems well as be a question of constitutionality for us to have assigned so arbitrary a figure, 5 percent, in defining a political grouping eligible for Federal funds and governed by Federal regulations.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONYERS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Is the gentleman also saying that if we are going to, under this bill, actually open up the Federal Treasury to certain groups, we ought to make it fair for all, regardless of their size? Is that true?

Mr. CONYERS. Precisely.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I think that is a wholly reasonable and correct position and I appreciate the gentleman's explanation.

Mr. CONYERS. I urge the support from the membership in behalf of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRADEMBS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the positive thrust behind the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, but as I read his amendment, in effect it would say that if a handful of people decided to call themselves a political party and were to seek to make use of funds from the dollar checkoff fund in Presidential general elections, assuming that they met the other qualifications, they would be able to obtain money under the gentleman's amendment. I think that the language incorporated in the committee bill, which is language from the 1972 dollar checkoff law with respect to dollar checkoff elections, is sensible in that it provides that minor parties would be defined as any political party whose campaign for President or Vice President in the preceding election received at least 5 percent but less than 25 percent of the total number of popular votes cast for all candidates in such elections.

I do not want to misrepresent the gentleman's amendment. If I have, I am sure he will explain it to me. I will be glad to yield to him.

Mr. CONYERS. I appreciate the gentleman's yielding.

I should like to point out that the handful of people who may want to form a political party is the same kind of a handful of people who might form and have formed some of the great parties in the past and specifically the two great parties that exist in this country today. There was a handful of people that formed the Whig Party that elected two Presidents. There was a handful of people that formed the party that the gentleman and I are members of, back in 1800. At the same time I think that we should appreciate those citizens who may reserve judgment.

Mr. BRADEMBS. I appreciate the point the gentleman is making. The point I am making, however, is that were we to adopt this amendment, the effect would surely be to give encouragement to the proliferation of minor parties in the United States. We seem to be surviving, in spite of our difficulties, with two major parties and I would hope the gentleman's amendment would be rejected.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that a motion on this amendment cease in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Michigan answer a question? It looks as though the bill as amended would only admit to the first two sections of this amendment which would allow a new party and any political party with any number of members or adherents of any number full participation in the fund. Is this correct?

Mr. CONYERS. That is correct. What we seek to do is strike so it might now be considered an arbitrary number to require the parties to reach a 5-percent growth to succeed and reach the checkoff benefit. After all, that may have been 2 percent or something else, but altogether it would have cost $70,000 among six different parties. I think the logic of fairness to all parties in arriving at this new profound law is extremely important and should be embodied in this first important piece of legislation.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for his explanation. I think the gentleman is right, that we have been able to establish a matching formula that would do justice to new parties and third parties or independent parties. This is an important party and it is one reason why I do not like matching or public financing of any kind.

I do however think that striking out any kind of qualification is a mistake, and, as the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BRADEMBS) has pointed out, actually even a group of two could be a new party under the gentleman's amendment, and for that reason I am going to oppose it.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's yielding.

Mr. Chairman, is not the 5-percent figure, very arbitrary, and totally unnecessary to the process of getting a party started? As far as two people in a closet, starting a party, everybody realizes it takes more than that to start a viable political party. How did the committee arrive at a 5-percent figure?

Mr. FRENZEL. The committee did not arrive at a 5-percent figure.
Mr. ROUSSELOT. Where did it come from?
Mr. FRENZEL. That was in the Internal Revenue Code. That was voted long ago.
Mr. ROUSSELOT. Did the IRS determine that 5-percent formula?
Mr. FRENZEL. No. Only the Congress can write the laws. It is part of our checkoff law.
Mr. ROUSSELOT. This is going to be managed by the Treasury Department? Where did that wonderful magic term of 5 percent come from?
Mr. FRENZEL. The Congress determined that it passed the original checkoff fund.
Mr. ROUSSELOT. I really do not know who can explain this arbitrary 5-percent formula.
Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.
Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, this is from the 1972 act which establishes the dollar checkoff fund with respect to Presidential general elections.
Mr. ROUSSELOT. How did the Congress establish 5 percent?
Mr. BRADEMAS. It is in the act.
Mr. ROUSSELOT. That is certainly an arbitrary test?
Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.
Mr. HAYS. Of course it is an arbitrary decision, just like the $60,000 figure is arbitrary.
Mr. ROUSSELOT. This bill has many arbitrary decisions in my opinion. Then nobody can answer that question about the 5 percent and how it was arrived at? I am therefore constrained to vote against the amendment.
Mr. FRENZEL. I suggest we vote against the amendment.
Mr. CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. CONVERSE.
Mr. UDALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.
The Clerk reads as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. UDALL:
On page 78, line 4, add the following new Section 906, and renumber the existing Sections 906 and 910 to become Sections 910 and 911.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — HOUSE
H 7919

August 8, 1974

"SEC. 9004. PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

(a) Any knowing and willful violation of any provision of this chapter is punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both."

Mr. UDALL (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona? There was no objection.

(Mr. UDALL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. UDALL, Mr. Chairman, we have a very good bill before us. The gentleman from Ohio has been kind enough to say good things about me and I want to compliment him and the committee for bringing to the floor a very sound and very responsible bill.

I think it really needs only one more thing to be an exceptionally outstanding bill, and that is to adopt the Anderson-UDALL-Kerry matching fund proposal for congressional elections.

Studies have shown that about 95 percent of the financing of congressional elections comes from the top 2 or 3 percent of the wealthiest people in this country. The little guys are left out, whether they are Democrats or Republicans.

We have been trying new concepts, new patterns lately in this country. Two years ago we established a $25 tax credit for man and wife, and $100 tax deduction. This partial public financing has worked.

Now what we are trying to do is bring into the congressional election a mass of small private donations, with a limited amount of public money.

This proposal of ours has gone through some evolutions. It has been changed a number of times. As I moved around the floor today, I found a lot of confusion. I hope no one will vote against past versions of this proposal. It does not apply to 1974. It applies only to 1976. It will be a trial run in 1976. If it is successful, it will be continued beyond that. It does not apply to congressional primaries. There was fear there would be twelve or fourteen people running in a congressional district all financed by public funds. We do not hand anybody $90,000 or any large sum simply for getting a party nomination. The most public money they can get is $20,000, and to get it they have to match it with $50 or smaller donations. Not a dime of general revenue funds will go into this. It will be financed totally by the checkoff. It will be financed by people who voluntarily want to give a dollar on their income tax for a new system of clean honest elections.

Cost to us we would be financing frivolous candidates. We have a threshold. They have to raise $6,000 in $50 chunks or smaller to qualify. That is a very high threshold. Anybody that is a serious opponent against any incumbent is going to be able to raise $7,500. There is no compulsion. No candidate has to use this system. If they like the old way, if they have some conscientious objection to using dollar checkoff funds they may reject it.

One of the other objections was made to the Senator from Texas. It was one of the other proposals, which gave public money for merely getting a major party nomination. Even in a district where the race would be hopeless. A candidate could be in a one-party district, but if he gets a major party nomination under some of these proposals, he gets $50,000 or some large sum of money. In our proposal he has to match dollar for dollar. He has to get it in small contributions, and, as I say, it is limited to a $20,000 total.

We have another important limitation. Pears were expressed that, "You are going to take all this Federal money. You are going to hire your brother-in-law as a consultant, or spend all this tax-payer money on similarly senseless matters."

The $20,000 that is raised has to be segregated in a separate bank account. That money has to be used, or it has to be given back. It must be used for five highly visible things: radio, television, newspapers, billboards, telephone banks, and postage for direct mailing.

We have a fine system that ought to be tried out on a limited basis. I think it will work wonderfully. Indeed, it will be sufficient funds available to take care of all the costs of the 1978 Presidential election and the presidential primary races.

But assuming that there are available certain funds from the dollar checkoff for use in congressional races, it would be far smaller than when allocated among the candidates, it would be a mere token contribution to the candidates' campaigns.

The rationale behind the push for public financing is two-pronged:
First, to eliminate the evil of private funding as reflected in the Watergate mess.

Second, the need to provide funds to challengers in order to make political campaigns more competitive.

The mere fact that the proponents of public financing accept the concept of matching funds in the Presidential primary, indicates that they do not consider private funds per se evil.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, it is getting late and a lot of Members have commitments, as I said earlier, and I was wondering if 30 minutes would be sufficient time to conclude debate on this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment not be counted as amendments thereto close at 5:30 p.m.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

(Mr. UDALL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to amend my unanimous-consent request and ask unanimous consent that all Members whose names have been read be recognized for 1 minute each.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

(By unanimous consent, Messrs. COHEN, DELLENBACK, WHALEN, and CONTE yielded their time to Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois.)

(By unanimous consent, Messrs. ROSS, of Florida and Mr. BAUMAN yielded their time to Mr. ROUSSELOT.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GAYDOS).

(Mr. GAYDOS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Chairman, what is the purpose for allowing these funds for congressional races?

Obviously, based on current estimates, there is a question whether or not there will be sufficient funds available to take care of all the costs of the 1978 Presidential election and the presidential primary races.

From outside into those districts to finance those candidates?

Mr. UDALL. Yes; this is a national fund designed to help finance campaigns all over the country.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, if it is getting late and a lot of Members have commitments, as I said earlier, and I was wondering if 30 minutes would be sufficient time to conclude debate on this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment not be counted as amendments thereto close at 5:30 p.m.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GAYDOS).

(Mr. GAYDOS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Chairman, what is the purpose for allowing these funds for congressional races?

Obviously, based on current estimates, there is a question whether or not there will be sufficient funds available to take care of all the costs of the 1978 Presidential election and the presidential primary races.

But assuming that there are available certain funds from the dollar checkoff for use in congressional races, it would be far smaller than when allocated among the candidates, it would be a mere token contribution to the candidates' campaigns.

The rationale behind the push for public financing is two-pronged:
First, to eliminate the evil of private funding as reflected in the Watergate mess.

Second, the need to provide funds to challengers in order to make political campaigns more competitive.

The mere fact that the proponents of public financing accept the concept of matching funds in the Presidential primary, indicates that they do not consider private funds per se evil.
However, the bill before the House does answer the allegation of the existence of evil private funds in the Presidential general election by authorizing casting stations, newspapers, outdoor advertising, postage for direct mailings, and telephones.

But by accepting the concept of matching funds for the Presidential primary, the proponents for public financing then demand that we need to eliminate private funds to the need to provide front money for candidates who do not have sufficient private funds available to launch a campaign. They say that the Federal funds in the Presidentials will enable them to match private funds so that they should be matched by Federal funds. The answer to this question probably will be that the matching will only apply to small contributions.

However, if the committee bill passes then the strict limitations on contributions will in effect eliminate the large contributions needed to launch a campaign. So the only rationale for public funds in the Presidential primary is to assist candidates in launching campaign for the Presidential nomination.

However, the Federal funds in the Presidential general elections, we certainly are not encouraging more individuals to seek the nomination for these seats. If that is the purpose then Federal funds should be made available to individuals to assist their campaign for nomination. Once a candidate has received the nomination, his party will then assist his campaign. Why is it necessary for Federal funds at this point, particularly when the available funds will be so small?

If the purpose of providing funds to congressional candidates is to encourage more individuals to seek public office, then the only way to accomplish this is to direct Federal funds to those individuals who are unable to raise sufficient funds to obtain that nomination of the party. Providing Federal funds to the party candidate once nominated certainly does not encourage more individuals to seek public office. It merely assists the nominees of the respective parties. In fact, if the funds available from the dollar checkoff should become substantial, then the result of Federal funding could well mean a substitute for party funding from private sources.

PROVISIONS OF ANNUAL AMENDMENT

I. ELIGIBILITY

First, must certify that he is the nominee of a political party or is qualified on the ballot as a candidate for the Federal office.

Second, that he has raised at least 10 percent of the expenditure ceiling—$7,500 for a House seat—but a senatorial candidate does not have to raise more than $50,000.

Third, contributions in the form of subscriptions, loans, deposits or advances are not considered as eligible contributions in meeting the 10 percent requirement.

Fourth, only contributions of less than $50 from each person shall be considered.

Fifth, only contributions received after June 1 in the election year.

Sixth, Federal funds could not exceed 33 percent of the expenditure limitation.

Seventh, Federal funds must be kept in a separate bank account.

Eighth, can only be used for broadcasting stations, newspapers, magazines, outdoor advertising, postage for direct mailings, and telephones.

II. THE AMENDMENT ALSO PROVIDES FOR PAYMENTS OF FEDERAL FUNDS TO CONGRESSIONAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEES OF UP TO $1 MILLION PER YEAR

These committees could then give any of their candidates up to $10,000 of these funds or any mixture of private and Federal funds. This would amend the provision limiting the contributions to $5,000 in the bill as far as the general election is concerned. The $5,000 limitation would still apply to the primary.

The thrust of this amendment is certainly not to encourage more individuals to seek public office. It is just the opposite in that it only supports party nominees. Furthermore, the fact that the congressional campaign committees of the major national parties could receive up to $1 million would indicate that the intent is to further strengthen the major national party and enable them to decide which of their nominees they wish to support. Does this result in those candidates in greatest need of support receiving funds from the national committee or those candidates which the national committee looks on most favorably?

By unanimous consent, Messrs. Obey, Baillio, Boland, and Roncalio of Wyoming yielded their time to Mr. Udall. Mr. MURDLC will recognize the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELLOT).

Mr. ROUSSELLOT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. ROUSSELLOT. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to ask my good colleague, the gentleman from Arizona, who voted against the amendment to eliminate public financing of Presidential campaigns, why he now comes before us and eliminates financing for congressional campaigns in a primary contest. I find that highly inconsistent and discriminatory.

Mr. ROUSSELLOT. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. UDALL. I have long favored the original Anderson-Udall bill, which covered both primaries and general elections.

Mr. ROUSSELLOT. Why did the gentleman eliminate that concept from this amendment?

Mr. UDALL. Because it could not pass.

Mr. ROUSSELLOT. What are we now hearing from my good friend, the gentleman from Arizona, who has become very political on this issue of public funding for congressional primaries. I think it is an unfortunate discrepancy and obvious deficiency in the gentleman's amendment. The gentleman sincerely believes it should be in Presidential campaigns for both primaries and the general elections, but to garner votes here on the floor, he has come before the House and played a kind of Mickey Mouse game with his own principles.

That is very similar to coming out for Federal education, for buildings, but not for teachers. I think one is either for Federal aid education or he is not.

My belief is that my good colleague, the gentleman from Arizona, once again, as he did in the case of the land use bill, which had some 20 amendments before the House today and substantively compromised his own position, in which he does not wholly believe. On that basis alone the amendment should fail.

Mr. UDALL. The amendment to eliminate private funds to the Watergate scandals have galvanized public attitudes toward our political system. They have compounded years of public cynicism about elected officials.

Concurrently, they have caused the public to demand reform of campaign abuses.

Despite a recent upward flicker in congressional popularity, Members of Congress still rank in public esteem just ahead of skunks. And unless we enact meaningful campaign reforms, the skunks will be catching up.

As a Democrat, I have taken no partisan pleasure whatsoever in seeing my Republican colleagues shudder in a rain of Watergate indictments. All incidents of corruption, whether Republican or Democratic, reinforce the public suspicion that every politician is on the take. But it is not for lack of opportunities inherent in our special interest campaign financing system. Congress in 1971 passed a disclosure law to shed some light into the dark corners of political money raising.

It was only a start. But it was a revolution ahead of the 1925 Corrupt Practices Act. Now there is at least limited disclosure in Federal political campaigns.

It is weak, however, compared to the reporting law in Washington State, which was passed by the people in 1972 after a number of us signed petitions to put it on a statewide ballot.

H.R. 16090 improves some portions of the existing system but leaves at least two areas without effective reform: putting teeth in disclosure and working toward public financing.

Appointed officials to regulate themselves while seeking re-election produces an inherent conflict of interest. And naming employees of these elected officials as watchdogs of disclosure systems is naive. The public is not gullible to continue to accept this sort of cozy reporting system.

That is why I supported the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. Fascej), and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. Frenzel) to create an independent Federal Elections Commission. The Board of Supervisors set up by the committee bill would leave us in the awkward and ineffective position of judging ourselves—or not judging ourselves, as the situation is more likely to be.

H.R. 16090 also sets limits on contributions. But disclosure and limits on contributions still beg the question of the whole system of special interest financing. It is financing for public officials is expensive. The expense is usually greater than the salary that goes with the job. So, unless you are rich, you must outstretch your palm and ask for money.

Few Americans contribute to political campaigns. Fewer still contribute just for the sake of financing good government. Behind nearly every sizable contribution is a cost of holding an ax and grinding. If you are strong, you draw a line. But the temptation is always there.

Campaign financing by special interests is the most corruptive influence in the American political system.

The obvious solution is public campaign financing. It is an idea whose time is fast approaching as disgust with the old system continues to spread. As one of the sponsors of the earlier Udall-Anderson bill, I believe we must make a start on trying the idea.

Thanks to the checkoff of income tax for public campaign financing, it may be possible in the 1976 Presidential campaign. But we could be experimenting with public financing in other campaigns as well—if we put the provisions in this bill.

I will support the amendment by the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. Udall) and others to try a matching system of public campaign funds. There are unanswered questions about using taxpayers' money for political campaigns. Some citizens view it simply as another way for special interests to get their hands on the bill. But it all comes back to one basic question: Who do you want paying your elected officials' campaign costs? Do you want continued payments attached to struggle from their corporations, labor unions, trade associations, or other organized pursuers of private interest? Or do you want campaign financing by the public, which seeks only responsive government in the public interest?

It may not be possible to remedy all these problems in H.R. 16090. But the Federal Election Act amendments do improve upon the 1971 law. I will vote for the legislation on final passage.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Washington.

(Mr. FOLEY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Washington for yielding.

I hope Members on both sides of the aisle will support this essential amendment. It is sponsored, as I think the Members know, by the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. Udall), the gentleman to Whom and Whose was it, and myself, and others who have joined in that sponsorship. This amendment will not apply funds to congressional races except those voluntarily contributed through the tax checkoff. It applies to general elections only and is limited to the matching of small contributions, not to exceed $30,600.

The amendment is intended to be a historic step in opening the political system to afford broadest, most objective, and most responsive decision in all Federal elections.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. Mizell).

Mr. MIZEEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise merely to voice my opposition to this amendment.

As I opposed the tax checkoff for Presidential elections, so I oppose this tax checkoff for congressional elections. When my colleagues asked me about this issue, 77.3 percent of those responding were opposed to taking tax dollars and financing Federal elections. So I say to my colleagues that you may not be reading the sentiment of the people on this particular issue, and especially when the people begin to see their dollars going to support candidates with whom they disagree totally and disagree, and oppose politically.

So, Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment is rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. O'Brien).

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise merely to express my opposition to this amendment.

As I opposed the tax checkoff for Presidential elections, so I oppose this tax checkoff for congressional elections. When my colleagues asked me about this issue, 77.3 percent of those responding were opposed to taking tax dollars and financing Federal elections. So I say to my colleagues that you may not be reading the sentiment of the people on this particular issue, and especially when the people begin to see their dollars going to support candidates with whom they disagree totally and disagree, and oppose politically.

So, Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment is rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. O'Brien).

Mr. O'BRIEN. asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. CULVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

(Mr. CULVER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CULVER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to voice my strong support for the Anderson-Udall amendment to H.R. 16090, the Federal Election Amendments of 1974. This amendment would provide for a matching form of private and public financing of congressional general elections, and would be financed out of the dollar checkoff fund already provided in H.R. 16090 for Presidential elections.

This amendment will, I believe, lead to an end of the abuses we have seen during the past 2 years by fostering a broader base of citizen participation in the financing of Federal elections.

We must break with the precedent of lump-sum donations and provide incentives to encourage a re-engagement of citizen participation in campaigns, while at the same time permitting candidates without great wealth, or the advantage of family money, a realistic chance in seeking public office.

I, therefore, fully support efforts to amend H.R. 16090 to include a system of matching payments for small contributions to congressional campaigns. The threat of such a system is not eliminate private money from campaigns, but to shift the source of funding from the special interests and large contributors to a broad base of citizen participation.

With entitlement to a $50 Federal matching payment for each equivalent contribution raised privately, candidates would have a far stronger incentive to turn to the people to finance their campaigns.

There is a desperate need to equalize the political influence of all citizens in the United States. We must act now to insure that the inequitable amount of money one has or can command does not disproportionately affect the extent of their political influence.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentlemen from Illinois and Arizona.

While I am looking forward to the passage of this vital legislation, I feel essentially redundant about the necessity for this particular amendment.

In my conversations with colleagues and constituents regarding Federal campaign payments, I have encountered the same objection as Mr. Foley: 'This proposal will force me, through my tax dollars, to support campaigns, issues, and ideologies which I find distasteful and repugnant.'

I am then usually reminded that Thomas Jefferson explicitly warned that no American should ever be coerced into supporting ideas or beliefs contrary to his conscience. As I opposed the tax checkoff for the 1970 election, I opposed the tax checkoff for the 1970 election. I hope Members will support this amendment so that we may not be reading the sentiment of the people on this particular issue, and especially when the people begin to see their dollars going to support candidates with whom they disagree totally and disagree, and oppose politically.
be reduced from its $25,000 ceiling to a percentage of that amount. The reduction would be the per cent of shortfall of the checkoff fund. For instance, if the checkoff fund contained only 80 per cent of the maximum required amount, the ceiling for each candidate would be multiplied by 80 per cent.

Let me add that the amount each candidate will be eligible to receive will be determined far in advance of each election so that no candidate will be caught short.

Gentlemen, as I look around this country today, I see dark clouds of doubt, cynicism, and distrust hanging over our body politic. However, I firmly believe that the adoption of this amendment—and the passage of this bill—will help sweep these storm clouds from our land. Just as fresh air invigorates the body, this fresh source of campaign money will revitalize our election process.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. Fyres).

(Mr. PEYSER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this amendment. I think it is desperately needed if we are ever going to break the bonds that have been leaving the rich in complete power in so many cases.

I can speak with some authority in this area. In my campaign, which was one of the most heavily financed campaigns in this country, where more money was put in than probably, in any other campaign in this country, where more money was designated by what money can do in a campaign.

Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to get away from that. I am for the limitation of amounts that can be spent in a campaign. I am for public financing as outlined in this amendment.

Mr. PHILIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEYSER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I most strongly urge my colleagues to support this amendment. I think it is desperately needed.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Anderson-Udall amendment. I regret the parliamentary situation only permits me 50 seconds.

I would remind some of the people who are supporting the Anderson-Udall amendment and some of the organizations who are supporting it, that this amendment has now been kicking around for more than a year. It has been changed on at least 3 or 4 times in major respects, and I believe for the better.

Some of the organizations and some of the people who are sponsoring this amendment have been highly critical of the Committee on House Administration for our delays—and there have been delays, some of them unexplained—should recognize in fairness that this period of delay has given the sponsors of the Anderson-Udall amendment a chance to make it a better amendment. I somewhat reluctantly supported it initially. Now having been changed 3 or 4 times, for the better I can enthusiastically support it.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 16090, a bill designed to reform the Federal election systems by establishing spending and contribution limits for all Federal candidates, to get away from the interests of the rich and powerful. As the author of a similar proposal, I wholeheartedly support this amendment which, again, I strongly urge my colleagues not to equality a sham, a farce? port by raising 10 percent of the spend-

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Chairman, the need for reform is obvious. The words "politics" and "politicians" have become synonymous with wheeling and dealing, undercover operations, and corruption. And yes, some politicians are "wheelers and dealers". Some operate in the shadows, and some are corrupt. Those are the ones that all of us would like to see put out of business, and they will be when the public finds out about their activities.

While present law has no limit on individual contributions, this measure will limit no individual could contribute more than a total of $25,000 per year to all Federal candidates and political committees supporting Federal candidates.

SPENDING LIMITATIONS

In addition, this bill, H.R. 16090, establishes a ceiling for all campaign activities in any election for Federal office. With respect to a Presidential election, candidates could be able to spend up to $2 million, and the ceiling totaling $84 million, as in the 1972 Nixon campaign, and $28 million by the McGovern organization.

Senatorial candidates would be limited to spending $5 cents per person in the State, or $75,000, whichever is greater.

Candidates for election to the House of Representatives would be limited to spending $40,000.

PUBLIC FINANCING

And, finally, to end the reliance on the wealthy to finance Presidential campaigns, the bill permits the use of up to $20 million per major candidate from those funds designated by taxpayers on their annual tax return to be paid to the President Election Campaign Fund.

As with existing law, public financing would be strictly voluntary and would come from this Fund only.

An amendment will be offered, however, by Congressman Anderson of Illinois, the chairman of the Republican Conference, and Congressman Udall of Arizona, to extend public financing to congressional campaigns based on a mix of private financing and Federal matching payments for small contributors of up to $1.

As the author of a similar proposal, I support this amendment which, again, would only use those funds which were voluntarily checked off by taxpayers on their tax returns.

Before a candidate would be eligible for any of these funds, that candidate would have to demonstrate public support by raising 10 percent of the spending limit—$6,000—in contributions of $5 or less. And, then, the maximum a candidate could receive would be $20,000.

If adopted, this amendment, I believe, will encourage interested citizens, who may lack personal funds, to seek public office. It would permit a person who has taken a great interest in community affairs to run for office, with the knowledge that he or she would not be indebted to the special interests.

I sincerely believe that this amendment could result in better government, practiced by better people, who only have a strong desire to serve their fellow man.

CONCLUSION

Mr. Chairman, the need for reform is obvious. The words "politics" and "politicians" have become synonymous with wheeling and dealing, undercover operations, and corruption.

And yes, some politicians are "wheelers and dealers". Some operate in the shadows, and some are corrupt. Those are the ones that all of us would like to see put out of business, and they will be when the public finds out about their activities.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — HOUSE

H 7923

August 8, 1974

But, certainly, most are honest; most are here in Congress or in the Presidency trying to do their best to represent all of the people. And, most will continue to raise their funds from small contributors; will continue to spend less than the maximum amount; and will continue to run the decent congressional campaigns designed to inform, not deceive.

Unfortunately, legislation such as this is needed to assure that the big monied interests are not represented in proportion to the amount of money they spend on political campaigns. I support this proposal and urge my colleagues to join with me in passing a meaningful campaign reform bill which would put the poor and weak on an equal footing with the rich and powerful.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON).

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. BIESTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

(Mr. BIESTER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BIESTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment introduced by Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. UDALL providing matching Federal funds in congressional campaigns.

The potential problems in raising large amounts of private money in campaigns is not limited to Presidential elections alone, and the fact that congressional public financing is not included in any form in H.R. 16906 is a glaring omission which must be corrected. For Members of Congress to exclude themselves from the same arrangement they would impose on the candidates for the Presidency would create a double standard.

The American public has clearly expressed its approval in nationwide polls of the public financing concept for federal elections; I am personally committed to the concept of full public financing at the congressional level as well as at the Presidential and introduced legislation last year, and last year I hope the House would at a minimum adopt the matching Federal funding plan as proposed by Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. UDALL.

The stimulus for campaign reform has emerged from the role money—big money—plays in the political process. While on paper and in principle we have gone far toward realizing our democratic tradition of a one-man-one-vote as espoused in the Baker and Sims cases, we need to go a step further in removing the distorting influence of big money in elections to bring reality closer to principle. Money gives those individuals who have it to spend a special position before candidates and it holds the potential for carrying an influence that can make such individuals far more equal than others.

We know from experience that campaign contributions can lead to special preferences. Certainly, this is not always the case, but the suggestion and implication are there, nevertheless. The public, cynical about politics and its ethics, sees a relationship between money and political policy whether it exists or not. It is time to sweep away any grounds for these suspicions.

The Anderson-UDall amendment can help. Under its provisions, matching Federal funds for private contributions of $50 or less for congressional candidates in general elections would be made available. Funds could not exceed one-third of the spending limit imposed in the bill and candidates would have to raise an initial amount to qualify for the matching Federal payments.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge my colleagues to support this critical amendment.

Mr. and Mrs. PONT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

(Mr. PONT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PONT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Anderson-UDall public financing amendment. I am an original cosponsor of the amendment and strongly believe that we must get big money out of politics and small money in.

The concept of matching funds makes great sense for two reasons.

First, matching funds will help equalize the opportunity for individuals to run for congressional office.

Second, matching funds will remove the need for large contributions—both to special individuals— which has in the past led to problems with elections. The corrupting influence of large contributions has amply been demonstrated in the past and this amendment will help fight those kind of problems.

These are the two most important reasons I can think of in terms of reforming our political system. I believe there are sound reasons for adopting this amendment.

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

(Mr. PARRIS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time in order to propose a question to the gentleman from Illinois, and that is whether or not this is the "nose of the camel under the tent" of the use of general revenue funds for political campaign financing purposes.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois for the purpose of answering my question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have at the desk is at once both a bold departure in campaign finance and at the same time is firmly grounded in our deep tradition of grassroots citizen participation in the electoral process.

On the first score let me say unhesitatingly that this is a public finance amendment. It does provide for the use of taxpayer funds in congressional campaigns and it does symbolize an intent to break sharply with our present woefully inadequate, special-interest dominated, campaign-funding system.

But let me make a second equally important point. We do not seek to displace money and private contributors entirely, as does the Senate bill. Indeed, I adamantly object to that approach and should our amendment be enacted, I would strenuously oppose any further effort to use it as a stepping stone to full public finance in the conventional sense.

What we propose instead is a creative but limited approach. We do not seek to harness the mechanism of public finance to the objective or goal of revitalized citizen participation and small contributor funding of congressional election campaigns. Rather we seek to supply tax dollars on the stump to be siphoned off by anyone who can qualify for the ballot. Rather this amendment utilizes the matching concept so that the amount of public funds a candidate receives is a direct function of the number of small contributors he can mobilize in behalf of his candidacy.

To receive just $100 in public funds would require 200 separate $50 contributions or 500 separate $20 contributions. A House candidate wishing to receive the maximum entitlement under this amendment—$25,000—would need to raise 1,000 contributions averaging $25 apiece in order to do so.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, in this amendment we are contemplating considerably more investment of taxpayers' money to finance the necessary expenses of campaigns. Far more importantly, we are attempting to use public funds as a lever, as an incentive, to drastically increase public participation in the electorate.

And I will say to those of my colleagues who may be skeptical, you are not going to achieve that critical objective by mere exhortation, or stirring rhetorical calls to get the people back in the election process.

The reason is simply that it is enormously expensive to raise small money. If, in fact, the net return after fund-raising costs is so low that candidates and their political committees find such efforts are just not productive—especially if large contributions from independent groups or more affluent supporters are available.

However, by doubling the rate of return on efforts to mobilize small contributors, this amendment will alter the fund-raising equation significantly. It will provide the motor force that can help transform our rhetoric about citizen participation into concrete reality. This amendment will serve a second equally important objective, and that is insuring that campaigns are adequately funded. I need not remind you that enacting stringent contribution limitations, we are going to substantially reduce the amount of funding available to conduct political campaigns. You need only look at the disclosure reports from the 1972 election to see that in most Senate races and in many hotly contested House races the contribution ceilings we adopted would have had the effect of reducing funds by 20, 30, and, in some cases, 50 percent.

Yet we should not be deluded into thinking that if in driving the money-changers out of politics we also drive out the money will still have not added anything very constructive or healthy.

It takes money—large amounts of it—to communicate effectively with the electorate, to adequately inform voters about the issues and to conduct vigorous, competitive campaigns. By providing for a significant input of public funds and by increasing the volume of small private contributions, the amendment will help in the long way toward compensating for the adverse funding impact of the necessary contribution limitations contained in the measure before us today.

Furthermore, this amendment will not only provide adequate funding, but it will also insure the right kind of funding. At an hour when the capital of this Nation fairly trembles under the weight of the crisis upon us, and when confidence in our governmental institutions has plummeted to an all-time low, there is nothing more urgent than convincing the American public that our system is worthy of the electorate's trust and support.

We simply must convince a skeptical public that elections are not bought, manipulated, or corrupted by the few to the detriment of the many. In my opinion, the way to achieve that crucial objective is to convince the electorate that campaigns are financed with clean money. There can be little doubt that the mixed financing system of tax dollars and small contributions envisioned by our amendment will vividly provide that kind of assurance.

Mr. Chairman, I recognize, of course, that many of my colleagues have had serious reservations and questions about any measure which involves the use of tax dollars for campaign purposes. Let me say that I share many of those concerns, and for that reason we have attempted to very carefully craft this program so as to allay them. Indeed, I think it can be said quite categorically that this amendment avoids every major objection that has been raised to the more conventional proposals for public financing.

First, it puts to rest completely the basic philosophical objection to forcing a taxpayer to support a candidate with whom he has strongly disagrees. The contribution matching program will be funded entirely out of the check-off fund and will therefore be supported entirely by voluntary taxpayer contributions.

If someone were to oppose the views of my cosponsor (Mr. Udall) on the question of land use control, they will not have to contribute a cent to his campaign. And if his supporters are unalterably opposed to my views on curbing labor violence in the construction industry, not a cent of their tax money need go to my campaign. In short, our amendment fully protects the fundamental right of every American citizen, articulated by Thomas Jefferson almost two centuries ago, not to be coerced into involuntarily supporting ideas, opinions and beliefs with which he is diametrically opposed.

Secondly, this amendment is not going to lead to bedsheet ballots and the proliferation of frivolous candidacies. The main problem in that regard is primarily one of fundamental right of every American to manipulate or corrupt by the few to fifth, telephone "ease costs, quality and the way to achieve that crucial objective. There are a number of Members who have heard from small donors and are generally accepted as necessary to the conduct of political campaigns.

To avoid that possibility we require that matching payments be deposited in a separate bank account and that funds may be drawn from that account only for direct mail, television and radio air-time; second newspaper and magazine advertising space; third, outdoor billboard facilities; fourth, postage costs for direct mail campaigns; and fifth, telephone lease costs.

These are all high visibility expenditures and are generally accepted as necessary means for candidate communication with the electorate. At the same time, the five categories cover a broad enough range of advertising and communications techniques so that most candidates would not find them unduly restrictive.

Let me just briefly address two final objections that I have heard from some of my colleagues. I think there can be little legitimate concern that public finance will further erode the political parties at a time when we should be attempting to strengthen them, and would readily agree that this is an appropriate forum for the kind of public financial approach contained in the Senate bill. But our amendment contains two features which obviate that argument entirely.

First, public funding is limited to one-third of a candidate's spending ceiling. Since the 1972 disclosure reports show that most House candidates received only about 20 percent of their funding from national sources, it is clear that there will be more than sufficient opportunity for parties to continue and even expand their traditional funding role under our proposal.

Second, this amendment makes the campaign committees of each party eligible for matching payments to the tune of $1 million per year. So instead of undermining their role in the campaign funding process, our amendment will actually strengthen it by increasing the amount of funds they will have available for candidate support.

Finally, to those of you who are concerned about the cost and the budget impact of this amendment, let me assure you that the cost will be minimal. Indeed, the one-third matching limitation, the threshold requirement and the fact that only the first $50 of a contribution will be matched, the total cost of the matching system will be quite modest. Were each House and Senate candidate to be eligible for the maximum entitlement under the amendment, the total cost would be $31 million per election. On an annualized basis that amounts to $15.5 million or 11 cents per eligible voter.

In practical practice, however, the costs are likely to be considerably less because many candidates will not meet the threshold requirement and others will not raise enough small contributions to be eligible for the full $25,000. Had the amendment been in effect for the 1972 congressional elections, the actual cost would have been well under $10 million.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, this is a balanced, workable amendment. It uses public funding to further the goal of renewed citizen participation and confidence in the electoral process. It contains built-in safeguards to meet all of the requirements of conventional public financing measures. I therefore urge you to support the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to state there is a time certain fixed. There are a number of Members who stood at one time or another on our record but did not yield time to the principal involved. If those Members who stood desire time, I wish they would rise for recognition. For the record, the Chair, with the permission of the committee, is going to arbitrarily divide the remaining time, 3 minutes to the gentlewoman (Mrs. Burton) from Arizona (Mr. Udall), 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. Frenzel) and 4 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hays). That is all the time there is.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. Udall).

Mr. UDALL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Is it not correct this amendment as it has been changed and refined now accepts the premise of the House Administration Bill constructed by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hays) and the others, including the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Amundson) that no General Fund money except voluntary checkoff money can be used, and that no moneys can be used until after all of the other priorities in the bill are fulfilled? Am I not correct in that respect?

Mr. UDALL. The gentleman is exactly correct. If there is no checkoff money, there is no matching in congressional elections. This is entirely a voluntary program; it is voluntary for the giver and the receiver. No one has to give a dollar on the tax checkoff unless he wants to. He knows he is giving financial support for political campaigns. The checkoff is already in 20 states and in Puerto Rico.

No candidate has to use it. If one is affronted by the use of checkoff funds from little people's dollars, he need not apply. It is entirely voluntary.

I would add that public financing of elections is now used in some 20 countries. In Puerto Rico, the Commonwealth which is affiliated with us, they have had a fine experience with it. The legislation does not finance publicly. The Members asked to act on the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico how it works in that area.

Let me emphasize again, because there is a serious opponent of tax checkoff, it does not apply this year, but only in 1976. It does not apply to primaries. There is a limitation on what one can get out of the fund, which is now $2,000 instead of $5,000, because we have reduced the overall spending limitation. It is totally financed by the checkoff. There is a threshold of $7,500, now $6,000, which must be raised beyond a certain quality, and anyone who is a serious opponent is going to raise $6,000 in any event, so this is not encouraging people to come into the races.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

(Mr. FRENZEL, asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the Udall-Anderson amendment.

I have previously listed for the members of this committee some of the ill effects of public financing, but a rerun might be helpful now. Here is what we get with public financing:

First, we get weakened political parties; second, we get more candidates in every area, more dullest elections, and dullest elections means re-election of incumbents. We get additional protection of incumbents. We get discouragement of competition in political campaigns. We get stravaganza of funds for State and local candidates. We get restriction of freedom of speech. We get a compelled use of your money and my money for candidates that may personally object to. Worse, we get an increase in the bureaucracy.

Finally, we get more spending than we have now, although the people who pay for that amendment are telling us they want to cut back. The worst effect of all is the promise of clean elections cannot be fulfilled by using public money.

Public money is the same color as private money. It is green. Translated in another way, a lawbreaker can break the law with public money as well as with private money. There is no essential difference in the money.

I believe the bill we are working on today provides independent, effective regulation and enforcement, and that is the best insurance for clean elections. We can achieve clean, open, honest elections, without wasting the people's money.

If public financing is an idea whose time has come, why has public support for using the taxpayers' money in elections fallen off more than 10 percent in the last 6 months? Why will the Members who—because the public has figured out whose money it is and what kind of campaigns it is going to be used on. Our area has left very little to the American people. Do not let the bureaucrats take over the congressional elections too. At least save them initially presented. I believe the process is entirely voluntary. Our all-pervasive Government has left merit. I believe the process is voluntary. If one is allergic why—because the program; it is voluntary for the giver and the receiver. No

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS).

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say at the start when the gentleman was asked if this would be the nose of the camel under the tent, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Anderson) replied "No." And I agree with him, it would not be the nose of the camel, it would be the whole head and half his body. And the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Anderson) and company would be back here in 2 years wanting complete public financing. They are the ones who wanted public financing which I turned down cold turkey.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. No. The gentleman got his time and he got 26 minutes of it the way it was, or the proponents of this did, and I am not going at any time to anybody who is for this iniquitous amendment.

What the gentleman is really trying to do is get this horse into the Treadway on the first round. Sure, they wanted $90,000 first, and then they will want the whole turkey.

If we did that in Ohio we would have 1,000 candidates. All one has to do in Ohio is take $30 for a dinner for $25 a ticket and bring in all the Hollywood stars one would want and spend that money and then you report you spent that amount and then you go to the Treasury and pick up your money.

But that is what it amounts to. I am totally opposed to it. I am asking the Members to accept a limited trial run on the Presidential campaign, where all the people have gone to jail. There have been all-pervasive盖着 a ceiling on what one can spend, by putting a ceiling on what one can spend, by putting a ceiling on what one can spend, without wasting the people's money.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment is defeated.

Mr. JAMES V. STANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JAMES V. STANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I believe the process of developing strong political parties is the key to our country. The argument is about basis of the parties and the philosophies themselves, and we should not enable by a method of public financing the development of new philosophies. In my judgment this is just the beginning of proliferating those philosophies and parties in this country.

Mr. HAYS. I agree with the gentleman totally. I think it is a scheme to break down the two-party system. I think it could have that effect. I think it is significant that the people who believe in the two-party system are totally opposed to this concept.

(Mr. JAMES V. STANTON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. JAMES V. STANTON. Mr. Chairman, the Watergate crisis is generating a great deal of energy for reform of the electioneering process. Obviously, this is a good thing, but we would be making a serious mistake, Mr. Speaker, to assume that just so long as it produces change—this is just the beginning of process. Obvliously that it is being presented here to the public is not being fully understood.

If there is any money left over after the campaign, does the candidate give it back to the Government or does he keep the money despite the fact that it is Government money?

Mr. UDALL. If the gentleman will yield, it goes back to the Government and it goes into the fund to pay for the overall television and billboard and other campaign material.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS).

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say at the start when the gentleman was asked if this would be the nose of the camel under the tent, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Anderson) replied "No." And I agree with him, it would not be the nose of the camel, it would be the whole head and half his body. And the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Anderson) and company would be back here in 2 years wanting complete public financing. They are the ones who wanted public financing which I turned down cold turkey.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. No. The gentleman got his time and he got 26 minutes of it the way it was, or the proponents of this did, and I am not going at any time to anybody who is for this iniquitous amendment.

What the gentleman is really trying to do is get this horse into the Treadway on the first round. Sure, they wanted $90,000 first, and then they will want the whole turkey.

If we did that in Ohio we would have 1,000 candidates. All one has to do in Ohio is take $30 for a dinner for $25 a ticket and bring in all the Hollywood stars one would want and spend that money and then you report you spent that amount and then you go to the Treasury and pick up your money.

But that is what it amounts to. I am totally opposed to it. I am asking the Members to accept a limited trial run on the Presidential campaign, where all the people have gone to jail. There have been all-pervasive cover-ups, all-pervasive ceiling on what one can spend, by putting a ceiling on what one can spend, by putting a ceiling on what one can spend.

They talk about reducing the big money. We have already reduced the big money by putting a ceiling on all one can spend, by putting a ceiling on what one can spend, by putting a ceiling on what one can spend, without wasting the people's money.
Besides being a proposal, it has taken on the dimensions of a moral crusade. Mr. Speaker, while I do not question the sincerity of those who advocate public financing, I do challenge their wisdom. I submit that most of their premises are fallacious. I am addressing myself, of course, to the basic concept rather than to any particular legislative formulation of it—Is at best a placebo and at worst—I am using this word with forethought—a poison. It's a placebo because it will not succeed in assuring us of "unbossed" politicians.

It is a poison because it might very well destroy the innards of the American system of government. One organ it would attack is the first amendment, which assures to every citizen and group of citizens not only a voice to influence their political leaders but also the absolute right to chart their own lawful strategy for maximizing that voice. Another organ that would be threatened is our traditional infrastructure of major and minor political parties. The parties might be brought to a state of atrophy by public financing, or—is this another possibility—they might become afflicted with electronic disease, a ceaseless preoccupation with whether the money that they have on hand is going to be that contributed selectively to them by special interests and the synthesizing, still seeking special interests. Never mind, either, for the moment, the argument that public financing would prove ineffective. This intended reform is based on the premise that good money in politics would drive out the bad. Good money would be that money contributed generously and indiscriminately by all the taxpayers to parties and candidates who hold all sorts of views. Bad money would be that contributed selectively, if not to certain candidates but to certain interest groups. Never mind for the moment that not all the bad money, so defined, is really bad—that much of it in fact is undoubtedly good. If we broadly construe the term "special interest," and if we believe, as we say we do, in a pluralistic body politic where every political entity has a right not only to exist but to compete—where the public is served by the clash of these so-called special interests and the synthesizing, as often occurs, of their separate points of view. Never mind, either, for the moment, the claim that the evil cannot inhere in money itself. It grows only out of the spirit in which it might be given, or from the understanding with which it is received, if the spirit and the understanding are corrupt.

The point for us to consider, if we accept the premise that the presumptively bad money is bad per se, is whether it will indeed be purged from the political process by the good money that is poured in. Our history, not to mention our political savvy, gives us the answer. In 1925 we gave the country the Corrupt Practices Act, and in subsequent years we enacted a number of amendments. This law said, in effect, that campaign contributions from business corporations—or, it was added later, labor unions—are bad, period. Therefore, such contributions are laws. But is what effect? Corporations and labor unions are still in the very center of the political arena. In the end, despite the 1925 enactment; and its amendments, we got Watergate. And during the intervening years through the present time, we got this—as Marc Zacker, of the Library of Congress, wrote in a paper prepared for me:

Many corporations find ways to circumvent the law. Two of the most common methods are the placement of salaried workers, still on the company payroll, on the campaign staff of a candidate, and the "lumping technique," that is, a corporation arranging to pay a regular, salaried attorney, public relations firm, etc., for debts incurred by the candidate. Other firms contribute, also in violation of the law, by awarding bonuses to their employees to induce them to support the political party of his choice. The money that these firms actually contribute is that which money will be contributed to a candidate or party. Still others allow their corporate officers to be reimbursed for their business expenses, supposedly paid for out of pocket. In reality this provides the executive officer with excess money, again to be contributed to a political campaign.

As we know, Mr. Chairman, public cynicism is highly injurious in a democracy; it causes people to lose interest in governing themselves, and to lose confidence in their ability to do it. Two of the prime rationalizations for bad money are laws that promise more than they can achieve, and laws that are supposedly tough but really are not enforced even, if at all. The Corrupt Practices Act was such a law; a statute providing public funds for electioneering, but introducing no furth-

Some of the public financing proposals would give us a hybrid system in which candidates could legally receive contributions both from the U.S. Treasury and from private sources. Since this kind of law would permit presumably bad money to remain in the political system and to keep circulating within it, it's difficult to discern what the statute would accomplish, assuming again, as such a law would, in effect, say, that the bad money is bad. Perhaps its principal achievement would be to induce some people into thinking, until they awake later in disillusionment, that another blow had been struck for reform. Another version of the public financing proposal is that forthright and obviously more consistent with its own premises, would outlaw private contributions altogether. This was the strategy of the Corrupt Practices Act, whose weak and hypocritical prohibitions against campaign contributions by cor-

The Corrupt Practices Act was bad money per se, it is unrealistic to suppose that we can really prevent corporations, labor unions, and other special-interest groups from somehow finding a way to use their financial muscle when their vital interests are at stake. If this is true, we are not likely to have much more success, with a preemptive public financing law. However, if indeed it is an attainable goal to drive the presumptively bad money out of the political arena, a strong, continuing enforcement effort would be required. The Corrupt Practices Act did not lay the foundation for such an effort—and, in fact, the law appears to have been con-ity which they could not safely exercise. The Clerk and the Secretary owed their tenure to the integrity, and hence their policing. And the Attorney General, of course, was an appointee of the President, whose day-to-day work enmeshed him in all sorts of entangling alliances with Members of the House and Senate. Predictably, in the decades that followed there were no prosecutions under the Corrupt Practices Act. In the 1971 updating of the law, it was broadened in some respects, but in other respects were spelled out. In addition, a third stratagy was created. The Comptroller General, more independent than the Clerk and the Secretary but still an agent of Congress, was given supervisory authority over the reports filed by Presidential candidates. But the two basic defects of the 1925 legislation were not corrected. We are still stuck today with a police force which has not been centralized command structure and each of them answerable in subtle ways to the persons they are policing.

What we obviously need, Mr. Chairman, is more self-starting, self-propelled, free-wheeling enforcement machinery operating under a grant of authority to wash up in the legislative branches. The machinery ought to be centralized in a new agency of Government that would need no one's permission, have its policies widely known with respect to electioneering by candidates for all the Federal elective offices. The agency would have built-in authority to compel reporting by the candidates, require timely reporting to verify the completeness and accuracy of the reports to subpena persons and documents, to hold hearings, to publicize its findings and, when necessary, to initiate and prosecute its own cases in court. Such an agency is proposed in a number of bills pending before us, among them S. 372, which passed the Senate, and H.R. 10218. But the crusade for public financing appears to be monopolizing public attention, diverting us from the more meaningful and effective legislation that we have before us. The need for careful examination of the plans for assuring enforcement.

Mr. Chairman, I think most of us would agree that, of all the officials charged with enforcement of the present law, the Comptroller General is the most impartial. As I have indicated, he is one of three so-called supervisory officers, the others being the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate. For so long as he and his agency remains in this Congress to suggest improvements in the law, the threat of his thinking is highlighted by these excerpts from his testimony last April 12 before the Senate Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections:

One year's experience with the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 has convinced me of the need for more effective enforcement procedures. The Supervisory Officer or his equivalent should be given the power to require written reports and answers to questions; (2) to administer oaths; (3) to compel testimony and documents by subpoena; and (4) to institute court actions in his own name through his own attorneys. In addition, the Supervisory Officer or his equivalent should be authorized to impose civil fines on candidates and political committees or others who violate the Act in ways not appropriate for criminal prosecution. As late filing of reports, failure to include relevant information, errors in reports, etc. In his discretion, the officer should be able to impose a fine within statutory limits on the violator and to enforce it through district court or through a court proceeding.

This is the real business before us, Mr. Chairman. We could get on with it. We would be misleading the people if we were to allow ourselves to become distorted by side-shows produced by outside groups. We are making laws to govern the public. The reason I leave these objections to the obvious need for more enforcement is.

C. Disclosure as an Alternative Reform

If we conclude, Mr. Chairman, that even the strictest enforcement would fail to completely isolate campaigns from the influence of special interest, then we ought to consider also proposals to improve the disclosure mechanism in the current law. The rationale is: bad money diminishes as it attains visibility. As a result, the 1925 prohibitions, a strategy adopted in the 1925 Corrupt Practices Act. Although there was more obfuscation than disclosure in the years that followed, some positive improvements were made in this area in the 1971 legislation. With some of my colleagues, I believe we ought to proceed still further in this area. For instance, H.R. 10218 contains a proposal for a Federal Elections Campaign Bank. The justice Department endorsed this concept in testimony last September 21 before the Senate Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections. I explained my bill in detail in a presentation to the House last September 25. It was published in the Congressional Record on that day, starting on page H8294.

I for one am convinced that a combination of full disclosure and energetic, impartial enforcement is the prescription we need for effective reform of campaign financing. The Watergate investigations have served as, among other things, an engine for disclosure. One will deny that these disclosures have had a definite impact and that they are bringing results. I submit that we ought to live for a time in this atmosphere of disclosure and enforcement, and that we see what it can produce, before we veer off on the tangent of putting in some irrelevant reform that threatens, as I have said, to destroy certain vital functions of our democratic system.

II. Positive Aspects of Public Financing

Mr. Chairman, I would like to pause once more before turning to my substantive objectives against public financing. The reason I leave these objections to the last is that I prefer to address you and our colleagues in positive terms, emphasizing what we ought to be doing rather than what we ought to be avoiding. This is not a polemic in favor of the status quo. But neither is this analysis one that sees no redeeming value at all in campaign contributions. I do not accept the argument that some contributions are, in so many words, 'good'. As a matter of fact, I assert the opposite—that such contributions play a constructive and essential role in the unfolding of the democratic process.

In his study "Campaign Financing and Public Freedom," Ralph R. Winter, Jr. writes:

"Contributing to a candidate permits individuals to pool their resources and voice their message far more effectively than if each man spoke singly. This is critically important because it permits citizens to join a potent organization and propagate their views beyond their voting districts. Persons who feel strongly about appointments to the Supreme Court, for example, can demonstrate their interest and influence by supporting the campaign of sympathetic congressmen. Those who give money to Mr. John Gardner's Committee to Defend the Cause, an organized group as a form of free association and expression should not automatically deny the same status to other groups of the same kind. . . . That a senator receives large union contributions might be perceived as the reason he often supports union causes. In the reason he often supports union causes. In the reversion more commonly the case: the candidate receives contributions because he holds these convictions. . . . Common Cause, we are told, is presently engaged in an empirical study designed to show "a real correlation" between contributions and certain aspects of the senator's political campaigns. . . . That a senator receives large union contributions might be perceived . . ."
By following this train of thought we can see that the private contribution fosters political action. It promotes a clash of political ideologies and builds a war chest and starts using it. This action makes it virtually certain that opposing interests, too, will solicit their constituencies for financial support. All this, then, helps to finance public discussion and to draw public attention to the controversies that are the sine qua non of democratic government.

OBJECTIONS TO PUBLIC FINANCING

I realize, Mr. Chairman, that nothing I have said so far necessarily rules out public financing on its own merits as at least an addition to the arsenal of reform. It could be argued, in fact, that a program for reform ought to start with public financing on its own merits as at least an addition to the arsenal of system. This would complete the process, it might be said, of delivering to the public a package that would preclude any future Watergate. I hope we would shirk our responsibility of putting together that package.

Public financing, in my opinion, is not an antidote to Watergate. Instead, being carried forward mindlessly on the emotional high of Watergate, it could cause permanent damage to our elective processes. I submit that public financing ought to be assessed, first, in terms of its impact on our traditional political party structure; second, its impact on candidates and incumbent elective officials; and, third, its impact on public participation in elections. Then I will conclude with certain other considerations that we ought to keep in mind.

A. IMPACT ON POLITICAL PARTY STRUCTURE

The specific ways in which public financing could alter or enslave the traditional political party structure would depend, of course, on the particular plan that is adopted. Some plans would strengthen the parties in undesirable ways; others would have the opposite—but an equally undesirable—effect. Since we do not know which plan might be chosen, let us consider all possible evils, even those some of them will be seen as mutually exclusive. In other words, if we do not come to one bad result, it will be another.

1. THE MAJOR PARTIES

We ought to start with the two major parties, examining the consequences in terms of their institutional roles. As we know, Mr. Chairman, the Democratic and Republican parties do not represent a historic majority in the Constitution. There is no mention of parties in that document, or in any of its amendments.

Although they lack constitutional status, it is true that the parties have evolved through a political system, and at the present time they appear to be permanent fixtures within it. Even if we assume that continuing evolution will not some day dictate a phasing out of the parties—that is, that the parties are here to stay, and should stay—where is it written that we must have the Democratic and Republican parties that we know today? Other major parties have come and gone for sound historical reasons. But if we agree to underwrite the existence of today's parties with public funds, we will never be rid of them. They will survive as institutions long after they outlive the individuals with their constituencies abandon them. But is it right for them to live on? Is it constitutional to grant them immunity? As Justice Black has said:

"There is, of course, no reason why two parties should retain a permanent monopoly on the right to have people vote for or against them. Constitutional and governmental policies are at the core of our electoral process and of the first amendment freedoms."

Obviously, what we give public money to the parties, we are subsidizing the ideologies that they espouse. If we subscribe to the wisdom of Jefferson, who called for separation between church and state, we ought to carry this policy to its logical, constitutional, conjoining of ideology and the State. I submit that we should be especially sensitive to this danger in today's world, when ideologies are proclaimed in public and promoted with religious fervor. To the extent that we subsidize majoritarian ideology, I question whether this is wise and perhaps make them commonplace.

Public financing, in my opinion, is not an antidote to Watergate. Instead, being carried forward mindlessly on the emotional high of Watergate, it could cause permanent damage to our elective processes. I submit that public financing ought to be assessed, first, in terms of its impact on our traditional political party structure; second, its impact on candidates and incumbent elective officials; and, third, its impact on public participation in elections. Then I will conclude with certain other considerations that we ought to keep in mind.

2. THE MINOR PARTIES

Public financing of elections would also affect profoundly the traditional role of the minor parties in our system of government. Like the major parties, they are not rooted in the Constitution and thus there is no obligation on the part of the citizenry or the Government to perpetuate them. Nonetheless, all of us are familiar with the positive contribution that the minor parties have made throughout our history. Some of the best of them have died, but only after important parts of their platform had been absorbed by the major parties. Others have produced a radical or passionate social gospel with good riddance, because their programs were offensive to citizens in a democratic country or because their proposals were foolish or inappropriate to the times. Theings and gowings of the minor parties has had the net effect of providing a two-party system, which in turn accounts for the politics of consensus that we keep our country stable and united. Against this background, a system involving the two-party system and with the means of absorption of the minor parties, or conversely an upset in the political dynamics of our Nation such as discourages the birth of third parties, is bound to have deleterious results. Jack B. Haskell of the Library of Congress Staff, in a paper last August, summed up all that would be at stake for minor parties under varying schemes of public financing. He wrote:

"It is contended by some that since third parties at last garner a substantial number of the vote before being eligible for public funding, the requirement may unfairly discourage the operation and formulation of..."
third or new parties and so may dry up an important source of new ideas and original solutions which are often eventually adopted by the major parties.

The other hand, it has been suggested that the expectation of public funding if a certain number of votes can be polled may encourage the proliferation of minor parties. The fear is that funding by being encouraged to work for change within the structure of one of the two major parties, would now be encouraged by providing public funding to form a new "splinter" party. Further objections are raised that public funding may perpetuate minor political parties which may have only short-run or temporary popularity since funding of third parties may partly be based upon performance of the party in the previous election four years before. Others question the wisdom of the government or the desire of the general public to support or perpetuate radical "fringe" parties or racial-oriented third parties which may have established a modicum of public support.

As to the latter of minor parties that might result from public financing, perhaps the ultimate danger would be the formation of a religious party. Would the constitutional prohibition separating church from state then become meaningless? On the other hand, if religious parties are to be barred from receiving the public funds that other parties are getting? If not, would not Americans find it obvious—if not dangerous—to in effect be subsidizing a religious doctrine? On the other hand, if religious parties are to be barred from receiving the public funds that other parties receive, how is a religious party to be defined? It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that nothing could save the state under these circumstances from becoming entangled with one or more of the religions.

B. IMPACT ON OFFICEBEARERS

Apart from its impact on the parties, public financing would have a separate effect on candidates and persons already holding public office. It would come as another boon to the incumbents. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I should think that we ought to be concerned about the taxpayers for any more favors, in view of the perquisites of office that we already hold and the fact that they have proved so useful in keeping us here. For example, the franking privilege used in certain ways gives us a leg up on our challengers, and we can see the evidence of this in the election results.

So we already have our subsidies, the one in this example being an enormous—and unlimited—allowance to pay for the mailing of letters, illustrated newsletters and all sorts of other materials to our constituents. On top of all this, we would have a handout from the Government through public financing of our campaigns. In a public funding plan that gives an equal amount to each candidate, we still would maintain the perquisites of office that are less than preeminent, some incumbents might twist the situation to their advantage by using the taxpayer's funds, in effect, as seed money to attract still more private contributions. Allow me to explain, Mr. Chairman. Suppose we have an incumbent who is fairly well entrenched. He is able to build only a small war chest, election after election, because his opposition is lacking, and his supporters see no serious threat to him. But then some public money is thrown into the campaign. As a result, attracted by the certain prospect of financial advantage, the challenger enters the race—or a number of challengers do. The survival of the incumbent, under these conditions, is not to be taken for granted. So goes to his support and persuades them to open their wallets. This, of course, stimulates parallel activity by the opposition. But in any such fundraising contest, as studies have shown, the incumbent has important advantages that virtually assure him of out soliciting his challengers. Surplus funds he might raise could then be put in the bank to give him a head start 2 or 3 years later. In a race for higher office. In the meantime, the challenger has found the public financing kitty to be of only passing advantage. He may become worse off financially than when he started, but the taxpayer is behind and the incumbent might be ahead, because he has picked up some cash that otherwise would have been withheld from him.

Yet it is not only money that taxpayers might lose. They might also be deprived under a scheme of public financing of the opportunity to hear a spirited, truly informative discussion of the issues. Winter has stated:

We are told that subsidies will 'reduce the pressure on Congressional candidates for dependence on large campaign contributions from private sources', . . . It, however, one reduces the pressure on candidates to look to the views of contributors, to whom will the candidates look instead? The need to raise money compels candidates to address those matters about which large groups feel strongly, even if, as is often the case, the taxpayers for any more favors, in view of the perquisites of office that we already hold and the fact that they have proved so useful in keeping us here. For example, the franking privilege used in certain ways gives us a leg up on our challengers, and we can see the evidence of this in the election results.

C. IMPACT ON PARTICIPANT POLITICANS

Mr. Chairman, public financing also would have an adverse impact on public participation in the election process. I question how we would enhance liberties if we clamp restraints on the citizens of the United States. It is claimed by some to contribute to a candidate who has already shown by his record that he is a champion of that group, or who has persuaded the group that he definitely will take up their cause. As Haskel has put it:

It is questioned whether it is wise to diminish the influence of groups which represent the opinion of a large segment of the electorate, such as the political arms of labor organizations or commercial groups. The objective of collective action, such as collective bargaining, is to enhance the bargaining power of individuals to meet the legitimate demands of these persons who may not have the influence to receive consideration as individuals. It is feared that through public financing the needs of certain individuals, for example, may not be the means through which they may exert their collective influence, through organizations such as labor unions or professional associations. Those who disagree with this premise contend that private interest groups may represent their own selfish interest through channels other than direct financial support of candidates. This contention, however, at the same time may weaken the original argument that public financing would free a candidate from the influence of special interest groups.

I would venture to say, Mr. Chairman, that the ordinariness of the worm would have a rather keen sense of the power he is able to command through his union, and an equally accurate estimate of his helplessness if he is forced to stand alone. If his role in elections is just as important as his role in the factory, how can he be expected to become more involved in the political process? Private interest groups may represent their own selfish interest through channels other than direct financial support of candidates. This contention, however, at the same time may weaken the original argument that public financing would free a candidate from the influence of special interest groups.

There are a number of other considerations, Mr. Chairman, that militate against public financing. I would like to cite just a few:

1. An individual who disagrees strongly with a candidate, should he be forced to help, pay for his message? Winter has stated the problem this way:

August 8, 1974

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — HOUSE

H 7929
What would happen if a rated ran for office and delivered radical and quasi-violent speeches? One result might be cries for even more restriction, for regulation of the content of political speech.

To the extent that the largest sums of money are contributed by those who can best afford it, and whose personal financial stake in our system is greater, is this not also, as it should be? Does this not underscore, in essence, the principle or progressive taxation? Somebody has to pay for political campaigns. If we take the money out of the public till, the full disposal of which is incidentally on the low-middle and lower income groups. This is so because our Federal income tax system is not as progressive as it is supposed to be, or as we like to pretend that it is.

The cost of public financing might become burdensome, and this could take money away from vital public programs. We can assume a steady escalation of costs because the pressure to increase the amounts of the grants to themselves enhances their sense of power and their actual power. To political animals like us, having more money to throw at the system is the next best thing to having more patronage at our command. I doubt that we shall spurn larger and larger grants even if the price for this would be to have to share the extra money with the others. Is there a politician among us who would deny that some of us are adept at making deals with the opposition? And who would want us to have more of these deals?

In recent years a whole industry of campaign advertising specialists has mushroomed to advise candidates on how to spend their privately collected money. With an assured supply of financing from public tax funds, the campaign consultant would be just one more parasitic operator who, like a commercial income tax lawyer, thrives merely because the government exists.

IV. CONCLUSION

I would like to conclude, Mr. Chairman, with an observation by Alexander Heard, an authority on campaign costs, who noted in his work "Costs of Democracy:

"It has been repeatedly demonstrated that he who pays the piper does not always call the tune, at least not in politics. Politicians prize votes more than dollars.

Let us not get carried away, then, Mr. Chairman, by getting hung up on the financial aspects of politics. Let us examine carefully the case against public funding of elections, as it has been outlined here and elsewhere. Or better yet, why not lay the question aside for the time being and get on with the reforms we truly need at this time? Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

(Mr. BOLAND asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, the amendment before us has a great deal to recommend it. It is thoroughly bipartisan. Therefore, it is particularly appropriate, in light of the amendment's broad based political support, that it offer, as it does, the chance for matching public funding of congressional races, only where there is broad based public support for candidates. The amendment provides for matching funds, only after a candidate has raised, at least 10 percent of his maximum spending limitation through private contributions of $50 or less. Accordingly, so-called frivolous candidates will find it extremely difficult to benefit under this amendment.

The other significant provision of this measure is, that matching funds are provided, come only from the dollar checkoff fund. If there are no funds available in the fund, then no matching funds will be paid out. Thus, only the support of the taxpaying citizens of this country will serve to finance matching funds from the checkoff fund. These people will know that their tax money will be used for the purpose of the fund. What they will know, and what they will be able to judge for themselves, is whether we should take the move, of providing a mix of public, as well as private, funding, for Federal election campaigns.

This decision, Mr. Chairman, puts the average citizen of this Nation in the driver's seat as to public funding of elections goes. It makes the concept of populism and grassroots supports—which, as expressions of the English language, have been overused and therefore have lost much of the meaning because of the lack of other complexes and deeper meaning in the forefront of Federal elections. It is going to put the average citizen right up front in national decision-making, a position that he has long ago lost to the big money contributors. And finally and most importantly, such a shift in real voting power is going to bring citizens a lot closer to their government. This will mean the defeat of national cynicism about our political system that has grown so rapidly since Watergate. It is also going to produce a feeling of involvement that I am confident will lead to a reestablishment of confidence in government. After all, it stands to reason that the more involved you are in an activity, the more committed you feel to its goals, the more stout is your defense of those goals and the more cohesive and unfractured that activity can become.

Those symptoms can be true for this country as a whole. Real participation in congressional elections can be an essential part of that revolutionary change. I therefore urge adoption of this well balanced and broad based amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment; offered by the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. UDALL).
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — HOUSE

August 8, 1974

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to propose a unanimous-consent request, and that request is as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I am an unanimous consent that all debate on this bill and all amendments thereto cease at 6:15 p.m.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Members standing at the time the unanimous-consent request was agreed to will be recognized for approximately 1 minute and 20 seconds each.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. KoCH).

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. KOCH

Mr. KOCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer two amendments.

The Clerk reads as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. Koch: Page 79, immediately after line 9, insert the following new section:

CAMPAIGN MAIL

Sec. 410. (a) Chapter 95 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to Presidential Election Campaign Fund) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 9014. CAMPAIGN MAIL."

"(a) Definitions.—For purposes of this section:

"(1) the term 'campaign mail' means any piece of mail which does not exceed the maximum weight per piece of mail allowable if mailed at the lowest rate per piece established by the Board of Governors of the Postal Service for bulk rate mailings of circulars by qualified nonprofit organizations, and which is mailed by any candidate for the purpose of influencing the election of such candidate;

"(2) the term 'candidate' has the meaning given by section 301(b) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, except that such term shall include a candidate for the office of President or Vice President of the United States;

"(3) the term 'eligible candidate' means any candidate who is eligible under subsection (c) to receive campaign mail payments;

"(4) the term 'supervisory officer' means the Secretary of the Senate with respect to candidates for the office of Senator, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives with respect to candidates for the office of Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner;

"(5) the term 'State' has the meaning given by section 301(i) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

"(b) Entitlement.—Any candidate who establishes his eligibility under subsection (c) shall be entitled to receive payments for campaign mail under subsection (d).

"(c) Eligibility.—

"(1) any general election, any candidate who

"(A) has met the qualifications prescribed by the applicable laws to hold the Federal office for which it is a candidate, and is the candidate of a political party whose candidate in the most recent general election received 5 percent of the popular votes received by all candidates in such general election; or

"(B) transmits to the Secretary of State for the State in which the election is held (or, if there is no office of Secretary of State, to the equivalent State officer), no later than 45 days before the general election, a petition containing the signatures of at least 5,000 individuals registered to vote in the geographical area in which such general election is held, shall be entitled to receive campaign mail payments under subsection (d).

"(2) The Secretary of State shall certify that in the State in which the election is held (or, if there is no office of Secretary of State, the equivalent State officer) shall take appropriate steps to certify signatures contained in petitions transmitted by any candidate under paragraph (1) of this subsection. The Secretary of State shall transmit such petitions to the appropriate supervisory officer. The supervisory officer shall not declare any candidate to be eligible to receive allotments until the supervisory officer receives such petitions from the Secretary of State. Each such certification shall be completed no later than 30 days before the date of the election involved.

"(d) Payments.—

"(1) Every eligible candidate shall be entitled to receive payments from the Secretary under paragraph (2) for the mailing of a number of pieces of mail equal to the number of individuals registered to vote in the geographical area in which the general election is held.

The Secretary shall make such payments out of the Presidential Election Campaign Fund established by section 9006(a). Such payments shall be made, however, only after the Secretary determines that amounts for payments under sections 9008, 9007(b) (3), and 9037(b) are available in the fund for such payments.

"(3) Whenever a payment is made by the Secretary under this section with respect to campaign mail of any eligible candidate, an amount equal to the amount of such payment shall be attributed toward the expenditure limitation of such candidate under section 6081 of title 2, United States Code.

"(e) The table of sections for chapter 95 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 9014. Campaign mail.

"And redesignate the following section accordingly:

Page 79, line 15, strike out "and 409" and insert in lieu thereof "409 and 410".

Mr. KOCH. Mr. Chairman, one of the amendments is a perfecting amendment, the other is relatively minor, but is a different version and limited solely to a single mailing for which the checkoff system would be used to provide the funding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to say that there may be a question of a point of order on these amendments.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendments. The gentleman from Ohio was kind enough to offer one of the amendments to me, the one referring to page 79, after line 9, on campaign mail. I will reserve a point of order if the gentleman from New York wishes to use the balance of his time to explain the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves a point of order.

Mr. KOCH. Mr. Chairman, I would hope that the CHAIRMAN would find the amendment out of order because I believe it is a different version of public financing which is in order under the bill. Of course, the amendment was published in an incorrect version.

What it does is to provide funds out of the checkoff funds to the candidates in the general election for one mailing, so as to give to candidates an equal opportunity to present themselves to the constituency.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Does the gentleman from Ohio press his point of order?

Mr. HAYS. I am not sure I know what is the second amendment.

Mr. KOCH. It is just a perfecting amendment to locate the numbers within the bill itself. It does not change the amendment.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I do press my point of order against the amendment. The amendment is not in order because it is which is obviously subject to a point of order in that it appropriates money and orders the Secretary to make payments. The second amendment is an amendment to that amendment, or a correcting amendment, so that if the first amendment is out of order then the second one is also.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOLLING). The Chair is ready to rule.

The point of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hays) is well taken. The first amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. Koch) constitutes an appropriation on a legislative bill in violation of clause 4, rule XX, and is not protected by the rule. The second amendment is not in order under House Resolution 295. Therefore the point of order is sustained.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HALEY).

(By unanimous consent, Mr. HALEY yielded his time to Mr. HAYS.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Young).

(Mr. YOUNG of Illinois asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. YOUNG of Illinois, Mr. Chairman, there are many provisions in the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 which improve the conduct of Federal elections. Because of these positive features, I urge my colleagues to also vote for final passage of this bill, even though I have reservations about some of its provisions and about the failure of this bill to add other necessary provisions.

The forward-looking provisions of the bill provide for an independent administration-enforcement board for the Federal Campaign Act. There will be four citizen-members, with two Republicans and two Democrats, with civil enforcement powers, subpoena powers, and the authority to regulate campaign financing laws.

There will be a limitation on contributions. The amount is $1,000, which I think is too small, but I do believe that there should be a limitation on contributions. There is also a $5,000 limitation on contributions by corporations. This provision is not to my liking since it will continue to provide “special interest” financing that will dilute public confidence in public officeholders. I would have preferred eliminating all contributions other than contributions from the recognized Republican and Democratic Party committees.

The $100 limitation on “cash” campaign contributions is excellent. The limitation on honorariums of $1,000 per appearance and $1,000 per calendar year is another step that will create greater confidence in public officials.

I strongly support the prohibition against “laundering” campaign funds and the bad practice of earmarking contributions through committees. I think there should be a limitation on expenditures, but I believe that the $900,000 limitation is an unrealistic one. Any such limitation should have been at least $100,000 per candidate.

The designation of a principal campaign committee with all expenditures to be made and accounted for through such campaign committee is a great step forward. The reduction of reporting requirements and the publication of lists of those who fail to file are good steps that will eliminate unnecessary paperwork and make filing easier.

The bill repeals media limitation since they are not necessary with the limitations on total spending. The bill permits State and local officials to participate in political campaigns, and it reenacts the State law where there is a conflict.

I think there are some other deficiencies that should be noted. The recognized political parties are limited to contributions of not more than $6,000. I think that this limitation should be at least $15,000. There are inadequate prohibitions against contributions to special interest groups. “Pooling” is still permitted, and “in-kind” contributions may be made.

There is not a sufficient prohibition against the “dirty trick” type of campaign activity.

Unfortunately, in the determination of whether or not to vote for this bill, we must weigh the good against the bad. In this case, the good outweighs the bad, although by a slighter margin than is desirable. At any rate, we can hope that the House-Senate conference will improve the bill in the areas where it is weak.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. CARNEY of Ohio yielded his time to Mr. HAYS.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Zions).

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZION. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

(Mr. ASHBROOK asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, the revelations of the last few months have convinced me of the need for a meaningful election reform bill. Our Nation cannot afford a continuation of the massive campaign abuses that have marred our national process in the past.

The so-called campaign reform bill now before the House, however, is not the type of reform that we need.

First, the bill leaves open one of the major loopholes in the campaign financing act: in-kind contributions by labor unions. Tens of millions of dollars—taken from workers as union dues—are used in behalf of special interest candidates to cover the costs of printing, materials, office space, telephones, and many other campaign items.

Why should these labor union contributions be treated any differently than special interest contributions? Unlimited in-kind contributions by any special interest group must be stopped if we are to have truly meaningful campaign reform.

Second, the bill fails to establish an independent Federal Election Commission to enforce the law. As the Senate Watergate Committee has pointed out, enforcement is the key factor in regulating the way campaign funds are raised and spent. The so-called campaign reform bill turns this function over to congressional employees and appointees, who will be responsible for policing the Congress and drawing up rules and regulations on campaign practices. Two congressional committees will have the power to veto these rules and regulations. Such a conflict of interest must be eliminated and an independent Federal Commission established if we are to have an effective campaign reform measure.

Third, the bill provides for matching taxpayer financing in Presidential primaries. A candidate could receive up to $5 million in public funds. Such financing would encourage frivolous candidates without significant support to file for office in order to receive public money. There is also a serious question whether a taxpayer’s money should be used to finance the campaign of a candidate with whom he completely disagrees. In addition, the funding under two-party system and party structure, as candidates would be funded directly by Government tax money. Public financing is not the magic cure-all to our Nation’s electoral problems. In fact, in many ways it would make matters worse.

Fourth, the bill allows special interest groups to pool their members’ contributions and then pour large amounts into selected campaigns. Pooling of funds by special interest groups should be prohibited. Contributions should be required to designate the recipient of their donations and be identified for purposes of full disclosure.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I cannot support this legislation unless the House makes substantial changes in its introduction. I urge my colleagues to pass a truly meaningful campaign reform bill.

(Mr. ZION asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ZION. Mr. Chairman, we desperately need a good campaign reform bill. It is long past time that special interest groups are prevented from buying an election. Unfortunately, this act does not accomplish this purpose. This bill was authored by the chairman of the Democratic Campaign Committee, who is also chairman of the House Administration Committee having jurisdiction over the legislation. It came out of the Democratic-dominated Rules Committee in a fashion that prevented Republican Members from introducing perfecting amendments.

It does nothing, for example, to prevent big unions from spending $50 million in cash and contributions in kind. It does nothing to stop the use of involuntary dues for union-endorsed candidates. A recent AFL-CIO publication, mailed by a tax-supported subsidy, called for a veto-proof Congress. It does not permit a union member to determine what candidate his money is used to support, either by dues or voluntary contributions.

The Board of Supervisors is hardly impartial in that it is appointed by sitting Members of the Congress. This bill is clearly an attempt to protect sitting Members of Congress. It is one of the most serious abuses of political power I have ever seen.

Since the need for campaign reform is so obvious, and since this bill does little to provide for this reform, I reaffirm my own policy and pledge in this regard:

I will accept not one dime personally in the forthcoming campaign. All contributions must be sent to my regular campaign organization.

I have instructed my campaign committee not to accept any contributions from any person over $200, nor will I accept any contribution over $1,000 from any organization, lobby, or interest group whatever except my own political party.

This limitation on receipts applies across the board to any group which might have a legislative ax to grind—the AMA, chamber of commerce, National Association of Manufacturers, pharmaceutical manufacturers, organized labor—any group at all who might feel entitled to special legislative considerations because of a large donation to my reelection campaign.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TREEN).

(Mr. TREEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TREEN. Mr. Chairman, in opposition to the bill, not because I do not think we need some election reform, because we certainly do, but I think the worst abuse is taken care of when we set a limit on the amount that any contributor can give.

That limit may still be too high. I voted against the amendment to increase. But I see no sense in setting an aggregate limit, which limit is now $60,000 after the amendment reducing it from $75,000. A candidate can go out and raise funds exceeding that aggregate from any number of persons, in order to raise a campaign fund that is necessary to make a challenge, he should be permitted to do this. And he can't make a challenge against an incumbent for $60,000.

We incumbents have the right to send out newsmen and their postage alone is worth $16,000 or $18,000 each time. When we send out a mailing, we can bring into every household our message. We can do this any number of times. But the challenger, who only has the hope to win by exposing a poor voting record, is limited to $60,000 for all his campaign expenses.

This bill is unfair to challengers; it is an incumbent protection bill, and it ought to be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BUTLER).

(Mr. BUTLER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, in the interest of time, I will not introduce an amendment which appears on page H7785, having discussed the matter with the chairman.

I will take this time, if I may, to ask the Chair a question, if I may, I think the legislation is held unconstitutional, or portions of it, what will be the status of the various spending limitations? I will ask the Chair if he could interpret what the effect of the candidates for nomination or election to any specific Federal office, agreeing to abide by these limitations, would be valid and binding even though the legislation is held unconstitutional?

Mr. HAYS. If the gentleman will yield in my judgment, there is no question but what such agreement would be binding and valid, and if broken, it would subject to civil penalties and civil liabilities.

Mr. BUTLER. Thank you. Thanking you for that assurance, I see no necessity for this amendment. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. MCEWEN).

(Mr. MCEWEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MCEWEN. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the amendment that would make an agreement between candidates to establish limitations on contributions and expenditures less than those provided in this legislation was not considered. The text of this amendment appears on page H7785 of the Congressional Record, of August 8, 1974.

The American people are concerned about the ever-increasing cost of elections, yet in many contests the amounts now expended are substantially less than the limits imposed by this legislation. Why then should the candidates themselves be not permitted to enter into binding agreements to limit campaign expenditures to an amount less than what the law would permit? I think they should. More importantly, I think that the people think they should.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. COLLIERS).

(By unanimous consent, Mr. COLLIER yielded his time to Messrs. SHUSTER and NELSEN.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER).

(Mr. SHUSTER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. NELSEN).

(Mr. NELSEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. NELSEN

Mr. NELSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NELSEN: Page 78, immediately after line 9, insert the following new section:

“Political activities by certain officers and employees—Sec. 410. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any State or local officer or employee employed by a State or local agency whose principal employment is in connection with an activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or a Federal agency, other than any activity which is financed in whole or in part through Federal revenue-sharing programs, shall be subject to the provisions of chapter 15 of title 5, United States Code, as such provisions existed on the day before the effective date of this Act.”

And redesignate the following section accordingly.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve all points of order on the amendment.

Mr. NELSEN. Mr. Chairman, under the terms of this bill and it has already been called to my attention this afternoon, the Hatch Act is amended in this bill, and the explanation that was given to me is that the terms under the Hatch Act, where Federal revenue-sharing funds were distributed to the States, automatically then the feeling was that the State employees who had anything to do with funds that came from the Federal Government would automatically be under the Hatch Act and restricted at State level. But under the terms of the bill, this goes beyond that. For OEO and every other Federal program that is out there, we open the door where one can get his feet in the trough and dip in.

In the District of Columbia we have 53 employees in the Executive Office, 423 in Manpower, 700 in the Mayor’s Office, 1,200 in the Apprentice Council, 1,452 in the Department of Human Resources, for a total of 17,535 employees. These employees would be partially “ unhatched” under this bill.
And again we get the spoils system on the way back.

This amendment of mine would not interfere with any State dealing with revenue-sharing funds at all. Everything would remain as it is, but in these other basically federally funded programs administered by State employees it would bar them from getting into the activity of partisan politics as would certainly happen if the restriction is lifted where the Hatch Act now applies.

I served on the Hatch Act Commission and we carefully went into this and my feeling is it would be a mistake to go that far.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to amend this bill so that the provisions of section 401, which I am not amending, but merely clarifying, so as to insure the applicability extend only to those State and local employees financed with Federal revenue-sharing funds. The Hatch Act presently prohibits activities of State and local employees where their "principal employment is in connection with an activity that is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or a Federal agency.

I wish to state that I served on the Commission on Political Activity on Government Personnel, which published its report in 1967. That Commission was chaired by Arthur S. Fleming, former Secretary of Labor, and Welfare under President Eisenhower, and the Vice Chairman was former Senator Daniel B. Brewster, from the State of Maryland. One of the principal studies of that Commission had to do with the application of the Hatch Act on Federal, State and local employees. I took the position on that Commission that the Hatch Act should not be tampered with in any way, lest we revert to the spoils system, which certainly applied to Federal employees, as provided in section 401 of this bill. We are going back to the spoils system.

First, there were no public hearings on these Hatch Act provisions that I know of.

Second, Hatch Act exemptions are totally inappropriate in a bill of this type. The fact that it is in here can only lead to the conclusion that we are going back to the spoils system. This is a campaign finance bill and the only conclusion I can draw is that those who favor this provision want to reach into the pockets of the State and local employees and get their contributions of money. They want to obtain the contribution of time and energy and their total commitments in the way of political activity from these State and local employees. That to me is a return to the spoils system.

Third, The Civil Service Commission, which is most knowledgeable about this matter, was never asked to give their views to the committee on this measure. Yet based on their prior statements and positions taken by the Commissioners, the following statement would apply as to the position of the Civil Service Commission.

The U.S. Civil Service Commission expresses its very strong objection to the inclusion of Section 401 in HR 16090. This provision, which has just come to their attention, would amend the Hatch Act by exempting state and local employees who work in connection with federally funded programs from the provisions of the Hatch Act that prohibit political activity. While such employees would still be unable to seek partisan office themselves, they would be free to seek and participate in partisan politics on behalf of others.

In 1940 Congress amended the Hatch Act which had been enacted in 1939 in order to bring such employees within the partisan political activity ban. It was recognized then, and is now recognized as well, that the prohibition against political activity serves as a substantial employee safeguard since, among other things, it immunizes covered employees from pressures, overt or otherwise, to engage in politics against their will, and it prevents the diversion of Federal funds for political purposes at the state and local level.

As at all events, what is being proposed in Section 401 is a drastic change in our laws in this area.

Plaintly, a measure having such drastic consequences should not be acted upon without the same kind of thoughtful deliberation that Congress brought to bear upon the matter when it first dealt with the subject. After more than 30 years of enforcing the Hatch Act as it applies to State and local employees who work in connection with federally funded programs, the Civil Service Commission would certainly hope and expect that Congress would call upon them for an orderly representation of their views and take such a significant revision of the law. Finally, it is worth noting that Congress in its deliberations on the recently enacted D.C. Home Rule bill, expressly declined to allow Federal and D.C. employees to participate in campaigns on behalf of partisan candidates entitled to the number of Federal employees.

Fourth, There is no reason why we should treat local employees, whose employment is funded basically with Federal funds, any differently than we treat their regular Federal employees. Otherwise, in our States we will have State and local employees performing virtually the same functions and activities and perhaps working at the desk next to a Federal employee and the one will be Hatched and the other will not be Hatched; and, of course, my view is that both should be Hatched. The extent of Federal grant funding in the States covering Federal and local employees is perhaps best illustrated by the number of Federal grants and contracts we have that are in the District of Columbia. The number of Federal grant positions as carried in the budget of Mayor Washington was $17,385.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, if we want to go back to the "spoils system," let us do so in an enlightened manner. Let us have open hearings and maybe testimony from those in the Civil Service Commission who are most familiar with the problem; let the municipal employee unions, who are probably benefiting from this move, come forward (Mr. BROWN) and identify themselves and state their case in open hearings. I am confident that if we take this route, the Hatch Act will remain intact. Meanwhile, I strongly urge each and everyone of you to support this amendment.
Mr. MATHIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, there has been plenty of talk in the last 2 days about in-kind contributions. I want this record to show that section 205 of the 1972 act, amending chapter 610 of title 18, contains in its definition of contribution that "any services, or anything of value" is a contribution and must be reported as such. Obviously, such contributions are subject to all the requirements that any contribution is subject to.

The problem with in-kind contributions is that they have not been properly reported. With the creation of the new Board of Supervisory Officers, I believe that supervision adequate to cause reporting, disclosure, and limitations of in-kind contributions.

Mr. Chairman, the rule prevented me from making an amendment which would make dirty tricks and political espionage criminal offenses under this law. I moved the amendment in committee and it failed.

The idea for this amendment was given to me by the gentleman from California (Mr. Dowd). The gentleman\'s work on this matter was diligent and effective. He, in turn, was inspired by the careful and dedicated work of his administrative assistant, Mr. Bill Stodart. Mr. Stodart, recently deceased, labored long and hard for this concept, and I wish we could have done a better job of approaching the amendment.

Even though we could not bring this up today, Congressman Clausen and I expect to continue the work of Bill Stodart, and to press for adoption of this worthwhile bridged legislation in whatever way we can.

Mr. Chairman, section 315 of H.R. 16090 authorizes the Board of Supervisory Officers to institute actions for declaratory relief to implement or construe the campaign finance laws.

In past years the lack of enforcement of campaign finance laws has been a major problem.

As the author of this section of the bill, I want to make clear that this language grants to the Board of Supervisory Officers the power to institute civil actions in their own name against violators to enforce the campaign finance laws without having to go through the Department of Justice.

This power of civil enforcement is in addition to the Board\'s other powers set forth in other sections.

Mr. Chairman, we are getting down to the end of the bill. We have had a good deal of spirited debate in which we have all engaged with enthusiasm and some good luck, I think.

I would like to direct my remarks mainly to those Members on the liberal side of the aisle, because I think there may be many Members on that side who are tempted to vote against the bill. I will admit that there is too much public financing in the bill to suit my taste. Nevertheless, it seems to me there are a number of very strong and positive features in this bill that will warrant close consideration and, I hope, an approval. We do get an independent administration and enforcement mechanism, limitation on contributions, $100 limitation on cash contributions on balances, prohibition on laundering and secretive earmarking, limitation on expenditures, prohibition on contributions by foreign nationals, increase in the penalties features, which have not been discussed; prohibition on contributions in the name of another, the single campaign committee, the reporting requirements, the publishing of a list of those who do not file, repeal of the media limitations, the opening up of the Hatch Act, the preemption of State laws and other desirable features.

I believe that these do overcome the problems that we face in terms of our party discrimination in this bill. To be sure, there is too much public financing. There is no prohibition of dirty tricks, of course, or any unconstitutional disqualification of people who do not file and wish to run for office.

Our parties are discriminated against in being made the equal of special interest groups; but this is not a bad bill, and the committee does deserve praise for its diligent work, not only the standing committee, but the Committee of the Whole, which worked to improve this bill.

It is time for us to vote for the bill. It is a useful bill, despite its deficiencies. I hope it will be even more improved in conference. I hope there will be a significant number of votes for the bill on our side of the aisle.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) to close the debate.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier, this is not a perfect bill. I do not think anybody will claim it is. I want to spend this time just discussing the motion to recommit which the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Brown) is going to make. What Mr. Brown wants to do, and there is no secret about it, he wants to prohibit any laboring man from making any contribution to any candidate and let the fat cats.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I am not going to yield— who contributes to his campaign to do it without very much trouble.

The amendment was out of order under the rule and the gentleman from Georgia asked earlier his question. I do not know exactly how his campaign has been financed in the past. I want to say—you can boo-hoo all you like—he comes from my State. His father was a friend of mine, a great friend of mine.

I want to say that what he proposes to do is to see that if any labor organization through voluntary contributions collects half a million dollars in contributions, that in order for it to make a contribution, it has to have half a million pieces of paper saying that they want the dollar to go to a specific candidate.
Mr. Brown's $60,000 he would be allowed to spend, if this limit stands, could come from 60 wealthy contributors, so he only has to have 60 pieces of paper.

It is just that simple; that is all there is to it. It is a matter of the very House who gets his money from small contributors or from voluntary associations, whether it be Amoco, Compac, or whatever the name, it is that the effect is his amendment. The small contributions they have, the sooner they are put out of business. The more big contributions they have, the more they are in the business.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, H.R. 16690, the Federal Election Act Amendments of 1974, is a measure whose time has truly come. Almost 2 years after the most corrupt national political campaign in our history, we are providing the opportunity of making substantial reforms on our battered and abused electoral process. The hour is late—but we must act as a measure of integrity to American politics.

A scant 3 years following the enactment of the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971, which provided the first reform of election law since 1825, we in this country have witnessed a debate in election funding and misuse of campaign funds that has reveled to us all too clearly the pressing need for a far more thorough overhaul of our election laws.

I do not think it is necessary for me to elaborate more on the provisions of this bill, or to explain my reasons for supporting particular provisions, except in a general sense. Others have done an excellent job of explaining the reasons for and the meaning of these proposals.

The committee bill reforms present campaign law by limiting contributions that an individual or a group may make to a candidate for Federal office. It also limits the amount of money that may be spent by congressional or Presidential candidates. And it sets limits on the amount that a candidate may spend from his own pocket. The bill provides public financing from the dollar check-off fund, which will be available as soon as the General Accounting Office certifies the funds necessary. The check-off fund will be available for general elections, as well as for primaries and for national party conventions. There are also provisions for improving reporting requirements.

I am in substantial agreement with provisions of this bill. However, I feel that in certain instances it does not go far enough in reforming campaign procedures. There are several amendments before us that will correct inadequacies in the bill and strengthen it. And I urge my colleagues to consider these amendments and this bill with great care. The basic consequence of our citizens in our system of Government is at stake, and we must not fail in this effort to restore greater integrity to our elections and our Government.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I shall reluctantly cast my vote in favor of the campaign finance reform bill. Although several good features of this bill persuaded me that it should be supported, I have some reservations about the spending limitations established in the bill for candidates to the House of Representatives.

Notable among the strong features of the bill are provisions establishing stronger enforcement mechanisms than provided in current law, and the creation of a system of partial public financing of Presidential campaigns. While some may object to the limitations on political campaigns, I support this measure.

However, the spending limit for House races of $150,000, including the costs of fund-raising—$75,000 in the primary and $75,000 in the general election—is in my view exorbitant. Such an excessive ceiling defeats one of the primary purposes of this bill which is to limit the expenditure of an individual candidate to literally buy an election.

I would have much preferred the application of the Wisconsin campaign finance law to House races which limits spending to $35,000 for primary and $50,000 for general elections, and greatly regret that the amendment would have permitted such stronger State laws to prevail over these Federal limitations. The limitation of spending that the bill represents only a minor improvement over the $187,500 proposed in the original committee bill and still invites large contributions and the type of corrupting influences which have become so familiar in this day of Watergate.

The possibility of such influences might have been lessened had tighter restrictions been placed on contributions in this bill. But, here too, by permitting up to $10,000 in contributions to each Federal candidate by political committees and separate corporate and union committees established for political purposes, the bill fell short of the type of limitation I would have preferred.

I announced earlier this year that I would accept no contributions in excess of $500 from an organization and $250 from an individual. I believe that this limitation is more in keeping with the intent of campaign finance reform. The bill provides for a limit of $75,000 in the primary and $75,000 in the general election. The limit stands for an election to the House or Senate. This bill, unfortunately, not only permits such excessive spending, it effectively invites such spending.

Despite these reservations, I feel that, on balance, the bill is a very limited and inelastic tool in the Federal restrictions. There is no need for any attempt to bar the House in the State of Wisconsin to spend anything approaching $150,000. I would further argue that there is no need for any candidate from Wisconsin to spend such an exorbitant amount of money in his or her attempt to gain election to the House or Senate. This bill, unfortunately, not only permits such excessive spending, it effectively invites such spending.

Mrs. MINK. Mr. Chairman, election reform has been a major concern of the Congress long before Watergate.

Congress enacted the Federal Election Campaign Act in 1968, imposing limits on all political contributions and requiring disclosure of campaign receipts and expenditures in excess of $100. Prior to that, we enacted the "tax check-off" law to enable funding of Presidential election campaigns.

Not all of the crimes and misconduct that occurred under the phrase "Watergate" were connected with political campaigning, but those that were committed before the Election Reform Act took effect were in violation of it. I believe it is important to keep this fact in mind.

I feel we should guard against undue reaction to what is called Watergate. In large measure, that disaster is due not to a failure of laws but the fallibility of human nature. It is beyond my intent if not the letter of campaign finance law that was standard operating procedure that was violated that the transgressions took place. For the most part, changes in the law cannot absolutely guard against aeros and corruption in the campaign process.

Having said this, I do not mean to imply that campaign laws cannot be an effective stimulus to clean and honest politics. We need stern and effective standards against unfair and corrupt practices.

Many of the misdeeds of "Watergate" were not connected with campaigning at all. It is only because COREE-induced bur-gairs were arrested breaking into the Democratic headquarters, a dramatic act which galvanized the Nation, that there was any connection between the abuses of power and corruption in the Administration and political campaigning. In fact, the fact that an elite band seized the instruments of power and perverted governmental agencies into abusers of their power, raises far larger implications for the future good of our country. To the extent we are diverted into thinking that campaign reform is the only needed response to "Watergate," we continue to permit ourselves to be deceived by the perpetrators of that sad historical episode.

It should be obvious that a break-in at Democratic headquarters was not needed to win the Presidential election. The polls showed President Nixon far ahead. The Watergate was raided because the Nixon administration was standard operating procedure, that the Internal Revenue Service Against "enemies" by stealing the private files of a psychia-cr, or releasing false stories maligning critics, or making illegal arrest of political demonstrators. The Democrats and all dissenters were simply thrusts in the side that had to be destroyed by whatever governmental or other weapons were available. The Watergate incident, then, should be viewed not solely in campaign terms but in the context of an "above the law" mentality that has become a way of life in the administration. We should not try to deal with this problem instead of applying patches to the cracks in the political process.

I am not willing to be swept up into the reform bandwagon craze without regard to the possible deleterious changes in the political structure that could occur just because somebody says it will "cure Watergate." I hope we have not reached the stage where there is only this one most radical step, the complete Treasury fincancing of all Federal campaigns, becomes the litmus test of sincerity in the quest for campaign reform.
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

August 8, 1974

Surely much more can and should be done to strengthen or expand our campaign laws. For instance, I feel we should move with caution and not take precipitous steps which could adversely change our two-party system. Let us bear in mind that hasty enactment of the Postal Reorganization Act, which reduces mail service and far higher costs, and the revenue-sharing program has given the States less money than they had before. Legislation labeled as "reform" must be scrutinized in detail rather than enacted simply on a slogan basis.

I am particularly concerned with proposals for "public" Treasury financing of congressional campaigns. Those pressing for this "reform" are merely exploiting the overwhelming public desire for a cleanup of Watergate-type politics. They portray Treasury financing as an antidote for Watergate. Just remove the taint of money from politics by taking it from the Treasury, they say, and all will be purged.

While I have nothing but the highest respect for those who seek to cleanse our Nation's political process, I do differ on whether Treasury financing is a good approach to reform.

The first thing we need is diligent enforcement of existing statutes. It is terribly important that we prosecute all those who violated Federal laws in all elections. The specter of punishment and public humiliation should drive many from engaging in similar tactics in the future. This year's elections will be the first whose financing is totally subject to the disclosure requirements of the reform act.

The disclosure approach to campaign reform rests on the thesis that an informed public can act in its own self-interest. The disclosure act signed into law in early 1972 is designed to tell the identity of all contributors of over $100 to candidates for Federal offices of President, Congress, and governor. If we could get those who voted last time to know who financed a candidate, they could judge the candidate's leanings accordingly, or that public disclosure will deter large donors.

The Treasury financing approach to campaign reform on the other hand assumes that no amount of disclosure will provide sufficient protection to the public. It holds that voters are unable to evaluate a candidate even if they know where the funds came from. Thus, they argue only by removing all individual campaign contributions can the integrity of elections be guaranteed.

I'm convinced between the two approaches, tax dollar financing has a certain surface appeal because of the serious campaign abuses in the 1972 Presidential election. I do not feel we should throw out the existing campaign system and switch to a dependency on tax dollars without careful study of the consequences of such a change.

In 1972, problems encountered in 1972 might equally be attributed to: First, a failure to communicate to voters the financing disclosed by candidates, and second, a lack of public follow-through on the information provided by candidates.

I believe the Nation's news media failed to adequately publish the facts on 1972 financing disclosed in official reports. Moreover, no citizens' organizations were sufficiently effective in compiling and publicizing the results of the campaign finance filings, including lack of compliance by candidates.

These inadequacies were not exclusively the fault of the media and public interest groups. A new law was involved, and all concerned lacked experience in working with it. In addition, nobody seemed to believe the grave misdeeds which were being revealed in the activities of the Committee to Re-Elect the President.

This year, however, there should be greater understanding by all of the importance of working diligently to implement the disclosure act. By taking time to inspect and report on the official campaign reports filed by candidates, the press can make a major contribution to greater knowledge of candidates' financing. Public interest groups can devote the time and effort required to analyze these reports. If we define factual criticisms of candidates who fail to disclose the identity of contributors as required by the act, campaign reports should be subjected to an independent audit and all deficiencies published. It is important to know how these funds are being spent as well as who gave them. CREEP's irresponsible spending led to much of the mischief and political sabotage tactics.

I recognize that asking the press, public, and private groups to participate fully in our elective process through this demanding means of disclosure and follow-up, is a task. Despite the effort, we have much to show. It requires serious concentration and long effort. But I believe this is far preferable to enacting treasury financing as a quick panacea.

Complete treasury financing is wrong both on the merits and as a wasteful use of Federal tax dollars. I am inherently suspicious of severing the link between citizen and candidate. As I am in the case of revenue-sharing systems which cut the tie of responsibility between taxpayer and tax spender. Both may tend in the long run to reduce the individual's awareness of the actions of the public officials.

Our political parties do not exist in a vacuum. If no party is directly dependent for its finances on those who support its policies, then no party will have much reason to stand for any particular policy, other than the issues currently popular. In a sense the parties would be no real political parties at all, only two alternatives on the ballot, "A" and "B."

Under Public Treasury financing, both political parties and candidates could thumb their noses at the voter. The parties would not need active voter support for contributions, since these would be levied against the taxpayer regardless of their desire. A 25-per cent current support rating, the President's party could get over 60 percent of the public funds for the current election solely because of public contributions in the last election. How is this more conducive to clean government? Isn't it better to link contributions to current performance?

According to press reports, Republican fund-raising efforts declined this year because of Watergate discontent in the marketplace. I am not saying whether this is good or bad, but it does show that citizens can influence policy under the existing system. Under public financing, you receive the dollars to your campaign based upon your popularity 4 years ago. In the case of U.S. Senator or 2 years ago for Representative. No matter how bad a current service record you have, you could depend on tax money to finance your campaign for re-election.

Surely our two major political parties stand for something. I believe the general rakes of Republicans feel they have a direct interest in candidates and goals of their party, and the Democrats do, too. The perceived policies may change according to the needs of the times, but the basic interest-identification result remains. Citizens can assure the retention of their interest only through contributions to the parties of their choice. If this connection is rendered impossible, the responsiveness and the representativeness of political parties to large groups of voters will be reduced.

The very role of the political party would decline under the Treasury financing, and the cult of personality would finish. We might see another danger that our political system might disintegrate. Instead of a two-party system offering the voters a relatively simple and understandable choice, we would see a multiplicity of candidates. The availability of this funding would encourage the massive formation of minority parties unable to command broad support. It would mean a small band of supporters on narrow single issues such as school busing, abortion, prayer in schools, etcetera. The national unity which comes from a two-party system would be destroyed. Ours would become a politics of chaos, confusion, and discord. Less than majority candidates would win; or costly runoffs would become the standard. There is also a structural problem inherent in public funding of campaigns. It does not provide the "feedback" a candidate obtains from soliciting and receiving numerous small private contributions. Over a campaign of several months, the inflow of contributions timed to the development of issues and various events can show a candidate how the public is responding to the campaign. It helps to shape the candidate's stand on new issues and improves responsiveness to the electorate. All this would be lacking under Treasury financing. There would be a very disappointing show between voter and candidate until after the election when the ballots are counted. Only then would the candidate discover how the public really responded to the campaign. It is not always true that loss of interplay, more reliance would have to be placed on public opinion polls. Treasury funds allotted to candidates would have to be spent on campaign polling.

The public funding provision for congressional campaigns supported by one or more public interest group—Common Cause—called for handing out $30,000 in tax funds for each House candidate in the general election. I have never spent even half that much in any of my five general elections. I am sure that this is true for others like me. With tax funds of $90,000 available, the more personal type of campaigning now used in many congressional districts will be replaced by advertising agency productions. The ready payers will be picking for these agencies to conduct "slick" advertising campaigns for a high fee. They would get most of the money with mass mailing making up the rest. Candidates "sold" like "squeezable Charmin", or all day deodorant. Voters would be subjected to unrelenting assaults of 30-second radio and TV commercials urging them to vote on the basis of slogans and jingles. Is this the way to better inform the public? Congressional candidates ought to spend only what they can receive from small contributions charged with promising to appeal for themselves from the Treasury. I have financed my past campaigns with 3,000 supporters giving an average of $25 each. Many contribute $5 or less. Contesting the contributors and begging for their support based on my voting record is part of the process of informing the voters on the issues. This is an arduous and unwelcome task, but without it there would be far less real communication. Under public financing, it would all but disappear.

If a voter is asked to voluntarily contribute his own money to a candidate, the voter has an inducement to examine closely the candidate's record and performance. By giving to the campaign, the voter feels involved in the political process, and is involved as a vital component. Public financing, on the other hand, would increase the feeling of alienation. The voter would feel powerless to add to or detract from the candidate's chances of winning. To make the catch through the vote. I suspect the turnout at the polls would then decline drastically even from its current low state. Candidates, federal and state government's payroll so to speak, would be further and further incubated in isolation to the ultimate detriment of the democratic process.

These are some of the basic reservations I have about public financing of U.S. House and Senate elections. An important but secondary consideration is the cost of such a program, which might well be a quarter of a billion dollars every election year. If we pay $90,000 for each candidate in 435 congressional districts and 33 Senate races, and there are 5 or 10 candidates in each election, the cost rapidly escalates. At a time when we are denying the use of scarce tax funds for meeting critical human needs in such areas as health, nutrition, education, and job-training, I do not believe this is a justifiable allocation of funds.

Who will monitor how public campaign funds are spent? Would we not need further laws and new programs to check up on the activities of the monitors? Where will it all end. In the final sense, only participation by the people can assure integrity in the election process. If Watergate demonstrated anything, it should be that more rather than less citizen involvement is needed. Shifting the responsibility on a Treasury financing scheme will hardly guarantee responsible government.

Personal campaigning is still possible and desirable in a majority of Senate elections, but admittedly it is impossible for a Presidential candidate to have close personal contact with any significant portion of the nation's electorate. In recognition of this, Congress has already provided for tax financing of Presidential campaigns. The tax checkoff law was enacted long before Watergate. Under this law $1 can be voluntarily designated each year by each taxpayer to finance the Presidential campaign. Hopefully, this will become the exclusive means of financing Presidential elections in the near future.

While I oppose extending Treasury financing to congressional elections, I am not among those who wish to do nothing at all about the campaign finance abuses disclosed by Watergate. In H.R. 1193, the Comprehensive Campaign Financing Control Act, is as far as I know the most sweeping major campaign reform bill ever introduced in Congress. It prohibits all public contributions and spending, along with strict disclosure, in all major elections in the United States, including those in States and large cities. The limit on any person's total contribution to any candidate would be $500, and it could not be in cash. There could be no splitting of contributions among various dummy corporations or dummy candidates to evade the limitations. An overall limit of $50,000 should be placed on expenditures in a U.S. House race by any candidate. I believe reform along these lines offers a more meaningful prospect of achieving honest elections and the election of officials committed only to the public interest.

We should be striving not to concentrate campaign financing on a single source, this time the Government, but to disperse it more widely so that as many citizens as possible participate in this vital aspect of our democratic process. Under a system, combined with strict limits on individual contributions and accountability in candidate spending, I believe we could effectively curb excessive campaign costs, limit the influence of big money, encourage wider citizen participation, and prevent corruption. I believe, based upon my experience to date of 20 years in elective politics, that my proposed reform will better protect our two-party system from proliferation and guarantee greater citizen participation in our democracy.

MRS. SCHROEDER, Mr. Chairman, I am thrilled to finally have the opportunity to join in debate on the pressing issue of election campaign financing. I am one of many Americans who have anxiously awaited, and insisted upon, speedy full House consideration of this legislation. We have before us H.R. 16990: a good core of legislation, despite various shortcomings. I am confident that we can now close the loopholes in this bill through the amending process and pass a sweeping and effective reform package.

The need to improve our system of financing election campaigns for Federal office has been repeatedly recognized by our Nation's leadership since the time of President Eisenhower and our State leaders since World War II. Recently, two developments have significantly changed the entire context in which elections are financed: the geometric multiplication of campaign costs and the number of business activities which have become vitally affected by Government decisions.

The Presidential Election Campaign Act of 1971 was an effort to halt the spiraling cost of campaigning and to restore public confidence in the election process. This act placed a media use spending limitation on candidates for Federal elective office and also required reporting and disclosure of campaign contributions and expenditures.

It is obvious from examining the abuse of campaign finance laws in the 1972 elections that the need for electoral reform has not been satisfied by the 1971 act. We are now faced with three major problems: inefficiency of the new elections and the Watergate affair. An unscrupulous candidate can run a campaign evaluating the Watergate affair. An unscrupulous candidate can run a campaign costs, the misuse of expenditures, and the expanded role of influence money in election campaigns. Recognition of the potency of big money, along with the discovery that some political committees resorted to unusual methods to avoid compliance with the disclosure provisions of the 1971 Campaign Act, has led many to conclude that the act is unenforceable and necessitates immediate and substantial revision. The public remains suspicious about the integrity of the elective offices being sought and, consequently, the democratic process suffers because of voter cynicism.

All of the evidence adds up to a crucial need for new legislation to insure equal access to elective office, increased citizen participation, lower overall campaign costs—in general, a new relationship between money and politics. The present system of private and public financing of campaigns too often leaves the electorate running a poor second behind big money and special interests. As we watch the fuel pressures for legislation, the Senate three times approved broad measures, and many State governments created their own tough election laws, the House cannot shy away from comprehensive and airtight solutions.

The Committee on House Administration should be commended for its thoughtful consideration of campaign committee fuel pressures. If passed as introduced, H.R. 16990 will not satisfy the aforementioned needs. After conducting my own extensive examination of the legislation, I have concluded that while the bill contains many sound provisions, the loopholes drastically reduce its merit. Although there are many areas which could use improvement—for example, the definition of an expenditure, its disclosure and reporting—the precise placement of contributions and expenditures ceiling, the role of special interests and political parties and the problem of incumbency under our present system—two of the bill's loopholes have commanded my attention; public financing and enforcement.

Controls must be extended over the amount of money that is contributed to election campaigns. I believe that a contribution to a political campaign is a means of expression, but this does not mean freedom to abuse the privilege. To allow the influence of the private dollar on our legislative process in currently unavoidable yet, as I have implied, I believe that it is impossible to completely deny an individual the right to make a monetary political contribution. We must strike a balance between the excessive influence of "fat cats" and the need to encourage public participation.

I am therefore in support of the amendment offered by my distinguished colleagues, Mr. Anderson and Mr. Udall, which proposes a system of matching Federal grants which would be available to candidates, and national and congressional campaign committees, after a "threshold" amount is raised. The threshold and subsequent small contributions would be matched until a matching grant ceiling is reached. This concept has many advantages: It requires a candidate to establish a base of support before being eligible for public funds; it protects traditional political freedoms by allowing and encouraging small contributions; and it provides a means a public financing without overly strict expenditure ceilings.

Anderson-Udall amendment provides for the extension of public financing to include campaigns for congressional offices. I believe this is essential. High campaign costs, expenditure misuse, influence money, and lack of public confidence are not problems which apply solely to Presidential campaigns; our system of financing the campaigns of House and Senate aspirants needs substantial reform as well.

The most critical fault of the committee bill is its failure to provide for the establishment of an independent, bipartisan Federal Elections Commission which is in many ways the most important feature of any campaign reform package. Everyone must realize that any reform bill will only be as effective as the enforcement provisions it provides.

Under the 1971 act, three separate offices were responsible for receiving disclosure reports, making them available to the public, reviewing them for violations, and referring them to the Department of Justice for action. The Justice Department has rarely initiated action in this politically sensitive area for the past 50 years, and there are approximately 5,000 unenforced violations presently pending. The Committee on House Administration decided to combat this problem by recommending the institution of a board of supervisory officers, including the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, to give advisory and investigative powers. To keep this board in check, the committee authorized themselves and the Senate Finance Committee to review and veto or approve the regulations of the board.

In opening this wide loophole in the legislation, the committee has allowed for congressional domination of election supervision. How particularly large amounts of money should be expected? And given the long history of nonenforcement of election law and the impropriety of having congressional employees sit in judgment on the candidates, how can we hope for a restoration of public confidence in the electoral system? Only an independent, full-time commission will provide for effective policing of reform provisions. I am particularly concerned, that this entire legislative package is worthless without appropriate enforcement provisions. Thus, I have enthusiastically cosponsored the final draft by Mr. Udall and Mr. Fasces, and I urge all my colleagues to support this essential amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot delay in enacting an urgently needed legislation. The American political system is dependent upon active political participation and public confidence in the Government. The enactment of electoral reforms will help restore credibility in our governmental institutions and our elected officials: in these turbulent times, there can be no higher priority. We have before us a good vehicle for reform in H.R. 16090 and, with the critical changes I have already mentioned, its immediate passage will be our response to America's call for fair, open and honest campaigns for Federal office.

Mr. Esch. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the campaign reform bill, H.R. 16090, and the amendments to be offered by Congressman Anderson, Udall, and Fasces.

At a time when credibility in Government has reached a low, this measure represents a very real opportunity to control future campaign finance abuses. If we are to maintain a system of government that is representative of the people then the election process—that vital function that selects those who will represent the people's interests—must be credible.

For this reason, I introduced in November 1973, my own campaign reform proposal, many of the provisions of which have been included in the bill before us today.

During the past few months I have become increasingly concerned over the failure of the House to move on this bill. And particularly, I have been disturbed by the House Administration Committee to report a bill.

The original committee bill, I believe contained serious flaws and I am pleased that some of these have been rectified. However, it is essential that the House move to adopt the Frenzel amendment to strengthen the enforcement procedures, by establishing a truly independent Federal Elections Commission empowered to take candidates and officials suspected of wrong-doing directly to court without going through the Justice Department.

It is likewise critical that the House move to adopt the Anderson-Udall amendment to extend limitation to congressional elections and to provide matching funds for federal races.

The unfortunate scandals surrounding Watergate was caused in some measure by our current system of campaign financing—with its heavy reliance on money from powerful political interest groups. This nonsystem affects all levels, and undermines the independence of our political process. I believe the Frenzel and Anderson-Udall amendments can make the committee bill a fully effective mechanism to insure fair and honest campaigns.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, the clowns for campaign finance has reached a low ebb in recent years, and we all know that there is good reason. The misuse of campaign funds, shady methods of obtaining such funds, and the rise of such funds became epidemic in 1972. Naturally I am angered that these misdeeds were performed in behalf of the Presidential candidate of my party.

Today, we are considering legislation which, it is said, will solve the problem and prevent future abuses. I am afraid that in many respects this bill represents instead a "solution" which is more liberal than those from powerful political interest groups. This nonsystem affects all levels, and undermines the independent of our political process.

As my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Cramer) noted in his separate views in the committee report, nothing short of a congressional resolution repealing original sin will end corruption in politics. Obviously, that is not within our power. What, then, does this legislation propose to do?

First, and most significantly, the bill places severe restrictions on the amount of money which any individual or special interest group can contribute. This individual and special interest groups restric-

The limitation of $5,000 in contributions per political action committee of any individual or special interest group may be needed but it could be faulty for two reasons: By prohibiting an individual from giving more than $1,000 to a candidate in an election campaign, it places the limit so low that it may constitute an unconstitutional restraint on his or her freedom to communicate their views or to support a candidate who represents those views. In addition, in the world of special interest groups, this bill threatens to make special provision for political party organizations, which often contribute substantially more money to their own candidates. This would have a disastrous effect on the parties and the candidates, which are subject to the rules of the Federal Elections Commission, which controls the parties, which themselves more money to their own candidates. financing. It extends the “dollar check-off” system of financing, where a taxpayer may designate a dollar of his Federal income taxes for a public campaign fund, to Presidential primaries and party nominating conventions. Until now, these funds have been reserved only for Presidential contests in the general election. By holding out the offer of lots of Federal money to primary candidates we are setting the stage for a proliferation of Presidential hotpots which will give the entire process a circus atmosphere, and attract as many publicity seekers as serious candidates.

Financing such a wasteful exercise could quickly diminish whatever public enthusiasm now exists for earmarking that dollar on the tax form. Fortunately, the committee wisely rejected public financing of any campaigns other than presidential races. But I fear that by taking this additional step toward expanding public financing, we are merely setting the stage for an expansion of the idea, an expansion I emphatically oppose.

Finally, the most glaring weakness in this legislation involves the section regarding “in kind” contributions. We cannot ignore the fact that special interest groups, principally labor unions, contribute the equivalent of upward of $100,000,000 a year in “inkling” gifts to candidates: mailings, get-out-the-vote drives, printing, mailing lists, equipment, transportation, storefronts, and numerous other benefits which are more valuable than cash. Not only does this bill fail to deal effectively with this type of contributions, it encourages them, and fails to either limit or require disclosure of such activity. This represents a glaring loophole big enough to drive every Teamster-operated truck in the Nation through. It makes a farce of any effort, to bring about campaign “reform,” and raises questions about the legality of contributions to candidates which are as serious as the sanctity of the election process and the promise of an American people to be free from corruption and disease.

Mr. Chairman, there is unquestionably a need for further reform of laws regulating campaign activity, and in particular provisions which would require full and complete disclosure of the source of all contributions, and full accounting of all expenditures. While this measure takes a step in that direction, it is inadequate. Because it is inadequate there, and because it contains so many other features which the proponents consider the proper and adequate reform of the campaign laws, I must oppose it as it is written. I shall instead offer my own legislation which will constitute what I consider the proper reforms.

Mr. PODDLE. Mr. Chairman, Watergate and its implications have kept the country in a state of shock, outrage, and disgust for the past 2 years. We have experienced a period which has affected every aspect of American life. One of the most scalding aspects is the attitude of mistrust and despair of the American people toward their political institutions. Their faith in the institutions and the people who represent them has been severely curtailed. Politics, once one of man’s noblest professions, is believed to be a camp of scroff details, lies, deceit, and a total lack of respect for the American people. The administration and its reluctance to be open and honest, has hurt and confused Americans from New York to California.

It has become imperative that we, in the Congress, take action now to restore the confidence of the American people toward the political system.

The Federal Election Campaign Amendments of 1974 provides us an avenue to begin to free the country from the pollution that has been eroding our ability to see and breathe freely. This legislation provides means for making campaigns a place for debating the issues and nothing more. One of the highlights of this bill is the area that deals with campaign contributions and campaign spending. It places a limit on the amount a Federal candidate can spend on a campaign. The amount varies with the different officers, the Presidential candidates being limited to $1 million in a primary election and $2 million for a general election. This is essential, for it maintains an area that all candidates must follow, no matter what amount of money they have, and enables a candidate to direct itself to issues in comparable fashion.

Congressional campaigns have a ceiling of $75,000. It is my belief that this figure is absolutely no need for a campaign dealing with the problems and concerns of the people to spend that amount. I attempted to pass an amendment that would lower this figure, but it was the sense of the committee to maintain the $75,000 amount as a reasonable sum.

There is also one other area that I am very concerned about in the public financing of Federal campaigns. There is a provision for Presidential campaign financing. However, there is none for congressional races. While this provision is one that has been shrouding our campaigns for so long, I urge my colleagues to reconsider their position on this matter as I feel that public financing of campaigns is the essence of a corruption-free system.

There are also areas of this legislation that certainly are helpful and are directed in a useful manner. One of these is the limitations put on the amount contributed to Federal campaigns. This aspect of the bill is reasonable. A group is allowed $5,000 per election and an individual $1,000. This policy is excellent in that it will keep the leverage on congressional areas, not in the direction of special interest groups. These groups will no longer have the leverage to effectively impose their wills, as they have so successfully in the past. This puts a campaign into the perspective that is better for both the candidates and the voting public. It enables a campaign to be a forum for the candidates to stand on issues that concern the Nation and enables the people of this country to decide on their candidate by reviewing these issues without questioning the integrity of the political system or those who represent it. This is not and should not be a gift: It is the essence of what our country was founded upon, and a manner of behavior that the American people are entitled to expect. Any other mode of behavior by the political system or those who uphold it is unacceptable, both to the system itself and the American people.

I serve on the House Administration and support the bill that we have presented to the floor of the House. I urge my colleagues to join me in a swift passage of this legislation.

Mr. TIERNAN. Mr. Chairman, the electoral process has been suffering a most serious illness. One need not be a medical doctor to diagnose the problem. The citizen is aware of the fact that campaigns in the United States have been riddled with unethical and illegal contributions and expenditures. The treatment for this condition is clear: this honorable body of Congress has done little to cure the electoral process and revitalize the voice of our democracy.

We can wait no longer. We must begin treatment immediately, not merely providing a good bedside manner with useless lip service—but a thorough and effective treatment. To insure the full recovery of our electoral process, we must enact strong campaign financing. I urge my colleagues to enact a campaign reform bill which provides for the establishment of an Independent Election Campaign Commission and a mixed public/private matching system for congressional campaign financing. We cannot substitute an aspirin for an operation.

I fail to adopt these amendments to H.R. 16190, we will be condoning the election scandals of the past 2 years. Moreover, we will fail to preserve the sanctity of the American Constitution, which guarantees our rights to freedom and liberty.

If we were to pass the committee bill as it now stands, not only would we fail to provide the necessary incentive to solicit small contributions from a vast base of citizen participants, but we would fail to boost the power of special interest groups which now threaten to destroy the fundamental voices of the American electorate. We would also fail to establish an effective Commission to insure that the election laws were being properly enforced. We all know that without sufficient oversight, these mechanisms are useless.

I ask the Members of Congress, can we remain idle while the future of our great Nation stands in jeopardy. To remove only a fraction of a malignant tumor is futile. We must thoroughly remove all traces of the cancer. We must stitch the loopholes in order to make campaign reform a meaningful and successful process.

Mr. SYMMES. Mr. Chairman, Congress once again is attempting to legislate individual responsibility and ethics. This time we’re looking down the barrel of a new bureaucracy charged with authority to keep political candidates clean and the voters honest. Just as gun registration failed to get at the roots of crime, campaign reform misses its point.

Mr. Chairman, Watergate did not occur solely because dishonest Government officials had dishonest friends. Failing to recognize that the problem goes much deeper than dishonesty, Congress has written legislation which apes a shiny coat of paint over a malignant illness in our political system.

Mr. Chairman, the real lesson of Watergate is that Government has become powerful. The benefits of illegal activities have become greater than the risks. The businessman who lives day by day on the threat of Government permits, contracts and regulations is too often forced to compromise his integrity and the integrity of his friends in the bureaucracy. Excessive Government power and favor have finally, authentically, that phrase, "Good guys finish last." If Government officials did not have so much to offer the private sector in the way of favorable rulings, contract awards, etc., other, then business would not have engaged in this kind of economic survival.

To ask for more laws to prevent another Watergate overlooks the fact that these same laws prohibiting these kinds of political activities. These laws have already convicted a fistful of public officials of wrongdoing and Congress is considering amendment of the President's act of the possible violation of these laws. This is the appropriate means of handling dishonesty—not passage of more laws against dishonesty but enforcement of an already existing criminal code and adherence to the constitutional process.

Rather than addressing the issue in its proper perspective, Congress proposed to extend campaign reform, including public financing of campaign expenditures and limitations on the rights of voters to contribute to campaign activities. Concepts of political campaigns are cast aside in legislation. The real issues are swept under the rug. In seeking to make all candidates equal and honest, Congress is actually proposing to bypass principles of republican government established by our Constitution.

Underlying the whole issue is a burning question: "Should money play any role in politics?" If we value the freedom of expression guaranteed in the first amendment, the answer to this question has to be "yes." No one person—candidate or campaign supporter—need apologize for his role of money in the political campaign.

Mr. Chairman, all political activities make economic claims on the community. Speeches, advertisements, broadcasts, transportation, grassroots organizations—all require money. As long as the financing of these activities is left to private contributions, the individual is free to choose his own style and his own extent of political involvement, free to defend his personal philosophy, and free to further the campaign of his preferred candidate with either his time, his money, his friendship. Depriving the individual of his right to contribute either time or money, we impair his freedom of expression. And so the benefits—supposedly—from public financing of campaigns?

Certainly not the candidate who seeks change. His financial needs against an incumbent, tax-supported Congress are great. Certainly not the citizen who holds opinions but lacks the time to work actively in a campaign. Public financing prohibits or severely limits the amount and extent of official support. Lacking time for various reasons and lacking the right to contribute dollars by virtue of Government decree, his political role becomes one of inaction.

Certainly not the candidate who has little to gain through public financing. Campaign contributions are a vehicle of expression for donors who wish to persuade others on public issues. This is a vital arena of political activity often overlooked in the more obvious rhetoric of candidates. The charge that these donors represent those omenous "special interests" is exactly what the system is rigged to help—the subtle, real interest of political interest is representing those economic and social activities which he feels to be most important. With obvious exceptions, it is a safe inference that the state of one’s campaign is a more important concern to the candidate than his ability to pay.

The taxpayer, as usual, will be footing the bill for this new legislation. His contributions should be kept out of one pocket at tax time while the huge bureaucracy required to implement and sustain the program bled the other pocket.

Mr. Chairman, politics in general has little to gain through public financing. Campaign money is a barometer of intensity of voter feeling. It keeps issues and options in perspective. It weeds out public support.

The winners in a publicly-financed campaign are fairly predictable. A party in control of the White House is likely to stay there because its bureaucracy pulls the strings on candidate financing. What public financing fails to provide them can be sopped up through manipulation of Government-sponsored programs and public relations services.

By equalizing the roles of the candidates through public financing you do not really reduce the influence of the "special interest." It has been demonstrated time and again that the American Medical Association which sells its services rather than candidates, second political activities with free time, and thereby mediates, anyone who wants access to resources easily converted to political purposes. Further, you greatly increase the influence of three distinct groups. First, the so-called pressure organizations and the like, the Commissars of our society. Second, the American Medical Association which sells its services rather than candidates, second political activities with free time, and thereby mediates. Anyone who wants access to resources easily converted to political purposes. Further, you greatly increase the influence of three distinct groups. First, the so-called pressure organizations and the like, the Commissars of our society. Second, the American Medical Association which sells its services rather than candidates, second political activities with free time, and thereby mediates. Anyone who wants access to resources easily converted to political purposes.

There is a danger, too, that an independent candidate will be prevented from running because he fails in some way to qualify for Federal financing. It is possible that such a candidate's "extremism" would make him unpopular who then could be incorporated into Federal financing laws. This, of course, raises the question: Who defines "extremism"? With time, these deficiencies and sanctions could easily be widened to prevent expression of legitimate political philosophies.

Campaign reform legislation as proposed does not bring Government closer to the people. It brings candidates closer to Government and pushes people into the background—except at tax collecting time.

We watched the House Administration Committee put together the jigsaw of campaign reform legislation piece by piece. They are missing the heart of the puzzle—the high sense of morality and ethics which guides most Americans in their choices of political representation.

Mr. Chairman, with the provisions of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 on the books, we have access to records of campaign contributions. We are able to determine to a certain extent the interests of any candidate's supporters. Within these broad and general guidelines, the Federal Code, we are able to handle officials who betray the public trust. By reducing the power and control of the Federal Government, we would remove the temptation and rewards of influence peddling.

And that is enough. Passage of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 will deny the right of expression. It restricts the citizens' right to contribute to political activities which he feels to be most important. It brings candidates closer to the public and further to the slogan of "taxation without representation." Federal financing laws. This, of course, raises the question: Who defines "extremism"? With time, these deficiencies and sanctions could easily be widened to prevent expression of legitimate political philosophies.

Mr. Chairman, with the provisions of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 on the books, we have access to records of campaign contributions. We are able to determine to a certain extent the interests of any candidate's supporters. Within these broad and general guidelines, the Federal Code, we are able to handle officials who betray the public trust. By reducing the power and control of the Federal Government, we would remove the temptation and rewards of influence peddling.

And that is enough. Passage of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 will deny the right of expression. It restricts the citizens' right to contribute to political activities which he feels to be most important. It brings candidates closer to the public and further to the slogan of "taxation without representation." Federal financing laws. This, of course, raises the question: Who defines "extremism"? With time, these deficiencies and sanctions could easily be widened to prevent expression of legitimate political philosophies.
furnished from voluntarily working for candidates they may choose to support. Workers in the private sector—often with similar jobs and sometimes even supported by the federal tax dollar—are able to participate fully as citizens in the political process. This discrimination against the political process of millions of State and local employees is no longer justified.

When the committee unanimously adopted this section, it did so with the hope that it would encourage greater voluntary citizen participation in the political process while at the same time continuing to prevent coercion and undue influence.

However, State and local public employees would still be prevented from personally running for partisan political office unless they resign their positions. This proposed amendment does not affect Federal employees.

Mr. CHORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 and urge that this bill pass the House of Representatives. It would be very misleading for me or any other Member of Congress to pretend that this bill will solve all our problems present in our election laws but it is a step in the right direction.

In the first place I am doubtful that any legislation can get rid of all loopholes in campaigns for public office. As long as human beings are sinful there will be some individuals tempted to exempt themselves from certain general standards or to find ways to circumvent election laws. The most we can do in this respect is to make every effort to remind elected officials and those aspiring to elective office that any position of public trust requires a moral commitment to their Government and their people.

In the second place I do see this bill closing certain loopholes that have been open all too long. The expenditure ceiling now is $60,000 for primary and runoff elections and general elections while still too high in my opinion is much better than no limit at all. As the Members of this body of Congress know, I sat through this item yesterday which would have set the spending limit at $4,250 which parallels the salary paid by the job. I am sorry that this amendment failed because I do not feel that a candidate should be allowed to spend more than the salary of the office. I have personally never spent anywhere close to $4,250 for any election including my first race for Congress when I defeated an incumbent Member of the House. However, a $60,000 limitation is a great improvement over the fantastic sums of $200,000 and $300,000 spent by candidates in the past in primaries or general elections.

Over 3 years ago in testimony before the House Administration Committee I expressed the strong fear that we were rapidly reaching the point that only the very wealthy or those who sold out to special interest groups could be elected to public office if we did not take steps to control campaign contributions. The American claim that only in this country could an individual rise from such humble beginnings as an Abraham Lincoln to become President of the United States has been brought into question as campaign costs for Federal office soared into six, seven, and eight figures. Furthermore, I feel that the $60,000 limit is a reasonable step in the right direction.

I am advocating an individual limit of $1,000 or a political committee limit of $5,000 has been placed in this legislation. This will do two very constructive things: First, it will make virtually impossible for individuals, or groups to buy influence with public officials; and second, it will force politicians to make every effort to get more of our citizens involved in the election process through the pocketbook which is the best way to get elected officials who are responsive and responsible to the people who elected them. The individual forcefulness in requiring Members of Congress, to whom they owe their jobs, to abide by these reporting requirements.

I prefer, instead, a more independent body. For this reason, I cosponsored an amendment, originally drafted by Mr. HAYS and Mr. FRENZEL, to establish an independent Federal Elections Commission to monitor the campaign process.

However, I am pleased with this committee amendment a compromise worked out by Mr. HAYS and Mr. FRENZEL. It differs from the original bill reported from the House Administration Committee, in that the Comptroller General would not be a member of the Board. The Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate would be the only voting members. And, finally, the full Senate and the full House of Representatives would have veto power over the Board's recommendations, rather than leaving the Senate with the House Administration Committee and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration.

I firmly believe that an independent commission will eliminate the possibility of conflict of interest, reverse the long history of nonenforcement, and increase coordination between the administrators and enforcers of the law. But more importantly, the creation of an independent body would help foster public confidence in the effectiveness and fairness of election laws and in public officials themselves.

Therefore, I urge my colleagues to adopt the committee amendment.

Mr. CHORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by distinguished colleagues JOHN ANDERSON and MORRIS UDALL. This amendment would encourage small contributions to congressional candidates by providing for limited Federal matching funds in general election.

Specifically, this amendment would establish a Federal matching fund by which private contributions of $50 or less would be matched by public funds. This matching payment could not exceed one-third of the spending limit established on this office. In order to qualify for such matching payments, candidates must first demonstrate their popular support by raising 10 percent of their spending limit in contributions of $50 or less.

As a cosponsor of the Anderson-Udall plan of the Act, I believe that this amendment is an important step in the effort to reform the way in which we finance our elections. In my view, the way to cleanse our political process of the unhealthy influence of big money and special interests is through setting stringent limits on campaign contributions and through the encouragement of small contributors. This is what I have been doing in my own campaign for Governor of Connecticut and I believe that the success I have had is a telling sign that campaign reform truly works.

It is essential that we restore public confidence in our electoral system. And the way to begin is to return politics to the people. This amendment will be a major step in encouraging the average citizen to get involved in electoral politics and in reducing the corrupting influence of big money and special interests out of our campaign financing system.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mrs. HICKMAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, today the House is about to take a major step toward restoring honesty to our electoral process. The passage of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments will represent our resolve to Watergate and the cancerous corruption of the election process which has scandalized the nation.

By now everyone understands the form that can arise from uncontrolled campaign fundraising. The Watergate scandals have made it clear to the American public that money has become the most important campaign resource for candidates running for Federal office and a candidate's responsiveness to the people who supply it.

Our current system gives special interest groups and the wealthy a disproportionate role in determining outcomes of elections and in the subsequent processes of governmental policymaking.
As a member of the Republican Task Force on Election Reform and as the sponsor of campaign reform legislation, I have been an outspoken advocate of public financing of elections as the only viable way to minimize the opportunities for influence peddling and buying in politics.

The bill presently under consideration, H.R. 16090, provides for public financing of Presidential elections from tax dollars paid into the Federal Election Campaign Fund through the voluntary dollar checkoff on all tax returns.

From this campaign fund Presidential candidates would be able to receive up to $30 million in checkoff funds for the general election and matching payments for contributions of $250 or less for primary elections.

The maximum probable cost of public financing would amount to less than $2 per taxpayer per year. I consider this a small price to pay for the assurance of clean elections and for the revival of citizen participation and interest in congressional and Presidential elections.

Equally important for the reformation of campaign procedures are the provisions of H.R. 16090 which limit campaign contributions and candidate expenditures.

In 1972 the two major Presidential candidates spent more than $45 million in each of the campaigns. These exorbitant figures demonstrate that in the past the emphasis has been on the cost of the campaign while little attention has been given to the issues.

The Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments before us for a vote would prohibit future Presidential candidates from spending more than $20 million in the general election and $10 million in the primary. Candidates for the Senate and the House would be limited to roughly $150,000 for total expenditures in their primary and general election campaigns.

On the other side of the campaign coin, this legislation restricts contributors from investing in candidates by prohibiting individuals from giving more than $5,000 in the primary and in the general election, while a group or organization cannot give more than $5,000 in either election to any candidate for Federal office.

I urge my colleagues to support the Federal Election Campaign Act amendments, legislation which would restore integrity to all Federal elections in 1976 and rebuild the public's confidence in the elected officials of our Government. Enactment of this legislation would signify the return to the principle of “one man, one vote” in our political system.

Mr. MURPHY of New York. Mr. Chairman, as the original sponsor of the Federal Election Campaign Amendments of 1974, I go on record in support of this legislation. The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 was a good law and a step in the right direction. Since its enactment, most campaign expenditures and contributions have been publicly disclosed. However, some large problems still exist and the purpose of these amendments would correct these problems.

The purpose of the Federal Election Campaign Amendments of 1974 is:

First. To place limitations on campaign contributions and expenditures;

Second. To facilitate the reporting and disclosure of the sources and disposition of campaign funds by centralizing campaign committees;

Third. To establish a Board of Supervisory Officers to oversee enforcement of and compliance with Federal campaign regulations;

Fourth. To strengthen the law for public financing of Presidential general elections, and to authorize the use of the dollar checkoff fund for financing Presidential nominating conventions and campaigns for nomination to the office of President.

The bill places strict limitations on contributions to candidates for Federal office. Contributions by individuals to candidates are limited in the aggregate to $1,000 per election. Further, an individual is limited to an aggregate of $25,000, whichever is less, for any calendar year. A major innovation of the bill will prohibit any contributions in cash in excess of $100.

In an effort to reduce the spiraling costs of campaign funds, Presidential candidates will be limited to $20,000,000 for election and $10,000,000 for nomination to the office.

In the case of campaigns for nomination for election, or for election to the office of Senator, the limitation is 5 cents times the population of the State, or $75,000, whichever is greater. The expenditures of Presidential campaigns for the offices of Representative, Delegate from the District of Columbia, or Resident Commissioner is $75,000. These limitations apply separately to each campaign for campaign funds, Presidential candidates, for public financing of Presidential general elections, or for election to any candidate for Federal office.

In an effort to simplify and improve the disclosure provisions of the campaign law, the legislation would require that each candidate designate a principal campaign committee; to provide for a single reporting responsibility with respect to receipts and expenditures by certain political committees; to change the times for the filing of reports on expenditures and contributions to provide for public financing of Presidential nominating conventions and Presidential primary elections; and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 1929, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the so-called Frenzel amendment relating to public financing of presidential nominating conventions.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment on which a separate vote has been demanded.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment: Page 59, strike line 17, and all that follows down through page 61, line 4. Page 61, line 6, strike out "407" and insert in lieu thereof "406".

Mr. BRADEMAS (during the reading).

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with and that it be printed in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the Frenzel amendment which denies the use of taxpayers' money for national political Presidential nominating conventions, which the committee defeated by a substantial margin?

Mr. BRADEMAS. The gentleman's colloquy is inaccurate.

Mr. FRENZEL. If it is, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, if I might say to my colleagues, I sought through the mail a copy of the proposed amendment which was not in order, but I will explain it in layman's terms.

I offer this motion to recommit with instructions because although I believe there are a number of places I believe the bill could be improved, the most glaring of the deficiencies in the measure is the absence of sufficient restrictions on the influence of special interest groups.

I was very surprised to hear the chairman speak with the degree of faithfulness which I have the highest regard, try to make this into a labor amendment or an antiblack amendment. I have here in my hand the front page of today's paper, the Washington Post. It shows a picture under the caption of "Pleads Guilty." It shows Jake Jacobsen and it says:

Jake Jacobsen, former lawyer for the largest U.S. milk cooperative, leaves court after pleading guilty to making a $10,000 payoff to former Treasury Secretary John Connally.

Then it says the further story is inside.

And I also note from the OPI News Service the following:

Washington--Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., received $225,000 in secret donations to his 1972 presidential campaign from oil millionaires Hess, according to Senate Watergate Committee records.

The Washington Star-News said the records showed that Hess disguised the donations under the names of other persons. The contributions were made before the April 1972, change in the election law that required the money to be made public.

The records also showed another $166,000 in secret cash contributions to Jackson, with most of the money coming from oilmen and the oil industry from other oilmen, the newspaper said. The largest cash gift--$50,000--came from Walter Doles, an oilman in Midland, Tex.

The committee's files showed that Jackson raised a total of just over $1.1 million for the 1972 race--and nearly half the money came from large donors, including Hess, who were at the same time supporting President Nixon's campaign.

Hess is Board Chairman of Amerada Hess Corp.

Mr. Speaker, if we are to have a campaign reform bill that is meaningful, if we are going to do something here today to get at the evils we are all lamenting and are aware of, let us all get at them now.

This is not aimed at labor. This is aimed at any special interest group that goes out and skims off the top of the workingman's salary or the businessman's income and says: "We will decide for you where your money should best go and it does not have to be accounted for." They do not have to account for it. They say: "You do not have to designate where it goes. We will decide for you."

Out of all the scandals that have surfaced recently, can any Member think of anything that needs more regulation, that is more deserving of being locked at and gotten to in this legislation, in this so-called campaign reform, than this one area? I refer the Members specifically to such organizations as the AFL-CIO, American Milk Producers, Inc., and we can go to the labor unions too. The labor unions can take what they want through check-off and the file does not know what that money is going for, but this is not aimed just at them.

The biggest scandals have come from the areas I have described, and there it is on the front page of today's paper where big business can go in and tap this guy and this guy and this little milk producer, or whatever industry is involved, and say, "All right, you just keep the money, the shale oil or the chicken or where it is going to do the most good."

This amendment would prohibit that. It says if one is going to contribute individually or someone acting as an agent of someone else, where it is going to do the most good, you designate where it is going to do the most good because if you do not we will put it there for you, and we do not need correcting. Anybody can give if he wants to.

The chairman makes a big thing that if one is going to give $1,000, is one going to have to have 1,000 pieces of paper? Well, what is wrong with that? We see 1,000 pieces of paper in our office every day. The contributor should say where the money is going to go and to whom it is going to go. What is wrong with that?

Can somebody tell me what is wrong with telling where he wants his money to go? There is nothing illegal and there is nothing immoral with that. It is just common sense and getting at the evils we are trying to get at.

This is just obscurcation and pulling the wool over the eyes in saying that this is antilabor and this is going to get at the little workingman. Little workingman, my foot. Ask about John Connally and about Jacobsen or ask about those who already have gotten the slamer closed on them. Talk about the little workingman.

So if the Members want to do something to get at the evils of directing money and collecting money and telling where it is going to go and if they want to make campaigns cleaner, this is the way to do it. Vote for the motion to recommit with instructions that gets at what we are going to do when we start taking up money.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. Speaker, I have sat beside my goonal friend from Alabama, on the House Administration Committee for a good many years. I never knew him to get so worked up about anything and I never knew before that he was such a master of obscurcation and circumlocution.

The truth of the matter is, that the piece of paper he very dramatically waved, does not have anything to do with this bill or anything in this bill. The money that Mr. Jacobsen allegedly gave to Mr. Connally was not a campaign contribution, or at least the allegation is not, because Mr. Connally was not a candidate for anything. I am not finding Mr. Connally guilty of anything, but--just sit down, Mr. Brown. I am not going to yield to you in the way, we will silence it anyway, just sit down. Do not try to disrupt my time.

Mr. Jacobsen pleaded guilty in court, as I understand it, to attempting to bribe, or bribing or anything, to influence the Government to get a favorable ruling.

Now, when the gentleman says that his amendment is not aimed at labor, he is not kidding anybody else. Sure, all members of a labor union—in the first place, a labor union cannot spend checkoff funds or union dues, and if they do, they are subject to criminal penalties. The only thing they can do is collect a voluntary fund and if the workingman says, "I want to contribute $1,000," they have their $1,000 from their $50,000 and $50,000 want to contribute a dollar, they have to get 50,000 pieces of paper; but if the American Medical Association, and their average national income is around $50,000 a year—okay, and they contribute $1,000 and to raise $50,000, they do not have to get 50,000 pieces of paper, just 50. That is what the amendment is all about.

I do not yield to the gentleman. (Mr. Brown.) If I had a piece of tape, I would like to put it over his face. I do not see how in the world I am going to hush him up while I am talking.

Mr. Speaker, I can understand the Republican boo hoo. If I were in the situation they are and looking forward to 9 o'clock, I would be doing worse than not standing up here. I would be standing on my head.

Let us face it. This is about as partisan a motion to recommit as was ever made. I like the gentleman from Alabama and the fact that the motion from the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Bowes) to the gentleman from Alabama improves it only in the author of the amendment. It does not improve the amendment.

So therefore, I ask that the motion to recommit be defeated.

The SPEAKER. The question is ordered on the motion to recommit. There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is ordered on the motion to recommit. The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 164, noes 243, not voting 27, as follows:

"(b) (1) Except as otherwise provided by paragraphs (2) and (3), no person shall make contributions to any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $1,000.

"(2) No political committee (other than a principal campaign committee) shall make contributions to any candidate with respect to any election for Federal office which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000.

Contributions by the national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of President of the United States shall not exceed the limitation imposed by the preceding sentence with respect to any other candidate for Federal office. For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘political committee’ means an organization registered as a political committee under section 303 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 for a period of not less than 6 months which has received contributions from more than 50 persons and, except for any State political party organization, has made contributions to 5 or more candidates for Federal office.

“(3) No individual shall make contributions aggregating more than $25,000 in any calendar year. For purposes of this paragraph, any contribution made in a year other than the calendar year in which the election is held with respect to which such contribution was made, is considered to be made during the calendar year in which such election is held.

“(4) For purposes of this subsection—

“(A) contributions to a named candidate made to any political committee authorized by such candidate, in writing, to accept contributions on his behalf shall be considered to be contributions made to such candidate; and

“(B) contributions made to or for the benefit of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be contributions made to or for the benefit of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States.

“(5) The limitations imposed by paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection apply separately with respect to each election, except that all elections held in any calendar year for the office of President of the United States (except a general election for such office) shall be considered to be one election.

“(6) For purposes of the limitations imposed by this section, all contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate. The intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.

“(c)(1) No candidate shall make expenditures in excess of—

“(A) $10,000,000, in the case of a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President of the United States, except that the aggregate of expenditures under this subparagraph in any one State shall not exceed twice the expenditure limitation applicable in such State to a candidate for nomination for election to the office of Senator, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, as the case may be;

“(B) $20,000,000, in the case of a candidate for election to the office of President of the United States;

“(2) For purposes of this subsection—

“(A) expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be expenditures made by or on behalf of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States; and

“(B) an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

“(i) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure; or

“(ii) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate, to make the expenditure.

“(3) The limitations imposed by subparagraphs (C), (D), (E), and (F) of paragraph (1) of this subsection shall apply separately with respect to each election.

“(4) The Commission shall prescribe rules under which any expenditure by a candidate for Presidential nomination for use in 2 or more States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

“(d) (1) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1976), as there become available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register the per centum difference between the price index for the 12 months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. Each limitation established by subsection (c) and subsection (f) shall be increased by such per centum difference. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for such calendar year.

“(B) the term ‘base period’ means the calendar year 1971.

“(c)(1) No person may make any expenditure (other than an expenditure made by or on behalf of a candidate within the meaning of subsection (c)(2)(B)) relative to a clearly identified candidate during a calendar year which, when added to all other expenditures made by such person during the year advocating the election or defeat of such candidate, exceeds $1,000.

“(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

“(A) ‘clearly identified’ means—

“(i) the candidate’s name appears;

“(ii) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears; or

“(iii) the identity of the candidate is apparent by unambiguous reference; and

“(B) ‘expenditure’ does not include any payment made or incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610, would not constitute an expenditure by such corporation or labor organization.

“(f)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law with respect to limitations on expenditures or limitations on contributions, the national committee of a political party and a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of candidates for Federal office, subject to the limitations contained in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection.

“(2) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for President of the United States who is affiliated with such party which exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States (as certified under subsection (g)). Any expenditure under this paragraph shall be in addition to any expenditure by a national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of President of the United States.

“(3) The national committee of a political party, or a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in a State who is affiliated with such party which exceeds—

“(A) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator, or of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, the greater of—

“(i) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (g)); or

“(ii) $20,000; and

“(g) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term ‘voting age population’ means resident population, 18 years of age or older.

“(h) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or make any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section. No officer or employee of a political committee shall knowingly accept a contribution made for the benefit or use of a candidate, or knowingly make any expenditure on behalf of a candidate, in violation of any limitation imposed on contributions and expenditures under this section.

“(i) Any person who violates any provision of this section shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.”

“(1) If the Commission determines that any portion of the payments made to a candidate from the matching payment account was in excess of the aggregate amount of payments to which such candidate was entitled under section 9034, it shall notify the can-candidate, and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary or his delegate an amount equal to the amount of excess payments.

"(2) If the Commission determines that any amount of any payment made to a candidate from the matching payment account was used for any purpose other than—

"(A) to defray the qualified campaign expenses with respect to which such payment was made, or

"(B) to repay loans the proceeds of which were used, or otherwise to restore funds (other than contributions to defray qualified campaign expenses which were received and expended) which were used, to defray qualified campaign expenses, it shall notify such candidate of the amount so used, and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary or his delegate an amount equal to such amount.

"(3) Amounts received by a candidate from the matching payment account may be retained for the liquidation of all obligations to pay qualified campaign expenses incurred for a period not exceeding 6 months after the end of the matching payment period. After all obligations have been liquidated, that portion of any unexpended balance remaining in the candidate's account which bears the same ratio to the total unexpended balance as the total amount received from the matching payment account bears to the total of all deposits made into the candidate's account shall be promptly repaid to the matching payment account.

"(c) Notification.—No notification shall be made by the Commission under subsection (b) with respect to a matching payment period more than 3 years after the end of such period.

"(d) Deposit of Repayments.—All payments received by the Secretary or his delegate under subsection (b) shall be deposited by him in the matching payment account.

"SEC. 9039. REPORTS TO CONGRESS; REGULATIONS.

"(2) If either such House does not, through appropriate action, disapprove the proposed rule or regulation set forth in such statement no later than 30 legislative days after receipt of such statement, then the Commission may prescribe such rule or regulation. The Commission may not prescribe any rule or regulation which is disapproved by either such House under this paragraph.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, the term "legislative days" does not include any calendar day on which both Houses of the Congress are not in session.

"SEC. 9041. JUDICIAL REVIEW.

"(a) Review of Agency Action by the Commission.—Any agency action by the Commission made under the provisions of this chapter shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed in such court within 30 days after the agency action by the Commission for which review is sought.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1)

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3044) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House amendments struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text and provided a new title for the Senate bill, and the Senate disagreed to the House amendments.

The committee of conference recommends that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the text of the bill, with an amendment which is a substitute for both the text of the Senate bill and the House amendment to the text of the Senate bill, and also recede from its disagreement to the House amendment to the title of the Senate bill.

The differences between the text of the Senate bill, the House amendment thereto, and the conference substitute are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by reason of agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

SHORT TITLE

The Senate bill, the House amendment, and the conference substitute provide that this legislation may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974".

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENTS

LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

A. CONTRIBUTIONS

Senate bill

Section 304(a) of the Senate bill amended chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, by inserting a new section 615, relating to limitations on contributions.

(49)
Section 615 (a) (1) provided that no individual may make contributions to a candidate with respect to his campaign for election which, in the aggregate, exceed $3,000.

Section 615 (a) (2) provided that no person (other than an individual) may make contributions to a candidate with respect to his campaign for election which, in the aggregate, exceed $6,000.

Section 615 (b) (1) provided that a candidate may not accept contributions from an individual which, in the aggregate, exceed $3,000, or from any person (other than an individual) which, in the aggregate, exceed $6,000.

Section 615 (b) (3) provided that an officer or employee of a political committee or a political party may not accept any contribution which a candidate is prohibited from accepting by section 615 (b) (1).

Section 615 (d) (1) provided that no individual may make contributions during a calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $25,000.

Section 615 (d) (2) provided that any contribution to a campaign of a candidate in a year other than the calendar year in which the election to which such campaign relates is held shall be considered, for purposes of section 615 (d) (1), to be made during the calendar year in which such election is held.

Section 615 (c) (2) provided that contributions made to a candidate of a political party for the office of Vice President shall be considered to be made to the candidate of such party for the office of President.

Section 615 (c) (3) defined the term "campaign" to include all primary, primary runoff, and general election campaigns related to a specific general election, and all primary, primary runoff, and special election campaigns related to a specific special election.

Section 615 (c) (4) provided that, for purposes of the contribution limitations established by section 615, all contributions made by a person directly or indirectly to a candidate, including any earmarked or otherwise encumbered contributions, shall be considered contributions from such person to such candidate.

House amendment

Section 101 (a) of the House amendment amended section 608 of title 18, United States Code, by inserting a new subsection (b).

Subsection (b) (1) provided that, except as otherwise provided by the new subsection (b), no person may make contributions exceeding $1,000 to any candidate for Federal office in any election.

Subsection (b) (2) provided that no political committee (other than the principal campaign committee of a candidate) may make contributions exceeding $5,000 to any candidate for Federal office in any election.

Subsection (b) (2) also defined the term "political committee" to mean, for purposes of subsection (b) (2), an organization registered as a political committee under section 303 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (hereinafter in this statement referred to as the "Act") for at least 6 months which has received contributions from more than 50 persons and has made contributions to at least 5 candidates for Federal office. Subsection (b) (2) also provided that State political party organizations shall not be required to make contributions to at least 5 candidates for Federal office in order to be considered political committees for purposes of subsection (b)(2).

Subsection (b)(3) provided that no individual may make contributions exceeding $25,000 in any calendar year.

Subsection (b)(4) provided that, for purposes of subsection (b), the following rules shall apply: (1) if a contribution is made to a political committee authorized in writing by a candidate to accept contributions on his behalf, then such contribution shall be considered to be a contribution to such candidate; and (2) any contribution to the candidate of a political party for the office of Vice President shall be considered to be a contribution to the candidate of such party for the office of President.

Subsection (b)(5) provided that limitations imposed by subsection (b)(1) and subsection (b)(2) shall apply separately to each election.

Subsection (b)(6) provided that all contributions from a person to a particular candidate shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate, even if such contributions are made indirectly, are earmarked, or are directed through any intermediary or conduit. It should be noted that the provisions of subsection (b)(6) were not intended to apply to contributions from separate segregated funds maintained by corporations or labor organizations, because donors to such funds must relinquish control of their donation to the corporation or labor organization and such donors may not earmark or direct such donations to any specific candidate or political committee.

Subsection (b)(6) required any person acting as an intermediary or conduit to report to the supervisory officer the source of the contribution and the intended recipient of the contribution. Such person also shall report such contribution to the intended recipient.

It was the understanding of the Committee on House Administration (hereinafter in this statement referred to as the “House committee”) that the following rule would apply with respect to the application of the contribution limitations established by subsection (b): if a person exercises any direct or indirect control over the making of a contribution, then such contribution shall count toward the limitation imposed with respect to such person under subsection (b), but it will not count toward such a person's contribution limitation when it is demonstrated that such person exercised no direct or indirect control over the making of the contribution involved.

A similar question was raised in the House committee regarding the possibility of circumventing the limit on contributions by political committees where a national committee of a political organization may contribute the maximum allowable amount to a candidate and a State or local sub-unit or subsidiary of that committee may also contribute to the same candidate. It was the intent of the House committee to allow the maximum contribution from each level of the organization if the decision or judgment to make such contributions is independently exercised within the separate levels of the organization. However, if the subsidiary or sub-unit organizations are under the control or direction of the parent organization with respect to their contributions to specific candidates, then the organizations acting in concert would constitute one political committee for the purpose of the contribution limits included in the House amendment bill.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, with the following changes:

1. With respect to the provision of the House amendment which prohibited any individual from making contributions in any calendar year exceeding $25,000, the conference substitute adopts the approach of the Senate bill which provided that any contribution to a campaign of a candidate in a year other than the calendar year in which the election to which such campaign relates is held shall be considered to be made during the calendar year in which such election is held.

2. The conference substitute adopts the provision of the Senate bill relating to the acceptance of illegal contributions by candidates and by officers or employees of political committees. Existing law prohibits a candidate or political committee from accepting an illegal contribution or authorizing an illegal expenditure. The conference substitute combines the prohibitions contained in existing law with those contained in the Senate bill and provides that no candidate or political committee may knowingly accept any contribution, or knowingly make any expenditure, in violation of the limits imposed by this legislation. The conference substitute also provides that no officer or employee of a political committee may knowingly accept a contribution made for the benefit of a candidate, or knowingly make any expenditure on behalf of the candidate, in violation of the limits imposed by this legislation.

The conferees agree with the analysis of the House report (as set forth in the statement relating to the House amendment) regarding the rule for application of contribution limitations and regarding the possibility of circumventing such limitations.

B. EXPENDITURES

Senate bill

Section 304(a) of the Senate bill amended chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, by inserting a new section 614, relating to limitation on expenditures generally.

Section 614(a)(1) provided that no candidate may make expenditures in his campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office, which exceed the limitation established by section 504 of the Act if such candidate were receiving payments under title V of the Act.

Section 504 of the Act was added by section 101 of the Senate bill. Section 504(a)(1) provided that no candidate (other than a candidate for the office of President) who receives payments under title V with respect to his primary election campaign may make expenditures with respect to such campaign in excess of the greater of (1) 8 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the geographical area in which the election for such nomination is held; (2) $125,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Senator or Representative from a State with only one Representative; or (3) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Representative from a State with more than one Representative.
Section 504(a)(2) provided that no candidate for nomination for the office of President may make expenditures in any State in which he is a candidate in a primary election which exceed 2 times the amount which a candidate for nomination for the office of Senator may spend in such State. No candidate for nomination for the office of President may make expenditures throughout the United States which exceed an amount equal to 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States.

Section 504(b) provided that no candidate who receives payments under title V with respect to his general election campaign may make expenditures with respect to such campaign in excess of the greater of (1) 12 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the geographical area in which such election is held; (2) $175,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Senator or Representative from a State with only one Representative; or (3) $90,000, if the Federal office sought is that of Representative from a State with more than one Representative.

Section 504(c) provided that no candidate who is unopposed in a general election may make expenditures with respect to his campaign which exceed 10 percent of the limitation in section 504(b).

Section 504(d) provided that the Federal Election Commission (hereinafter in this statement referred to as the “Commission”) shall prescribe rules under which expenditures by a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President for use in 2 or more States shall be attributed to the expenditure limitation of such candidate in each State.

Section 504(e)(1) provided that expenditures made on behalf of a candidate shall be considered to be made by such candidate.

Section 504(e)(2) provided that expenditures made by a candidate of a political party for the office of Vice President shall be considered to be made by the candidate of such party for the office of President.

Section 504(e)(3) provided that an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate if it is made by (1) an authorized committee or other agent of a candidate for the purposes of making expenditures; (2) any person authorized or requested to make an expenditure by a candidate, an authorized committee of a candidate, or an agent of a candidate; or (3) a national or State committee of a political party with respect to a primary or general election campaign of a candidate, if such expenditure exceeds the limitations of section 614(b) of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitation on expenditures generally. If any such expenditure does not exceed such limitations, it shall not be considered to be an expenditure made on behalf of such candidate.

Section 614(a)(2) was identical to section 504(e)(1) of the Act. Section 614(a)(3) was identical to section 504(e)(2) of the Act. Section 614(a)(4) provided that an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate if it is made by (1) an authorized committee or other agent of a candidate for the purpose of making expenditures; or (2) any person authorized or requested to make an expenditure by a candidate, an authorized committee of a candidate, or an agent of a candidate.

Section 614(a)(5) was identical to section 504(d) of the Act.
Section 614(b)(1) provided that a national committee or State committee of a political party may make expenditures with respect to general election campaigns of candidates for Federal office.

Section 614(b)(2) provided that a national committee of a political party may not make expenditures for the candidate of such party for the office of President which exceed an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States.

Section 614(b)(3) provided that a national committee or a State committee of a political party may not make expenditures with respect to a candidate in a general election for Federal office which exceed (1) if the office involved is that of Senator or Representative in a State with only one Representative, the greater of (A) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State involved; or (B) $20,000; and (2) if the office involved is that of Representative in a State with more than one Representative, $10,000.

Section 614(b)(4) defined the term "voting age population" as the voting age population certified for the year involved under section 504(g) of the Act. Section 614(b)(4) also provided that the approval by a national committee of a political party of an expenditure by a candidate of such party for the office of President, as required by section 316 of the Act, shall not be considered an expenditure by such national committee.

Section 504(g) of the Act, as added by section 101 of the Senate bill, provided that, beginning in January 1975 and annually thereafter, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Commission an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district. The term "voting age population" was defined to mean resident population, 18 years of age or older.

Section 504(h) of the Act, as added by section 101 of the Senate bill, provided that the Commission shall, upon receiving certification from the Secretary of Commerce under section 504(g) and from the Secretary of Labor under section 504(f)(2), publish in the Federal Register the applicable expenditure limitations in effect for the calendar year for the United States, each State, and each congressional district.

Section 504(i) of the Act, as added by section 101 of the Senate bill, provided that, in the case of a House candidate from a new district or from a district with new boundaries, the Commission shall determine the amount of payments to which such candidate is entitled and shall determine whether such candidate is a major party or a minor party candidate, based upon the number of votes cast in the preceding general election for the office involved by voters residing within the area encompassed in the new or altered congressional district.

House amendment

Section 101(a) of the House amendment amended section 608 of title 18, United States Code, by inserting a new subsection (c).

The new subsection (c) established the following expenditure limitations: (1) a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may not make expenditures exceeding $10,000,000; (2) a candidate for election to the office of President may not make expenditures exceeding $20,000,000; (3) a candidate for the office of Senator may not make expenditures which exceed the greater of (A) 5 cents multiplied by the population of the State involved; or (B) $75,000; (4) a candidate for the office of Representative, Delegate from the District of Columbia, or Resident Commissioner, may not make expenditures exceeding $60,000; and (5) a candidate for the office of Delegate from Guam or the Virgin Islands may not make expenditures exceeding $15,000.

Subsection (c) also provided that, for purposes of such subsection, the following rules shall apply: (1) any expenditure made by the candidate of a political party for the office of Vice President shall be considered to be an expenditure made by the candidate of such party for the office of President; (2) any expenditure made on behalf of a candidate by his principal campaign committee shall be deemed to have been made by such candidate; and (3) the population of a geographical area shall be the population according to the most recent decennial census.

Subsection (c) also provided that the expenditure limitations applied by subsection (c) to candidates for the office of Senator, Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, shall apply separately to each election. It also provided that, for purposes of the $10,000,000 expenditure limit on candidates for nomination to the office of President, all Presidential primary elections are considered one election.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, with the following changes:

1. The conference substitute increases the expenditure limitation applicable to candidates for the office of Representative, Delegate from the District of Columbia, and Resident Commissioner, from $60,000 to $70,000.

2. The conference substitute adopts the provision of the Senate bill which provided that an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate if it is made by (A) an authorized committee or other agent of a candidate for the purpose of making expenditures; or (B) any person authorized or requested to make an expenditure by a candidate, an authorized committee of a candidate, or an agent of a candidate. This change conforms with the decision of the conferees to permit authorized committees, as well as the principal campaign committee, to make expenditures on behalf of a candidate.

3. The conference substitute adopts the approach taken by the Senate bill with respect to expenditures applicable to candidates for the office of Senator or Representative from a State with only one Representative. In a primary election, such candidates may make expenditures which do not exceed the greater of (A) 8 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State in which the election is held; or (B) $100,000 (the conference substitute reduces the floor of $125,000 which was contained in the Senate bill).

In a general election, such candidates may make expenditures which do not exceed the greater of (A) 12 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State in which the election is held; or (B) $150,000.
(the conference substitute reduces the floor of $175,000 which was contained in the Senate bill).

4. The conference substitute adopts the provision of the Senate bill which provided that no candidate for nomination for the office of President may make expenditures in any State in which he is a candidate in a primary election which exceed 2 times the amount which a candidate for the office of Senator may make in such State.

5. The conference substitute adopts the provision of the Senate bill which provided that the Commission shall prescribe rules under which expenditures by a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President for use in 2 or more States shall be attributed to the expenditure limitation of such candidate in each State.

6. The conference substitute adopts the provision of the Senate bill which provided that national committees and State committees of political parties may make expenditures with respect to general election campaigns of candidates for Federal office. The expenditure limitations made applicable to such committees by the Senate bill are adopted by the conference substitute.

C. COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENTS

Senate bill

Section 504 (f) of the Act, as added by section 101 of the Senate bill, provided that at the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1975) the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission the percentage difference between the price index for the most recent calendar year and the price index for the base period. The expenditure limitations established by section 504(a) and section 504(b) shall be changed by such percentage difference.

Section 504 (f) defined the term “price index” as the average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average), and the term “base period” as calendar year 1973.

House amendment

Section 608(d) of title 18, United States Code, as added by section 101(a) of the House amendment, was the same as section 504(f) of the Act, as added by the Senate bill, with the following differences:
(1) certification was required to be made to the Comptroller General, and not to the Commission; and (2) the percentage difference would be taken into account only if it required an increase in expenditure limitations established by section 608(c) of title 18, United States Code.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except that certification is required to be made to the Commission.

D. OTHER EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS

Senate bill

Section 614(c) of title 18, United States Code, as added by section 304(a) of the Senate bill, provided that no person may make expenditures (other than an expenditure permitted under section 614(a)(4)) advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate during a calendar year which exceed $1,000.

Section 614(c) also contained definitions of terms used in such subsection. The term "clearly identified" was defined to mean (1) the candidate's name appears; (2) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears; or (3) the identity of the candidate is apparent by unambiguous reference. The term "person" did not include a national committee or State committee of a political party. The term "expenditure" did not include any payment made by a corporation or labor organization which, under the last paragraph of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, would not constitute an expenditure by such corporation or labor organization.

House amendment

Section 608(e) of title 18, United States Code, as added by section 101(a) of the House amendment, was the same as section 614(c), as added by section 304(a) of the Senate bill, except that the provision added by the House amendment did not define the terms "person" and "expenditure".

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill, except that the definition of person is omitted.

E. EXPENDITURES FROM PERSONAL FUNDS

Senate bill

Section 302(a)(1) of the Senate bill amended section 608(a)(1) of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures, to provide that no candidate may make expenditures from his personal funds or the personal funds of his immediate family with respect to his campaigns for nomination for election, and for election, to Federal office which exceed during any calendar year (1) $50,000 in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President; (2) $35,000 in the case of a candidate for the office of Senator; or (3) $25,000 in the case of a candidate for the office of Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner.

Section 302(a)(2) of the Senate bill amended section 608(a) of title 18, United States Code, by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph (3) and paragraph (4). Paragraph (3) provided that no candidate or his immediate family may make loans or advances from their personal funds with respect to his campaigns for Federal office unless such loan or advance is evidenced by a written instrument disclosing the terms and conditions of such loan or advance. Paragraph (4) provided that any such loan or advance shall be included in computing expenditures under section 608(a) only to the extent of the balance of such loan or advance outstanding and unpaid.

House amendment

Section 101(b) of the House amendment amended section 608(a)(1) of title 18, United States Code, to provide that no candidate may make expenditures from his personal funds or the personal funds of his immediate family with respect to his campaign for nomination for election, or for election, to Federal office, which exceed $5,000.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill, except that the conference substitute permits candidates for the office of Representative from States with only one Representative to make expenditures of up to $35,000 from their personal funds or the funds of their immediate families. Under the conference substitute the limitation on the expenditure of personal funds and immediate family funds by a candidate applies to the entire campaign period during any calendar year, beginning with the primary election campaign running through any primary runoff campaign and the general election campaign. In determining the amount of such funds used in connection with the candidate's efforts to obtain election to Federal office during any calendar year all funds spent in calendar years other than the calendar year in which such campaigns are conducted are taken into account.

It is the intent of the conferees that members of the immediate family of any candidate shall be subject to the contribution limitations established by this legislation. If a candidate for the office of Senator, for example, already is in a position to exercise control over funds of a member of his immediate family before he becomes a candidate, then he could draw upon these funds up to the limit of $35,000. If, however, the candidate did not have access to or control over such funds at the time he became a candidate, the immediate family member would not be permitted to grant access or control to the candidate in amounts up to $35,000, if the immediate family member intends that such amounts are to be used in the campaign of the candidate. The immediate family member would be permitted merely to make contributions to the candidate in amounts not greater than $1,000 for each election involved.

F. DISCHARGE OF CERTAIN CAMPAIGN DEBTS

Senate bill

Section 302(d) of the Senate bill provided that, notwithstanding the provisions of section 608 of title 18, United States Code, any individual may satisfy out of his personal funds or the personal funds of his immediate family any debt or obligation outstanding on the date of the enactment of this legislation and incurred by him with respect to any campaign for election to Federal office ending before January 1, 1973. The term "immediate family" was defined by reference to the definition of such term contained in section 608.

House amendment

Section 101(c) of the House amendment was the same as section 302(d) of the Senate bill, with the following differences: (1) the House amendment, instead of making an exception to the provisions of section 608 of title 18, United States Code, generally, made the exception apply specifically to the provisions of section 608(1) of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on expenditures from personal funds; and (2) the House amendment defined the terms "election", "Federal office", and "political committee" by reference to the definitions of such terms contained in section 591 of title 18, United States Code.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

G. CONTRIBUTIONS BY FOREIGN NATIONALS

Senate bill
Section 615 (b) (2) of title 18, United States Code, as added by section 304 (a) of the Senate bill, provided that no candidate may knowingly solicit or accept a contribution (1) from a foreign national; or (2) which is made in violation of section 613 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions by agents of foreign principals. The term "foreign national" was defined to mean a foreign principal, as such term is defined by the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, or an individual who is not a citizen of the United States and who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined by the Immigration and Nationality Act.

House amendment
Section 101 (d) of the House amendment amended section 613 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions by certain foreign agents, in order to make such section apply directly to foreign nationals instead of applying to agents of foreign principals. The term "foreign national" was defined in the same manner as in the Senate bill.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

H. AMOUNT OF CRIMINAL FINES

Senate bill
Section 302(b) of the Senate bill amended section 608 of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures out of candidates' personal and family funds, by increasing the fine for violation of such section from a maximum of $1,000 to a maximum of $25,000, and by increasing the prison term from a maximum of one year to a maximum of 5 years.

The penalty for violation of section 614 of title 18, United States Code, as added by section 304(a) of the Senate bill, was a fine of $25,000, or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both. If a candidate was convicted of violating section 614 because of an expenditure made on his behalf by a political committee, then the treasurer of such political committee or any other person authorizing such expenditure was punishable by a fine of not more than $25,000, or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both, if such person knew or had reason to know that such expenditure was in violation of section 614.

The penalty for violation of section 615 of title 18, United States Code, as added by section 304(a) of the Senate bill, was a fine of not more than $25,000, or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.
House amendment

Section 101(e)(1) of the House amendment amended section 608 of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures, to increase the criminal fine which may be imposed under such section from $1,000 to $25,000.

Section 101(e)(2) amended section 610 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions or expenditures by national banks, corporations, or labor organizations, to (1) increase the criminal fine which may be imposed under such section against corporations or labor organizations from $5,000 to $25,000; and (2) increase the criminal fine which may be imposed under such section against officers or directors committing willful violations from $10,000 to $50,000. It was the desire of the House committee that the increased penalties of section 610, together with the existing prison penalties of such section, shall be enforced rigorously against officers and directors of corporations and labor organizations to the extent such officers and directors are responsible for violations of such section.

Section 101(e)(3) amended section 611 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions by firms or individuals contracting with the United States, to increase the criminal fine which may be imposed under such section from $5,000 to $25,000.

Section 101(e)(4) amended section 613 of title 18, United States Code (as amended by section 101(d)), relating to contributions by foreign nationals, to increase the criminal fine which may be imposed under such section from $5,000 to $25,000.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

I. PROHIBITION OF CERTAIN CONTRIBUTIONS

Senate bill

Section 211 of the Senate bill amended section 310 of the Act, relating to prohibition of contributions in the name of another, to provide that no person may knowingly permit his name to be used to effect any contribution which is prohibited by such section.

House amendment

Section 101(f)(1) of the House amendment amended chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, by inserting a new section 614, relating to prohibition of contributions in the name of another. Section 614 was the same as section 310 of the Act (which was repealed by section 101(f)(4) of the House amendment), except that the criminal fine was increased from a maximum of $1,000 to a maximum of $25,000.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except that the conference substitute adopts that portion of the Senate bill which provided that no person may knowingly permit his name to be used to effect any prohibited contribution.
J. CONTRIBUTIONS OF CURRENCY

Senate bill
Section 304(a) of the Senate bill amended chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, by inserting a new section 616, relating to form of contributions. Section 616 prohibited contributions to any candidate or political committee in excess of $100 in a calendar year unless such contributions are made by written instrument identifying the person making such contribution. Violation of section 616 is punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000, imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

House amendment
Section 101(f)(1) of the House amendment amended chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, by inserting a new section 615, relating to limitation on contributions of currency. Section 615 provided that no person may make contributions of currency of the United States or currency of any foreign country exceeding $100 to any candidate for Federal office in any election. Violation of section 615 is punishable by a fine of not more than $25,000, imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

K. CONVERSION OF CONTRIBUTIONS

Senate bill
Section 304(a) of the Senate bill amended chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, by inserting a new section 617, which prohibited the embezzlement or conversion of political contributions.

House amendment
No provision.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute omits the provisions of the Senate bill.

Honorariums

Senate bill
No provision.

House amendment
Section 101(f)(1) of the House amendment amended chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, by inserting a new section 616, relating to acceptance of excessive honorariums. Section 616 provided that any elected or appointed officer or employee of any branch of the Federal Government who accepts any single honorarium exceeding $1,000, or who accepts honorariums exceeding $10,000 in a calendar year, shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000.
Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except that the conference substitute prohibits honorariums exceeding $15,000 in a calendar year, thus increasing by $5,000 the figure contained in the House amendment.

Voting Fraud

Senate bill

Section 304(a) of the Senate bill amended chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, by inserting a new section 618, relating to voting fraud. Section 618 prohibited any person in a Federal election from (1) casting a ballot in the name of another person; (2) casting a ballot if he is not qualified to vote; (3) forging or altering a ballot; (4) miscounting votes; (5) tampering with a voting machine; or (6) committing any other act (or failing to carry out a duty required by law), with the intent of causing an inaccurate counting of votes in any election.

House amendment

No provision.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute omits the provisions of the Senate bill.

Disclosure of Election Results

Senate bill

Section 304(a) of the Senate bill amended chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, by inserting a new section 619, which made it unlawful to make public information with respect to votes cast for the office of Presidential and Vice-Presidential elector before midnight, eastern standard time, of the day on which the election is held.

House amendment

No provision.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute omits the provisions of the Senate bill.

Fraudulent Misrepresentation of Campaign Authority

Senate bill

Section 304(a) of the Senate bill amended chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, by inserting a new section 620, which made it unlawful for any candidate, or any agent or employee of a candidate, to fraudulently misrepresent himself as speaking or otherwise acting for or on behalf of any other candidate or political party on a matter which is damaging to such other candidate or political party. Violation of the provisions was made punishable by a $50,000 fine or 5 years in prison, or both.

House amendment

No provision.
Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill, except that the conference substitute reduces the fine from $50,000 to $25,000 and reduces the prison term from 5 years to 1 year.

Applicability of Definitions

Senate bill

Section 304(b) of the Senate bill amended section 591 of title 18, United States Code, relating to definitions, to make such section applicable to the new sections 614 through 620, which were added by section 304(a) of the Senate bill.

House amendment

Section 101(f)(2) of the House amendment amended section 591 of title 18, United States Code, relating to definitions, to clarify that the manner in which terms are defined in such section applies to the use of such terms in such section, and to make such section applicable to the new sections 614, 615, and 616, which were added by section 101(f)(1) of the House amendment.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is essentially the same as the House amendment.

Changes in Definitions

A. ELECTION

Senate bill

Section 301(a) of the Senate bill amended section 591(a) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of election, to indicate that such term does not include the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

House amendment

No provision.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill.

B. POLITICAL COMMITTEE

Senate bill

Section 301(b) of the Senate bill amended section 591(d) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of political committee, to read that such term means (1) any committee or other group of persons which receives contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year exceeding $1,000; (2) any national committee, association, or organization of a political party, any State affiliate or subsidiary of a national political party, and any State committee of a political party, whether or not any such entity receives contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year exceeding $1,000; and (3) any committee, association, or organization administering a separate segregated fund described in section 610 of title 18 United States Code, relating to contributions or expenditures by national banks, corporations, or labor organizations.

House amendment

Section 102(a) of the House amendment amended section 591(d) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of political committee, to provide that such term shall be extended to include any individual, committee, association, or organization which commits any act for the purpose of influencing the outcome of any election for Federal office, except that such acts shall not include certain communications which are excluded from the definition of expenditure under section 591(f), as amended by the House amendment. Such communications include news stories and editorials distributed through the public media facilities (unless such facilities are owned or controlled by a political party or committee, or by a candidate), communications by a membership organization to its members (unless it is organized primarily for the purpose of influencing an election to Federal office), and any other communication which is not made for the purpose of influencing an election to Federal office.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as that portion of the Senate bill which provided that the term “political committee” means any committee or other group of persons which receives contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year exceeding $1,000.

C. CONTRIBUTION

Senate bill

Section 301(c) of the Senate bill amended section 591(e) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of contribution, in the following ways: (1) to indicate that the term includes assessments, fees, or membership dues, connected with subscriptions; (2) to provide that such term does not apply to any transaction in connection with the election of delegates to a constitutional convention or proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States; (3) to provide that such term applies to financing the operations of a political committee, and to the payment of any debt or obligation of a candidate or a political committee; (4) to eliminate the applicability of such term to contracts, promises, or agreements to make a contribution; and (5) to clarify that such term includes funds received by a political committee which are transferred to such committee from another political committee.

House amendment

Section 102(b) of the House amendment amended section 591(c) (1) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of contribution, to provide that a loan of money by a national or State bank shall be considered a loan by each endorser of such loan, in that proportion of the unpaid balance of such loan which each endorser bears to the total number of endorsers.

Section 102(c) of the House amendment amended section 591(c) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of contribution, to provide that the following activities shall not be considered to be contributions: (1) the use of property by an individual who owns or leases such property with respect to the rendering of voluntary services by such individual on his residential premises for candidate-related activities, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages, to the extent that the cumulative value of such use does not exceed $500;
(2) the sale of food or beverage by a vendor to a candidate at a reduced charge if such charge is at least equal to the cost of such food or beverage to the vendor, to the extent that such accumulated charges do not exceed $500; (3) the travel expenses of an individual rendering volun-tyary services to a candidate, to the extent that the cumulative total of such expenses does not exceed $500; and (4) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation or distribution of any printed slate card or other printed listing of 3 or more candidates for public office who are candidates in the State in which such committee is located, but this exclusion does not apply to payment of costs for the display of any such printed listing through public media facilities (other than newspapers) or on outdoor advertising facilities such as billboards.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except that the conference substitute adopts that portion of the Senate bill which deleted from the term “contribution” any transaction in connection with the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

The purpose of the provision exempting slatecards is intended to allow State and local parties to educate the general public as to the identity of the candidates of the party. It is the intention of the con-feres that the slatecard exemption applies only to lists containing the names of all candidates of a party within the State, displayed with equal prominence.

D. EXPENDITURE

Senate bill

Section 301(d) of the Senate bill amended section 591(f) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of expenditure, to provide that such term means (1) a purchase, loan (other than a loan of money by a national or State bank), or other described payment of money or anything of value made for the purpose of (A) influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal of-office; (B) influencing the result of a Presidential primary election; (C) financing a political committee; or (D) paying any debt or obligation of a candidate or a political committee; and (2) the transfer of funds by a political committee to another political committee.

The amendment made by section 301(d) of the Senate bill provided that the term “expenditure” does not include the value of services rendered by volunteer workers on behalf of a candidate.

House amendment

Section 102(d) of the House amendment amended section 591(f) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of expenditure, to provide that the following activities shall not be considered to be expenditures: (1) any news story, commentary, or editorial of any broadcasting station, newspaper, or other periodical publication, unless such facilities are owned or controlled by a political party, political committee, or candidate; (2) nonpartisan get-out-the-vote activity; (3) communications by a membership organization or corporation to its members or stockholders, if such membership organization or corporation is not organized primarily to influence the outcome of elections for Federal office; (4) the use of property by an individual who owns or leases such property with respect to the rendering of voluntary services by such individual on his residential premises for candidate-related activities, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages, to the extent that the cumulative value of such use does not exceed $500; (5) the travel expenses of an individual rendering voluntary services to a candidate, to the extent that the cumulative total of such expenses does not exceed $500; (6) communications which are not made to influence the outcome of elections for Federal office; (7) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation or distribution of any printed slate card or other printed listing of 3 or more candidates for public office who are candidates in the State in which such committee is located, but this exclusion does not apply to payment of costs for the display of any such printed listing through public media facilities (other than newspapers) or on outdoor advertising facilities such as billboards; (8) the costs of a candidate (including his principal campaign committee) with respect to his solicitation of contributions, except that this exception does not apply to costs which exceed 25 percent of the expenditure limitation applicable to such candidate under section 608(c) of title 18, as added by the House amendment; and (9) any costs incurred by a multicandidate committee which has been registered under the Act as a political committee for at least 6 months, has received contributions from at least 50 persons, and (except for State political party organizations) has made contributions to at least 5 candidates, in connection with soliciting contributions to itself or to a general political fund controlled by it, but this exclusion does not exempt costs of soliciting contributions through any public media facilities.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except that the 25 percent exemption for fundraising costs is reduced to 20 percent and that portion of the Senate bill is retained which deleted the reference to transactions in connection with the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

E. POLITICAL PARTY

Senate bill

Section 301(e) of the Senate bill amended section 591 of title 18, United States Code, by inserting a new paragraph (i), relating to the definition of political party. Such term was defined to mean any association or other organization which nominates a candidate for election to Federal office whose name appears on the election ballot as the candidate of such association or other organization.
House amendment
No provision.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill.

F. State Committee

Senate bill
Section 301(e) of the Senate bill amended section 591 of title 18, United States Code, by inserting a new paragraph (j), relating to the definition of State committee. Such term was defined to mean the organization which is responsible for the day-to-day operations of a political party at the State level, as determined by the Commission.

House amendment
No provision.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill.

G. National Committee

Senate bill
Section 301(e) of the Senate bill amended section 591 of title 18, United States Code, by inserting a new paragraph (k), relating to the definition of national committee. Such term was defined to mean the organization which is responsible for the day-to-day operations of a political party at the national level, as determined by the Commission.

House amendment
No provision.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill.

H. Principal Campaign Committee

Senate bill
No provision.

House amendment
Section 102(e) of the House amendment amended section 591 of title 18, United States Code, by inserting a new paragraph (i), relating to the definition of principal campaign committee. Such term was defined to mean the principal campaign committee designated by a candidate under section 302(f)(1) of the Act, as added by the House amendment.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

Political Funds

Senate bill
Section 303 of the Senate bill amended section 611 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions by firms or individuals contracting with the United States, to provide that such section shall not prohibit the establishment or maintenance of a separate segregated campaign fund by a corporation or a labor organization unless such establishment or maintenance is prohibited under section 610 of title 18, relating to contributions or expenditures by national banks, corporations, or labor organizations.

House amendment

Section 103 of the House amendment was the same as section 303 of the Senate bill, except that the amendment to section 611 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions by firms or individuals contracting with the United States, made by the House amendment contained a definition of the term "labor organization." Such term was defined by reference to the definition of such term contained in section 610 of title 18, United States Code.

A question was raised in the House committee during the consideration of the amendment to section 611 as to whether doctors receiving payments under the so-called Medicare and Medicaid programs are prohibited from making political contributions as government contractors. The House committee was of the opinion that nothing in the existing section 611, nor in the amendment thereto included in the House amendments, would prohibit a doctor from making a political contribution solely because he was receiving payments for medical services rendered to patients under either the Medicare or Medicaid program. Under the Medicare program the basic contractual relationship is between the Federal Government and the individual receiving the medical services. The individual receiving the medical services may be reimbursed directly by the Federal Government for amounts paid for such services, or he may assign his claim against the Federal Government to the doctor who rendered the services, but in the latter case the doctor merely stands in the shoes of the claimant for payment. This relationship is not altered by the fact that a Federal agency may retain a right to audit the accounts of a medical practitioner to protect the Federal Government against fraudulent claims for medical services.

Under so-called Medicaid programs, it is true that doctors may have specific contractual agreements to render medical services, but such agreements are with State agencies and not with the Federal Government. Medicaid programs are administered by State agencies using Federal funds. The House committee did not believe that section 611 prohibiting political contributions by government contractors has any application to doctors rendering medical services pursuant to a contract with a State agency.

A separate question was raised in the House committee concerning the application of section 610 of title 18, relating to prohibitions against political contributions by corporations, banks, and labor organizations, as to whether a professional corporation composed of doctors, lawyers, architects, engineers, etc., would be prohibited from making political contributions. Whether or not a professional association is a corporation is a matter determined under State law. If, under State law, such an association is a corporation, it would be prohibited from making a political contribution as a corporation. However, nothing in existing law, nor in the amendments contained in the House amendment prohibit an individual member of any corporation from making a political contribution as an individual. Existing law also permits corporations to establish a separate segregated fund to be utilized for political purposes so long as contributions to such fund are voluntary and not secured by force or job discrimination or financial reprisals, or threat thereof, or by money obtained in any commercial transaction.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

The conferees agree with the analysis of the House report (as set forth in the statement relating to the House amendment) regarding political contributions by doctors and professional corporations.

EFFECT ON STATE LAW

Senate bill
No provision.

House amendment
Section 104 of the House amendment provided that chapter 9.9 of title 18, United States Code, relating to elections and political activities, supersedes and preempts provisions of State law.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

The provisions of the conference substitute make it clear that the Federal law occupies the field with respect to criminal actions relating to limitations on campaign expenditures, the sources of campaign funds used in Federal races, the conduct of Federal campaigns, and similar offenses, but does not affect the States' rights to prohibit false registration, voting fraud, theft of ballots, and similar offenses under State law.

AMENDMENTS TO FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

PRINCIPAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEES

A. DESIGNATION

Senate bill
Section 207(a) of the Senate bill amended title III of the Act by inserting a new section 310, relating to central campaign committees. Section 310(a) provided that each candidate shall designate one political committee as his central campaign committee. A candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of President, also may designate State campaign committees in States in which he is a candidate.

Section 310(b) provided that no political committee may be designated as the central campaign committee of more than one candidate, except that a political committee described in section 301(d)(2) of the Act, as added by the Senate bill, may be designated as the central campaign committee of more than one candidate in a general election campaign. The central campaign committee and each State campaign committee of a candidate of a political party for the office of President shall be considered the central campaign committee and the State campaign committee of the candidate of such party for the office of Vice President.

House amendment

Section 201 of the House amendment amended section 301 of the Act by striking out subsection (f), relating to notices with respect to fund solicitation and annual reports by supervisory officers, and by inserting in lieu thereof a new subsection (f), relating to principal campaign committees.

Subsection (f) (1) required that candidates for Federal office (other than candidates for the office of Vice President) designate a political committee as their principal campaign committee. No political committee which supports more than one candidate may be designated as a principal campaign committee. Subsection (f) (1) as provided that no political committee may be designated as the principal campaign committee of more than one candidate, except that the Presidential candidate of a political party may, after he is nominated, designate the national committee of his political party as his principal campaign committee.

Conference substitute

Although the conference substitute is the same as the House amendment with respect to principal campaign committees, the conference substitute retains the provision of the Act deleted by the House amendment relating to notices with respect to fund solicitation. This provision requires political committees to have a notice on material soliciting contributions which states that copies of their reports filed under the Act are available for purchase from the Commission.

B. EXPENDITURES ON BEHALF OF CANDIDATE

Senate bill

No provision.

House amendment

Section 302(f) (2) of the Act, as added by the House amendment, provided that, except in the case of expenditures which may be made under section 608(e) of title 18, United States Code, relating to expenditures of not more than $1,000 in a calendar year made with respect to a clearly identified candidate, only the principal campaign committee of a candidate may make expenditures on behalf of such candidate.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute, like the Senate bill, permits authorized political committees other than the principal campaign committee to make expenditures on behalf of a candidate.
C. REPORTS

Senate bill

Section 310(c)(1) of the Act, as added by the Senate bill, provided that political committees, other than central campaign committees and State campaign committees, shall file required reports with the appropriate central campaign committee and not with the Commission. Any report filed with a central campaign committee shall be considered to have been filed with the Commission at the time it was filed with the central campaign committee.

Section 310(c)(2) provided that the Commission may require a political committee operating in a State on behalf of a candidate who has designated a State campaign committee for such State, to file required reports with such State campaign committee and not with the central campaign committee of such candidate.

Section 310(c)(3) provided that the Commission may require any political committee to file any report directly with the Commission.

Section 310(d) provided that each central campaign committee and State campaign committee shall consolidate reports filed with it by other political committees and furnish such reports, together with its own required reports, to the Commission.

House amendment

Section 302(f)(3) of the Act, as added by the House amendment, provided that political committees receiving contributions on behalf of a candidate shall report such contributions to the principal campaign committee of such candidate, instead of to the supervisory officer.

Subsection (f)(4) provided that the principal campaign committee shall compile and file reports which such committee receives from other political committees supporting the candidate involved, together with its own reports and statements, with the supervisory officer.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute follows the House amendment generally. Since the conference substitute permits expenditures to be made by other authorized political committees, it provides that political committees authorized to make expenditures with respect to a candidate must file reports relating to those expenditures with the principal campaign committee rather than with the Commission.

D. DEFINITION OF POLITICAL COMMITTEE

Senate bill

No provision.

House amendment

Section 302(f)(5) of the Act, as added by the House amendment, provided that, for purposes of subsection (f)(1) and subsection (f)(3), the term "political committee" does not include political committees supporting more than one candidate, except for the national committee of a political party designated by a Presidential candidate as his principal campaign committee. Therefore, a candidate may not designate a multicandidate political committee as his principal campaign committee and multicandidate political committees shall continue to report directly to the supervisory officer under applicable provisions of the Act.

Conference substitute

Because of the conference substitute provisions permitting expenditures to be made for a candidate by political committees other than his principal campaign committee, the provision of the House amendment requiring multicandidate committees to report directly to the supervisory authority rather than to the principal campaign committee is not included in the conference substitute.

CAMPAIGN DEPOSITORIES

Senate bill

Section 207(a) of the Senate bill amended title III of the Act by inserting a new section 311, relating to campaign depositories.

Section 311 provided that each candidate shall designate one or more national or State banks as his campaign depositories. Contributions received by or on behalf of a candidate shall be deposited in one of his campaign depositories. Expenditures, other than petty cash expenditures, made on behalf of a candidate shall be made by check from an account at one of the campaign depositories of such candidate.

Section 311 also provided that the treasurer of each political committee (other than a political committee authorized by a candidate to receive contributions or make expenditures on his behalf) shall designate one or more national or State banks as the campaign depositories of such political committee. Contributions received by such political committee shall be deposited in one of its campaign depositories. Expenditures, other than petty cash expenditures, made by such political committee shall be made by check from an account at one of its campaign depositories.

Section 311 also provided that political committees may maintain petty cash funds from which expenditures not in excess of $100 may be made in connection with a single purchase or transaction. Records of petty cash disbursements shall be kept in accordance with requirements established by the Commission.

Section 311 also provided that a candidate for nomination for election, or for election, to the office of President may establish one campaign depository in each State. The campaign depository of a candidate of a political party for the office of President shall be considered the campaign depository of the candidate of such political party for the office of Vice President.

House amendment

No provision.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill.

REGISTRATION REQUIREMENTS

Senate bill

Section 203(a) of the Senate bill amended section 303 of the Act (relating to registration of political committees; statements) by in-serting a new subsection (a). The new section 303(a) provided that each candidate, within 10 days after becoming a candidate, shall file with the Commission a registration statement, which shall include (1) the identification of the candidate and any person he has authorized to receive contributions or make expenditures on his behalf; (2) the identification of his campaign depositories and the identification of each individual authorized to make any expenditure or withdrawal from accounts at such depositories; and (3) such additional relevant information as the Commission may require.

Section 303(b) of the Act (as so redesignated by the Senate bill) was amended by the Senate bill in the following ways: (1) the first sentence, relating to certain reporting requirements of political committees, was struck out; and (2) a new sentence was added which provided that the treasurer of each political committee shall file with the Commission a statement of organization within 10 days after such political committee is organized.

Section 303(c) of the Act (as so redesignated by the Senate bill) was amended by the Senate bill in the following ways: (1) it was made clear by the Senate bill that statements of organization shall be in such form as the Commission shall prescribe; (2) paragraph (3) was amended to provide that the statement of organization shall include information with respect to the geographical area or political jurisdiction within which the political committee will operate, and a general description of the authority and activities of such political committee; and (3) paragraph (9) was amended to provide that the statement of organization shall include the name and address of campaign depositories used by the political committee involved, and the identification of each individual authorized to make withdrawals or payments from accounts at such depositories.

House amendment

Section 202 of the House amendment amended section 303 of the Act, relating to registration of political committees and statements, by adding at the end thereof a new subsection (e) which provided that reports and notifications of political committees (other than principal campaign committees and multicandidate political committees) required to be filed under section 303 shall be filed with the appropriate principal campaign committee.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except that multicandidate committees report to the appropriate principal campaign committee.

Reports by Political Committees and Candidates

A. Filing Dates

Senate bill

Section 204(a) of the Senate bill made the following changes in section 304 of the Act, relating to reports by political committees and candidates:

1. The provisions of section 304 were clarified in order to indicate that such provisions apply to campaigns for nomination for election as well as to campaigns for election.
2. The amendment made by the Senate bill established the following reporting dates: (A) the tenth day of April, July, and October of each year; (B) the tenth day before an election; (C) the tenth day of December in the year of an election; and (D) the last day of January of each year. In years in which no election is held, candidates may file reports on the twentieth day of April, July, and August, instead of on the tenth day of each such month.

3. The requirement that contributions of $5,000 or more received after the last report before an election must be reported within 48 hours after receipt, was eliminated by the amendment made by the Senate bill.

4. If the identity of an anonymous contributor becomes known, such identity shall be reported to the Commission.

5. The Commission may, upon request by a Presidential candidate or upon its own motion, waive reporting dates (other than January 31) and require that Presidential candidates report not less frequently than monthly. If the Commission acts upon its own motion, then the Presidential candidate involved is entitled to judicial review of the decision.

House amendment

Section 203(a) of the House amendment amended section 304(a) of the Act, relating to filing dates for reports of receipts and expenditures by political committees and candidates, to provide for the following new filing requirements:

1. In a calendar year in which an individual is a candidate for Federal office and an election is held for the particular Federal office which such individual is seeking, reports of receipts and expenditures must be filed 10 days before such election. Such reports shall be complete as of the fifteenth day before such election. Reports filed by registered or certified mail must be postmarked by the twelfth day before such election. In addition, such reports must be filed 30 days after the date of such election and be complete as of the twentieth day after the date of such election.

2. In other calendar years, reports of receipts and expenditures must be filed after the close of the calendar year and no later than January 31 of the following calendar year, and must be complete as of the close of the calendar year for which filed.

3. In addition to reports required to be filed in an election year or in any other calendar year, reports of receipts and expenditures must be filed for any calendar quarter in which the candidate or committee reporting received contributions exceeding $1,000 or made expenditures exceeding $1,000. In any case in which such a quarterly report would coincide with the annual report which is required for nonelection years, the amendment made by section 203(a) provided that the quarterly report be filed in accordance with provisions governing the filing of annual reports.

The amendment made by section 203(a) also provided that when the last day for filing a quarterly report occurs within 10 days of an election, then the quarterly report requirement shall be waived and superseded by the required election report. Such amendment also provided that any contribution exceeding $1,000 which is received after the fifteenth day before an election but more than 48 hours before an election, shall be reported no later than 48 hours after its receipt.

Such amendment also provided that treasurers of political committees which are not principal campaign committees or multicanidate committees shall file reports required by section 304 of the Act with the appropriate principal campaign committee, instead of with the supervisory officer.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute follows the House amendment generally, but includes that provision of the Senate bill permitting monthly reporting in the case of presidential candidates and political committees supporting candidates in more than one State. The maximum number of reports in addition to the final report for the calendar year is increased in the conference substitute from 11 to 12 in order to permit the Commission to require such candidates and committees to file the report due 10 days before the date of the general election even if such candidates and committees are reporting on a monthly basis.

B. REPORTING OF LOANS

Senate bill
Section 204(b)(2) of the Senate bill amended section 304(b)(5) of the Act, relating to the reporting of loans, to provide that information with respect to the guarantors of loans shall be included in reports, as well as information with respect to lenders and endorsers.

House amendment
No provision.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill.

C. REPORTING OF DEBTS AND OBLIGATIONS

Senate bill
Section 204(c) of the Senate bill amended section 304(b)(12) of the Act, relating to the reporting of debts and obligations, to provide that reports filed with the Commission must include a statement with respect to the circumstances and conditions under which any debt or obligation is extinguished.

House amendment
No provision.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill. The conferees expect that this reporting requirement will eliminate the practice of reporting the expenditure of the proceeds of a loan as an “expenditure” two times—once when the funds are spent and again when the loan is paid off.
D. REPORTING OF EARMARKED CONTRIBUTIONS

Senate bill

Section 204(d) of the Senate bill added a new paragraph (13) to section 304(b) of the Act. Such paragraph provided that reports filed with the Commission shall contain such information as the Commission may require with respect to earmarked contributions or other special funds.

House amendment

No provision. See section 608(b)(6) of title 18, United States Code, as added by section 101(a) of the House amendment, which required the reporting of earmarked contributions.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

E. CONTRIBUTION AND EXPENDITURE INFORMATION

Senate bill

No provision.

House amendment

Section 203(b) of the House amendment amended section 304(b) of the Act, relating to information required to be reported, to provide that, in addition to reporting total receipts and total expenditures, each report must show total receipts less transfers between political committees which support the same candidate and do not support any other candidate and total expenditures less such transfers. In some cases the total receipts and expenditures reported have presented a distorted picture because, under the Act, transfers of funds between committees are counted as contributions and expenditures. This amendment provided that where such transfers occur between single candidate committees supporting the same candidate the report must also show total receipts less such transfers and total expenditures less such transfers.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

F. CUMULATIVE REPORTS

Senate bill

Section 204(e) of the Senate bill amended section 304(e) of the Act (1) to eliminate the option of reporting only the amounts of the previous reporting period when there has been no change in the amounts of items since the last report; and (2) to provide that the Commission may require cumulative reports with respect to periods other than the calendar year.

House amendment

No provision.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute omits the provisions of the Senate bill.
G. EXEMPTED TRANSACTIONS

Senate bill

Section 204(f) of the Senate bill amended section 304 of the Act by inserting a new subsection (d). Such subsection provided that Members of the Congress are not required to report as contributions or expenditures certain services furnished before the first day of January of the year before the year during which the term of the Member expires. Such services are (1) those furnished by the Senate Recording Studio; (2) those furnished by the House Recording Studio; (3) those furnished by employees whose pay is disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives; and (4) those paid for by the Republican or Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, the Democratic National Congressional Committee, or the National Republican Congressional Committee.

House amendment

No provision.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill, except that there the Senate bill provided that certain photographic, matting, and recording studio services, if reportable under the Act, were only reportable to the extent utilized in the calendar year before the expiration of a Member's term, the conference substitute provides only for the reporting during that year of recording studio services to the extent that they are reportable under the Act.

CAMPAIGN ADVERTISEMENTS

Senate bill

Sections 204(f) and 205 of the Senate bill amended title III of the Act by striking out section 305, relating to reports by other than political committees, and by inserting the provisions of section 305 as a new section 304(e). Section 205 of the Senate bill amended title III of the Act by inserting a new section 305, relating to requirements relating to campaign advertising.

Section 305(a) of the Act required that persons seeking to publish political advertisements must furnish to the publisher their identification and the identification of any person authorizing the political advertisement.

Section 305(b) required that each published political advertisement contain a statement of the identification of any person authorizing such political advertisement.

Section 305(c) required that publishers maintain records with respect to the publication of political advertisements. Section 304(d) provided that persons selling newspaper or magazine space to candidates may not charge rates which exceed rates for comparable space used for other purposes.

Section 305(e) required political committees to print on all literature and advertisements soliciting contributions a notice with respect to reports of such political committees filed with the Commission. Section 305(f) defined the terms "political advertisement" and "published".
House amendment
No provision.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute, like the Senate bill, continues the provision of existing law prohibiting newspapers or magazines from charging a rate for political advertising which is higher than the rate charged for any comparable use of the newspaper or magazine for other purposes.

Waiver of Reporting Requirements

Senate bill
Section 206 of the Senate bill amended section 306(c) of the Act, relating to waiver of certain reporting requirements, to provide that the Commission may relieve any category of candidates from personally complying with the filing requirements of section 304(a) through section 304(e) of the Act, and that the Commission may relieve any category of political committees from complying with such provisions if such political committees primarily support persons seeking State office and do not operate in more than one State or do not operate on a statewide basis.

House amendment
No provision.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill.

Determination of Date of Filing

Senate bill
No provision.

House amendment
Section 204 of the House amendment amended section 306 of the Act, relating to formal requirements respecting reports and statements, by adding at the end thereof a new subsection (e) which provided that if a report or statement required to be filed by a candidate or committee relating to contributions or expenditures or registration of a committee is delivered by registered or certified mail, then the United States postmark stamped on the envelope containing such report shall be deemed to be the date of filing.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

Duties of Supervisory Officer

A. Cumulative Index

Senate bill
Section 208 of the Senate bill amended section 308(a)(8) of the Act, relating to duties of the supervisory officer, to provide that it shall be a duty of the Commission to compile and maintain a cumulative index of statements and reports filed with the Commission.

House amendment

The amendment made by section 205(a)(1) of the House amendment, which amended section 308(a)(6) of the Act, was essentially the same as the amendment made by section 208 of the Senate bill, with the following differences: (1) the amendment made by the Senate bill required the index to be published monthly, whereas the amendment made by the House amendment provided for publication at regular intervals; and (2) the amendment made by the Senate bill contained detailed requirements for identification of reports by the name of the candidate or committee, the dates of the reports, and the number of pages in the reports; these requirements were not specifically contained in the amendment made by the House amendment.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

B. SPECIAL REPORTS

Senate bill

No provision.

House amendment

Section 205(a)(1) of the House amendment amended section 308(a) of the Act, relating to duties of the supervisory officer, by inserting a new paragraph (7), which required the preparation of special reports listing candidates for whom reports were filed as required by title III of the Act and candidates for whom such reports were not filed as so required.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

C. ELIMINATION OF CERTAIN DUTIES

Senate bill

No provision.

House amendment

Section 205(a)(1) of the House amendment amended section 308(a) of the Act in order to eliminate the following duties of the supervisory officer: (1) the duty to compile and maintain a current list of statements relating to each candidate; (2) the duty to prepare and publish an annual report regarding contributions to and expenditures by candidates and political committees; (3) the duty to prepare special reports comparing totals and categories of contributions and expenditures; (4) the duty to prepare such other reports as the supervisory officer may deem appropriate; and (5) the duty to assure wide dissemination of statistics, summaries, and reports prepared under the Act.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.
D. ANNUAL REPORT FOR 1973

Senate bill
No provision.

House amendment
Section 205(a)(2) of the House amendment provided that the annual report which the supervisory officer is required to file under section 308(a)(7) of the Act (which is eliminated by the amendment made by section 205(a)) shall not be filed with respect to any calendar year beginning after December 31, 1972.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

E. REVIEW OF REGULATIONS

Senate bill
No provision.

House amendment
Section 205(b) of the House amendment amended section 308 of the Act by adding a new subsection (b), which required the supervisory officer, before prescribing any rule or regulation under section 308, to transmit a statement regarding such rule or regulation to the Senate or the House of Representatives, as the case may be. The new subsection (b) provided that such statement shall explain and justify the proposed rule or regulation.

Subsection (b) also provided that if the supervisory officer proposes to prescribe any rule or regulation with respect to candidates for the office of Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, he shall transmit such statement to the House of Representatives. If the supervisory officer proposes to prescribe any rule or regulation with respect to candidates for the office of Senator, he shall transmit such statement to the Senate. If the supervisory officer proposes to prescribe any rule or regulation with respect to candidates for the office of President, he shall transmit such statement to the Senate and to the House of Representatives.

If either House which receives a statement from the supervisory officer disapproves the proposed rule or regulation within 30 legislative days after it is received, then the supervisory officer may not prescribe such rule or regulation. In the case of a proposed rule or regulation with respect to candidates for the office of President, if only one of the two Houses disapproves the proposed rule or regulation, such disapproval by one House is sufficient to prevent prescription of the rule or regulation.

Subsection (b) also defined the term "legislative days". With respect to statements transmitted to the Senate, such term does not include any calendar day on which the Senate is not in session. With respect to statements transmitted to the House, such term does not include any calendar day on which the House is not in session. With respect to statements transmitted to both Houses, such term does not include any calendar day on which both Houses of the Congress are not in session.

It should be noted that it was the intent of the members of the House committee that the Senate and the House of Representatives, in reviewing proposed rules and regulations under section 308(b) of the Act and under sections 9009(c) and 9039(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as added by the House amendment, shall strive to achieve uniformity in such rules and regulations.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

F. CUSTODIAL RECEIPT OF REPORTS

Senate bill

No provision.

House amendment

Section 205(b) of the House amendment amended section 308 of the Act by inserting a new subsection (c). Such subsection provided that the supervisory officer shall prescribe rules to carry out title III of the Act, including rules to require that (1) reports required to be filed by candidates for the office of Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, shall be filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives as custodian for the Board of Supervisory Officers (hereinafter in this statement referred to as the “Board”); (2) reports required to be filed by candidates for the office of Senator shall be filed with the Secretary of the Senate as custodian for the Board; and (3) the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate shall be required to (A) make such reports available for public inspection; and (B) preserve such reports.

Subsection (c) also required the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate to cooperate with the Board in carrying out its duties under the Act.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

G. COOPERATION WITH STATE OFFICIALS

Senate bill

No provision.

House amendment

Section 205(b) of the House amendment amended section 308 of Act by striking out subsection (b), which required the supervisory officer to develop procedures in cooperation with State election officials to permit filing of Federal reports to comply with State requirements.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.
H. NATIONAL CLEARINGHOUSE

Senate bill
No provision.

House amendment
Section 205(b) of the House amendment amended section 308 of the Act by striking out subsection (c), which required the Comptroller General to serve as a national clearinghouse for information regarding the administration of elections.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill, which retained the clearinghouse function, but it is vested in the Commission.

Changes in Definitions

A. APPLICABILITY TO TITLE IV

Senate bill
No provision.

House amendment
Section 206(a) of the House amendment amended section 301 of the Act, relating to definitions, to provide that definitions contained in such section applied to title IV of the Act as well as to title III of the Act.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

B. ELECTION

Senate bill
Section 202(a)(1) of the Senate bill amended section 301(a) of the Act, relating to the definition of election, in the same manner that section 301(a) of the Senate bill amended section 301(a) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of election. The amendment made by section 202(a)(1) provided that such term does not include the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

House amendment
No provision.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill.

C. POLITICAL COMMITTEE

Senate bill
Section 202(a)(2) of the Senate bill amended section 301(d) of the Act, relating to the definition of political committee, in the same manner that section 301(b) of the Senate bill amended section 301(d) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of political committee. The amendment made by section 202(a)(2) provided that such term means (1) any committee or other group of persons which receives contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year exceeding $1,000; (2) any national committee, association, or organization of a political party, any State affiliate or subsidiary of a national political party, and any State committee of a political party, whether or not any such entity receives contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year exceeding $1,000; and (3) any committee, association, or organization administering a separate segregated fund described in section 610 of title 18, United States Code, relating to contributions or expenditures by national banks, corporations, or labor organizations.

House amendment

Section 206(b) of the House amendment amended section 301(d) of the Act, relating to the definition of political committee, in the same manner that section 102(a) of the House amendment amended section 591(d) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of political committee. This amendment extended the definition of political committee to include any individual, committee, association, or organization which commits any act for the purpose of influencing the outcome of any election for Federal office, except that communications which are excluded from the definition of expenditure under section 301(f)(4), as added by the House amendment, are excluded. Such communications included news stories and editorials distributed through the public media facilities (unless such facilities are owned or controlled by a political party or committee, or by a candidate), communications by a membership organization to its members (unless it is organized primarily for the purpose of influencing an election to Federal office), and any other communication which is not made for the purpose of influencing an election to Federal office.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute follows the provisions of the Senate bill generally. A provision of the House amendment extended the duty to register as a political committee to any person committing any act to influence the outcome of any election. This provision is recast as a new section 308 of the Act, which will require any organization which expends any funds or commits any act directed to the public for the purpose of influencing the outcome of an election, or which publishes or broadcasts to the public material intended to influence public opinion with respect to candidates for Federal office to register with the Commission as a political committee and report the source and amount of its funds and of its expenditures. Since these organizations use their resources for political purposes, often having a direct and substantial effect on the outcome of Federal elections, it would be inappropriate to permit these organizations to conceal the interests they represent solely because the organizations are able to avoid reporting and disclosure under the technical definitions of political committee, contribution, and expenditure. The conference substitute does not apply to individuals acting on their own behalf or to news stories, commentaries, and editorials published in bona fide newspapers, magazines, or other periodical publications.
D. CONTRIBUTION

Senate bill

Section 202(a)(3) through section 202(a)(6) of the Senate bill amended section 301(e) of the Act, relating to the definition of contribution, in the same manner that section 301(c) of the Senate bill amended section 301(e) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of contribution, except that the amendment made by section 202(a)(4) of the Senate bill provided that the term "contribution" shall not include payments made or obligations incurred by a corporation or labor organization which, under 610 of title 18, United States Code, would not constitute a contribution by such corporation or labor organization. The amendments made by section 202(a)(3) through section 202(a)(6) amended section 301(e) in the following ways: (1) to indicate that the term includes assessments, fees, or membership dues, connected with subscriptions; (2) to provide that such term does not apply to any transaction in connection with the election of delegates to a constitutional convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States: (3) to provide that such term applies to financing the operations of a political committee, and to the payment of any debt or obligation of a candidate or a political committee; (4) to eliminate the applicability of such term to contracts, promises, or agreements to make a contribution; and (5) to clarify that such term includes funds received by a political committee which are transferred to such committee from another political committee.

House amendment

Section 206(c) of the House amendment amended section 301(e)(5) of the Act, relating to an exception to the definition of contribution, in the same manner that section 102(b) of the House amendment amended section 301(e)(5) of title 18, United States Code, relating to an exception to the definition of contributions. Under this amendment, the following activities are not considered contributions: (1) the use of property by an individual who owns or leases such property with respect to the rendering of voluntary services by such individual on his residential premises for candidate-related activities, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages, to the extent that the cumulative value of such use does not exceed $500; (2) the sale of food or beverages by a vendor to a candidate at a reduced charge if such charge is at least equal to the cost of such food or beverage to the vendor, to the extent that such accumulated charges do not exceed $500; (3) the travel expenses of an individual rendering voluntary services to a candidate, to the extent that the cumulative total of such expenses does not exceed $500; and (4) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation or distribution of any printed slate card or other printed listing of 3 or more candidates for public office who are candidates in the State in which such committee is located, but this exclusion does not apply to payment of costs for the display of any such printed listing through public media facilities (other than newspapers) or on outdoor advertising facilities such as billboards.
Conference substitute

The conference substitute follows the provisions of the Senate bill generally except that the provisions including membership fees and payments to finance the operations of a political committee or pay the debts of a committee or candidate are omitted and the provisions of the House amendment relating to exceptions from the definition of contribution are included.

E. EXPENDITURE

Senate bill

Section 202(a)(7) of the Senate bill amended section 301(f) of the Act, relating to the definition of expenditure, in the same manner that section 301(d) of the Senate bill amended section 591(f) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of expenditure, with the following differences: (1) the amendment made by section 202(a)(7) of the Senate bill did not exclude loans of money by a national or State bank from the definition of expenditure; and (2) the amendment made by section 202(a)(7) of the Senate bill did exclude from the definition of expenditure payments made or obligations incurred by a corporation or labor organization which, under section 610 of title 18, United States Code, would not constitute an expenditure by such corporation or labor organization. The amendment made by section 202(a)(7) provided that such term means (1) a purchase, loan, or other described payment of money or anything of value made for the purpose of (A) influencing the nomination for election, or election, of any person to Federal office; (B) influencing the result of a Presidential primary election; (C) financing a political committee; or (D) paying any debt or obligation of a candidate or a political committee; and (2) the transfer of funds by a political committee to another political committee.

The amendment made by section 202(a)(7) of the Senate bill provided that the term “expenditure” does not include the value of services rendered by volunteer workers on behalf of a candidate.

House amendment

Section 206(d) of the House amendment amended section 301(f) of the Act, relating to the definition of expenditure, in the same manner that section 102(c) of the House amendment amended section 591(f) of title 18, United States Code, relating to the definition of expenditure, except that the amendment made by this section did not establish an exception for costs incurred by a candidate or political committee with respect to the solicitation of contributions by the candidate or political committee. Under this amendment, the following activities are not considered expenditures: (1) any news story, commentary, or editorial distributed through the facilities of any broadcasting station, newspaper, or periodical publication (unless such facilities are owned or controlled by a political party or committee, or by a candidate); (2) nonpartisan get-out-the-vote activity; (3) communications by a membership organization to its members (unless it is organized primarily for the purpose of influencing an election to Federal office); (4) the use of property by an individual who owns or leases such property with respect to the rendering of voluntary services by such individual on his residential premises for candidate-related activities, including the cost of invitations and food and beverages, to the extent that the cumulative value of such use does not exceed $500; (5) the travel expenses of an individual rendering voluntary services to a candidate, to the extent that the cumulative total of such expenses does not exceed $500; (6) communications which are not made to influence the outcome of elections for Federal office; (7) the payment by a State or local committee of a political party of the costs of preparation or distribution of any printed slate card or other printed listing of 3 or more candidates for public office who are candidates in the State in which such committee is located, but this exclusion does not apply to payment of costs for the display of any such printed listing through public media facilities (other than newspapers) or on outdoor advertising facilities such as billboards; (8) the costs of a candidate (including his principal campaign committee) with respect to his solicitation of contributions, except that this exception does not apply to costs which exceed 25 percent of the expenditure limitation applicable to such candidate under section 608(c) of title 18, as added by the House amendment; and (9) any costs incurred by a multi-candidate committee which has been registered under the Act as a political committee for at least 6 months, has received contributions from at least 50 persons, and (except for State political party organizations) has made contributions to at least 5 candidates, in connection with soliciting contributions to itself or to a general political fund controlled by it, but this exclusion does not exempt costs of soliciting contributions through any public media facilities.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute follows the provisions of the Senate bill generally except that it omits payments to finance a political committee or pay debts of a committee or candidate and includes the exemptions of the House amendment with a modification. Although the definition of expenditure contained in section 591 of title 18, United States Code, as amended by this legislation, contains an exception for certain amounts spent solely in connection with fund raising activities, that exception is not contained in the definition of expenditure which relates to reporting and disclosure. Under the conference substitute a candidate or political committee must report all expenditures to the Commission but, to the extent provided in section 591(f) of title 18, United States Code, those expenditures used in raising funds are not counted against expenditure limits contained in that title. Nothing in this provision of the conference substitute is intended to require multi-candidate committees to allocate among candidates amounts spent for fund raising activities, or to relieve such committees of reporting the expenditure of such amounts.

They serve for terms of 4 years, except that one of the members first appointed by the President of the Senate will be appointed for a term of 1 year and one will be appointed for a term of 3 years, and one of the members first appointed by the Speaker of the House will be appointed for a term of 2 years.

Section 308 also provided that the Board shall supervise administration of, seek to obtain compliance with, and formulate overall policy concerning, title I of the Act, title III of the Act, and sections 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, and 616 of title 18, United States Code. Of the other members, 2 are appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, 2 are appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and 2 are appointed by the President. All 6 are subject to confirmation by both Houses of the Congress. The appointed members serve terms of 6 years each. The terms are staggered so that one member's term expires on April 30 of each year. The 2 members appointed by each appointing officer may not be affiliated with the same political party.

The Commission elects a chairman and vice chairman from among its members for terms of 1 year each on a rotating basis. At least 30 percent of such personnel shall be selected as follows: (1) one-half recommended by the minority leader of the Senate; and (2) one-half recommended by the minority leader of the House of Representatives. F. INVESTIGATIONS AND HEARINGS

Section 309(d) of the Act, as added by section 207(a) of the Senate bill, provided that the Commission shall be the primary civil and criminal enforcement agency for violation of the provisions of the Act and sections 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, and 618 of title 18, United States Code. Violations of any such provision shall be prosecuted by the Attorney General or personnel of the Department of Justice only after the Commission is consulted and consents to such prosecution.

Section 309(e) of the Act established procedures for the imposition of civil penalties. The Commission shall have the power to assess a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 against any person who violates the Act or section 602, 608, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, or 618 of title 18, United States Code. Such penalty may be assessed only after the person involved is given an opportunity for a hearing and the Commission has determined, through a decision which incorporates findings of fact, that a violation did occur.

Section 309(e) also provided that, if a person fails to pay a civil penalty, the Commission shall file a petition for enforcement in any appropriate district court of the United States. The district court may determine de novo all questions of law, but the findings of fact made by the Commission shall be conclusive, to the extent they are supported by substantial evidence.
House amendment

Section 207(b)(1) of the House amendment amended section 311(c) of the Act (as so redesignated by section 207(a)(1)), relating to duties of the supervisory officer, by striking out paragraph (1) and inserting a new paragraph (1). The new paragraph (1) provided that if any person who believes a violation of title I of the Act, title III of the Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, has occurred may file a complaint with the Board. If the Clerk of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Senate, or any other person receiving reports and statements as custodian for the Board, has reason to believe that any such violation has occurred, then he shall refer such apparent violation to the Board.

Paragraph (1) also provided that if the Board receives a complaint or referral, or if the Board has reason to believe that any person has committed a violation, then the Board shall notify the person involved and shall either report the apparent violation to the Attorney General of the United States or make an investigation of the apparent violation. If the complainant involved is a candidate for Federal office, then any investigation conducted by the Board shall include an investigation of reports and statements filed by the complainant. The Board may not disclose any notification or investigation unless it receives written permission to do so by the person notified or under investigation. Such person also may request the Board to conduct a hearing regarding the apparent violation.

Paragraph (1) also provided that the Board seek to correct apparent violations through informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and that the Board must refer apparent violations to law enforcement authorities if the Board considers it appropriate or if the Board fails to correct the violations.

Paragraph (1) also provided that if the Board concludes, after affording notice and opportunity for a hearing, that a person has committed or is about to commit any violation of title I of the Act, title III of the Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, then the Attorney General shall bring a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute generally follows the provisions of the House amendment with two modifications. First, the Commission is given power to bring civil actions in Federal district courts to enforce the provisions of the Act where its informal methods of obtaining compliance fail to correct violations. Second, the Commission is given primary jurisdiction for the enforcement of the provisions of the Act. Thus, any person must exhaust his administrative remedies with respect to violations under this Act. The primary jurisdiction of the Commission to enforce the provisions of the Act is not intended to interfere in any way with the activities of the Attorney General or Department of Justice personnel in performing their duties under the laws of the United States.

The district court was required to certify all questions of constitutionality to the United States court of appeals for the circuit involved, which was required to hear the matter sitting en banc.

Section 407 also provided that any decision on a matter certified to a circuit court shall be reviewable by appeal directly to the Supreme Court of the United States. Such appeal must be brought within 20 days after the decision of the court of appeals. The court of appeals and the Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of any matter certified to the circuit court.

House amendment

The amendment made by section 207(c) of the House amendment was the same as the amendment made by section 214 of the Senate bill, with the following differences: (1) the amendment made by the House amendment was to title III of the Act, inserting a new section 315; and (2) section 315 was made applicable to sections 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, and 616 of title 18, United States Code, and not to chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code.

Senate bill
Section 320 of the Act, as added by section 212 of the Senate bill, authorized to be appropriated to the Commission for the purposes of carrying out its functions under title III of the Act, title V of the Act (as added by the Senate bill), and chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, not to exceed $5,000,000 for fiscal year 1974, and not to exceed $5,000,000 for each fiscal year thereafter.

House amendment
Section 316 of the Act, as added by section 207(c) of the House amendment, provided that, notwithstanding any other provision of law, such sums as may be necessary may be appropriated to the Board to enable the Board to carry out its duties under the Act.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute authorizes an appropriation of $5,000,000 for fiscal year 1975.

Penalties

Senate bill
Section 212 of the Senate bill amended title III of the Act by striking out section 311, relating to penalty for violations, and by inserting a new section 321, relating to penalty for violations.

Section 321(a) provided that violation of any provision of title III of the Act is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not more than $10,000, imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

Section 321(b) provided that violation of any such provision with knowledge or reason to know that the act committed or omitted is a violation of title III of the Act is punishable by a fine of not more than $100,000, imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

House amendment
No provision.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute omits the provisions of the Senate bill, but like the House amendment retains the penalty contained in existing law.
Advisory Opinions

Senate bill

Section 309(f) of the Act, as added by section 207(a) of the Senate bill, provided that, upon application by any individual holding Federal office, any candidate, or any political committee, the Commission shall provide an advisory opinion, within a reasonable time, with respect to whether a transaction or activity may constitute a violation of any provision of the Act or of title 18, United States Code, over which the Commission has primary jurisdiction.

House amendment

Section 208 of the House amendment amended title III of the Act by inserting a new section 313, relating to advisory opinions. The new section 313 provided for the rendering of advisory opinions by the Board. Section 313 provided that if an individual holding Federal office, a candidate, or a political committee, makes a written request to the Board, then the Board shall render a written advisory opinion regarding whether any activity of the individual, candidate, or political committee would constitute a violation of title I of the Act, title III of the Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code.

The new section 313 also provided that if a person acts in good faith in compliance with an advisory opinion rendered at his request, then the person shall be presumed to be in compliance with the statutory provision regarding which the advisory opinion is rendered. Section 313 also provided that any request for an advisory opinion shall be made public by the Board. The Board was required to provide interested parties with an opportunity to furnish written comments to the Board concerning any request before the Board renders an advisory opinion regarding the request.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except that it is extended to Commission functions under chapters 95 and 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

General Provisions

Effect on State Law

Senate bill

Section 213 of the Senate bill amended section 403 of the Act, relating to effect on State law, to provide that the provisions of the Act preempt any provision of State law with respect to campaigns for election to Federal office.

House amendment

Section 301 of the House amendment amended section 403 of the Act, relating to effect on State law, in essentially the same manner as the amendment made by section 213 of the Senate bill.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute follows the House amendment. It is clear that the Federal law occupies the field with respect to reporting and disclosure of political contributions to and expenditures by Federal candidates and political committees, but does not affect State laws as to the manner of qualifying as a candidate, or the dates and places of elections.

Period of Limitations

Senate bill

No provision.

House amendment

Section 406 of the Act, as added by section 302 of the House amendment, provided that no criminal action may be brought against a person for violation of title I of the Act, title III of the Act, or section 608, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, or 616 of title 18, United States Code, unless such action is brought before the expiration of 3 years after the date of such violation. Under existing law the period of limitations is 5 years.

Section 406 also provided that (1) the new period of limitations shall apply to violations committed before, on, or after the effective date of such section; (2) no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any violation of title I of the Act, title III of the Act, or section 608, 610, 611, or 613 of title 18, United States Code, as in effect on the day before the effective date of this legislation, if the act or omission constituting such violation does not constitute a violation of any such provision as amended by this legislation; and (3) section 406 shall not affect any proceeding pending in any court of the United States on the effective date of section 406.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is generally the same as the House amendment, but it provides that no criminal proceedings are to be instituted after December 31, 1974, for violations of the old law which do not constitute violations of the law as amended by the conference substitute.

Enforcement

Senate bill

No provision.

House amendment

Section 407 of the Act, as added by section 302 of the House amendment, provided that if the Board finds, after notice and opportunity for a hearing on the record, that a candidate failed to file a report required by title III of the Act, then the candidate shall be disqualified from becoming a candidate in any future Federal election for a period beginning on the date of the finding and ending one year after the expiration of the term of the Federal office for which the person was a candidate. Any such finding would be reviewable by the courts under chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, in the same manner as in the case of any other final agency action under the administrative procedure provisions of title 5 of the United State Code.

It was the intent of the members of the House committee that the enforcement mechanism of section 407 shall not be applied in any case in which the candidate involved demonstrates that he did not receive timely notice from the Board advising him of an approaching filing date regarding reports he is required to file under title III of the Act.
Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

AMENDMENTS TO OTHER LAWS; EFFECTIVE DATES

Political Activities by State and Local Officers and Employees

Senate bill
No provision.

House amendment
Section 401 of the House amendment amended section 1502 of title 5, United States Code (relating to influencing elections; taking part in political campaigns; prohibitions; exceptions) to provide that State and local officers and employees may take an active part in political management and in political campaigns, except that they may not be candidates for elective office.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment. It is the intent of the conferees that any State law regulating the political activities of State and local officers and employees is not preempted or superseded by the amendments to title 5, United States Code, made by this legislation.

Campaign Communications

A. Repeal of Certain Provisions

Senate bill
Section 201(e) of the Senate bill repealed title I of the Act relating to campaign communications.

House amendment
Section 402 of the House amendment amended title I of the Act, relating to campaign communications, by striking out section 104, relating to limitations of expenditures for use of communications media.

Under the amendment made by this section, a candidate is no longer restricted with respect to expenditures for use of communications media. The House amendment, however, established overall limitations on campaign expenditures, but left the candidate free to decide the purpose for which such expenditures will be made. The House committee also noted that, on November 14, 1973, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia decided, in the case of American Civil Liberties Union v. Jennings (366 F. 2d 1043), that the requirement of section 104(b) of the Act that a candidate certify that certain media advertising (newspapers, magazines, and billboards) did not violate the expenditure limitations repealed by this section was an unconstitutional prior restraint upon publication in violation of First Amendment rights.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the Senate bill.
B. AVAILABILITY OF BROADCAST FACILITIES

Senate bill

Section 201(a) of the Senate bill amended section 315(a) of the Communications Act of 1934, relating to facilities for candidates for public office, by inserting a new paragraph (2) and paragraph (3).

Paragraph (2) provided that a licensee may meet the equal broadcast time requirements of section 315(a) with respect to a candidate seeking equal broadcast time if (1) the licensee makes available without charge to such candidate at least 5 minutes of broadcast time; (2) the licensee notifies such candidate of the availability of such time at least 15 days before the election involved; and (3) the broadcast will cover, in whole or in part, the geographical area in which such election is held.

Paragraph (3) provided that a candidate could not make use of broadcast time offered to him under paragraph (2) unless he notified the licensee of his acceptance within 48 hours after receipt of the offer.

House amendment

No provision.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute omits the provisions of the Senate bill.

C. CHARGES FOR USE OF FACILITIES

Senate bill

Section 201(b) of the Senate bill amended section 315(b) of the Communications Act of 1934, relating to facilities for candidates for public office, to provide that rules established by section 315(b) governing charges made by broadcasting stations shall apply whether the candidate himself uses the facilities of the station, or such facilities are used by other persons on behalf of the candidate.

House amendment

No provision.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute omits the provisions of the Senate bill.

D. EXPENDITURE CERTIFICATIONS

Senate bill

Section 201(c)(1) of the Senate bill amended section 315(c) of the Communications Act of 1934, relating to facilities for candidates for public office, to provide that the expenditure limitations applicable to such subsection shall be those in effect under section 504 of the Act, as added by the Senate bill, or under section 614 of title 18, United States Code, as added by the Senate bill.

Section 201(c)(2) of the Senate bill amended section 315(d) of such Act to provide that if a State imposes an expenditure limitation with respect to candidates for public office (other than Federal office), then a station licensee may not make a charge for the use of his facilities by or on behalf of any such candidate unless such candidate certifies to such station licensee that payment of the charge will not violate the expenditure limitation established by the State.

House amendment

Section 402(c) of the House amendment amended section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934, relating to facilities for candidates for public office, by striking out subsections (c), (d), and (e). The effect of the amendment was to eliminate the requirement that licensees of broadcasting stations obtain certification from a candidate that his purchase of air time on the station involved does not exceed his expenditure limitations under title I of the Act or under any provision of State law.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

E. POLITICAL ADVERTISEMENTS ON RADIO

Senate bill

Section 201(d) of the Senate bill amended section 317 of the Communications Act of 1934, relating to announcement of payment for broadcast, to provide that (1) a political broadcast soliciting funds shall include an announcement (the time for which shall be made available without charge by the licensee) that reports of the candidate involved filed with the Commission are available from the Commission; and (2) station licensees shall maintain records of political advertisements which are broadcast by such licensees.

House amendment

No provision.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute omits the provisions of the Senate bill.

AUTOMATIC TRANSFERS TO CAMPAIGN FUND

Senate bill

No provision.

House amendment

Section 403 of the House amendment amended section 9096(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (hereinafter in this statement referred to as the “Code”), relating to establishment of campaign fund, to provide that the Secretary of the Treasury (hereinafter in this statement referred to as the “Secretary”) shall automatically transfer to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund, out of amounts in the general fund of the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to amounts designated under section 6096 of the Code, relating to designation of income tax payments to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

The conference substitute also provides that there is appropriated to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund all amounts designated by taxpayers for payment under section 6096 of the Code, relating to designation by individuals to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund, before January 1, 1975, to the extent that such amounts are not otherwise taken into account under the provisions of section 9006 of the Code, relating to payments to eligible candidates, as amended by this legislation.

ENTITLEMENT TO PAYMENTS FROM PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN FUND

Senate bill
No provision.

House amendment
Section 404 of the House amendment amended section 9004(a)(1) of the Code, relating to entitlement of eligible candidates to payments, to provide that eligible candidates of each major party in a Presidential election shall be entitled to equal payments in an amount not to exceed $20,000,000. The amendment eliminated the formula under which candidates of a major party would receive 15 cents multiplied by the number of residents of the United States who are 18 years of age or older.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

DEFINITION OF AUTHORIZED COMMITTEE

Senate bill
No provision.

House amendment
Section 404(c) of the House amendment amended section 9002(1) of the Code, relating to the definition of “authorized committee”, to provide that such term means, with respect to candidates for President or Vice President, the political committee designated under section 302(f)(1) of the Act, as added by the House amendment, by the candidate for President as his principal campaign committee. Section 404(c) also contained technical conforming amendments to various sections of the Code made necessary by the change made to the definition of “authorized committee”.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute omits the provisions of the House amendment. This omission conforms with the decision of the conferees to permit authorized committees, as well as the principal campaign committee, to make expenditures on behalf of a candidate.

The conference substitute also amends section 9002(3) of the Code, relating to the definition of “Comptroller General”, by eliminating such definition and inserting a new definition, relating to the Federal Election Commission established by section 310(a)(1) of the Act, as amended by this legislation. The conference substitute also contains technical conforming amendments to various sections of the Code made necessary by the decision of the conferees to substitute the Commission for the Comptroller General with respect to administration of the Code political financing provisions.
The conference substitute also repeals chapter 96 of the Code, relating to Presidential Election Campaign Fund Advisory Board. It is the opinion of the conferees that the Commission will be in a position to perform those functions which were assigned to such Board under chapter 96.

Certification for Payment by Commission

Senate bill

No provision.

House amendment

Section 405 of the House amendment amended section 9005(a) of the Code, relating to initial certifications for eligibility for payments, to provide that, not later than 10 days after candidates of a political party have established their eligibility to receive payments, the Comptroller General shall certify to the Secretary payment in full of the candidates' entitlements. The amendment, together with the amendment made by section 406(a) of the House amendment, eliminated the procedure under which candidates were required to submit records of expenses and proposed expenses in order to obtain certification from the Comptroller General for payments. Section 406(a) of the House amendment amended chapter 95 of subtitle H of the Code, relating to the Presidential election campaign fund, by striking out section 9008, relating to information on proposed expenses.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except that the conference substitute eliminates the role of the Comptroller General and substitutes the Commission.

Financing of Presidential Nominating Conventions

Senate bill

No provision.

House amendment

Section 406(a) of the House amendment amended chapter 95 of subtitle H of the Code, relating to the Presidential election campaign fund, by inserting a new section 9008, relating to payments for Presidential nominating conventions.

A. Establishment of accounts.--Section 9008(a) provided that the Secretary shall maintain in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund a separate account for the national committee of a major political party or a minor political party. The Secretary shall deposit in each account each national committee's entitlement under section 9008. These deposits shall be drawn from amounts designated under section 6096 of the Code, relating to designation of income tax payments to the Presidential election campaign fund, and the deposits shall be made before any transfer of funds to the account of any eligible candidate under section 9006(a) of the Code, relating to establishment of campaign fund.
B. Entitlement to payments.—Section 9008(b) provided that the national committee of a major party is entitled to payments not to exceed $2,000,000. The national committee of a minor party is entitled to payments not to exceed an amount which bears the same ratio to the entitlement of the national committee of a major party as the number of votes received by the candidate for President of the minor party in the preceding Presidential election bears to the average number of votes received by candidates for President of the major parties in the election. The national committee of a minor party could use additional private funds in the operation of a Presidential nominating convention, but only to the extent that the total expenditure (counting both public and private funds) does not exceed $2,000,000. A major party electing to receive its $2,000,000 entitlement could not use any additional private funds. The only exception to the $2,000,000 limitation would be an instance in which the Presidential Election Campaign Advisory Board permitted the expenditure of private funds under section 9008(d).

C. Use of funds.—Section 9008(c) provided that no part of payments made under section 9008 may be used to defray expenses of any candidate or delegate participating in any Presidential nominating convention. The payments are to be used only to (1) defray expenses incurred with respect to a Presidential nominating convention (including payment of deposits) by the national committee; or (2) repay loans which were used to defray such expenses.

D. Limitation of expenditures.—Section 9008(d) provided that the national committee of a major party or a minor party may not make expenditures which exceed the amount of the entitlement of the national committee of a major party under section 9008. Notwithstanding this limitation, the national committee of a major party or minor party may make expenditures from private sources in excess of this limitation if such expenditures are authorized by the Presidential Election Campaign Advisory Board. Before making any authorization, such Board shall determine that extraordinary and unforeseen circumstances have made necessary such expenditures to assure effective operation of the Presidential nominating convention. It was the intent of the House committee that such Board shall make authorizations only in cases in which events of a catastrophic nature overwhelmingly imperil the operation of a Presidential nominating convention.

E. Other provisions.—
1. Payments to the national committee of major parties and minor parties under section 9008 may be made beginning on July 1 of the calendar year before the calendar year in which the Presidential nominating convention is held.
2. If, after each national committee has been paid the amount to which it is entitled, there are moneys remaining in national committee accounts, then such moneys shall be transferred to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund.
3. In order to qualify for payments, any major party or minor party may file a statement with the Comptroller General designating the national committee of the party. After the Comptroller General verifies the statement he shall certify to the Secretary payment in full of the entitlement of the national committee. Payments shall be subject to examination and audit, which the Comptroller General shall conduct before the close of the calendar year in which the nominating convention is held.

4. The Comptroller General may require repayments from the national committee of a major party or minor party in the same manner as he may require repayments from candidates under section 9007(b) of the Code, relating to repayments.

F. Conforming amendments.—Section 406(b) of the House amendment amended section 9009(a) of the Code, relating to reports, to require that reports of the Comptroller General include the following information: (1) expenses incurred by the national committee of a major party or minor party with respect to a Presidential nominating convention; (2) amounts certified by the Comptroller General for payment to such national committees; and (3) the amount of repayments required from such national committees, and the reason for any repayments.

Section 406(b) also amended section 9012(a)(1) of the Code, relating to excess campaign expenses, to make it unlawful for the national committee of a major party or minor party to incur convention expenses in excess of the applicable expenditure limitation, unless such expenses are authorized by the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Advisory Board.

Section 406(b) also amended section 9012(c) of the Code, relating to unlawful use of payments, to make it unlawful for the national committee of a major party or minor party to use payments for any purpose which is not authorized by section 9008(c), relating to use of funds.

Section 406(b) also amended section 9012(e)(1) of the Code, relating to kickbacks and illegal payments, to make it unlawful for the national committee of a major party or minor party to give or accept any kickback or other illegal payment in connection with any convention expense incurred by such national committee.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except for the following changes:

1. The conference substitute eliminates the role of the Comptroller General and the Presidential Election Advisory Board, and substitutes the Commission.

2. The conference substitute provides that the $2,000,000 payments limit and expenditure limit shall be subject to cost-of-living adjustments in the same manner as the expenditure limitations contained in title 18, United States Code, as amended by this legislation.

Participation in the convention financing program of this legislation is optional. The provisions of this legislation do not require the national committee of a major party or a minor party to seek to qualify for payments.

If the national committee of a major party chooses to participate and qualifies for payments, it will be limited to payments aggregating $2,000,000. If such national committee chooses not to participate in the financing program, it still will be subject to the $2,000,000 spending limitation.

If the national committee of a minor party chooses to participate and qualifies for payments, it will be entitled to payments in amounts based on the voting strength of the minor party. If the national committee of a minor party participates in the financing program, it still could use additional private funds in the operation of a Presidential nominating convention, but only to the extent that the total expenditure (counting both public and private funds) does not exceed $2,000,000.

If the national committee of a minor party chooses not to participate in the financing program, it still will be subject to the $2,000,000 spending limitation.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

candidates of major parties in general election campaigns, with proportionate amounts available to all candidates of minor parties and other parties.

House amendment

Section 408 of the House amendment amended subtitle B of the Code by inserting a new chapter 97, relating to Presidential primary matching payment account. Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, with the following changes:

1. The conference substitute defines the term “authorized committee” to mean any political committee authorized in writing by candidates for the office of President or Vice President to make expenditures on behalf of such candidates. The conference substitute requires such authorization to be addressed to the chairman of such political committee, with a copy filed with the Commission. Any withdrawal of such authorization also must be in writing, addressed to the chairman, and filed with the Commission.

   This change conforms with the decision of the conferees to permit authorized committees, as well as the principal campaign committee, to make expenditures on behalf of a candidate.

2. The conference substitute omits the definition of “Comptroller General” and inserts a definition of the Federal Election Commission.
established by section 310(a)(1) of the Act, as amended by this legislation. This change conforms with the decision of the conferees to substitute the Commission for the Comptroller General with respect to administration of the Code political financing provisions.

3. Senate bill

Section 503 (a) of the Act, relating to entitlement to payments, as added by section 101 of the Senate bill, provided that every eligible candidate is entitled to payments in connection with his primary election campaign in an amount equal to the amount of contributions received by such candidate, except that no contributions in the form of subscriptions, loans, advances, deposits, products, or services, shall be taken into account.

Section 503(b)(1) provided that every eligible candidate nominated by a major party is entitled to receive payments for use in connection with his general election campaign in an amount equal to the amount of expenditures such candidate may make in connection with such campaign under section 504 of the Act, relating to expenditure limitations, as added by the Senate bill.

Section 503(b)(2) provided that every eligible candidate nominated by a minor party is entitled to receive payments for use in connection with his general election campaign in an amount equal to the greater of (1) an amount having the same ratio to the amount of payments to which a major party candidate is entitled as the total number of votes received by the candidate of such minor party in the preceding general election bears to the average number of votes received by major party candidates in such election; or (2) an amount having the same ratio to the amount of payments to which a major party candidate is entitled as the total number of votes received by such eligible candidate (other than votes he received as the candidate of a major party) in the preceding general election bears to the average number of votes received by major party candidates in such election.

Section 503(b)(3) provided that candidates, other than major party or minor party candidates, eligible under section 502(d)(2) of the Act, relating to eligibility for payments, as added by the Senate bill, shall receive payments in amounts determined as follows: if any such candidate received, in the preceding general election for the Federal office involved, 5 percent or more of the total number of votes cast, he is entitled to receive payments for use in his general election campaign in an amount (not in excess of the applicable expenditure limitation under section 504 of the Act, relating to expenditure limitations, as added by the Senate bill) equal to an amount having the same ratio to the amount of payments to which a major party candidate is entitled as the total number of votes received by such eligible candidate in the preceding general election for the Federal office involved bears to the average number of votes received by major party candidates in such election. Section 503(b)(3) also provided that the foregoing formula shall not apply in determining the entitlement of any candidate who was the candidate of a major party or minor party in the preceding general election for the Federal office involved.

Section 503(b)(4) provided that an eligible candidate nominated by a minor party or whose entitlement is determined under section 502(d)(2) of the Act, relating to eligibility for payments, as added by the Senate bill, and who receives at least 5 percent of the total number of votes in the current election, is entitled to payments under section 506 of the Act, relating to payments to eligible candidates, as added by the Senate bill, for expenditures made or incurred in connection with his general election campaign in an amount (not in excess of the applicable expenditure limitation under section 504 of the Act, relating to expenditure limitations, as added by the Senate bill) equal Section 503(c) provided that no candidate is entitled to payments in excess of the expenditure limitation applicable to him for the election campaign involved under section 504 of the Act, relating to expenditure limitations, as added by the Senate bill.

House amendment

Contributions from any one person will qualify for matching only to the extent that such contributions do not aggregate more than $250.

For purposes of section 9033(b) of the Code (relating to expense limitation; declaration of intent; minimum contributions), as added by the House amendment, and section 9034(a), the term "contribution" was defined to mean a gift of money made by a written instrument which identifies the person making the contribution. Such term did not include a subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything described in section 9032(4)(B), (C), or (D) of the Code, relating to the definition of contribution, as added by the House amendment.

Section 9034(b) provided that payments under section 9034(a) may not exceed 50 percent of the expenditure limitation for Presidential primaries established by section 608(c)(1)(A) of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures, as added by the House amendment.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

With respect to candidates who elect to receive matching payments, all contributions (including those needed to meet the threshold requirements of $5,000 in each of 20 States) received on or after January 1 of the year preceding the year in which the Presidential election is held will be matched with payments from check-off funds under the financing program. A candidate may not receive matching payments for any contributions not raised on or after January 1 of the year preceding the year in which the Presidential election is held, and such contributions may not be applied by such candidate to meet threshold requirements.

F. LIMITATION ON QUALIFIED CAMPAIGN EXPENSES

Senate bill
No provision.

House amendment

Section 9035 of the Code, as added by section 408(c) of the House amendment, prohibited any candidate from incurring qualified campaign expenses in excess of the expenditure limitation for Presidential primaries established by section 608(c)(1)(A) of title 18, United States Code, relating to limitations on contributions and expenditures, as added by the House amendment.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

G. CERTIFICATION PROCEDURES

Senate bill

Section 505 of the Act, as added by section 101 of the Senate bill, provided that the Commission, on the basis of records furnished by each eligible candidate and before an examination and audit conducted by the Commission, shall certify from time to time to the Secretary for payment to each candidate the amount to which such candidate is entitled.

Section 505 also provided that certifications and all determinations made by the Commission under title V of the Act shall be final, except to the extent they are subject to examination and audit by the Commission and to judicial review under section 313 of the Act, as added by the Senate bill.

House amendment

Section 9036(a) of the Code, as added by section 408(c) of the House amendment, provided that, not later than 10 days after a candidate establishes his eligibility for payments, the Comptroller General shall certify to the Secretary payment in full to the candidate of amounts to which he is entitled.

Section 9036(b) provided that such certification and all determinations of the Comptroller General under chapter 97 of the Code are final and conclusive, except to the extent they are subject to examination and audit by the Comptroller General and to judicial review.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except that the conference substitute eliminates the role of the Comptroller General and substitutes the Commission.

The conference substitute provides that the Commission shall make such additional certifications as may be necessary to assure that candidates will receive payments for matchable contributions under section 9037 of the Code.
H. PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES

Senate bill

Section 506(a) of the Act, as added by section 101 of the Senate bill, established within the Treasury of the United States a fund to be known as the Federal Election Campaign Fund. Section 503(a) also authorized the appropriation of funds in amounts equal to amounts designated under section 6096 of the Code, relating to designation by individuals of income tax payments to Presidential Election Campaign Fund, not previously taken into account for purposes of section 506 (a), together with such additional funds as may be necessary to carry out title V of the Act.

Section 506(b) provided that the Secretary shall, upon receipt of certification from the Commission, pay the amount certified to the candidate involved.

Section 506(c) (1) provided that, if the Secretary determines that amounts in such Fund are not sufficient to pay entitlements of all candidates, then he shall reduce the amount to which each candidate is entitled by a percentage equal to the percentage obtained by dividing (1) the amount of moneys in such Fund at the time of such determination by (2) the total amount which all eligible candidates are entitled to receive. The Secretary was required to make further reductions if additional candidates become eligible after such determination.

Section 506(c) (2) provided that if, as a result of reductions in the amount of entitlement, a candidate has received payments in excess of his entitlement, then such candidate is liable for repayment to such Fund of the amount of such excess.

Section 506(d) provided that no payment shall be made under title V of the Act to any candidate in connection with any election held before January 1, 1976.

House amendment

Section 9037(a) of the Code, as added by section 408(c) of the House amendment, required the Secretary to establish in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund a separate account to be known as the Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account (hereinafter in this statement referred to as the "matching payment account"). The Secretary was required to deposit into the matching payment account, for use by eligible candidates, amounts available after the Secretary determines that amounts for payments to candidates in the general election for the office of President and amounts for payments to national committees of major parties and minor parties for Presidential nominating conventions, are available for such payments.

Section 9037 (b) required the Secretary to transfer certified amounts to candidates during the matching payment period. In making transfers to candidates of the same political party, the Secretary was required to seek an equitable distribution of funds, taking into account the sequence in which certifications are received. Transfers to candidates of the same political party may not exceed 45 percent of the total amount available in the matching payment account, and transfers to any candidate may not exceed 25 percent of the total amount available in the matching payment account.
Conference substitute

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except that the percentage limitations on transfers to candidates and political parties are omitted.

I. EXAMINATION AND AUDITS; REPAYMENTS

Senate bill

Section 507(a) of the Act, as added by section 101 of the Senate bill, required the Commission to conduct an examination and audit of the campaign expenditures of every candidate receiving payments under title V of the Act after each Federal election.

Section 507(b)(1) provided that if the Commission determines that a candidate received payments in excess of his entitlement, then the candidate shall be required to repay the excess amount. Section 507(b)(1) also provided that if the Commission determines that payments made to a candidate were not used to make expenditures in connection with the election campaign of such candidate, such candidate shall be required to pay an amount equal to the unexpended portion of such payments to the Secretary. The Commission, in making such determination, was required to consider amounts received as contributions to have been expended before any amounts received under title V of the Act are expended.

Section 507(b)(2) provided that if the Commission determines that a candidate has used payments for any purpose other than to defray campaign expenses or to repay loans or restore funds which were used to defray campaign expenses, then the candidate shall be required to repay the amount involved.

Section 507(b)(3) provided that no payments shall be required from a candidate under section 507(b) in excess of payments received by such candidate under section 506 of the Act, relating to payments to eligible candidates, as added by the Senate bill.

Section 507(c) provided that the Commission may not make a notification of a required repayment by a candidate with respect to any election campaign more than 18 months after the day of the election involved.

Section 507(d) required the Secretary to deposit repayments received by him under section 507(b) in such Fund.

House amendment

Section 9038 of the Code, as added by section 408(c) of the House amendment, was the same as section 507 of the Act, as added by the Senate bill, with the following differences:

1. The responsibility for administering section 9038 was given to the Comptroller General, and not to the Commission.

2. The Comptroller General was required to conduct examinations and audits at the end of each matching payment period, and not after each Federal election.

3. Section 9038(a) specifically required examinations and audits of the authorized committee of each candidate, together with examinations and audits of each candidate.
4. With respect to the repayment by candidates of unexpended portions of payments, section 9038(b)(3) provided that payments to a candidate from the matching payment account may be retained to pay qualified campaign expenses for a period not exceeding 6 months after the close of the matching payment period. After a candidate has liquidated all obligations, that portion of any balance remaining in his account which bears the same ratio to the total balance as the total amount received from the matching payment account bears to the total of all deposits made into the candidate's account, shall be repaid by the candidate to the matching payment account.

5. Section 9038 did not contain a provision that no payments shall be required from a candidate in excess of payments received by such candidate.

6. Section 9038(c) provided that notifications of required repayments could not be made more than 3 years after the end of the matching payment period involved.

Conference substitute
The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment, except that the conference substitute eliminates the role of the Comptroller General and substitutes the Commission.

Section 508(b) provided that the Commission shall prepare and make available for public inspection summaries of statements received under section 508(a).

House amendment
No provision. Section 9036(a) of the Code, relating to initial certifications, as added by the House amendment, which required immediate certification of payment in full to candidates of all amounts to which they are entitled, made unnecessary any provision comparable to section 508 of the Act, as added by the Senate bill.

2. Section 9039(a) required reports after each matching payment period, and not at the close of each calendar year.
3. Section 9039(b), in addition to authority granted by section 509(b) of the Act, as added by the Senate bill, gave the Comptroller General authority to prescribe rules and regulations. It should be noted that section 309(a)(8) of the Act, as added by section 207(a) of the Senate bill, gave the Commission general authority to prescribe rules to carry out all provisions of the Act.

If either committee does not disapprove the proposed rule or regulation no later than 30 legislative days after receipt of the proposed rule or regulation, then the Comptroller General is authorized to prescribe such rule or regulation. Each report shall contain a statement of (1) taxes paid by the individual, or by the individual and his spouse filing jointly, for the preceding calendar year; (2) the amount and source of each item of income (other than gifts received from his spouse or his immediate family) received by the individual which exceeds $100 in amount or value, including honorariums and income in the form of goods or services; (3) the amount of each asset held by the individual worth more than $1,000, and the amount of each liability of more than $1,000 owed by the individual; (4) any securities transactions by the individual in amounts in excess of $1,000; (5) any commodities transactions by the individual in amounts in excess of $1,000; and (6) any purchase or sale of real property (other than his personal residence) by the individual if the value of the property involved exceeds $1,000.

Section 401(b) provided that annual reports shall be filed no later than May 15 of each year. Any person who, before such date, ceases to hold an office or position requiring him to file a report, shall file such report on the last day he holds such office or position, or within 3 months after such day, as the Commission may prescribe.

Section 401(c) authorized the Commission to prescribe rules governing the form of reports and provided that the Commission may allow the grouping of items of income and other related items.

Section 401(d) provided that any person who willfully fails to file a report or who willfully and knowingly files a false report shall be fined not more than $2,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

Section 401(e) provided that reports filed under section 401 shall be maintained by the Commission as public records.

Section 401(f) provided that an individual shall be considered to be in one of the categories described above with respect to a given calendar year if he holds the office or position involved for more than 6 months during such calendar year.

So the bill (H.R. 12993) was passed.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and request a conference with the House of Representatives, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the President appointed Mr. MAURISON, Mr. PASTORE, Mr. HARTKE, Mr. BEAK, and Mr. STEVENS conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I want to pay a special tribute to my colleague, Mr. Bakes, who worked with me on this legislation. It was a very difficult task, I must say, because the extremes were quite pronounced.

I want to compliment Mr. Nicholas Zapple and Mr. John Hardy on the Democratic side, the Commerce Committee, and also Mr. WARD WHITE who is the assistant to the Co-Chairman.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island for his remarks, which I will most assuredly reciprocate.

It has been a pleasure to work with the Senator from Rhode Island on this very difficult and complex subject and with the staff to whom I have already paid my high respect and regards.

I think we have a good bill and I am pleased it was passed.

HARPER'S FERRY NATIONAL MONUMENT

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, S. 605, to expand and develop the Harpers Ferry National Monument contained in the House-passed version of the Harpers Ferry National Historical Park, which would include the Harpers Ferry National Historical Park, which would include the Harpers Ferry National Monument, is amended as follows:

In section 1, the first sentence is amended to read: "That, in order to carry out the purposes of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to acquire lands and resources in lands, by donation, purchase with donated or appropriated funds, or exchange, within the boundaries as generally depicted in the drawing entitled 'Harpers Ferry National Historical Park', numbered 385-40,000, and dated April 1974, which shall be on file in the office of the Secretary on the date of this Act."

This bill, S. 3044, however, is more comprehensive than any of its predecessors. It provides for strict limits on contributions and expenditures. It provides for a Federal election commission to administer and oversee and even to enforce the various provisions of the act. It provides for the public financing of national conventions and for Presidential primary and general elections. Limitations are as follows:

Individuals cannot give to any candidate or political committee supporting that candidate more than $1,000 for each election in which the candidate is a candidate for Congress, and no individual may give to all candidates and political committees more than $25,000 in any calendar year, and for purposes of that limitation, any contributions given in a year other than the election year shall be considered to have been given during the election year. No political committee, except a principal campaign committee may give more than $5,000 to a candidate or political committee supporting that candidate for each election in which he participates.

A principal campaign committee may contribute to the candidate up to his full spending limit. But, a principal campaign committee is one which has been designated by the candidate, in writing, to be his principal campaign committee and no other committee may be so designated.

Limitations on expenditures are also specifically set forth: A candidate for nomination for election to the office of Senator or Representative at Large could spend $70,000 for the primary and another $70,000 for the general election. He could also spend up to 20 percent of the overall spending for the costs of fundraising.

A candidate for nomination for the Senate or for Representative at Large could spend up to the greater of 8 cents times the voting age population of the state or $100,000. And for the general election candidate could spend the greater of 12 cents times the voting age population or $20,000, whichever is greater. Also, the national committee may spend the greater of 2 cents times the voting age population of a State for candidates for general election to the office of Senator or Representative at Large or $20,000, whichever is greater. Also, the national committee may spend the greater of 2 cents times the voting age population of the congressional district or $10,000 for each candidate for the House.

State committees of a political party, including all branches or subsidiaries, may spend up to 2 cents times the voting age population in any given State or $20,000 for Senator or Representative at Large, whichever is greater, and 2 cents times the voting age population of the congressional district, in the case of those representatives who run in States having more than one representative, or $10,000, whichever is greater.

No person may make an independent expenditure advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate in excess of $1,000 other than those committees or agents authorized by the candidate.

Candidates must have principal campaign committee responsible for the control of receipts and expenditures and for the reports of those finances. Candidates must also designate campaign depositories where receipts and expenditures shall be accounted for.

A most important feature of the bill creates a Federal election commission having primary civil authority for violations of the act. The commission would be comprised of eight members. Two would be appointed by the Senate, two would be appointed by the House, and two would be appointed by the President. All six of these would be subject to conformation by the Senate and the House. Not more than one of those appointed by the Senate, House, or the President would be of the same political party.

The commission would have the power to examine all records, conduct investigations, and issue subpoenas. It could go to court to obtain injunctive relief, declaratory judgments and expedient review of constitutional issues.

The commission also would have the power to attempt to resolve matters by internal administrative procedures after which further remedy could be sought in the courts.

However, the Department of Justice would not be deprived of any of its power to initiate civil or criminal actions in response to referrals by the commission or complaints from other sources. These constitute the major provisions of the act as agreed upon by the Senate and House. There are many other lesser but important provisions which were discussed by both bodies of the Congress and the conferees believe that the measure as reported by the conference would serve without a vote to eliminate the practices so prevalent during the 1972 campaigns and substitute new restrictive provisions covering all facets of Federal campaigns in such a manner as to renew public confidence in the Federal Government and in the elective process.

The act would become effective on January 1, 1976, but the preemption of State law which might be in conflict with the act would take place immediately upon passage, and public finances would not become available as payments to eligible candidates before January 1, 1976.

Mr. President, there are a great number of provisions in this that will require the attention of candidates for Federal office, their committees, treasurers, and agents. The intent is to preserve the integrity of the elective process by applying strict controls over the flow of money in political campaigns. I believe that this agreement will serve to civilize the atmosphere and will benefit candidates by setting reasonable ceilings on contributions and expenditures.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues in the Senate to give their approval to this very important election reform legislation.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Will the distinguished chairman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I am delighted to yield to my colleague.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I thank the chairman of the committee who has done such a magnificent job in shepherding this bill through the House. The remaining members would have been a long and hard road. I think we have achieved a reasonably good bill. We have had to make concessions that we did not want to make. I think the Members of this body felt the same way. I am personally delighted that my original amendment to provide for an independent Federal Election Commission has been included in the final bill.
gratuate the Senator from Nevada on the line job he has done in chairing the Senate conferences. As contrasted with many conferences, he did not use the transportation expenses incurred, however, they would have to be prorated between the two.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. As far as this particular Senator can recall, I do not believe I have even gone on a speechmaking tour of two, three, four, or five speeches. But I do think it is fair and proper that we should make that clear. I do not think we want to leave anything unrevealed. We do not want to mislead anybody.

I think that does clarify the concerns that have been expressed to me on that point.

I think the reporting functions of this bill have been simplified, and yet they are intended to be very tight as to requiring disclosure of whether incumbents or not. Is that not correct?

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is correct. The details under the old law have proven to be quite onerous in that they were more burdensome required. We have tried to simplify that. Yet, the reporting is such that the public will have the full information available if they desire.

One of the ways in which we guarded that was by providing that a person can have only one principal campaign committee and that all the reports from subsidiary, minor committees have to be channeled through that principal campaign committee, so that you have a funneling there of all the reports into one place.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. This is designed to correct any past abuses or the potentiality of abuses.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is correct. Mr. HUGH SCOTT. As to the Republican and Democratic National Committees, or any allied committees of the major parties, there is a provision for an allocation from the checkoff, if the funds are available, of $2 million to each political party for its quadrennial national convention. Is that correct?

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is correct. That also came out of the abuses in the past, where many charges have been made with respect to the raising of funds and the holding of conventions.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I want to make that clear, because there was a good deal of objection to that provision on the part of members of my party, some of them connected with the activities of the national committee and convention groups. I think it is a wise provision. It eliminates the necessity of these conventions for programs and $25,000 contributions from corporations, and so forth.

So I have to go against what was the view of a number of my constituents in that regard. I think it is a very good provision.

I thank the distinguished Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I, too, con contributions and expenditures, and the effective new Federal Election Commission established to oversee and enforce the law.

There is also a glaring deficiency in the bill—its failure to adopt for Senate and House races the same important and basic reform it adopts for Presidential races—public financing of elections.

Public financing of campaign spending and private campaign financing do not stop at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. They dominate congressional elections as well. If the abuses are the same for the House and Senate, the reform should also be the same. If public financing is good enough for Presidential elections, it should also be good enough for Senate and House elections, too.

The people understand the simple logic of that lesson, but the conference bill ignores it. Instead, it adopts a double standard for reform—public financing for Presidential elections, but only a partial, watered-down version of private financing for congressional elections.

As a result, in plain view of the nation, Congress is now adopting a blatant "half-baked, watered-down" attitude to election reform. It is of the utmost importance that the need for public financing is probably greater for congressional elections than it is for Presidential elections.

It is no secret that the Senate conferees, in a real bipartisan effort, worked hard to obtain a compromise acceptable to both House, a compromise that would establish a national beachhead for public financing of congressional elections.

On every other provision in the bill, the conferees were able to hammer out a reasonable agreement on the various conflicting provisions of the bill. But on the overriding issue of public financing, the opposition of the House conferees was total and unyielding. Day after day, session after session, the Senate conferees sought progressively weaker compromises, until finally only token public financing for congressional elections was left for the Senate.

But even this minimal compromise was refused.

In the end, to get a bill at all that the President would be obliged to sign or veto before election day, it was necessary for the Senate conferees to abandon public financing altogether for congressional elections. Reluctantly, we did so.

I like to think that, because we yielded on public financing, the Senate conferees fared better on two other very important issues in the bill—the spending limits for Senate and House races, and the enforcement powers of the new Federal Election Commission.

On the spending limits, the figures in the House bill were so low that, inevitably, the bill was widely stigmatized as an "incumbent's protection act." Left unchanged, it might well have prevented any challenger from making any effective race against any Senate or House incumbent.

But on this point, the House accepted a generous compromise that includes the best features from each bill. In essence, the compromise adopts the basic limits of the Senate bill for Senate races—12 cents a voter in general elections and 8 cents a voter in primaries—and it raises the limit for House races from $10,000 in the House bill to a compromise level of $60,000 and House races. A number of other significant provisions are added that affect the spending limit:

An extra 20 percent in spending is made available to offset fund-raising costs.

An extra 2 cents a voter in Senate races—or $10,000 in House races—may be spent by the national committees and also by the State committee of the candidate's party.

A cost of living escalator is included that will probably mean an extra 10 percent boost in spending for the 1976 elections, to offset the inflation likely to occur in 1975.

And, a so-called "meat and potatoes" exemption from the spending limit is also provided, allowing any individual to spend up to $500 per election for invitations, food and beverages for campaign functions at his residence. Any candidate worth his salt would be able to parlay that provision into the equivalent of $2,000 of additional spending for each election.

As a result of these various provisions, the spending levels in the conference bill are the entire package. I regard the bill as no longer vulnerable to the "incumbent's protection" label.

On the enforcement issue, the Senate obtained a significant compromise, in which the right of the Federal Election Commission to conduct civil enforcement actions is preserved. A new Federal Election Commission, will be established, with substantial civil enforcement powers of its own. This compromise ends one of the most severe loopholes in the existing election laws, the lax enforcement mechanism we have endured so long.

These two areas—the spending limits and the enforcement provisions—represent important victories for the Senate conferees. And they are not the only important provisions of the bill.

Therefore, in spite of our defeat on public financing, I give my support to the final action of the conferees, and I urge the Senate to approve the conference report.

Before closing though, I would like to return once more to the central issue of public financing.

Let there be no illusions about the half-a-loaf approach the conference bill applies to Senate and House elections. To those who say go slow, that limits on spending and private contributions are enough for now, that all we need is full reporting, we reply that sunlight is too weak an disinfectant, that we should not be satisfied with timid steps today, when experience proves that bolder ones are clearly needed.

Already, before the ink is dry on the conference's agreement, let alone before the bill is presented to the President for his signature, we read that big contributors and special interest groups have honed in on the loopholes, they are already searching for new loopholes and new ways to avoid the law.

I do not doubt they will succeed. To name but one provision, the $5,000 contribution limit for gifts to a candidate by broad-based political committees is an invitation to abuse. From one direction, special interest groups are likely to proliferate into smaller committees, to enable themselves to make multiple $5,000 contributions. From the other direction, individuals and narrow-based political committees—now limited to $1,000 contributions per candidate—are likely to seek new sources of contributions to their own war chests and new candidate beneficiaries in order to qualify for the $5,000 gifts allowed to be made by broad-based committees.

Undoubtedly, all the other restrictive provisions in the bill will receive similar microscopic scrutiny, and other "adjustments" will be made accordingly.

For years, going back in some cases over many decades, on issue after issue of absolutely vital importance to the country, national policy has been made before the election, in Congress that money can buy. And in every case, the "best" is obviously not good enough, if we believe in government responsive to all the people, not just the special interest groups.

Who really owns America? Who owns Congress? Is it the people, or is it a little group of big campaign contributors and private interest groups? Take six examples that are obviously current today:

Does anyone doubt the connection between America's energy crisis and the campaign contributions of the oil industry?

Does anyone doubt the connection between America's reluctance to enforce effective price restraint and the campaign contributions of the Nation's richest corporations?

Does anyone doubt the connection between America's failure to enact decent tax reform and the campaign contributions of the nation's richest corporations?

Does anyone doubt the connection between America's health crisis and the failure of the American Medical Association and the private health insurance industry?
Does anyone doubt the connection between the demoralization of the foreign service and the sale of ambassadorships for private campaign contributions?

These areas are only the beginning of the list. The problem is especially urgent and pervasive today, because of the soaring costs of running for Senator or Representative. But corruption or the appearance of corruption in campaign financing is not a new phenomenon. I would venture that for at least a generation, a few major pieces of legislation have moved through the House or Senate that dealt with the campaign contributions with an interest in the outcome.

Watergate did not cause the problem, but it offers the clear chance to solve it. Through public financing, we can guarantee that the political influence of any citizen is measured only by his voice and vote, not by the thickness of his pocketbook.

A caveat is in order here. Public financing is not a panacea for America's every social ill. It is not a cure for corruption, but it is a guarantee that those who enter public service will be any wiser in solving America's current problems.

What it does guarantee is that legislation needed on this front will be taken by Congress in the future by men and women beholden only to the public as a whole, free of the appearance of special influence and corruption that have done so much in recent years to bring all government to its present low estate.

Make no mistake. Those special interests will keep on corrupting decent government until we finally act.

Even now, the special interest groups are sitting in the wings. In this year of 1974, their campaign war chests are the fattest in their history—tens of millions of dollars of special interest money waiting to be spent, to buy the votes they want in Congress.

They can live with this arrangement. As the conference results make clear, Congress is also prepared to live with this arrangement—for now.

Sadly, the only ones who cannot live with this arrangement are the ordinary people. They should not have to—ordinary people of this country, the 200 million American citizens who have a right to a Congress that represents them too, a Congress that speaks for the public interest, not just the private interest groups.

And so, this conference report turns out to be just a midway station on the climb to real reform. With this bill, we thought we would reach the top, but it turns out we were wrong. And so, as we regroup our forces, we recognize that our effort must go on in the new Congress that convenes next January.

This issue is not settled, as some would hope, until after the 1976 elections. January 1975 will bring a new Congress, and I shall do my best to ensure that public financing of elections is one of our top priorities. If we do not want to lose another year, next year we shall return, and let us hope the answer will be different.

One final word. There are many who deserve great credit for the substantial progress we have made so far in advancing the issue of public financing to its present stage. The history is worth counting, because the issue is hardly new to the Senate. In fact, this is the 16th year in which some form of election financing has been before the Senate.

It was in 1966 that the concept of public financing was first enunciated into law. Thanks to the brilliant leadership of Senator Russell Long of Louisiana, the concept of public financing, the dollar checkoff on Presidential general elections was signed into law that year.

The year 1967 saw the act delayed and shunted aside in the crosfire of the emerging passions of the 1968 Presidential campaign. But, in the aftermath of that defeat, the Senate Finance Committee, again under the remarkable leadership of Senator Long, reconvened a broad new version of the dollar checkoff, applicable not only to Presidential general elections, but to Senator general elections as well. No further action was taken on the Finance Committee report in that Congress, but the seed for public financing of congressional elections was planted and we expect it will bear fruit.

The year 1971 saw the 1966 act revived and again signed into law, under the leadership of Senator Long and Senator Mike Mansfield and Senator John Pastore. Once again, hit again in part by crosfire, the decision was made in the Senate-House conference to defer the issue past the 1972 elections, and the start date was set at 1976. The "ifs" of history are gone, the "ifs" are gone, the "ifs" are gone. There would deny that there might have been a Watergate, if the decision had been made to allow public financing for the 1972 election.

Today's bill is yet another milestone on the road to full public financing of Federal elections. In the aftermath of Watergate, it was clear that the present Congress would be an election reform Congress; the bill today is the result of our 2-year effort.

And the effort in this Congress has been genuinely bipartisan. Senator Hart, Senator Allen, Senator Stevenson, Senator C. F. Cherry, all members of the Committee, Senators Hugh Scott, Mathias, Schwarzrock and Stafford in introducing various forms of public financing legislation in this Congress, brought this key issue in the forefront of debate throughout both sessions.

Last November, as an amendment to the Debt Ceiling Act, we were initially successful in obtaining the approval of the Senate for public financing of Presidential primaries and congressional general elections, only to lose that victory to Senate and House: in the closing days of the session.

This year under the able leadership of Senator Howard Cannon, chairman of the Senate Rules Committee, in the progress was also significant. S. 3044, Senator Cannon's landmark Rules Committee bill, was approved by the Senate essentially intact. It bore the public financing compass. It provided public financing for Presidential primaries and Senate and House general elections, but also for Senate and House primaries. Most significant of all, the Senate actually broke a filibuster to get the bill to conference.

Thus, in repeated votes after full debate and committee hearings over the past 9 years, the Senate has gone on record again and again in favor of the principle of public financing for elections, specifically, in 1973, it has gone on record again and again in favor of public financing for congressional elections.

Contrast the present bill marks the first time the House has had full committee hearings and full floor debate on the issue of public financing.

It is a measure of progress, as we try to overcome the widespread reflex of asking Congressmen to accept public financing for their own elections is like asking them to walk the plank. If we did not persuade the House this time, I am confident that final victory will ultimately be achieved, and I am hopeful that "ultimately" means the next time around.

To Senator Howard Cannon of Nevada, I give special praise. As chairman of the Rules Committee, he skillfully guided the bipartisan legislation, as the Senate finally passed this legislation. With equal skill, he successfully steered the bill through the Senate floor debate. Above all, in conference with the House, he led the Senate to confer with the House and the wisdom, negotiating effectively with the House where compromise was possible, and withstanding the cause of public financing for congressional elections until the House was finally lost. Senator Cannon's leadership in the conference was all the more impressive because he saw this conference through, while simultaneously shouldering the Rules Committee's enormous current responsibility in the Rockefeller confirmation hearings. Senator Cannon has done a brilliant job; he has demonstrated once again the reason for the high regard in which the Senate holds him.

In addition, I give special praise to Senator Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania. Without his strong cosponsorship, his distinguished leadership and the generous support for public financing at every step of the debate in the present Congress, this vital election reform would probably not have even been on the Senate or fared as well in the House. Senator Scott's active and continuing participation was in the highest tradition of the bipartisan Senate at its best. He has ably performed this sort of valuable service on many other issues in the past. The fine record he has compiled over many years in other areas, especially on election reform and on civil rights, is a tribute to his wise and effective leadership.

Pennsylvania has an outstanding Senator, the Senate has an outstanding minority leader, and the country is in his debt.

I also give great praise to Common Cause, the people's lobby. For the first time—at least in my service in the Senate and perhaps for the first time in the history of Congress—a powerful and truly effective representative of the public interest has emerged to speak for the ordinary citizen in the halls of Congress. Now, on campaign financing and many other issues, there is a real countervailing force against the narrow special inter-erest groups that have held unchancellized sway for so long. Things are changing now in Congress, and Common Cause deserves the credit. I hope they keep the pressure on.

Finally, I praise Wayne Hays, the chairman of the House Administration Committee and the chairman of the House of Representatives as a whole. If he was immoveable in his opposition to public financing, he was also generous in the give-and-take on all the other issues in the conference. He was an advocate and chairman on every aspect of the bill, and I respect his great ability.

The measure we approved in conference is a good bill with many good provisions, and he deserves great credit for his work.

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. President, if I have the floor, I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I, too, wish to take this opportunity to express appreciation to a number of people who played important roles in the passage of this landmark legislation.

Chairman Howard CANNON of the Rules Committee, as leader of the Senate conferences, did a superb job of advocating the Senate bill. As the junior member of the conference committee, I am deeply grateful for the fairness that chaired the proceedings. I particularly want to thank him for allowing me to serve on the conference, even though not a member of the Rules Committee.

Senator Kennedy skillfully and relentlessly led the fight for congressional public financing. And while we lost this bat-te, I know he will be among those leadting the fight in the next Congress.

This conference report could not have been pulled together without the tireless efforts of our staff, especially Jim Duffy of the Privileges and Elections Subcommittee, Mr. Bureau of Legislative Counsel's office, and Carey Parker of Senator Kennedy's staff.

In addition, a number of organizations provided valuable support and information, including the Center for Public Financing of Elections and especially Common Cause whose representatives played a leading role in strengthening this leg-sislation, as Senator Kennedy has said.

Mr. President, it has been nearly 2½ years since five men were apprehended for breaking into the headquarters of the Democratic National Committee. That includes the events that followed, not only forced the first resignation of an American President—they also aroused an unparalleled outcry for overturning the tent defensive tactics of our political campaigns.

The conference report on S. 3044, which we bring to the floor today, represents the major congressional response to the demand for reform. It is an historic piece of legislation—it insures that large private contributions will never again dominate Presidential politics, and that future Presidents will be free from dependence on, and obligation to, wealthy individuals and special interest groups.

Unfortunately, because of the intransigence of the other body, the legislation fails to encompass the one provision which will keep House and Senate campaigns as well—public financing of congressional elections. Our failure to take this opportunity to extend public financing to all Federal elections is a tragic shortcoming, one that will have to be corrected at the earliest possible occasion.

As I stated initially, however, there are still many positive aspects of this legislation. Building on the foundation laid by Senator Russell Long, this bill extends public financing of Presidential campaigns to cover nominating conventions and primary elections. The major political parties each will receive $2 mil-million to operate their conventions in 1976. Candidates in the Presidential primaries, and if they can demonstrate a broad base of support, will be able to receive Federal payments matching contributions of $250 or less. These candidates will be limited to spending $10 million in the primary elections, $20 million in the general election.

Funding for the public financing provisions will come from the dollar checkoff on Federal tax returns, and will be automatically appropriated to meet the needs of the program.

Another major accomplishment of S.
3044 is the establishment of an independent bipartisan Federal Election Commission. This Commission, compounded of appointees of the President and the congressional leadership, and conformed by both Houses of Congress, will have broad administrative and supervisory powers. Of special significance is the Commission's civil enforcement authority, which will help insure that correction of election law violations will not depend entirely upon the Department of Justice that has traditionally gnored such abuses.

The major changes in the conduct of campaigns, however, will come from the imposition of limitations on contributions and expenditures. In all Federal elections, individuals would be limited to contributions of $1,000 per candidate in each election. The so-called multicandidate committees would be restricted to contributions of $5,000. The bill also includes strict ceilings on the expenditures that can be made by or on behalf of each candidate's campaign.

These limits will help guard against some of the more flagrant abuses we have seen in the past few years. But, in and of themselves, the limitations will do little to correct the two most serious problems in elections for Congress: the tremendous influence and impact of special interest dollars and the almost complete domination of incumbent officeholders.

Let us face it—$5,000 is still a big chunk of money in most congressional campaigns, with limited applied sepa-ratel to presidential primaries, and elections, special interest contributors can easily climb as high as $10,000 or even $15,000. Recently, we have seen story after story in the press detailing the huge campaign coffers that these special interest groups have. With the contribution limits in this bill, there will be little change in their ability to dominate the field where congressional campaign finances are.

Tightening the group contribution limit will not solve the problem—that would only serve to dry up campaign funds entirely, and guarantee incumbents more money. The only real solution is to replace these private funds with public financing.

The last few years have seen Members of Congress returned to office 95 percent of the time or more. The reason is simple—challengers have not been able to raise enough funds to be competitive.

Incumbency domination has continued in this year's primaries. As reported on NBC News last night, of the 391 House Members in primaries, only 8 were defeated in their reelection bids. As John Kennedy once said, being a Congressman "is not only a good job, it is a job with great job security."

The expenditure limitations in S. 3044 will not solve this problem at all. In fact, by limiting what a candidate can spend, the bill may well eliminate some of the effective challenges we have seen recently.

The only real solution lies in guaranteeing that each serious candidate will have the funds necessary to take his case to the public—again, through public financing of elections.

As you know, the Senate version of this bill is the Senate version of this bill contained provisions for congressional public financing, but in the conference committee, the House was adman—while we were faced with a choice of this bill, with no public financing for Congress, or no bill at all. What we have been forced to do, in effect, is settle for a double standard in the conduct of Federal elections—public financing for the President but business as usual for our-

The important provisions of this legislation qualify S. 3044 as a major step on the road to free and open Federal elections. But it will not be necessary, and soon. I certainly shall inroduce legislation at the beginning of the next Congress to extend the excellent public financing program in S. 3044 to cover congressional elections as well.

Mr. President, will the Senator from
Nevada yield for one question?

Mr. CANNON. I am delighted to yield to a question.

Mr. President, will the Senator from
Nevada yield for one question?

Mr. CANNON. This bill would impose a $5,000 limit for each election on contributions that a multicandidate political committee could make on behalf of one Federal candidate. Was it the intent of the Senator to make clear that administerative expenses of legitimate multi-candidate committees are exempt from such limitation, so long as these expenditures are not made on behalf of a clearly identifiable Federal candidate?

Mr. CANNON. Yes. Those expenses incurred on behalf of a clearly identified candidate should be attributed to that candidate, obviously. Of course, expenses merely to defray the cost of operation, rent, equipment, clerical salaries, etc., should not be counted against the candidates to whom the contributions are given.

In other words, if the candidate cannot be clearly identified—this relates to the multi-candidate committees to which the Senator referred—the expenses of the committees to defray the costs of their operation, their rent, their equipment, and their clerical salaries would not be charged against the candidate to whom the contributions are finally given. I do not see that there is any way one could allocate them.

Mr. CLARK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, before I begin my remarks, I would like to ask if the distinguished Senator from Nevada would answer two or three questions that occur to me with respect to the conference report.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Alabama understands that the bill would provide no subsidies to candidates except from funds going into the checkoff fund; is that correct?

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is correct.

The public financing provision would go only to the extent that funds were in the pot, so to speak, from the checkoff provision under the income tax laws at the present time.

Mr. ALLEN. Then the first priority would be the Presidential election; is that correct?

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is correct.

The first priority would be the Presidential election.

Mr. ALLEN. If there is not enough to go around.

Mr. CANNON. That is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. Then what would follow?

Mr. CANNON. The allocation, then, from that point on, would go to the primary elections and to the national committees on a prorata basis, because that is the lowest priority, and that is in the process of selecting the candidates for the primary elections.

Mr. ALLEN. And there would be no priority as between conventions and candidates? Would the convention come ahead of the candidates, the $2 million subsidized convention?

Mr. CANNON. I think the intent, as we have drawn it here and developed it, was that the conventions would come ahead of the primaries. The general election would come first, to the extent of the money available. If more than is available, then the conventions would come next, and then, if there is more money available, the primaries would come next.

So, in the proration, the low end of the totem pole, so to speak, would be the primaries.

Mr. ALLEN. As I understand it, in the presidential primaries, the contributions, the amounts of which can be matched, must have been made in the year next preceding the year of the convention and election; is that correct?

Mr. CANNON. That was the intent, that the matching period would be the year preceding the convention and the election for purposes of determining it.

Mr. ALLEN. Of course, taking in the election year as well.

Mr. CANNON. That is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. Then, of course, as to expenditures they are limited as well as are the contributions.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. At what point do the expenditures become limited? Would they become limited as of the year next preceding the election year? In other words, looking forward to the next election, would the expenditures limit start on January 1, 1975?

Mr. CANNON. Yes. The effective date of the act for purposes of expenditure and for the purpose of contributions with the matching provisions of the contributions is January 1, 1975.

Now, the Senator went a little beyond that to speak in general terms as to when the effective date would be with respect to contributions on expenditures. That would be governed by the definition of provisions under the act as to where he becomes a candidate. A person might become a candidate within the year prior to the election.

On the other hand, it is conceivable that a person might really become a candidate for Presidential office within 2 years prior to the election. So we would have to look at the definition of the candidate.

The term "candidate" means an individual who seeks nomination for election to the President of the United States. For purposes of this paragraph an individual shall be considered to seek nomination for election if he (a) takes the action necessary under the law of a State to qualify him for nomination for election.

Under that provision in all of the States that would fall in the year prior to the election.

(b) receives contributions—

Mr. ALLEN. No, that would be the year of the election, would it not, the primary?

Mr. CANNON. Excuse me, during the same year prior to the election.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON (continuing):

(b) receives contributions or incurs qualified campaign expenses; or (c) gives his consent for any other person to receive contributions or to incur qualified expenses on his behalf.

These conditions could exist longer than the immediate year prior to the election in the case of a Presidential campaign.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, but he would have to be a declared candidate, would he not?

Mr. CANNON. He would have to either solicit contributions for that purpose or have expenditures for that purpose or have declared that he was a candidate.

Mr. ALLEN. He would have to be a declared candidate.

Mr. CANNON. Absolutely.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Until that time, or until January 1 of the year preceding the election, the expenditures would not be charged against the total authorized expenditures.

Mr. CANNON. Well, if he had made expenditures for the purpose of seeking a nomination, if he had gone out and spent money for the purpose of getting the nomination as President, then it would go back to that time, except it would not go back beyond January 1, 1975, because that is the effective date of the act.

Mr. ALLEN. So then the expenditures prior to January 1, 1975, would not count.

Mr. CANNON. Those expenditures would not count.

Mr. ALLEN. I see. Very well.

I commend the distinguished Senator from Nevada, the chairman of the Rules Committee for his patience and his hard work with respect to this bill (S. 3044) and commend him also for his hard work with respect to S. 372 which passed the Senate July 30 of last year and which had reform provisions similar to the reform provisions in this bill but did not have the public financing feature.

This bill, of course, had the House been so inclined, could have been used as the vehicle for the reform package, leaving out or adding features in that regard. Now, Mr. President, I address my remarks to the conference report on S. 3044 and my remarks will be fairly lengthy. I might say to anyone who might be interested—the conference report on S. 3044, the public financing of Presidential elections, which is before the Senate and will unquestionably be approved, and probably be approved this afternoon, possibly not before recess for the President's address.

A strong conviction on my part that taxpayer financing of elections is not in the public interest. I could not, in good conscience, sign the report even though I was a member of the conference on the part of the Senate. And yet the report, composing the differences between the Senate and House versions of the bill, contains much that is good, much that I support, and much that was shaped or influenced by positions that I have advocated—and other Senators on the floor have advocated—on and off the Senate floor and in committee.

There is no stronger advocate of campaign reform than I, for it is a fallacy to feel that anyone who opposes a raid on the Treasury to support political campaigns must be against campaign reform.

Public financing of elections re-forms the campaign laws, it does not reform them. True reform comes from strict limitations on the total amount of permissible campaign contributions and expenditures, full disclosure of all contributions and expenditures, limitation of size of contributions, limitation on amount of cash contributions and expenditures; and an independent election commission—and which was, of course, the Senate—and many other similar reforms in the private sector.

Throughout the time that election reform bills have been before the Senate, the record will show the steadfast support given by all of these principles and have afforded leadership in advocacy for them. I have invariably supported the lowest proposed figure, whether it was for an overall limit on contributions or expenditures, or limit on size of contributions or amount of cash contribution or expenditure permitted. And when disclosure provisions were considered, I have always stood for the strictest possible disclosure rule.

But to use the terms "public financing" and "campaign reform" interchangeably or as synonyms is erroneous. A just final report is really divided into two parts—the public financing part and the campaign reform part. I would prefer that there could be two votes taken on these issues. I would vote for campaign reform and against public financing. But that is not the case, and I must vote for or against the report. There can be no division of the question.

But why do I oppose requiring the taxpayers to pay the cost of elections? Debates as reported in the record are full of reasons that I have assigned.

First, public financing of elections is a raid on the taxpayers’ pocketbooks for the benefit of politicians. Subsidizing the candidates with funds from the Treasury only adds to the escalating costs of elections when we should be limiting and reducing election costs.

Second, much of the volunteer spirit of citizen participation in elections will be lost. Taxpayer-funded public treasury-required-costs are being used, for these funds belong to all taxpayers and not just to those who participated in the checkoff.

Fourth, Presidential primaries regularly held are spectacle enough without the Federal Treasury adding from $5 to $7½ million more to each candidate’s funds.

I have been told that there are some 6, 8, or 10 Members of the Senate who will be candidates for the Presidency.

This bill, of course, would make them a present provided they get enough popular support to get in excess of $5 million, up to $7½ million, which, if true, each of the candidates from this Senate or from the House, over $5 million for their campaign chest.

Now, the time approaches for the movement of the Senate over to the House Chamber, and I would ask unanimous consent that the floor be at this time, in order that the majority leader may address the motion to the Chair, with the understanding that I retain the right to the floor when we come back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, with the proviso that the distinguished Senator from Alabama retains the floor, I shall make the following unanimous consent request.

JOINT SESSION OF THE TWO HOUSES—ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess for the purpose of proceeding in a body to the Hall of the House of Representatives in Washington, D.C., to hear the address by the President of the United States to a Joint session of Congress.

Immediately after that address has been concluded, I will again resume its deliberations and, the distinguished Senator from Alabama will have the floor at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senate will now stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair, for the purpose of attending a joint session with the House of Representatives to hear the address by the President of the United States.

At 3:42 p.m., the Senate took a recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Thereupon, the Senate, preceded by the Secretary of the Senate, Francis R. Valeo; the Sergeant at Arms, William H. Wannamaker; the attendance of the Senate (Mr. James O. Eastland), proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives to hear the address by the President of the United States, Gerald R. Ford.

The address was delivered by the President of the United States to the Joint session of the two Houses of Congress appearing in the proceedings of the House of Representatives in today’s Record.

At 4:57 p.m., on the expiration of the recess, the Senate having returned to its Chamber, recessed, and was called to order by the President (Mr. Bartlett in the Chair).

QUORUM CALL

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the roll be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me right to the floor?

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE PRESIDENT’S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I would suggest that the Senate give consideration today to this bill, and to consider, indeed, to give consideration to the possibility of taking up tomorrow, after the deepwater ports bill is disposed of, Calendar No. 1, S. 3978, to increase the availability of reduced price mortgage purchases.

The bill was offered by Messrs. Chas- ran and Brook, who were specifically singled out by the President. I believe that he indicated that he would like to have this legislation passed before the Senate recesses, if possible.

In my further understanding that it has been withheld on the Cran- ston-Brooke proposal and that the President had sent up or made his recommendations; I assume that, in part, at least, he has made his recommendations this afternoon. I assure him that the joint leadership and the Senate stand ready to implement what he has had. Hopefully, if any additional information is needed from the White House, it will be forthcoming for us to consider and will yield to me for this purpose.

Mr. ALLEN. I am delighted to yield.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1974—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3044) to provide public financing for general election campaigns for Federal elective office, and to amend certain other provisions of law relating to the financing and conduct of such campaigns.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I was discussing the reason why I opposed the conference report. I was discussing the item of the financial subsidy not only for the Presidential general election, to the candidates for President of the respective parties, but also to finance the literally dozens of candidates who will seek the nomination of the major parties as well as the minor parties to some extent.

Mr. President, this bill would provide a subsidy of between $5 million and $6 million—up to that amount—for each candidate for Presidential nomination. Literally dozens of them will be encouraged by the subsidies provided by this bill, as well as any hope of obtaining the nomination.

It has been pointed out that it is required that there be some 6, 8, or 12 Members of Congress who will seek the President, or will seek the Presidential nomination, and they will be able to receive $5 million or more each, provided they get the necessary contributions from the public generally. But far from cutting down on the spectacle of these Presidential nominating primaries, this would escalate the cost by $5 million or $6 million for each candidate and would run up into astronomical terms.

In order to provide $2 million each—this is something the Senate did not even think of in providing subsidies—for major parties to hold a convention, I suppose some of the conventions are worth $2 million to the public, as a show or as a spectacle. But I hate to see the taxpayer called on to pay $2 million to each party so that it can meet and hold nominating conventions. That is what this conference report would do. That is a new idea by the House, agreed to by the Senate conferences.

Mr. President, let us examine the record for those positions which I and many other Senators of similar views have advocated on and off the Senate floor have had an influence, with an assist from the House, in shaping the final provisions of this bill. As set forth in the conference report, both on the true campaign reform and even on the public financing.

To do so it is necessary to go back to August 5, 1971, when the present campaign law—Public Law 92-225—was under consideration in the Senate as S. 372. That bill—that is, the present law—had a limit expenditures for media advertising, printing, stationery, telegrams, campaign headquarters—State and various local ones, unlimited campaign workers, airplane rentals and tickets, buses, special and regular campaign newspaper and advertising, campaign staffs, public relations firms, production expenses for broadcasts, public opinion polls, paid campaigners and poll watchers, novelties, bumper stickers, sample ballots, and many other contributions which I did not think of. Those were not covered under the present law. Those were not covered when S. 372 was before the Senate.

It was quite obvious to me that this limitation was far from adequate and that there should be a limitation on total expenditures purposes. The Senate did not pass by a vote of 31 to 60, but for the first time action had been taken on the Senate floor that would have put an effective limit to the candidate in an election. Embraced in the report now is the concept of limiting all expenditures, as provided in my amendment, and not limiting media advertising only. Mr. President, the concept of the amendment that was back in 1971 is now carried forward in the conference report, limiting the total expenditures for all purposes and not just media advertising, as the limit is now.

Next came the passage in the Senate on July 30, 1973, by a vote of 82 to 8, of S. 372, which I supported in committee and on the floor. The purpose of these desirable campaign reforms in it, but it did not have campaign financing. It did not have public financing. During the course of the consideration of this bill on the Senate floor, a public financing amendment was defeated. So just a little over a year ago, the Senate was voting down public financing. Mr. President, I voted for, and supported in committee and on the floor of the Senate, S. 372, which did provide true campaign reform.

Let us continue examining areas of where the position of reform minded opponents of public campaign financing was upheld.

That is the category in which I put myself and those who opposed public financing. We are reform-minded opponents of public financing. Let us continue examining areas of where the position of reform-minded opponents of public campaign financing was upheld.

By a vote of 39 yeas to 51 nays the Senate rejected the Allen amendment—this is the only amendment pending in the Senate—to strike the provisions for public financing of congressional elections. So the reform-minded opponents of public financing did win out.

The purpose of the 39 Senate opponents of congressional elections financing is now supported by the conference report in the final conference report with regard to House financing and subsidizing of the campaigns of Members of the House and Senate.

I offered an amendment limiting contributions in Presidential contests to $250 and $1,000 in other campaigns. Of course, there is practically no limit now to the amount of contributions that can be made. There is a limit on the amount that can be contributed through one committee, but we are familiar with the practice, although the Senator from Alabama has never used it, of having multiple committees, with $5,000 payments made by each of those committees. That is, in the way, hundreds of thousands of dollars can be contributed by one person, because the present law does not provide an effective limit on that.

Therefore, during the course of consideration of S. 3044, I offered that amendment.

The theory of that $250 in Presidential races, $100 in congressional races, would always be better in all ways, so why not authorize more? That amendment was voted down here on the Senate floor, this effort by those of us who oppose public financing but favor campaign reform to lower the amount of contributions. When that failed, I offered another amendment, thinking that surely this would satisfy the public financing supporters, which placed the figure at $1,000 contribution per person per election, which is more in line with the views of the reform-minded opponents of public financing.

Mr. President, those of us who have sought campaign reform and have opposed just turning the bill over to the taxpayer have had some little success in shaping the campaign reform aspects of the legislation that is now before us.

It is interesting to note that when the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BARKLEY) offered his amendment to require candidates to disclose the size and source of all contributions and to provide that no contributions could be accepted after 10 days before the election, the reform-minded opponents of public financing supported this amendment that would have provided for disclosure.

But large and whenever an opponent of public financing and subsidized financing, is found, one finds a person who advocates true campaign reform; cutting down the amount of authorized expenditures, cutting down on the amount of the permissible contribution, providing for more disclosure. This amendment of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BARKLEY) provided that a candidate had to disclose the size and source of all contributions and that he could not accept any contributions after 10 days before the election. During that period, he could not accept contributions. It seems to me to be a fine disclosure provision, offered by an opponent of taxpayer-financed and subsidized election, but a strong advocate of campaign reform.

Mr. President, while this bill S. 3044 was pending, I offered an amendment providing that no Member of the House or Senate could receive any honorarium for speeches, appearances or writings. The Senate defeated that amendment. They did not want any limitation on honoraria, the supporters of public financing, taxpayer-subsidized financing. They wanted the sky to be the limit, apparently, for contributions. So that was defeated, here, in the Senate.

However, the House grabbed hold of this idea, and provided an honorarium limitation be $1,000 per appearance or writing or speech, with a total of $10,000 permissible. Well, the conference report comes here with $1,000 for each appearance or writing or speech, and at $15,000 limit. At any rate, there is some limit to it, rather than the sky being the limit, as at present. That is an amendment that the reform-minded opponents of public financing did make their influence felt in the final conference report.

Mr. President, here, on the Senate floor in a rare burst of economy for the taxpayer, the Senate adopted an amendment that I offered reducing by 20 percent the amount which might be spent by each candidate—that is a 20-percent reduction. Mr. ALLEN did not cut from 10 cents per person of voting age to 8 cents in pri-marys and from 15 cents to 12 cents per person of voting age as the amount that could be spent in a primary or a general election.

Let me hasten to add that the conference provided very well to nullify that fine step toward economy, that would have saved the taxpayer millions of dollars.
Indeed, as an exemption from this limit 20 percent of permissable expenditures, to be used for fundraising only. The effect of that amendment is to limit the figure to a candidate for the nomination of one of the major parties for the Presidency. The limit is $10 millon in the primary for each candidate, half of which is public. The抱着 that off with the cream of allowing two million, that is not counted, to be Rhode Island was on the floor that contributions, and it is a good provision, as I believe all will concede, and as the word that the candidates would have substantial nationwide support.

Another major defect that I pointed out in the Senate debate was that there was no time set prior to which contributions to a Presidential nomination candidate would be ineligible for matching.
In other words, contributions now or a year ago would be eligible for matching contributions, and next year 10 percent would set in January 1980, and be receiving contributions now for matching in 1980. There was practically no limit on how far back you could go in getting contributions, making the Government subsidy that much easier to obtain.

That was pointed out here on the Senate floor, and it was conceded by the manager of the bill—I believe at that time the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island was on the floor—that contributions to a candidate would be eligible for matching contributions, and next year 10 percent would set in January 1980, and be receiving contributions now for matching in 1980. There was practically no limit on how far back you could go
in getting contributions, making the Government subsidy that much easier to obtain.

Mr. CANNON. Will the Senator yield?
Mr. ALLEN. Yes.
Mr. CANNON. That is not quite correct. The amount of 20 percent for fund raising purposes would be limited only to candidates who contribute, or a contribution part. Mr. ALLEN. It would be $1 million.
Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir; $1 million would be the limit.
Mr. ALLEN. Very well. I stand correded on that.
Instead of adding $2 million to the pot, it would add $1 million, on the theory that the $5 million coming from the government, from the taxpayers, does not have any expense. That is a reasonable provision.

The fact remains that it did add 10 percent overall, 20 percent on the amount of the individual contributions.
So it raised the amount that a candidate for the nomination for the Presidency could spend to $11 million; $5 million of which would be paid by the taxpayers.

It is not true that the Senator from Alabama offered which remains in the conference report is this: The way the Senate bill was drafted, before a candidate for nomination for the Presidency of one of the major parties could get any matching funds, he would have to receive $250,000 in contributions of $250 or less, but he could get them all from one State. There was no prohibition against that; a popular candidate from New York, Pennsylvania, or Illinois could raise the $250,000 from one State and get all of his funds, including that $250,000 and all other contributions up to the permissible limit, matched by the taxpayers.

It did not seem right to allow that, so I offered an amendment that provided that such a candidate for the nomination would have to get at least $5,000 in matchable funds from each of 20 States, to assure that the candidate would have a nationwide following. Since otherwise it would be fairly difficult, in each of 20 States, to get contributions of $5,000 in each from contributors of $250 or less.

The amendment that I added, the manage of the bill, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), and it is a good provision, as I believe all will concede,
and as the word that the candidates would have substantial nationwide
support.

I have no intention of engaging in extended debate as to the report. I think we should have a taxpayer-financed Presidential election procedure as to the Presidential election, the general election, it would not be so bad, but adding the cost of the dozens of candidates for the nomination for the office of the President, paying $2 million to each of the parties to put on a convention which is sometimes little better than a vaudeville show, I feel is a pretty high expense for the taxpayers to be called on to pay, $2 million to each party, and then to pay up to $5 million to finance these dozens of candidates who go up and down the land seeking the Presidency. So when the conference report comes up for adoption, the Senator from Alabama plans to vote “nay.”

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I wish to congratulate the Senate conferences, and particularly Senator CANNON, chairman of the Committee on Rules, for the exemplary job done in a very difficult weeks of trying to work out a compromise between the Senate and the House-passed version.

I share the disappointment of many members of the Senate that the conference report does not include public financing of congressional primaries and generals. However, it does provide public financing for presidential conmitee. The bipartisan supervisory board, established to enforce the provisions of the bill that I hope President Ford will sign into law, is a key feature of this legislation.

Our political terrain has been sadly sullied these last few years, Mr. President. Abuses have occurred that have shaken the confidence of the American people. But, Mr. President, I think that this compromise bill is a showing on the part of the Congress that it does intend to make amends, does intend to repair the damage to our campaign-financing system, hitherto privately financed.

I, for one, applaud these goals of a financially sane and stable and aboveboard system of campaign financing. In my judgment, this compromise, despite its flaws, should be a major step in that direction.

I do have reservations, just as the Senator from Alabama does, but for almost totally different reasons.
nancing which he characterizes as not being reform. I would like to speak to the reform act part which limits spending that candidates can expend in seeking Federal elective office, particularly with regard to the Senate and House races.

We have been noble in our discussions about the need to get new blood into the political process. We are told that one of the primary reasons for this campaign reform bill is to encourage new persons, women and men, to get involved in running for high public office.

There have been placed in this bill, it seems to me, Mr. President, and we have severely limited the possibilities of contenders, challengers, to unseat incumbents, which everyone recognizes is a very difficult thing to do at best.

Mr. President, I am very concerned that we not lose sight of the shortcomings of this bill. I may very well be singing in the same tune 4 years from now about this bill, with some provisions that may favor incumbents, when I will be eligible for re-election. I, as an incumbent, would be very happy about the fact that this is limited to spending the same amount of money that I am limited to expend, which is low especially for the most populous States. Yet, in addition, I have a significant weapon in incumbency with the amount that I have available for my staff paid for by the taxpayers; the franking privilege; and other benefits of being an incumbent, which translate directly into immense benefit in an election year in terms of waging a campaign.

I would have the reformers outside of Congress, the common causes of the world, who spend a good deal of time beating their breasts about what, in fact, is in the best interests of the Nation, also not lose sight of the fact that we are, in my opinion, may be going to be locking in many of the issues on this floor under the terms of this bill.

This bill may perhaps have exactly the opposite effect of what it is designed to do—overemphasizing process to the voters. This is because of what I consider, as opposed to the Senator from Alabama, excessively low dollar amounts that are able to be expended or contributed.

When the talk is about 12 cents per voter in a general election, and 10 cents per voter in a primary, in a State like California where we have 20 million residents, I suspect unknown candidates are going to have to spend all of that money and as opposed to the Senator from Alabama did not sign it. Some who spend a good deal of time criticizing. part.

Some who spend a good deal of time criticizing. part.

Mr. President, I still am an ardent supporter of public financing. I have also been a strong supporter of many other provisions that are contained in this bill.

But the American public should be made aware that there is a tendency in the bill to lock-in the incumbents.

For example if, in fact, I had been limited to spending the amount of money set out in this bill in the little State of Delaware—where I have been an electoral candidate three years ago, I ran, there is a possibility that I would not be standing here today taking the time of the Senate at 5:30 in the evening. It is very anxious for me to stop talking things to happen. This bill would have made it more difficult for me to have won that election—not impossible, but more difficult. The bill is much more severe in the most populous States. I see my good friend from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY) over there smiling, I am not sure why—but my good friend, the Senator from New York, if he were in the position of having an unknown challenger the next time up, I suspect it would be very difficult for a challenger to mount a campaign whereby he or she gets to the point of being able to attract one percent of the voters in that State. I hope I am wrong about that, but I just want to put the Senate on notice. I have not heard much about this, that, if, in fact, I am right about this, what has happened to reformers, and especially we, who call ourselves moderates and liberals, the so-called reformers, will come forward and rectify what may develop into an overspastic situation caused by abuse as well as bad things remedied.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BIDEN. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, does this unknown challenger not benefit sometimes by having a well known the incumbent is, which sometimes aids the challenger?

Mr. BIDEN. I believe it is true, that often occurs. But the percentages do not back that up. If we look at the numbers over the 70 years of this century it shows that, as bad as some of the incumbents have been, it is harder to perpetuate a bad incumbent than elect a good unknown challenger.

There is an old saying in football: "You have to have somebody to beat somebody." I am not even convinced the voters to beat somebody if this somebody does not get a chance to become known at all.

In sum, I think these spending limits in the bill are low. I think they militate and are weighted in favor of incumbents.

I hope, if I am correct, that, as I said, those who talk most about reform in this body will be open to reconsidering and, at least, recognize the fact that low limits, in the larger States—not in Delaware—have the effect of diminishing the numbers of good women and men who might want to get into the political process but are unable to do so.

However, Mr. President, I do want to insist on the assets of the bill, too, amid my criticism.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ABERNETHY). The Senator from New York.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I was smiling when the eloquent Senator from Delaware was talking about the advantages of incumbency, and the stringent limits proposed by this bill because this is precisely one of my major complaints, not the most major. I shall recite some of those later.

I addressed myself a week ago to the frustration of coming to this floor in 1972 when the conference report was still not available. I did, however, prepare some questions based on the early versions, and I would like to pose them to the distinguished sponsor of the bill so that I might have some clarification in my own mind and in the mind of the Senator. As these questions are not relevant to what has actually emerged from the conference and, if so, I assure you I will be so advised.

I would like to ask the distinguished sponsor whether he considers that the subsidy proposal and the limits on campaign contributions are independent proposals or are they integral parts of a comprehensive plan?

Mr. CANNON. I am sorry I was not in good enough shape so that I could hear what the Senator was saying.

May we have order, Mr. President?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Did the committee consider proposing these two independent parts as two independent bills?

Mr. CANNON. No. The committee made no such proposal. The bill was enacted here on the floor and contained in the Senate bill the proposal for the public financing for the Presidential elections and also for the congressional elections. In addition, the Senate wrote its will with respect to the limit on contributions and these limits, as my friend from Alabama pointed out, it was 1 in one bill, and it was so considered by the House and by the conferences.

It is quite a little different. I may say, as the distinguished Senator from Alabama, just pointed out, it was then when it was passed by the Senate.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Do the sponsors of the conference committee bill agree that subsidies to candidates are necessary in Presidential than in congressional elections to provide for opportunities for participation without regard to the financial resources of individual candidates?

Mr. CANNON. Well, that is what they believed by signing the conference report. The distinguished Senator from Alabama did not sign it. Some who signed the conference report were overly enthusiastic about the financing part. But it was quite evident that the public financing, at least for Presidential races, was more important than for congressional races, else the conference would have so indicated.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Should we, therefore, conclude that, in the opinion of the conference, there is a greater need to reduce the pressure on Presidential candidates from large campaign contributions than there is to reduce such pressure on congressional candidates?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know that that would necessarily follow. But I would say that the recent experiences in Watergate certainly pointed up the dangers of large contributions, of the use of large amounts of cash, and I am sure that had it not been for Watergate, the facts of Watergate, that we would not have been able to have considered the public financing provision in this bill, just as the distinguished Senator from Alabama pointed out a little earlier, that when that came up in S. 372 this bill was passed the public financing features, and that was just a short time ago, the year before last.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I conclude, therefore, that the opinion of the conference, individuals running for the Senate or House are less subject to those monetary pressures than someone running for the Presidency?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I do not know that that particular issue was considered, as such.

I would just say, the conference was up against a situation where the House was adamant about the point that any public financing provision in this bill, just as the distinguished Senator from Alabama pointed out a little earlier, that when that came up in S. 372 this bill was passed the public financing features, and that was just a short time ago, the year before last.

Mr. CANNON. Correct. The bill, therefore, does not enhance third-party efforts.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I do not think one can say it either enhanced or did not enhance. It does not impose any penalty on them, just makes them prove they are bona fide candidates and have some voter appeal.

I think that should be true in the case of any candidate.

Mr. BUCKLEY. What distinction do the sponsors see between endorsing a candidate for the Presidency, on the one hand, and "discussing important issues" during the campaign on the other? I believe that distinction was made, and it was at least in an earlier version of this bill. I have no idea whether it applies to this.

Mr. CANNON. I do not quite follow what the Senator is referring to.

Mr. BUCKLEY. My understanding is that at least one version of this legislation simply did not study thoroughly this version—made a distinction between expenditures endorsing a candidate versus expenditures for the discussion of important issues during the course of a Presidential or congressional campaign.

Mr. CANNON. If I am interpreting what the Senator is asking correctly, if the question is whether or not the expenditures are made on behalf of the candidate, if it is on behalf of a particular candidate, then it is going to be chargeable to him. Or, if it endorses a candidate, it is going to be chargeable to him in his overall limit.

On the other hand, if some organization comes out and discusses issues that are not related to an identifiable candidate, that is not chargeable to a candidate.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Let us assume that we were back in the days of the Vietnam war controversy, and in a given election one party proposed a bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator suspend so that we can have order in the Chamber? It is getting difficult.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield briefly?

Mr. BUCKLEY. I will.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Does the Senator intend to make a motion to recommit?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Does the Senator intend to ask for the yeas and nays?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask that it be in order at this time to ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT PRO Tempore. The Chair takes notice of that.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I am not sure we have the answer to the question I was positing—namely the distinguished sponsor states that expenditures on a particular candidate obviously are chargeable. But it is possible there is only one candidate identified with a particular issue, and there is a massive expenditure of money to advance that point of view. I mean, mentioning the candidate but just talking about the desirability in the case of withdrawing from Vietnam, that I understand, the sponsors have unrelated to a campaign, and, therefore, not chargeable.

Mr. CANNON. We have not tried to fringe on first amendment rights in this. We have tried to protect first amendment rights. We have permitted an individual himself to go out and spend $1,000 on his own assuming he does not have the authority of a candidate. There is no way that I can see that we could prohibit somebody from paying money to discuss issues, even if they were related to the benefit of an identifiable candidate. There are requirements in here that would limit them, one, to charge the amount of the expenditures to his overall limit, if it is for him, and the other to place a limit on what people can spend in attempting to oppose him.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Does the Senator have the feeling that the sponsor has considered the case where there are three candidates and funds are used to oppose one candidate? How does one charge that expenditure?

Mr. CANNON. If funds are used to oppose one, I guess it would have to be allocated to the one who is more near in tune with the thinking being advocated. But I cannot foresee that situation.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I would like to respectfully suggest that it occurred in my campaign, and in the final weeks there were billboards with catchy slogans that were put up. A number of them said: "Don't vote for Buckley." The others were for other candidates whose views were indistinguishable. I am not sure how one would handle that situation.

Mr. CANNON. This would be for the commission to develop in their regulations after they are appointed, to develop this sort of thinking. I am sure a complaint to the commission would put a stop to that sort of thing. If it were in violation of the first amendment rights.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I have just a final question. Do the sponsors regard the communication to members or persons of this group as linking them with regard to a particular candidate a different form of persuasion than a similar communication to members of Congress?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, because an organization can communicate with its members. That is quite different from communicating with the general public.

There is a provision in the bill, section 308, that permits an organization to communicate with its members.
this measure without considering alternative means, less drastic in their scope, of accomplishing their purposes. The fear of overly persuasive campaigns, particularly when expressed by incumbent members of Congress, strikes dangerously close to the suppression of speech because of its content. It must certainly give the Supreme Court pause when they see officeholders with vested interests in unanimous consent that while the first B.Blr), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. BUCKLEY), I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the Senator yield for 1 minute?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN), and the Senator from Alabama (Mr. SPARKMAN) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARKER) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN) and the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARKER) would each vote "no."

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

1091
So Mr. BRUCKLEY’s motion to recommit the conference report with instructions was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the adoption of the conference report. The yeas and nays have been ordered printed.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, just 1 minute. I should like to clarify something, if I may, with the manager of the bill.

A provision of this bill amends section 1502 of title 5 relating to the activity of State or local employees in Federal campaigns. Specifically, it takes subsection (a) of section 1502 and substitutes a sentence which prohibits a local officer or employee from taking an active part in political management or political campaigns, and substitutes for that a prohibition from being a candidate for Federal office.

It is my understanding, and I should like to ask the manager of the bill, my friend from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), if he agrees with me that State laws which prohibit a State employee, or local laws which prohibit a local employee, from engaging in Federal campaign activities and Federal campaigns are still valid

What we are doing is taking out of the Federal law the prohibition against State or local employees from taking an active part in political management or political campaigns? Is that correct?

I think it is quite important, because many of our States have the so-called little Hatch Act, and it was not our intent to overrule those laws, or to modify them, but to take it out of the Federal law so that Federal law does not prohibit those activities, leaving it up to the States to do so.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is absolutely correct. Section 401 of the House amendment amended section 1502 of title 5, U.S. Code, relating to influencing elections, taking part in political campaigns, prohibitions, and exceptions, to provide that State and local officials and employees may take an active part in political management, and in political campaigns, except that they may not be candidates for elective office.

The conference substitute is the same as the House amendment. It was the intent of the conferees that any State law regulating the political activity of State or local officers or employees is not preempted, but superseded. We did want to make it clear that if a State has not prohibited those kinds of activities, it would be permissible in Federal elections.

This would get away from the situation in which the Federal Government gives the State funds through many different programs, and some of those employees have been fearful that they could not participate in Federal campaigns. This would get away from that problem.

Mr. STEVENS. It is up to the State to determine the extent to which they may participate in Federal elections?

Mr. CANNON. The Senator is right.

The States make that determination.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I believe S. 3044 represents a real step forward in campaign reform. However, I am disappointed that it does not provide public financing at the very least on a matching basis for Senate and House races.

I remain convinced that this is the only way to truly reform political campaigns and I intend to work for that reform.

The bill provides limits on expenditures and on contributions which I support but not the measures to more nearly equalize incumbents and challengers than under the present bill. A most important feature of the bill is the independent Federal Elections Commission with which it is related.

The Commission will have the power to bring civil suits under the new law and will be a great improvement over the present weak system.

I also believe that the extension of the tax checkoff to the President’s nominating system is useful and at least a step toward total public financing. Finally additional disclosure after an election has been added to the law and it was my amendment in the Senate which was incorporated in the final version in a slightly different form.

Congress has had its second campaign reform bill in 3 years after no action in this area since 1925. I believe that progress and shows that Congress is recognizing responsibilities and is trying to reform our campaign practices to avoid the tragedies of Watergate. I intend to dedicate myself to the further improvement of our political system through greater campaign financing changes in the future.

Mr. President, the concern of the legislative leaders of both parties in the State of New York is that New York political campaigns be free from the dirty tricks and other regrettable incidents of Watergate led the legislature to appoint a Citizens Advisory Committee in 1973 to recommend a revision of the New York State campaign laws.

Among the recommendations of that committee was the enactment of a fair campaign code. Following the issuance of that report, New York City, Buffalo, and Albany counties, in consultation with various State and national organizations interested in the area of election reform, including the Senate Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities, the Fair Campaign Practice Committee, both of which have had experience in the national area, the Secretary of the United States Senate, the Clerk of the United States House of Representatives and the Controller General; present reports recommending action in the areas of reforming campaign practices; examination of pertinent regulations and legislation adopted by our sister states; the aid and advice of a political science consultant of recognized experience and stature in this field; and finally, the review and comment by a broad-based citizens advisory panel.

This is the first Fair Campaign Code which permits a different approach to the problem with which it is mandated. It is one which carves with it an obligation by those involved in political campaigns to obey or else run the risk of criticism, denunciation, or a fine. In addition to other penalties, criminal and civil, which may be imposed, depending upon the nature of the infraction.

A fundamental purpose of the Code is to protect the public against immoral and unethical activities, and as stated by the Legislature, "to maintain citizen confidence in and full participation in the political process of our state to the end that government of this state be and remain ever responsive..."

It was out of a strong concern for reform in our campaign finance system that I supported legislation initiating the dollar checkoff and authored the amendment which put it on the front of the income tax form where people could see it and use it.

The amount of money a politician can raise is no measure of democratic responsibility by a candidate for public office. With the passage of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments, we can help restore the faith of the people in their Government. The linkage between the electorate and elected public officials will be improved by this bill.

Mr. President, it is gratifying for one who has labored long in the vineyard of public campaign finance to see such a progressive and creative reform in our system of election campaigns. I have been a vocal advocate of expanded public financing of Federal elections for many years. I strongly support the provisions of the legislation which calls for public campaign financing of Presidential election campaigns. I fully agree with provisions setting strict limits on spending and contributions. I also have been a strong advocate of the appointment of a supervisory board to administer the law, which is part of this bill.

I think the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 does the job that needs to be done. There is room for improvement, but it permits Congress to take a big step in the right direction of campaign finance reform.

Mr. MATHIAS, Mr. President, I rise to support the conference bill on campaign reform reported by the conference committee on which I served.

This bill will conclude another chapter in our efforts toward a reformed political system for America. It cannot be the last chapter, unfortunately, for the bill before us is not as broad in scope as the problems of our campaign finance system. It has been a major step forward.

But this bill does represent a major step forward. For the first time, we will have a strong and independent commission to oversee all Federal elections and enforce Federal laws pertaining thereto. For the first time, we will have reasonable limits on both campaign contributions and campaign spending. For the first time, we have insured that Presidential campaigns, both in the primaries and the general election, will not be dependent on huge gifts of money from special interests.

These are historic reforms. They are possible today only because thousands of Americans cared enough to devote their time and effort to the cause of bringing this bill before us today. Organizations such as Common Cause, the National Committee for an Effective Congress, the Center for Public Financing, the League of Women Voters, and business and labor organizations throughout the country, have all played a major role in giving us the opportunity to vote on this legislation today.

Nor should the earlier voices raised in this cause be forgotten. President Theodore Roosevelt called for public financing in 1907 and a generation later Senator Henry Cabot Lodge renewed the fight that is being won today.

The organization have joined by thousands of individual citizens, who demonstrated that they are as dedicated as we were our constitutional framers, to a system of free, vigorous, fair, and meaningful elections. But the support of these citizens, we would not have this bill before us.

In 1971 I was pleased to join many of my colleagues for the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971. That bill, which contained some 13 amendments which I offered on the Senate floor, established for the first time the principle that all large contributions should be publicly disclosed—that campaigns were public business. It was followed by the "tax checkoff" amendment to the Revenue Act of 1971 which permitted individuals American express support for a system of public financing for Presidential campaigns by designating $1 of his or her taxes for the checkoff. The response to the checkoff has been very encouraging, and it is appropriate that this bill extends the scope of the checkoff to primary campaigns, and insures that all money designated for the checkoff will be available for candidates, if needed.

In 1972, I cochaired, with Senator Stevenson, the Ad Hoc Committee for Congressional Reform. During the public hearings the committee focused on the need for legislation of the type which we will vote on shortly. As a result of these hearings, and of the widespread concern evidenced throughout Maryland, I introduced a bill with Senator Stevenson, and another with Senator Hart, which together contained the major features of the legislation before us.

The public response to these initiatives was strong and positive. I testified before the Senate Rules Committee last September in favor of this legislation, and joined the distinguished members of that committee in support of the bill, S. 3044, which was reported to the floor.

In one major area, however, I feel that the bill before us now is insufficient. That is the area of public financing for congressional campaigns. The Senate expressed its view overwhelmingly in support of such a system when S. 3044 was introduced last spring. Gallup and other nationwide polls have demonstrated that the American people support public financing for congressional races by a majority of almost 2 to 1. And I have found consistent support for this kind of reform as I have talked to citizens throughout my State.

Unfortunately, however, the House conference were adamant that this bill contain a "limited" election campaign limit in it to general election campaigns only, to postpone the effective date to 1978 or 1980, and even to limit it to Senate campaigns only. Yet the House conference unanimously rejected each of these attempts at compromise, and it became clear that the only way to enact the major reforms which this bill contains was to recede from the Senate's position in favor of Congressional public financing. I regret the necessity for each action which I took this position will prevail in time.

Finally, I want to thank a number of my colleagues whose support of this legislation has been of vital importance. These include the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Cannon), the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Hrusch), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. Loeb), the Senator from Florida (Mr. Mo, and M. Pastore), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy), the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Schweiker), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. Hart), the Senator from Vermont (Mr. Stafford), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. Clark), and the Senator from California (Mr. Anderson) whose support should be extended as well to the committee staff headed by Mr. James Duffy.

Mr. Pell. Mr. President, I am pleased to add my firm support to the conference report we are considering, unan-

As a conferee, I had the privilege of sharing in the deliberations between Senate and House which led to the agreement we have reached. I am disappointed that the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 does not contain stronger provisions for public financing. I continue to believe it is one of the most important priority for the future.

As chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Elections, and as the one whose legislation formed the basis for commit-

The House conference, however, were unanimous in their opposition. To me the question was between achieving a bill with some meaningful reform and no bill at all.

I am pleased we have achieved some notable success:

First, we have extended public financing to Presidential primaries.

Second, we have agreed to a Federal Election Commission with an ability to act independently, with some—a limit of the enforcement authority recommended by the Senate.

Third, we have achieved new, realistic and salutary limits to campaign spending. In so doing we have reduced the possibilities of corruption by special interests, and the possibilities of abuse of power by those subject to such corruption.

The bill may not be a giant stride toward election reform—I believe the Senate bill could have provided such a major advance. But the legislation which has emerged from our conference, nonetheless, takes a very important and his-

A GIANT FIRST STEP

Mr. Mondale. Mr. President, this is an historic day for the Senate. The campaign finance reform legislation we will vote on this afternoon is the result of many years of work by many dedicated people, both in and out of Congress. It is our best and most constructive response to the terrible abuses of Water-gate.

I am especially pleased that the bill incorporates the provisions for public financing of Presidential primaries sponsored by Senator Schroeder and myself in the Senate, and by Congressman Joiner Brademas in the House.

This bold system of public and private financing of Presidential primaries will encourage small contributions, and lessen the dependence of candidates on wealthy and powerful special interests. Candidates will be free, as they should be, to serve only their conscience and their constituents.

While I regret that public financing was not extended to House and Senate elections, I believe the legislation we will vote on today has laid the needed groundwork for public financing of all Federal elections. It is only a first step, but it is a giant one.

Mr. Clark. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record the following material which has been prepared by the Center for Public Financing of Elections: A summary of the campaign reform bill: an article entitled "Public Financing of the Presidential Campaign"; and a chart showing the spending limits for Senate candidates.

If there being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Only private gifts raised after January 1976 qualify for matching for the 1976 election; no federal payments will be made before January 1976.

Enforcement

- Creates 6-member Elections Commission responsible for administering election of public financing program, and vested with primary civil enforcement.
- President, Speaker of House, and President Pro Tempore of Senate each appoint two members (of different parties), all subject to confirmation by both Houses of Congress. (Such members may not be officials or employees of any branch of government at time of appointment.)
- Secretary of Senate and Clerk of House to serve as ex officio, non-voting members of the Commission, and their officers to serve as custodian of reports for candidates for Senate and House.
- Commissioners to serve full-time, six-year, staggered terms. Rotating one-year chairmanship.
- Commission to receive campaign reports; make rules and regulations (subject to review by Congress within 30 days); maintain cumulative totals; file and file and file on the court docket, and judicial review.

Public Financing of the Presidential Campaign

Public financing of the 1976 Presidential election is provided under the new Campaign Reform Bill. Here is the way it works:

General election

- Each candidate for President is limited to public funding, which will be apportioned on the basis of past election results.
- Nominees of the major parties are eligible to receive the full $20 million in public funds. Public financing is not mandatory; the candidate may solicit all donations privately. If the candidate "goes private," however, individual contributions are limited to $1,000; organization contributions, $5,000.
- Candidates of minor parties (those receiving at least five percent of the vote in the preceding election) are eligible for partial funding based on the percentage of the vote received. A third party receiving at least one percent of the vote in 1976 will be eligible for partial reimbursement of their expenses.

Nominating conventions

- Political parties are allowed expenditures of $2 million for their presidential nominating conventions. A major party is eligible to receive the full $2 million in public funds, however, a minor party must fund its convention privately. The existing law, permitting corporations to take a tax deduction for advertisements in convention programs books is repealed.

Presidential primaries

- Each candidate for the Presidential nomination is limited to campaign expenditures of $10 million. In each state, he may spend no more than twice the amount permitted a Senate primary candidate; in other words, the candidate may spend no more than $200,000 in the New Hampshire primary; $200,000 in Florida.
- To be eligible for public funds, a candidate must declare himself a candidate for his party's nomination and has received $250 or less in contributions. When the Federal Elections Commission certifies that the candidate has received $250 or less from contributors in each of 20 states—for a total of $100,000 in matchable funds—the Secretary of the Treasury will authorize a matching payment of $100,000 from the Dollar Check-Off Fund. Subsequently, each eligible contribution of $250 or less will be matched from the Treasury.
While an individual may contribute $1,000 and an organization may give $5,000 during the pre-nomination period, only the first $250 will be eligible for matching. No cash contributions will be matched; all contributions must show the taxpayer’s identification number.

In addition to the $10 million spending limit, the candidate is permitted to spend an additional 10 percent—$2 million—for fund-raising costs.

Only contributions raised after January 1, 1976, will be eligible for matching. No public funds will be given out until January 1, 1976.

The source of all public funding is the Presidential Election Campaign Fund. No additional appropriations legislation is required of Congress. The Fund was established in 1971 and is funded by taxpayers who check off Line 8 on IRS Form 1040, designating 3 percent of their taxes ($2 on a joint return) for that purpose.

This Dollar Check-Off Fund now contains $30.1 million. If taxpayers check off Line 8 at the same rate as last year, there will be a minimum of $54 million in the Fund this time for the 1976 election, and very likely more.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the significance of this Federal Elections Campaign Act will be that this act moves us one long stride forward in the area of public financing.

The act makes the appropriations of the money checked off on individual tax returns automatic and implements the action taken already with regard to the Presidential campaign checkoff proposal of $1 optional with each taxpayer. The bill provides also that $2 million would be made available to each of the two major parties, with a formula as is spelled out elsewhere in the checkoff system for appropriate reimbursement for third parties, to provide for expenses of nominating conventions.

Now, the significant thing about this measure is that it provides that hearings for President of the United States may obtained Federal matching once they have achieved enough individual small contributions to merit the thought that they are serious candidates.

To be specific, a candidate must raise $100,000 in contributions of no more than $250, and that candidate must raise as much in the 30 States of the Union as is less by an equal amount up to $5 million so that the candidate could raise a total of $5 million and have $5 million made available to him through Treasury financing.

Mr. President, that is an extension of what this Senator sought to initiate in 1966, almost 6 years ago now, when the then junior Senator from Louisiana brought in an amendment to a revenue bill suggesting that the general election of the President should be financed by a $1 tax checkoff-type proposal as is now the law. That proposal became law as an amendment to a major revenue measure. In time, I believe, the significance of that amendment will dwarf the bill itself and all other amendments that were on it.

In my judgment, the measure intended that it should be something that President Johnson wanted for his own advantage. Now, a few years thereafter, with reference to the 1976 election a certainty. So much so that we made in the election of 1976. Mr. President, there are some who have expressed disappointment and will continue to express disappointment that this bill did not extend the public financing concept to the election of Senators and Members of Congress. I voted for that proposal. In the long run, Mr. President, if I am around here another 6 years, I hope to be one of those who helped put it on the statute books. It is just as well that it does not happen now.

I say that because these major issues should not be decided based on whether it happens but because what he has to say makes the best sense and appeals most to the hearts and minds of the American people.

We will best know how to implement a public financing approach when we have had experience with the checkoff in the election of a President in the year 1976.

Mr. President, the vote on this measure demonstrates the enormous for-
In that long 7 weeks’ fight in 1967, with the President of the United States supporting the checkoff approach, most of us who were supporting it, won about half of the votes. On seven rollcall votes, on one side won four times and the other side won three times. It was a matter of who had the most troops in it. The rollcall votes decided how the vote would go, and on every second vote one group would win and on every alternate vote the other group would win.

Now we see a measure that can muster a majority of approximatively 4 to 1 in the U.S. Senate. Some of that margin now represents those who did not think it was a good idea at the time. That is a mark of tolerance and a mark of ability of people to change with changing times and to recognize with experience that there is something to be said for the other fellow’s side of the argument.

Undoubtedly, the Watergate scandal contributed to this. We now see, Mr. President, that not just a matter of disclosure is that needed to give us a government of all the people and by the people in this country. The disclosure provisions really have in fact made it difficult for challengers to challenge incumbents. It was well discussed in a thoughtful article by David Broder a few days ago.

Disclosure has created as many problems as it has solved. While incumbents have been able to raise adequate funds to finance a campaign, the disclosure provisions have made it difficult for challengers, and far more difficult than ever before, for the challengers to raise funds to finance their part of the campaign, but the public financing features properly implemented will, I am sure, make it possible for every Member who enjoys the benefit of the public financing approach to be completely self-funded as the disclosure provisions have made it very difficult, and far more difficult than ever before, for the challengers to raise funds to finance their part of the campaign.

The experience that we will have in this campaign is implicit in the checkoff proposal. That is that every citizen should have an equal amount of influence, and every person elected to public office should be equally obligated to all citizens; that no one should have influence because of his money, and that no public servant should be in any greater measure beholden to someone because of that money.

This is a red-letter day for our democracy, Mr. President, and I am very pleased to have played a part in the implementation of something that we started 8 years ago.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I would like to express my appreciation to the conference for the tremendous assistance they gave to all of the conference during the subject under discussion.

We have very divergent views on the conference committee, and we had those who were opposed to public financing, those who favored it, those who wanted a tighter disclosure, others, and so on. However, despite the differing views we had very cooperative people and cooperative staff, and I want to express appreciation to all of the conferees and to our fine staff people who assisted us in developing what I think is a very fine campaign reform bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Abourezk). The question is on agreement to the conference report. On this question the ayes and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Assistant Majority Leader called the roll:

Mr. BUCKLEY. (When his name was called). Mr. President, on this vote I have a conflict between the Senator from Texas (Mr. HARKER), if he were present and voting, he would vote “yea.” If I were present and voting, I would vote “nay.” Therefore, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BUCKLEY) has decided to be in a way where the President will be equally obligated to all citizens and especially obligated to none, will lead us to finance, in time, our congressional campaigns in a way that will have equally as much merit.

With experience, the public will understand it better. In the last analysis, Senators and Congressmen want to do what the public wants. The public will be in a better position to advise us what it thinks about this type of campaign financing when it has had experience with the outcome of implementation of what we start in 1976, which, in my judgment, is a very appropriate time to implement the type of suggestion that was implicit in the checkoff proposal. That is that every citizen should have an equal amount of influence, and every person elected to public office should be equally obligated to all citizens; that no one should have influence because of his money, and that no public servant should be in any greater measure beholden to someone because of that money.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. CANNON), the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HARKER) and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. DOLE) would each vote “aye.”

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. CANNON), the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HARKER) and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. DOLE) would each vote “aye.”

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD--SENATE S 18545

October 8, 1974

TRANSPORTATION SAFETY ACT OF 1974

Mr. MANSFIELD. During the consideration of S. 4057 yesterday, Senator Hart was ruled out of order in discussing the amendment. Mr. Hart then withdrew his amendment. On a subsequent amendment, Mr. Hart announced that he would return to the floor at a later date. The majority of the Senate agreed, and the amendment was withdrawn. Thereafter, H.R. 15223 was considered by the Senate and the text of the Senate bill, as amended, was substituted for the language in the House bill. Therefore, the bill as passed contains several mistakes. Section 208(c) of the bill should be deleted as should title 4 of the bill.

The unanimous consent of the Senate to reconsider the passage of H.R. 15223 including the third reading and that section 208(c) and all of title 4 of S. 4057 be deleted and that the bill as thus corrected be reentered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRAVEL EXPENSE AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1974

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 3341.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate amendatory bill, H.R. 15223, the House of Representatives to per diem and mileage expenses of employees and other individuals traveling on official business, and for other purposes, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert: That this Act may be called the "Travel Expense Amendments Act of 1974".

Sec. 2. Section 6702 of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows: "§ 6702. Per diem employees traveling on official business

(a) An employee while traveling on official business away from his principal place of duty in the United States, shall be entitled to per diem allowance for travel inside the continental United States at a rate not to exceed $45. For travel outside the continental United States, the per diem allowance shall be established by the Administrator of General Services, or his designee, in accordance with regulations prescribed under section 5707 of this title.

(b) An employee who, while traveling on official business away from his principal place of duty, becomes incapacitated by illness or injury not due to his own misconduct, is entitled to the per diem allowance and appropriate travel and subsistence expenses until such time as he can again travel, and to the per diem allowance and transportation expenses during return travel to his designated post of duty.

(c) Under regulations prescribed under section 5707 of this title, the Administrator of General Services, or his designee, may prescribe conditions under which an employee may be reimbursed for the actual and necessary expenses of official travel when the maximum per diem allowance would be less than these expenses, except that such reimbursement shall not exceed:

1. $50 per day for travel within the continental United States when the maximum per diem allowance is determined to be inadequate (A) due to the unusual circumstances of the travel assignment, or the non-regional areas designated as such in regulations prescribed under section 5707; or (B) when the employee travels to an expense area, $20 per diem rate prescribed for travel outside the continental United States.

(d) This section does not apply to a Justice of the Supreme Court, or to the extent provided by section 456 of title 28.

Sec. 4. Section 5003 of title 3, United States Code, is amended to read as follows: "§ 5003. Mileage and related allowances.

2. 15 cents a mile for the use of a privately owned automobile or airplane.

3. $4 per hour for the use of a privately owned airplane, instead of subsistence allowance when that mode of transportation is authorized or approved as more advantageous to the Government. A determination of advantage and a maximum payment of less than per mile basis is limited to the cost of travel by common carrier including per diem.

(b) Per diem allowances authorized under subsection (a) of this section, the employee may be reimbursed for:

Sec. 7. The seventh paragraph under the heading "Administrative Provisions" in the Senate appropriation in the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1957 (2 U.S.C. 663), is amended by striking out "$29" and $94 and inserting in lieu thereof "$30" and "$85", respectively.

Sec. 8. Item 5707 of the House Appropriation Act, 1974 (S. 946) is hereby amended to read as follows: "§ 5707. Regulations and reports."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, the Senate, after some effort, passed S. 3341 relating to per diem and mileage expenses on September 19. The House was scheduled to take up a similar bill, H.R. 15503, under suspension of the rules on Monday, October 7. Discussion with House staff indicates that the bill will pass in its present form, and it has passed in its present form.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, and hereby request a conference on S. 3341.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. On behalf of the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Metcalf), and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Percy), I ask unanimous consent that the Senate, and the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Huddleston), and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Percy), be appointed as conferees with the House on H.R. 15503.

There being no objection, the President appointed Mr. Metcalf, Mr. Huddleston, and Mr. Percy as conferees with the House on H.R. 15503.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 898--NATIONAL LEGAL SECRETARIES' COURT OBSERVANCE WEEK

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I send to the desk a joint resolution authorizing the President to proclaim the second full week in October 1974, as National Legal Secretaries' Court Observance Week, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be sent for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 888) was read the first time by title and the second time--at length, as follows:

Passed by the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is hereby authorized and requested to issue a proclamation designating the second full week in October, 1974, as "National Legal Secretaries' Court Observance Week", and calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, yesterday the House of Representatives passed House Joint Resolution 898. It has come over to the Senate and is now pending before the Senate.

This resolution honors the secretaries of the Nation, an honor that is justly due.

I am very pleased that the House passed it, and I hope the Senate will see it fit to pass it, too.
I have heard this resolution with the majority leader, Mr. MANSFIELD, the assistant majority leader, Mr. Byrd, the minority leader, Mr. SCOTT, the assistant minority leader, Mr. GRIFFIN, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee Mr. Eastland, and the two members of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee who handle resolutions of this nature, Mr. McCLELLAN and Mr. HARKUS.

Mr. President, I hope that the Senate acts on this resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the reading and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 898) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

A PROGRAM TO CONTROL INFLATION IN A HEALTHY AND GROWING ECONOMY

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a fact sheet relating to the program to control inflation in a healthy and growing economy which was referred to the Committee on Finance at the address before the joint session of Congress.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record as follows:

A PROGRAM TO CONTROL INFLATION IN A HEALTHY AND GROWING ECONOMY

Although our economic system remains sound and strong, with its basic vitality intact, the economy is suffering from a number of deficiencies. Inflation is a problem facing all countries. Interest rates are exorbitant. Housing is suffering badly, the productive capacity of the economy is expanding too slowly.

The origins of these problems are complex. Part of the problem can be traced to the Second World War, which made the United States a more attractive source for scarce resources.

The trampling of crude oil prices, which exerted a powerful and pervasive effect on the entire world price structure.

Here at home, a long period of excessively stimulative policies created inflationary pressures that gradually and inexorably mounted in international trade. With that condition prevailing, the economy could not absorb the outside shocks; rather, those now being built into the system, deepening and extending our problem.

Twice within the past decade, in 1967 and in 1971-72, we attempted to regain price stability by the control of foreign demand. Thus, inflation has gathered momentum and has become a chronic concern of producers and consumers alike. Indeed, today inflation is the primary cause of our recession fears.

Consumer confidence has been shaken, causing a lack of saving, which is clearly indicated by the lack of growth in the physical volume by the end of 1971, and a 10 percent of the yearly rate at which our financial markets, including the stock market, which were structured for an economy with a relatively stable price level.

Another serious creation is the fact that the excess of our civilian labor force has been expanding faster than the production of capital equipment. For this reason, the effectiveness of price controls in certain bottlenecks and other basic materials—created policies of unemployment which thereby would have been in the form of price controls on new capital goods and programs in this vital industry.

Thus, because the inflation problem must be curtailed, the addition of new capital goods and programs in such industries has been accelerated. It is also clear that the current controls on profits held back the production of capital goods in this vital industry.

We must, therefore, have strong policy of curbed inflation. We must reduce the costs of health and growing economy, and the burden of this inflationary cost, in which we are the principal beneficiaries of the economy, is shared with the United States.

The American people have a right to expect from the government a strong sound policy that our previous policies will be followed to safeguard the purchasing power of money and oil.

We therefore suggest that the section of the Act referred to read as follows: "... and seeking to the employment of the government's general policy of stabilization of the price level."

INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION

There is much that we can do to restore the stability of the international economy. The economic problems of one nation, as well as with them, affect the rest of the world. Governments that have only the stability of the economy to take responsibility not only to maintain these policies, but also to act, in a way that complements, rather than disrupts, the constructive efforts of others.

This is particularly true for major economic factors, as the United States. Our inflation and foreign policy is intended to contribute to the strengthening of the international economy, and, further, to work with others so that:

- We can ensure the secure and reasonable price level, particularly food and fuel, for all nations.
- We can maintain the national policy of stability not to disrupt the economy, and purchasing power for all nations.
- We can prevent the early warning of potential shifts in supply and demand so that nations can avoid potential disruptions.
- We can try to harmonize national efforts in such areas as conservation, investment and payment balances of payments.

A resolution led by Ambassador Eisenhower was introduced today for the United States to join Japan to determine how we can better deal with inflationary problems in a mutually supportive fashion.

A cornerstone of our international efforts is the multilateral trade negotiations scheduled to begin in the World Trade Organization next year. A new multilateral trade agreement will provide the United States with an opportunity to recommend how we can reduce trade barriers. The objective of the President's bill is to improve the United States situation so that United States can participate in the trade negotiations unhampered. Without any further delay, it is critical that the President's bill be passed.

The United States can play a leadership role in the negotiation to reduce distortions of trade and investment and trade barriers for farmers in one nation to pay for the economic policies of another nation. We can also work towards a multilateral system of trade and investment that will improve the United States economy.

Food prices are of major concern in our fight against inflation. Because of the weather problems and heavy demand for food around the world, food prices are anticipated to increase at an annual rate of 10 percent or more. We must end the world's dependence on the world food market, which is not by a reduction in crop production, improving productivity, and containing foreign demand.

We therefore suggest that the section of the Act referred to read as follows: "... and seeking to the employment of the government's general policy of stabilization of the price level."

The United States can maintain the stability of the international economy, and the burden of this inflationary cost, is shared by the United States.

On the past weekend the Federal Government invited a voluntary program to monitor grain exports. We can and shall have adequate supplies at home, and through cooperation must be good for the farmers. A committee of the Economic Policy Board has been appointed for determining policy under this program. In addition, in order to better allocate our agricultural resources, the Federal Government has asked that a provision be added to Public Law 480, under which we ship food to needy countries, to waive certain restrictions on shipments under the Act on national interests or humanitarian grounds.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Federal Reserve System have been directed to help reduce the cost of food by improving efficiency in the agricultural sector. The President and the council on Wage and Price Stability will review marketing orders to ensure that they do not reduce food supplies. Government regulations will be reviewed to see those that interfere with productivity in the food processing and distribution industries.

REV. MICHAEL P. REGAN

(Mr. WYDLER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WYDLER. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, the prayer was offered today by the Reverend Michael P. Regan, who is the director of Christian education at the Cathedral School in Garden City, N.Y. This, of course, is the church school which is associated with the Cathedral of the Incarnation, which is not only in my congressional district, but in the village in which I live. It also happens to be my own church.

It is a particular delight to have the Reverend Michael P. Regan here today. I know how proud his mother and father are of the fact that he has offered the opening prayer to this session of Congress.

When he asked me to arrange for him to give this prayer, he stated that he and his mother made his Garden City day when the new Vice President was sworn in. I told him that he was somewhat uncertain as to time and he would have to settle for another date. It was arranged for today, and of course, this is the day before I think we are going to recess, and it is an auspicious date for the House.

I will just say this about Reverend Regan. He is in charge of the Cathedral School. He is loved by the children of our cathedral and our young adults as well and has the respect of the parishioners.

I include in the Record the outstanding background of this fine man of God:

THE REVEREND CANNON MICHAEL P. REGAN

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr.Reynolds, has the floor. The gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Frenzel, will call his 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hays).

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I have a brief explanation of what the conferences did if the Members are interested. If I detect they are not, I will cut it down. I do not want to take anybody’s time if I know what is in the bill.

The conferences limited the contribution by any one person for a candidate to Federal office to $1,000 per election. Before somebody asks me what this “per election” means, that means a primary and a general, and if there are States that have a law and one is engaged in a runoff, it means a runoff.

No individual may contribute more than $25,000 to all Federal candidates for any election period. And an election period is 2 years and includes contributions to party organizations.

A limit of $1,000 is also placed on independent expenditures by anyone on behalf of one candidate for Federal office for an independent campaign which includes campaigns, runoffs, special or general elections.

The conferences placed certain limits on multi candidates political committees and organizations making contributions.

To qualify they must be registered with the Election Commission for 6 months, receive contributions from 50 persons, and except for State party organizations make contributions to at least five candidates.

The conferences placed a $5,000 limit on the amount an organization may contribute to any election, Here again all Presidential primaries are treated as a single election. The $5,000 limit is applicable to each primary, runoff, special or general election, as the case may be.

Candidates are limited to expenditures from their personal funds or the personal funds of their immediate families as follows:

- Presidential candidate, $50,000 for an entire campaign;
- Senatorial candidate, $35,000 for an entire campaign;
- House candidate, $25,000 for an entire campaign.

Mr. Speaker, a little bit like the Duke of Devonshire when he was Queen Victoria’s leader, the House of Lords and he was reading the budget and nobody was paying any attention and right in the middle of the speech he said, “Damn dull, isn’t it?” and sat down. I have done everything but sit down and if I get too dull, I will do that in a minute or two. I thought some people might want to know what is in this bill it goes into effect.

National and State party organizations are limited to $5,000 in actual contributions to Federal candidates, but may make limited contributions such as on salaries and expenses.

The conferences limit Presidential candidates to $10 million for campaign expenditures in a primary and $20 million in a general election.

Candidates for the House are limited to $70,000 for each election, plus a 20 percent fundraising cost.

Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentlewoman from New York. She is making a lovely speech. She is making a lovely speech.

The conferences limit candidates for the Senate and Representatives at large to the greater of $100,000 or 8 cents times the voting age population in a primary, the greater of $150,000, or 12 cents times the voting age population in a general election.

They may also spend an additional 20 percent in fundraising expenses.

Public financing is provided for the 1976 Presidential election; the general election each candidate is limited in campaign expenditures to $20 million and nominees of the major parties are eligible to receive the full $20 million in public funds.

Public financing is not mandatory. The candidate may solicit all donations privately. If the candidate went public he would have to have a bank in his head, but we have had some that I thought did have rocks in their heads.

Candidates of minor parties—those receiving at least 5 percent of the vote in the preceding election—are eligible for partial funding based on the percentage of the vote received. A third party receiving at least 5 percent of the vote in 1976 will be eligible for partial reimbursement of their expenses.

We allowed $2 million for nominating conventions and again they can take it or not as they like; however, if they decide to go public and not take the $2 million we have repealed the increased deductions for advertisements and convention program books.

Each candidate for Presidential nomination is limited to campaign expenditures of 10 million and they have to raise matching dollars from each of 20 States in amounts of not more than $250 before they will become eligible for matching funds. After raising the $100,000 they are eligible to have
Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. BRADEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the Chairman for what I think is an excellent job in a very difficult area, and I support campaign reform.

I did not hear the Chairman comment on the issue of preemption. Is there a pre-emption clause?

Mr. HAYS. There is a preemption clause. It is the only part of the bill on these sheets which I tried to leave out in order to save time.

The pre-emption clause would become effective January 1, 1975.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BRADEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BRADEN. Mr. Speaker, I rose in strong support of the conference report to H. R. 1105, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay a word of special tribute to the distinguished Mr. ADAMS, the Chairman of the House Administration Committee, the Honorable WAYNE L. HAYS, Democrat of Ohio, for his outstanding leadership on this important legislation, as well as to other members of the committee, particularly the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. THOMPSON) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ARNIZENZ) and the chairman of the Elections Subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. DENT) and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

Indeed, members of the committee on both sides of the aisle helped make possible that good bill and come to be regarded as a major accomplishment of the 93rd Congress.

Many individuals and groups contributed to the shaping and passage of this legislation. In particular, I want to pay tribute to members of the majority staff of the House Administration Committee, John Walker and Bill Sudow, to Ralph Smith and Bill Loughery of the minority staff, to the house legislative counsel, Bill Adams and John Cimko.

Although many groups who have worked on this legislation have, at times, had differing opinions regarding specific provisions of the campaign reform bill, they have all been most helpful and I would like to extend special thanks to the Center for Public Financing of Elections and Common Cause for their contributions.

Mr. Speaker, this measure is a historic advance in the reform of our campaign finance laws, one which will go a long way toward eliminating the influence of big money in our Federal elections and one which will make our system of financing campaigns for Federal office more fair and open.

The conference report sets strict limits on campaign expenditures and contributions. To limit the influence of big money in the areas which I believe offer the greatest potential for abuse--all phases of election to the office of President--the conference report strengthens the existing dollar checkoff law with respect to presidential general elections and authorizes the use of checkoffs on funds for presidential nominating conventions and presidential primary elections.

To strengthen the enforcement of Federal election laws, the conference report improves the reporting requirements of the Federal Election Campaign Act, provides for principal campaign committees to centralize reporting requirements, and establishes an independent Federal Election Commission to supervise and enforce Federal election laws.

Mr. Speaker, I would like briefly to summarize the major provisions of the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974.

CONTRIBUTION LIMITS

The bill would limit contributions to candidates by persons to $1,000 per election--primary, runoff, special election and general election.

It would limit contributions to a candidate by multi-candidate committees to $5,000 per election. Multi-candidate committees would be defined as committees which have, first, been established for an election campaign pursuant to the Federal Election Campaign Act; two, received contributions from more than 50 persons; and, three, contributed to at least five candidates for Federal office.

The bill would prohibit contributions by foreign nationals and would limit the aggregate of all contributions by any individual to $5,000 per year, except that, for contributions of this type under $1,000 for contributions of this type under $1,000 contributions would be counted as contributions in an election year.

EXPENDITURE LIMITS

Mr. Speaker, the report would also set strict limits on campaign spending.

Candidates for the Senate and Representative-at-large would be able to spend no more than $20 million; candidates for nomination to the office of President could spend no more than $10 million.

Candidates for the Senate and Representative-at-large would be able to spend $70,000 in each of the elections, primary, general, runoff, and special election.

In addition, the bill would allow candidates to spend up to 20 percent above these limits to meet the costs of fundraising. This provision is particularly important in view of the substantial cost of raising campaign funds through small contributions.

The bill would also allow the national party organizations and State and local party organizations to make additional contributions.
Mr. Speaker, the Federal Election Campaign Act amendments would impose strict limits on the use of cash by requiring that all cash contributions and cash expenditures in excess of $100 be by written instrument.

PRINCIPAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEES AND DISCLOSURE REPORTS

To simplify reporting requirements and facilitate the dissemination of campaign finance information, the bill would eliminate the need for pre-election reports and would substitute for them the single preelection report 10 days before each election.

In addition, the bill would require a report 30 days after each election. Candidates and committees would not be required to file quarterly reports if such a report should fail within 10 days of a primary or post-election report or if in that quarter neither contributions nor expenditures exceed $1,000.

The bill also would provide for the designation of principal campaign committees to file consolidated reports of all expenditures and contributions of committees supporting the candidate.

Conference also agreed to a new provision that would require any organization which expends any funds or commits any act directed to the public for the purpose of influencing the outcome of an election or which broadcasts to the public any material referring to a candidate advocating the election or defeat of such candidate to file reports pursuant to the Federal Election Campaign Act, just as any other political committee must file. A question has been raised whether this section requires newspapers to file reports required therein, particularly with regard to advertising they may print favoring or opposing candidates. I wish to state that it is my understanding as a member of a majority of the conference committee that we did not intend to require newspapers, periodicals, or bona fide newspapers, magazines, or other periodical publications, as defined in this section, to file disclosure reports.

Mr. Speaker, to assure full compliance with effective enforcement of the election laws, the bill would establish an independent Federal Election Commission.

The Commission would be composed of eight members—six members of the public appointed on a bipartisan basis, two each by the Speaker of the House, the President pro tempore of the Senate and the President; and two ex-officio members, the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate, selected, if possible, of whom are to serve without a right to vote.

Under the bill, candidates for the House and Senate would continue to file disclosure reports with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate. Any apparent violations of election laws which the Clerk or the Secretary discover would have to be referred immediately to the Commission.

The Commission could then refer those apparent violations to the Department of Justice for appropriate enforcement action or could investigate these and any other complaints alleging election law violations and encourage voluntary compliance through informal means.

The Commission would have civil enforcement authority but the Department of Justice would have the responsibility to prosecute apparent violations of the criminal election laws.

Mr. Speaker, it was the purpose of the conference that the Federal Election Commission has primary jurisdiction in election law matters and that persons, individuals or organizations who may have complaints about possible violations first exhaust their administrative remedies with the Commission. It was not the view of the conference that the Commission should seek to effect voluntary compliance through informal administrative procedures before it initiates any civil enforcement action.

To assure expeditious enforcement action by the Department of Justice, the bill requires the Attorney General to report to the Congress on the status of referrals—60 days after the referral and at the close of every 30-day period thereafter.

To assure that regulations written by the Commission conformed with the election laws, the Commission would be required to submit its regulations to the House and the Senate for review and approval.

PUBLIC FINANCING OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS

And finally, Mr. Speaker, the bill would provide a full package for public financing of Presidential elections.

The bill would strengthen the existing dollar checkoff fund established by the 1974 law Congress would expand the Presidential general elections by providing that the amount of public money available from the checkoff fund conforms to the spending limit for general elections. There would be a $2 million limit on contributions, which the dollars checked off by individual taxpayers are actually available, by providing that the dollar checkoff fund be self-appropriating.

In addition, the bill authorizes up to $5 million of dollar checkoff funds to each of the major political parties for Presidential primary campaigns and for the national convention. Each of the political parties would choose to finance its convention with private resources could continue to do so. However, for the primary campaign period, and under ordinary circumstances, be limited to $2 million for each party convention.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the bill would provide for limits on the dollar checkoff fund for small contributions. Presidential primary candidates would receive matching payments for the first $250 or less contributed. The maximum amount of public money a candidate would receive would be one-half the expenditure limit for Presidential primaries. Under this bill, that would mean that each candidate would receive up to $5 million. To prevent public financing of frivolous candidates, the bill would require a candidate to accumulate at least $5,000 in matchable contributions—$250 or less—across the country to accumulate approximately $86 million by 1976 and that the $46 million would be used for general elections and conventions, approximately $18 million should be available for primary elections.

Mr. Speaker, I regard public financing of presidential campaigns as one of the most important features of the bill. Clearly, the potential for the abuse of big money is the greatest in the area of presidential elections, and public financing of these elections, in my view, drastically reduce the possibilities of abuse.

Mr. Speaker, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 is solid, constructive campaign reform legislation. If passed, this bill, I am confident, will prove to be a major advance in the financing of campaigns for Federal office. I urge the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I include in the Record a summary of the campaign reform bill prepared by Susan King and Neal Gregory of the Center for Public Financing of Elections:

Mr. HAYS. Well, not specifically. We tried to deal with that in a general way by giving some small exemptions. I will just give the gentleman one example. If somebody sells food and beverages for a fund raiser at a price less than his cost, the difference between the wholesale price and retail price is not considered to be a contribution. We tried to spell out those various gray areas as best we could.

Mr. KETCHUM. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. Yes, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I certainly want to commend the chairman of the committee for the outstanding job he has done, particularly in view of the existing pressures, for having worked out a bill that I think protects the public interest against improperly influenced elections and at the same time provides some relief from being used to influence elections improperly. Particularly I am referring to the chairman's stand against a Presidentially appointed elections commission. In light of Watergate, such a commission could have opened the door to gross abuses. We all owe the gentlemen a debt of gratitude. He and the other members of the conference committee deserve our gratitude.

Mr. HAYS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I prefer that the other side use some of their time. I am down to very little time left. Perhaps they can answer the questions I have not. Perhaps I will get some time and yield later.

The important aspects of the legislation should be underline. In this House conference successfully insisted that the Federal Election Commission created by the act have "primary jurisdiction with respect to the civil enforcement" of the act's provisions. The current provisions of the United States Code regulating Federal elections, with one minor exception, state that violations shall be punished through the criminal law. The bill before the House, while retaining and strengthening these criminal sanctions provides also for a comprehensive system of civil enforcement. Under the scheme to assure that civil suits are not misused in a partisan manner, and that the complex and sensitive rights and duties stated in the act are administered expertly and uniformly, the act provides a donation to a candidate as predicating upon or pertaining in any manner to titles I and III of the act or sections 308 through 617 of title 18 United States Code shall be channeled to the Commission. Under section 315 persons challenging the constitutionality of any provision of the act, retain their right to do so in court without exhaust-

Mr. DEVINE. Yes, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEVINE. Yes, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DEVINE. As far as the House is concerned, the House and Senate no longer are included in the public financing feature.

The limitation on the amount for primary and elections of representatives was increased from $20,000 to 25 percent for fundraising expenses, to $70,000, plus 20 percent, which totals roughly $84,000.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEVINE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I wonder if I might get the attention of the chairman of the Committee on House Administration so that I can pursue the question I wanted to ask the chairman of the Committee on House Administration earlier.

I would like to ask about the qualifications of third parties for public financing, as provided for in this conference report.

Let us assume, if we can, that parties... qualify under the laws of each State, and in one State we have a third party listed on the ballot as the American Party; in another State, the third party listed is the Independent Party; in another State, the Independent-American-Independent Party, each nominating the same candidate or the same candidates for President and Vice President. How is the 5-percent rule of not 50 per cent plus 1 vote figured which would disqualify a party or the candidate for some share of public financing?

Mr. HAYS. To answer the gentleman, the preceding election would be the qualifying purporting to be a candidate of one party ran in different States under different labels, I do not see what we can stretch the law to prevent it. They have to get more than 5 percent and less than 15 percent on the vote to be qualified as a minor party.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Under the same party label in all States and with the same party trustees, as it were, in all States.

Mr. HAYS. The Commission can issue regulations.

It would be, I believe, the intent of the House conferees—and I am not speaking for the others, but I believe they would actually vote under the same label.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. So that the same party would have to qualify in several different States in order to qualify under the 5-percent provision.

Mr. HAYS. I would think they would have to qualify in several different States in order to accumulate the 5 percent.

The Speaker. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Devine) has expired.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. Rousselet).

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's yielding.

Just so the record is clear, and I am sure we all understand this, even though the gentleman has mentioned that the tax form of a system, has been validated so that individuals may participate on a voluntary basis, those “checkoff” dollars still have to come out of the Treasury, and it is an equal cost to all other appropriations that we have made; is that not true?

Mr. DEVINE. Mr. Speaker, the checkoff system is a voluntary effort on the part of the taxpayer who feels he would like to participate in public funding of a Presidential and Vice-Presidential campaign. It does not mean he is charged the dollar out of his income tax return; it means the dollar he pays into the Treasury is earmarked for the campaign, the first $2 million of which goes to each party for the convention and the balance of which, up to $20 million, goes to each major party.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DEVINE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROUSSELOT Those dollars are still add-on dollars, dollars that have to come out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. DEVINE. They constitute a net loss to the Treasury, that is correct.

Mr. ROUSSELOT Even though it could be considered indirect, this means that this bill establishes another way by which we will be contributing to deficit financing?

Mr. DEVINE. Yes. We are talking in the area of about $44 million each 4 years.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, is it the gentleman's will to yield further, I will ask this:

So this great belief and myth that has been promoted by several organizations that this is kind of “free money” clearly is not true?

Mr. DEVINE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman well knows there is no such thing as “free money” in the spirit of the election process. It is merely distributors; we are not producers. It all must come from the taxpayers.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman for his response.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. Armstrong).

(Mr. Armstrong asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to my friend, the gentleman from Minnesota, for yielding time to me. I congratulate him and other Members who have worked to bring this conference report before the House. I congratulate them on their effort. But I disagree with the result.

At 1 hour 21 minutes of the House before, I think there are many mischievous provisions in this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, there is some good in this legislation. I am particularly pleased that this conference has provided a strong independent commission to enforce provisions of this act.

But I would be remiss if I did not voice my objection to Federal financing of conventions and to the failure of this bill to adequately define and outlaw certain improper in-kind contributions, and for the fact that it is in tone and in detail a “sweetheart” bill, one that will serve primarily to reelect incumbents and make it harder than ever for challengers to unseat an entrenched incumbent.

But Mr. Speaker, the heart of this bill that make it most objectionable, the part that makes an antideficit bill, is the provision that limits the right of voters to speak out on candidates who are running for public offices.

It is one thing to limit candidates expenditures. But it is completely wrong to limit the rights of citizens in this regard.

Although it is probably unconstitutional to do so, it may be a good policy to restrict candidate spending.

However, when that same limitation is applied to people who are not running for office, the American people, attempting to comment on the election process, it is a different matter. When we give to candidates for public office the veto power over other persons rights, those who wish only to comment, those who may wish to support a candidate, those who may want to oppose a candidate and support another, and those who may want to take out a newspaper advertisement to say, “A box on both candidates,” then we are tinkering with a fundamental right of the American people.

We are introducing a concept that is probably unconstitutional, as indeed a 3-judge court in New York said not too long ago in the case of American Against Jennings. I believe the Supreme Court will affirm the lower court's ruling in that case.

But it is not my purpose to argue the narrow legal question. I am simply telling the Members it is wrong. I think in our hearts we know it is wrong; we know it is contrary to the American system and it is contrary to the spirit of the election process. This day will come when we will reverse this unwise act we are about to take.

So with regret I am going to vote against this conference report. Not regret because I am taking an unpopular position, but regret that the House has once again failed to institute true reform in legislation and has instead, broadened this legislation that is reform in name only and which is, in fact, antireform.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

(Mr. Armstrong asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report to which Mr. S. J. O. C. S. S. (Mr. Speaker, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974.

The conferees have adopted most of the best provisions of the House and Senate bills. The final results is a bill with numerous significant changes. Perhaps the greatest weakness is the low spending limit which makes the bill to some extent, an “incumbent protection bill.” Also, the bill does not repeal the equal time provision and fails to stringent regulate special interest giving, but it does have the following positive features:

First, and most importantly, the bill establishes an independent Elections Commission with the power and authority to oversee all Federal election law. Commissioners will be full-time and serve 6-year terms. Two will be appointed by the President, two by the President pro tempore upon the recommendations of the majority and minority leaders of the Senate, and two by the Speaker upon the recommendations of the majority and minority leaders of the House. The Commission will have both subpoena and civil enforcement powers. Criminal enforcement remains with the Justice Department, but the Attorney General is held accountable to the Commission for reporting on the disposition of violations referred to him. The establishment of an independent Commission is the key provision of the bill. The bill is squarely in the expeditious enforcement of the law, while reversing the long history of nonenforcement.

Second, the conference report sets limits on contributions. No individual will be allowed to give more than $1,300 per election per candidate. No political committee more than $5,000. Individuals will be limited to $25,000 in contributions to all candidates and committees every 2 years. The $25,000 provision will be the death knell of the ‘fat cat’. It will take not 1 year, but 160 years for the Stewart Mote and Clement Stone and other big spenders to give $2 million to all Federal candidates, and 2,000 years to give $2 million to one candidate.

Third, expenditures are limited to $70,000 per House race plus 20 percent for fund raising. In Senate and races for Representative in States with only one Representative, a candidate can spend the greater of $100,000 or $20,000 in the primary election and $150,000 or 12 cents per voter in the general election. A candidate for President can spend up to $10 million for the nomination and $20 million in the general election. Coupled with the cost of living index and the provisions which allow parties to spend independently of candidates, the bill will eliminate the worst spending abuses, while assuring that a challenger has at least some chance to defeat an incumbent.

Fourth, the bill increases the role of political parties in campaign financing. Both the national committee and the State committee of a political party will be able to make expenditures of $10,000 to candidates for the House in addition to the expenditure limitations imposed on the candidate. By contributing to a candidate, the party can increase his spending limit by $20,000. The comparable figures for Senate races and races for Representative in a State with only one Representative will be the greater of $20,000 or 2 cents per voter.

Fifth, candidates will be encouraged to raise funds from small contributors through the 20 percent allowance for fund raising.

Sixth, the bill limits cash contributions to $100.

Seventh, the bill prohibits contributions by foreign nationals.

Eighth, expenditures from the candidate’s own funds, the personal funds of his immediate family are reduced to $25,000 for the House, $35,000 for the Senate and $50,000 for the President.

Ninth, the conference agreement limits honorariums to $1,000 per appearance and $15,000 per calendar year.

Tenth, the bill makes it unlawful for a candidate or any agent or employee of a candidate to fraudulently misrepresent himself as acting for or on behalf of any candidate or political party.

Eleventh, it requires rating groups and other organizations which attempt to influence public opinion to register with the Commission, with political committees and report the source and amount of its funds and its expenditures.

Twelfth, it requires all candidates to designate a principal campaign committee and depository. All reports by committees supporting a candidate must be compiled by the principal campaign committee and all expenditures must be made by a check drawn on the depository, and no petty cash expenditures of less than $100.

Thirteenth, the bill reduces the 5- and 15-day preselection reports to 1 ten-day report. Also, candidates will not have to file reports in any calendar quarter in which they receive contributions in excess of $1,000.

Fourteenth, the Commission can by written advisory opinion determine whether specific transactions or activities are violations of the law. Any candidate who complies with an advisory opinion shall be presumed to be in compliance with the law.

Fifteenth, the bill provides for expeditious review of constitutional questions. Unlike at present, we will not be left in limbo for a prolonged period of time before the Supreme Court expeditiously review the constitutionality of election law.

Sixteenth, the bill preempts State laws that candidates will no longer have to worry about complying with 51 different sets of standards and reporting requirements.

Seventeenth, the media expenditure limitations are repealed. Candidates have the flexibility to spend their money as they see fit.

Eighteenth, State and local employers are allowed to participate in political campaigns.

Nineteenth, public financing is limited to $7,000 per candidate. With the cost of living index, this is roughly the same as the current $100,000 limit per candidate.

Twentieth, the bill becomes effective on January 1, 1975 after the campaign has ended and before special interest and other people have time to invest time and money to make use of this new law.

Mr. Speaker, passage of this legislation will end the American people’s long wait for a positive response to the events of the past few years. Public concrete action can do more to restore public confidence than the passage of a meaningful campaign reform bill. By giving overwhelming support to this landmark legislation, we will send a clear message to the American people that Congress is concerned about, and responsive to the need to restore public confidence in our democratic system of government.

The conference agreement contains a sweep of reforms which will place limitations on contributions and expenditures, create an independent administrative and enforcement mechanism, publicly finance presidential elections, and maintain and strengthen the disclosure provisions of the 1971 law.

While the conference was well aware that in their deliberations and spent considerable time and effort in coming to an agreement, there were some finer points that have not been covered in either the bill or the conference report. There was not sufficient time in the conference to deal with these problems. I would like to comment on them briefly today.

A major problem with the limitations on contributions is that organizations that contribute to candidates may attempt to proliferate their political committees to circumvent the limitations. Thus, an organization could divide into 20 committees each able to give $5,000 or a total of $100,000 to a candidate. This subterfuge would be clearly a violation of the law.

The conference accepted the House version on committee limits. The House report contained language in two places dealing with this problem. Unfortunately, due to an oversight, the conference report only included the language on page 15 of the House report. It should have also included the language on page 15, which reads as follows:

A question was raised in the conference regarding the possibility of allowing the limit on contributions by political committees where a national committee of a political organization may contribute the maximum of $20,000 to each candidate and a state or local sub-unit or subsidiary of that committee may also contribute to the same candidate. It is the intent of the conferees to allow the maximum contribution from each level of the organization if the decision or judgment to make such contribution is independently exercised within the separate levels of the organization. However, if the subsidiary or sub-unit organization is under the control or direction of the national organization with respect to their contributions to specific candidates, then the organizations action in concert with one political committee for the purpose of the contribution limits included in this bill.

In my judgment, the conferences agreed with the House analysis.

Another major problem is that of the administrative expenses of multicandidate committees.

A second major problem is that of the administrative expenses of multicandidate committee. The conferences generally agreed that it would be difficult, if not impossible to attempt to prorate the normal day-to-day administrative expenses of multicandidate committees to each individual candidate. Any effort to attribute these costs to the contribution and expenditure limitations of any candidate would be unfair to both the candidate and the committee. Language that would clear up this issue was inadvertently left out of the report.

However, there was general agreement among the conferences that the provisions placing limitations on contributions and expenditures should not require a multicandidate committee, a national committee of a political party, the senatorial campaign committees, the congressional campaign committees, and a State committee of a political party to credit to the candidate’s limitations on contributions and expenditures any contributions or other expenditures attributable to any political candidates or his political committees a portion of their normal day-to-day expenses.

Any other interpretation would create an enormous amount of administrative busy work for all candidates and might cause wholesale violations of the law. For example, a congressional campaign com-committee might spend approximately $14,000 per year per Member in administrative expenses for staff and services. If these expenses are allocated, then each Member’s contribution limitations, every Member would be in violation of the law. If they were credited to candidates’ spending limitations, how would the costs be supported? If a candidate was not offered any services by the committee or did not want any staff or services credited to his campaign, how could he be forced to attribute them? The best answer seems to be exempt normal, administrative expenses from the limitations.

These day-to-day expenses should be defined to include such items as research, any item or publication can be sent under the frank. In general, I believe the Commission should follow the following guideline: if any item or publication can be sent under the frank, it should not be counted as an expenditure for the purpose of influencing an election. Hence, congressional newsletters and other similar publications would be considered expenditures under the provisions of this bill. The congressional franking law passed last spring clearly states that such newsletters and other similar publications are legitimate expenses and can be sent under the frank.

The Federal Elections Commission will have to publish specific regulations on these and other matters that are not completely clear in either the law or the report.

NEWSLETTERS

Questions have been raised as to whether or not congressional newsletters and other similar publications would be considered expenditures under the provisions of this bill. The congressional franking law passed last spring clearly states that such newsletters and other similar publications are legitimate expenses and can be sent under the frank. EXHIBIT AND CONTRIBUTIONS

In attempting to ascertain whether or not a contribution or expenditure by a group or organization is made for the purpose of influencing an election, the Commission should take into account the nature and goals of the organization making such expenditure. For example, a party committee might stage a seminar or workshop for party workers on campaign methods or techniques. It would be easily legitimate as an educational seminar or workshop aid a candidate. Even if this could be computed, it would be incidental to the primary purpose of the program, because the main goal of such party activities is to strengthen the party, not to benefit the candidate.

On the other hand, if a special interest committee were to conduct the same type of activity, especially in an area in which there are candidates which it supports, there might be a significant difference. Special interest committees often conduct such affairs for the purpose of aiding friendly candidates. The main goal of such interest political activity is usually to influence legislators and campaigns, while that of the party is usually to build a strong party organization.

The Commission should also investigate the differences between party publications and special interest publications, and party field workers and special interest field workers. The goal of the party in each instance is generally not, like in the case of many special interest groups, directly influencing elections and legislation, but building a strong party organization.

SECTION 308

The bill inserts a new section in the Federal Election Campaign Act—section 308—which will require groups and organizations which expend any funds or commit any act directed to the public for the purpose of influencing the outcome of an election, or which publishes or broadcasts to the public material intended to influence the public opinion with respect to candidates for Federal office, to register with the Commission as a political committee, and report the source and amount of its funds and its expenditures.

During the Senate debate on page 5 of the October 4, 1974, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) is quoted as saying:

But this section does not reach an organization that makes its own expenditures in the following lines: issuing communications directed to its members, making its position known to the press and to public meetings, and allowing its members to participate in conferences and other discussions devoted to public issues. In other words, section 308 of the act would cover only groups that use their funds to propagate its purpose but does not restrict internal communications or restrict the flow of news or the discussion of public issues.

As a House conferee on this bill, I disagree with that statement. This section is clearly intended to include rating sheets, press releases, press conferences, newsletters, letter to constituents, and other similar activities which are directed at the public or which attempt to influence public opinion with respect to political candidates. The section specifically includes publications “regularly for distribution to individuals affiliated by membership or stock ownership with the person distributing it.”

The purpose of this provision is not to discourage such activity, but to insure that the public is aware of the persons who contribute to and are responsible for these activities.

The Senator’s statement might exclude Common Cause, the American Conservative Union, the American Civil Liberties Union and the environmental groups which sponsor the “dirty dozen” list. No question is posed by this provision of the Act. This is the purpose of this provision to exempt these groups, nor is it intended to exempt any other particular group.

This provision is intended to apply indiscriminately and will bring under the disclosure provisions many groups, including liberal, labor, environmental, business and conservative organizations. By the Senate report in 1971, committee was to conduct the same activities as the bill, and the report makes no exception to the provisions of the law—such as section 610, no exemptions are made to this provision. The Commission and the courts should not allow what is clear from the legislative language of the bill and the report for the purposes of the committees to be changed by legislative history on the floor. The language of the bill and the report must take precedence over legislative history made on the floor.

SEPARATE EXPENDITURES

Under the 1971 law, considerable confusion was created by the use of the phrase “nomination for election, or election.” The courts, candidates and administrators and enforcees of the law frequently made different interpretations of its meaning.

Under the new law, such confusion should be avoided. In the case of limitations on the use of a candidate’s personal funds and the personal funds of his immediate family, it is clear that during the course of the entire campaign, a candidate for House, may spend $35,000, a candidate for the Senate $39,000, and a candidate for President $50,000.

In the case of contribution limitations, an individual can contribute $1,000 for the primary campaign and $1,000 for the general election. If the candidate is forced into a primary runoff, an individual can contribute an additional $1,000. If, as may be the case in the State of Georgia, there is a runoff in the general election, an individual can contribute another $1,000. The same principle applies to multicandidate committees.

In the case of expenditure limitations, a candidate for the House may spend $70,000 for the primary campaign and $70,000 for the general election. If the candidate must spend up to $70,000 for fundraising and party expenditures. If the candidate is forced into a primary runoff, he can spend an additional $70,000—plus fundraising. If, as may be the case in the State of Georgia, there is a runoff in the general election, he may spend an additional $70,000—plus fundraising. Without allowance for these additional amounts, an individual himself unable to spend anything in a primary or general election runoff. This would make a mockery of the election process. Instead, the candidate must be allowed to spend up to $70,000 in the primary, primary runoff, the general election and the general election runoff.

In some States, the party convention is tantamount to the primary election. In some of these cases, a candidate might invest $70,000 to win the nomination at the convention. However, an opponent might receive enough of the convention vote to force a primary for both of the candidates spent up to the $70,000 limits for the convention, they would be unable to spend anything for the primary. In such cases, the Commission should use its discretion to determine whether one or more candidates should be allowed to spend additional funds. These same principles should apply to Senate races and races for Representative in a State with only one Representative.

MULTICANDIDATE COMMITTEE FUNDRAISING LOophole

I believe that the conference intended that the provision which exempts multicandidate committee fundraising costs.
from being credited to the candidates' spending and contribution limitations. It would not allow five or more candidates—especially in large metropolitan areas—to join together in setting up dummy fundraising committees which would spend large sums of money allegedly raising funds for those candidates, but actually using fundraising techniques to increase the candidates' name recognition and expenditure limitation. Rather, it is intended to cover those groups which raise money genuinely independently of each candidate's campaign and which would be put at a disadvantage if the money they spend raising funds would be prerated and added to the actual contribution given to each candidate.

SLATECARD EXEMPTION

I believe that the purpose of the provision which exempts slatecards and printed listings of the names of candidates for public office from the definitions of contribution and expenditure is not to allow candidates or political committees to circumvent the disclosure provisions of the Act. slatecards and other similar devices, but rather to protect local parties and candidates from the onus of these regulations are treated as contributions from the original donor to the candidate.

HONORARIES

The conference substitute limits honorariums to $1,000 per appearance and a total of $15,000 per calendar year. I concur with the discussion by Senators Scott and Cannon on page S1826 of the October 8, 1974, Congressional Record, except that I believe a candidate or Federal Government official cannot accept more than one $1,000 honorarium from the same organization in the same calendar year. I do not feel that it was the intent of the conference to allow circumvention of the limitations on honorariums by accepting more than one honorarium from the same organization on the same trip or from the same organization on the same calendar year.

PRESIDENTIAL AND VICE-PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN TRIPS

The President and Vice President often must fly an official plane to political events. The cost of such trips often runs into the tens of thousands of dollars and is sometimes paid for by the national committee of the President's party. Questions arise as to whether this cost of the trip should be counted as a contribution and/or expenditure. Certainly it should not. Any other interpretation would be contrary to the spirit of the law. In these circumstances, contributions, the President and Vice President would be faced with the choice of either violating the law by exceeding the $1,000 limit on contributions by individuals to a candidate or forgetting any political activity outside the Washington area.

These costs should not count against the candidate's expenditure limitation because it would be unfair to both the President and the candidate to require the candidate to use up to $30,000 out of a $70,000 limitation just to fly with the President. The President has the same constitutional rights of free movement and free speech as other citizens. For the purposes of the limitations, the cost of such trips must be considered what it would normally cost a person to travel by commercial means to a candidate's campaign. This principle should be followed.

PREEMPTION OF STATE LAW

The conference bill specifically preempts State law. It is the intent of the conferees to preempt local laws as well. The legislative counsel informed members of the conference that to specifically mention local law in the bill would jeopardize the intent of the United States Code where reference to State law is also meant to include local law.

FULL DISCLOSURE

The bill provides that the Commission meets at least monthly and at the call of any Member. Fears have been expressed that the Commissioners will construe this provision to mean that, except for election time, they need not sweep into Washington once a month to meet the requirements of the job. In the contrary, the Commissioners shall be continually and readily available to deal with the important, complex provisions of election law. The Congress intends that the Commission be genuinely full-time and that the Members meet frequently—ideally annually—where necessary to oversee and supervise Federal elections.

CORPORATE CONTRIBUTIONS

Recently, several corporate consulting firms and other similar corporate entities have attempted to circumvent the prohibition on contributions by corporations by using the following device or variation thereof. A candidate contract with a corporate firm to have the firm periodically pay for the candidate's expenditures. This is paid for by the candidate and the firm makes a large profit, even totaling in the hundreds of thousands of dollars. Since all of this expenditure occurs under a contract, candidates and corporate consulting firms have even claimed that there is no debauchery and that nothing need be reported to the supervisory officer.

This is clearly a subterfuge and should be considered an illegal effort to circumvent the prohibition on corporate giving. CONTRIBUTIONS "IN-KIND"

The definition of contribution includes the phrase "anything of value." The purpose of this phrase is to cover situations that cannot be classified as deposits of money, loans, cash, and so forth, but which help influence elections. Such donations include cars, storefronts, air-planes, truck-fuels, food, tickets that are given to a candidate or committee in an effort to aid or abet his or its campaign. Clearly, all such donations and contributions must be reported and credited to a campaign's contribution and expenditure limitations. Charges have been recently made that donations of these types—contributions "in-kind"—are not and have not been reported. If the charges are true, such activities are in violation of the law.

For example, accusations have been made that individuals have been working zealously volunteering their time when they are on the payroll of a political committee, group or organization which does not exclusively support the candidate. In the future, when such complaints are made, the Commission shall immediately and expeditiously make an investigation of such charges. If the Commission determines that a person is on the payroll of another organization or group then the candidate or organization must be held responsible and liable for violation of the law and the value of his or its services must be credited to a candidate's limitation.

Similarly, if a complaint is filed that a candidate is receiving, free of charge, on-leases of buses, cars or trucks or other goods and services from a committee, organization, or group that is not exclusively supporting the candidate, the Commission shall immediately and expeditiously make an investigation of such charges and make sure that any such violations are credited to the candidate's limitation and that any candidate or committee that violates this principle is held liable for his or its actions.

The Commission should also promulgate regulations requiring all contributions "in-kind" to be disclosed. Such regulations should also require that these donations be credited to the contribution and expenditure limitations of the candidate who benefits from such donations and expenses. The Commission should stipulate that any violation of these regulations will be treated as a violation of the law.

This interpretation of the phrase "contribution means anything of value" is necessary so that the letter and intent of the law will not be nullified.

I am asking everyone to support the conference on the bill S. 3044, the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974 and to urge the Senate to enact the conference report and the bill itself. It is a monumental change over the way we have operated. It will change the way the Members campaign, the way they raise money, the way parties conduct
Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I am happy to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Illinois. Mr. ANNUNZIO. I thank my friend, the gentleman from Minnesota.

The gentleman mentioned honorariums, and then stopped. Is the gentleman for the limitation on honorariums, or is he moving in the direction of the Hatch Act restrictions for local and State employees?

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I am happy to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Illinois. Mr. ANNUNZIO. I thank my friend, the gentleman from Minnesota.

The gentleman mentioned honorariums, and then stopped. Is the gentleman for the limitation on honorariums, or is he moving in the direction of the Hatch Act restrictions for local and State employees?

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, when the previous gentleman was speaking, the question was asked about the qualifications of a national party for the 5-percent vote in the previous election. Now my question is: If a candidate runs, as happens in New York and Ohio, as a member of the Conservative Party or the Liberal Party and the Democrat or Republican Party, who would get the 5-percent credit in the next election, so far as the votes that were cast?

Mr. FRENZEL. I support the explanation which the chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS), gave, and that is that the allocation goes to the politician.

Mr. BAKER. Which party?

Mr. FRENZEL. Whichever one got the 5 percent.

Mr. BAKER. But he was running as a member of the Conservative Party, and in the Democrat Party, dually.

Mr. FRENZEL. The party is not running dually; the candidate is running dually. The allocation goes to the party that got the votes. If the Conservative Party got 5 percent in the last election, their nominee, whoever he or she is in the next election, would qualify for his proportion because of that party's success in getting the 5 percent.

Mr. BAKER. But if one individual is running under the dual-party label in the Conservative Party and Democrat Party, who will get credit for his votes?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS). Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I think that we ought to make it crystal clear, at least, that my interpretation is if he is running in one party, this applies only to national parties in the national election, and if a candidate is running as a liberal conservative or a Democratic liberal in New York, his conservative vote and liberal vote there would have to equal 5 percent of the total national vote or he could not qualify.

I would like to know if the gentleman does not agree with that.

Mr. Speaker. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 6 additional minutes.

I do agree with the chairman's explanation.

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DERWINSKI. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

On that same question, may I say I am very concerned that we are creating a situation where we have already by oversight or some other means, and that we are creating another two major parties. I believe very strongly in our two-party system, but we have, as I understand it, in this bill no restriction on funding of third parties except for a 5-percent vote. There is not any minimum number of States to qualify. In other words, if a gets more than 5 percent of the national vote in two or three States, we would have a national party.

Mr. FRENZEL. That is correct.

Mr. DERWINSKI. So that a regional party in effect, merely by gaining 5 percent of the national vote, qualifies for funding under provisions that apply.

Mr. FRENZEL. That is correct.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois. They could have no qualification, and their votes would amount to merely 5 percent of the vote, they would get merely 5 percent of the maximum in the next election, so they would not get the full 20 million.

Mr. Speaker, I am correct.

Mr. DERWINSKI. Correct.

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois. The idea, this legislation will end the American people's long wait for a positive response to the events of the past few years. No other practical, concrete action can do more to restore public confidence than the passing of a clean campaign reform bill. This is a meaningful campaign reform bill. By giving overwhelming bipartisan support to this landmark legislation, a clear message to the American people that Congress is concerned about and responsive to the need to restore public confidence in our democratic system of government.

Mr. Speaker, I do not see the minority leader on the floor. He indicated his willingness to speak in support of the conference report, although certainly his enthusiasm for it would be less than mine.

I would like, before yielding, to say a word about the chairman of the House Committee on Administration. As many Members know we have had strongly differing opinions about many of the features of this bill. I cannot let this occasion pass without giving him great, overwhelming credit for the production of this conference report. It is very seldom in the course of the passage of a bill that one man dominates or controls, and without whom there would be no bill. But such was the case with the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hayes). His defense of the House position in the conference was outstanding, and his determination and his patience to move this bill along have been equally outstanding. I congratulate him for his work on this bill without his help, his performance occasionally has fallen far short of his expectations. I would like to say as one who has opposed him, and not just in this field. His performance occasionally has been marked by the lack of certain quarters. I would like to say as one who has opposed him, and on many, if not most, of the substantive issues that I have have debated his motivation rather than his desire. He has proven to us today what they were and how important they were. So I do congratulate the gentleman for his outstanding achievement.

Mr. SANDMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SANDMAN. Mr. Speaker, I intend to support this bill because it has some improvements over the legislation that we have.

One thing disturbs me about this, and this is again only for my own information, but has anybody bothered to check into the honesty of what the other House is doing? Does the gentleman believe that we are meeting the requirements of the 14th amendment when we set particular standards on what a candidate has to raise before he qualifies to get so much money, because we are not giving all candidates the same amount of money? Mr. FRENZEL. Yes; the gentleman makes a valid point.

There are many members of the conference committee, including, I believe, the chairman, who believe that this feature may be unconstitutional.

I believe within this conference report there are at least 100 items questionable from a constitutional standpoint. Any time we pass legislation in this field we are causing constitutional doubts to be raised. I have many myself. I think the gentleman has pointed out a good one. We have done the best we could to bring out a bill which we hope may pass the constitutional test. But, we do not doubt that some questions will be raised.

I do call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that any individual under this bill has a direct method to raise these questions and to have those considered as quickly as possible by the Supreme Court.

Mr. SANDMAN. Is there any decision that supports what we are doing?

Mr. FRENZEL. I know of no decision that supports the raising of this amount of money.

I yield to the gentleman from Ohio for his response.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I am not a lawyer but I counsel so can get. Counsel says since this money is being given out of the Federal Treasury that the Congress can put any conditions or requirements on the person that Congress wants before the person receives that gift from the Federal Treasury.

I do not know whether it is constitutional or not.

Let me say one more thing to the gentleman and that is all I have to say on the subject. I have been here 26 years and must have heard the question of constitutionality raised on at least 200 bills and I cannot think of a single person who didn't challenge a bill every time somebody had a question of constitutionality on it. I would have had an almost complete voting record of "No". I think we have to let the courts decide.

Mr. SANDMAN. I do intend to vote for the legislation. I think a good bill has been done in producing it and it is a good improvement over what we have. However I have serious reservations as to whether we are doing meets the provisions of the 14th amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. Rhodes).

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend, the gentleman from Minnesota, for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I intend to support the conference report and congratulate the chairman and the gentleman from Minnesota and the other conferences on what I think is a really Herculean task well performed.

I do not want to leave the impression that I am completely satisfied with this bill. I still think it is a bill to preserve the Democratic majority in Congress; but I do think my good friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hayes) did a good job as anybody could have done in weaving the hat of the chairman of the House Administration Committee, instead of the hat of the chairman of the Democratic Committee; but I do think in the future it is going to be necessary to look at the provisions of this bill which have to do with a limitation on total spending for candidates for the House.

I think everybody knows it is usually the challenger who has to spend more in his campaign to be successful than an incumbent does. Since there are more Democratic incumbents than there are Republican incumbents, it is obvious that the spending limitation would work to the benefit of the Democratic majority of Congress. I can understand why this is the situation; but nevertheless, the bill is as good a bill as we can get. I suggest we adopt the conference report and then as time goes by, with legislative oversight, do whatever is necessary to make it even more just.

Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, as this bill passed the House, I believe there was a limitation of $5,000 on contributions to the National Republican and Democratic Committees. Is this provision changed in the conference report?

Mr. FRENZEL. They can still contribute $5,000, but they have an extra ability to fund bills, to $100,000.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. Treen).

Mr. TREEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. TREEN. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues of the House, I rise in opposition to adoption of the conference report on S. 3044. My opposition is based primarily on one significant feature of the legislation.

First, however, I want to make it clear that my criticism is not intended to suggest that the House conferences did not do a good job. Indeed, I believe it did an outstanding job in having most of the important provisions in the House bill accepted by the conference from the other body. I commend the chairman of our committee for his leadership, and for standing fast against such items as public financing of congressional campaigns.

Nor do I intend to suggest, by my opposition to the bill, that the proponents of this legislation are not motivated by a sincere desire to end campaign abuse. I concur wholeheartedly with the general purpose of the bill and I find most of its provisions quite acceptable.

But I feel strongly, Mr. Speaker, that the bill contains a defect which is so substantial that it outweighs the good features of the bill. I refer to the aggregate spending limitations in the national campaign, and particularly the limit for campaigns for House seats which the conferences have set at $70,000.

I opposed this bill in the House because of the limitation, which we established at $80,000, and I oppose final passage for the same reason.

We have heard it said in this Chamber that the spending limit for campaigns for the House should be because of the difference in the salary of House Members of $2,500 per year; we have heard it argued that it is unconscionable to spend $100,000 or $150,000 in a campaign for a job that pays only $42,500.

To me these arguments are patently illogical and fallacious. It is the importance of the job from the point of view of the constituents which is the fundamental consideration. The power and responsibility that each of us has—the great magnitude of that power over the well-being of every citizen and, indeed, the very security of this Nation and the free world—suggest to me that the election of a single Member of this House cannot be valued at $70,000. Especially is this so since election to this House usual-by results in a Member serving several terms and not just one term.

Certainly we do not relate the amount of money to be spent in the Presidential campaign to the size of the President's constituency. We are providing in this legislation $20 million to finance Presidential campaigns, and yet the salary of the President is $200,000.

I see it not with the individual limitation of $1,000 per person and $5,000 per organization to any single campaign. In my personal opinion, few if any Members of this body are influenced in their decision as to whether or not to spend financial support whenever they receive. But I recognize that the public may feel that some are so affected, and indeed, it may have some influence, in some instances, on some Members. But save one. That exception being that we have a record which always affords a basis for attack, because a Member cannot possibly vote on all the issues and please everyone.

Incumbents have all the other advantages. Because he is in office he automatically receives coverage by the news media. If he wants to, he can be in the news regularly during the term through the production of bills, testifying before committees, and just by visiting his district—as we are financed to do 36 times in each Congress.

We can send out newsletters postage free every month if we desire, right up to 1 month before the election. The post-age value alone of sending out a newsletter once every 3 months approximates the $500 which we limit a challenger to spending for his campaign.

I am not suggesting that travel to the district or the franking privilege should be eliminated. I think it is important in communication with your constituents and I believe that these are legitimate ways.

What I am saying is this: Let's make the system fair for the challenger. In many districts the news media does not give much play to a challenger. He must depend upon newspaper advertising, radio, and in many districts, television. All of this can be very expensive for a fairly modest campaign. In order to be able to discuss the incumbent's record on a scope sufficient to really get through to a sizable portion of the constituency will require, in most instances, sums in excess of $70,000.

Mr. Speaker, in my sincere judgment the aggregate limit of $70,000 per House campaign is an incumbent protection provision, although it is certainly not going to guarantee continuity for all Members. The proper limit which we should consider for the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the House Administration Committee, and all others who brought this conference report to us.

I support that report.

Mr. GUNTER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I wish the Members would pay some attention to what I am going to say. I am going to talk to the Members now as Members of the Congress of the United States, not as candidates or politicians, but men and women representing the people in all the various districts in the Nation.

Campaign reform sometimes gets into a situation where interests take it upon themselves to write bills which do not think about the guy who pays, the bill is the perfect law. By the manner in which they behave and treat themselves and the Members of this Congress, they would lead the American people to believe that we do not have the necessary intelligence nor the honesty and good intentions to write a law which allows, as the Constitution prescribes, every person the right to run a campaign.

No single individual in my lifetime in politics has had to take more heat, more unfair criticism, more outright lies and distortions of his actions in full paid advertisements, than the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in commending and congratulating the Chairman of the committee and the conference for an outstanding piece of work. I know how difficult this type of legislation is, and I think this is a far better bill than anything we would have been possible at the beginning of the year.

Mr. DENT. I thank the gentleman very kindly. There was a lot of work done in the earlier days on the subcommittee. We held hearings, and then we came to a decision in the subcommittee that inasmuch as the full committee would have a broader view of what would have been possible at the beginning of the year.

Mr. GUNTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.
bents spending between 75 and 100,000 dollars or over only 5 or 10 percent, and 21 percent of the challengers spent over $50,000 in addition to those who cost $231,000 for one candidate, a winner; $316,000, another candidate, a loser.

Throughout this whole issue, if one takes all of those who spent over the amount specified in this act and adds up to whom cost $350,000 in a primary election and to be beyond realization. I am grati-

Perhaps as a result of the ex-

One cannot reasonably spend more than $400,000 in a campaign without doing things that are wasteful. I repeat what I have said earlier. You cannot do it. I say to the Members that I have run for office as many times as any Member in this House, and I know something about what it takes to win elections. I believe. Some day we will receive enough salary so that we will be permitted to spend the limit and have a tax deduction for it, and we will all do exactly what those who have been willing to spend that amount of money out of their own pocket and have a tax deduction. If they do not have the money, they can solicit funds, and those who contribute to it can take it out of their tax returns. This way one cannot say the incumbent has the advantage, because if he does not waste this money, he will have a salary closer to what he needs to live on. If we do not do that, the people of America will never believe you can spend $350,000 in a primary election and $430,000 in a general election.

Mr. GUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I believe the conference report before the House on the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments represents a solid foundafrom that which other needed reforms of campaign spending practices can and must be constructed in the future.

I regret that the House, and as a result of its insistence, the conference committee of the House, was unwilling at this time to extend the principle of public financing provided for in presidential primary and general elections to the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives as well.

When this legislation was initially before the House, I strongly supported and voted for such an extension of the public financing concept to include House and Senate races, because I believed and still believe the basic principle is valid in the case of all Federal elections, not simply those involving Presidential primary and general election contests.

The basic principle, reduced to simple terms, is that special interests ought not to be allowed to pay for the election of any Federal candidate that would, for example, let Standard Oil or any other special interests pay the salaries of our Senators or Representatives, once in office. Once elected, we are marketed by the people that are elected to serve all of our constituents, of whatever party, and whether they voted for or against us as individual candidates. In recognition of this principle, the salaries of our elected Federal officeholders are paid by all the people. It is well past the time, in light of the history of abuse and corruption resulting from the current system of privately financing elections, to bring about the public financing of House and Senate elections as well. The same principle of public funding—commensurate with the obligation to serve all the people that is rightfully expected of our representatives, is also the extension of the matching principle from House and Senate to Presidential and general elections. This way, with the obligation to serve all the people, is faithfully represented.

I favor the extension of this principle, also, because I am firmly convinced that the billions of dollars a year it will cost average taxpayers to finance public interest tax breaks voted by elected representatives will be spent in those same special interests finance the campaigns of these same elected representatives.

A return to genuine independence in the political process, and to genuine independence by the House and Senate in behalf of the public interest, requires a prerequisite that we extend at the earliest possible time the concept of public financing to House and Senate elections.

With those reservations, Mr. Speaker, I am yet able to join my colleagues in praising this legislation as an historic contribution toward accomplishing meaningful reform. For the first time, the Congress today applies the concept of public financing to Presidential primary and general elections. Many predicted many months ago that this basic reform would prove to be beyond realization. I am gratified that in this legislation the Congress has met the test and acted, in my judgment, to accomplish a real reform of large proportion and far-reaching significance.

There are some other areas contained in the final conference report where we have made certain changes that I think we might have done and where the reform has not been as far reaching.

In one notable instance, the spending limitation on U.S. House races is still an unwarranted and unfair advantage to incumbents in confronting their challengers. At the same time, I am pleased that the conference did raise the limit from the $86,000 limit in each of the primary and general elections for the House, which was set in the House bill, to a $70,000 limit.

At the same time, the action of the conference in preserving an independent enforcement mechanism to administer the law, in the form of a Federal Election Commission, is one provision in my view another important step forward and constitutes another example of genuine and meaningful reform.

On balance, I believe many of the major provisions of the conference report in this complex and extensive piece of legislation may also be fairly characterized as representing true and genuine reform.

I am therefore pleased to add my support on final passage of this historic bill and to urge my colleagues to join in voting overwhelmingly to adopt the conference report.

Mr. FENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON).

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota for yielding. I would like to say to the gentleman who cited Mr. Hays a few moments ago when he addressed the House from the well, even though we have certain substantive differences with respect to this very important subject of campaign reform, I can certainly con-mend him and others who have worked hard throughout the conference to bring us a bill today. I think that if this bill had come back to us with nothing more than the independent commission that is now referred to, I believe, under the language of the bill, as the Federal Election Commission, if it had come back to us with nothing more than that feature, it would have represented some very sound progress.

At the same time, I hope that we will not conclude from what has been said that the task of refining our present methods of financing political campaigns is completed. I believe very deeply that some matching provision should have been included to encourage the raising of small contributions, perhaps on the model of the congressional and senatorial campaigns.

I must express my own disappointment that that feature was not contained in the House bill, or, of course, in the final conference report.

I think it is an idea whose day will come. Perhaps as a result of the experience which this bill will give us with the matching principle as it will now be applied to the raising of campaign funds in Presidential primaries, others will come to see the virtue of extending this incentive to the raising of small contributions for congressional campaigns as well.

Nevertheless, I think we can take some comfort and some very considerable comfort from the fact that this Congress will not conclude its deliberations without marking some progress in the very important field of Federal campaign reform. Therefore, I shall support adoption of the conference report.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MACDONALD).

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I rise

Congressional Record — House

H 10393

The gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Bredesen) and I worked for higher spending limits for House Members, but it was made very clear during the floor debate that there would not be agreement on that. So we end up with a figure which I consider to be reasonable—$70,000, plus the 20 percent allowed for the costs of raising money. It is, in my judgment, an altogether splendid effort. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Members on the minority side for their cooperation during the markup, during the debate, and during the conference.

We had virtually innumerable disagreements, and parted out of there, all of us, signing the report. Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank all the Members for your job as an incumbent. If I started naming Members, I would have to name all 25 of them, besides myself, and commend them for their cooperation and patience.

As I have been said, there were many deep divisions and disagreements and differences of opinion. We worked them all out in a friendly manner. I think my friend, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. Frenzel), said it was, perhaps, better than anybody else, and sometimes he tried to make a little patience, and sometimes it needed a little patience, and sometimes it took with good humor, and he never came up with a smile, and I appreciate that.

Mr. Speaker, I think we came out with a product, considering the diversity of views. I think that the Members and the aspirants to office can live with it. I do not consider this to be an incumbent's bill at all.

I have said this before: that if you are doing your job as an incumbent, it is pretty hard to beat you, but if you are not doing your job, you can be beaten with a very little bit of money.

I think that all of the Members can be pleased with the work the House did from the committee, from the amending process in the House, and from the diversity of opinion in the conference. It is not an easy bill, and it has not been, because the number of Members and the expertise, and the kind of legislation, and every one has their own ideas, and every district is a little bit different.

But I believe this is a bill that will stop the suspicions of the people, because it will stop the actions that caused those suspicions. I think it is a bill that the people can live with.

Mr. Speaker, as a final reminder, I would like to say that all the corruption and allegations of corruption that we have heard about in the past 2 years were caused because there was not a limitation on how much people over the country, gathering up big bags of money. Also, as I have said before, if we had had such a limitation 2 years ago, Watergate would never have happened.

Mr. WYMAN. Mr. Speaker, I support the conference report on election campaign reform except for its provision for public financing. I have long maintained the likelihood that such provisions are unconstitutional diversions of taxpayers from necessary and proper expenses of Government and that the High Court will so hold when the issue comes before it.

Nevertheless, there are excellent provisions on other necessary reforms in the currently pending conference report, especially in: respect to limitations on individual contributions, expenditure ceilings and overall limitations on expenditures by the various political parties. Because of these and the independent supervisory enforcement board, I shall vote for the conference report despite my continued opposition and misgivings concerning public financing.

Enforcement is the single most important aspect of controlling the raising and expenditures of campaign funds. Candidates for Federal office are required in this law to establish a central campaign committee and to treat bank loans as contributions. Disclosure is required quarterly, with a mandatory report due 10 days before an election and a wrap-up report 30 days afterward. Included in the oversight powers of the bipartisan, full-time supervisory board are civil enforcement authority and standing to sue in equity actions. Criminal violations would continue to be referred to the Justice Department for prosecution which is as it should be.

This bill is a meaningful response to the public need to know how much, from whom and what purpose a particular candidate is receiving and using contributions to his campaign. The full disclosure provisions through a single central committee and the continuing oversight functions by an independent board should reduce to a minimum the opportunity for undisclosed or unreported contributions. This assures that campaign finances are not available to the voters before they go to the polls on election day—and they are the ultimate judge in the election process.

Mr. YOUNG of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues today in hail ing this, a key piece of legislation, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1974.

The distinguished chairman, Mr. HAYS, and the members of the Committee on House Administration deserve much praise for their diligent work over so many months in producing this bill and this conference report. A special thanks is due from all of us who bear the label "politician." It would have been a travesty for us to go home for another election without taking with us a bill to remedy some of the evils of the political system that have been uncovered during the past 2 years.

I would also like to pay tribute to those outside the Congress who contributed so much to the monumental task of educating the public and the Congress to this issue. I particularly cite the Center for Public Financing of Elections, headed by Susan King and Neil Gregory. It has been my privilege—along with my colleagues from Pennsylvania (Mr. Breashe)—to sit on the board of advisors of this bipartisan lobbying organization which was established in June 1973 to press for fundamental change in the methods of financing campaigns for the Presidency and the Congress.

The Center for Public Financing of Elections was instrumental in bringing together a broad-based coalition of some 39 organizations from labor, business, the churches, citizen-action and civil rights organizations around the common goal. Providing professional assistance in research and analysis and information to the press and the Congress, this coalition convinced the House and Senate that the 1976 presidential election should be financed by public funds rather than private interests. The legislation also includes a new six-member Federal Election Commission and strict campaign contribution and expenditure limitations. Reporting and disclosure requirements have been strengthened and penalties for violations have been increased.

The reform coalition, under the leadership of the center, worked hard for extending the principle of public financing of congressional campaigns as well, but this concept has been rejected for the moment. It is in the arena of Presidential politics that campaign financing abuses have been most obvious and in which the public has perceived the greatest need for change, and the Congress has responded.

But, as the Center for Public Financing of Elections noted:.

The next Congress must continue the fight to end the unholy alliance between money and politics. Public financing of all political campaigns is an idea whose time will come.

Mr. Speaker, at this point in the Record I would like to insert a summary of the legislation prepared by the Center for Public Financing of Elections, and a list of those members of the reform coalition who contributed so much to this legislation:

Subsequently, each eligible contribution of $250 or less will be matched from the Treasury.

While an individual may contribute $1,000 and an organization may give $5,000 during the pre-nomination period, only the first $250 will be eligible for matching. No cash contributions will be matched; all contributions must show the taxpayer's identification number.

In addition to the $10 million spending limit, a candidate is permitted to spend an additional 10 percent—$2 million—for fundraising costs.

Contributions raised after January 1, 1975, will be eligible for matching. No public funds will be given out until January 1, 1976.

Source of Public Funds

The source of all public funding is the Presidential Election Campaign Fund. No additional appropriations are needed for election of Congress. The Fund was established in 1971 and is funded by taxpayers who check off Line 8 on IRS Form 1040, designating $1 of their taxes ($2 on a joint return) for this purpose.

This Dollar Check-Off Fund now contains $321 million. If taxpayers check off Line 8 at the same rate as last year, there will be a minimum of $64 million in the fund in time for the 1976 election, and very likely more.

Early in 1976, $44 million will be earmarked for the General Election and the Convention, remaining $56 million is designated for the primaries. No more than 45 percent may go to candidates of any political party. No individual is eligible to receive more than $400,000 in public funds available for primaries.

All spending limits are subject to cost-of-living increases, using 1974 as the base year.

The Fund will be under continuing review by the new Federal Election Commission to assure that eligible candidates receive equitable treatment and that adequate money is available to meet obligations required by the act.

Mr. BADILLO. Mr. Speaker, the Federal Election Campaign Act amendments which we are considering this afternoon close a number of important loopholes and inadequacies in current campaign financing laws.

Some of the notable features of this legislation are the ceilings on expenditures for campaigns for all Federal offices, limits on individual contributions to any single candidate and aggregate contributions for all Federal offices in any single year and restrictions on a candidate's personal financing of his own campaign. I believe that the representation of the significant step forward in campaign reform and for this reason I shall support the conference report.

However, this legislation contains a major gap—the failure to provide for public financing—even at the very least on a matching basis—for House and Senate campaigns. As I stated when we considered the amendments in August:

I cannot understand how the committee could endorse the removal of private money from Federal races, but not concede that the public interest lies in the same treatment of congressional elections.

I cannot see why a double standard should be imposed, particularly after nationwide opinion polls have clearly demonstrated to Americans that we support public financing for congressional races by an almost 2-to-1 majority.

Full public financing of all Federal elections must be made as soon as possible if confidence in the whole electoral process is to be achieved. We must make the public financing of House and Senate races a key priority in the 94th Congress if we hope to truly reform political campaigns. I intend to continue working toward this important objective and urge our colleagues to join in this effort. The Federal Election Campaign Act amendments of 1974 mark an important advance in election reform but they must be further strengthened if we hope to remove all the abuses of private money in Federal elections which have been amply documented over the past many months.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I am voting for the conference report on S. 3044, the Federal Election Campaign Act amendments, but I would like to take just a moment to explain some serious reservations I have about certain of its provisions.

First, it must be conceded that the reform measure provides many changes in our campaign financing system that are urgently needed and that can reduce the influence of special interests on governmental decisions. It provides for strict limits on contributions. It provides an independent enforcement body. It provides for public financing for Presidential primary and general elections. The importance of these reforms cannot be diminished, and the respective committees and the House deserve credit for adopting them.

Despite these beneficial and needed changes, I, a foal we must and should have opposed to campaign spending limits in the conference report which I consider to be scandalously high. When the House considered the campaign reform bill early in August and supported an amendment which would have allowed State spending ceilings to remain in effect when they were established at lower levels than those in the Federal law. The State of Wisconsin, for example, recently enacted a campaign reform measure which would have limited spending in House races to $35,000 for the primary and $90,000 for the election. I greatly regret that the amendment which would have permitted such stronger State laws to prevail over Federal limitations was defeated.

While that amendment did not succeed, we were successful in preventing the conference committee from placing the ceiling on fund raising costs. Thus each candidate for a House seat could have spent a maximum of $150,000 on the primary and general elections.

Now we have before us a conference report which raises the already excessive spending limits in the House bill.

The conference committee would allow candidates for the House to spend up to $70,000 in each primary and general election, plus an additional 20 percent for advertising in areas of the state. The means of ensuring that each candidate could spend up to a maximum of $186,000 in pursuit of a House seat.

The people of Wisconsin will have a great deal of difficulty understanding how a spending limit of that altitude is going to reduce the influence of money in politics. I share their skepticism and doubts that this rule is going to bring about future reforms that will make campaign spending limits truly effective, rather than invitations to excessive campaign expenditures and corruption.

The excessive spending ceilings coupled with another little noticed provision of the reform bill could lead to major scandals. The conference report includes language which allows a successful candidate to use leftover campaign funds to finance congressional office costs charged to the outlays. This is clearly a provision that strengthens the position of the incumbents, and was a more legitimate target of concern for the so-called anti-incumbent bill than well-funded ceilings that might have been set at reasonable levels.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 3044, the conference report on the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974. As one of the original sponsors of H.R. 16090, the House version of the legislation, I feel a great sense of accomplishment in seeing campaign reform become a reality in this Congress.

The conference bill before us today retains the so-called anti-incumbent provision of the Federal law which places limits on the contributions that individuals, organizations and political parties can make to individual candidates and in the aggregate. It sets up an enforcement body made up of members appointed by both Houses and the President which has the power to investigate violations of the law, issue subpoenas, and conduct its business in secret.

While these provisions differ in some details with H.R. 16090 as passed by this House, I feel that they represent a substantial restatement of all the fundamental provisions of this bill. Indeed, move one change which has been made is a decided improvement. The Board of Supervisors which will oversee compliance and enforcement of the act will now be a full-time, independent, bipartisan body with a professional staff. It will be empowered to issue regulations and subpoenas, interpret the law, seek injunctions, and enforce the act.

The bill before us, I am pleased to note, also carries lower spending ceilings for both House and Senate races than were found in the Senate bill. I feel that the limits now contained in the conference report—$70,000 per election for House candidates, $100,000 or 84 per cent of the Senate primaries and $150,000 or 84 per cent of the Senate general elections—do provide the public with a modicum of protection from bought elections, yet allow enough spending to make limited campaign elections viable.

I am disappointed with one aspect of the bill before us. It no longer contains any provision for mixed public-private funding of congressional and senatorial campaigns. This was a proposal which I helped initiate. I have on the floor of this Chamber that such a system would truly return political decision making back to the individual taxpayers of this country. Public funds would have been provided under this scheme only on the condition that a good number of small contributions from private citizens had established the broadness of a candidate's political base. Thereafter, Federal funds would have been made available on a matching basis from the dollar to the dollar checkoff fund, but only after complete Federal reimbursement of Presidential campaign financing costs. In other words, only serious candidates would have qualified for this aid. It would not have have in any way diminished Presidential campaign public funding and all the money that would have been spent from the口袋 would have come from the conscious checkoffs of American taxpayers who believed in public assistance in financing Federal elections.

I am disappointed that the public-private mixed funding of congressional campaigns is not in the bill before us simply because I believe that if we support the little guy back in the political picture in Presidential elections, it certainly would have the same, if not greater, effect in congressional races. If big money has too important a hold in Presidential elections, how much more powerful an influence does it have in smaller, congressional races.

Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful that as the Presidential campaign financing features of this bill unfold in the 1976 elections, we do provide with us one of the most even expenditure matches in this century, that all citizens and Members of this House will come to see the necessity to extend that same coverage to include congressional elections as well. Only then can we claim complete reform of our democracy's electoral law that this bill purports to provide.

I want to make it clear, however, that I strongly support the election reform package represented by this conference report. It does mark the first steps toward the long-overdue legacy of the Watergate scandal. I am confident that it will go a long way indeed to prevent such abuses as occurred in 1972, with such tragic episode in our country's history.

I therefore urge that we adopt the conference report today. In so doing we will be doing our best to convince a skeptical public that we really want to put our house in order after Watergate, and that it is not going to be business as usual all over again. That is the message that I get from my constituents. They have not got to exercise of this crisis we have just weathered than just rhetoric. The first test of whether that is so comes today. There will be further tests, but this will be one. That is because another legacy of Watergate is increased public awareness of congressional self-regulation. As proof, I would like to include in the Record at this point an editorial, dated October 7, 1974, from the Springfield Daily News of Springfield, Mass., which only too clearly makes this point:

Campaing Reform

If there is any conclusion emerging from the Watergate scandals, it is that they have placed renewed emphasis on the need for governmental reforms in general, and for election reforms in particular. The Watergate conspiracy was basically an attempt to undermine an election—invoking secret contributions, "dirty tricks" to discredit rival candidates, break-ins and bugging, and an abuse of power both by individual officials and government agencies.

In its final report, the Ervin Committee recommended a series of campaign reforms to Congress, and the results have been encouraging so far. A House-Senate conference committee has agreed upon a campaign reform law that would end public subsidies and contributions in all federal elections and provide government subsidies for presidential candidates. The Watergate conspiracy was basically an attempt to undermine an election—invoking secret contributions, "dirty tricks" to discredit rival candidates, break-ins and bugging, and an abuse of power both by individual officials and government agencies.

A House-Senate conference committee has agreed upon a campaign reform law that would end public subsidies and contributions in all federal elections and provide government subsidies for presidential candidates.

Meanwhile, the prospect is that the campaign funding bill will pass—marking a major change in the system as well as an improvement in the quality of the process. Mr. STEGNER in his analysis that this bill is an incumbents' dream. It cuts down on the number of reports which must be filed which, while convenient for the Congressmen, does nothing to enhance full disclosure of election expenditures. It also specifically permits the use of House and Senate funds for reelection purposes that is available only to incumbents and must come out of the taxpayers' pocket. Amazingly, this bill exempts from disclosure such expenses as are "educational" or "educational" expenditures for incumbent Members, together with the strict limitation on spending which will apply to challengers. Will do much in my opinion to insure the re-election of incumbents for years to come, and that is certainly not election reform.

Mr. Speaker, there are many good provisions in this legislation, but the serious inadequacies which I have described force me to oppose this conference report. While it has become fashionable to support "election reform," this measure is a reflection of the rush to action, and I therefore must oppose it.

MRS. HECKLER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is little wonder that in the wake of the Watergate revelations and the scandal of "soft money," the 1972 Presidential campaign, a major outcry was heard from the American public demanding a thorough cleansing of our electoral process.

As Congress is responding to the outrage and indignation expressed by so many voters with the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974, this comprehensive campaign finance reform measure in the history of our country.

No single piece of legislation before Congress in this session has more potential for ending illegal contributions, slush funds, and the other types of campaign corruption which have surfaced during the last administration and during previous administrations. The importance of what we are making in the campaign finance process today is that these reforms will lead to the restoration of confidence in the integrity of our political process by making campaigns something different.

The historic reforms incorporated in this legislation represent a major step forward. For the first time we have insured that Presidential primaries and general election campaigns will not be dependent on large donations from special interests who expect favors in return for their money.

In 1976 the Presidential Election Campaign Fund composed of voluntary taxpayer contributions through the dollar checkoff on their individual tax returns will finance the Presidential primaries and the general elections of the two major candidates.

In the future I hope to see public financing extended to all congressional races. In August when the Federal Election Campaign Act amendments were before the House for consideration, I voted in favor of an amendment which would have provided partial public financing of House and Senate campaigns by providing for matching Federal relieved that the House position has been retained in this very important respect.

Let public financing achieve in practice the lofty goals which its advocates forecast, before extending it to all Federal campaigns.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation will give a real boost to the public’s right to know in the campaign area with its admirable plugging of several old loopholes in the financial disclosure provisions of the Federal Election Campaign Act. Campaign finances will be even more completely open to public inspection than at present; so that the public may examine the financial aspects of a candidate’s support.

The disclosure provisions of this conference report will insure that much more information is now required will be fully available for public scrutiny and assessment.

However, the measure has two egregious defects. First, it fails to require accountability with regard to labor organizations and other political action groups that contribute funds; and—in such cases, it does not require the identity of persons making contributions, and fails to designate the candidates whom the various contributions are designed to support. It leaves these decisions up to the labor leaders—or organization officers.

Second, the measure fails to measure in terms of campaign contributions the extensive services provided in the form of campaign workers, and telephone teams, and such special personal services as regularly provided by labor organizations in support of their favorite candidacies.

These defects should have been corrected and, in any event, should be the subject of further legislation at an early date.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I move to the previous question on the conference report.

Mr. DEVINE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report just agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. DORN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DORN. Mr. Speaker, when H.R. 12928 was originally passed by the House on February 19, 1974, its major provision was a proposal to increase by 13.6 percent all of the rates of educational allowances for veterans and their eligible dependents. For example, the present rate for a single veteran pursuing full-time training is $220 per month. The House voted to increase this rate to $250 per month with comparable increases in cases where dependents are involved.

On June 19, 1974, the Senate took action on H.R. 12928 by substituting the provisions of its veterans’ education bill contained in S. 2784. As thus passed by the Senate the bill increased the basic monthly rates by 18 percent, for example, $220 per month to $260 per month, and added an additional part of the rate package a new partial tuition allowance under a formula which in the average case would provide the veteran with an additional $720 per school year. I am sure Members are familiar with the problems and abuses arising from the tuition payment portion of the original World War II GI bill. Following an extended inquiry by a House select committee, the Korean conflict GI bill was formulated which discarded any form of so-called tuition allowance and provided a single monthly allowance directly to the veteran.

This philosophy was continued in the 1966 cold-war GI bill and has been maintained as congressional policy ever since. In the light of this background, the House managers objected any form of tuition payment, either to the institution or to the veteran, but in order to reach... a compromise on this point, agreed to an increase in the basic rates of 22.7 percent, for example, $220 to $270 per month, and the Senate conferences concert.

Each version of the bill also proposed to liberalize the eligibility requirements for vocational rehabilitation for present and future veterans with a service-connected disability. The basic objective sought in each version is now contained in the conference bill.

The original conference report, filed August 19, 1974, provided the same 27 percent increase to the subsistence allowance authorized for vocational rehabilitation trainees—about 2 percent of the total—as authorized for all of the other educational trainees. In this area a point of order was sustained, the chairman of the Senate managers immediately moved that the House conference amendment to the Senate amendment to the text of the bill, H.R. 12628, and agree to the same with a substitute amendment. This substitute amendment which was passed unanimously by the House returned the bill to the other body in the same form as recommended by the conference committees with the following exceptions:

First, each 2 percent increase in vocational rehabilitation subsistence allowances was reduced to 18 percent, to comply with the point of order; second, the extension of maximum entitlement from the present 36 months to 45 months was deleted; and third, the veterans' education loan provisions were deleted.

Accordingly, conferences were reappointed to resolve the differences between the House bill and the original Senate-passed bill, S. 2704.

The House and Senate conference committees have been in agreement from the outset with respect to the elimination of certain minor liberalizations of the veterans' educational programs, as well as provisions covering job counseling, training and placement service, employment and training of disabled and Vietnam era veterans and veterans' reemployment rights. The present conference report covering these subjects contains no substantive changes and are discussed in more detail in the accompanying joint explanatory statement of the conference committee.

Under the present law, veterans are limited to a maximum of 36 months of education and training. The House amendment contained a provision with respect to this maximum but the Senate bill proposed to increase this period from 36 months to 48 months. In conference the House managers were persuaded by certain cogent justification for an increase in entitlement. In certain hardship cases in a liberalization which would authorize an additional number of months, not exceeding nine, which may be utilized in pursuit of a program of education leading to a standard college degree.

The Senate substitute proposed to establish a new student loan program to be administered by the veterans administration and funded through the National Service Life Insurance trust fund. Such loans would be limited to a maximum of $2,000 and available only if the veteran is unable to receive a student loan from the federal programs, permanent and discharge disability, and the maturity of the loan is no earlier than 10 years. In conference the Senate managers were reluctant to see the Vets fund embark on such a new type of activity but receded from their position subject to a reduction in the maximum available loan by $600 and elimination of the funding of the program through the National Service Life Insurance fund. Under the conference agreement, a special revolving fund would be established and funded through the usual appropriated benefits for readjustment.

As we have stressed in the managers' statement, the conference committees are concerned that excessive default rates at certain institutions might jeopardize the success of the program. In this connection, recent publicity has indicated that approximately one fourth of all student loan programs administered by HEW are in default. Accordingly, both committees will closely monitor default experience and the administration and only if the monitors take aggressive steps to pursue and effect collections wherever possible. Further, the conference directs the administrator to utilize his new authority contained in the bill with respect to deceptive and misleading advertising, to take affirmative steps to prevent any questionable sales or enrollment practices utilizing advertising, and to participate in such a promotional technique. The conference recognizes that in meritorious cases additional loan facilities may be vital to students in pursuing their educational program but it should be made crystal clear that this is not in any way intended as a "handout" program and appropriate corrective measures will be taken in the event of a loan projecting the available

For the record, I feel that it is imperative to set clear your conference's philosophy as to the fiscal impact of this legislation. In the first place, there is a complete unanimity of view that in the light of the spiraling cost of living, the present training allowances are greatly inadequate. In recent public utterances, the President has indicated that an increase of approximately 18 or even 20 percent would be justified. This would be true from the standpoint solely of the increase in the cost of living; however, testimony before both chambers, and particularly those charged by private institutions have far outstripped the cost of living as reflected by the consumers' price index and your conference were convinced that this factor cannot be ignored. Accordingly, it seems to me that an additional 5 percent above the increase which the President suggests is fully justified, leaving in all irrelevant to take note of the alarming increase in the rate of unemployment, particularly involving those young men and women of school age. Further, your conferences have noted the history of the President's recent economic speech to the Congress which included a recommendation for increases in unemployment compensation benefits and the creation of a brand-new community improvement corps through short-term useful work projects, such program to be geared to the unemployment rate. In mind, it seems eminently desirable not only from a fiscal but also a sociological standpoint to improve the availability of greater education benefits for our young men and women who for whom our armed services, including certain of their wives, widows, and orphan children. In this way we will provide greater opportunity for our young people to pursue further education, and we will aid in ameliorate the unemployment problem and lessen the necessary magnitude of the proposed new community improvement corps. The first of these was enacted over 30 years ago. Since that time, there has been a significant reduction in the unemployment rate. If it is clear that the original cost of these programs have been offset many times by the resulting increase in tax revenues. And importantly, the significant raising in the educational level of our citizenship.

I sincerely feel that the provisions of the those bills now before the House for consideration are germane from the standpoint of the veterans concerned and represent an appropriate recognition by the Congress of the need to maintain a strong and viable educational assistance program for our veterans. Therefore strongly recommend approval of this report by the House.

Mr. Speaker, I insert for the record at this point a table showing the 5 year estimated cost of the conference report on H.R. 12628. It will be noted that the estimate for the first full year, including about $75 million for the loan revolving fund, will be $280.8 billion.

The table follows:

Amendments of 1974

The President's Remarks at the Bill Signing Ceremony at the White House. October 15, 1974

Distinguished Members of the Congress, and guests:

It is really a great privilege for me to have a part in what I think is historic legislation. As all of my good friends from the Congress know, a tremendous amount of work, a lot of extra labor, went into the putting together of this legislation.

Quite frankly, I had some strong reservations about one version or one provision or another of the legislation, and I suspect some of the people here on both sides of the aisle have the same.

But we got together in a spirit of cooperation, a willingness to work together, to give a little and take a little, and the net result is legislation that I think the American people want. It is legislation for the times.

I am not telling you any secrets. I have some reservations about the final version. But, in the spirit of cooperation and compromise, I think it ought to be signed and become a part of our statutory law.

I can assure you from what I have heard, from the American people in writing and other communications, they want this legislation. So, it will soon be law. I think we do recognize that this legislation seeks to eliminate to a maximum degree some of the influences that have created some of the problems in recent years. And if that is the end result, certainly it is worth all the labor and all the compromises that were necessary in the process.

Now, this is a major step in one direction. To a substantial degree, there will be a degree of public financing. As long as it stays within the checkoff system, I am willing to go along with it. And I hope that the American taxpayers, as they make out their returns in the years ahead, will be generous so that those campaigns can and will be adequately financed.

Well, what it all comes down to, in my judgment, is that between a Congress controlled by one party, a White House in the hands of another, and a working cooperation between the Senate and the House, and the hard working members of that conference—I guess you were part of that, weren't you, Wayne—[laughter]—we ended up with some legislation that I think deserves the support of the American people, and I think they will support it.

I congratulate the conference, the House and the Senate, and the people from the outside who had a significant impact in urging the Congress and the White House to be forthcoming.

So, I think this is a good day for 213 million Americans.

Thank you very, very much.

Note: The President spoke at 4:20 p.m. in the East Room at the White House. As enacted, the bill (S. 3044) is Public Law 93-443, approved October 15, 1974.

Federal Election Campaign Act
Amendments of 1974

Statement by the President Upon Signing the Bill Into Law, While Expressing Reservations About Certain of Its Provisions. October 15, 1974

Today I am signing into law the Federal Campaign Act Amendments of 1974.

By removing whatever influence big money and special interests may have on our Federal electoral process, this bill should stand as a landmark of campaign reform legislation.

In brief, the bill provides for reforms in five areas:

—It limits the amounts that can be contributed to any candidate in any Federal election, and it limits the amounts that those candidates can expend in their campaigns.

—It provides for matching funds for Presidential primaries and public financing for Presidential nominating conventions and Presidential elections through use of the $1 voluntary tax checkoff.

—It tightens the rules on any use of cash, it limits the amount of speaking honorariums, and it outlaws campaign dirty tricks.

—It requires strict campaign financial reporting and disclosure.

—It establishes a bipartisan six-member Federal election commission to see that the provisions of the act are followed.

Although I support the aim of this legislation, I still have some reservations about it—especially about the use of Federal funds to finance elections. I am pleased that the money used for Federal financing will come from the $1 checkoff, however, thus allowing each taxpayer to make his own decision as to whether he wants his money spent this way. I maintain my strong hope that the voluntary contribution will not become mandatory and that it will not in the future be extended to Congressional races. And although I do have reservations about the first amendment implications inherent in the limits on individual contributions and candidate expenditures, I am sure that such issues can be resolved in the courts.

I am pleased with the bipartisan spirit that has led to this legislation. Both the Republican National Committee and the Democratic National Committee have expressed their pleasure with this bill, noting that it allows them to compete fairly.

The times demand this legislation.

There are certain periods in our Nation's history when it becomes necessary to face up to certain unpleasant truths.

We have passed through one of those periods. The unpleasant truth is that big money influence has come to play an unseemly role in our electoral process. This bill will help to right that wrong.
I commend the extensive work done by my colleagues in both houses of Congress on this bill, and I am pleased to sign it today.

Note: As enacted, the bill (S. 3044) is Public Law 93-443, approved October 15, 1974.

Future Farmers of America

The President's Remarks to the 47th Convention of the FFA at Kansas City, Missouri. October 15, 1974

Thank you very, very much, President Mark Mayfield, the 13,000 Future Farmers of America registered for this wonderful 47th Convention, the 500,000 Future Farmers of America in every State of the Union, and your guests:

It is a great privilege and a very high honor to have an opportunity of participating in this wonderful convention, and I thank you. And I thank you on behalf of Betty because she wanted me to come, too.

One week ago I asked the Congress and the American people to help me revitalize the economy, slow inflation, and save energy. At that time I proposed specific and urgent actions.

The American people, I can report tonight, have responded magnificently. A great citizens' mobilization has begun and is beginning to roll. It is already evident here in this eager, up-beat convention of Future Farmers of America. And I thank you from the bottom of my heart.

In this last week, I have received inflation-fighter enlistments from Americans of every conceivable occupation, economic circumstances, and political persuasion. Support has been freely offered by organizations and groups representing all ages, races, religions, and reaching into every corner of our great land.

America is arousing itself, as it always does in time of great challenge, to prove that we are a people who can do anything we want to do when we really want to do it. We are going to win in America.

Now some have said that instead of asking Congress and the Nation to bite the bullet, I offered only a marshmallow. Well, I had already asked the Congress to postpone for 3 months a 5.5 percent pay increase for Federal Government employees which would have saved $700 million. Congress wouldn't even chew that marshmallow. They haven't, as yet, shown much appetite for some of the other "marshmallows" in my latest message.

But if they don't like the menu, I may be back with some tough turkey.

It is my observation and view that the American people are hungry for some tough stuff to chew on in this crisis. I don't know of any better place to look to the future of America than right here in the 13,000 faces of the Future Farmers of America.

I don't see anyone in this auditorium, not one, wearing a button that says, "vote." You want to win, and we are going to win.

When your State presidents came to Washington last July during a time of tension in our national affairs, I pointed out to them that people around the world have great faith in America. I asked Future Farmers to have confidence in themselves, in our system of Government, and in our free competitive society.

I appreciated their response and your response. I think it is well expressed in the creed of the Future Farmers. I believe with you, for example, "in the future of farming, with a faith born not of words but of deeds...in the promise of better days through better ways, even as the better things we now enjoy have come to us from the struggles of former years." It couldn't be expressed better.

Number one of the major points in my address to the Congress last week was food. In a war against inflation, farmers are the front line soldiers. They have done a great job in America, making our country the breadbasket of the world.

To halt higher food prices, obviously we must produce more food. I called upon, in that message, every farmer to grow to full capacity, in return—and properly so—I promised every farmer the fuel and the fertilizer that he needs to do the job, plus a fair return for the crops that he produces.

It is not only the young people in this auditorium who must lend their hands and their hearts to this task. I need help from young Americans all over this great land. The creative energy and the enthusiasm of youth in my judgment is our sure guarantee of winning.

But in all honesty, youth has the most to gain. Restoring stability and strength to our economy doesn't call for sacrifices so much as for contributions to one's own future well-being.

Last Saturday 22 members of the Citizens' Action Committee to Fight Inflation met with me at the White House. It was a beautiful fall afternoon, and I am sure many would have preferred that committee to watch their favorite football game, or play some golf, or be with their family.

But I am deeply grateful that this fine committee took the time and made the effort to join with me on a Saturday to work on our national enemy number one.

Let me stress this point, if I could: This is a volunteer working committee, a completely nonpartisan group dealing with a nonpartisan problem. It will seek to mobilize America against inflation and for energy conservation.

I told the committee that if there was a scintilla of partisanship or if the group seemed to be merely a front for the White House, its efforts would be doomed to failure.

Columnist Sylvia Porter, who has agreed to serve as national chairperson of this committee, responded that if I tried to manipulate the committee or seek to influence its actions, she and the other members would not participate. We understand each other.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the “Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1974”.

TITLE I—CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENTS

(6) For purposes of the limitations imposed by this section, all contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate. The intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.

(c) (1) No candidate shall make expenditures in excess of—

(A) $10,000,000, in the case of a candidate for nomination for election to the office of President of the United States, except that the aggregate of expenditures under this subparagraph in any one State shall not exceed twice the expenditure limitation applicable in such State to a candidate for nomination for election to the office of Senator, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, as the case may be;

(B) $20,000,000, in the case of a candidate for election to the office of President of the United States;

(F) $15,000, in the case of any campaign for nomination for election, or for election, by a candidate for the office of Delegate from Guam or the Virgin Islands.

(2) For purposes of this subsection—

(A) expenditures made by or on behalf of any candidate nominated by a political party for election to the office of Vice President of the United States shall be considered to be expenditures made by or on behalf of the candidate of such party for election to the office of President of the United States; and

(B) an expenditure is made on behalf of a candidate, including a Vice Presidential candidate, if it is made by—

(i) an authorized committee or any other agent of the candidate for the purposes of making any expenditure; or

(ii) any person authorized or requested by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, or an agent of the candidate, to make the expenditure.

(3) The limitations imposed by subparagraphs (A), (D), (E), and (F) of paragraph (1) of this subsection shall apply separately with respect to each election.

Rules.
States shall be attributed to such candidate's expenditure limitation in each such State, based on the voting age population in such State which can reasonably be expected to be influenced by such expenditure.

"(d)(1) At the beginning of each calendar year (commencing in 1976), as there become available necessary data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register the per centum difference between the price index for the 12 months preceding the beginning of such calendar year and the price index for the base period. "(e)(1) No person may make any expenditure (other than an expenditure made by or on behalf of a candidate within the meaning of subsection (c) (2) (B)) relative to a clearly identified candidate during a calendar year which, when added to all other expenditures made by such person during the year advocating the election or defeat of such candidate, exceeds $1,000.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) ‘clearly identified’ means—

"(i) the candidate’s name appears;

"(ii) a photograph or drawing of the candidate appears; or

"(iii) the identity of the candidate is apparent by unambiguous reference; and

"(B) ‘expenditure’ does not include any payment made or incurred by a corporation or a labor organization which, under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 610, would not constitute an expenditure by such corporation or labor organization.

"(f)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law with respect to limitations on expenditures or limitations on contributions, the national committee of a political party and a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may make expenditures in connection with the general election campaign of candidates for Federal office, subject to the limitations contained in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection.

"(2) The national committee of a political party may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for President of the United States who is affiliated with such party which exceeds an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States (as certified under subsection (g)). Any expenditure under this paragraph shall be in addition to any expenditure by a national committee of a political party serving as the principal campaign committee of a candidate for the office of President of the United States.

"(3) The national committee of a political party, or a State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate for Federal office in a State who is affiliated with such party which exceeds—
“(A) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Senator, or of Representative from a State which is entitled to only one Representative, the greater of—

“(i) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (g)); or

“(ii) $20,000; and

“(B) in the case of a candidate for election to the office of Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner in any other State, $10,000.

“(g) During the first week of January 1975, and every subsequent year, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify to the Commission and publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the voting age population of the United States, of each State, and of each congressional district as of the first day of July next preceding the date of certification. The term ‘voting age population’ means resident population, 18 years of age or older.

“(h) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or make any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section. No officer or employee of a political committee shall knowingly accept a contribution made for the benefit or use of a candidate, or knowingly make any expenditure on behalf of a candidate, in violation of any limitation imposed on contributions and expenditures under this section.

“(i) Any person who violates any provision of this section shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.”.

The Secretary shall deposit in each such account an amount equal to the amount which each such committee may receive under subsection (b). Such deposits shall be drawn from amounts designated by individuals under section 6096 and shall be made before any transfer is made to any account for any eligible candidate under section 9006(a).

(b) Entitlement to Payments From the Fund.—

"(1) Major Parties.—Subject to the provisions of this section, the national committee of a major party shall be entitled to payments under paragraph (3), with respect to any presidential nominating convention, in amounts which, in the aggregate, shall not exceed $2,000,000.

"(2) Minor Parties.—Subject to the provisions of this section, the national committee of a minor party shall be entitled to payments under paragraph (3), with respect to any presidential nominating convention, in amounts which, in the aggregate, shall not exceed an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount the national committee of a major party is entitled to receive under paragraph (1) as the number of popular votes received by the candidate for President of the minor party, as such candidate, in the preceding presidential election bears to the average number of popular votes received by the candidates for President of the United States of the major parties in the preceding presidential election.

"(3) Payments.—Upon receipt of certification from the Commission under subsection (g), the Secretary shall make payments from the appropriate account maintained under subsection (a) to the national committee of a major party or minor party which elects to receive its entitlement under this subsection. Such payments shall be available for use by such committee in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c).

"(4) Limitation.—Payments to the national committee of a major party or minor party under this subsection from the account designated for such committee shall be limited to the amounts in such account at the time of payment."
"(5) Adjustment of Entitlements.—The entitlements established by this subsection shall be adjusted in the same manner as expenditure limitations established by section 608(c) and section 608(f) of title 18, United States Code, are adjusted pursuant to the provisions of section 608(d) of such title.

"(3) Exception.—The Commission may authorize the national committee of a major party or minor party to make expenditures which, in the aggregate, exceed the limitation established by paragraph (1) or paragraph (2) of this subsection. Such authorization shall be based upon a determination by the Commission that, due to extraordinary and unforeseen circumstances, such expenditures are necessary to assure the effective operation of the presidential nominating convention by such committee.

"(e) Availability of Payments.—The national committee of a major party or minor party may receive payments under subsection (b) (3) beginning on July 1 of the calendar year immediately preceding the calendar year in which a presidential nominating convention of the political party involved is held.

"(f) Transfer to the Fund.—If, after the close of a presidential nominating convention and after the national committee of the political party involved has been paid the amount which it is entitled to receive under this section, there are moneys remaining in the account of such national committee, the Secretary shall transfer the moneys so remaining to the fund.

"(g) Certification by Commission.—Any major party or minor party may file a statement with the Commission in such form and manner and at such times as it may require, designating the national committee of such party. Such statement shall include the information required by section 303(b) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, together with such additional information as the Commission may require. Upon receipt of a statement filed under the preceding sentences, the Commission promptly shall verify such statement according to such procedures and criteria as it may establish and shall certify to the Secretary for payment in full to any such committee of amounts to which such committee may be entitled under subsection (b).
